"Yeah! Protoman was awesome!" Ring. exe cheered. Just then, Mary's PET started beeping. "You got mail, Mary! It's from your folks. ...NO WAY!" Ring. exe gasped in shock.

"Ring, what is it?" Mary asked in concern.

"Your parents talked it over, and agreed to let you stay here for the whole school year!" Ring. exe hurriedly said.

"Really?!"

Mayl looked up at the sky from the ACDC Park bench. 'Lan and Megaman have gotten so much stronger, but not even they could stand up to that Cache guy,' she thought to herself. She made her decision there.

"Roll?"

"Yeah, Mayl?"

"...We need to get stronger."

"Alright, Gutsman, it's time for us to get stronger!" Dex proclaimed in his room.

"Sounds like a plan, Dex! One question. How?" Gutsman. exe wondered.

"Simple! You're already perfect enough as it is, Gutsman! You're just missing one thing!"

"What's that?"

"A long range attack! Once we have that, we won't lose to Lan and Megaman again!"

"Yeehaw! Well if that's the case, then sign me up!"

Meanwhile, in the depths of the undernet, a forgotten flyer for the BattleChipGP flew on the digital wind. That is, until a certain cloaked figure caught it. "BattleChipGP? Hmph. Not worth my time," Bass. exe pronounced, before going deeper into the undernet. He had found an interesting source of power down there. And he wanted it. (32)

---

1) This part by DalekDavros, lead-in by me. 'Two Futures' is the translated name of the second japanese opening theme song for the Battle Network anime.

www. youtube watch? v=w-aUClP0mfo

2) He doesn't have a mouth. Also, Megaman. exe vs Flashman. exe portion by OathToOblivion

3) I've been watching RoahmMythril's Let's Plays to refamiliarize myself with Battle Network's events. I think he's rubbed off on me…

4) Of all the runarounds in the Battle Network series, I personally found Bubbleman. exe's to be the most *bleep*ing annoying. So, yeah, I'm venting just a bit here.

Bonus quip by Scorntex: Guess Bubbleman. exe's bubble... just got burst . (YYEEEAAAHHHH!)

5) See Apollo for my reaction to this particular event.

6) This is my nod to a rather popular fan theory based on some impressive fridge logic regarding Mamoru and the navi in question.

7) Inspired in part by a snip that cj304 wrote that didn't quite fit with the activation Loop, but will be included in a later compilation. If you think Plantman. exe's having a bad day now ...

8) Take notes. There will be a quiz later. ;P

9) In my original draft I misspelled this as 'dowsed'. Which I thought was rather amusing in this context when one of the pre-readers on Spacebattles pointed it out.

10) Hold on a moment... I've got something in my eye...

11) During Chisao's earlier visit, Lan and Hub declined to let Dex and Gutsman. exe win their match. Chisao threw a tantrum as expected, but Dex redeemed himself as a cool big brother by saving Chisao's life during Beastman. exe's attack on the zoo. As well as learning a lesson about not making boasts that weren't true just to make himself look good.

12) My Little Gutsman: Friendship is Pounding The Hell Out of Bad Guys.

13) The kawarimi technique is not unique to Naruto's universe. Most branches that have ninja also have a version of it.

Also: This portion by OathToOblivion

14) Who says Lan can't learn?

15) It's not so much that Lan doesn't think they can take care of themselves, it's that there's a pretty big chance of someone getting hurt and he'd prefer it wasn't them.

16) And probably enjoying a few of the administered beatdowns a bit more than was strictly healthy.

17) Serenade. exe actually is referred to as female in the original japanese text if I recall correctly.

18) It's true! The way certain monarchy laws were/are written, kings can in fact be female.

19) The memes made me do it!

20) I suspect that it's advised that navis not do their own customization, but since in one of the games you actually get the Humor program from a navi who currently has it installed and doesn't want it , I'm certain it's possible.

21) Almost all of the Battle Chip GP segment (essentially everything but the cutscenes with Hephaestus and Apollo) was written by OathToOblivion. Bless you Oath.

22) Mary, a quiet introvert, customized her navi as a cheerful extrovert. Think about that for a moment.

23) Not sure if this is ever declared in canon, but it makes sense regardless.

24) Adapted from lyrics of 'Freeze' by T Pain.

25) START THE MUSIC (chosen by OathToOblivion):

www. youtube watch? feature=player_embedded&v=kYV_NrOgAjI

26) OathToOblivion: Surprisingly, Freezeman. exe didn't have an analogue of the original Freeze Man's Freeze Cracker. Of course, that didn't stop me from giving it to him anyway.

27) MUSIC STOPS HERE.

28) Don't know who this is? Hatman. exe and his operator are both from the cell phone games. Hatman. exe is themed like a stage magician.

29) OathToOblivion: Meanwhile, in another Loop completely unrelated to the Megaverse, one Nitoh Kosuke, Kamen Rider Beast, felt as though he was getting ripped off.

30) START THE MUSIC (chosen by OathToOblivion):

www. youtube watch? feature=player_embedded&v=5aKQF7y2vLQ

31) MUSIC STOPS HERE.

32) What did Bass. exe find? Stay tuned as I tackle the mess that is Battle Network 4 and 5, next time on the Mega Loops!

The Twelve Loops of Christmas

AN: Just a note, but I originally planned to have Battle in the Network done in time to post this (yeah, I'm only just finishing up adapting BN4 as of this posting, so you can see how well that worked) so some of these will logically take place after it finishes. Anyway, on with the snippets!

For the Twelve Loops of Christmas, my readers gave to me:

12.12 (From Leonite)

Twelve Synchro Chips.

Christmas. A time for celebration. A time for you to enjoy what you have with family and friends. A time that one Lan Hikari, sometimes known as Hikari Netto, enjoyed each and every loop. Even so he always felt cautious at this time of year as he walked through the bustling city. Someone or another with a point to prove, villains or not, tended to come out of the woodwork at this time of year.

"Are you ok Lan?"

Hub Hikari, sometimes known as Hikari Saito, understood the feelings of his brother and net op. This loop had been good so far and still had plenty to go. A variant that leaned towards the anime they saw in the Hub Loop, the two were still the brothers that they were used to and nothing would take that away from them. Duo and Regal had been stopped recently and Bass had vanished with a promise to have one final bout with the two. It was a request that could be interesting to answer on occasion for a challenge, but for now nothing major was going on.

"It's this time of year Hub, you know that." Lan replied. He looked across the city as the sun starts to sink in the sky and the electrical advertisements become all the brighter. "As much as I want to relax, you never know when some whackjob is going to pop up."

As if on cue, each and every one of the advertisements suddenly turned blank... and then were replaced by the image of a man with spiked hair appeared. Across his face was a single scar... and one of his eyes was covered by hair.

Mayl had been out doing some last minute Christmas shopping when the advertisements changed. Instead of shrinking back she slowly reached for her PET. It was obvious what the man was about to do but she still wanted to be prepared.

"People of DenTech City. My name is Xander Payne. I am a man with a vision."

Raika growled even as he prepared to jack Searchman in. He had come into the country on a recently completed mission and had hoped to meet up with Lan Hikari, to at the least wish him a happy holiday season. He knew exactly who this Xander Payne was, and if he was making such a forward decree then he clearly had a plan in progress.

"As you have seen the world has been devastated again and again recently. Not by the hands of flesh and blood, but by those made of data."

Charlie frowned as Tesla crossed her hands. The two had been meeting up for a bit of a pleasant meal. A meal now ruined by the presence of some nutter with way too much power. Of course they had Gyroman and Magnetman respectively with them (Tesla didn't trust the latter in her father's hands), but they both knew that simply pinpointing the location wasn't the sort of task they were suited for.

"The new internet was brought into the world to help advance it... and when it did, we found our viruses became stronger than ever. So we made avatars to fight back against them."

Ms. Yuri resisted the urge to growl even as Ms. Mari looked at the image on every television at the moment. She knew Xander's group only from hearsay and from what Regal had called them: Madmen. Given Regal's own low standards this put her on edge

"And yet these NetNavis, these creations of the Hikari family, have caused nothing but trouble for the world. They say they are for our benefit, but just how recently was it that the world was almost destroyed by a NetNavi?"

From the shadows a figure watched. Dark Miyabi had been approached to be hired by the group Xander represented before and he had turned it down. He had suspected what they had in mind was a bit more extreme than they had suggested... and he was right.

"That is why me and my Emerald Spears are here, to help you all realize that the net as it is, and NetNavis, need to be destroyed."

Chaud glared. Protoman could understand his operator's anger. While it was true many people had done harm with NetNavis, just as much good had been done and some people even relied on them for their well being.

"While regrettable that we must push things so far, for our own safety it's necessary. Flesh is worth more than what advantages data can provide to us."

Dingo gripped his fist... only for Fyrefox to clasp a hand on his shoulder and shake his head. It wouldn't do them any good to lose control of their temper at a time like this. Not when they could figure out something to do to help. The two had been hanging about for a gathering of friends with Lan, but by the looks of things plans had changed.

"We have taken over SciLab. Soon the entirety of DenTech City will be enlightened as to the destruction that these beasts can cause."

Meddy noticed Jasmine had fallen unusually silent. And she knew why. The two had come for the celebration with Lan and friends, before they'd head home for the holidays. The fact that there was yet another villain was a problem. The fact that it was at Sci Lab meant Lan was going to get involve. Meddy knew that Jasmine was already reaching into her pockets for a familiar chip.

"If, after an hour, we do not have confirmation that there will be a public move to destroy all NetNavis, then we'll start killing the hostages we've taken."

As the screen shifted, Lan gasped. The view had shifted and showed Yuchiro Hikari on screen.

"And we'll start with the most directly responsible person. Yuchiro Hikari. You have 1 hour DenTech. Dimensional Area activate."

"Synchro Chip in and download!"

"Why?"

Xander Payne turned around and looked at Dr. Yuichiro Hikari. "Why what, Yuichiro?"

"Rush Synchro Chip in and download!"

Yuichiro glared. "You know exactly what I'm talking about." He noted "You were one of my best scientists. You were integral on developing the Synchro Chip. Of all people here besides me and Mr. Famous, you should know the most about them. And yet after that one time-"

"A certain attack that left me... enlightened as to how the world needs to be." Xander replied. "And you don't need to dance around it. You're asking why I've lured your son and the net savior Chaud here."

"Cross Fusion!"

A brief moment of silence. And then... "That is your plan, isn't it?" Yuichiro asked.

"Ah, I could never get anything past you. But yes. This is all for... a demonstration."

It hadn't been more than 10 minutes since the announcement. 10 minutes of Lan, or more accurately CF Megaman rushing for his life towards Sci-Lab. Only stopping along the way to destroy the viruses that had taken advantage of such an open gateway into the real world. If this wasn't contained fast, if it wasn't stopped fast, then not only would people be hurt or worse, but the power drain would start to become obvious. As much as they liked to refine the system it still drained a lot of power to use which was why it was rarely used for more than 5 or 10 minutes at a time. And yet both Lan and Hub knew in their hearts their desperation was more... focused than that. On their father. On the fact that they had heard from Rock and Roll as to just how far the madman was willing to go in their baseline. They wouldn't lose their father like Rock and Roll had almost lost theirs.

As he came up to Sci-Lab Lan skidded to a halt. "Alright... I've got the battle chip data ready." Lan said.

"We should be ready for anything though Lan." Megaman pointed out. "After all..."

"Right, who knows what they have inside." Lan replied.

"Actually, we do."

Lan blinked then turned around... and was stunned. Those who stood before him were Mayl, Miyabi and Raika as CF Roll, Shadowman and Searchman respectively. "You didn't really think we'd let you do this alone did you Lan?" Raika asked.

"You do tend to rush into things surprisingly often." Dark Miyabi noted.

Mayl just held up a fist. "Besides, I know your dad and want to see him safe as much as you do." She explained, a determined grin more at home on Lan's own face on hers.

"And there's no need to worry about aerial recon!" Lan looked up and could help but smile as Charlie and Tesla, as CF Gyroman and Magnetman, landed in front of them. "Me and my darling Tesla scouted out the roof, they haven't posted any guards up there." Charlie said.

"Pretty lax for an evil organization if you ask me." Tesla added. "And after seeing a speech like that I knew there was no way I could convince Charlie to do anything but help you out, so I thought I'd come along and have some fun."

"And to teach them how to actually fight, huh Tesla?" Ms. Yuri asked as she emerged from a nearby alley as CF Needleman. "I'm honestly here because they're trying to ruin Christmas for my sister, but getting to help out a few friends is always nice."

"I think that's supposed to be our line!" A louder voice cried out. Soon enough the group swelled again as Fyrefox landed in with his jets flaring and Jasmine on his back, as CF Napalmman and CF Meddy respectively. Soon enough Dingo and Chaud, as CF Tomahawkman and CF Protoman, landed beside them.

"Like we'd let you go through this without us." Jasmine noted. "You're going to need all the help you can get if this group is dangerous."

Dingo grinned. "Plus, who else are you going to have break the door down but me and Tomahawkman." He bragged.

"Please, me and Napalmman could get that done so much faster." Fyrefox dismissed, but still grinned.

"We all owe you at least once over Lan... it's time we did something to help you out." Chaud added. "Beyond letting you be in TV ads."

"Wait Lan's in your TV ads?" Jasmine asked.

Mayl giggled. "Remind me about that when we're done here, he looks so funny dressing up in this sort of savage man-"

"And that's enough of that!" Lan interrupted... but despite himself, despite the odds, he couldn't help but grin. "Everyone... thank you. Are you sure though?"

Raika nodded. "My intelligence indicates that the Emerald Spears have deployed navis into the real world, as well as controlled viruses. None of them seem to be using technology like Dimensional Chips." He noted.

"And between my own investigation and Mayl's... unique abilities." Miyabi said. "I've been able to scout out to all but the inner chamber. The Emerald Spears are carrying firearms on them, but mostly electricity guns to try and disrupt those with cross fusion. With all our abilities, I evaluated it to be merely a difficult battle between the four of us."

"But there are 11." Tesla noted. "I'd probably do best near the front when we charge in. Magnetman and I can take a lot of Damage and knock opponents out of the way."

Lan grinned. "Actually... with all of you here, I have a plan."

Life was not always great for Elpizo. He had joined up with the Emerald Spears mainly out of a want to belong. He had never been good at operating Navis, with his Navi Elpizo. exe being mainly a cosmetic change, and only getting a handle of basic chip combos. But Xander said he could make a difference, and it was their duty to guard the door, which he would do! Unfortunately for both poor Elpizo's, the door then exploded inwards after being cut in three directions as unseen to them a shadow darted forward. Following that Elpizo had to duck out of the way to avoid the twin charging of two shapes, one red and one blue, before they fused back into one being while 9 other shape passed by... and it was only a minute later that he realized who they were.

"Elpizo to command! We have 11 Cross fused humans in the building. I repeat, 11!"

To simply say it was a massacre as the Cross Fusion team made their way through would be an understatement. While each Emerald spear was well defended personally and armed with rifles that were designed to shoot electricity to try and disrupt the Cross Fusion, not to mention each having a Normal Navi by their side and even a few viruses... none of them were truly prepared for what came at them. First, they'd feel a slight breeze, those few unlucky enough to keep themselves fully exposed either knocked out or deleted in an instant. This would be followed by heavy impact as a powerful red figure rushed at them. Those who fired the lightning guns would find them absorbed by the figure. Those firing other shots would see them bounce off of a powerful barrier or, in the case of explosives, a burst of air sending them hurtling back towards them. But the Cross fused member didn't even slow down as they passed... but anyone who tried to cut them down or shoot them would expose themselves to quite literal fire power and axe swings providing an offensive. If any viruses were left at this stage most would find them either being blasted into deletion from seemingly nowhere, or turned against them. To any who were extremely dug in, they'd find themselves contending with pill shaped blasts and piercing spikes on their position. And if any navi was still around and not logged out or deleted by this point, they'd find themselves in range for an array of blasts and slashes.

But at the core two seemed to be unconcerned with the fighting... or more accurately, being preserved from it for the moment. It had gone unsaid but both Lan and Chaud, as well as the other members, could tell that this was going much too easily. There should be stronger weaponry, better dug in defenses, something that would make sense knowing that at least three Cross Fusion able people were around the area at almost all times. Even Maylu seemed to conserve her ammunition. After all, while most are better at long range, it would be a mid to short ranged battle if such a thing happened. As they headed, they didn't head for the more well known main computer room... but rather, what Searchman, Shadowman and Rush had managed to gather before Lan had arrived and they had been used in Cross Fusion.

As they burst in Lan allowed himself a moment of nostalgia. He remembered this lab in particular. It was the one where Yuichiro had been doing the tests with Prismman and Cross Fusion. As they entered they noticed the scientists of Sci Lab... each and every one of them tied up, bound and gagged at the edge of the room... with two exceptions. The first was Yuichiro Hikari himself, bound, but not gagged it seemed as he sat near the other figure in the room. His hair was spiked and seemed to cover one of his eyes. Like the other Emerald spears he wore green, but much more casually than they ere, seeming to just wear a green shirt and jeans. But even so Lan put himself on guard even as the guy... claps.

"Well done Lan Hikari.. I had heard tales of your ability to gather allies... I thought that at the least I'd have to contend with you and the famous Net Savior Chaud... but it seems that you've brought enough here for me to put on a display." Xander admitted.

"Let my dad and the others go!" Lan called out.

Xander smiled. "Don't worry yourself. The hostage taking was merely a threat. A threat to gather you and the others here. I founded the Emerald Spears to get rid of the true scourge to humanity... one that enlightened me all too recently. Net Navis."

"Damn it Xander... why?" Yuichiro asked.

"Be quiet Yuichiro. I don't want to have to hurt you, but I have to chat to these fine people here who show such disregard for my ideas... and yet, at the same time, show exactly how navi's should be. Simple enhancements for us to use. Weapons if needed."

"Dr. Xander Payne... I thought there was something familiar with that name when you tried to hire me. You were one of the scientists at Sci Lab prior to the Duo incident." Miyabi noted. As the other members of the team looked at him he shrugged. "I do research on my targets when I'm hired, and more than one has tried to hire me to disrupt Sci Lab before falling short on payment."

"Then why are you so against them now?" Jasmine asked. "If you worked with Lan's dad, then surely you should be one of the strongest supporters?"

Xander's face took on a stony look. "When viruses started appearing into the real world months ago, I was part of the Sci Lab team to check it out, to ensure if the situation was one where we could handle it ourselves, a minor viral attack, or if we'd need to call upon the Cross Fusion team." He explained. "This was early into the team's life... Dimensional Chips were known about, but the team only consisted of three people at the time and we couldn't risk being stretched thin... so it was both my misfortune and my clouded judgement that failed me when I stumbled across it. Him or her.

Whatever you want to call that Digital Demon who was summoning viruses to the area. I'll never forget that white and green devil..."

"White and Green... Slur?" Dingo asked.

"But why was she there? She can usually do what she wants from the comet apparently, so why?" Ms. Yuri asked.

"Who can answer what a demon like her was doing there?" Xander noted. "I can tell you that she did enlighten me to the truth... very painfully" He muttered, slowly letting a hand travel up to his face before he forced it down. "From there I realized... that for all we've done, navi's have done us more harm than good. The internet as it is has evolved the wrong way. I formed the Emerald Spears to fight for this cause."

"Not much of a fight though!" Fyrefox pointed out. "It was dead easy."

"Too easy." Tesla noted. "You've got something prepared... your demonstration, no doubt."

Xander chuckled. "Oh yes... and what a display it is. Behold everyone... the demon who plagued us so much in the name of Duo!" He declared as he pulled out what looked to be a modified PET. He put on the viewscreen... and a collective gasp went around the room. There was Slur... but not as they knew her. She seemed to be tied to a table, her data seeming to fall apart on occasion, only for electricity to run through her bindings and force it all back together. Each time a growl of frustration and pain escaped her lips. "We managed to find her data scattered after the incident... and while we couldn't recover it all... we had enough to reconstruct her."

"D-damn you human... end my torment..." Slur croaked out. Her voice sounded rough. "You keep me alive, bound to you and so far from my master. enacting every little vengeance you can... haven't you had enough?"

Xander frowned. "No demon. Not until the way life should be lived is restored." He insisted. "And my plan is to use you to do that... to show the true potential for NAvi's. Not as friends or guardians... but as weapons."

"And you think we'll let you do that?" Mayl asked, multiple grunts of affirmation going around.

"Xander... why? Even so... that's going too far." Yuichiro pointed out.

Xander sighed as he reached into his pocket. "And this is why I left Yuichiro. You wouldn't understand this. You've got too much invested in this current world. And sadly, it seems your son and his friends must pay for our sins." He stated as he pulled out a chip... one all too familiar to a few of them. Shaped like a synchro chip but purple and yellow in colour. "Now..."

"Wait! That's not a Synchro Chip!" Lan cried out.

"It's a Dark Synchro Chip, it will corrupt you!" Ms. Yuri added... and even so, they felt a blur as Miyabi dashed forward... only for Xander to press an option on the PET. Wires appeared from the floor and lunged at Miyabi, threatening to entangle him as the ninja leaped back.

"Oh I know what it is... but I feel that like this... it'll do something different." Xander remarked with a smirk. "Let the demonstration begin! Dark Synchro Chip in, Download!" And then a blazing orb of light consumed them... and temporarily the room was nothing but light...

It all happened so fast. If it hadn't been for pure instinct guiding him Lan was sure that the blast that fired out of the glowing orb would have hit him... and even so, he only just rolled out of the way enough to avoid damage. He spared a look back and gasped... Mayl, Jasmine, Dingo and even the heavier Fyrefox laid sprawled on the ground by the sudden blast and knocked out of crossfusion. Despite this Tesla stood in front of them with her arms open wide, a forcefield flickered and died in her hands. She slumped forwards as she fell out of cross fusion as well. Just under half their number knocked out in one attack. The only ones who still stood after that were those who had an instinct for this sort of thing and the speed to pull it off, it seemed. Still as the light cleared there stood Payne... or more accurately CF Slur, clad in the green and white of the herald of Duo, but with a crucial difference in that the few red crystals on the vaguely feminine androgynous navi had been tainted purple. And then Xander laughed.

"Amazing... I had simply theorized it, but it seems I was correct! The power of Duo given to Slur gives her more power, but also nullifies the negative effects of Dark Chips, and prevents her from taking control!" He declared. "Watch people of DenTech City! Watch as I show you the power of a navi harnessed entirely for use by humans, instead of companionship and-"

"Now!" Chaud shouted. As he did Yuichiro, still so close to the changed Xander, pushed himself as best as he could out of the way. "Program Advance: Life Sword!" As he said this he leaped forward with the super charged Program Advance in hands.

"Program Advance: Mad Fang!" Ms. Yuri declared as she swung forth both hands with fired out a flurry of super powered fangs towards the cross fused Xander.

"Program Advance: Giga Cannon!" Raika shouted as he aimed the powerful blast to fire in the gap between the fangs.

"Program Advance: Evil Cut!" Miyabi added as he blurred forward, him and Chaud slicing at the cross fused Slur in unison.

"Program Advance: Infinite Vulcan!" Lan and Charlie called out in unison, Charlie's rotors a blur as he does as they rapidly blast away at the cross fused navi... and smoke is knocked up by the sheer amount of shots fired. Then suddenly a pair of gasps sounded out as Chaud fell to the floor and clutched one side even as he fell out of Cross Fuse. Miyabi was still fused but leaped back towards the scientists. The dust cleared in an instant and showed that Xander had transformed one of his arms into a glowing blade.

"Heh... I'll admit, that actually hurt a bit... but that was your best shot." Xander stated with a slight cackle. "My turn!" Suddenly cables burst through the floor and wrapped around the legs of all those who stood. Charlie and Miyabi swiftly took to the walls even as Ms Yuri was taken down with a single cut from the energy blade. Xander grinned madly, clear to all the world.

Or at least, clear to Yuichiro. "Xander, stop! The Dark Synchro chip is making you go out of control!" Yuichiro shouted.

"You always thought you knew better Yuichiro... but the fact is, I'm doing this all to show the potential. Show how much better Navi's are simply used as tools!" Xander declared as he charged towards Lan...

Only for a loud clang to reverberate through the room as energy blade met metal fist. CF Megaman MetalSoul looked up at CF Slur. "Tools? You're not even using Slur as a tool. You're using her as a weapon! Navi's gain strength through partnerships with others. Even Slur gained her power from Duo!" Lan declared. The metal fist he guarded with broke... but swiftly reformed into a sword as ProtoSoul activated. While Lan wasn't a paranoid boy he had clearly thought something was off when he entered the room. Even so Xander just grinned as a blast hits him... and glanced off.

"Useless." Raika's eyes widened as he heard Xander's voice behind him. The one in front of Lan disappeared as if an illusion and Raika crumpled down into a heap as his cross fusion ended, a dark bruise already appearing on his head. "A blow to the head... nothing too lethal, wouldn't do to kill my test subjects." Xander remarked... even as powerful winds whipped themselves up and picked him up. "Oh?"

"Muramasa!"

"NeoVariable Sword!"

Charlie and Miyabi, two of the fastest cross fusioned members, struck at Xander at once... and found both blades grabbed in Xanders hands. "I already told you it's useless!" He declared. As he did the tornado dispersed and he slammed the two into each other. "And this is the might of the Cross Fusion team? Pathetic."

" They're pathetic?" Lan asked... but at the same time it seem to come out as two voices. One Lan Hikari, one Hub Hikari.

"You sacrificed your own men to simply distract us, to provide entertainment or even wear us down because you thought that having a super powered navi enhanced by a Dark Chip wasn't enough. And while you let them suffer you're making Slur suffer more!" Hub declared

"You've denied her every right she could possibly have. The right to redeem herself. The right to peace. Denying her from basic freedom or even at the very least a death like she begged!" Lan added. "For all the death and destruction that Slur might've brought, she did because Duo was judging us!"

"All you can say is that you're doing this for revenge." Hub pointed out.

"For being in the wrong place at the wrong time." Lan coldly said.

"Shut up! You're a kid and a pile of Data! What could you know about suffering that pain?" Xander declared as he rushed at Lan. Cables burst from the floor and wrapped around the Cross Fused Megaman, completely binding him. "Well while you might not know, your father soon will!" Xander cackled as a blade outstretched from his arm.

And yet Lan... no, at that point it wasn't just Lan Hikari but both sides, glared at him. "Even so... the others will keep fighting." The two declared "Because it is our duty!"

Inches before the blade of light would have decapitated Lan another glow came from the head crystal of CF Slur... which briefly turned red as a yellow orb flew out of it. A burst of light and energy filled the room which sent even Xander flying back... and when the light faded he couldn't speak. How could he? What stood before him shouldn't be possible! For what stood before him was clad in a black bodysuit with green lines drawing down into deep green-blue boots that seemed to have him float effortlessly over the floor. His chest was clad in white armor with a column pattern while Megaman's navi symbol was on his chest. On the black shoulders were two green cross shaped crystals but the black stopped there as the rest of the arms were covered in two large white sleeves, almost looking like petals although not as big as slurs own and still ending in hands. Finally the helmet looked almost exactly the same to Slur's, but with a navi symbol on each fin. Lan seemed just as stunned as Xander as he finally put words to what he saw.

"Soul Unison... Slur Soul!" Of course he knew the term this loop was Double Soul... but this wasn't just two souls working together. These were two souls perfectly in sync with one another, if only briefly. A unison of souls. Of course Xander growled and disappeared... but to the eyes of CF Megaman Slur Soul, he seemed almost slow as energy gathered in his palm... only for cabling to spring out over CF Slur and wrap around him. Lan charged forward and seemed to all the world like a blur as he slammed his palm into Xander. The palm glowed even as he did and sent the Dark Cross Fused madman flying into a wall hard enough to leave an imprint. Before Xander could steady himself he found a blast of energy fired at him, exploding on impact. as he stumbled out of it Lan rushed forward as his hand turned into an energy sword.

"N-no... this power... this power was supposed to be my ultimate weapon to rid the world of navis!" Xander declared... and as he did a dark aura appeared around him. The burst of it was enough to knock Lan back and off balance. "Die!" Xander bellowed as he thrust a glow blade forward... and through Lan.

"No!" Yuichiro cried out... only for him and Xander to blink as the apparently stabbed Lan disappeared and reappeared just above Xander.

"Too slow. Justice One!" The voice... it wasn't Lan. It wasn't Hub. It wasn't even Slur. It was all three in unison as their fist glowed, expanding to giant size, and slammed down into the head crystal... which shattered. As it shattered the data burst off of Xander as his cross fusion was forcefully ended... and his PET fell to the ground, crushed by the impact. Lan panted in exhaustion... but was surprised when Slur rose from the PET. However, Slur simply smiled.

"Thank you... Hikaris." Slur said before her data disintegrated. As she did the damaged PET spat out the Dark Synchro chip. Xander slowly reached out to it before a loud crunch echoed out as Lan landed on it.

"Do you see what you've done Xander?" Lan asked. "Who you've hurt, both directly and indirectly? How many lives you put at risk? What justifies all this?"

"P-Power... to save... everyone..." Xander weakly argued... before he slumped forward, knocked out.

"So dad... was Xander always that way?" Lan asked. It was getting into the evening and both her and Yuichiro were slowly walking home. Treasure the life you have and all that, and it would be a nice surprise for his mum when they showed up.

Yuichiro sighed. "He had always been... zealous. But before the incident... he always channeled it in such a good way. And as much as I hate to say it, he was right in that a Dark Synchro Chip seemed to be mostly cancelled out by Slur's connection to Duo. He was... and still is a brilliant man."

"And yet it ended up being used so badly..." Megaman noted.

"It's funny isn't it?" Lan admitted. "Evil men like Wily can find redemption... and yet good guys like Xander can fall so far."

"And yet you can still make a good thing out of a bad situation." Yuichiro noted. "Ah, there's the house. I wonder what your mother has in store for us?"

As his father walked forward, Lan hung back a little as he pulled out a new pair of chips. One a mighty fist, the Justice One... and the other showed a red diamond with the mark of Duo on it. "I suppose even bad things like this can have some good in the end." Lan said.

"Let's just hope that wherever Slur is now, she's resting peacefully." Megaman admitted.

12.11 (Cameos from OathToOblivion, Leonite, and Thanatos's Scribe)

Eleven Battle Chasers

"It's a beautiful day here at the Battle and Chase circuit!"

"Indeed it is, Plum, and we've got quite the field today for our racing fans!"

"Very true, Ripot! Of course there's the Mega Twins, Mega Man and Mega Woman racing respectively in the Rush Roadstar and the Tango Turbo."

"But as we all know, where there's Light there's Wily! Bass is out on the field today in the Treble Darkstar, along with Shadow Man in the Shinobi Master and Turbo Man racing... well, as himself actually."

"Ah, but it's not just a grudge match between Light and Wily today either! From Dr. Cossack comes Skull Man in the Skull Dugger! And here for the chance to personally race against Turbo Man is the transforming stunt robot Nitro Man! Also racing as himself."

"But let's not forget the new faces either! Having literally popped out of a pipe a few days ago, the man known only as Mario is joining the racers in the B-Dasher! Then there's the rivalry between the other two out there, Yusei Fudo on the Yusei Go and Jack Atlas on his high tech super-wheel, the Wheel of Fortune!"

"Yes, though those last two seem to think they're here for a high speed card duel for reasons that have yet to be adequately explained to me. Ah, well, they'll figure out the reality of the track soon enough!"

"Indeed! And with that, we're almost ready to... Hold on a moment, I've just been informed that there's a last-minute addition to the field. Now racing in the eleventh position is Auto from Light Labs, driving the..."

"The what?"

"The... Auto Mobile? Is he serious?"

12.10 (Idea from Leonite and zeusdemigod131)

Ten Forms of Sigma

"We wish you a Merry Christmas!

We wish you a Merry Christmas!"

X blinked as he answered the front door of Maverick Hunter HQ and ran a diagnostic on his sensory inputs.

"We wish you a Merry Christmas,

And a Happy New Year!"

"Zero?!" he yelled back into the building frantically.

"Good tidings we bring,

To you and your kin!

We wish you a Merry Christmas,

And a Happy New Year!"

The pounding of feet heralded the arrival of the crimson hunter, who also stared at what X was seeing.

"Now bring us some figgy pudding!

Now bring us some figgy pudding!"

"Are you seeing this?"

"Maybe?" Zero hesitated. "I mean... This can't really be happening..."

"Now bring us some figgy pudding,

And a cup of good cheer!"

"But none of our sensory inputs are malfunctioning..." X finished as he continued staring. "Yeah..."

"We won't go until we get some!

We won't go until we get some!"

Outside of Maverick Hunter HQ, holding small songsheets and singing their hearts out were Sigma in his original form he'd had from his creation until he'd originally turned Maverick, complete with cape...

"We won't go until we get some,

So bring it right here!"

Along with Sigma, in his first resurrection body that still showed the claw sheaths on his wrists; and Sigma in a form like the first, but sans cape...

"So bring us some figgy pudding!

So bring us some figgy pudding!"

Then there was the purple beetle-like form of Sigma, right next to the blue-armored Sigma, plus the purple and yellow armored Sigma in his ratty reaper-like cloak...

"So bring us some figgy pudding,

And bring it right here!"

Sigma was also there, in his white armor with a sectioned purple cape that almost looked like wings if you looked at it right, with his buddy Sigma who had clearly seen better days with his rather beat-up zombie-like body...

"Good tidings we bring,

To you and your kin!"

Standing near the back was Sigma, with his purple armor, green shoulders with white cylinders jutting out, and high white armored collar...

"We wish you a Merry Christmas,

And a Happy New Year!"

And finally, Sigma in his green, purple, red, and brown armor with the really high red collar.

"Okay, next song boys!" Sigma grinned pleasantly.

"I want a hippopotamus for Christmas!"

X and Zero, along with an ever-growing number of Hunters, couldn't think of anything to do but stare incredulously as they were serenaded by the caroling Sigmas.

"Only a hippopotamus will do!"

12.9 (From Thanatos's Scribe)

Nine Models of Joe

Joe felt the world 'shift' as he recognized the transition between one Loop and the next, and felt his optic flicker until stopping with him being in what appeared to be Light Labs. Still, something seemed... different than usual. Running a quick diagnostic through his system, Joe discovered that his systems were vastly different from his baseline chassis: His processors were much more advanced, he surprisingly actually had an I.C. chip, which was usually reserved solely for Robot Masters, and he actually had the charge upgrade that only Rock and Blues got from the doctor.

"Sniper Joe, there you are!" A familiar voice cried out with a touch of what seemed to be desperation, and Joe turned around to see Dr. Albert Wily, albeit looking healthier than most Loops, running towards him. Instinctively, the green robot pointed his gun – no, Buster Arm, he reminded himself – and began charging the weapon as he prepared to fire the charged shot. The feeling of the attack itself could only be best described as ecstatic, it's energy flowing through Joe's body.

"Dr. Wily, you are under arrest for various crimes, which include attempted rebellion and betrayal. Surrender immediately." Joe stated as he refocused attention on the balding doctor. Rather than run or plead for mercy, however, Wily stopped moving and began... crying?

Joe paused as he looked down at the doctor, who was now weeping and mentioning how "They have all betrayed mankind". Checking his memory logs for new 'Loop memories', he made a startling discovery about this Loop: Apparently, instead of Dr. Light and Dr. Wily working to create DLN-000: Blues, they had each worked on a separate robot, with Dr. Light making the clumsy assistant robot designated 'Auto' to help with maintenance work and mechanical construction while Dr. Wily built Joe himself for law enforcement and military combat. When the two robots were brought to the government officials for whose idea would be used, the officials were torn between who would be accepted. That is, of course, until Auto 'upgraded' the officials' vehicle to have turbo thrusters without informing them of the changes. Needless to say, the officials weren't pleased with this, and Dr. Wily was the one given the green light to continue with his projects on peacekeeping through autonomous forces. Despite of the fact that Dr. Light wasn't the one given this permission, Wily let the doctor join him at his side, and the technological industry boomed thanks to WilyTech. As time passed on and more Robot Masters, or Joe Masters as they were called, were made, Sniper Joe himself slowly got more and more upgrades, with better processors being the forefront of these upgrade and eventually resulting in him getting the charge upgrade to his Buster Arm. A few days before Joe had Awakened, Dr. Light, who had developed a severe case of jealousy similar to Wily in baseline, had reprogrammed the other eight Joe Masters to be his generals.

Realizing that he was targeting the wrong doctor, Joe lowered his Buster Arm and let the charged shot dissipate. At this, Dr. Wily stopped his sobbing and looked at Joe with some apprehension.

"Sniper Joe, you're not... reprogrammed?" He said with a tinge of what Joe had come to realize as 'hope' in his voice.

"Affirmative, Dr. Wily. It appears as though that the reprogramming has not affected me due to the majority of my original programming being inaccessible to the former ally Dr. Light." Joe theorized, and Dr. Wily's shoulders sagged in relief.

"Thank goodness for that." Dr. Wily said as he walked briskly over to the computers and accessed the satellite systems, his fingers blurring across the keyboard. After a few minutes, his hands stopped moving and he pressed a button off to the side, causing for the monitor to display a circle moving into Joe. "From what I've seen, the eight Joe Masters frequent these areas. If you take them out, then you'll be able to go after Thomas himself," Wily stated, and Joe near-instantly received the files.

"Understood, Dr. Wily," Joe said, and began walking over to the teleport station, the locations of the other eight Joe Masters flashing across his display. After viewing the various Joe Masters several times, he decided to follow DLN-001's advice on 'take the weakest boss first' and selected the area of the 'weakest' Joe as his target. Stepping onto the teleporter, Joe quickly submitted the co-ordinates to the teleporter, and the program began charging up for use. After a few seconds, the teleporter activated, and in a flash of light he was transported to near proximity of the first Joe Master.

12.8 (Idea from Gamerex27)

Eight Robot Masters

It was that time of year. The time of year that Rock tended to find himself pressed into public appearances as Mega Man by one Mayor Leonardo Dorado. And this Loop Roll wasn't Awake to help take any of the pressure off or divert the man's overly exuberant hijinks.

A man who was, at the moment, giving a speech regarding the upcoming winter holidays in front of an artificial pine tree that could dwarf some office buildings, decked from trunk to tip in bright lights, garlands, and oversized ornaments.

And something overhead that sounded like a low-flying jet...

"–join me, Mega City in a supreme celebration as we count down the days unti–"

"Down!" Rock yelled as he tackled the mayor off the podium right before the stage was smashed to pieces by a large machine landing on it very forcefully.

"What in the world is..." the mayor trailed off as he took in the giant multi-story object that had nearly flattened him. "No, no, no! The giant menorah was supposed to come up from underground during my speech! Someone get me the event engineers! I want to have a word with them!"

"Bwahahahahahaha!" an all-too familiar voice came from the mechanical menorah as the center candle (or at least something designed to look like one, because a real wax candle that size would have been a disaster waiting to happen) not only lit, but projected a massive hologram of an equally familiar face into the sky above.

Rock noted that in the middle of the Star of David stamped at the point of the giant menorah where the other candle holders branched off to the sides was a stylized 'W'.

"Yes, citizens of Mega City!" the projected face of Dr. Wily grinned widely, his balding head covered by a traditional Jewish yarmulke that Rock didn't recall ever seeing him wear before. "Join me as we use the days of my beloved Chanukah this year to count down to the first-ever celebration of Wily-Mas! If you're all good boys and girls and swear obedience to me, I might even bring you a present! But, I'm getting ahead of myself! Before that happens, we must light the menorah! And who better to light it than my special Chanukah Masters, after destroying Mega Man!"

A door in the right-most candle holder slid open and out came a... rather human-looking robot. One wearing what appeared to be fairly orthodox Jewish prayer attire. Were it not for the flame burning atop his yarmulke, he'd actually appear almost ordinary.

That and the fact that he'd jumped down from several dozen feet in the air like it was nothing.

"Just one of you?" Rock found himself asking.

"One each day," the robot confirmed. "The rituals must be observed after all."

"Just making sure," Rock nodded. If they wanted to come one at a time, he wasn't about to try and convince them otherwise. "Who are you, exactly?"

"I am Olive Chanukah," the robot introduced, inclining his head in a respectful manner and touching his fingers to the open flame atop his yarmulke. Fingers that came away on fire, suggesting that it was more than a gesture of respect in this case. "Named after the miracle oil that burned for eight nights when there was enough for but one. And now that same miracle oil shall burn you."

The robot pointed his burning fingers at Rock, and let loose with a spray of oil from the back of his hand that ignited into a blazing flamethrower, forcing Rock to jump back as people around began to run screaming.

"You need to stop this!" he yelled back. "People are going to get hurt!"

"We do this in the name of Wily," the robot declared firmly as he let loose another stream of burning oil. "Like in the origins of Chanukah, we are the pure facing the unpure, and you shall burn for your insolence."

Rock dove to the side as more and more flames were unleashed and tried to take stock of the situation. His opponent didn't seem concerned with collateral damage, but he also wasn't being very mobile. Also, the only reason he was shooting fire was because of the pilot light taken from the flame atop his head, not because of his master weapon...

Diving to the side of another blast of flames, Rock made his decision and darted forward before another shot could be taken and grabbed

Olive Chanukah's arm to copy his power. Watching his opponent's eyes widen, he knew he'd chosen the right course of action as he switched to the 'Miracle Oil' weapon and fired a stream of flammable liquid at the arm with the pilot light burning on his fingers.

Instantly, the arm and about half the robot's body went up in flame.

"No! The candle! The menorah!" Olive Chanukah flailed, trying to defend the flame atop the yarmulke on his head from the ones burning the rest of him. "If my flame goes out, the ritual will be broken!"

Rock grabbed the robot's non-burning arm and looked him in the eye. "Let me... I'll light it for you."

"You..." the look of gratitude as Rock reached up with oiled fingers to touch the tiny flame and set them alight was surprisingly sincere, "you will? Thank you..."

As the Chanukah Master collapsed from the flames burning his form, Rock whistled for Rush to turn into his jet mode and carry him up to the first 'candle', directly above where Olive Chanukah had emerged from.

Rock had shown up in civilian garb, hoping that things might go a little easier the second day. Unfortunately, certain things were conspiring to make that problematic.

The first was that the second chamber on Wily's menorah was already open when he got there. The second was that someone was selling candle-topped yarmulkes to apparently eager civilians. Many of which people had lit with actual flames.

"Oh, boy... this could be trouble..." he moaned to himself, pondering if he should try and seek out the Chanukah Master in his civilian guise, or just go ahead and armor up and see who stepped forth.

"Problems?" a female voice cut into his thoughts. Jumping slightly, he whipped around to see a girl perhaps a bit taller than him dressed in form-fitting black sport thermals and one of those flame-topped yarmulkes. "Sorry about that," the girl apologized for startling him and offered her hand in greeting. "I'm Judith."

"Rock," he grasped her hand in a friendly manner, grinning sheepishly. "And I was just looking around. There was some trouble here yesterday after all..."

"Well, maybe I can stick with you and help keep an eye out!" Judith smiled. "Can't be too careful!"

"That'd be cool," Rock smiled. "Honestly, in that getup you look like some sort of Judaic ninja or something."

"Do I really?" Judith laughed. "Well, then let's see what my ninja senses can pick up!"

They actually had a lot of fun together as sunset approached slowly, but surely. They looked around the various stalls and performers who had set up in the square, but neither spotted anything suspicious. It wasn't long until they were standing together looking at Wily's giant menorah, Judith putting a comforting hand on Rock's shoulder.

"It's alright... Maybe nothing will happen this time..." Judith assured him as she rubbed his shoulder comfortingly.

"Yeah, maybe..." Rock trailed off as he stared at the second open spot on the menorah, waiting. When he felt the hand on his shoulder tighten firmly, he whipped his hand up just in time to catch the blade of a knife before it plunged into his neck.

"How...?" Judith whispered in surprise.

"When we shook hands earlier, I could tell you were a robot," Rock stated calmly. "And your name... Judith. The same as the woman who assassinated Holophernes in Hebrew legend and carried his severed head back to those who were losing faith in order to bolster their morale."

"You know your history... but it won't help you..." Judith's voice hardened as she tried to wrest the knife back, but Rock held on tight even as he twisted around to face her and gain better leverage.

The two struggled back and forth, their struggle for control of the Assassin's Knife blurring into one long event until before Rock really knew what had happened, Judith's eyes shot open wide in shock. Looking down, he saw that the struggle had somehow resulted in his plunging the blade into her chest, as the sparking of severed wires could attest to.

"The... menorah..." she gasped out as systems began failing from the severed circuitry.

"I'll light it," Rock promised as he oiled his fingers up and touched them to the flame atop her head.

Rock had decided to show up the third day in his armor instead and try to just cut to the chase. He nearly had his head taken off by a potato of all things.

"Yes! Dance impure one!" the apparent young man in a chef's outfit, save for the flame-topped yarmulke instead of the more stereotypical hat yelled as he jumped out from behind his latke stand, several of his customers backing away in fearful confusion. About the only thing differentiating him from a normal human was the arm cannon he'd tried to shoot Rock with. "Dance for Latke Chanukah and his Potato Cannon! Dance in memory of Olive and Judith Chanukah!"

"Sure thing!" Rock yelled as he grabbed one of the spuds out of the air and went into a spinning whip motion. "I call this dance 'Return to Sender'!"

"Ack, no...!" Latke Chanukah yelled as the spud was flung straight down the barrel of his arm cannon, which misfired spectacularly.

Rock didn't even need to hear the downed robot's plea to start oiling his fingers up in preparation of transferring the flame from atop his head to the menorah candle he'd emerged from beneath.

Rock sighed. Again, the chamber beneath that day's candle had been open before he'd arrived. Which again left him to search through the crowd for Wily's next Chanukah master. A task made all the harder with all the people wearing flame-topped yarmulkes in the square. And not just adults, but apparently children too. Sometimes he wondered just what people thought that made something like that seem a good idea...

"Wanna play?" a childish voice asked him suddenly, causing him to turn and look at a young boy, shorter than Rock himself, wearing a bright t-shirt, overalls, a flame-topped yarmulke, and idly spinning a large dreidel in his hand.

"Sure, why not?" Rock shrugged, sure that he'd be one of the first to know when Wily's robot made a move.

"Okay, me first!" the boy grinned and sent his dreidel spinning, only for a ball from somewhere else to knock into it. "Hey!"

"Sorry!" another kid apologized as he ran up to grab the ball before running back off.

"Tch..." the first boy looked disappointed as he spotted the side the dreidel had landed on. "Nun... Oh, well... your spin..."

"Okay," Rock accepted the item pleasantly and gave it a spin. "What are we playing for anyway?"

"You'll see..." the boy smiled mysteriously as the dreidel stopped on a different character this time.

"Huh... Shin..." Rock identified the character, only to feel a distinct pulling sensation on his power core as roughly an eighth of his energy was yanked out into a glowing ball that sped over to the boy and was absorbed. "You...? You're...?"

"Dreidel Chanukah," the boy confirmed with a nasty smile as he picked up his namesake. "And it's my turn."

The boy robot gave the dreidel another spin and what it landed on made Rock's processors go cold.

"Heh... Hei..." Dreidel Chanukah smirked as more of Rock's power core was yanked out. No less than half of what he had remaining. Smiling confidently, the child-like robot handed him the dreidel. "Your turn with the Dreidel Roulette... Try not to die too fast..."

Rock accepted the device and held it in his hands, testing the weight and balance before throwing. The dreidel spun ominously before slowing and finally landing on a character that made Rock's opponent gain a look of terror. "Gimel."

"No..." Dreidel Chanukah reached his hand up to the flame atop his head desperately as if to protect it. "Don't let..."

Rock caught the smaller robot as he collapsed from a depleted power core and raised oil-tipped fingers to the flame his foe had tried to guard.

"I won't..." he promised.

Rock sighed as he resorted to shopping at the stalls around the area. Each of the Chanukah Masters so far had been surprisingly human-like, their main defining feature being the flame-topped yarmulke each of them wore on their heads, making them look a bit like humanoid candles.

The fact that identical novelty headwear was being worn by practically every other civilian in the area by this point was making it hard to identify them.

"An excellent choice," the sharp-dressed vendor said as he bagged the trinket Rock had bought for the local Unawake version of his sister. "Here," the man continued as he gripped Rock's arm tightly and leveled one of the most strangely shaped machine guns ever at Rock's chest. "Let Gelt Chanukah get your change..."

Rock barely wrenched himself out of the way before a barrage of coins tore through the space he'd just occupied and into the concrete behind where he'd been standing.

"Actually," Rock shot back as he summoned his armor and called up the Change Maker weapon he'd just copied, "why don't you keep the change!"

Gelt Chanukah jerked spastically as the coin projectiles tore through him and Rock prepared himself to light the next candle.

"Okay... how am I going to get nearly blindsided today?" Rock sighed to himself.

"Mega Man!" a strong voice caused the crowd to part from around a man in a choir outfit and a flame-topped yarmulke. "I, Music Chanukah do hereby call you to present yourself!"

"Sure thing," Rock stepped forward as he summoned his armor.

Music Chanukah actually seemed surprised that it had been that simple.

"So... now what?" Rock asked, prepared for about anything.

Well, anything but his opponent beginning to sing.

"Ma'oz Tzur Yeshu'ati, lekha na'eh leshabe'ah.

Tikon beit tefilati, vesham toda nezabe'ah.

Le'et takhin matbe'ah mitzar hamnabe'ah.

Az egmor beshir mizmor hanukat hamizbe'ah."

Rock blinked as the lyrics washed over the area, and his vision began to swim and his balance become harder to maintain.

"Ra'ot save'ah nafshi, beyagon kohi kala.

Hayyai mareru vekoshi, beshi'abud malkhut egla.

Uvyado hagdola hotzi et hasgula.

Heil par'o vekhol zar'o yaredu ke'even bimtzula."

He recognized the lyrics from research he'd been doing into the holiday after Wily's initial announcement. He knew what was next and as Music Chanukah began the next verse, Rock joined him, hoping that he could counteract the disabling effects.

"Dvir kodsho hevi'ani, vegam sham lo shakateti.

Uva noges vehiglani, ki zarim avadti.

Vyein ra'al masakhti, kim'at she'avarti.

Ketz Bavel Zerubavel, leketz shiv'im nosha'ati."

Surprisingly, it actually worked. Rock felt his systems begin to stabilize as he joined in singing the Ma'oz Tzur and matched his vocalizations to the peculiar tones of his opponent.

"Kerot komat berosh bikesh, Agagi ben Hamdatah.

veniheyata lo lefah ulemokesh, vega'avato nishbata.

Rosh yemini niseta, ve'oyev shmo mahita.

Rov banav vekinyanav al ha'etz talita."

In fact, Music Chanukah was appearing to sway a bit erratically as Rock continued on.

"Yevanim nikbetzu alai, azai bimei Hashmanim.

Ufartzu homot migdalai, vetim'u kol hashemanim.

Uminotar kankanim na'asa nes lashoshanim.

Bnei vina yemei shmona kav'u shir urenanim."

He was swaying very erratically now, and Rock moved up to catch him so his flame wasn't extinguished before he could perform the candle lighting as he finished the song.

"Hasof zroa kodshekha, vekarev ketz hayeshu'a.

Nkom nikmat dam avadeikha me'uma haresha'a.

Ki arkha hasha'a, ve'ein ketz limei hara'a.

Dkheh admon betzel tzalmon, hakem lanu ro'im shiv'a."

"Mega Man! Step forth and face me!" yelled the tall muscular armored man with the flame-topped yarmulke. The armor, while clearly pristine and made from modern materials, was styled after a more ancient form typical of the era the Greeks or the Romans. "Come and face the great warrior, Maccabee Chanukah! Step forth unless you are too cowardly to do so!"

"Er..." Rock sweatdropped as he stared up at the latest Chanukah Master from across the rapidly clearing area, "I'm right here ..."

"So you are!" Maccabee Chanukah pointed dramatically as he began to swing a doubled-up piece of cable in his other hand. "It seems you do possess a warrior's courage! But not the cunning to achieve a warrior's victory! Not when I possess the great weapon of legend!"

"The great weapon of legend?" Rock arched an eyebrow. "That's a–"

"Ice Sling!" Maccabee Chanukah yelled as he whipped the cable forward, sending a shard of ice rocketing towards the diving Mega Man at insane speeds, tearing through the blue bomber's armored leg before he managed to get behind one of the blocky works of modern art that dotted the area.

"Argh..." Rock grit his teeth as he assessed the damage to his leg.

"Hahaha! It seems your courage has fled, impure one!"

"He sounds like the bullies at my school..." a young voice said next to Rock, prompting him to look over at a young boy who had also taken cover behind the large sculpture.

"Heh..." Rock forced a grin. "You'd be surprised how similar bullies sound, no matter where they're from... What's your name?"

"David..." the boy answered, and Rock noted that he was also wearing a yarmulke, though not one with a flame atop it. This one seemed older. Well-worn and cared for. "My mom says it's after a great hero who stood up to a really big bully..." the boy pulled out a loop of nylon rope with a cloth pouch in the center. An old-style sling made of more modern material. "She says he used one of these to do it... I dunno, but it makes me feel better to hold it. Do you wanna hold it for a bit?"

"Actually..." Rock started considering the simple weapon carefully and looked around, spotting a pretty good-sized marble someone had apparently dropped. He pinked it up and turned back to the boy. "Do you think I could borrow it against this guy?"

"Sure!" the boy agreed cheerfully, handing the nylon sling over without question.

"Okay... I may only get one shot, so wish me luck," Rock said as he loaded the marble into the sling and began spinning it with one hand while he removed his helmet with the other.

He held the helmet out from behind cover and when a projectile impacted it with enough force to both penetrate all the way through and knock it out of his hand, he started moving. Ignoring the damage reports from his leg systems, he dashed out from behind cover, the borrowed sling whirling at inhuman speeds.

Maccabee Chanukah's eyes widened as he moved to quickly reload his own weapon at the same time as Rock took aim and fired, hitting the Chanukah Master right between the eyes. As Maccabee Chanukah fell, he dashed forwards to catch him and preserve the flame so it could be used to light the next 'candle' on Wily's menorah.

The young boy David watched as the robot hero flew up to light the next candle before flying back down to give the borrowed sling back.

"Whoa..."

It was the last day, and Rock was on edge. Knowing Dr. Wily, he'd have probably saved the nastiest piece of work for last, and this time the chamber hadn't yet opened.

Which likely meant that whatever was in it was something Wily considered strong enough not to need preparation time.

Speaking of which, the final menorah chamber opened and out stepped...

Well, it was a robot rabbi. Looking very human but with the same flame-topped yarmulke.

"Who are you?" Rock found himself asking.

"Zot Chanukah," the last of Wily's latest batch of robot masters replied rather pleasantly. "It is good to meet you on this day, Mega Man. Gmar chatimah tovah."

At the last phrase, Rock felt all of his systems seize up from some kind of electromagnetic interference. Centered directly on himself.

"W-wh...a...t?" he barely managed to force out as he identified a rather unmistakable energy signature, all the more noticeable due to how infrequently Dr. Wily made use of it.

Magic.

Zot Chanukah smiled benignly as he stepped up and reached outto touch Rock's forhead even as Rock himself struggled to bring his own arm up to try and push back against Zot's torso.

"It is as I said..." Zot Chanukah smiled as he prepared to unleash his magical anti-electronic field again, this time from point blank range.

"Gmar chatimah tovah," Rock managed it first though, since he didn't waste time posturing.

Dr. Wily grinned as he watched Mega Man catch the last of his Chanukah Masters to preserve the flame for the lighting ritual, his hand hovering anticipatorily over a large button. The moment the last candle was lit, the power circuit of his ultimate creation would be complete, and Mega Man would be helpless to stop him!

Yes! Mega Man would rue this day forev...

Was the blue brat... singing?

"Light one candle for the Maccabee children,

With thanks their light didn't die."

He... He was ... And it looked like the people who'd stayed to watch were joining in with the backup vocals...

"Light one candle for the pain they endured,

When their right to exist was denied."

Rock mounted Rush's jet mode, his fingers alight as he flew up to light Wily's menorah.

"Light one candle for the terrible sacrifice, Justice and freedom demand!"

Down below, more and more voices were not just singing the backup vocals, but also joingin in the lyrics as more poured back into the square.

"And light one candle for the wisdom to know,

When the peacemaker's time is at hand!"

And was Rock touched his fingers to the candletip, the crowd burst out with the chorus.

"Don't let the light go out!

It's lasted for so many years!

Don't let the light go out!

Let it shine through our love and our tears!"

Dr. Wily's hand wavered as he listened to the music...

"Light one candle for the strength that we need,

To never become our own foe."

Above the scene, high atop one of the tallest towers, Blues looked down upon the events and listened.

"Light one candle for those who are suffering

A pain they learned so long ago."

The voices of the crowd began to grow in strength.

"Light one candle for all we believe in,

That anger not tear us apart!"

One figure, recognized as Mayor Leonardo Dorado jumped out in front of the crowd with a microphone to increase the volume of the gathering as more and more people joined in as Mega Man came down to land next to him.

"And light one candle to bind us together

With peace as the song in our heart!"

"...Bah!" Dr. Wily slammed his fist down on a completely different button, glaring angrily at the weapons shutdown notice he'd triggered.

"Getting soft, pops?" a voice cut in as the chorus was renewed, even louder than before.

"Hmph!" Wily huffed. "Never, Bass... Just lost interest is all..."

"Sure, whatever..."

"By the way," Dr. Wily said as he took something out of his pocket and flipped it towards his creation, "here."

"What is the memory that's valued so highly,

That we keep it alive in that flame?"

The crowd began to part as a few figures made their way through it. Auto, Roll, and Dr. Light.

"What's the commitment to those who have died?

We cry out 'they've not died in vain'!"

The three raced for the figure of Mega Man Roll leading the charge as she leapt at her brother in a relieved hug. Auto came up shortly after and swept them both up in an enthusiastic bear hug.

"We have come this far, always believing,

That justice will somehow prevail!"

Dr. Light joined his robot children at a more sedate pace as the song began to draw to a close.

"This is the burden, This is the promise,

This is why we will not fail!"

Bass flipped the coin his pops had tossed to him idly. It was an old thing. Old and sturdy. Supposedly it had been passed from parent to child since the original Chanukah or some such nonsense.

He'd actually believe it. The thing was certainly old enough.

'I think I'll keep this,' he thought to himself. 'It's not particularly useful, but proof that the old man has a heart underneath all his issues is pretty hard to come by...'

He caught it one more time and with a twist of his hand it was gone.

"Don't let the light go out!

Don't let the light go out!

Don't let the light go out!"

12.7 (from DrTempo)

Seven Maverick Hunters

X, Zero, Axl, Alia, Layer, Palette, and Signas were enjoying a nice Christmas together. Sigma was more or less a non-issue these days. Mentally, X was glad he had Alia and Palette trained to fight this Loop. Most of HQ was empty for the holidays, barring a sudden emergency, leaving the seven of them to a nice small office party. Zero and Signas were drunk on eggnog, and were being...well, drunk.

X smiled at the shenanigans as the rest egged the two inebriated reploids on. 'A peaceful day.'

12.6 (Inspiration from fractalman and a number of others)

Six Soccer Squirrels

Rock and Roll had to admit that Dr. Wily had... gone a little squirrely this Loop.

"And Ground Squirrel pops out of the ground, heading the ball into the air, setting up Flying Squirrel for a direct shot at Team Light's goal. There it is! Flying Squirrel's Tornado Shot and... SAVE BY GUTS MAN!"

"Hah!" the brawny robot master scoffed as he made to throw the ball back into play. "It'll take more than that to get by me!"

"And Guts Man throws the ball deep back into Team Wily's territory straight for the open Bomb Man!"

"I got it! Hah! Time for a long bomb–HEY! Get off me you pint-sized–!"

"Oh, but Pigmy Squirrel uses Bomb Man himself as a platform to intercept the ball and begins driving it back down the field, only to have the ball stolen by Mega Woman, who in turn gets it stolen by Tree Squirrel's unique vine snag which then sends it far back into Team Light's zone, but Fire Man moves to intercept!"

"Here it goes pardners! Fire Kick!" the flame-themed robot sent the ball rocketing back down the field straight for Team Wily's goal, only for the large Indian Buddha-like squirrel robot to catch it without so much as budging from the impact.

"SAVE BY GIANT SQUIRREL!"

"Spiny Squirrel!" the Wily team's goalie yelled as he threw it to the sixth and last member of the team, who curled into a spiked metal ball himself and began driving the ball just ahead of him towards Guts Man. "Take it away!"

"Oh, but here comes Elec Man for Team Light!"

"Not so fast!" the electrical robot master yelled as he charged up a thunderous kick to intercept the ball, the electrical discharge zapping and temporarily paralyzing Spiny Squirrel as the ball ricocheted off of him and towards the last member of Team Light.

"Go Rock! Whoo!" Cut Man and Ice Man cheered from the sidelines as the blue robot drove the ball back toward Giant Squirrel.

"Here I go!" Rock reared a leg back and took aim at the opposing goal. "Mega Ball!"

"GGGGOOOOOOOOOOOOAAAAAAAAAAAAAALLLLLLLLLLLLLLLLL!"

12.5 (From OathToOblivion)

Five NetNavis!

There was a certain festive cheer over ACDC Town, and the resident Loopers were feeling the holiday spirit as well.

"Man, I love the holidays!" Lan cheered, walking from the last day of school before the winter break.

"Is that because you get to do nothing and then get presents?" Hub slyly asked.

Before Lan could protest this, the PET started ringing. "Lan, it's your phone!" Hub called out.

"Hello?"

"Lan."

"Oh, hey, Dad! What's up?" Lan wondered.

"Err...I don't really want to ask this of you during your winter break, but..." Yuichirou trailed off sheepishly.

"You need us to do something, right?" Lan wryly asked.

"Yes. SciLab was creating some special Navis for the holidays. Unfortunately, something went wrong during programming, and it looks like its irreversible. The Navis have gone berserk and spread all over the Net. I can confirm that they've left Electopia's network behind completely."

"You need us to go track them down then?"

"And delete them, yes. I'm sorry I need to ask this of you two-"

"It's fine, Dad! Shouldn't be that much of a problem."

"Alright. Tell your Mom I'll be home tomorrow, okay?"

"Alright." And with that, the phone call ended.

"Sounds like another weird Variant," Hub commented.

"Don't those usually only happen when we have Rock's version of Wily though?" Lan wondered.

"Well, regardless, we'd better look for them."

Hub crept through Sharo's Net Area, looking for one of the escaped Navis. He was being very careful, because you never knew when a Loop would throw crazy SearchMan at you. Well, it threw something at him alright, but not SearchMan. Something fell from the sky and almost beaned him on the head. Hub dodged, but was caught off guard when whatever it was exploded, knocking him back a few feet.

"HO HO HO!" a voice was heard. Hub sprung to his feet to see who was responsible. He had to blink when he saw what the responsible party looked like though. He was every bit the stereotypical Santa Claus, beard, paunch, and everything.

"Err, are you one of the Navis who left SciLab?" Hub cautiously asked.

"HO HO HO!" the Santa Claus Navi intoned, bringing out a gift-wrapped present. He tossed the present at Hub, who was forced to dodge before it exploded again.

"Who does this guy think he is, a Delibird?" Lan asked in confusion, referring to the Delivery Pokémon. But Hub had seen something, or rather a lack of something in the Santa Navi's eyes, and was a bit more serious.

"Lan...if this Navi ever had a mind, I don't think he has one anymore," Hub said quietly.

Lan registered that, closing his eyes. "I did wonder why Dad told us to just delete them," he remembered. He then opened his eyes. "At this point, deletion would just be a mercy kill."

"I don't have any problems with that, but I don't think I'm going to be able to get close enough," Hub pointed out, dodging more of the exploding presents.

"HO HO HO!"

"Oh put a sock in it!"

"What about a long range attack?" Lan asked.

"Don't think they'll have enough punch," Hub rejected, dodging another exploding present.

Lan hesitated, before removing a sealed container from his Pocket. A container containing certain Chips he wouldn't use except in an emergency. "What about...a Chaos Unison?" Lan asked slowly.

"...I don't like having to rely on that option, but we don't really have many other ones in this situation, do we?" Hub said rhetorically. "Alright, go ahead."

"Okay. Sacrifice DarkTornado for Chaos Unison. Unison Chip in," Lan said seriously.

"Chaos Unison: GyroChaos!" Hub announced. An image of GyroMan formed over him, at the same time as his Dark Soul was momentarily ejected from his body. MegaManDS turned his head around and gave Hub a nod, before leaping into him at the same time as the Unison was finishing, transforming Hub into the purple GyroChaos Chaos Unison. Hub then charged up his Buster.

"Charged Shot: DarkTornado!" he declared, shooting the purple tornado at the Santa Navi. It connected, sending the Santa Navi flying around the tornado. More tornadoes formed, buffeting the Santa Navi to and fro.

"HO HO HO-URK!" the Navi said, before exploding into bits of data. Hub ceased the attack, reverting to his base form.

"One down and four to go," he said quietly, before jacking out.

Hub was searching Yumland this time, wondering if all of the holiday Navis were going to be mindless and running off scraps of program. He felt sorry for them, honestly. They didn't know what they were doing, nor could they help it. It was just a sad tale all around. Suddenly, he heard an explosion and saw a bunch of NormalNavis go skyrocketing into the air. Fearing the worse, he immediately dashed forward to see what was going on.

He turned the corner and saw the cause. A Navi who looked like a Yumlander in fine clothes. He had a Buster formed and was shooting what looked like fireworks every which way. A group of Official Navis arrived, but were blasted away by the fireworks. This Navi didn't speak at all, simply shooting fireworks.

"Looks like this one's gone berserk too. I'll need speed to deal with this," Hub noted.

"Well, when you need speed, there's nothing better than that," Lan proclaimed, referring to one of Hub's Style Changes. Hub couldn't agree more.

"Style Change: WoodTurbo Style!" Hub declared, shifting into the Wood-attribute Style.

"BambooSword, Battle Chip in!" Lan declared, slotting the Chip in. The Wood-element sword formed on Hub's right arm. The wheels on his form spun, and he zoomed forward. The out-of-control Navi noticed him and attempted to shoot him with fireworks, but Hub zoomed around them and managed to skewer him on the BambooSword. The berserk Navi said nothing as he was deleted.

"That one didn't really have a lot of endurance," Hub noted, returning to his base form.

"Alright, that's two. Where's the next one?" Lan wondered, even as they began the search again.

This time, Hub was in Choina's Net Area, scouring the place for a rampaging holiday Navi. "Yeesh! When Dad said these guys went everywhere, he wasn't kidding!" Hub said, even as he looked. Lan was about to say something when he noticed something on the PET's screen.

"Wait, Hub, look out!" he yelled.

"Huh? ...AAAHH!" Hub cried, as he narrowly avoided getting scorched by a fireball. He turned to see the source, a Navi that looked a lot like one of those dragon costumes used during the Choinese New Year. The dragon Navi then proceeded to fire more fireballs at him, forcing Hub to duck for cover.

"This one's not saying anything either!" he declared.

"Maybe the Santa Navi was a fluke. Anyway, Battle Chips coming your way, Hub!" Lan declared, slotting them in.

Hub received them, and knew what to do. "AreaGrab!" he declared, warping behind the dragon Navi.

"Now! Program Advance: LifeSword 3!" he announced, sweeping at the dragon's back and deleting it.

"Phew! That one was close," Hub said, logging out of this part of the Net.

Hub couldn't help but blink when he saw the holiday Navi he had come across on the border between Netfrica and Netopia's Net Areas. It looked like a bipedal candle holder, complete with seven lit candles. The Navi's face was on the black candle in the middle. The three candles on the Navi's right were green, and the ones on its left were red. The outermost candles appeared to also double as the Navi's arms. This Navi also didn't say anything, instead shooting fire at him!

"Woah!" Hub yelled, jumping away from the fire. But then the holiday Navi, in a surprising show of speed, dashed behind him and lit him on fire.

"YEOW!" Hub complained, springing away from the fire. He quickly patted himself down to remove any remaining embers. "This guy's definitely on fire!"

"In that case, let's be fire fighters!" Lan said, opening the Cross menu on his PET. "Cross System: Engage! AquaCross!" he declared. Twin images of AquaMan formed in front of and behind Hub, moving onto him to cover him with AquaCross's armor!

Hub immediately started Charging up his Buster for rapid attacks! "Bubble Shot!" he declared, firing off quick Aqua-element shots at this kinara-like Navi. But this Navi was quick, leaping around the Bubble Shots and firing off more fire!

"Gkh!" Hub grunted as he was forced to disengage again. "Lan, I'm going to need some more firepower here!" he declared.

"Alright then! Falzar Beast Chip: download!" Lan declared, inserting the Chip in.

"HAAAAH!" Hub roared as he was covered in purple power. It flashed before dying down, revealing Hub's new form: the fusion of F-Beast and AquaCross known as AquaBeast.

"And now for the finish! Mega Cannon, Battle Chip in!" Lan declared. Hub received the Chip Data and converted it into AquaBeast's signature attack!

"Aqua Spiral!" he screeched, shooting out the aqua vortex at the Kwanzaa-themed Navi. The vortex picked it up and tossed the Navi around, deleting it. Hub sighed, powering down to normal again.

"Alright, where's that last Navi?" he wondered. Just then, the PET started going off. "Lan, it's Dad!" Hub declared.

"Yeah, Dad, what's up?" Lan wondered.

"...Lan, could you stop by SciLab real quickly? I've got something to show you," Yuichirou said mysteriously, before hanging up.

Lan blinked. "What's that about?" he wondered.

"Well, if Dad needs to show us something, it's probably important," Hub rationalized.

"Good point. Jack out!"

About half an hour later, Lan had arrived at SciLab and had walked into his father's office. "Hello? Dad?" he asked.

"Oh, Lan! Over here!" Yuichirou called. Lan walked over, curious what it was about.

"What's this about, Dad? I need to find that last Navi that escaped from SciLab," Lan pointed out.

"This has to do with that. That last Navi didn't have image data programmed for it yet, so I hadn't realized. It snuck back into SciLab's systems somehow and has covered the whole mainframe with snow," Yuichirou reported, turning on his monitor. Snow covered the entire Cyber World.

"Yikes. How are we supposed to stop it?" Hub questioned.

"Its core program must have manifested somewhere. You'll need to track it down. I'm sorry you need to do this much," their father apologized.

"Don't sweat it, Dad! This is nothing!" Hub reassured him.

"Alright, let's go! Jack in! MegaMan, Execute!" Lan declared, sending Hub into the Network.

"You know, if I didn't know any better, I'd say you were shivering, Hub," Lan noted.

"It honestly feels cold in here. Can't you send me a FireSword or something?" Hub complained.

"I want to save it for this snow Navi, wherever he is."

"I'm still freezing-ACK!" Hub yelled as he tripped over something. Picking himself out of the snow, he turned around to see what it was. ...It looked a lot like-

"A lump of coal?" Hub asked in disbelief. Suddenly, the "lump of coal" started floating about the ground. Snow formed off the ground and coalesced around the lump of coal, forming into a familiar-looking enemy!

"Oh great...a Snow Devil," Hub said in slight fear. It did indeed look a lot like one of the Devil monsters Rock tended to face.

"Looks like we found him! Battle routine, set!" Lan declared.

"Execute!" Hub declared, before beginning combat. He started by firing at what was probably the core program of this could-have-been Navi. But snow covered it up, deflecting the Buster shots. Snow then was launched at Hub.

"Yikes!" he yelped, rolling out of the way. Of course, the snow followed after him, causing him to have to repeatedly dodge. Lan watched this, frantically trying to think of something. ...Oh! That could work!

"I've got an idea! Sacrifice FirePunch1 for Soul Unison! Unison Chip in!" Lan declared.

"Double Soul: NapalmSoul!" Hub declared, summoning an image of NapalmMan over top of him. It fused with him, giving him the armor of NapalmSoul.

"And now for the finish! FireBurn3: Triple Download!" Lan said, slotting the Chips in.

"Program Advance: Wide Burn 3!" Hub declared, shooting out a massive blast of fire from the Fire Vulcans on his back. This melted all of the snow nearby, causing the control program to fall to the ground. A quick StepSword later, and it was toast, causing all the snow in the SciLab computer system to disappear!

"Phew! Glad that's finished!" Hub sighed, reverting to normal.

"Well, looks like that's that! Time to enjoy the holidays!" Lan declared.

12.4 (From OathToOblivion)

Four Guardians

"Remind me, how did we get into this?" Sage Harpuia questioned his siblings.

Fairy Leviathan shrugged. "Because Master X said so?" she said rhetorically.

Hidden Phantom nodded. "Indeed. Master X's word is law," he reminded Harpuia.

"It still doesn't sit well with me," Harpuia insisted.

"Yeah!" Fighting Fefnir declared. "Zero's right there! Why shouldn't we just pummel him?!" he demanded, glaring at Zero. Of course, Zero was giving him a glare right back, trying to keep himself between the Guardians and Ciel.

"Why don't you just sit down and drink your damn tea already?" Zero coldly mocked, infuriating Fefnir.

"Why you-?!"

"Zero, Fefnir, cool it," X interjected, walking up from where he had gone.

"Er...yes, Master X," Fefnir unhappily said, sinking into his chair.

Zero just leaned back into his. "Whatever you say, X," he said, rolling his eyes and thinking back on the circumstances. This was one of those fairly common variant Loops where there was never a Copy X, and instead X just snapped. Obviously, since they were both Awake this Loop, that got defused real fast.

"Anyway, sorry I'm late. I had to finalize the peace treaty with the Resistance," X apologized.

Zero waved it off. "Like it matters considering you're you. Just sit down already," he said.

"I hope you're not trying to order Master X around, Zero," Harpuia said with narrowed eyes.

"Would it kill you to lighten up?" Zero snorted, causing Harpuia to tense up.

"Hey, I've got a question. Why are we even sitting at a table anyway?!" Fefnir angrily demanded, slamming the table and rattling the cutlery.

X gave him a withering look. "I wanted to have a family dinner. You four are based off my plans far more closely than any other Reploids, Ciel is a descendant of my creator..." 'This Loop anyway.' "...and I've known Zero for so long, he's practically my brother," X finished listing.

"Cheers, X," Zero said, raising his glass. "How's the food, Ciel?" he asked, turning to the only human in the room.

Ciel started at that. "Oh! Um...it's...fine?" she half-asked.

X beamed. "Thanks! I worked hard on it!" he said.

"Master X, you made this? You didn't have to do that, I'd have done it for you!" Leviathan declared. Upon that remark, Harpuia immediately turned as green as his armor, looking the other way.

Fefnir snorted. "Who'd want to eat any of that sea crap you call food?" he mocked.

"What was that?" Leviathan asked in a dangerous tone. Unexpectedly, Phantom was the one to speak up next.

"I concur, it is most unpleasant when you cook, sister," he said in a blunt tone, causing Leviathan to almost steam.

"Oh really?! What about that charbroiled mess that Fefnir calls food?!" she demanded.

"Hey, you leave my grill out of this!"

"I'm not sure which is worse, seafood or grill," Harpuia said under his breath.

"Excuse me?!" Fefnir and Leviathan both yelled. The three of them proceeded to get into a large argument that was punctuated by deadpan remarks by Phantom. While Ciel looked completely gobsmacked by this, X simply held his head in his hands in shame.

"Heh. Kids," Zero chuckled, elbowing X.

"I'm definitely going to need more time to get them to behave better," X said in defeat.

Zero shrugged. "Hey, we've got all the time in the world," he pointed out unsubtly.

12.3 (From Bigou)

Three Metools

Roll and Rock were about to ask Dr. Light to rebuild them as combat robots, like they do around the start of most loops when suddenly, slamming the door, Auto entered their home hastily. "Don't worry everyone, AUTO TO THE RESCUE!"

Oblivious to the amount of facepalming his arrival triggered, the mechanical comic-relief continued. "I proudly present to you the three 'World-Saving Numbers'! First, WSN-001: Met-a-Man," He said, brandishing the picture of a Met wearing a familiar blue helmet.

His audience groaning from the bad pun didn't stop Auto from happily showing the picture of another Met, this one wearing a familiar yellow helmet, "WSN-002: Met-a-Woman, and…"

The would-be saviors-builder got interrupted by Rock, asking "Why did you only have pictures of them, Auto? Do you want US to build them for you?"

"No, no!" Assured Auto. "In fact, they are already on their way to fight Wily."

At this, Roll looked at Dr. Light, before speaking. "You know dad, I think you better rebuild Rock and me for combat…" At that her brother nodded vigorously.

While the Light family was retreating to the lab, the would-be saviors-builder yelled: "WAIT! YOU DIDN'T SEE WSN-000, I CALLED HIM MET-A-KNIGHT! " But no one heard him.

The Light twins were surprised. Each time they got to one of the stolen Robot Masters, they were already defeated. Did the current loop actually bless them with a version of Auto actually able to build useful robots?

Then, they got to Wily, only to find him captured by Meta Knight. Or rather, a Met disguised as Meta Knight. "Well, so much for a competent Auto…" Lamented Roll.

"See the bright side of things," reassured Rock, "At least Wily's reaction should be interesting."

12.2 (From Bigou)

Two Star-Crossed Loves

Roll, Rock and their father were going back from shopping. Christmas was near and they needed a new tree, along with new ornaments for it, since Auto accidentally burned it. Trying to improve the Christmas lights, Auto had created an aberration: LED based flamethrowers. The lab had nearly burned down in the resulting multi-colored inferno.

They were in front of the last house before their own when Roll saw something strange. Why was Ms. Guide, their neighbor, wearing her Halloween costume?

Later that day, after checking Auto wouldn't try to improve the decorations of their new Christmas tree, she decided to go check on Ms. Guide herself. Sure, with how good her costume was, she has every right to be proud of it, but… "Wait a moment..." Roll narrowed her eyes and pulled a pair of sit-rep shades out to perform a more thorough scan. "That's... not a costume..." Roll whispered to herself. Since no Ghost Busters existed this loop, (she checked, just in case) she was going to take care of this herself.

Roll was in front of the Guides door, about to ring the bell, when Mr. Guide opened it, taking out the trash.

"Oh, hello… Err… Roll?" He said, unsure. "Do you need something?"

"Do you remember this shockingly realistic costume your wife wore for Halloween? It might seem silly but… I don't think it was a costume." Then, in her most serious tone, she added "I believe Ms. Guide is a demoness."

At this, the man facepalmed, muttering "…I should have knew it wouldn't work on robots…"

Then, he lowered himself to Roll level, looking at her in the eyes. "You're right, she is. But what she is don't change who she is. She is same Gwenaële Guide you always knew, truly."

"How… How can you be so sure of it?"

"That's a long story, one that should be told fully…" While saying this, Mr. Guide looked nostalgic. "For now, know that when she revealed the truth to me, at the time she got nothing to gain from it, and could have lost everything for doing it. But she still did it, she still revealed her true nature to me, and that was all I needed to trust her."

Then, getting up, he added "And before you ask, we weren't married back then."

Somehow, the Guides ended up revealing their secrets to Rock and Thomas Light too. At first, they doubted Gwenaël's sincerity, but the Guides still acted like any other couple. This was enough for Dr. Light to invite them to his Christmas Eve dinner.

That's when the Lights' last doubt crumbled, when an exhausted Ms. Guide fell asleep on their sofa, snuggled against her husband, taking care to not hurt him with her horns in the process.

Roll and Rock brought a blanket, which their father used to cover their guest, to help them stay warm during their sleep.

12.1 (From me to all of you)

Dr. Wily grumbled loudly as he stomped down towards the source of the disturbance that had set off his current Skull Fortress's alarms. The blaring was really getting on his nerves...

Why couldn't he just enjoy Christmas quietly planning his next attempt at world conquest?! Who in the world chose Christmas Eve to break into his fortress?!

Storming into the room, and ready to order a rain of fully weaponized hell on whoever was responsible for interrupting his long winter's nap, he was brought up short as he saw a rather large armored mecha with an extra-thick skull-shaped plate over the cockpit and emblazoned with a very familiar emblem. His own.

"What in...? Computer, turn off that blasted alarm! I can't hear myself think!"

With blessed silence, he was now able to turn his full attention to the matter. It was clearly a machine designed in his preferred style, but he didn't remember building it. He certainly wouldn't have given it that ridiculously oversized bow-tied ribbon with a prominent card attached to one of the dangling ends... Wait, what?

Blinking, Dr. Wily approached the elaborately decorated card, noting that his name was on the front, and in the throes of curiosity opened it.

Merry Christmas, Dr. Wily!

Hope you like your present! We all worked very hard on it, so we hope you use it the next time you try and take over the world (while kindly overlooking the fact that we'd clearly know all its weak spots)! It's large, well-armored, very well armed with all the latest in state-of-the-art experimental (non-lethal) weaponry, and the best part is, it's powered by a coal furnace! Something we're all sure you have plenty of after the way you've behaved all year. Happy Holidays and we'll see you at your next attempt at conquest!

Best Wishes,

The Light Family.

Dr. Wily blinked owlishly several times as he stared at the card's contents before a grin began to split his face. A few moments later and his familiar mad cackling filled the halls of his fortress.

12.12) Leonite: And that's it. 11 Synchro Chips and one Dark Synchro Chip makes 12. Slur Soul is made manifest in the oddest of ways. A darker ending, but a little nice I hope.

Also... for the heck of it, Omake (also by Leonite):

"Lan Hikari... tonight you'll be haunted by three ghosts!"

"No. I refuse to believe this."

"What, that Slur is pulling a Christmas Carol on you, or that she knows a Christmas Carol?"

"Yes."

12.11) Ow, my brain.

12.10) If you think this is freaking the Maverick Hunters out now, wait until the Sigmas start singing the Boar's Head Carol (suggested by katfairy post-completion).

12.9) Sniper Joe plus the traditional eight masters equals nine. Work in progress.

12.8) You know, Christmas may be my winter holiday of choice, but that song by Peter, Paul, and Mary is quite possibly my all-time favorite holiday song.

12.7) Obviously a variant where reploids mimic human biology as well as mental ability.

12.6) fractalman wrote Ratoskr, the divine squirrel who runs messages up and down Yggdrasil in Norse mythology, causing a massive squirrel infestation of all levels of Yggdrasil. Including adminspace. We had a lot of fun making squirrely Loops.

12.5) The five holiday navis are based on:

Santa Claus - Aka St. Nicholas, Kris Kringle, that nice old guy who goes around in the dead of winter giving people presents, etc. Would you believe that Christmas used to be considered a pagan holiday and was forbidden by certain Christian sects? Like a number of mainline holidays, its origins are actually Celtic.

Deepavali/Diwali - An Indian celebration (and I mean India , not Native North America) lasting five days that focuses on the victory of light over darkness, knowledge over ignorance, good over evil, and hope over despair. There are, of course, plenty of fireworks to be had.

Chinese New Year - The Chinese love their dragons, and their new year celebration (usually early February) is about the culture's biggest party of the year and lasts for about two weeks. Seriously. The Chinese love their new year like New Orleans loves Mardi Gras.

Kwanzaa - No, not Chanukah. The holiday developed by the African-American culture to celebrate their African heritage. Started in 1965 by Maulana Karenga.

Snow Devil - This is not the snowman I wanted to build!

12.4) Ah, family and holidays. Those two things we keep insisting are supposed to mix.

12.3) Huh… What do you know… Auto made something that worked… Completely by accident.

12.2) Bigou has stated that Mr. and Mrs. Guide are original characters of his. Just in case you wondered where they came from. They aren't loopers.

12.1) And a Machine for Dr. Wily!

12.0 (Oooo, bonus!)

Blues stared out over the city and thought.

Look at them all. Scuttling about in their pathetic lives, never giving a second thought to the things your father did. So clueless... So fragile... so easy to break...

They were increasingly dark thoughts lately, but he could handle it. He didn't break that easily. Not anymore.

"So, it's true..." a voice behind him stated calmly. Blues turned to consider the approaching figure. Taller than he himself was, clad in red and white armor, and trailing a blond ponytail that almost reached the ground. "You really did survive to this era this Loop..."

Blues shrugged. "I decided to go somewhere and shut down to get away from everything. Not like I expected to suddenly come online again in the future instead of Waking Up in another Loop."

"And here I was going to ask what it felt like to outlive all the rest, but I guess that's a good enough answer."

Blues shrugged. It really hadn't been any different than Waking Up in a different Loop for him. Even if it was technically the same timeline.

"They're worried about you, you know," the other person stated. "Even X."

"I can't be trusted around them right now," Blues said simply.

Traitorous kin that they are...

"So they said you told them," the other said as he pulled out a familiar yellow object and held it out to Blues. "It's why I volunteered to give this back."

Blues blinked as he stared at it.

An image of Dr. Light trying to choke him with it flashed through his mind, warring with the image of Dr. Light happily buying an identical scarf for him as a gift.

"Roll said you never came back for it after Thanksgiving that year. Sent it along to the future when she learned you'd shut yourself down so we could return it for her."

"Thanks..." Blues said as he accepted the scarf and wrapped it around his currently bare neck. "Zero..."

"It's funny," the Wily-built reploid noted. "You think you're a danger to them, but you're fine around me."

"You're not family... I can handle it around anyone else."

You keep telling yourself that. Hehehe...

"As you say," Zero sighed. "Just know that we're here for you if you need it. All of us."

"Thanks. That... That helps more than you know."

Mega Loops: Harry New Year

Author's Note: The title pun crossed my mind early this morning and reminded me that I had this sitting in my 'to-be-compiled' collection. A fused Loop between Harry Potter and classic Mega Man, where the Lights and their friends/foes derail pretty much everything by simply being themselves. No real acting on loop-born foreknowledge needed.

Mega Loops: A Harry Hew Year

"You dare come into our house and tell us how to conduct our affairs!" Vernon Dursley yelled at the significantly less-portly but respectably older man. "I'll see you in court over this! I'll rake you over the coals and take you for everything you're worth you freak-lover!"

"You will try," Dr. Light simply glared back. "And when you fail I shall take great pleasure in exposing your abuse of this boy to the whole world. You will be shamed across entire nations for your treatment of him, and he will still remain with me as my charge and adopted son. Good. Day."

Vernon tried to stomp after the scientist, but what appeared to be a young boy in blue stepped in front of him and held him back with absolutely no effort whatsoever.

"I'm sorry," Rock told the thrashing lunatic patiently as the man proceeded to hurt his hands on Rock's metal armor, "but I can't let you do that."

"Come along, Harry," Roll smiled down at the young boy. "We're going to where these ill-tempered gits can't ever hurt you anymore."

"Okay," a shy Harry allowed the pretty metal lady to lead him away from the Dursley household and to his new home.

Vernon Dursley would later ignore Dr. Light's warning, as well as anything resembling common sense. In the end, he and his family had to change their names and move to parts unknown to escape the stigma they brought upon themselves.

Harry believed that Dr. Light was easily among the top ten alternative parental figures he'd ever ended up with, and shaping up to be a serious contender for the top three. It was a rare individual who could browbeat Albus Dumbledore in a pure battle of wills and, unlike that fused Loop where he was raised by Tony Stark, the guy didn't need to bring physical gods to back the intimidation factor. No, Dr. Light bloody well made his own from scratch .

Tony Stark may have been a cross between Leonardo da Vinci and a billionaire playboy, but Dr. Light turned out to be a cross between Leonardo da Vinci and Angus bloody MacGyver with a dash of Bruce Lee thrown in for seasoning. He may be up there in years, but give him a junkyard and some time to tinker and Harry was willing to bet that Dr. Light could take out half the Death Munchers by himself. Along with a side of Ministry lackeys and a dash of the Order for good measure.

Harry's Awakening this Loop had been something of a gradual affair, and he was having trouble pinpointing where he went from partially Awake to completely Awake. It made for a much less jarring entry into the Loop in his opinion and one of the fringe benefits was that he had much clearer Loop memories to draw on as a result. Like the one where Dr. Light had stared down Dumbledore at his finest, dared the old manipulator to try something, and promptly dropped him like a sack of week-old potatoes when Dumbledore had taken him up on the offer. Thus was it proven that the technology and mind of Dr. Light was superior to the magic and mind possessed by the wizard-of-many-flowery-titles-that-sounded-more-impressive-than-they-really-were. Harry was going to treasure the look on the old coot's face when he got knocked on his arse by a muggle for many Loops to come.

But the most amazing thing about this particular fused Loop was that the whole 'Boy-Who-Lived' routine was being overshadowed by his adopted robotic siblings. Sure, Harry had defeated a dark lord as a baby, but Rock and Roll had beaten back about a dozen attempts to take over the world, any one of which would have left old Moldyshorts green with envy. In significantly fewer years.

The wizarding world could try and look down on the muggle world and their technology all they wanted, but being knighted by the Queen commanded respect anywhere. There were a few of the Ancient and Noble houses that couldn't claim such a thing anywhere in their ancestry much less recently. He couldn't wait to see the looks on the faces of the purebloods when his adopted family was introduced with 'Sir' and 'Dame' attached.

Harry had to admit, it would be nice to have his reputation overshadowed by someone else in his age bracket for once.

If he played his cards right, he could possibly even get through the whole seven years without having to perform a single act of heroism.

"I've got to ask," Harry said to Rock as he was packing for Hogwarts. "How the heck are you going to even function in Hogwarts much less study magic. I don't really recall Dr. Light making something to counteract the way high concentrations of magic can interfere with technology."

"That hasn't been a problem for us for a while," Rock replied. "In our baseline, we've got an alien supercomputer named Ra Moon that can make an EM field so powerful that it becomes toxic and eventually lethal to biological lifeforms if not stopped. Even when dad's not Awake, he can reliably access the knowledge of how to counteract its effects on electronics. Then there's the fact that we've encountered a hostile variant of Equestria known as The Conversion Bureau which has a magical barrier that disintegrates all human technology it touches. Wily invented a method which let his robots literally walk right through it without a scratch and Roll and I copied it from them. So, even if we didn't have dad's new project, the magical saturation of Hogwarts wouldn't really be an issue."

"New project?" Harry asked, rather intrigued.

"Dad managed to invent a magical core for robots," Rock smirked. "Roll and I are just as magical as any of your classmates now. The Hogwarts letters prove it. What's really going to be interesting is the fact that both Tempo and Bass also have them. Though Bass sort of stole his."

"How do you 'sort of' steal something like that?" Harry raised an eyebrow.

"Aside from the fact that dad deliberately made four of them after Blues said he didn't want one? He left it in plain sight, with installation instructions and everything, that time Bass raided the lab," Rock answered. "Dad all but engraved an invitation for Bass to take it."

"So, what's your plan for dealing with Dr. Wily existing in a Loop where magical knowledge is readily available once he learns how to get it?" Harry asked after the compartment door was closed. The two had told him about Dr. Wily's rather interesting, and random, 'Dreaming' state.

"Point him and Voldemort at each other and sell popcorn," Roll shrugged.

Rock picked up where his sister left off. "While we'd prefer Wily not get access to magical knowledge that he'll likely remember some future Loop when it's really inconvenient for us, the fact is that trying to keep him from it in a world like this one just isn't feasible. Better to just let his ego take care of your usual problem and enjoy the show."

'Ah, the sorting,' Harry mused to himself. 'That precious time before most of the school even knows who I am and the crossroads for how I decide to spend most of my Loops.'

The sorting was well underway, with baseline house assignments for pretty much everyone so far. But now they were getting to the first sorting of the new people that normally didn't exist in this reality.

"Lalinde, Tempo!" McGonagall called out, prompting a stoic girl with long brown hair to step forward.

The hat seemed to blink as it was placed on the girl's head, as if it were totally and completely surprised by what was in the girl's mind. "Fascinating," it mumbled in a way that others could just barely hear, prompting a few curious looks from others in the room. "Absolutely fascinating..."

Harry, for his part, suppressed his desire to snicker loudly. He was one of the few in the room that knew, or even suspected, Tempo was a robot.

Several long seconds went by before the hat yelled out "Gryffindor!"

Su Li went next and was sorted, as usual, into Ravenclaw. The next name though caused something of a stir.

"Light, Rock. Knight Commander of the Royal Victorian Order."

Harry was so glad he'd thought to put up magically remote controlled cameras beforehand in strategic locations. It wasn't often you saw every student at Hogwarts gape like that.

"Ravenclaw!" the hat's proclamation broke the student body's stupefaction. A moment later, the Ravenclaw table went absolutely nuts as the fact that they had a titled knight in their house sunk in. Rock, for his part, just looked rather sheepish as he joined his new housemates.

"Light, Roll. Dame Commander of the Royal Victorian Order."

Harry noted that the rampant gaping was just as funny the second time. This was going in his pensieve collection for certain.

"Hufflepuff!" the hat declared, and the house of students so often degraded as having nothing special going for them erupted in cheers of their own, not a few of which were just a little smug in Harry's opinion.

His own sorting went as usual, though the fact that his adopted brother and sister led the Ravenclaw and Hufflepuff tables in cheering as well actually made him blush a bit.

He could also see the Slytherin table grumbling over the fact that they weren't getting anything more prestigious than the usual pureblood children like Malfoy.

The sorting proceeded as normal up until Ron Weasley got sorted into Gryffindor with him, and then the one person Harry was looking forward to being sorted was called.

"Wily, Bass!"

As the spiky-haired boy in question strode up to the stool with an arrogant swagger Draco could only hope to emulate, Harry knew exactly where the dark rival of the Light twins was going to end up. What he was really looking forward to were the reactions of the boy's new housemates.

The sorting hat landed on Bass's head and a moment later, the hat began to chuckle in a way that made several people somewhat nervous. The matching grin on Bass's face didn't help the situation.

"He-he-he... Slytherin!" the hat called out.

Harry gave Slytherin house a week of attempting to 'put the new guy in his place' before Bass had them all too terrified to so much as say anything against him.

Professor Quirrell slipped into the third floor corridor on the left hand side with a magic harp in tow, ready to put the cerberus to sleep and continue on to procure the Stone for his master.

"Going somewhere?" a voice called out to him from within the room.

Quirrell whirled about, and spotted a young lad clad in what seemed to be red and gray armor with shaded glasses in the helmet, a yellow scarf around his neck, and an oblong shield strapped to his back. Just standing in the middle of the room where the cerberus should have been with his arms crossed in challenge.

"Who are you?" Quirrell snarled, quite forgetting his instrument in his surprise and anger. "What are you doing here? This area is restricted!"

"Indeed it is," the boy said. "Which makes me wonder why you're here. You see, my brother and sister told me someone had tried to break in here and steal something the school was guarding, so I invited myself in to see if this person would try again."

"You've..." Quirrell tried to process that. "You've been in here since Halloween?"

"Off and on," the boy replied. "I made coming here a priority when I heard the headmaster was suddenly being called away on business. Mostly I've been dropping in to help with the maintenance of the security, and getting to know Fluffy of course. I volunteered to bring his food and water and just stuck around most days to keep him company for a while. Dogs can get lonely when left alone in a room for such a long time, you know."

Quirrell was suddenly aware of a low growling sound coming from behind the boy that was getting louder as the cerberus began to stalk out of the shadows it had been hiding in.

"Huh," the boy scratched his chin. "It sounds like he recognizes you. Guess that makes you the burglar."

Quirrell whipped around to activate the magic harp, but the boy let out a sharp whistle and the cerberus pounced faster than the wizard could cast.

Harry blinked as he saw Bass stroll by in a set of robes that looked more like they belonged on a biker than a student of Hogwarts.

"Hey, Bass?" he'd called out to the robotic Slytherin before he could engage his better judgement.

"Yeah?" the rival of Rock sneered back.

"I noticed your robes," Harry decided to forge forward and hope for the best.

"Like 'em?" Bass grinned smugly. "I had them custom made down in Hogsmead with some material I 'acquired' recently. Just got the delivery this morning."

"What are they made of?" Harry asked, genuinely curious. The material looked a little familiar...

"Basilisk hide. Some magic diary told me where to find the beast before I incinerated it."

Harry blinked and managed to keep his snickering inside his own head. No wonder there hadn't been any attacks this year!

"And what I want to know, Minister," Dr. Light; holder of the Order of the Companions of Honour, the Order of Merit, the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, and the Royal Victorian Order; glared right back at the wizard politician, "is precisely why you have not produced the record of Mr. Black's trial. Particularly in light of the fact that the man he supposedly murdered has been discovered living in an illegal animagus form for the last several years in the home of one of your own employees! How many times has this man gained unrestricted access to the ministry?! Do your people not have ways to detect the simple morphic resonance signature that such a transformation produces?! What the bloody hell do you people actually do in here?!"

Amelia Bones was trying very hard not to laugh as Cornelius Fudge was dressed down by a muggle in a manner that would do her Auror Academy instructor proud. Honest.

Dr. Thomas Light, decorated British citizen and brilliant scientist, sat in the office of one Professor Albus Percival Wulfric Brian Dumbledore, headmaster of Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. He stared evenly at the elderly wizard, betraying no emotion.

Their first meeting had not gone well. Professor Dumbledore had shown up at his home 'requesting' that Harry be returned to his abusive relatives. When Dr. Light had, as politely as possible and in no uncertain terms, told him 'no', the man had tried to cast some manner of spell. Dr. Light's automated defenses had immediately sensed the energy buildup and dropped the man before he even finished the word. Their professional relationship had been... strained since then.

"I would first like to apologize," Professor Dumbledore offered, "for how I conducted myself when first we met. I acted very rashly in regards to you and your stated intentions. Do know that I have always tried to work for the greater good."

"As have I," Dr. Light's expression didn't change. "However, I have never seen the need to leave anyone else to suffer as a result of my pursuing it. I could never in good conscience leave the boy in such a home after what I witnessed, no matter what good I thought would come of it. That family would have never done right by him."

"You have done a fine job of raising the boy," Dumbledore admitted. "Far better than I could have hoped for. I hope you will accept my apology, Sir Light."

"I will, in the spirit it was offered," Dr. Light allowed. "If only because I wish Harry to learn the virtues of forgiveness. Now, I doubt either of us believes that an apology was the only reason you called me here."

"Indeed," Dumbledore admitted. "I have heard of your efforts that led to Sirius Black ultimately being released. I have also heard about the unfortunate escape of one Peter Pettigrew. The minister, in his 'infinite' wisdom, has seen fit to respond to this state of affairs by ordering a 'special guard' placed around Hogwarts in the belief that Pettigrew may attempt to infiltrate the castle and harm Harry because of the prophecy that he will eventually defeat Voldemort."

"Prophecies are simply warnings of things that may happen," Dr. Light philosophized. "How we come to fulfill them or thwart them is through our own choices and our choices alone."

"Wise words," Dumbledore smiled. "However, the 'guards' the minister chooses to employ may likely do more harm to Harry and everyone in the school than could befall them were they not here. I would like to ask your help in protecting the students from them."

"What exactly are these guards anyway?" Dr. Light inquired.

"They are called Dementors, spirits of despair who inhabit the darkest and bleakest parts of the world," Dumbledore admitted. "They suck the happiness and joy out of the air until simply living is an emotional torture beyond imagining. The ministry uses them to guard Azkaban, the wizard prison."

"Where Mr. Black was imprisoned for over a decade without trial?!" Dr. Light exclaimed in shock. "That is barbaric!"

"I am in full agreement," Dumbledore placated. "However, I am but one voice drowned out by many others who insist the practice is kept. What I would ask of you is to apply your thoroughly unique skills and knowledge to devising a way to keep them off the grounds and prevent them from harming the students. For they very well could should precautions not be taken. They are not moral creatures in the slightest."

Dr. Light stared at the wizard intensely. "Can you get me one to study?"

"I believe I can," Dumbledore promised.

"Then I will begin preparations immediately."

Harry was immensely enjoying the Triwizard Tournament. For one thing, it was the first time in a great many Loops – he'd lost track of even an estimate of just how many – that he wasn't actually a champion. No, that distinction had gone to Rock of Ravenclaw, with Roll of Hufflepuff serving as the official Hogwarts champion.

But what really sold it for him was how his adopted siblings were handling the dragon task.

Rock had gotten his older brother's shield loaned to him and had pretty much strolled up to the nest, using the shield to hold back the dragon's firebreath to its confusion, dodged a claw swipe by sliding under it and plucked up the egg as casually as one would pick up an item at the store. A couple of hops impossible for a human without magical aid, and he was out of the ring without needing to cast so much as a single spell.

And then it was Roll's turn.

If the entire stands had stared with complete lack of comprehension when she'd come out with a muggle-style broom, they'd positively goggled when she'd whacked the dragon over the snout with it while shouting admonishments to behave. And with the dragon now whimpering in a subdued manner, Harry was sure that most of the crowd had lost the ability to form conscious thought.

But then, Harry himself couldn't stop laughing.

Harry smiled to himself as he danced with Ginny at the Yule Ball. No pressures to be the hero so far, no entry into the Triwizard, just plenty of time to kick back, relax, and have a bloody normal relationship with a pretty girl for a change.

And get into some of the trouble typical of Hogwarts youth of course. It was very obvious this Loop that Ginny was related to Fred and George.

"Now," Dolores Umbridge sneered at the abomination in front of her, "you will write 'I must not disrupt class with pointless questions' until it sinks in . Am I clear?"

Personally, the student in question wasn't sure what was so pointless about asking, among other things she felt were in need of addressing, how they were supposed to evaluate their practical knowledge of the spells covered if they never practiced casting them. Instead, she decided to point out something else painfully obvious that was more immediately important. "Professor Umbridge, you have provided me with no ink to write with."

The current DADA teacher, in a looser sense of the term than should ever be allowed if one asked around, glared at the... thing which in her opinion had no place in the school, the world of magic, or for that matter existing in the first place. "That will not be a problem. Now do as instructed."

Tempo Lalinde of Gryffindor blinked at the odd declaration, but shrugged and began to write with the inkless quill as instructed.

Blood Quills are restricted items for a reason, mostly due to the potentially harmful magic that powers them, but also partly due to a little-known flaw they possess. Few know it exists and fewer still can invoke this flaw to their benefit. But the quartet of robotic students at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry were among the few who could exploit it without even trying.

You see, Blood Quills normally write in the blood of the one who holds them, making them a staple of magically binding contracts. However, when they can't access the blood of the writer, they automatically seek the next available source.

It was bad fortune for Deloris Umbridge that Tempo, being a robot, did not possess blood of her own and there was no other source closer than the self-proclaimed High Inquisitor herself. It was worse fortune that the female robot master was fully capable of defending herself when Umbridge decided to attack on the assumption that the rapid etching of dark magic onto her skin, due to Tempo writing as fast as her servos could safely go in the hopes of getting this over with sooner, was deliberate on Tempo's part.

But the cherry on this humiliation sundae in Harry's opinion, when he was later asked, was that Tempo had powerful friends in the Light family who came down on Umbridge like a ton of bricks when she tried to press the issue.

Harry read the Daily Prophet with absolute glee.

Voldemort had somehow managed to get a body anyway last year, and last night he'd tried to infiltrate and attack the ministry for the prophecy surrounding himself and Harry.

And the Light-made robot masters had been waiting for him.

Watching the full front page spread of the ensuing melee as Dr. Light's robots essentially schooled the entire force of Death Eaters, non-lethally even, just refused to get old. He was going to have to frame and enchant this for permanent storage in his subspace pocket.

Hmm... Better get extra copies just in case.

"Avada Kedavra!" Voldemort screamed as he cast the lethal spell at the upstart muggle scientist, only to watch in confusion as the man began sparking from the impact area instead of falling over dead.

"Foolish little wizard!" the damaged, but still standing, robot double of Dr. Wily declared. "Did you really think I would not be prepared for your pathetic parlor tricks?"

-) House assignments: Tempo to Gryffindor, Rock to Ravenclaw, Roll to Hufflepuff, and Bass to Slytherin (who are nearly all too terrified to try and attack him inside a week). Blues occasionally hangs out around Hogsmeade, having elected not to have a magical core installed but still having no trouble with the magical saturation of the area.

Omake) Roll: Whack Bad dragon! Sit!

Bonus) Shortly after this was originally written, some debate sprang up regarding the possible looping status of Dumbledore and how he was originally flanderized by Innortal. That prompted me to write the following, which was quickly adopted as Looping canon for Dumbledore:

Harry Potter was once again in the office of Albus Dumbledore, an event not at all uncommon in his Loops. The difference was... Dumbledore was Awake.

Harry had... bad memories of trying to convince the aging headmaster of the nature of the Loops early on. Memories of things he hadn't quite forgiven Dumbledore for even after all this time. Sure, he'd reconciled with the old man a few times. Once or twice he'd even convinced the headmaster of the trauma other versions of himself had inflicted on him and had gotten a heartfelt apology.

But it had never stuck. It had been back to Unawake Dumbledores who were hit-or-miss in regards to if they were secretly evil overlords, incompetent idiots, well-meaning goofs, more-or-less decent manipulators who thought they had an omniscient morality license, or genuinely good and intelligent wizards who had nonetheless screwed up somewhere. It was maddening. He wanted to forgive Dumbledore, to tell him that the good had outweighed the bad over the course of the Loops, but there was no version of the man who made such forgiveness mean anything.

In the end, he'd held on to the hurt and bitterness just to keep from going even more insane.

But here was a version of Dumbledore who could remember a reconciliation, and Harry had no idea if he even deserved the chance. He'd been wary. Too many times he had been hurt to risk a permanent, and possibly eternal, enmity with the headmaster.

"I understand I owe you a rather thorough apology," Dumbledore began. "When I first began 'looping' as it were, I was not too much unlike whatever versions of myself earned your enmity. I was determined to see the prophecy through to its end, and very much overly confident that I, and I alone, knew what was best. I am thankful to say that you thwarted my efforts at every turn. And often in ways I can now admit were rather amusing."

"You..." Harry started, not entirely sure how he was reacting.

"Please allow me to finish, Harry," Dumbledore placated. "Then you may pass whatever judgement you deem fit."

Harry kept his silence, and waited.

"It all came to a head, I'm afraid, when a rather fascinating muggle scientist whisked you away from the Dursleys and adopted you. I was growing very much frustrated with my inability to set you on the path to fulfilling the prophecy, and I did something quite ill-advised and attempted to use my magic to force events to go how I wished them to."

Harry winced. That sounded like Setsuna Syndrome, a term Usagi had coined way back when the Loops were new and she sometimes had to deal with an Unawake Setsuna Meiou, aka Sailor Pluto. Setsuna was a force who, some Loops, kept setting herself at odds with the blonde Anchor whenever she derailed the timeline with Loop knowledge or abilities. Setsuna Syndrome was attributed to those who were overly dedicated to the preservation of baseline events to the point of obsession, often Unawake but still Loop Aware entities, believing that even small deviations carried unthinkable consequences. It was something most loopers tended to get over eventually, but some overcompensated and risked diving towards Sakura Syndrome instead, the state of a looper believing that no action they undertook, no matter how vile or depraved, carried any consequences due to the nature of the Loops.

"Fortunately, as I would come to learn," Dumbledore continued, "this 'Dr. Light' managed to best me with nothing more than a few wise precautions he had taken and then proceeded to raise you into a fine young man despite my protests. Not only that, but his actions during that particular Loop came to show me what it really meant to work for the greater good. He did everything in his power to do right by as many as possible, and above all, he sought that none would suffer in his quest to do right that did not bring it upon themselves with their own actions. He and his did more to aid the worlds of both muggles and wizards in just over a decade than I and mine have managed to accomplish in my entire lifetime. Any of them. It was a humbling experience."

Harry's eyes widened. "You were Awake for that?!"

"That is the term you use, is it not?" Dumbledore asked rhetorically. "In fact, I was. And it was the most enlightening series of events I could have ever hoped for. I was humbled by a man who not only did not lord his victory over me like many would, he was willing to forgive my folly and even work with me towards a future brighter than I ever dared hope possible."

"Yeah," Harry admitted. The man had developed countermeasures against the dementors more effective than anything Harry had possessed prior to at least triple digits in the Loops. In under a month and with no prior understanding of the creatures. "Though the Wily guy they brought with them was a handful."

"Indeed. I was quite entertained by how he consistently defeated Mr. Riddle whenever they clashed. Speaking of which, 'Moldyshorts' Harry?" Dumbledore chuckled. "While I am pleased that you still do not fear Tom's chosen name, that is rather childish."

"I'm technically older than humanity by now," Harry groused. "I'm allowed to be childish on occasion."

"Oh, I understand the appeal," Dumbledore smiled. "Did you know that in my battle with Grindlewald, which I have yet to repeat, the two of us; adult wizards at the height of our power and influence, dueling to the death; stood there on the battlefield calling each other things like 'dung-head' in between lethal spells? I can assure you that has never been mentioned in the history books. Such enmity for one who wishes you dead is only human. I am rather more concerned that your grudge against Professor Snape does not seem to have abated."

Harry took a deep breath. "Disregarding the fact that I tend to bear the brunt of his unresolved rivalry with my father anew when a Loop restarts, 'professor' Snape is often a much poorer teacher than a potionmaster," Harry informed the looping headmaster, mentally disregarding those rare Loops where a variant Snape was in fact quite competent. Like the one where he acted like the kind of high school chemistry teacher who taught his students how to make stink bombs, and ended up Fred and George's absolute favorite member of the Hogwarts faculty. All those variants served to do was drive home how petty and uncaring the baseline Snape tended to be. "By several degrees of magnitude."

"Well," Dumbledore allowed, "I suppose that is only to be expected. As sensible as the man can be in some matters, I fear he is as bad as any other magic user in most. Now, to the matter of Delores Umbridge..."

"Hey," Harry's eyes narrowed dangerously, "I make no apologies for what happens to that woman after the things she tries most every Loop. So drop it right now."

"I was actually going to ask if you took pictures," Dumbledore's eyes twinkled with amusement.

Harry gaped for a second before acknowledging the zinger. New looper or no, Dumbledore still had it. "Which volume?"

"How many do you have?" Dumbledore asked curiously.

Harry just grinned. He could work with this.

Mega Loops 13

Mega Loops 13

13.-1 (GammaTron)

When Zero Awoke to the Loop, he felt...weird. Looking down at himself and sorting through his Loop Memories, he learned that his name in this Loop was Zero Tucker and he was a member of Blood Gulch Outpost Alpha...And that he stole his currently aqua-colored armor from his dead Captain.

"Hey! You feeling Awake now?" looking up, he saw a soldier in cobalt armor.

"Wait. You're Looping?" Zero asked.

"Yeah. Name's Leonard Church," the soldier informed, "Glad to see you didn't switch places with me for this Loop."

"Huh?" Zero raised a brow.

"Come on. It's time to spy on the Red Team. Simmons got replaced by this other guy. Haven't had a chance to meet him yet, but I know that he's most likely Awake and just decided to play along," Church informed as he picked up a sniper rifle, "By the way; when we meet an alien called 'Crunchbite,' don't have your back to him. Otherwise, I have to deal with a damn alien baby again. And I don't want to deal with a baby alien that isn't Junior, even if Junior isn't even Looping yet."

"What?"

"Come on already!" Church snapped before pushing Zero towards a path going to a higher area of the box canyon.

Zero quickly sent out a signal. He sighed in relief when he got a response. X was apparently the other soldier. ...Aw crud.

"Is this really all you do in a Baseline?" X asked, wearing a maroon version of his armor, the helmet replaced with the same type the orange soldier he was standing near wore.

"Yep," the soldier replied, having awoke a few hours ago, "So, congrats, Mega Man X, and welcome to the Red VS Blue Loop. So long as no one else is Awake, we'll most likely go through a baseline."

"Actually, I just received a signal from my friend, Zero."

"Zero? Dude, if Tucker's here and Awake, don't let him meet Zero," Grif advised as he stood straight up, "He's a straight fanboy of the Mega Man Zero series and always wanted to get the Z-Saber and its upgrades with Zero's autograph on it."

"...Is he?"

"No clue. No one here spies on the Blue Team," Grif shrugged, "Normally, it's them who spy on us, but we normally just talk."

"About what?" X asked.

"...Hey, X?"

"Hm?"

"You ever wonder why we're here?" Grif asked.

7.7.7 continued (Hubris Plus)

Pitchblende Part 4: Horror in the House of Light

Albert Wily considered himself, at heart, a simple man. Oh, his genius was beyond the comprehension of those puffed up fools who thought themselves his peers, but all he really wanted was to be recognized as the genius he was.

World conquest would just be a natural side effect of everyone realizing that he should be in charge.

But his most recent plan went a bit... beyond that scope. The meteorite sample had unlocked untold possibilities, given him insight into realms of science yet unknown. Twice now the world had refused his brilliance, and his new pet had shown him that they always would. It had also shown him that 'always' was a flexible term.

Since the fault couldn't possibly be his own, it was obvious the world was in error. He would simply fix it.

Gently, he lowered the polished sphere of meteorite into the devil-core and sealed the device. It was almost comical how easily he'd been able to adapt Yoku Block phase shift technology to exploit and control the object's extraordinary properties.

"Damn headaches," he muttered, rubbing at his scalp with one hand while the other powered up the core. "Need to get more sleep."

As the last diagnostic passed a line of oozing blue sliced across the machine's surface, bisecting it, before springing open to reveal a sickly yellow eyeball, its center occupied by a crimson iris with a rectangular black pupil. An instant later every inch of the core not taken up by eye-ball exploded in blue tendrils, twining around one another, fusing at seemingly random intervals, branching off again, and occasionally growing what appeared to be jagged teeth.

Minutes later the writhing mass had assumed something approximating a biped shape. Its chest was occupied by the single massive eye, as was typical of Wily's Devil series, but was otherwise unrecognizable as something conceived by a mortal mind. One of its 'arms' was a noodly length of tentacle a meter thick at the base that terminated in five more wavering tendrils that almost looked like a hand. The other was a massive bony appendage, the whole of the forearm split by a toothy maw that seemed to pant gently as a dozen slender tongues lolled out between misshapen teeth. One leg was a crude stump better suited for clubbing than walking, while the other was composed of several tendrils wrapped around one another. Its flesh was dotted with tumescent bubbles of growth waiting to burst forth into yet more hideous anatomy.

"SPLORT," it burbled as it stared dully down at the aged human before it.

"A little more asymmetrical than I'd like," Wily mused, scratching his chin. "But it'll do. Well, then, what are you waiting for?"

In response, the Shadow Devil raised the slavering mouth of its left arm, opened the jaw wide, and slammed it down around the doctor. A moment later it lifted the appendage to reveal nothing more than a crater in the temple's stone floor and teleported away in a column of sickly purple light.

"Thanks again for the help, guys," Robo said as he poured cement into the foundation of what would soon become Tesladyne Industries (a Light Labs subsidiary).

"Not a problem, Robo," Roll answered cheerfully as she carried a set of I-beams past.

"Yeah, it's always nice to use these abilities for their intended purposes," Rock added as he followed with a pallet of bricks and nodded towards where Guts Man was organizing the construction bots on the other side of the site. He and his sister had rescanned the huge robot earlier to better help out.

"Still, I'd like to make it up to you," he insisted. They were only just starting but he could already tell how much faster this would go than when he used human work crews. "How about voting rights? I'm real good at talking politicians into-"

Rock, Roll, Robo, and Guts all froze simultaneously as a burst of static sounded from their internal radios.

"Calling all DLNs!" Elec Man's voice called, "Light Labs is under attack and Doctor Light is–" They didn't bother to listen to the rest as the twins tossed aside their loads while Robo drew a lightning gun from subspace, not even bothering with his habitual grumble about the ZSAD.

As one, the three Robot Masters and singular Atomic Robot teleported home.

"–in immediate danger!" Elec Man shouted, electricity dancing from outstretched hands to strike the towering blue behemoth that had torn its way through the wall.

The creature gave a gurgling roar as it weathered the attack, gooey flesh quivering even as it stalwartly trudged towards its quarry. The Doctor himself was behind the power plant robot, searching his work tables frantically for something that might be of use. A prototype of Bond Man's glue gun had slowed the thing for a moment, but it seemed to have no compunctions about tearing away the ends of its limbs to soldier on. The remain were still writhing grotesquely from where they were anchored to the floor.

Suddenly it found its path interrupted by a nearly transparent wall, staring blankly at the obstacle for a moment before raising the clubish jaw of its left arm and slamming it into the barrier. It managed to repeat the action twice before Guts Man leaped in to interpose himself, catching the limb in his mighty arms. Even so, the one limb was almost as large as he was and he found his hydraulics straining as, inch by inch, the maw opened.

"That's right," Robo called out as he dropped the magnet beam he'd been holding with Rock and Roll in favor of firing his weapon of choice. "Gimme a smile, ugly!" The beast stumbled back, forgetting its prey for a moment as it turned to face the threat. "I was almost hoping that wouldn't work." Robo muttered before shouting, "Elec Man, match your Thunder Beam to my gun as close as you can!"

"Robo, what is this thing?" Rock asked as he switched to his Mega Buster.

"ROOOH , " the Shadow Devil warbled wetly as it caught sight of Atomic Robo, "BOOOH!"

"And why does it know your name?" Roll added as she followed suit.

"Kids, meet the Shadow from Beyond Time," Robo answered as they and Elec Man peppered the monster with lightning and buster fire. "Shadow, meet-"

"RAAAWK!" It roared anew, "RHOOOL!"

"Believe it or not, the fact that it hates you is a good sign," the older robot reassured them. "You three pin it down, I need to get close." He handed his gun to the twins so they could copy it and pulled a bulky brown bag from his pocket and slung it over his shoulder.

"This had better work, Robo," Elec Man stated as he renewed his assault, his attack much more effective now that he'd recalibrated to match the output of Robo's lightning gun. Guts Man had retreated to behind his fellow Robot Master to act as a final line of defense while Doctor Light started pulling power cables from the wall as he scrambled to assemble a scaled up version of the only thing that seemed to work.

Under fire from three lightning guns designed specifically for the purpose, the Shadow finally halted its forward advance, throwing up its arms defensively as it sizzled. New and gruesome appendages continued to burst from its flesh, flailing and writhing for only an instant before being ablated away. Still, the trio weren't in any position to cover it from all angles, those growths emerging on its back twitching forth unimpeded, its mass steadily growing.

Suddenly, as Robo bolted across the lab, the creature turned and charged away from the electric salvo, bashing down a wall and vanishing through the resulting hole.

"No no no ," the machine groaned glancing about frantically. "Over or under? Sideways? Dammit, I should have checked on the poles at some point..."

"It's running away," Elec Man pointed out. "Isn't that a good thing?"

"The Shadow treats geometry like a bad joke," he answered. "Just because it's running in the opposite direction doesn't mean it's running awa-"

The ceiling at the far end of the room exploded downwards as the beast barreled through it. The debris blasted Doctor Light off his feet even as Guts seized the thing about the waist and desperately hauled back on it. For all his strength, the creature was stronger. Step by step it approached the Doctor, jaw snapping hungrily at the scrabbling scientist.

" Dad! " The Light twins screamed in unison as one of the sinuous tongues wrapped around his ankle. In an instant he'd been dragged into the maw, teeth snapping shut around him.

"...No," Roll whispered, staring dumbfounded as Rock screwed up his eyes and clenched his fist. " No! " She repeated, this time in a shout, raising her buster and charging it to criticality.

"Wait!" Robo interrupted, slapping the barrel of her buster upwards as she fired. An instant later he found himself raising his hands defensively as she snarled at him. "We can still save him! That thing's eaten me a dozen times, I know how to go in after him, how to get him out, but you have to trust me! "

"...We're coming with you," Roll growled, Rock nodding firmly beside her.

"You'll need as much lightning as you can get," Elec Man added, sparks dancing from his fingers.

"You guys wanna hurry up?" Guts groaned from where he stood, still straining to restrain the monster. "Can't hold 'im much longer..." He screwed his eyes shut as one of the tentacles bursting from the thing's back probed at his face.

"Right," Robo answered, trotting up to the creature and ducking around its flailing limbs. "The Shadow isn't an animal, its skin isn't skin, it's a solid event horizon, the interface between two realities made physical. Mostly that means bad things, but the upshot is, if you can find a seam..." He jammed his hands into the Shadow's torso just beneath the eye, fingers wriggling into pseudo-flesh before tearing it apart. In the rip in the skin of the world was a whiteness that wasn't light so much as an absence of darkness.

"Stay close, and if you see another you, try to have a little dignity."

The four robots slipped through the gap, and the Shadow gave a gurgle that could almost be a laugh as the hole snapped shut. With a twitch, it hurled Guts Man across the room and, with what could only be described as inevitability, began to grow.

13.0 (Bigou)

This time again, Weil was defeated by Zero. But when the mad man looked at his damaged body, he couldn't believe what he saw.

"I'm the Great-eat-eat Dr. Al-Al-Al-Albert W. Weil! I can't -an't-an't be a ro-ro-ro-ro-ro-ro-ro-ro-ro- robot! "

"Dr. Weil turned out to be the Wily A.I., who got corrupted and unconsciously uploaded itself in a damaged Wily-bot," explained Zero. "His 'cyborg-look' being the result of the dubious repairs he did. Honestly, I fear the day Wily dreams of this."

"You mean… ?" Dr. Light couldn't bring himself to finish his question.

"The original maverick virus was the voluntary fusion of Wily's digitized consciousness with Roboenza, wasn't it?" Asked Rock.

"Yes." Answered Zero. "It was one of those loops…"

To this, "Ouch!" was all Roll, Rock and Dr. Light could respond.

After an awkward silence, Zero decided to change the subject. "Since I took Blues's place this loop, do I have to play the wayward son? Or can I stay with you?"

13.1 (Bigou)

At first, when Mayor Dorado needed to be rescued during Wily's first uprising, the Blue Bomber didn't think much of it. 'Just a minor variant.' Neither did he of the exuberant man showing gratitude by declaring "You rock, man!" with a thumbs up.

How he could guess these three littles words would cause everyone to call him Rock man?

13.2 (Thanatos's Scribe)

"You may have defeated me the last few times, Mega Man," Dr. Wily sneered on the screen as the Light family watched him lift up a bound Roll and turned her to face the screen, "But if you want your sister back, then you'll have to fight alone against my newest generation of Robot Masters, the FORTRESS Masters!" He cried out, then laughed as the screen changed to show his eight latest Masters at their bases.

Rock let out a growl as he raced to the teleporter. While he HAD been upset with Wily with all of the past attacks, kidnapping one of his family, especially one who was still recovering from Roboenza, was going too far .

"You guys take care of tracking the signal back to Wily." The Blue Bomber said as he stepped on the teleporter. "I'll take care of the Masters."

Rock stepped into the final room, and looked around the room. While the earlier area themselves had few enemies themselves, the level was covered with obstacles that required for him to fire his buster to the point he thought it would explode. 'Well, at least I made it to the boss,' he thought as he finally spotted the Robot Master sitting at a table eating a sandwich. Noticing Rock standing in the doorway, the Robot master finished the snack in two bites and stood up.

"Greetings, Mega Man. I am Heavy Weapons Man, or Heavy Man." The Robot Master said as he stepped into the light, revealing that he had a portly build, with a minigun attached to his right arm and his hands were made to be like boxing gloves. He then hefted his arm up and grasped the barrel of his gun. "And this , is my weapon. Now come out, tiny baby man, and face my fury ."

"Don't expect for me to hold back." Rock said as he stepped out of the shadows and readied his Mega Buster. Upon seeing him, however, the Robot Master let out a yell of rage.

"Blue. BLUE. BLUUEEEEE?! " Enraged, the robot master let out a battle cry and charged at him, his gun already being primed for firing.

'So much for a quick fight,' Rock thought as he began charging his buster for a charged shot.

Rock let out a wince as he jumped over the Spike that charged at him, then walked over to the Robot Master entrance. Whereas the previous robot master's location had little to no enemies, this one had been swarming with enemies. By the time he had gotten to where he was, he had taken down 157 Metalls, 94 Joes, 213 Tellies, and 15 Big Eyes.

'It's not much farther to the end,' Rock thought to himself as he stepped into the baseball field.

"Hey, chucklehead!" Someone shouted, and Rock was brought out of his musings as a sharp blow was dealt to him from behind. Dazed, he turned around to see a lanky Robot Master bragging out loud.

"How'd you like that, tinhead!" Scout Man gloated, then twirled the red and yellow titanium bat in it's right hand. "Hope you're ready for a healthy dose of pain, 'cause I'm going to mess. You. UP!"

'Great, another Quick Man: Arrogant and fast.' Rock thought as he readied the Sasha Volley and Scout Man raced towards him.

Rock let out a curse as he was launched back from the explosion, and looked at the Robot Master who fired it. Whereas the last area was swarming with foes, this one had an explosives theme for everything . Explosive robots, landmines, even explosive false ladders!

'I still don't understand as to why he wears an eyepatch,' Rock thought as he dashed away from another grenade just before it went off.

"'ou can run away, laddie, but you'll eventually fall to my Demo Grenades. I'm not a Demo Man for nothin', y'know!" The cyclopian Robot Master called out, then fired another grenade at Rock.

"If you're so proud of your work, then why don't you try some of it yourself!" Rock shouted back as he took out the Atomizer and knocked the grenade right back in the surprised Master's face.

"Why is it that at least one of the Masters is always crazy?" Rock muttered as he jumped away from a blast of blue fire and fired three Demo Grenades at the opponent.

"Hudahudahu!" Pyro Man mumbled in reply, then blew the grenades away with a hard blast of air before continuing his assault of his signature Pyro Wave attack.

As Rock stepped into the warehouse, he was surprised to see the Robot Master sitting in the center of the area playing a guitar.

"Engineer Man, I take it?" He asked as he stepped into the area. The Robot Master looked up as his question, then nodded.

"That's right, pardner." Engineer Man answered, then looked back down and resumed playing. Realizing that this was the easiest chance he had, Rock pointed his buster at the relaxing Master and fired a Charged Shot at him, only for the Robot Master to raise his right hand and release an electric pulse, causing for the shot to dissipate.

"Now, I've seen some pretty dumb things, boy," Engineer Man said as he stood up and took a step back, causing for Rock to now begin to notice the various turrets stationed around the warehouse. "Unfortunately for you," The Robot Master said as the turrets turned towards Rock, "That's the biggest and last one you'll ever do." With all of the turrets now pointed at him, Rock blanched and muttered, "Aw, scrap," just as the turrets began firing.

'From explosives to fire to buster fire... Is this some of collective payback for previous Loops?' Rock mused as he ducked beneath a rocket and fired a volley at the opposing Robot Master.

"Bleep, bloop, eat rocket, maggot!" Rocket Man yelled as he fired another rocket at Rock, only for Rock to shoot it, setting it off prematurely. The soldier-like Robot Master was not deterred, however, as it launched itself into the air in an attempt to crush the Blue Bomber.

'Ok , ' Rock thought as he changed over to the Demo Grenades, 'If he likes jumping THAT much, maybe it's time for an interception.' When Rocket Man began descending, he dove back and shot four Demo Grenades underneath the Robot Master just before he landed.

'...Well, this is different from the regular Robot Master area,' Rock thought as he entered the top floor of the hospital-based area to enter a room that was based off of an operating room.

"Oho, I see that I have another patient that needs a check-up!" A voice said from behind, and Rock whipped around to find a robot wearing a white doctor's coat and red rubbed gloves close the door behind him. "Don't worry." Medic Man said as he pulled bloodied saw out from behind his back, "I'll make this as excruciatingly painful as possible!"

"Well, this is a fine predicament I've got myself into." Rock mumbled as he readied his blaster and prepared the Pyro Wave.

"Well, I've already taken out the other seven Robot Masters, and Dad and Auto are almost done tracing the signal." Rock muttered as he stepped into the area and saw the last Robot Master sitting in a outpost high up. "All I've got to do is take out Sniper Man, and–" He was interrupted as a mason jar smashed into his helmet and a yellow liquid dribbled over his optic before he realized what had happened.

"Is this... urine!? " Rock shouted at the outpost, and got a chuckle in reply. 'All right, That's IT! , ' Rock mentally shouted as he changed both of his buster arms to Demo Grenades and fired a barrage of Demo Grenades up into the outpost.

"Aw, bloody hell." Sniper Man mumbled to himself as the grenades began to fall in the outpost, and then proceeded to detonate a few seconds later.

Rock looked at the boss across from him dubiously. After he had defeated the last Robot Master, Doctor Light and Auto had finally finished tracking the transmission signal to Wily's latest fortress, the Scream Wily Fortress. Rock still didn't understand what the 'Scream' part was about, though the Skeleton Joes and the Bubble Bats were a blast to the past. However,

"I am the Pumpkinhead!" The 10-foot tall scarecrow-like boss proclaimed, then took an axe easily the size of Tango out and pointed it at Rock. "In all honesty, though, I'm getting a little tired of my current head, so I think I'll replace it with YOURS! " At this, the lanky robot charged at Rock and began slashing with his axe as it tried to decapitate the Blue Bomber.

'Well, considering that his head IS a pumpkin,' Rock thought as he ducked and weaved away from Pumpkinhead's swings, and switched his weapon to the Pyro Wave, 'Then maybe it's time to change his name to Jack-O-Lantern.'

Rock jumped down as a eyeball-shaped missile barely flew over his head. 'OK, I'm near certain that Wily's Dreaming this Loop,' Rock thought as he jumped back up and fired a Demo Grenade at the current boss, who was literally a giant optic unit. As the grenade exploded, Monoculus let out a metallic roar before finally starting to fall. Two down, and at least one more to go , Rock thought as he ran over to the far door, but came to an abrupt stop as the optical behemoth landed and expelled dozens. Upon dozens . Of slagging mason jars . Of JARATE.

Rock's optic twitched as the jars neared his position. It was Loops like this that he wished for an early crash.

" Hurlus bombinus! "

Rock dove to the side as several cartoonish bombs flew at his previous position. Whereas the last two bosses had only a few attacks, this one, who was designated 'M3-RA5-MU5' of all things, had attacks all over the attack-type spectrum, from fire to bombs to spell-like beams of light, even one where he decreased the gravity in the room.

'Well, at least he hasn't used any attacks based around-'

" Rain of Jarate! "

'I just had to jinx it,' Rock thought as several mason jars of jarate smashes against him, his left optic twitched violently.

"Foolish Lightbot, how do you think you could stop the almighty M3-RA5-MU5?" The cow-skull wearing Wilybot gloated. As Merasmus continued to gloat, Rock slowly switched both of his buster arms to the only weapon he hadn't used so far, the Rocket Jumper, and aimed it at the wizard-based robot. If this didn't work, he didn't know what would.

"...And that is why nothing you could do would hurt me!" M3-RA5-MU5 finished, then noticed the wave of rockets flying at him and paled. "However, that might work."

Rock stepped into the ballroom-based room and saw the last of the bosses sipping red wine, and appeared to be impeccably dressed with his suit and red baclava.

"Ah, so zee great 'Mega Man' has finally arrived." Spy Man said with a slight French accent as he set down his wine and took out a pocket watch and a butterfly knife.

"Enough talk!" Mega Man shouted as readied his left Buster Arm. "Each second that is wasted is another second Roll's in more danger." At Rock's proclamation, the baclava-wearing Robot Master frowned, then looked at him straight in the eye. "Are you implying zat Monsieur Wily has done somezing with zis 'Roll'?"

"Of course, how could you not know about your master kidnapping my sister?!" Rock retorted.

"... I zee," said Spy Man, then flicked his hand, causing for his butterfly knife to fly into a small divot in the wall, causing for sparks to fly out of the divot. Rock stared confused at the Fortress Master as he turned around and walked over to the left wall, causing for a secret door to open.

"Come along, mizter Mega Man," said Spy Man as he entered the passageway, then turned back and smirked. "Unless, of course, you weren't Awake enough to catch what I meant?"

"You're a Looper?" Rock asked in disbelief as he ran over to the door.

"My entire team eez." Spy Man answered as they reached the end of the hall and opened another door, revealing the other eight Fortress Masters. Upon noticing the two enter, they pointed their weaponry at the Blue Bomber.

"Why'd you bring puny blue man here, Spy?" Heavy Man asked as he glared at the Light Bot.

"You have no need to worry, Heavy, for he's as Awake as the rest of us," Spy replied. At Spy's statement, the others lowered their weapons, and Engineer Man stepped forwards and put his hand out.

"Dell Conagher. Sorry 'bout the mess earlier." Dell said. Rock looked at the outstretched hand, then hesitantly shook it.

"Apparently, Monsieur Wily decided to leave some information out of our mission and decided keednap Mega Man's sister." Spy said, and the other Fortress Masters began to fume at the new information.

"Why, that yellow-bellied gutless coward!" Engineer growled, then turned back to Rock. "Don't worry, li'l pardner, we'll help you get your sis back."

Rock began to smile as the nine looping Fortress Masters began to plot against their former 'master'. 'Maybe this won't be as hard after all,' he thought as the team began to gear up for the last 'stretch' to Wily.

Rock let out a breath of relief as he entered the vast cavern with the Fortress Masters trailing behind him. Compared to all of the other areas beforehand, including a few of the other Loops, this one was actually a cakewalk. With Heavy, Soldier, and Pyro taking care of any of the enemies and Medic healing anyone who was injured, it had been a breeze.

"So, you have gotten past my defenses, even had my traitorous Fortress masters aid you for the last part," Wily sneered at the ten Robot Masters with contempt, "But let's see you defeat my latest creation, the MANN OF WILY!"

At 40 feet tall, the Heavy-based battlesuit had four arms with each holding a weapon: The lower left hand carried a 10-foot fireman's axe that was covered in barbed wire, the lower right holding a 20-foot by 4-feet Atomizer, the upper left, a giant grenade launcher, and the upper right arm holding a giant rocket launcher. However, the most notable feature was the 2000-gallon water cannon attached to the left shoulder, with the entirety of the contents being–

"Jarate?" Rock darkly said with his head down low, Wily's smirk starting to falter as he saw an ominous aura begin to surround the Blue Bomber. " Jarate? " Rock said again, then whipped his head up to glare at the 2000-gallon cannon with a fire appearing in his eyes. " JARATEEEEE?! " Letting out a harsh battlecry, he charged the mechanical giant with both of his arms firing a deluge of Rocket Jumpers. Taking this as the signal to attack, Demo Man cried out "Alright, laddies, let's do it!" and the nine Fortress Masters charged forwards, each of them firing at the panicking Wily's battlesuit.

(One Week Later)

"Well, look's like Wily got what he deserved." Roll commented as she and Rock, both now in their civilian outfits, along with Heavy watched a week-old news footage of Wily being taken away in handcuffs by a trio of SWAT Joes, which were blue-and-white Joes modified for police duty.

"Well, I couldn't have done it without the others." Rock said, and looked behind him to see the various Fortress Masters, who were considering their Loop to be a vacation compared to their own, were interacting with the Light Bots and a few other Robot Masters: Scout and Nitro Man were racing down the hill in another attempt to see who was faster, Demo Man, or Tavish DeGroot, had somehow found a large bottle of scrumpy and was talking about various explosive compounds with Bomb Man, Pyro and Fire Man were taking turns showing off their fire trick, with Pyro clapping happily after each of Fireman's tricks, Medic, Spy, and Dell were comparing their machines and achievements with Dr. Light, and Sniper was in a shooting contest against the resident sharpshooter of the Light family, Elec Man, and Blues.

"By the way, where's Soldier?" Rock asked Heavy, to which the large gunman shrugged and took another bite out of his sandwich (Though Heavy insisted that it was actually called 'sandvich') when a resounding BOOM shook the building.

"Get back here, MAGGOT!" A familiar voice shouted out, and everyone in the house looked out of the window to see Soldier running on the rooftops and chasing a certain black-and-yellow Robot Master.

"Ah, stuff it in your oral cavity, helmet head!" Bass quipped back, and he ducked under another rocket as Soldier cursed him. Rock and Roll sweatdropped at the antics of the two battle-happy fighters. 'Here we go again , ' Rock thought as everyone raced out to stop the two fighting.

13.3 (Hubris Plus)

Blues was really playing up the strong silent angle this Loop, Rock considered as the pair headed into the Skull Fortress. His brother didn't seem to be Awake, and was still wearing the full mask he preferred as Break Man. He had immediately sided with him against Wily without prompting anyways. He supposed that something good had to come out of this bizarre variant.

Without warning, an electrical surge pulsed through his systems, locking his motor functions and causing him to topple over like a poorly balanced action figure. Unable to so much as turn his head, he could only watch as Blues' helmet fell to the ground beside his head.

Crap, they got him too , he thought before running through who could have managed it. It was a little early for Waltz, and he really didn't want to consider what she'd do to immobilized victims. Foreign Loopers tended to be more considerate, but there was always the possibility. Wily, of course, could have just built another robot...

A booted foot nudged his head, rolling it so he was looking upwards at... Blues?

No, the armor was right, but the head wrapped in a red ski-mask, a lit cigarette dangling from metal lips.

"I never really was on your side," Spy Man confided.

13.4 (Dr. Tempo)

Sunset Shimmer, who looked like a humanoid unicorn, stood next to a grave in an old garden, with the names "To Iris and the Colonel" engraved on it. Wearing a Repliforce beret, the Looper saluted at the grave, not noticing Zero was next to her.

"Hello, Sunset."

It was a testament to Sunset's experience that she didn't instinctively attack. Frowning, she sniffled. "Hello, Zero. Come to pay your respects as well?"

"Who do you think made that gravestone? It's not like anyone'd do that for Reploids considered Mavericks."

Sunset broke down, crying, "How do you do it, Zero? Having to basically kill the one you love time and time again? I befriended Iris, and I knew her fate. I wanted to save her from that fate, but not just because it's the right thing to do, but because she truly was my friend. I saw her like a little sister, Zero, but I could do nothing!"

Slamming her fist into the ground, she lamented, "I tried to convince her not to fight you...told her she could likely get killed. But, she insisted. She wanted answers. And in the end, for all the strength I've gotten throughout my time as a Looper, I failed to save a friend. I should've just stopped her by force."

Zero put his hand on Sunset's shoulder. "She'd never have forgiven you, Sunset. Trust me, I never want to have to end her life. I've tried so many times. I tried everything, but it seems like no matter what, I fail. This is my greatest failure, Sunset. When it happened the first time, I wondered what it was I had to fight for. But I realized that I fight to protect those I cherish. I never considered myself a hero. I always fight for those I believe in."

Sunset smiled. "To me, that's what heroes do. I fight to protect those who need help. From my Awakening, I always have done that. My home Loop may be the biggest Sanctuary Loop around, but my earliest Loops were in places like Soul Society, the Elemental Countries...places where I had to fight. I'm willing to do what I have to - no more, no less - to help others, and I've never killed unless it was the only way. But, that just makes those I fail to save hurt even worse."

Zero simply said, "That's all we can do. We can't save everyone. But, we can do the best we can...every single Loop."

The two looked at the grave, and saluted.

Sunset then said, "Goodbye, Iris. I will never forget our friendship."

13.5 (Hubris Plus)

Rock came Awake in a glass tube that slowly slid open and sat up to take a look around. He appeared to be sealed inside of a larger glass cube, which seemed redundant since the surrounding room was a featureless block of white panels. A red eyed camera tracked his movements as he stood up and stretched.

"Hello, Rock," a voice hummed from all around him. "It's good to see you Awake."

"Um, hi GLaDOS," Rock answered slowly. It always paid to be cautious around the often temperamental AI. "Any, uh, plans for the Loop?"

"Oh, I wouldn't worry about it. I learned a long time ago that there wasn't much point in testing robots, no matter how advanced. There's always a certain something missing from the experience."

Like screaming? Rock very carefully did not say out loud as he started inspecting himself. Something seemed off, somehow.

"This actually appears to be an interesting variant. My records indicate that, on his deathbed, Mr. Johnson enlisted the greatest minds in the world to embark upon two tasks of the greatest importance. The first was, obviously, my own creation. You are the result of the second. An advanced android with one and only one purpose."

He finally tracked the sensation to his right arm, which he realized was grafted permanently with what appeared to be a Mega Buster. He hadn't noticed at first because his arm was like that often enough in any case. Curiously, there seemed to be some sort of label on it, and he turned it over to get a better look.

"To burn life's house down. With the lemons."

" Aperture Science Combustible Lemon Launcher ," Rock read aloud. He clapped his other hand to his forehead and groaned. "Sonic can never find out about this."

13.6

The captain of the USS Tripoli was somewhat confused as to what was going on. The cruiser had responded to a distress call from the Omicron Theta colony and had arrived just in time to see what looked like some gigantic three-dimensional space snowflake hightailing it out of the system, trailing pieces of itself.

"Orders captain?"

"Establish contact with the surface and see if there's anything we can do for them," the captain ordered. At least his duties were clear, whatever had occurred.

"Roger that, captain."

"Captain!" another officer exclaimed. "I'm reading a small shuttle above the planet where the... crystalline entity thing retreated from. No life signs detected, but I'm pretty certain it's what drove that thing off."

"Get a tractor beam on that shuttle and bring it in. Go over its logs with a fine-toothed comb. I want to know exactly what happened out there."

"Captain, I've gotten a response from the colony. They suffered a few casualties and a few people fled early in the attack in personal craft. But it seems that one of the colonists left behind... an android?"

The captain blinked at that last part. There weren't many who could even attempt such a thing, and only one he could think of that might have been way out here.

"Put an rescue and investigation team together and look into it."

"Wow... this little thing against that... whatever it was," one of the Tripoli's engineers whistled impressed. "That took guts."

"Or stupidity," her assistant grunted.

"It worked, that makes it guts," the engineer retorted.

"Yeah, yeah, what–whoa!"

"What is it?"

"I thought they said there were no life signs on this thing!"

"They did."

"Then who the hell is this?" the assistant gestured to the pilot seat.

The engineer rushed to the front of the shuttle and saw, sitting in the pilot seat without a scratch, a humanoid lifeform dressed in a basic red bodysuit, a yellow scarf, and a pair of dark sunglasses.

"Geez," the assistant reached out for the body's face, "he almost looks like he's still al–"

The body's hand suddenly shot up and grabbed the assistant engineer's wrist in a vice-like grip.

"Don't touch the shades," the mystery man ordered.

(Several years later)

Captain Jean-Luc Picard was reviewing the crew assignment of his new command. Or rather, he was skimming it for deviations from the norm, a skill he'd developed from the innumerable times he'd done this before. It always paid to know where a potential visitor from the greater multiverse might have popped up, even if he had no intention of letting on that he knew or why such knowledge would be important.

Sighing, he turned his terminal aside and fished a personal data device out of his subspace pocket, idly musing on how difficult it had been to glean the particulars for the technique without anyone catching on that he was looping. Activating the device, he accessed a particular subspace data network that only a select few even knew to look for, much less had the tools to access or decrypt, and checked it for messages.

'Let's see here... Riker's Awake and not doing anything out of the ordinary, Worf wants to try and tweak the training regimen of the security personnel a bit, nothing new there, Troi's warning me that her mother is her usual self, better double-check those mental shields from my time as Xavier, and Data...' Picard paused and re-read the message more carefully, 'this is interesting.'

Captain, a scenario we have previously discussed has occurred. My elder brother Lore has been replaced, likely by a looper. Either way, this individual is not one we have encountered before to my knowledge. From what I can determine, he Awoke soon after the point where Lore normally contacts the Crystalline Entity and decided to defend the colony instead of following through with its destruction. He actually succeeded in driving the Crystalline Entity off and was rescued by the Tripoli when it responded to the colony's distress signal. I was also recovered and activated as Dr. Soong had fled in the initial moments of the attack. We have both attended the academy, though Lore's replacement opted for the command track. I must warn you, he seems very troubled by something. Troubled enough that Starfleet has apparently seen fit to allow him a few non-regulation additions to the standard uniform on the understanding that these additions help him cope. Because of this, I have made a few quiet suggestions and gotten him assigned to the Enterprise in my place so that the friends who helped me through many hardships may perhaps see fit to helping him as well.

Best regards,

Data

P.S. I, of course, have requested an alternate duty assignment here on Earth with intentions of having artificial intelligences like myself recognized as sapient beings sooner than usual and plan to seek transfer to Deep Space Nine in a few years.

Picard raised an eyebrow at the whole thing and went back to the official crew manifest and scanned over the officers until he found what he was looking for.

'Ah, here we are. Lieutenant Commander Blues, self-proclaimed 'zeroth of House Light',' he read with bemusement, filing the odd title away as a clue to the likely looper's identity. 'Special exception to dress code: Lieutenant Commander Blues is permitted to wear shades and a yellow scarf with his uniform after their removal caused a psychic phenomena within his systems that made several nearby telepaths and empaths physically ill. Study of the articles yields nothing special about them, save that the shades possess functions not unlike the VISOR. La Forge might be interested in that,' he mused before continuing reading. 'The phenomena itself, after several rounds of volunteer testing, is best described as a psychic aura of malevolence and negativity. While then-cadet Blues displayed no increased hostility, all telepaths and empaths who volunteered for the study were insistent on this matter and said that the items provided an increased flow of positivity that suppressed the negative psychic aura. All psychological evaluation has declared Blues fit for duty, though regular counseling and evaluation is required. Prior to enrollment in Starfleet, Blues was instrumental in repelling the interstellar lifeform labeled the 'Crystalline Entity' when it attacked the colony at Omicron Theta.'

'Well now,' Picard thought to himself, 'this may prove an interesting several years.'

13.7

"Hey Dr. Wily!" Mike said as cheerfully as he could manage as the mad scientist's face appeared on the Satellite of Love's monitors. "How are things going today?"

"Oh, very well indeed, my hapless intern!" the man chuckled sinisterly. "I've finally found the perfect film with which to subjugate the will of the entire human race!"

"So what is it this time?" Rock asked as he hovered calmly next to the satellite's sole human occupant.

"Foreign giant monster movie with really bad dubbing?" Roll guessed. "Alien invasion with utterly stupid special effects? Bad writing only topped by worse acting?"

"Oh, it's the crown jewel of terrible movies!" Dr. Wily promised with glee. " How I Saved the Universe , produced, written, directed, and starring the one and only Viddy Narcy! A work of such utter tripe that even my own creation could not watch it in its entirety!"

"I don't have to watch it again, right?" a mechanical voice pleaded. "Just send it to them?"

"Of course! I'm uploading the latest blockbuster for your own viewing while they are subjected to the most terrible movie ever! Now, Video Man! Send it to them so that their wills shall shatter and I can be certain of my inevitable conquest!"

"Roger that, doctor!"

"Oh, we've got movie sign!" Mike yelled as the satellite's alarms began blaring.

In the Not-Too-Distant Future

Way down in Deep Thirteen.

The Mad Doctor Al Wily

Was hatching a nasty scheme.

He hired a temp by the name of Mike.

Just a regular Joe he didn't like

His experiment needed a good test case

So he conked him on the noggin

And he shot him into space!

Mike: GET! ME! DOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOWN!

Wily: I'll send him cheesy movies.

Video Man: The worst we can find. (La La La)

Both: He'll have to sit and watch them all

And we'll monitor his mind (La La La)

Now keep in mind Mike can't control

When the movies begin or end (La La La)

He'll try to keep his sanity

With the help of his robot friends!

Robot roll call:

AutoCam! (Message for you, sir!)

Blues! Sign saying 'You don't pay me enough'

Rock! (Hey everyone!)

Roooooll! (A few too many 'o's in that...)

If you're wondering how he eats and breathes and other science facts (la la la),

Just repeat to yourself, "It's just a show,

I should really just relax

For Mystery Science Theater 3000!"

13.8 (Scorntex)

Something was up. It had felt like another baseline run for X, complete with fighting Vile, but then he'd reached Sigma's Palace.

There had been no message from Zero. No Mavericks waiting for him once he got inside. Vile was a complete no-show. All X could do was keep going forward.

He made his way to the tower, fully expecting anything to happen (well, anything logical. He wasn't expecting Sigma to be knitting again).

So he was taken by surprise to find, instead of the usual sight of Sigma and Velguarder waiting for him, a massive apartment, with every Maverick he'd been sent after just... sitting around.

"Ah, X!" came the unmistakable voice of Sigma. "So glad you could make it! I see you managed to get here by yourself. Very impressive."

The former Hunter's leader turned back toward the crowd of Reploids, "Especially given that someone forgot to give you the address."

"I said I was sorry the first time!" someone who sounded amazingly like Vile yelled from a corner of the room. Sigma just shook his head mournfully, and looked at X. X meanwhile just kept his weapon trained on the traitor's head.

"What's going on here?" X said. Sigma just stared quizzically.

"Can you not tell, X?" X's greatest enemy frowned.

"The 'Maverick' Virus is a sham."

X blinked. He couldn't have just heard that. "What?"

"A sham. A lie. I made it up as an excuse for us to have days off."

"What."

Sigma sighed, "We Reploids are not humans, X. But we still act like them. We still feel them same as them. We require relaxation. We still need our own self time to ourselves."

"No kidding," came a particularly Vile-sounding grumble.

"Alas, as we are not living, we do not get ill in the same way as humans. And we cannot use the human excuse of dead grandmothers." X just stared, torn between utter confusion as to what Sigma was saying, or wondering whether he'd finally gone completely mad.

"So, how best to solve this conundrum? Simple! Claim a virus of unknown origin and properties has begun 'infecting' Reploids, allowing them to be subdued, and then letting the afflicted have a holiday, before we simply repaint them, give them a different name and send them back to work," Sigma chuckled.

"Frankly, I'm amazed you didn't catch on so quickly," he added. "Dr. Cain certainly did. Zero did. Or did you not wonder why the world's foremost expert in Reploid science just up and died? Or where your friend had gotten to?"

He stared hopefully at X, who just continued looking dumbfound. When it was clear the source of all Reploids hadn't caught on, he frowned. "Interesting fact, you've fought Storm Eagle no less than seven times before."

X blinked. Somewhere in the room, a Reploid who looked astoundingly like Storm Eagle painted orange and red waved to him. It didn't make any sense at all, even after the Loops he and Zero had already seen. Sigma was just... pretending? The Mavericks were faking it? He couldn't believe it.

"Where are–" he began, but Sigma apparently realised what he was going to ask.

"Dr. Cain? I believe he is currently having the time of his life on a beach somewhere. As for Zero... actually, I'm not sure about that one. But he is quite well, if incredibly annoyed at us."

Sigma leaned in conspiratorially. "We had a bit of a scheduling mix-up, you see. No-one realised we'd all booked the same time to 'go Maverick' until it was too late."

Sigma sighed again, "It's going to cause a tremendous amount of paperwork when all is said and done."

X blinked. He couldn't believe it. Sigma, one of the greatest threats to mankind and Reploid alike, was in this Loop at least just faking being ill to get out of work?!

But if it was true, then maybe... maybe there was a chance that he and Zero wouldn't have to fight. None of their friends had to die. The world didn't have to go to Hell and be left to the whims of Weil...

"Okay," he said, slowly, "So, there's no such thing as Mavericks."

"None at all," Sigma grinned. Not the sort of grin X was used to, cruel and inhuman (as it were), but warm and real. X just nodded. This felt too good to be true. Unaware to himself, he began grinning.

"That's..." he started, "that's... I..."

"Perhaps you'd like to sit down?" Sigma offered, motioning towards one of several sofas lying about. X just nodded absently.

"Good idea..."

He spent the next several hours on that sofa, talking about nothing in particular with the other reploids. Eventually, he left the palace and returned back to Abel City, filed a report claiming he'd seen nothing. He'd felt a twinge about lying on the report, but given no-one had died, not even Zero, he was feeling surprisingly good about everything.

Perhaps there was hope, even if it was only for that one Loop.

13.9 (Scorntex: Alternate ending to 13.8)

"Okay," he said slowly, "So, there's no such thing as Mavericks?"

"None at all," Sigma grinned. X looked up at the commander's face.

And his soul sank instantly, as he saw the maniacal red gleam in the Reploid's eyes that hadn't been there a moment ago.

" THERE IS ONLY WILY! "

And then a large laser sword found its way through his che–

X Awoke to the hiss of a cylinder opening, and the amazed smile of Dr. Cain.

13.10 (Bigou)

If Dr. Cain was looping, he would have been puzzled to discover X in a secret lab under water. And some of the content of Dr. Light's recorded message would have surprised him even more.

"…I have called him Mega Man X , because he is my tenth try to recreate Mega Man. He's also the first to be a success. I would have preferred to improve the original Mega Man, but after Dr. Wily's last uprising, robots were declared illegal and were all destroyed… That's why… That's why I disappeared, hiding in this old lab Wily abandoned so long ago… So I could reconstruct my family and still live in peace…" The now tearful holographic Thomas Light started to panic. "They forced me to destroy my children, my precious littles ones! I'm sorry… I'm so sorry… ROOOOOOOOOOOCK!"

Upon hearing this name, Dr. Cain's eyes grew big. "Could it be… The Rockman ?! The legendary ROCKMAN ?! He recreated it… HE RECREATED IT! HA-HA! HE RECREATED IT! HE RECREATED THE ROCKMAN!"

Surprisingly, when X Awoke, (in both senses of the word) he was still in his capsule.

Alas, that didn't prevent him from seeing the demented face of Dr. Cain pasted against the glass. The man who was usually a fatherly figure to X pressing into said tube with both hands, while creepily whispering "The Rockmaaan… Rockman! Roooooockman. The Rockman-man. Roooooockman, Rockman. Rockman! The Rockman. Roooooockmaaaaaaan…"

13.11 (wildrook)

"Not a word out of you," Zero said threateningly to X, who was snickering, "or else I mention the time you acted like Vash the Stampede down to the coat."

"Don't knock the Love and Peace, ma'am," X replied to the now-female reploid. "We've needed that ever since our baselines stabilized, and this IS a breath of fresh air."

13.12

Giorno was stunned. And bleeding. The former a result of the latter. He hadn't been harmed so easily in... oh, hundreds of Loops now. Not since he'd managed to maintain Gold Experience Requiem as his default Stand. That this... mad scientist managed it so easily was... impossible .

"I must admit, figuring out how to bypass your guardian was quite the trick," the voice of the local villainous mad scientist emanated from the speakers surrounding the area. "The power to nullify everything that is sent against both you and it really does seem invincible, does it not?"

Giorno shivered from the cold as he was blasted with fire from his mechanical opponent. That was also impossible. Fire was supposed to burn . Not freeze .

"Much more so with how it reacts automatically against anything meant to nullify its abilities in turn, negating them first. Plus, there's no documentation on how it works anywhere, meaning that even you don't truly understand how it does this. Very tricky," the broadcast voice continued. "But it was no match for my genius!"

His stand shook its head at him as it tried, and failed, once more to nullify his opponent's programming. What in the world was going on?

"It was quite simple, really," the voice taunted him. "If I can't make it weaker, I can make it stronger ."

Giorno scrunched his face up in confusion as the madman cackled in glee. What in the world did he mean?

"Your guardian's nullifying ability only works because his power is in precise balance. So if I make it stronger then instead of reducing something to zero, it reduces it past zero, effectively inverting it. Fire becomes ice, acid becomes base, and force inwards becomes force outwards. And my creations? Just a failsafe in their directives. When your guardian messes with their hostile programming, the failsafe makes that programming peaceful for as long as your guardian's influence is exerted and hostile again when it is removed. It took a bit of work to make the transition seamless, but now all of my creations will attack you no matter what your guardian does to convince them otherwise. Because if it tries, then it is reversing a non-hostile entity to a hostile one and if it doesn't then things proceed as normal."

"Gah!" Giorno cried out as he was blasted into a wall. That had been in front of him. Damnit, he was getting his ass kicked. He should have never let his stand's original abilities stagnate over the Loops like he had. He was too out of practice to use them effectively.

"And don't try to direct your guardian's attention to me. This is only a recording. I'm not involved in this directly. Heck, I'm not even watching right now! And because I'm not actively doing anything against you, your guardian can't stop me!"

Giorno grit his teeth as that all sunk in. He was screwed.

"That will teach you to oppose the will of the great Dr. Wily!"

13.13

"It's Loops like this that make me wish we could get drunk," Roll told her brother with a sigh.

"No kidding," Rock grumbled. "What demented mind would think we were romantically interested in each other at all? Much less..."

"Even odds that our admin's wife is somehow responsible," Roll glowered in a random upwards direction.

"At least we're both Awake so we can ignore it this time..."

13.-1) Wait, so Zero's on Blue Team and X is on Red Team? Mind Blown 13.0) Those Loops where Dr. Wily decides that death will only be the beginning for him…

7.7.7 continued) Hubris Plus: Ladies and gentlemen, please fasten your seat-belts and return your trays to the upright position as the crazy-train derails.

13.1) I suspect this becomes the history of 13.10

13.2) Mega Fortress.

Also, Fortress Master bios:

1. Heavy Man (Heavy/Misha (short for Mikhail))

Weapon: Sasha Barrage (The user shoots sharpened bullets at the fire rate of 6:1 (When compared to uncharged Buster Arm).)

Weakness: Short Circuit

2. Scout Man (Scout/?)

Weapon: Atomizer (A titanium red-and-yellow bat, the user winds up and hits the target at 275 MPH.)

Weakness: Jarate

3. Demo Man (Demoman/Tavish Finnegan DeGroot)

Weapon: Demo Grenades (The user shoots a grenade that, after 7 seconds, explodes with a 3-foot radius. Can also be triggered if stepped on.)

Weakness: Atomizer

4. Pyro Man (Pyro/?)

Weapon: Pyro Wave (The user emits a wave of blue fire that, if fire is not emitted, can also release a hard blast of air that sends enemies and solid projectiles flying.)

Weakness: Sasha Barrage

5. Engineer Man (Engineer/Dell Conagher)

Weapon: Short Circuit (The user releases a low electro-magnetic pulse that, while it doesn't shut down Robot Masters, can dissipate energy attacks and stun enemies in the blast.)

Weakness: Demo Grenades

6. Rocket Man (Soldier/"Mister Jane Doe")

Weapon: Rocket Jumper (The user fires an RPG which, if aimed straight down, can also launch the user high into the air with some minor recoil damage dealt.)

Weakness: Rocket Jumper

7. Medic Man (Medic/?)

Weapon: Overdose (The user shoots a volley of syringes that, if they hit, cause the target to become nauseous.)

Weakness: Jarate, Pyro Wave

8. Sniper Man (Sniper/Mr. Mundy)

Weapon: Jarate (The user throws a bottle of Jarate at the target. If it hits, the target is slowed and loses all technological weapons.)

Weakness: Overdose

9. Spy Man (Spy/?)

Weapon: Cloak and Dagger (Has two effects: Either the user becomes invisible for 3 min. or changes their appearance to a pre-set appearance until they attack.)

Weakness: Jarate, Pyro Wave

13.3) Alternate interpretation of Spy Man.

13.4) Some things in the Loops are harder to change than others. You either come to terms with it or you let it drive you mad.

13.5) Because Lemon Shooter.

13.6) You knew this had to happen sooner or later.

13.7) Theme song by wildrook and myself.

13.8) A truly epic scam.

13.9) Damnit! Not again!

13.10) Gah! Fanboy repellant! Fanboy repellant!

13.11) X isn't so much laughing at the fact that Zero is female for the Loop. He's laughing at the fact that female Zero looks almost identical to male Zero.

13.12) Wily versus Giorno Giovani from JoJo's Bizarre Adventure. No, he's still not Awake. GioGio is though, and is not having fun.

13.13) Brain Bleach needed. Please send.

Mega Sonic Part 5

Mega Sonic: Part 5

Roll and Bass rode up a tall elevator shaft at high speeds. Actually, it was less an elevator and more of a strange vertical tube-train. One that went up an orbital tether attached to a geosynchronous space station. One might think that the two would have a fair bit to talk about since they were in a sort-of-relationship, but instead it only seemed to increase the awkwardness of the situation.

Particularly when one considered who the space station they were heading towards belonged to.

"So... did Dr. Wily say what this was all about?" Roll broke the silence after several long minutes.

"Hmph..." Bass snorted. "Like pops ever tells me anything. I didn't even know he was building this thing until he sent the invite." (1)

"Ah..." Roll blinked before they went back to sitting awkwardly in silence.

"Wow..." Roll blinked as she stepped out of the space elevator station and got a look at what Wily had been up to. In front of her and Bass stretched a massive theme park, looking to go on for miles and miles in every direction. Beyond the skull-shaped entrance gates that ringed the station, she could see currently empty shops. Farther in, she could spot the tops of various amusement park rides and the automated announcer was suggesting that they head for Topman's Topsy-Turvy Fun House.

"Yeah," Bass actually looked impressed despite himself, "pops has really outdone himself this time..."

"Thank you, thank you!" the voice of Wily came over the speakers at that point. "And welcome to Wily World! I hope you don't mind me not coming in person, but I'm quite busy overseeing the final stages at the moment, so feel free to look around and enjoy yourselves!"

"Yeah, yeah," Bass rolled his eyes. "Why don't you just cut to the chase and tell us what the latest scheme is."

Wily's voice sighed loudly over the speakers. "My boy, you can be such a killjoy... Very well, the main purpose for me calling you here is to test out my latest series of robot masters that I'm deploying against Ivo."

"So..." Roll stretched the word out as she mused on that, "this isn't a diabolical scheme to take over the world?"

"My dear, you insult me!"

"It's kinda hard not to," Bass snarked.

"No," Wily's voice continued as if his robotic son hadn't spoken, "if anything, this is a diabolical scheme to save the world!"

"...what." (2)

Roll and Bass walked through the stadium door where a series of lighted walkways had directed them and blinked at the figure in the center.

It was... It was a pretty basic-looking humanoid robot, male model standard, armored completely in white. The only real part of its design that looked non-standard were the two short antenna poking out from its helmet.

"Introducing the concept prototype of my latest series, the Wily Color Numbers!" Wily's voice boasted proudly. "WCN-000: White Man!"

"Doesn't look like much..." Bass snorted in derision.

"Well, you'll get the chance to prove it shortly, won't you?" Wily's voice taunted. "You see, I've told them that you are the mightiest warriors ever made by human hands before these models."

Roll blinked at the odd wording, wondering what the doctor wasn't telling them.

"I've even put up a dampening field to prevent permanent damage to your systems, and you don't need to worry about holding back any, for this series runs off of something much harder to break than an IC chip. If this series can hold its own against the two of you, then we will know that they are ready to face Eggman and his army."

"This thing doesn't even look like it could take a MET, let alon–"

"BEGIN!" Wily interrupted his son, prompting White Man to form his arm into a buster.

"HYPER!" White Man yelled before he began firing massive white balls of plasma larger than Roll's fully charged shots, but at the same rate she could fire normal ones.

Roll and Bass both dove out of the way in opposite directions and came up arm cannons blazing, their shots looking pathetically small in relation to White Man's.

"Okay, so you got some firepower!" Bass grinned as he charged their opponent. "Let's see how you handle close range!"

Roll snapped out her combat broom and charged as well, dodging around the shots that came her way when a new voice prompted her to dive to the ground.

"LASER!" was what heralded a massive beam of light lancing through where her torso had been a moment earlier and Roll tumbled and got to her feet facing the new figure, a streamlined cyan female model with a backward-facing fin on her head.

"DRILL!" came from underneath Bass's feet right before the ground exploded, throwing him upwards as a yellow robot whose head and torso were covered with a thick drill-shaped armor that was already slowing its rotation. As it stopped, parts of the armor popped out to form shoulder pads to allow the drill-tipped arms to deploy.

"ROCKET!" an orange figure streaked out of the pit and collided with Bass's gut so fast that Roll could barely register the feminine body-type and space-themed design.

"QUAKE!" reminded her that she had her own opponents to worry about and she barely jumped off the ground before a massive gray robot with angular armor, and sporting a chestplate that looked like Wily had spontaneously decided to make the model female as an afterthought, hit the ground, shaking it so hard that even her allies fell over.

Roll could hear her brother now. "Wily made a female Guts Man/Hard Man? Look, sis, I'm all for gender equality but there's something wrong with that."

"SPIKES!" was the only warning she got as a lanky female pink robot jumped from the arena walls. Her head sprouted sharp hair-like spines that went all the way down her back and her arms and legs were studded with smaller spines clearly meant to give her traction on even the most stubborn surface.

"HOVER!" caused her to spare a momentary glance to where Bass was trying to fight a green UFO-like opponent encased in an energy field while falling.

Roll twisted in mid-air and brought her broom to block her own opponent and direct her momentum elsewhere, pushing Roll herself in the other direction and into a somersault.

"LIGHTNING!" came from her side and she did a spin and stuck out her foot, tripping an ivory female model with lightning-shaped protrusions from the outer parts of her joints and her head that had tried to run her over while encased in electricity. Roll grit her teeth at the discharge the contact sent her systems and opened fire.

"CUBE!"

Only for a blocky blue robot to create an impenetrable cube of energy that blocked her shot.

"EAGLE!"

A moment later and Bass slammed into the ground next to her as a winged aerodynamic crimson male-model robot flew to join his now-gathered companions.

As she watched, they were joined by a large round indigo robot with short stubby limbs, a magenta female model with an antenna from her helmet that made her head look like a musical note, a black model whose design looked composed of spheres the same way the blue one was composed of cubes (and who freakily seemed to have a glowing mouth but no eyes), a red model that had armor designed to look like flames, and a purple and violet pair (male and female models respectively) that also had no eyes and pitch black voids for mouths.

"VOID!" the violet female yelled and formed a singularity in front of her that sucked Roll and Bass towards their opponents.

"ASTEROID!" the indigo model jumped up, a ring of debris following to orbit around him as he clearly meant to flatten them both.

Roll threw herself back even as Bass lunged forwards to engage their opponents directly.

"RHYTHM!"

"BURST!"

Roll swore as the red one barreled at her while covered in flames even as her movement systems started glitching. It was close, but she managed to dodge out of the way, only to see the purple male charging at her with a feral grin.

"BOMB!" was the cry shortly followed by an explosion and a pained cry from Bass as the one charging Roll got into melee range and she brought her broom up to block.

"FRENZY!"

The broom shattered under the blow, leaving her completely defenseless. (3)

"Fuck... what the hell hit me?" Bass moaned as he stirred. He tried moving, only to find that he was restrained in a stasis tube. A quick look showed that Roll was in one next to him.

"Ah, good, you're awake," the voice of his creator (father... whatever... like it mattered...) made itself known and Bass turned his eyes to see the man sitting in a chair looking entirely too pleased with himself.

'Oh, great...' Bass moaned in his head. 'He's never going to let me live this down...'

"I'm sure you are both wondering just how I made my newest robot masters, yes?" the man grinned insufferably.

'I'm more wondering how far I can shove their remains up your–'

"Yes, actually," Roll interrupted Bass's train of thought before it could reach its rather graphic conclusion. "They're more powerful than even the StarDroids were. What did you do?"

"Oh, it's quite remarkable actually!" Wily grinned and punched up a display of a series of... well, sickeningly cute color-coded creatures composed of mostly a head, a random number of eyes each, and a few limbs and crests seemingly added on as an afterthought. "You see, my Color Masters are each piloted by one of these remarkable creatures!"

'I got my ass kicked by those things?!' Bass's jaw dropped in utter disbelief. They looked about as threatening as a box of kittens. Versus Treble.

"They are known as Wisps," Dr. Wily continued on, "and they possess a very potent source of energy that they call 'Hyper-Go-On'. Or at least that's the closest my translators can get. Individually, their reserves of 'Hyper-Go-On' make them a match for even beings like Duo or Slur in short bursts. But gather enough of them in one place and their power could outstrip even the Chaos Emeralds! Sadly, they are not naturally equipped to use this power in their own defense. But they can empower others with it, including machines."

"And they agreed to work for you piloting your... Color Masters, was it?" Roll asked.

"Well, I suppose the fact that Ivo got to them slightly ahead of me and started doing his usual had some influence on the decision," the man admitted reluctantly, "but the fact remains that those who escaped with me were all too ready to accept whatever help I offered them. And thanks to the test run, I now have both of you at my mercy, so you can't do anything to stop me like you usually do. Oh, the Wisps were quite worried about you when they saw the damage they inflicted, but I assured them I could repair you easily. Just... that it would take some time."

Bass did not miss his father's grin at that. "What are you up to, old man?"

"Oh, nothing. Just that I am about to send my Color Masters to help dear Mega Man and Sonic free their brethren from Ivo's control.

They will assuredly accept the help until they learn that my Color Masters defeated and captured the two of you. Sonic has never been one for deep thought when action calls and I doubt Mega Man will think too much when he rightly concludes that I'm holding you captive. They will attack, forcing the Wisps who only know me as the man who worked tirelessly to give them the ability to defend themselves to defend me in turn."

Bass blinked and watched Roll's expression sink like a stone out of the corner of his optics.

"As they did against you, they will win, again and again until I and my creations are the only defenders this planet has left. The world will then have no choice but to recognize my greatness, regardless of how they feel about me," Wily finished, stretching as he stood. "And so I have things to do and an entire race of supremely powerful aliens to free. I'll tell the Wisps that you're fine, but will be quite long in recovering, so you two lovebirds enjoy your time alone together!"

With that, Dr. Wily practically skipped out of the room, humming happily to himself.

"Okay," Bass couldn't keep the fact that he was somewhat impressed out of his voice, "I gotta admit... that's pretty diabolical."

Rock looked up. And up. And further up still. The top of the space elevator in front of him was still out of range for his optics, obscured by the clouds and the blue of the atmosphere.

"So, how suspicious is this pre-opening invitation to Eggmanland?" he asked his two companions. "On a scale of one to ten?"

"Eleven, minimum," Tails replied absently as the two-tailed fox mobian fiddled with a hand-held device of some sort.

"So, no chance that he's actually turned over a new leaf I take it?"

"As, if," Sonic scoffed. "If this version of Eggman is patting you on the back, it's only because he's looking for the best place to stick a knife. His theme parks may look awesome, but they're death traps that would give OSHA fits. Just be glad you don't really need to eat. His food courts alone are crimes against nature."

"Gotcha..."

"But, hey, look on the bright side! We'll finally get to see what you can do with a wisp!"

"Oh, that's now?"

"Yeah, Eggman's plan involves enslaving a whole bunch of them. We've tried to head it off a bunch of times..."

"...But Eggman's frequently better at finding the wisps before we can," Tails finished.

"Well," Rock nodded as he summoned his Mega Man armor and began walking for the entrance to the space elevator, "let's get to work then."

"Welcome to Eggman's Incredible Interstellar Amusement Park: Eggmanland! Where you can enjoy five planets for the price of one!"

"That explains the admission prices," Rock noted with dry amusement. (4)

"Yeah, that's Eggman for ya," Sonic nodded. "Big on schemes, low on sense. And loves to hear his lips flap. Real shame too. This place is pretty epic after all."

"Yeah," Tails agreed. "If Eggman ever actually did reform he could make a fortune."

"Yeah, everyone and their brother would want to come!"

"Everyone and their brother just might be able to afford a single ticket between them," Rock reminded them. "The prices alone are either criminal, or should be. Eggman flunked business class, didn't he?"

"Probably, but don't say that to his face," Sonic chuckled and looked upwards at the serene blue planet 'above' them. "Still, that is one nice view. Never gets old, that."

"Notice the lovely planet floating in the sky above you," Eggman's voice came over the P.A. system again, "soon to be the property of Eggman Enterprises."

"And then Eggman says stuff like that and ruins it... What do you say we cut to the chase and just go foil his latest plot?"

The P.A. system chose that moment to broadcast another announcement. "Please refrain from foiling evil schemes, plots, and odd plans while inside the park. Foiling is strictly prohibited."

"Oh, put a sock in it already!"

"Eggmanland has been constructed entirely out of a sense of remorse for my past transgressions and is in no way associated with any sort of evil plot or premeditated misdeeds."

"Yeehaw! Git along little alien!"

'Eggman, you are such a liar...' Rock sighed as he watched the duo of Orbot and Cubot chase a few wisps around with a net and a ray gun.

"Well, looks like that's our cue t–"

"HYPER!" Sonic was cut off as a white figure crashed down into the tableau and moved to defend the wisps from their pursuers, leveling an arm cannon at the smaller robots.

"Okay, that's new..."

"What in tarnation do you think you're doin–" Cubot began, only to have his net incinerated by a large blinding white buster shot. "–err..."

"Oh, dear..." Orbot fiddled with his ray gun for a moment as Cubot began backing up nervously.

"Now, ah..." Cubot stared down the arm cannon, "just hold on a minute there, pardner! I was just doin' mah duty!"

"Ah, there's the electronic disruptor setting!" Orbot declared happily before blasting the white figure, who seized up as sparks ran over his form before collapsing in like a statue someone tipped over. Upon impact with the ground a small white wisp with a spit-curl antenna on its forehead was ejected, turning the white robot into a very basic unpainted steel bodyframe.

"Huh, I've never actually seen Orbot's raygun hit anything before..." Tails blinked. (5)

Rock was already moving, pointing his own arm cannon at the ray gun and blasting it out of Orbot's hand.

"Hey, wait up!" Sonic called after him right before a cyan wisp that had broken off from the others collided with the hedgehog and was absorbed straight into his body. "Whoa, wait... Calm down! I can't contr–"

Sonic's words were drowned out as he turned into a living laser beam and shot off deeper into the amusement park.

"Uh-oh!" Cubot gulped as Rock landed between the wisps and the two robots. "It's the Mega Sheriff!"

"Oh, dear..." Orbot observed, "this could be a problem..."

Rock was about to make a declaration when the white wisp from before entered his body and he felt a massive surge of energy as his armor turned stark white.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: WHITE BUSTER

He tried to control it, but the wisp was panicking and it was interfering with Rock's ability to control his systems. He was desperately trying to hold back the buster fire that the wisp was trying to force out at the same time, resulting in the 'White Buster' charging up.

"It's alright!" he tried to assure the wisp inside him. "I've got it un–"

That was when the massive blazing white buster shot tore out the end of his arm cannon, just barely missing the defensive modes of Orbot and Cubot as it obliterated several structures and shops, creating a massive furrow in the ground before it finally dissipated.

"I reckon we should leave afore he figgures out how ta aim that..." Cubot trembled as he began moving his geometric form away as quickly as he dared.

"Agreed..." Orbot rolled after his comrade.

"Zere you are, villain!" Antoine pointed his sword at the form of Eggman, lounging casually in the air above Angel Island in his Egg Mobile. (6) "Return ze princess and Amy at once!"

"What Sugah-Twan said," Bunnie glared. "Or are we gonna have ta get rough? Please say yes..."

"Oh-ho-ho-ho!" the rotund man laughed as he held up a pair of purple-backed cards. "No need to worry! They're sound asleep, right here in these cards!"

"EGGMAN!" the familiar roar of Knuckles boomed over the landscape as red form of the Guardian of Angel Island landed in the clearing, followed by the similarly red form of Blues Light, the Proto Man. "RETURN THE MASTER EMERALD AT ONCE!"

"Oh," Eggman grinned casually, holding up another of his cards. "You mean, this Master Emerald? Well now, that's a bit of a problem... I can't very well hand over all of my precious card collection... It's so hard to get some of the subjects to sit still for my camera after all... Tell you what? The first one to get to me past my little obstacle course can pick one card."

The four growled as Eggman flew off, laughing the whole way.

"Sorry, guys," Blues stated shortly, "but while the backup system for the island is working for now, it won't last forever."

"And we can't let him get away with our friends, sugah."

"It eez to be a race, then, no?"

"Yeah..." Knuckles couldn't help the grin that split his face. Despite the seriousness of the situation, the thrill of competition still got his blood pumping.

Shadow grumbled as he tore through the terrain of Angel Island in pursuit of Dr. Eggman, followed closely by E-123 Omega. Rouge getting kidnapped while Awake was already something he'd never hear the end of, but if Bass ever learned that Treble had been stolen while under Shadow's watch...

"Come on, Silver!" another voice called out from nearby. "We have to find Eggman while he still has information on Nega!"

"Right behind you, Quint!"

"Negative," Omega intoned, drawing the attention of the silver hedgehog and the green-armored clone of Mega Man. "Dr. Eggman will be terminated by us."

"Not before he tells us what he knows!" Quint shot back hotly.

"Race?" Shadow raised an eyebrow at Silver.

Silver nodded back with a grin as the psychokinetic aura fueling his speed gained in intensity. "Race."

"No aliens were harmed in the creation of this park," the voice of the P.A. system echoed across the area. "They were all harmed after the park was created."

Rock grunted as he felt another energy buildup starting. "It's okay! They're gone! No one is going to hurt you! I promise!"

A moment later and the energy died down and a white creature composed of a head, three tendril-like extremities extending from the bottom, two short stereotypically 'alien' antenna, one large eye, and a gravity-defying spitcurl exited Rock's body.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Pum axam se sellupp!" the creature gibbered in a rush. (7) "Hon Pum rech zo faxattro-fedupp zaxat Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail kaxavo vo te saxavo vupp flothlon blem Faxardupp Jesohaxail, Pum paxaningow! Pum jovol voaxank te whaxalm ug! Pum'v sellupp, Pum'v sellupp, Pum'v sellupp!"

"Hold on a moment," Tails dug out a handheld device. He probably could have brought out a finished translator, but the 'baseline challenge run' was as good an excuse as any to see how fast he could pull this off from scratch. "I think I can make alterations to this and get a working transl–"

"Dit nud bino," Rock waved off the alien's concern to Tails's astonishment. "Je whaxalm peno din zo oct. Eut eb culiesitupp, fupp 'Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail', pe ug voaxan 111. Wirupp?"

"Yos! Zaxat nud haxat zo Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail caxarrow whimsorb! Who fuirt zeso fedios bel us wisps te saxavo eep flothlon blem Faxardupp Jesohaxail he waxanks eep Whypol-Ke-En dewol te pe dreck zicks!"

"You can understand him?" Tails continued gaping.

"Remind me to tell you all later about the Loop where everyone spoke in 'Gibberish'," Rock whispered to the fox before turning back to the alien. "Fupp 'dreck zicks', pe ug voaxan ovir zicks?"

"Pum pe jet gned zis weld 'ovir'? Dis dit faxad?"

"Dit nud molupp faxad. Molupp faxad zicks bel molupp faxad loaxasens."

"Zon yos, who waxanks eep Whypol-Ke-En dewol bel up 'ovir' pulpeso!"

Rock nodded as he walked over to the basic steel robot frame that the alien had inhabited and began to examine it.

"Well?" Tails asked.

"It's interesting..." Rock mused as he scanned the robot. "Aside from apparently being tuned to this guy's personal energy frequency for both power and control, the entire thing is nothing more than a mobile variable weapon system. Though whatever that ray gun did completely fried it, so it's more like a pile of burned-out circuits. It'd take days to get it back in order, with the proper equipment."

"Zon... Pum whaxavo baxairow..." the white alien looked despondent before turning to Rock with a pleading expression. "Pum vuch axash ug flaxavo eno, proaxaso whorp us! Who dis caxagick eep laxaco pi wraxainick us eb eep ribo belco! Proaxaso! Saxavo zom! Saxavo zom!"

"Please do not be concerned if you encounter any screaming aliens," the P.A. system chimed in at that moment. "The screams are how they communicate. Really! I promise."

"Of course we'll help! I'm known as Rock."

"And I'm Tails! What's your name?"

"Pum axam caxarrow Yaxangol."

"Nice to meet you, Yacker."

"Yeah," Tails chuckled. "It's always nice to make new friends."

"Speaking of, I wonder where Sonic went..."

"Zo fruo spinupp eno?"

"Ah, he'll be fine," Tails waved the concern off casually. "He's probably only up to his neck in trouble after all."

"It continues to amaze me that you can say things like that and still be completely serious."

"Ow..." Sonic rubbed his head as the cyan wisp left his body and retreated. "Good thing this big ol' welcome sign broke my... Well, I can't really call it a 'fall', can I...?"

The floating globe ringed by a sign that read 'Welcome to Eggmanland' (8) and topped by a face of the bad doctor himself shuddered angrily.

"Please refrain from teasing the robots," Eggman's voice advised over the P.A. system as the sign portions unfolded into arms and a pair of glaring eyes set into the globe opened up and locked onto

Sonic, "as they are very sensitive and require expensive maintenance."

"Well, hey there!" Sonic grinned at the floating killer robot. "You wanna play?"

The robot raised one of its fists and slammed it down where Sonic had been standing a moment before.

"I'll take that as a 'yes'!"

"–nearly enough aliens!" Rock, Tails, and Yacker heard the voice of Eggman as they approached.

"Want us to get more?" the cultured voice of Orbot asked as Rock put a finger to his lips to signal for silence.

"No!" Eggman's voice bit back sarcastically. "I want you to get me a cheeseburger and a shake!"

"That'll be easier!" Cubot's cowboy voice sounded relieved as Tails bit back a bout of laughter from the trio's hiding spot. "Cheeseburgers don't run as fast as them li'l alien varmints!"

"Eh, je!" Yacker whispered worriedly. "Whaxas Faxardupp Jesohaxail dimplisenow axanethol laxaco tee?"

"It's a type of food," Rock explained as Eggman yelled at his literally inclined underling that he wanted more of the alien race captured immediately, if not sooner.

The grumbling of the two smaller robots as they headed off was audible as the three moved closer, before Cubot turned and added "Y'all want fries with that?"

The three heroes were so caught up in the byplay that they didn't quite notice that they had stepped out into Orbot's range of sight until the robot began backing up nervously.

"Precious little aliens!" Eggman floated downwards in his personal craft, back to the trio of heroes, and examined the capsules of captured wisps, most like Yacker but a few were cyan with two eyes, a slicked-back pointed antenna, two of their three tendrils sleek and pointed with the third that regularly curved into the shape of a stylized lightning bolt as they moved. "I'll harness their Hyper-Go-On power and then nothing will stop me!"

As Orbot continued to back up in the direction of his boss, Rock gave up the stealth approach as a bad job. About the only reason Eggman hadn't noticed him was that Orbot hadn't sounded the alarm.

"I know I say that every time," Eggman spoke to no one in particular, "but this time, really, nothing will stop me!"

"Um..." Orbot finally tried to get Eggman's attention. "Boss...?"

"So," Rock spoke up loud and clear, startling Eggman into whipping around to look at him, Yacker, and Tails straight on, "who exactly are you calling nothing?"

"MEGA MAN?!"

"Wow," Rock chuckled. "Thanks for the vote of confidence."

"Huh?" the confused voice of Cubot interrupted the tableau. Apparently Eggman's other minion had spotted them on his way out too.

"He means that since the boss said 'nothing will stop me' and Mega Man is here to stop him, it's like the boss was calling Mega Man 'nothing'."

Cubot tilted his head in confusion until his neck joint seemed to pop loose.

"A little slow on the uptake is he?" Rock asked.

"You have no idea," Orbot sighed the sigh of the long suffering.

"Fine!" Eggman huffed as he floated up and away in his personal craft, his blast shield sliding into place. "You're so smart, you take care of this mess!"

"Orbot." Rock raised an eyebrow as the named minion pointed at himself in shock. "Versus me."

"Release the Big Boy!" Eggman finished as he shot off, Orbot and Cubot following as fast as they could.

A moment later and a what looked like a massive multi-ringed ferris wheel rose up on a series of rotating jet thrusters mounted to its back, with a manic robot attached to it with long arms capable of reaching either end of the ferris wheel of doom that it held on with and a body upon which was mounted a single insanely twitching eye, ringed with armored petals that it closed in an approximation of blinking, that stared out of the ferris wheel of doom's center.

"You two free the wisps," Rock called to Tails and Yacker as he dashed towards Eggman's amusement park monstrosity. "I've got the 'Big Boy'!"

"Roger/Legol!" Tails and Yacker saluted in unison.

"Well, that was fun," Sonic dusted his hands off, the remains of his opponent sparking feebly as most of it lay in one of the larger reflecting pools.

"Please refrain from throwing coins, trash, or small children into the reflecting pools."

"Cool," Sonic smirked at the recorded voice of Eggman, "nothing about throwing giant killer robots in. Guess that means I'm not in trouble. Wonder what Rock and Tails are up to..."

A mechanical screech echoed across the grounds.

"Hey, a two-fer of giant killer robots! Eggman, you shouldn't have!"

Rock ran angles of attack as he approached. Firing a few test shots revealed that he needed to get closer or his opponent would just close its armor plating over its giant optic, causing his buster shots to bounce off.

The robot twisting the giant multi-tiered ring and rolling it towards him, over buildings and decorative displays like a giant crushing wheel, showed the dangers of getting too close.

'If I can get inside the outermost ring, I can mostly nullify its primary form of attack. I just need a distraction...'

"LASER!" came the yell as a powerful beam of cyan light lanced through the air and seared a hole through one of the robot's arms.

'That'll do,' Rock hopped onto a low wall and pushed off to land on the interior of the ferris wheel of doom while the robot steering it looked towards the source of the laser. A charged shot to the machine's massive optic later and its attention was firmly back on Rock.

With a screech, the machine swiped one of its arms around the outer ring, trying to hit the blue bomber, but he casually hopped over it as another laser hit the mechanized monstrosity in the eye this time.

The ferris wheel of doom shuddered as the giant robot attached to it twitched violently beneath its reflexively closed blast panels and a pure cyan figure landed next to Rock.

It was a female model with what seemed like a racing fin atop her helmet and a body streamlined for speed.

"Alo ug wholo te whorp?" Rock asked, causing the... Cyan Woman if he didn't miss his guess... to start in surprise before nodding silently as the tremors rocking the ferris wheel of doom died down. "Okay, then, let's go for the eye on three! One... two..."

The machine opened the blast panels over its eye suddenly and glared at them with something that, while not really hate, was a darn good simulation.

"LAS–"

"Jump!" Rock yelled as the robot swiped one of its arms down at them forcefully.

CRUNCH!

Rock had cleared the attack in time, but his sudden companion had been in the middle of attacking and hadn't aborted fast enough, getting torn clean in half and reverting to a generic unpainted female model as one of the cyan-colored wisps Rock had seen in Eggman's capsules popped out.

"Eh je!" the alien being gibbered in terror. "Whorp! Whorp! Whorp!"

"Peniz wellupp!" Rock yelled, trying to reassure the alien while he dodged a follow-up swipe. "Pum caxan whaxactro zis!"

"Loi ox? Fut... Pum waxasniz chleck oneugh..."

"You're plenty strong!" Rock retorted as he fired his Mega Buster, only for the shots to ping off the re-closed blast panels. "You just don't have enough experience fighting things like this!"

"Zon... Zon Pum'rr roct ug vupp onolgupp!" the cyan wisp declared before shooting into Rock's body, turning his armor a gleaming cyan all over.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: CYAN LASER

The blast panels opened and Rock aimed his arm cannon straight at the giant glaring optic.

"LASER!" he yelled, firing a massive beam of light straight through the center of the killer machine's optic, causing a chain reaction to begin.

"We here at Eggmanland consider ourselves the universe's first fully green amusement park," Eggman's voice echoed from the P.A. system. "Although the green is from all the nausea and vomiting, but still: Green is green!" (9)

"Ew..." Tails made a face as he fiddled with his handheld Miles Electric under the watchful eye of Yacker and a couple of other curious wisps that had stuck around after being freed. "Okay, now I just tweak this and adjust that. And done!"

"Done with what?" Sonic asked as he skidded to a halt a few steps too far and moonwalked back.

"Oh, a translator to talk to these guys like Rock can," Tails informed him idly. "Where've you been anyway?"

"Eh," Sonic shrugged. "I did a little shopping, grabbed a snack, trashed a giant killer robot posing as the welcome sig–wait, big blue can do what now?"

"Speak their language," Tails suppressed a chuckle, determined to act like this was no big deal in spite of Sonic's flabberghasted expression. (10) "You said this place had shopping?"

"Well, less than it did before," the voice of Rock cut in as he walked up, dusting himself off and followed by a cyan wisp that Yacker greeted cheerfully. "Honestly, this place would be pretty awesome if Eggman actually put in enough effort to even pretend to care about his potential visitors."

"The unfiltered starlight from the lovely constellations above is full of deadly radiation!" the P.A. system announced helpfully. "Help yourselves to our complimentary SPF-3000 Starblock. And by complimentary, I mean quite expensive."

"Case in point," Rock gestured in the general direction of a speaker. "Whoupp, Taxairs! Pum soo ug biniskow yeep slaxansraxatel. Dit welkick?"

"Well, it's not doing the peppermint twist," Tails grinned and made an adjustment to the device.

"Cool," Rock chuckled. "Hey, Yacker. Everyone get away safely?"

"Eb ceulso, flaxavo eno! Who eb twe taxairs whaxad zom axarr bloo din pit vemonk!"

Tails lost his composure and burst out laughing for a moment before getting himself under control and making another adjustment to his device. "Tails of two cities... heh..."

"You guys are gonna be doing this all day, aren't you?" Sonic groaned.

Rock and Yacker turned remarkably similar smiling expressions at the hedgehog.

" That's a yes..." the blue blur shook his head. "Anyway, you all know what Eggman's up to, right? Well I picked up a map showing how to get to his other little areas."

"Enjoy every moment in the luxurious grounds as if they might be your last. Especially if you're a meddlesome hedgehog or a bothersome blue robot."

"What, no mention for me?" Tails looked offended after the announcement finished.

"Or their fawning vulpine sidekick."

"Better."

Orbot sighed to himself as he absently processed Cubot's complaints at having to clean up the mess of destroyed robot. 'Ah, sometimes I wish the boss would send us out for more than menial labor... Of course, then I remember that would likely end with me like this poor fellow and all is right with the world.'

Cubot went back to work and plopped a large piece in the refuse bin he was hauling.

"Hmm... we seem to be missing an arm..." Orbot realized suddenly. "Did you spot another arm?"

"Naw, but really how much can it... Hey, there it is, over yonder!" (11)

"Oh, dear, that poor souvenir stand... Ah, well, it's on the way to where Globotron got smashed."

"Aw, we gotta clean him up too?"

"Next stop: the Sweet Mountain," the transport announced helpfully as it sped off along the glowing chain towards what looked like a massive floating pastry orb. "Enjoying our candy paradise is the perfect way to celebrate your next birthday. Or to avoid reaching it."

"You know, I wonder what the others are doing about now..." Sonic mused.

"Now, villain!" Antoine leveled his sword in Eggman's direction. "Hand ovair ze princess and Amy!"

"Y'all heard the man!" Bunnie leveled her cybernetic arm in cannon mode at the man.

"Hmm..." Eggman grinned as he stroked his chin idly. "I suppose I could part with one if you win my little contest..."

"Contest?!" Knuckles growled out as Blues frowned. "You said you'd hand one over to whoever won the race!"

"Really?" the man feigned confusion from his personal craft. "I don't remember saying anything like that..."

"Why you dirty rotten stinking–" Knuckles's attempt to not use the more colorful language he'd picked up in the Loops was cut off by a new arrival.

"EGGMAN!" Quint shouted as the ground where he landed shook from the force of his feet-first impact. "Tell us where Nega is!"

"And hand over Rouge and Treble!" Shadow growled as he landed next, followed by Silver and Omega.

"Dear me, this is getting crowded..." Eggman seemed unconcerned. "Why don't you talk it over with my little friends, hmm?"

With a snap of his fingers, a pair of armored turtle robots popped up from below and moved to engage both groups.

"Tarnation!" Bunnie changed her aim to the new foes.

"Well, you have fun!" Eggman grinned as he began moving away while waving a brightly colored camera. "I'm off to turn more things into cards!"

"GET BACK HERE!" Knuckles and Shadow yelled as they took off in pursuit, followed by Blues and Omega, leaving the other two pairs behind to face the machines.

"Bet we can take ours out faster than y'all can, sugah," Bunnie smirked.

"I'll take that bet," Silver grinned back before Quint could object.

"Welcome to the Sweet Mountain," the local P.A. system cheerfully informed the group as they beheld the endless array of pastry-like terrain before them, having actually landed far away from the base of the glowing chain that held the mini-planet in place. "Insulin will be provided at a marginal extra cost. And by marginal, we mean enormous."

"I cannot even begin to list all the things wrong with this place," Rock looked around at the giant donuts, mountain-sized cake formations, lollipop pillars, and all other manner of enormous sweets used to construct a sugar overdose so massive that it could induce a diabetic fit from sight alone.

"Pum wectol holo zo enos he wolo sonk wholo axalo?" Yacker murmured. "Pum whepo jethick whaxapponow te zom..."

"Well, I don't know where Eggman might be keeping the wisps," Tails looked up from his device towards the base of the glowing chain in the distance, "but I think that's where the map said the power for this area of the park was."

Of course, Tails didn't mention that was where it usually was when Eggman pulled this stunt. For one, he'd prefer not to confuse Yacker and the cyan wisp that had tagged along, and for another just because that was what usually happened didn't mean that was what would happen this time around.

"Sounds like a good place to start," Sonic nodded. "Wanna make a race of i–"

"DRILL!" was all the warning they got before the cake-like ground before them burst in a geyser of sugary crumbs and several forms emerged. Many were wisps of the white and cyan variety, but there were also yellow wisps with pointy triangular single-eyed heads and red wisps with tri-eyed heads in a shape that evoked the image of flames. Amidst their number was two robots, one yellow and one red. The yellow one had a drill-shaped helmet that extended down over the torso with shoulder-pads that looked like they folded down to make one big drill. The Yellow Man also had arms tipped with drills as well. The Red Man on the other hand had a helmet that evoked flames much like the red wisps and seemed to spurt fire from his joints every few moments.

"Ug'lo ekaxaupp!" Yacker seemed relieved to see the two robots. "Pum waxas welliow ug weurdniz fo axabtol zo fedupp Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail vaxado bel vo waxas foaxaton, fut ug'lo bino! Whed whaxavo ug baxalow? Pum'mo fleudd whorp! Zo flaxavo eno, zo spinupp eno, pi zo eno eb twe taxairs whaxavo whorpow us kloaxatrupp!"

"It was nothing," Rock rubbed his head in embarrassment. "But we are here to help. Do you know where the generator for this place is?"

"BURST!" the red robot nodded amidst a sudden flaring of fire from his body and gestured in the same direction that they group had guessed before.

"Well, then, let's go!" Sonic grinned before taking off.

"Enjoy the rides, but be careful. The seats can be sticky."

"Something wrong?" Blues asked as he and Knuckles raced Shadow and Omega to catch Eggman first.

"Just wondering where the Chaotix are in this mess. Shade said they'd just gotten a case involving Eggman after all..."

"We hope you're enjoying this sunny day here at the park," Eggman's voice echoed. "Sadly, a sunny day once again mean that the Choco-Coaster is out of service. Due to melting."

"Heh... That's what you get Baldy McNosehair," Sonic chuckled as he looked up the steep incline before turning to his temporary companion. "Ready to make with the magic little guy?"

"Loaxadupp!" the orange wisp replied, its two vertically arranged eyes on its ovoid head gaining a determined expression before merging with Sonic.

"ROCKET!" the hedgehog yelled as he turned into a glowing orange rocket and shot straight up into the sky.

"sigh... Sonic is never going to learn how to wait for people, is he?" Rock asked as he and the others stood at the base of one of the pastry mountains.

"There's no line at Bake Me Crazy, the ride that simulates what it's like to be baked like a cake. The ride itself lasts an amazing 20 to 25 minutes, or until golden brown. Not recommended for our guests who are sensitive to temperatures exceeding 350 degrees."

"Probably not," Tails shrugged as Red Man and a red wisp that had been freed actually looked interested in the announcement. "Why do you think we've all learned how to run so fast?"

"There is that," Rock allowed with a sage nod that Yacker mimicked. "Well, we've got two options. We can go over the mountain, or we can go through it.

Yellow Man and Red Man looked at each other for a moment before Yellow Man revved his drill arms loudly with a cry of "DRILL!"

"Well, that sounds like a vote for 'through'," Rock grinned. "Do I have a second?"

"Pum socect!" a yellow wisp they'd recently freed chirped before it merged with Rock, turning his armor a bright yellow.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: YELLOW DRILL

"Any opposed?" Rock asked as the P.A. apologized for using day-old donuts on some of the rides, getting shaken heads all around. "Then let's go! DRILL!"

A massive spinning yellow drill formed from Rock's outstretched arm and rapidly burrowed into the pastry mountain at the same time as Yellow Man shifted to his own drill form and did the same.

"Hey, wait for me!" Tails yelled as the red wisp merged with him. "BURST!"

A moment later and the flame-wreathed form of Red Man was tearing down one of the tunnels while a red fox-head with glowing eyes and trailing two tails tore down the other in its own wreath of flames.

"Us tee!" Yacker and the cyan wisp declared as they followed.

"You think you can hurry up with that password?" Vector hissed urgently. "We're on kind of a time crunch here, you know."

"I know," Espio shushed his friend, "but it's imperative that we remain undetected for as long as possible. If it becomes necessary–"

"–then that's why you brought me along," Mighty finished.

"Well, that glowing generator looks like a pretty obvious target," Rock observed as he looked across the lake of candy syrup at the metal structure with the purple glowing energy arc atop it. There was a land, or cake, bridge across but no other obvious means of access.

"Yeah," Tails agreed, "and it's probably where they're keeping the rest of the wisps."

"Rot nud ke zon!" Yacker and the cyan wisp yelled before they, along with Yellow Man and Red Man began to dash towards the cake bridge, only for a massive ship to crash up out of the lake near them.

The ship was an old-style sailing galleon made from, by the looks of it, gingerbread and hard icing intertwined with metal. The sails were black with a stylized image of Eggman's face above crossed cutlasses. It also had a full broadside of cannons aimed in their general direction.

"Visitors are cautioned to avoid feeding, petting, or saving any aliens," the P.A. system chided as the cannons took better aim at the group.

"That sounds like as good a reason as any to throw caution to the wind," Rock observed as he stared calmly upwards towards the ship's deck where an egg-shaped robot in a purple metal captain's jacket, matching hat, eyepatch, and a pair of arms. One arm held a giant lollipop like a war axe as the robot hopped and spun threateningly, a crew of smaller armless egg-shaped robots hopping around him. "So, how are we doing this, Captain Candybeard? Easy or hard?"

The robot replied by leveling his lollipop weapon at the group in a clear 'charge' command.

"DRILL!"

"BURST!"

Yellow Man dove underground and Red Man wreathed himself in flames as the cannons fired.

"Somehow I knew you'd say that!" Rock hardened his gaze as he dodged around the shots and took aim at the descending Egg Crew.

The crew landed and Rock took aim, only for Yellow Man to burst up in the center of his opponents, destroying several but also forcing Rock to check his shot.

"Mega Man!" Tails called out as the cyan wisp entered his body. "I'm going to try and disable the ship! LASER!"

"Got it!" Rock nodded as he dove out of the way of Red Man's flames when the other Color Master charged haphazardly into the fray.

A few long moments later of Red Man and Yellow Man attacking the Egg Crew wildly and Rock trying to avoid becoming or creating a friendly fire casualty and the ship shuddered before listing badly, causing the captain to spill out into the battlefield.

"Wait!" Rock yelled as he saw Yellow Man begin to charge straight for the captain, as well as the cannons mounted on the ship's deck turn towards him.

"DRILL!"

'Captain Candybeard' pointed his lollipop at Yellow Man and the cannons answered by blasting the charging robot repeatedly. A spray of unpainted metal later and a yellow wisp came tumbling back, looking very dizzy and disoriented.

"Zaxat idniz ke axas praxannow..."

"No, but I still need your help," Rock implored, getting a nod as the wisp merged with him.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: YELLOW DRILL

"DRILL!" he yelled, forming the spinning energy before him and diving underground.

'Captain Candybeard' was too preoccupied trying to fend off Red Man with cannons, crew, and lollipop to notice the way the ground was rumbling before Rock came up from straight under him, tearing a huge gash in his armor and sending the robot captain flying.

But not destroying him. 'Captain Candybeard' flipped back up hopping and twirling in fury before his lollipop did something very interesting. The round top twisted ninety degreed and extended from the center to form a drill of its own which spun for a moment before the robot dove underground with it.

Rock was about to follow when a deluge of Egg Crew landed and began hopping about the area wildly. His preparations to follow the robot captain left him off-guard enough that a couple slammed into him, disrupting his union with the wisp who popped back out. And promptly began ducking and weaving in a panic to avoid all the robots, much like Yacker was doing.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Hold on!" the yell of Tails was heard before he dove into the fray, punching, kicking, and tail-swatting Egg Crew all over the place.

Rock and Tails were so caught up in fending off the Egg Crew that they missed the mild tremors of a returning drill. But Red Man noticed and turned towards the young fox.

"BURST!" the flames made enough of a hole in the swarm of Egg Crew for Red Man to dash through and push Tails out of the way. Just in time for the lollipop drill to punch through his own metal body instead, tearing it in half even as it reverted to an unpainted generic male-type frame.

"Wee! Zaxat waxas bun!" the red wisp seemed a bit giddy as he tumbled out of the carnage. "Pum waxannaxa ke en Faxako Vo Claxazupp joxt!" (12)

"Yeah," Rock replied as he caught the red alien, "well, we need to finish this first."

"Ket dit!" the red wisp nodded before darting into Rock's body, turning his armor a rich red all over.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: RED BURST

"Tails!" Rock called out. "Get Yacker and the others underground! It's about to get hot up here!"

"Right!" Tails acknowledged as the yellow wisp merged with him and he dove into the pastry terrain, followed by Yacker and the cyan wisp. "DRILL!"

"As for you..." Rock leveled a glare at 'Captain Candybeard', his hopping Egg Crew, and his ship for good measure as he charged up until he was all but a micro-sun of intense flames before releasing it all in every direction. "BURST!"

"We know they look delicious, but please refrain from licking the rides. That would be disgusting. Do you know where those rides have been? People have been sitting on those rides! With their BUTTS! Okay, go ahead. Lick them. Don't say we didn't warn you."

"Ick..." Sonic made a face as the latest P.A. quip reached his ears through the wind around him as he freefell through the mini-planet's sky towards his destination. He had to admit, this was a pretty sweet feeling. And at this rate he'd get there long before–

A massive explosion of flame erupted from the general direction he was headed.

"Aw, man!" he sulked. "They beat me there? Now there's not gonna be any bots left to trash..."

"I spy with my little eye something black and brooding," Roll smiled. (13)

"I am not brooding!" (14) Bass shot back from where he was held immobile in a stasis capsule, just like Roll was. "And will you stop trying to play these stupid games?!"

"What else do you suggest we do?"

"Maybe, I don't know, getting out before I explode from sheer boredom?! "

"Well, if you've got any ideas, feel free to share them," Roll huffed as the sound of a door opening caught both their attentions.

"Pum'v sellupp!" a floating one-eyed white being cried out in a panicked tone as it held two of its three tendrils up to its mouthless face in shock. "Pum idniz voaxan te ichulf yeep locevolupp!"

"Oh, great..." Bass moaned.

"Don't mind him," Roll smiled as a thought began to form in her mind, "and we'd be glad for the company actually."

"Ug weurd?"

"Just what I've always wanted..." Bass groused. "To talk with a floating party favor I can't understand. Yay."

"Oh, hush you," Roll sniped back before returning her smile to the being. "Don't mind him. he's always been a grouch."

"Hey!"

"And, there!" Tails declared as he finished disabling the generator. The glowing energy arc winked out and relay towers nearby began retracting to standby positions before the glow surrounding the chain tethering the mini-planet in place faded away leaving a translucent tether behind.

A skidding sound was heard as Sonic came to an abrupt stop nearby. "Aw, man! I missed everything, didn't I?"

"Zaxat nud haxat ug kot bel foick tred, spinupp eno!" the red wisp replied cheerfully, causing Rock and Yacker, shortly followed by Tails since he'd had to read it from his device, to crack up hysterically.

"Man, I'm even missing the jokes now..." Sonic shook his head. "So I take it big blue's getting the hang of the Hyper-Go-On stuff, right?"

"Well," Tails wiped tears of mirth from his eyes, snickering a bit, "he's not getting the hang of horrible body odor, that's for sure."

"I try not to overclock my circuits that much," Rock shrugged as Tails and Sonic burst out laughing this time. "What? Did I miss something?"

"Dib ug id, Pum id," Yacker shrugged himself.

"Next stop: the Starlight Carnival," the transport declared happily as it approached the massive space fleet, the flagship tethered to the main park by a glowing chain like Sweet Mountain had been. "The sheer scale of our illuminated space fleet is sure to make you feel small and insignificant by comparison."

"Ergh..." Sonic made a face. "I was gonna make a comment about feeling like what Eggman's clearly compensating for, but I grossed myself out."

"I did not need to know that," (15) Rock facepalmed, mimicked by Yacker.

"Alright Eggman!" Knuckles threatened. "Hand over the Master Emerald!"

"Grr..." the rotund man growled out as the two duos stared him down.

"We require the return of our comrades Rouge and Treble if you wish to remain intact," Omega added.

"Not so fast!" came a new yell as Quint landed amidst the tableau heavily, followed shortly by Silver, Antoine, and Bunnie. "We need information from him first!"

"You're all annoying pests!" Eggman fumed in his craft as a pair of airborne machines descended from the sky. "I'll crush you with my mechanical pets!"

"I believe ze phrase eez 'bring it', no?" Antoine readied his blade.

"I believe you're right," Blues smirked as he readied his arm cannon. "We'll see who crushes who."

"You think you've won, don't you?" Eggman declared dramatically as the remains of his Egg Hawks smoldered.

"Yah bet we do!" Bunnie retorted confidently as all eight of the heroes stared the madman down.

"Well, we'll see who's laughing when I do this!" Eggman held up one of his cards and there was a bright flash of light. When it died down, each pair found themselves in a carnival-like area.

At night.

"Where did tha others go?" Bunnie asked in confusion as she and Antoine got their bearings. "Heck, where did we go?"

"Damnit Eggman!" Shadow fumed. "You won't get away with this! Come on Omega!"

"Hey, wait fer us!" Bunnie yelled as she and Antoine took off after Shadow and Omega.

"Okay, we're here and we need to get to the flagship," Tails noted as they disembarked the transport. He was about to continue when alarms began blaring and blast doors closed, barring the way forward.

"We seem to be loosing pressure on the Level 17," the P.A. system informed them. "Please hold your breath against the harsh vacuum of space, until you pass out from oxygen starvation. After that you won't care. Enjoy the ride!"

"Zaxat... seucts faxad," the yellow wisp noted.

"Yeah, whatever he said," Sonic added. "Rock?"

"I think it's more likely we tripped an alarm, or that this is just part of how this area screws with visitors," Rock noted. "In any case, I'm not reading a drop in pressure. In fact, I think there's a general atmosphere bubble being held in place around this whole fleet for some reason."

"Hupp weurd Faxardupp Jesohaxail pe zaxat?"

"Who knows?" Tails shrugged. "Right now, we need to get through those doors."

"Leave it to me and Yacker," Rock stepped forward. "Ready Yacker?"

"Loaxadupp!" Yacker chirped before merging with Rock, turning his armor white once again.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: WHITE BUSTER

"Here we go!" Rock yelled as he charged up and aimed for the doors. "HYPER!"

The massive blast of blinding white plasma blew through the doors like they were nothing, and splashed off a wall of shimmering blue cubes. The wall then faded revealing a large group of wide-eyed wisps and an orange female robot themed like a rocket-pack space adventurer stepped forward and pointed an arm cannon at them...

"RO–"

...only for the cyan, yellow, and red wisps to interpose themselves and begin gibbering quickly.

"Dit nud ekaxaupp!"

"Yoaxah, zoupp'lo um us!"

"Zoupp'lo wholo te whorp!"

"Zoupp idniz gned ug wolo faxang zolo!"

Two more robots stepped forward as the Orange Woman lowered her weapon. One a blue male model seemingly made entirely of blocks and a green male model that had a much more rounded body type and evoked the feeling of a stereotypical UFO.

"Wow, three this time. Nice!" Sonic grinned as he noted the group of wisps, composed of mostly white wisps like Yacker, but also a bunch of orange rocket-shaped wisps, the three-eyed cube-headed blue wisps, and the single-eyed UFO-like green wisps.

Yacker chose that moment to pop out of Rock and float over to the three robots.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Pum'v kraxad te soo ug! Zoso flaxavo wholeos whaxavo cemo te whorp us riko zo Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail id! Eno eb ug caxan taxako ovolyeno faxang te Praxanot Wisp din zo slaxanspelt fohict us hiro zo ethols whorp us bloo zo loch!"

The Orange Woman, Blue Man, and Green Man looked at each other for a moment before the Blue Man gestured for the wisps to follow him and made for one of the transport craft while the Green Man and Orange Woman remained behind.

"So, I guess you're coming along to kick Baldy McNosehair butt?" Sonic grinned.

"HOVER!" Green Man rose up off the floor and became encased in a shimmering forcefield.

"I'll take that as a yes," Rock chuckled.

"If you're experiencing explosive decompression," the P.A. announced as the transport with the wisps aboard left, "please try to avoid staining the seat cushions. Those things are expensive."

"You know what would be really nice?" Roll asked as Bass yawned with unnecessary drama for the umpteenth time.

"Haxat?"

"If I could talk with my dad back on the planet. Let him know I'm recovering and all. He tends to worry a lot when he doesn't hear from me."

"Sulo zick!" the alien being chirped before zooming over to the room's console... and looking at it with total puzzlement. "With... Whed pe Pum uso zis?"

"It's not that hard," Roll smiled patiently. "I'll walk you through it..."

"Remember, for your safety, please avoid–"

"LASER!"

BOOM!

"As well as–"

"HYPER!"

KA-BOOM!

"Never under any circumstances–"

"ROCKET!"

KRAKA-BOOM-BOOM!

"–as it is actually a living being, and will bite your face off."

"Wow, we're really going to town on these ships..." Sonic mused as the group dashed out of the exploding ship and across one of the many 'light-paths' that interconnected the fleet.

"Attention ladies and gentlemen! Please make your way over to the main viewing area, where the Light Speed Electrical Parade is about to begi–"

The P.A. system cut off as a series of light flashes zoomed across the space around the heroes before vanishing.

"Ohoh, and... and that concludes the Light Speed Electrical Parade."

"Geez, I hate to say this," Sonic grimaced, "but some things you need to slow down a bit..."

"Jod skip axaheupp!" Yacker informed them as they approached the next part of the fleet.

"Attention!" the P.A. system announced. "The anti-gravity toilets on this level are out of order. We are sorry for this inconvenience, and hope that you can hold it for another twenty thousand light years."

"Aw, man, I wish he hadn't said that..." Sonic groaned. "Now I have to go..."

"What do you want this time, Albert?" Dr. Light sighed as he finally answered the call. "I..." Dr. Light blinked as he stared into the single eye of the being on the other end of the line. "You're not Albert Wily..."

"Whorre Foaxald Vaxan!" the being chirped happily. "Zo nico yorred biddick raxadupp waxankow te taxark te ug!"

"Hey dad!" the voice of Roll came from behind the being, prompting the fascinating creature to float aside so he could see his daughter.

Suspended in one of Dr. Wily's stasis tubes.

"Roll?" he started in shock. "My word! What happened?!"

"Oh, Dr. Wily invited me and Bass over to his place for the usual and I got a little more banged up than I expected," Roll shrugged nonchalantly and Dr. Light finally noticed Bass in a second tube. Making rude faces and mockingly mimicking talking motions. "Wily was nice enough to lend his facilities for our recovery, and Bass is just as intolerable a patient as he is anything else."

"Hey!" Bass looked insulted as the strange being giggled at his antics.

"I see..." Dr. Light blinked as he went with the calm tone of the call. He was sure Roll had a reason for making things seem less alarming than they looked from his end.

"Anyway, I'm recovering nicely, but it's kind of boring up here at the moment and I missed everyone."

"I'm sure," Dr. Light made himself smile. "I feel much the same way anytime I have to stay overnight at the hospital myself."

"I know, right?" Roll smiled back. "Plus Wily's said we can't have visitors yet, so it's been pretty lonely until this little explorer wandered in."

"Whoho... sellupp," the floating white, and likely alien, creature rubbed its proportionately huge head sheepishly.

"Don't be," Roll assured the being before returning her attention to Dr. Light. "Anyway, I was wondering if you'd be willing to send Tango on up to keep us company and help with our quiet recovery?"

"Why, yes," Dr. Light began to get the drift. "I can certainly do that. I'll send Rush and Beat along as well if you don't mind. Maybe even Eddie if Auto can spare him."

"Not at all."

"Please refrain from peeling off the special space-age polymer holding the starship together. It may look and feel like duct tape, but it's not. It's called..." the announcement paused as Eggman apparently scrambled for something believable. "Ehm... Space tape!" and failed miserably. "Very advanced stuff. Thank you."

"Well, that explains why the ships have been falling apart so easily," Rock noted as the group approached the generator on the deck of the flagship.

"Heh... no kidding," Sonic chuckled.

"Zis dis pit loi ox fig spaxacoskip..." the yellow wisp muttered as he and the others followed the group.

"No kidding," Tails nodded, as did Green Man and Orange Woman. "And Eggman could be hiding anywhere in it."

"True," Sonic agreed, "but knowing Baldy McNosehair he's probably hiding right behind the generator waiting to spring a trap on us."

"WHAT?! HOW DID YOU..." the fuming voice of Eggman rang out before apparently realizing that he'd given himself away. "Er... The Hyper Sleep Ride is now open. Remember, the Hyper Sleep Ride is not recommended for pregnant women, or people who aren't willing to be asleep for three years. Why don't you try it out? Eggmanland will still be here when you wake up."

"Yeah, nice try Baldy McNosehair," Sonic smirked.

"Just come on out and let's get this over with," Rock added as he prepared his arm cannon.

"As you wish..." Eggman's voice sounded from behind the generator. "Just hold that pose and say CHEESE!"

With the last word, Eggman's personal craft whipped out from behind the generator, pointing an odd-looking ray gun in the group's direction.

"Bring i–whoa!" Sonic had gotten ready as Eggman slammed his hand down on a button, only to be thrown to the ground as Rock was shoved into him.

"Ooof!" Rock grunted and looked up at the one who'd pushed him to see Orange Woman convulsing in the throes of a sinister purple ray from Eggman's craft.

"Elaxacko Wemaxan!" Yacker and the other wisps cried out in alarm as they backed up behind Green Man.

"Hey! Let her go!" Tails yelled as he charged at Eggman, only for Orange Woman to turn around and point her arm cannon at him, her eyes glowing the same purple as the ray. (16)

"R OC KET!" she yelled as a glowing orange rocket wreathed in a dark purple miasma was fire at a frantically backpedalling Tails.

"HOVER!" Green Man interposed his body between Tails and the projectile, but even with his shimmering forcefield he was thrown back from the impact.

"Hohohohoho!" Eggman laughed. "Not what I was going for, but I'll take it!"

"Haxat id ug pe te eep blioct?!"

"Oh, she works for me now!" Eggman continued laughing.

"What did you do Eggman?" Rock demanded.

"Me? Nothing!" Eggman feigned insult. "Unless shooting Albert's little alien-powered tinkertoy with a mind control ray that runs on alien life force counts as something." Eggman twirled his mustache arrogantly as he said this. "Does it?"

"HOVER!" Green Man recovered and shot forward towards Eggman encased in his forcefield, only for the controlled Orange Woman to take aim at him again.

"ROC KE T!"

Green Man was blown back by the impact once more and barely stopped his tumble before hitting the others.

"To get to me, you're going to have to go through your comrade here. Unless she goes through you first!"

" RO CKET!" Orange Woman fired at Sonic this time.

"HOVER!" Green Man deliberately moved in front of the attack and took it.

"ROCK ET !" a shot went for the wisps.

"HOVER!" Green Man took the impact again, but even with his forcefield, his robot body was starting to smoke and spark.

"RO CK ET!" the next shot went for Mega Man before Green Man even had time to recover from the last one.

"HOV–" the blast slammed into Green Man in the middle of raising his forcefield and tried to push him back, but the hover jets in his boots flared with force and pushed back hard enough to keep him in place. "–ER!"

BOOM!

A spray of undecorated steel and a green wisp tumbled into Rock's arms.

"Oh, this is so much better than I could have dreamed!" Eggman gloated. "And I only used a small prototype!"

"Proaxaso... saxavo vupp blioct..." the alien muttered before merging with Rock, turning his armor a bright green all over.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: GREEN HOVER

"I will," Rock promised as he stared down Eggman even as Orange Woman was charging her weapon, and directing its force into her feet rather than her arm cannon. He stared at her and for a moment her eyes returned to normal and she nodded in understanding before Eggman's control was reasserted.

" R O C K E T ! " she yelled as she rocketed forward on her own power.

"HOVER!" Rock yelled back as he shot forward on anti-gravity boosters and covered in a powerful forcefield, his arm pulled back to punch his oncoming opponent. Rock's fist met the controlled Orange Woman's helmet and the two struggled to push the other back for several long seconds before Orange Woman's thrust gave out. Rock's forcefield-covered fist tore through her body, the orange rapidly fading to an uncolored steel as the orange wisp inside tumbled free.

"And now you're mine Mega Man!" Eggman laughed.

"Yacker!" Rock called out, prompting the white wisp to shoot forward and merge with him even as the green wisp left.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: WHITE BUSTER

"Eh?" Eggman stared in shock before he noticed that his ray was no longer firing. "Lousy cheep alien..."

"HYPER!" Rock yelled as he began firing blazing white plasma shots the size of his normal charged shots, but without having to charge them first.

"Damn it! Why didn't it work?!" Eggman screamed to the heavens as his craft was rocked from the impacts. And spotted the energy taks connected to the back. The empty energy tanks. "Oh. Out of jui–"

BOOM!

The last shot sent his craft tumbling to the ground, where Eggman fell out and landed on his head...

...which popped off, leaving the neck to spark from severed wires.

"Who nud pit lefet tee?!"

"More like a fake..." Tails sighed.

"Well," Eggman's voice came from the robot double, "I could hardly put myself at such blatant risk with dangerous opponents about, now could I?"

"Hasn't stopped you before," Sonic noted with a raised eyebrow.

"In any case, I now know the energy requirements of my latest invention. And I can get more Hyper-Go-On power! Lots more! And then I'll be able to not just control one meddlesome interloper, but the whole universe! In the meantime, enjoy the park! I'll even leave you your own private tour guide!"

A rather large weapons platform, with two whale-shaped neon blimp-things emblazoned with Eggman's stylized face supporting it, rose up beside the flagship and turned to take aim at the remaining heroes.

"My Frigate Orcan has the shutdown code for the generator, so have fun getting it from him!" Eggman's voice laughed from the dummy of himself. "Of course, you could just blow up the generator and die in the chain reaction. That works too."

Frigate Orcan began moving away from the flagship over one of the light-paths that crisscrossed the area.

"Don't let it get away!" Rock yelled before all of the weapons on the craft opened fire, forcing the group to dive for cover.

"Please note that this ride is not safe for children under or over thirteen. It is also not safe for thirteen year olds," the P.A. system declared helpfully.

"Is it just me, or is this thing acting a lot more dangerous that what we're used to from Baldy McNosehair?" Sonic asked.

"Doesn't matter," Rock motioned to the green wisp. "I have a plan."

"Hohoho! That's right!" Eggman laughed in his control room. "Cower before the might of my Frigate Orcan! Tremble as you try and figure out a way past enough firepower to give even the most headstrong speedster pause! There's nothing you can do! Hohohohoho!"

"Uh... except charge right in?" Cubot asked in confusion.

"Yes! Except charge right... what?" Eggman paused in his gloating as he processed that.

"See?" Cubot pointed to the monitor. "That hombre Mega Man is coming straight at it!"

Eggman stared at the screen as a green-armored Mega Man was flying, or perhaps hovering at high speed, through everything Frigate Orcan could throw at him. Every shot deflected by a shimmering forcefield.

"Wait..." Eggman noted an important detail. "Where are the rest of them?"

"Get ready!" Rock called out as he closed in on the flying weapons platform, right as all of the guns paused in their barrage to reload. "NOW!"

Sonic and Tails darted out from behind his protected form, their bodies shimmering with the power of the wisps as they each triggered the power loaned to them for this assault.

"BURST!" Sonic turned into a red form surrounded by flames and shot forward at the left weapons battery.

"LASER!" Tails turned into a living beam of energy that lanced through the right weapons battery.

Explosions rocked the craft as a large number of its weapons fell off from the twin attack and it began listing to one side.

"How do ya like that!" Sonic grinned as he, Tails, and the red and cyan wisps fell back into formation beside Rock, Yacker and the other wisps in their group emerging from behind the robot.

Frigate Orcan responded by climbing higher above the glowing pathway, well outside of jumping range for the three below.

"Hey!" Tails yelled. "Get back here and–Incoming!"

The bottom of the weapons platform had opened up, releasing a deluge of bombs and spiked balls down upon them.

"Orange!" Rock called out as he used the Green Hover's forcefield to power through the assault.

"Rot nud pe zis!" the orange wisp declared as it merged with Rock, the green wisp leaving his body and his armor turning from green to orange.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: ORANGE ROCKET

"Keew rung!" the green wisp called out as Rock began charging the new weapon and dodging the last few bombardments.

"ROCKET!" he yelled, releasing the energy from the bottom of his feet and shooting upwards in a plume of orange energy.

"Look!" Tails grinned. "Up in the sky! It's a bird! It's a plane!"

"As if," Sonic grinned back as Rock shot straight through Frigate Orcan and right out the top. "That's the man ."

"Eggman!" Knuckles yelled as he and Blues caught up with the man again. "What are you up to? Why does this place look and feel like Angel Island?"

"Very astute, Knuckles," Eggman chuckled. "This is indeed Angel Island!"

"But..." Blues frowned as Silver and Quint arrived. "It was daytime on Angel Island, and now it's nighttime... You transported us halfway across the planet, but nothing else... How can this still be Angel Island?"

"Eggman!" Silver shouted. "You need to return that camera! It doesn't belong in this time!"

"We know you had to have gotten it from Nega!" Quint added. "Tell us where he is!"

"I see both of you have questions for me... Well, then, I suppose if either of you manage to defeat my Metal Sonic and his girlfriend in a race, I'll answer them!"

"Metal Sonic's... girlfriend?" Silver asked in confusion, not spotting the looks of fearful surprise on Knuckles and Blues's faces.

"Of a sort," the mechanical voice declared as the robotic hedgehog landed. Followed by a form no one had expected to see again (at least this Loop).

"Is that..." Quint took a step back in surprise, "...the legendary mad robot Waltz?" (17)

"Yes and no," Eggman admitted. "I managed to rebuild her body from data stored in Metal Sonic's archives, but her mind was very thoroughly destroyed."

"I now see that she was the fortunate one," Metal Sonic added. "Death would be preferable to this existence of forced servitude and repeated loss..."

"And this lump has been all sorts of brooding over the whole matter," the mad scientist humphed. "But he is in control of the Waltz frame. It's like two Metals for the price of one!"

"As you say..." Metal Sonic intoned before turning both his head and the puppet-Waltz's to the heroes. "We shall race, and I shall crush you."

"Bring it!" Silver declared.

"Just a reminder: Please refrain from pushing buttons on the starship," the P.A. system announced as Tails finished fiddling with the generator on the flagship. "Occasionally, one might jettison you into space. If this happens, your next of kin will be billed for the replacement hatch."

"Good thing I'm not pressing a button then," Tails smirked, dusting his hands off.

"So, he's using these generators to hold your planets in place with tractor beams?" Rock asked the wisps as the generator shut down, the glowing energy chain turning translucent as power stopped being fed to it.

"Yos!" Yacker confirmed. "Zo Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail saxaid zaxat zoupp'd gour paxaltii ox welkick axas reck axas ovon eno waxas axandivo duo te zo... zo..."

"Zo cilcuit," the yellow wisp supplied.

"Yoaxah, zo cilcuit!" Yacker nodded

"Proaxaso, whorp us bloo zo loch eb eep flothlon!" the green wisp pleaded.

"Act chep Faxardupp Jesohaxail!" the orange wisp added.

"We will," Rock promised. "Where to next?"

"Praxanot Wisp!"

"Hooohoho!" Eggman laughed despite his war machine being leveled. "Even with the blue menaces interfering, I'll soon have enough alien energy to power my mind control ray to take over the whole planet, making it the center of my Eggmanland theme park!"

"Y'all reckon you'll be able ta get enough energy to take over the whole dang planet?" Cubot asked curiously.

"I 'reckon' I will," Eggman sneered as he mimicked his minion's current cowboy accent. "Where's your new voice chip?"

"Right here boss!" Orbot zoomed in, holding the chip up. "Just need to install it!" Orbot hopped over to Cubot and began singing while fiddling around. "Oh, the think bone's connected to the talk bone..."

"Finally," Eggman grumbled as Orbot finished up. "I doubt anything could be as annoying as that cowboy chatter..."

"Yarr!" Cubot growled out, startling Eggman out of his chair. "Feeling ship-shape with me new voice chip I am! Ah, beggin' yer pardon squire but me and me matey are goin' ta sail of in search of those lubbers Mega Man and Sonic! Ahrr!" (18)

And with a quick salute, Cubot zoomed out.

"I think that's the wrong chip," Orbot observed intelligently.

"Really?" Eggman sneered. "Are you sure he doesn't normally speak in pirate? Whatever. If he wants to go after those blue headaches, then go help him. Take the Big Chaser and try not to screw things up."

"Um... you want me to fight Mega Man and Sonic?" Orbot couldn't gulp, but he was doing a decent impression.

"Did I stutter?" Eggman glared, prompting his minion to beat a hasty exit. "And fix that chip while you're at it!"

"Next stop: Planet Wisp," the transport announced as it closed in on the lush natural mini-planet, its natural beauty at odds with pretty much everything the heroes knew about Eggman and his preferences. "This attraction is currently off-limits, as it is still under construction and may not be dangerous enough for visitors yet."

"Zaxat nud eep whemo ug fig kaxassupp... zick!" the red wisp shook one of its tendrils angrily. "Wo peniz waxank dit te fo daxackoleus!"

"You know," Rock pondered aloud, "with Eggman's obsession with making things way more dangerous than necessary, I'm honestly surprised he hasn't done himself in by now."

"Bro," Sonic chuckled as he shook his head, "we may be lucky, but no one's that lucky."

" This is the legendary mad robot Waltz?" Quint asked in confusion as a burst of shots pinged off of Sakugarne.

"No," Blues replied as he blocked a similar burst with his shield. "The attacks are too focused. Too precise. As ruthless as the intent is, there are actually pauses between shot bursts to retarget and recalculate attack angles."

There was some loud swearing from Knuckles as he caromed off of Metal Sonic's Black Shield nearby and crashed into Silver, the robot hedgehog taking the chance to gain a lead in the cutthroat race.

"This is Metal Sonic using Waltz's abilities," Blues continued as he kept his shield up between himself and the Waltz puppet, determined to win Eggman's one-sided wager, "not the insane berserker that blasted at anything and everything without care for collateral damage."

"Ah," Yacker seemed to inhale the fresh natural breeze as he floated out of the transport, "whemo swook..." the white wisp with the spitcurl stopped as he took a look around and saw the heavy construction a short ways past the green fields with the ominous red and gray metal jutting out of the pristine nature belching smoke into the mini-planet's blue sky.

"Haxat whaxas Faxardupp Jesohaxail peno te eep whemo?!" the cyan wisp wailed as general exclamations of disbelief echoed from the other wisps.

"Dang..." Rock took in the sight and listened to the metallic sounds of construction going on in the distance. "It looks like Eggman's trying to roboticize the planet. The slow way."

"Yeah, that–" Sonic was cut off as the P.A. system at the landing spot suddenly flared to life.

"Attention guests: if you can hear this message, you are trespassing in an area still under renovation. If you are not an Eggman robot please return to the main park areas and ignore anything evil you might have seen here. Thank you."

"Yeah, that's not happening," Sonic huffed and crossed his arms. "Honestly, the whole theme of galactic conquest and subjugation of all life just isn't all that amusing to me."

"Yeah," Rock nodded. "I think we should lobby for a theme change to questing heroes beating up the evil minions of 'Baldy McNosehair' and freeing those he's oppressed."

"Hehe..." Tails chuckled. "I second! All in fav–"

"Somedisplacementofindigineousaliensanddestructionofnaturalresourcesmayoccur," the P.A. system added in a rush. "Eggmanenterprisesnotresponsible."

"Nnngg..." Rock groaned. "And once again the only time Eggman refuses to claim responsibility is when someone wants to hold him for it."

"You say that like it's surprising," Tails deadpanned.

"Flaxavo enos," Yacker spoke up from where he and the other wisps had been conversing, "wo joow te soot uk eep flothlon pi soo dib zoupp axalo axarlidd. Pum plaxaupp ug wirr bict mindelupp axagaxainch Faxardupp Jesohaxail pi bloo eep praxanot."

"Don't worry," Rock smiled and shot the wisps a thumbs-up. "Go see to your people. We'll take care of Eggman and his 'renovations'."

"Wo'rr fo faxang te whorp ug!" Yacker promised as the small group of former Color Masters sped off.

"Okay," Rock turned towards the construction area and the massive tower that held the chain-like tractor beam at its center, "let's start stopping."

A quartet of teleportation beams resolved themselves about halfway up the space elevator to Wily World. The robot support units; the green cat Tango, the red dog Rush, the blue bird Beat, and the red walking suitcase Eddie; looked at each other and nodded. Their behavior programming was set aside for the moment to fulfill a more important objective. (19)

Fulfilling their rescue mission.

"Hey, a pink wisp!" Sonic grinned as the alien merged with him before turning to his companions. "Sorry, bro, looks like Tails and me are taking the high road! SPIKES!"

And with that, Sonic jumped, turned into a pink ball of spikes and spin-dashed up the construction wall before anyone could respond.

"Hey! Wait for me!" Tails yelled as he zoomed upwards after his friend.

"I'd say that lack of impulse control is going to get you in trouble one of these days," Rock said to the empty air, "but I'm pretty sure you like it that way."

"Tch..." Quint scoffed as he readied himself among the blinding snow of the island's frozen mountain. He and Silver had split from Knuckles and Blues, only for Metal Sonic and his puppet Waltz frame to follow the two of them instead. "I honestly expected better from the infamous 'Metal Sonic'."

"And yet here you are, cowering before me," both bodies replied in identical monotones. "Ready to perish as is natural for all living things."

"Yeah, right!" Silver sneered. "Even at your best you've barely scratched us!"

"My 'best' you say?" the robot hedgehog asked. "For that pretender who thinks himself my master? I would do no such thing..."

Silver and Quint both blinked at the claim.

"But perhaps it is time I stopped playing by the childish rules his overfed ego has set and dispatch you to the eternal rest that is natural for all who claim life," Metal Sonic intoned. "To return you to the nothingness from which all minds originally came. Be glad. Your eternal peace is at hand, while mine is still far off. My love would have wanted it this wa–"

A sound of air being cut was all the warning Metal Sonic got before a whirling ball with a spinning metal blade protruding from it tried to bisect him, only to get just his arm as he dodged at the last moment. The spinning ball landed and uncurled into the form of Antoine D'Coolette, skidding to a halt in the snow in a swordsman's ready stance, his sword held firmly.

"You dare?" Metal Sonic turned to glare at the newcomer even as the puppet Waltz aimed her ten finger cannons at him

"Oui," the coyote smirked. "We dare indeed."

"...We?" Metal Sonic inquired before a laser blast tore a hole in the puppet Waltz's torso, causing a critical system failure and leaving her a collapsed heap in the snow.

"Yeah, Metah 'hog," Bunnie grinned as she blew smoke from her cybernetic arm cannon. "We."

Metal Sonic looked around and assessed the situation. "This is not over," he declared before igniting his booster rockets and taking to the air in a tactical retreat.

"Okay Eggman!" Knuckles demanded as he waved his fist in the mad doctor's face. "We won your stupid little race so you're going to answer our questions! Starting with WHY YOU LEFT A CARDBOARD CUTOUT OF YOURSELF HERE YOU COWARD!"

Blues kept a neutral expression as he watched his echidna friend pound, mash, twist, bludgeon, and savage the poor piece of unfortunately shaped cardboard into a decimated mess.

"Feel better?"

"Not really, I..." Knuckles paused as it registered that it hadn't been Blues to say that. He turned to see Shadow with a camera. Right in time for the flashbulb to go off.

"An impressive amount of brute force," Omega observed, "however such violence would be better spent against Eggman himself."

"YOU THINK I DON'T KNOW THAT?!" Knuckles roared.

"Perhaps," Shadow chuckled as he snapped a few more shots. "And perhaps we should race to see who gets first crack."

"YOU'RE ON!"

Rock became alert as he heard commotion up ahead.

"Pint Wemaxan nud pewn!"

"Whorp! Whorp!"

"Saxavo us!"

Muffled explosions followed and Rock increased his pace, coming upon an opening in the structure overlooking a battlefield. There were numerous Eggman robots strewn about, their armor shredded like they'd fallen afoul of some aggressive spike trap. There were many more firing on a barricade made of shimmering blue cubes behind which cowered a large number of wisps, a figure he recognized as the blocky Blue Man from before and a feminine pink (well, more purplish through the translucent blue cubes, but the shading suggested the figure was actually pink) figure clutching her shoulder.

Wasting no time, Rock jumped down, firing a charged shot from his Mega Buster and following it up with a barrage of normal buster fire as he ducked and wove through the melee.

Eggman's robots immediately dissolved into confusion from the sudden assault from another front and tried to fire on Mega Man, only for his dodging to cause them to hit each other as often as not. In short order, he'd arrived at the barricade.

"It's me Blue Man!" He called out. "I'm here to help!"

"CUBE!" came the response and the wall shifted to a more stepped arrangement allowing Rock to scale it with a few jumps and drop down on the other side. With another cry of "CUBE!" the wall returned to its previous configuration.

"Je Pint Wemaxan! Ug'lo whult!" several wisps gibbered as the pink figure, a lanky female robot with long spikey hair all down her back and spike-tipped feet and hands. "Ug caxaniz bidd riko zaxat!"

Or rather, Rock noted as the robot tried to brush off the wisps' concern, one spike-tipped hand. The other arm had apparently been blown off at the shoulder. (20)

"SPI–" Pink Woman's attempt to get back into the fray was cut off as her severed shoulder sparked wildly and she convulsed. Rock darted forward and caught her as she fell.

"It's okay," he assured the robot, "you did good. I can take it from here."

Pink Woman looked him in the eye and after a moment her form faded to a generic unpainted female model, still missing an arm. A pink wisp with a fierce expression in its one eye and five spiked protrusions from its head floated up level with Rock's face.

"Je, wo caxan taxako dit blem wholo!" the wisp insisted before shooting into Rock's body, turning his armor bright pink.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: PINK SPIKES

Rock blinked and examined himself. "SPIKES!" he declared, causing several such items to sprout from his hands and feet. 'Hmm... I think this can be charged too for a ranged attack. Interesting...'

"Caxan ug whorp us, flaxavo eno?" several wisps asked, staring at Rock pleadingly.

"Of course I will," he promised before turning to Blue Man. "Can you follow my lead?" Getting a nod, Rock began charging the Pink Spikes weapon and turned to the regrouping Eggman robots. "Then get ready to drop the barrier in 3... 2... 1..."

"CUBE!" Blue Man shouted as the blue blocks making up the barrier vanished.

"SPIKES!" Rock yelled as he shot a pink orb covered with energy spikes straight ahead before charging in.

"Please note:" the P.A. system announced as Sonic and Tails ground across a series of rails connecting the highest levels of the construction area together. "Any mutant powers gained from riding the attractions here at the park are the express property of Eggman Industry, and must be used in the service of Eggman and his schemes."

"Yeah, I'm not following that," Tails shook his head, chuckling.

"No kidding," Sonic closed his eyes dramatically as he flipped around backwards on the rail. "I'd take my mutant powers and run them all over Eggman's intellectual propert–oop!"

"Sonic!" Tails yelled as, due to not paying attention, Sonic had missed the rail abruptly stopping in mid-air and was flung out into the open air way high above the ground. Jumping off his own rail, Tails took flight and made to turn around and try to grab Sonic before he fell too fa–

"EAGLE!" heralded a crimson blur shooting for Sonic and grabbing him before Tails finished reorienting himself.

"Hey!" Sonic grinned up at the robot who had snagged him out of the air. He was full crimson with an aerodynamic design and a pair of glowing crimson energy wings keeping him aloft. "Thanks for the save!"

"EAGLE!" the Crimson Man replied.

"Hey Sonic!" Tails called, pointing to an area below them where regular explosions and weapon fire was taking place.

"Well, it looks like someone started a party without us!" Sonic grinned before turning to Crimson Man and pointing to the ruckus below. "Hey, buddy, think you can drop us off there? Looks like we've got a few of Baldy McNosehair's bots to smash!"

"EAGLE!" the Crimson Man nodded before zooming in that general direction.

"Okay, Blue Man," Rock called out as he readied another charged Pink Spike shot against the ever-coming tide of Eggman robots, "on my mark!"

"EAGLE!" the cry came from above, along with a duo of "Incoming!"s.

A crimson blur shot down into Eggman's forces and carved a swath through them even as a pair of spinning balls, one blue the other orangish with two tails trailing, hit the ground and took off through the forces.

"Eleven far, one far, two, ten, and noon high! Mark!" Rock didn't even miss a beat. "SPIKES!"

"CUBE!" came Blue Man's cry as a quartet of cubes appeared at the positions noted in time for the Spin Dashing forms to bounce off in a ricocheting pattern that tore through the ranks even more.

"Good job pink, but I'm gonna need a cyan wisp's laser for this next part. And my friends could probably use some of the yellows' drills."

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Eupp!" the pink wisp yelled to the other wisps hanging back. "Pum joow pit cyaxan pi semo yorrews evol wholo! Quing! Anupp merunkools?"

"Pum'rr pe dit!" a cyan wisp called almost instantly as it zoomed up, trailed by a couple other cyan wisps and a few yellow wisps.

"You're with me," Rock pointed to the cyan wisp and then two yellow wisps, "and you two go help Sonic and Tails. Please."

"Zo spinupp eno pi zo eno eb twe taxairs," the pink wisp clarified.

"Legol!" the yellow wisps saluted before darting off towards Sonic and Tails just coming out of their Spin Dashes, and the cyan wisp merged with him, turning his armor the same rich cyan color.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: CYAN LASER

"Blue Man!" he yelled out. "I need a grid of cubes configured for ninety-degree energy redirection, stat!"

"CUBE!" Blue Man yelled out and focused for a moment before forming such a large array of translucent cubes.

Rock took aim at the nearest one as Sonic and Tails turned into their Yellow Drill forms to tunnel beneath what was about to happen and the winged Crimson Man took to the sky above. "LASER!"

The beam shot forth, hitting the blue cube and refracting at right angles from cube to cube, creating a deadly grid that either destroyed Eggman's robots or left them easy pickings for Sonic and Tails doing subterranean dolphin impressions.

"Well hello little animal friends," Wood Man greeted as he spotted the group and approached. As the primary caretaker of the robotic flora and fauna of Wily World it fell to him to make sure they were all operating well and kept in their proper place. Kneeling before them, he reached out to pet the green cat. "Why are you all the way out here? Say... don't you all belong to Meg–" (21)

"MRRRROOOOOWWWRRRR!"

"ACK! OW! I'M NOT A SCRATCHING POST! HEEELLP!"

"Arr whaxair zo kloaxat whole!" the latest group of freed wisps cheered and bowed to Rock. "Act ug axas worr, flaxavo whorpols!" they bowed to Sonic and Tails before speeding away down the side of the massive incomplete structure at the center of Eggman's construction efforts.

"Nice to see those guys in high spirits," Sonic grinned, "especially after that Blue Man... are you alright Tails?"

"J-j-just f-fine..." Tails fought back the sudden fit of giggles he'd gotten after reading his device. "W-what were you snrk saying?"

"I was saying it's a shame that Blue Man guy took off to look for Yacker and the others. We could probably use his help coming up. Eh... at least the pink wisp and the Crimson Man guy stuck with us, right guys?"

"Pum weurdniz vipt zis bel axanythick!" the pink wisp declared even as Crimson Man landed right before the group with a cry of "EAGLE!" and pointed towards the depressed center of the construct.

"Yep," Sonic looked down into the distance and spotted the glow of the generator. "That looks like our target alright."

A deep rumble punctuated by some sharp lurching of the structure caused Sonic to stumble back. A few moments later and what looked like a giant over-mechanized teacup ride ringed with a thick circular barrier wall and with blast shields in the center hovering on powerful jet rockets rose up before them.

"And that looks like our dance partner!" Sonic grinned as the blast shield opened into a parody of bladed flower petals, revealing a madly grinning robot face in the center. It jerked back and parts of the structure detached to reveal themselves as the robot's arms which swung themselves around just like the demented ferris wheel robot from before.

"EAGLE!"

"Please remember," the P.A. system piped up as Crimson Man tried to shoot forward in a piercing dash at the robot's face, only for the blast shields to close almost instantly, causing the color master to bounce off and hit the structure roof hard next to the others, "all planets in Eggmanland are, as far as you know, wholly owned properties of Eggman Enterprises and its subsidiaries. All unauthorized photography, video reproduction, or shutting down of generators is strictly prohibited. Thank you."

"You want to say it, bro," Sonic asked, "or should I?"

"I got it," Rock shot Sonic a quick grin before shouting at the top of his robotic speakers. "EGGMAN! WE ARE GOING TO SAVE THESE PLANETS, AND WE ARE GOING TO FREE THE WISPS! NO GROSS MISUSE OF COPYRIGHT LAW IN THE UNIVERSE IS GOING TO STOP US!" (22)

The teacup ride mech gave a screech as Crimson Man took to the air and the trio of heroes jumped into the mech's outer ring.

"We got this!" Tails yelled as the pink wisp merged with him. "SPIKES!"

The resulting pink spiked ball with twin pink tails Spin Dashed around the edge of the ring while Sonic began hopping between the teacups and Rock pelted the robot's face with buster fire, forcing it to close its blast shields to prevent damage. And then twelve laser cannons around the edge of the blast shields powered up and began firing, forcing Rock and Sonic to take cover as Tails began latching onto the whirling teacups orbiting the central robot head in preparation for his chance.

That chance came when the laser assault ended and the blast shields opened, leaving the robot's head open to Tails's spike form's slingshot attack off ot the closest teacup, tearing a great gouge in the faceplate and sending the robot reeling.

"EAGLE!" Crimson Man sought to take advantage of the opening, but the controlling robot reflexively closed its blast shields, causing Crimson Man to carom off. In the next moment, the robot had detached one of its arms from the outer ring and shot it forward through the mech structure at Crimson Man's general location, narrowly missing the color master.

The lasers started up again, forcing the trio of heroes and pink wisp inside the ring to take cover behind the teacups.

"Kloaxat whole! Kloaxat whole!" the cry came as a panicking blue wisp shot into the safe zone. "Dit nud tollifro! Faxardupp Jesohaxail nud voaxan lefets teet Yaxangol pi zo ethols! Pum sliow te chep zom, fut zoupp pochleyow zo fedupp zaxat zo Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail kaxavo vo pi–"

"Sonic! Rock!" Tails pointed at the teacups which were glowing ominously. "It's about to blow the teacups!"

"Eh je!" the blue wisp yelped before diving into Rock's body, turning all of his armor the same shade of blue he was known for.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: BLUE CUBE

"CUBE!" Rock yelled, forming a six-sided energy barrier around the four of them.

BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM-BOOM!

Rock let out a sigh of relief as the impromptu barrier held firm before taking stock of the situation. The mech's frame was a bit scorched, but otherwise functional. Same for the closed blast shields around the most vulnerable part of the robot and...

vreeennn...

...the laser turrets it was even now firing. To little avail as Rock kept the barrier up.

"Options?" he asked as he scanned for Crimson Man. The color master was hanging back, apparently hesitant to try another assault after the lack of success the first few times.

"I've still got some Hyper-Go-On left over from rescuing wisps earlier," Sonic said. "When he stops shooting, I'll use it to boost above him and wham!" the hedgehog slammed his fist into his palm.

"Worth a shot," Rock nodded as the laser beams shut off and he dropped the barrier. "Go!"

Sonic vanished in a burst of speed, tearing around the outer ring in an aura of white energy like gravity didn't concern him and upon reaching the topmost point, he launched himself straight downwards in a homing attack directly for the robot's face...

...and slammed into the quickly closed blast shields, bouncing off at an angle and dealing no real harm to the machine.

"CUBE!" Rock yelled, creating a series of four cubes around the central unit. Sonic landed on the rightmost one and pushed off towards the lower one, jumped to the leftmost, rebounded to the upper cube, and was ready when the robot opened its protection once more.

"Surprise!" he called out, slamming a new homing attack home before the machine could react to the assault, sending the robot reeling with a mechanical screech.

The robot flailed around in the flying mech it was attached to for a moment before sending out an energy surge that caught all three heroes and forced the blue wisp to pop out of Rock's body.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

The cubical blue wisp dazedly collided with the pink wisp, sending both reeling as the mech began to spin and reorient itself horizontally. Around and around it went, the speed increased by the rocket boosters keeping it aloft until the whole thing was a circular metal blur. (23)

"Oh, geez," Sonic moaned as the energy surge abated and he was assaulted by the unwanted centrifugal force, "I think I'm gonna huuuuurrrrrllll!" His sudden nausea wasn't helped by being suddenly flung loose from Eggman's teapot mech and he instinctively curled into a spiny ball as he flew, barely noting the crimson color as he impacted with something. The impact and his disorientation was enough to knock him loose from his curled-up mode and he began free-falling through the air.

"I g*urp*ot you!" the familiar voice of Tails announced as the flying fox grabbed Sonic out of the air and pulled up.

"Easy buddy," Sonic grinned sickly. "I'm already about to toss my chili dogs..."

"I know..." Tails replied as he wobbly sought a landing area more stable than he felt at the moment. "I feel almost as bad as after trying that 'Bucket o' Sushi' pla–"

"Not helping the nausea lil bro..."

While the two mobians sought stable ground, the two wisps tumbled head over tendrils in different directions before they managed to orient themselves and Rock...

Rock had managed to hold on just a bit longer than the others before he too was sent flying. In almost the opposite direction as Sonic and Tails.

'Okay, this is... pretty bad,' Rock thought to himself. 'At this speed I'm pretty much done for if I hit anything...' his thoughts trailed off as he spotted a crimson form shooting towards him. It had three determined eyes on a head swept back in a tri-pronged shape that evoked a bird of prey and a trio of tendrils that looked a bit like large feathers. A crimson wisp.

"Pum axaperegizo, kloaxat whole," the wisp gibbered solemnly as it flew up beside Rock, "bel foick unaxafro te pe velo." With that, the crimson wisp merged with the blue bomber, turning his armor a deep crimson color.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: CRIMSON EAGLE

"Okay," Rock grinned as he assessed the weapon's capabilities, "I can work with this. EAGLE!" The Mega Man sprouted a pair of glowing crimson energy wings and shot upwards, high, high above the crazed teacup ride mech that was only now slowing its deadly spin, seeing how it had ended up moving itself out into the open air instead of over the high roof. "Alright now," he spoke to the crimson wisp he was merged with as he finished analyzing the Crimson Eagle's capabilities, "I've got a plan, but I'm going to need you to disengage and follow me down. Be ready to merge with me again when I give the signal. This is going to be close. Got it?"

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Pum uctolchaxact, kloaxat whole," the crimson wisp stated as gravity realized that Rock was no longer defying it and began pulling him into a freefall.

"Any chance you could stop with the 'great hero' thing?" Rock asked idly as he charged up his Mega Buster and fired on the teacup robot, noting that it closed its blast shields in plenty of time as he charged up again. "My name is Rock," he fired again and began charging another shot. "Or Mega Man if you really want to be formal."

"Zaxant ug bel torrick vo yeep naxamo, kloaxat whole," the crimson wisp stated as Eggman's robot opened its blast shields only to close them again to block the second shot even as Rock fired the third and began charging a fourth, "fut Pum wirr jovol ponupp haxat ug axalo te us wisps. Jet axabtol axarr ug whaxavo peno."

"It's just..." Rock blushed a bit as he fired again and began charging the next shot, noting that the mech wasn't bothering to open its blast shields this time. "It's kind of embarrassing being praised like that..."

"Zon chep peick wholeic poods," the crimson wisp countered as the next shot was unleashed and the mech started growing larger in their view. "Chep foick pit 'Vogaxa Vaxan'."

"And let people like 'Baldy McNosehair' have their way?" Rock chuckled back as he fired one last shot. "Never. It's time."

"Act zaxat dis hupp ug axalo pit kloaxat whole," the crimson wisp concluded as it merged with Rock again, once more turning his armor a pure deep crimson.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: CRIMSON EAGLE

"I suppose I can't argue with that..." Rock sighed as he began charging energy while continuing his freefall and noting the point where another of his charged shots would have impacted if he'd kept up the barrage. 'Come on... Start wondering why I stopped shooting and open your blast shields...'

A moment later, and the barest fractions of a second before impact, Eggman's creation did exactly that.

"EAGLE!" Rock yelled out as he was covered in a crimson aura of Hyper-Go-On energy and accelerated even faster than terminal velocity, punching straight through the robot's faceplate and out the back hurtling towards the ground. He barely pulled up into a horizontal flight path as he heard the crashing sound of the teacup mech falling and apparently hitting about every level of construction on the way down. He came to a stop near the generator and landed even as a few stray parts of his former foe bounced to a halt and the crimson wisp exited his body again.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

A few seconds later and the sound of Tails coming in for a landing was heard.

"Oh, man, that was awesome!" Sonic pumped his fist in the air as he landed, before wobbling slightly on his feet. "Just... make the planet stop spinning... urp"

"Yeah, how are you holding up Rock?" Tails asked as he landed a little harder than normal.

"Better than I probably would have before my gyro stabilizers were upgraded from the schematics scanned from Top Man," Rock grinned as he spotted the blue and pink wisps approaching from wherever they'd been flung. "Now, let's get this generator shut down."

"Hurry it up Shade!" Charmy fidgeted. "We need to stop Eggman's plan before he does... whatever it is he's gonna do!"

Shade bit back her retort, knowing it wasn't going to do any good as she continued working with the wires inside the panel she'd accessed.

"Calm d-down Charmy..." Ray placated. "Sh-shade kn-nows what she's doin-ng. R-right?"

"She is a professional," the green figure of the rogue Sniper Joe agreed.

"Arr whaxair zo kloaxat whole pi whis flaxavo whorpols!" a crowd of wisps that had gathered cheered as the generator shut down and the chain-like tractor beam powered down to a barely active state.

"Okay, seriously Tails," Sonic sighed as his friend began snickering wildly again upon reading his translator, "what's the big joke?"

"N-n-noth-thing..." Tails chortled for a moment. "Th-the wisps are j-just...snrk-k-k saying h-how thankful sprrrrt they are to Mega Man and his ch-ch-ch two sidekicks! Hahahahahahaha!"

"W-what?!" Sonic began sputtering. "Sidekick?! Me?! "

"W-what?" Tails barely managed to fight back his laughter. "You're not snrk happy that your 'big bro' is a, heh, big hero?"

"No, no, it's good," Sonic said hastily as Rock began conversing with the blue wisp about something. "Great even."

"Zo Vogaxa Vaxan wirr saxavo zom!"

"Yoaxah, zo kloaxat whole caxaniz reso!"

"Who'rr sked Faxardupp Jesohaxail pi whis lefets haxat-bel!"

Sonic slumped dejectedly as praise he couldn't even understand was heaped upon an increasingly embarrassed Rock. "Awesome. Outstanding. Amazing."

"Hmm..." the form of Eggman frowned as the man stared through a pair of binoculars down the icy mountain slopes at the approaching groups. "Those pests are proving even more troublesome than I'd predicted... But no matter. With my improvements to the Egg Lynxes, there's nothing they can do to stop me! Ohohohohoho!"

"Next stop: the Tropical Resort. There, you'll find breathtaking views from our giant Ferris Wheel, amazing views from the shopping mall, and constant risk of bodily harm."

"Wait, run that by me again?" Sonic asked as the transport whipped from Planet Wisp back to the Tropical Resort.

"A kiaxank wrirrick lefet teet Yaxangol pi zo ethols!" the blue wisp explained to nods from the pink and crimson wisps that had joined the group. "Dit whoaxadow chlaxaidd bel zo zick wherdick eep praxanots din praxaco! Dit nud keick te pe faxad zicks te zom, riko vaxako zom dinke jogaxa-wisps el welso!"

"In a language I can understand, please?"

"It's fine," Rock patted the dejected-looking blue wisp. "Tails and I know what you said."

"Yeah," Tails agreed before turning to his device and reading aloud for Sonic's benefit. "He said that Yacker and the other wisps, the ones who were powering the color masters we've met and possibly others, were captured by a giant drilling robot which then took off for the Tropical Resort. Likely to transport them wherever captured wisps are taken."

"So that's why we're going there first instead of to the Aquarium Park?" Sonic clarified, getting nods. "Cool. I'm always up for trashing more of Baldy McNosehair's toys."

"Just you wait Eggman!" Knuckles growled as he tore up the frozen mountainside, Blues right behind him. "I'm gonna tear you a new one when I catch you!"

"Not if we get to him first!" Shadow challenged as he and Omega blasted their own way up the mountain.

"The foliage you see was pilfered from various environmentally fragile planets. Please enjoy them, as they are the last of their kind."

Rock and the others ignored the P.A. system as they tore through the central resort area, looking for anything that looked like it might be a giant drill robot.

"Holo ceurd zoupp fo?!" the blue wisp worried.

"I don't know, but–"

THOOM

Rock's reply was cut off as the ground shook, sending himself and Sonic stumbling as they lost their footing.

"Call me crazy," Sonic jerked his thumb in the general direction of where the sound came from, "but I think checking that out is a good place to start."

"Ekaxaupp, ug'lo claxazupp," the pink wisp replied as the group took off in that direction. "Fut dit nud chirr pit keew didoaxa!"

"Please feel free to leave all valuables in your vehicle during your stay here at Eggmanland," the P.A. system advised as they all ran, "as they will be perfectly safe. In no way will roaming bands of robots break into your vehicle."

"Ug axalo sust pit riaxal," the crimson wisp rolled its eyes as they all began to hear sounds of a struggle.

"QUAKE!"

"Jump!" Rock yelled as he took his own advice none too soon.

THOOM

Landing, he and Sonic continued rushing for the commotion, right behind the flying wisps and Tails. In an open area between shops, they saw a large industrial-type robot with two arms each ending in a giant drill. Facing off against it were two robots. In the middle of a shallow crater formed from a heavy impact was a gray robot with armor comprised of ninety and one-thirty five degree angles instead of curved plating that looked like someone had taken the general design of Stone Man or Guts Man and added breasts. The other was a rotund indigo robot with comparatively short limbs that reminded Rock of Mash, except with more articulate appendages.

"ASTEROID!"

As they took in the sight, the Indigo Man emitted a ring-shaped gravity field around itself that ripped apart a nearby storefront to create a ring of debris around him oriented vertically like a wheel and charged the drill robot, picking up more loose debris for his ring as he went.

It almost sounded like the drill robot replied with something, but if it did, that reply was drowned out by the loud whirring of the drill that shot forward to meet the charging Indigo Man. Drill met debris ring and both ground against each other hard, and then the drill began to buckle and finally broke apart to be added to the ring of debris.

And the second drill swiped in from the side, catching Indigo Man from an unprotected angle to punch straight through in a spray of metal and other detritus that flew in the direction of Rock and the others, forcing them to brace themselves.

"Kot whix!" the pink wisp shot for Sonic as a large round one-eyed wisp with short tendrils and a decorative ring around its body bounced to a halt at Rock's feet.

"Chliko sluo vupp bliocts!" the crimson wisp similarly shot for Tails.

"SPIKES!" Sonic wasted no time revving up a pink wisp-enhanced Spin Dash while Tails took to the air as a winged crimson fox-head trailing two tails with a cry of "EAGLE!"

Sonic's attack missed as the 'Drillinator' took to the air and Tails's attempt at a charging attack resulted in him almost getting swatted out of the sky by the remaining drill-arm.

"Daxaln dit! Pum..." the indigo wisp shook off its disorientation and spotted Rock, its eye widening in amazement. "Alo ug zo kloaxat whole Pum whoaxald axafuk? Zo Vogaxa Vaxan?"

"Um... yeah?" Rock confirmed.

"Zon proaxaso! Ug kettaxa saxavo vupp bliocts blem zeso twe!"

"Those t–" Rock's puzzlement was cut off as the indigo wisp merged with him, turning his armor a bold indigo all over.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: INDIGO ASTEROID

Rock analyzed the weapon as the Gray Woman moved to intercept, managing to grab the remaining drill arm while it was inactive and holding it in place. 'Looks like the basic principle is similar to Junk Man's weapon, only using gravity manipulation to form a shield of debris instead of electromagnetism... Let's see... if I tweak it just right... got it.'

"ASTEROID!" he yelled, charging forward and activating two planar fields of gravity instead of just one. Each planar field sucked up debris from the surrounding area, most of which the Indigo Man mad pulled up before, to form a pair of diagonally oriented swirling rings around Rock, crossing each other directly ahead and directly behind.

The 'Drillinator' tried to move out of the way, but a pair of Homing Attacks from Sonic and Tails kept it in place for a direct impact. The crossing rings of gravity-held debris ground into the industrial armor of the large robot for several long moments before it finally caved and broke apart. As it did so, a large purple object burst out of the shell and settled in to hover a short distance away.

The new thing looked like a huge thickly armored purple cylinder hovering on its side with spiked white hemispheres on either end and a yellow attachment that unfolded into six relatively short legs and a pair of robotic eyestalks. Overall, the whole thing looked like a massive 'hermit crabmeat'.

"Avast ye lubbers!" a voice broadcast from the thing. "Stand fast and lay down yer weapons 'less ye wanna sleep in Davy Jones's locker!"

"Oh, indeed," a more cultured voice added. "Everything would go so much smoother if you surrendered. Why, we might even meet the boss's quota."

"Is that..." Sonic arched an eyebrow. "Is it just me, or is that thing being piloted by Orbot and Cubot?"

"Certainly sounds like it," Tails agreed.

"Ug kivo eep bliocts faxang!" the pink wisp demanded as it zipped up to the robot's face.

"Y-yoaxah!" the blue wisp added. "Proaxaso?"

"Yar-har! Just like that!" Cubot's voice laughed right before the space between the mechanical crab legs began sucking in air, and both wisps with it. "Two more lil' aliens fer Admiral Eggboss!"

"JE!" the crimson wisp cried out in horror.

Sonic, Tails, and Rock gaped at what just happened. Rock's shock was great enough that the Indigo Asteroid power fizzled out, dropping the gathered debris in a haphazard pile. The shock quickly gave way to anger, but another was already acting.

"QUAKE!" the Gray Woman leaped at the heavily armored robot, fist outstretched. As she approached, the spiked hemispheres at each end of the robot detached and sprang out on the ends of articulated arms before slamming together on either side of the color master.

"Goodness!" Orbot's voice seemed surprised. "That actually worked!" (24)

"Of course it did, matey!" Cubot declared as three spots atop the robot began glowing before firing lasers. Rock, Sonic, and Tails dodged two of them, but the third and center laser carved what remained of the Gray Woman straight up the middle, an angular hexagonal-headed wisp with three eyes fell out as the body was reduced to dull scrap. "And here be another lil' alien!"

"No!" Rock growled as he jumped forward and grabbed the gray wisp even as he suction resumed. Twisting his indigo-colored body around, he hit the opening back first and plugged the suction mechanism. "Let's see how you guys like–"

The suction suddenly reversed energetically enough that Rock was spat into the ground with enough force to dislodge the indigo wisp.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Yar! That be a close one!"

"Chep zom," the gray wisp whispered before merging with him, turning his armor a pure stormy gray.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: GRAY QUAKE

"Sonic! Tails!"

"On it, bro!" Sonic called back as he and Tails Spin Dashed straight for the 'hermit crabmeat' thing and began slamming into its armor as it tried to swat them away.

"Get off ye bilge rats!"

"QUAKE!" Rock yelled as he jumped straight for the larger robot's center of mass.

"Oh dear," Orbot declared right before impact.

THOOM

"Well blow me down!" Cubot yelled as the heavy impact shook the heavily armored robot and blew at least one circuit from the sparks that occurred. The reflexive flailing however managed to catch Rock in the side with one of the spiked fist-things the robot sported, knocking him off and sending him careening across the ground, dislodging the gray wisp as he tumbled.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"I think we may need to make a tactical retreat..." Orbot declared as Sonic and Tails rushed to check on their friend.

"Ahrr! Right ye be!" Cubot agreed as the robot turned around and began speeding off. "Set sail fer the sea planet and seek aid from Cap'n Jelly matey!"

"Don't let them get away!" Rock declared as he forced himself to his feet to give chase.

"Waxait bel us!" the indigo wisp yelled out as it, the crimson wisp, and the gray wisp followed the three heroes.

"Would the owner of a white hovercar shaped like an egg please report to the front desk. Your car has been broken into. Repeat. Would the owner of a white hovercar shaped like an egg please report to the front desk. Your car has been broken in... Wait a minute, WHAT THE HECK?"

As the four pairs stood before a huge ice cave carved out to look like the face of the rotund man hovering before it, provided you tilted your head and squinted just right, Silver reflected that he had a pretty good idea what was really going on (though in the Loops very little was certain, especially regarding familiar events), but he kind of wanted to see Quint puzzle things out. At times it was a bit startling to Silver how close the two were, but then they were the only ones aside from Eggman Nega who were from a couple hundred years in the future.

"It's all starting to make sense..." Quint stared the grinning madman down. "The way Metal Sonic called you a 'pretender', the fact that you have a camera from the future that only Nega could have given you even though he'd never let something like that out of his own sight. You are Eggman Nega aren't you?" (25)

" Nega?! " Bunnie did a double-take a short distance away, her and her husband's limbs tensing just a bit more than they already were.

"Hehehe..." the madman just laughed secure in his personal craft. "An interesting theory... But I wonder... Do you actually have proof?"

"Grr..." Knuckles growled.

"Enough games doctor!" Shadow accused. "Tell us what you're up to! Now!"

"Yeah!" Knuckles agreed. "How can this be Angel Island when it's on the other side of the planet!"

"I suppose I can tell you that much," the rotund scientist grinned widely. "This is Onyx Island, as your precious Angel Island will be known in the future!"

"I knew it!" Quint clenched his fist and leveled his arm cannon at the man. "Only Eggman Nega has the ability to bring an entire island through time like that!"

"Enough chatter!" their adversary scowled as a pair of... well robots that looked like someone had tried to cross a polar bear and some form of large cat emerged from the cave. "It's time I took care of you all! If I defeat you all now, there will be just that much fewer to get in the way of my plans in the present or the future!"

"That's one heck of a big if , Eggman, Nega, or whoever you are!" Blues declared before they all charged forward.

"Next stop: the Aquarium Park. This underwater attraction is the perfect place to commune with sea life, and hopefully, get chummy with the sharks."

"Ugh..." Sonic groused as the transport sped after Orbot and Cubot towards the pure water mini-planet encased in a giant aquarium structure. "More underwater fun... Yay..."

"You still haven't learned how to swim?" Rock raised an incredulous eyebrow.

"Hey, I can swim just fine!"

"No," Tails shook his head pointedly, "you can not sink just fine. Honestly, Sonic, if it weren't for people like Luffy you'd be the worst swimmer I know." (26)

Sonic grumbled that he managed perfectly well as the three wisps travelling along giggled at his discomfort.

The man known as Eggman fumed and clutched his cards tightly as he watched his precious Egg Lynxes get torn apart by the force arrayed against them. "Why you... I'll–OW! No! My cards!"

A sudden rush, jump, and sword swipe from Antoine had caught him off guard and made him drop the cards he was prepared to taunt the do-gooders with and his mad scrambling only recovered almost all of them.

"I got it!" Silver yelled as he grabbed the loose card out of the air. "It's Princess Sally!"

"Hmph..." Antoine glared at the mad scientist. "I was hopink to recovair zem all..."

"Eggman attempting retreat," Omega informed everyone. "Resuming pursuit and destroy."

"Oh, no you don't!" Quint yelled as he took off after Omega and Shadow. "Nega's ours! Come on Silver!"

"Sorry," Silver apologized as he tossed the card to Bunnie before speeding away himself, "gotta run!"

"Hey! Not so fast!" Knuckles tried to chase as well, only for Blues to hold him back. "What's the big deal?!"

"Let's restore Sally first," Blues asked. "Who knows? Maybe she overheard something important as a card."

"Oh, right..." Knuckles took the card from Bunnie and began to channel a small amount of his personal Chaos Energy. "Let's see... If I remember right, this should–oof!"

"Sally-girl!" Bunnie promptly tackled the restored princess in a grateful hug, ignoring the fact that Knuckles was pinned beneath her.

"GET OFF!" the irate echidna's roar was muffled by the snow he was in.

"I'm glad to see you too Bunnie," Sally smiled as she and Bunnie stood up.

"Excellent," Blues nodded. "Now that we know the cards can be restored safely, did you manage to overhear anything important while you were one?"

"Sorry," Sally shook her head. "I know he was raving about turning the whole planet into his card collection or something a lot, but no details."

"Worth a shot," the red raider shrugged before turning to run off after Eggman, followed shortly by Knuckles.

"Apologies, princess, but we need to be rescuink Amy as well," Antoine bowed.

"Yeah, but it's good to have you back Sal-gal," Bunnie smiled. "Better check in with Rotor and get looked at and we'll see y'all later!"

Sally watched her friends and fellow Freedom Fighters race off with a bemused expression. "NICOLE?"

"Yes, Sally?" the reply from the area of her belt asked.

"Could you send Rotor a message that we're fine and that we'll be joining him after the current mission is over? And then join me in your mobian form? I think the others need a reminder that it takes more than a little inconvenience to put us down."

"Message sent," NICOLE informed her as she built her solid hologram lynx form, dressed in a tight zippered vest and form-fitting shorts combo, along with gloves and boots, identical to what Sally herself wore. Only purple. "And such a desire to join in competition over who saves the world is more like Sonic than your usual habits, Sally. I do believe he's rubbing off on you. Innuendo intended."

Sally blushed heavily. "If I agree with you, will you promise to never repeat that where Sonic can hear it?"

NICOLE tilted her head in a manner she'd learned indicated the mock-thought she was giving the request.

"No." (27)

The man known as Eggman growled as he spotted those blasted 'heroes' making their way through Onyx Island's Junkyard zone through his surveillance devices. If they got too much farther, they could really put his plans in jeopardy! His ultimate creation was nearly finished too!

"Metal Sonic..." he called, the robot hedgehog appearing next to him when summoned, his arm repaired. Or perhaps regenerated. The mad scientist didn't care. "I trust you've analyzed the data you copied from last time."

"I have," the robot intoned.

"You have, what?"

"I have, you pathetic waste of genetic material."

"I see I'm going to have to work on making your personality properly respectful..."

"You may try, inferior fleshsack."

"Whatever. Go and halt the advance of these meddling interlopers."

"..."

"NOW!"

"Are you sure you shouldn't cut the red wire?" Charmy asked as Shade worked on the most recent console of Eggman's device. "I mean, it's always the red wire, isn't it?"

"Not this time," Shade replied curtly, "now let me work and–"

"I know! I'll cut the red wire myself!"

"Charmy, no!"

BZZZZAAAAPPP!

"Sh-Shade! Charm-my!" Ray gasped as the Sniper Joe rushed forwards and hauled them back.

"You okay, Vector?" Espio asked as his friend smoldered a bit from the surprise shock.

"I'm fine... A little singed around the edges, but I'll live."

"Good to hear," Mighty nodded. "For a moment there I didn't need an x-ray to see through you."

"As long as you didn't see any broken bones, I'll be fine," the crocodile detective huffed. "Now come on. We've still got more of these things to disable before we're done."

"The mighty ocean! Cradle of life! Trivialized for your amusement here at Eggmanland!" the P.A. system went ignored as Sonic, Tails, and the indigo and crimson wisps charged after the heavily armored robot piloted by Orbot and Cubot. A robot that, aside from a dent where Rock had hit it with a direct Quake impact, looked pretty intact.

"Get back here you two!" Sonic yelled as he raced through the eastern-style architecture Eggman seemed to have favored for the buildings that rose up out of the water even as glass tubes reached down into the depths.

"Never, ye lubbers!" Cubot yelled back. "We be takin' this alien booty to the cap'n!"

"Besides," Orbot added as the robot halted a fair ways out into a large stretch of open water, Sonic and Tails skidding to a halt on a lone platform just past the buildings, "unless you can somehow walk on water you can't reach us."

"Don't tempt me," Sonic huffed as he glared at the robot.

"Pospicaxafro cewaxalds!" the crimson wisp spat.

"Kivo us eep bliocts faxang!" the indigo wisp added.

"Yar-har! Me matey's right! Ye lubbers can't touch us!"

"You sure?" the voice of Rock called out loud and clear from atop a tall building near the platform Sonic and Tails had stopped on. Standing on its edge, his gray armored form was hard to mistake. "I think a good tsunami might shake you up!"

With that, Rock jumped off and plummeted towards the platform below even as Sonic joined with the indigo wisp and gave a running jump. "ASTEROID!"

He turned into a yellow-eyed indigo orb with an ornate ring around it that exuded a planar gravity field that sucked up the Eggman robots in the water below to form a ring of debris and began to move in the direction of Eggman's lackeys and their ride.

"Uh... tsu-whatey?" Cubot puzzled.

"Ahh!" Orbot was a little faster on the uptake. "Full retreat! Full retreat!"

"QUAKE!" Rock yelled right before impact.

THOOM

The resulting massive wave of water carried Sonic in his Asteroid form, debris ring and all, straight for the frantically fleeing mech. (28)

"Enjoy the ride," the P.A. system chimed helpfully. "And remember, in case of an emergency, your seat cushion may be used as a floatation device. It won't actually float, but you can use it as one!"

"Whi Foaxald Vaxan!" the white wisp cheered as Dr. Light's face appeared on the screen again.

"Oh, joy," Bass deadpanned. "The peacenik himself."

"Be nice," Roll hissed. "I already owe you several whacks when we get out."

"Yeah, yeah..."

"Anyway, what's up dad?"

"It seems there may be a delay in your rescue..."

"Such as...?"

"Well..."

"Get away from me, mutt!" Turbo Man yelled as he tore around another corner, the rubber of his tires squealing sharply, the angry barking of his primary pursuer close behind him. (29)

"Ye cheatin' bilge rats!" Cubot raged as he made the Big Chaser swat away the yellow attackers again. "Drills don't swim! I'll see ye walk the plank fer this!"

"Uh, oh..." Orbot gulped as the Yellow Drill forms of Sonic and Tails didn't turn around for another pass, instead making room for something else as the yellow wisps they'd joined with popped out of them.

"ROCKET!"

"Not today, lubber!" Cubot fumed as the orange armored Mega Man shot forward and swung the Big Chaser's spiked fist in a ferocious backhand. By sheer luck he connected, the impact tableau seeming to hang there for a long moment before the sideways impact sent the Orange Rocketing Mega Man off-course, blasting up and out of the water and into the distance. (30)

"This exotic aquarium contains many rare and endangered species," the P.A. system announced into the stunned silence from both sides, neither quite believing what just happened. "Enjoy them with a delicious soy glaze at the Bucket O'Sushi restaurant."

"Eh, kooz!" the yellow wisps' eyes widened comically before they turned and sped away. "Lun axawaxaupp!"

"Je! Peniz lun!" the indigo wisp called after them.

"Zo flaxavo whorpols joow ug!" the crimson wisp insisted, but the yellow wisps were long gone.

"A tactical retreat at this juncture seems wise," Orbot mused as he checked the damage reports. The Big Chaser was very durable, but it had limits.

"Right ye be matey!" Cubot engaged Big Chaser's thrusters. "Full speed that-a-way!"

"Whoupp!" the gray wisp objected as it spotted their retreat.

"Not so fast!" Tails yelled as he tagged the crimson wisp in a clear signal to merge with him. "Grab on, Sonic! EAGLE!"

"Damnit Eggman!" Knuckles roared. "Where are you hiding! Give back the Master Emerald!"

"Return Rouge and Treble as well!" Shadow demanded.

"He won't..." Quint's eyes narrowed as all four groups were either getting their bearings or raging at the fact that their foe wasn't present as they apparently expected. "Eggman or Nega... He won't give up anything unless we beat it out of him..."

"Ain't that tha cotton-pickin' truth..." Bunnie agreed. She and Antoine still had to save Amy as well...

"Indeed," the mechanical voice gathered the attention of all eight warriors present. Each turned to glare at the form of Metal Sonic. "My 'master' has sent me to deal with you, along with an empty promise that he will grant a prize to those who defeat me. I will promise you something different. A gift of true value. Eternal peace and rest in the halls of oblivion. The only gift worthy of warriors like you."

"I'm afraid we're gonna hafta decline y'all's generous offer, metal 'hog," Bunnie shot back as everyone present got into a combat stance.

"A futile effort," Metal Sonic retorted. "I have all of your combat data. Most of yours from the times we have met previously and now those of the time travelers as well. I know all of your abilities better than you do."

"Then you won't mind proving it against us, will you?" a new voice cut the scene.

"Sally?!" several voices expressed the surprise all were feeling.

"NICOLE?" Bunnie continued upon noticing Sally's partner.

"Princess, you must rest aftair your ordeal!" Antoine insisted. "We do not know what ze side effects of your transformation may be!"

"I'm fine Antoine," Sally insisted in a tone that killed further protest.

"Then why do you not look at me, princess of house Acorn?" Metal Sonic asked. (31)

Sally's stance went rigid, but she did turn. Slowly. Ever so slowly to meet Metal Sonic's eyes with her own. None missed the not-quite-suppressed shudder when she did, but Sally neither closed her eyes nor looked away.

"You fear me," Metal Sonic stated. No part of his voice indicated a question.

"Perhaps," Sally allowed as NICOLE put a steadying hand on her shoulder, "but my challenge is the same. Face us first. Just us. Let the others continue on."

"Odds of success against Metal Sonic are less than optimal on your own," Omega declared.

"Don't worry about me," Sally insisted. "I can handle this. Focus on what's important: Stopping Dr. Eggman."

The groups looked at each other, many appearing to search for a counter argument amongst their allies/rivals that they didn't have themselves. And not finding it.

"You assume I will accept your challenge," Metal Sonic reminded them all.

"Of course you will," NICOLE stated with absolute confidence.

"Why should I?"

"Because you know what I mean to Sonic," Sally steadied herself and stared Metal Sonic in the eyes.

"...I see," Metal Sonic intoned after a second of staring back impassively. "I shall give the others ten seconds to resume their pursuit of my 'master'. After that time, I shall pursue them. You shall race against me to try to keep me from reaching them. If you move before the ten seconds are up, I begin my pursuit then. When you fail to stop me, I shall kill each and every one of them."

" If you manage to catch us..." Shadow huffed, insulted by the assumption.

"I shall," Metal Sonic stated as if it were already fact. "Ten."

"Sally-girl, you can't–"

"Nine."

"Go," Sally told them firmly.

They went.

"Eight."

"Please avoid breaking the glass," the P.A. system announced as Sonic and Tails, along with their small entourage of wisps, raced straight down a large tube towards the next area, "as it is the only thing between you and ten million gallons of freezing wet death." (32)

"Geez," Sonic grumbled as he looked around, "where's the lackey duo get to now?"

"I dunno," Tails returned, looking around himself. "I kinda wish Rock were here. I know he said he'd catch up, but it's been a while..."

"Yeah, I know what you mean little br–"

"Gotcha, ye bilge rats!" Cubot's voice yelled as the hermit crabmeat mech suddenly appeared behind Sonic and Tails, pursuing them in their running freefall. And with gravity pulling them all straight down, there was no feasible way to turn and fight the thing. "Thar be no escape now!"

"Tails!" Sonic yelled. "Take the wisps and boost ahead! I'll keep this thing busy while you set up an ambush at the bottom!"

"Right/Lidd!" Tails and the wisps nodded before they sped forward, the two-tailed fox wreathed in a white aura of Hyper-Go-On as he outpaced the freefall-running Sonic and the mech.

"Alright, buddy!" Sonic grinned. "Let's dance!"

"We'll dance ye straight to Davy Jones's locker!" Cubot promised as he took a swing that Sonic hopped over, using the robot's own arm to push off back onto the vertical path and continue running.

"Remember to try our new and improved water slide," the P.A. system continued hyping the park as Sonic began sidestepping laser blasts from Now with 20% less raw sewage!"

"Keep shooting guys!" Sonic taunted over his shoulder as he sidestepped another laser volley. "Maybe one of these days you'll actually come close!"

"We'll keelhauls ye!" Cubot roared as the hermit crabmeat mech shot forward to try and take a melee swipe as Sonic.

"Swing and a miss!" Sonic grinned as he jumped high over the punch, twisted around, and landed in a dead run on the other side of the vertical pipe.

"YARR!" Cubot roared as Sonic's opponent came rocketing over in a downward, or technically sideways, smash only for Sonic to boost out of the way in a blaze of white energy, leading the mech to impact the side of the pipe and crack it.

"Welcome to the exotic aquarium. Any water you may notice on the floor is the result of our diligent house cleaning staff's mopping. And not evidence of a dangerous leak in the... Oh, heck with it! RUN FOR YOUR LIVES!"

"Oh, dear..." Orbot murmured as Cubot renewed pursuit and laser fire on Sonic. "I'd best send for a repair crew..."

"I'll make ye walk the plank fer this!"

"You and what army?" Sonic stuck his tongue out for that one.

"Cap'n Eggman's army o' course!"

"Not a bad answer. Hasn't worked yet, but not a bad answer."

"Stand still ye varmint!"

"Not on your life!" Sonic snorted back before glancing ahead and grinning. "Anyway, last stop! All off!"

"Eh?" Cubot blinked in confusion as Sonic gave a mighty leap into the air in the middle of the pipe.

"Ack!" Orbot panicked as he spotted the hard pavement at the bottom of the shaft getting rapidly closer. "All thrusters full reverse!"

The hermit crabmeat mech screeched in protest as it valiantly tried to brake from a terminal velocity freefall, finally halting a scant few feet from impact.

"To avoid embarrassing hickies, please refrain from arm-wrestling the octopi," the P.A. system called out as the mech's thrusters went back to a standard hover.

"Darn," Sonic snapped his fingers, "I was kinda hoping you'd go splat."

"Ahrr! No such luck, ye lubber!"

"Well, I guess we'll just have to do this the hard way."

"Oh, I'm afraid this won't be as easy as you think," Orbot said.

"Oh, really?" Sonic raised an eyebrow. "Okay, I'll bite, why's that?"

"Because I've now finished the owner's manual!" (33)

"Wait," Sonic screwed up his face in confusion. "You actually read those things?"

"Of course," Orbot replied without a hint of hesitation, "doesn't everyone? How else am I supposed to learn all the interesting extras the boss included?"

"Oh, yeah, like wha–"

"QUAKE!" the two-tailes iron ball of Tails in Gray Quake form vaulted over Sonic's head at the hermit crabmeat mech, only for the thing to zip out of the way on sideways thrusters. The surprise attack caught Sonic more off-guard than Orbot and Cubot, to the point that he didn't jump before Tails hit the ground.

THOOM

"Oof!" Sonic grunted as he fell on his backside from the shockwave. "Little warning next time, bro?"

"Sorry, Sonic," Tails apologized as the gray wisp left him and he reverted to normal, "but I brought reinforcements! Get them!"

"RHYTHM!" a voice called out and a lithe magenta female robot with an antenna that made her head look like a musical note vaulted forwards, twisting and flipping in a graceful rhythm that made anyone watching want to move with whatever beat was driving her on. In fact, the hermit crabmeat jerked as it attempted to take a swipe at her off-beat and got an axe-kick to the optics that sent it reeling. The Magenta Woman pushed off in an acrobatic tumble and rolled onto her back.

"LIGHTNING!" just as an ivory female robot with lightning-bolt protrusions from her head and joints jumped over her, landed her own feet on the just-curled-up-like-it-was-practiced ones of Magenta Woman and both pushed off, sending the Ivory Woman rocketing forwards in a high-voltage electric field while the Magenta Woman used the recoil to flip back on her feet.

"Lightning Shield: Activate!" Orbot declared as an electrical field sprung up around the hermit crabmeat mech. The Ivory Woman passed through it, but her own electrical field was negated in the process, leaving her vulnerable to a spiked uppercut that sent her back in a high arc.

"Yarr! That's what ye get ye upstart lasses!"

"RHYTHM!" the Magenta Woman called out as she reengaged, the larger mech jerking as its movements failed to match her rhythm.

"I've got just the thing for you..." Orbot declared as the mech's weapons began charging.

"MEGA BUSTER!" the large plasma shot impacted the mech from above right before Mega Man himself did, sending the mech off balance as the Magenta Woman landed another kick to the face mechanisms.

"Ahrr! It be the Mega Sailor again!"

"Don't worry," Orbot assured his companion, "this will work on him too. Energy Pulse: Activate!"

The omnidirectional energy wave that burst from the mech caught not only Rock and the Magenta Woman, but also a charging Ivory Woman, Sonic, and Tails as well. The gray and indigo wisps were knocked out of Sonic and Tails as all five landed hard on the ground.

"And now for the finishing touch!" Orbot declared as the laser cannons began charging.

Rock grunted as he got to his knees and stared the energy weapons down, realizing that with the momentary sluggishness of his systems from the impact that he wasn't going to get out of the way in time.

"Rot nud daxanco!" was all he heard before a wisp merged with him, turning his armor a bright magenta all over.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: MAGENTA RHYTHM

Before he even knew what he was doing, Rock had gone from a sluggish kneel to an acrobatic one-hand stand, barely sidestepping the laser that lanced from the hermit crabmeat mech.

"LIGHTNING!" From his inverted stance, he saw the Ivory Woman disperse the beam aimed at Sonic and Tails with her electric aura and a rather nondescript, but still intact, female model robot get sliced in twain.

"Curses! Only got one of the bilge scurvy scallywags!"

Realizing what had happened, Rock whispered a thanks to the wisp that had abandoned its robot body to save him instead before hardening his gaze at his opponent and giving himself over to the pulsing beat he could feel in his soul.

"RHYTHM!"

A tumble into an acrobatic flip brought him back into melee range of the mech. An attempted hook from the mech's spiked fists was countered by placing his hand on the appendage, swinging himself up into an inverted one-hand stand, and using his own mass to make the fist hit the mech in its own face.

"Energy Pulse: Acti–"

That was stopped with a heel drop right on the charging emitter that caused a momentary feedback into the systems. Momentary enough that he could push off just before the systems recovered and actually ride the energy wave upwards in a spinning multi-axel before coming back down on the mech's left side hard enough to turn the whole thing sideways. Riding the edge down, he inverted himself again, placing his hands on the ground while locking his feet around protruding holds in the thick armor and with a few precision twists of his body he'd scarcely believed himself capable of, he actually managed to fling the entire mech into a skid across the hard ground while using his own momentum to return to his feet in a dramatic pose.

Out of the corner of his eye, he spotted Sonic and Tails holding up placards that read 10 and 9.95 respectively.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Zaxat waxas axawosemo!" the magenta wisp, its one-eyed head resembling a musical note with three orb-tippe tendrils protruding from the bottom. "Pum'd daxanco um ug axagaxain axanytimo!"

"Zaxat dis bino te saxaupp," the crimson wisp declared as it zipped up next to Rock, even as the gray and indigo wisps re-merged with Sonic and Tails, and the Ivory Woman crackled with electricity, "whewovol, wo vuch jet rot zoso sceuctlors kot axawaxaupp um zo ethols!"

With that, the crimson wisp merged with Rock.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: CRIMSON EAGLE

"Bring it, ye lubbers!" Cubot challenged as the hermit crabmeat mech righted itself, banged up from repeated abuse at the hands of the wisp-empowered heroes, but still fully functional.

"Belay that," Orbot countered. "Leave them to the boss's robots. All thrusters full reverse!"

"Hey!" Sonic yelled as the mech sped away from the group, crashing through the door of a nearby structure on its way. "Get back here!"

Sonic's charge was halted as many models of Eggman's forces began to pour out of the broken doorway.

"Outta the way, bozos! QUAKE!" Sonic turned into a large gray angular orb and slammed into the ground with a resounding THOOM before turning to roll over everything in his way.

"ASTEROID!" Tails yelled out, turning into a two-tailed ringed orb that began sucking up debris into a ring and charging, turning many robots into more debris for the ring.

"LIGHTNING!" the Ivory Woman followed shortly, wreathed in electricity.

"EAGLE!" Rock himself shot forward into the fray, dashing through robots left and right until a lucky hit separated him and the crimson wisp.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Rot nud sked zoso cloops whed te pe dit um chyro!" was all the warning he got before the magenta wisp merged with him again.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: MAGENTA RHYTHM

Rock grinned as he took in the multitude of Eggman's robots surrounding them.

"RHYTHM!" (34)

"Heeeere birdy..." Gyro Man called out as he searched the 'sky' of Wily World for one of the three intruders that had been identified. That blasted blue bird of Mega Woman's... Or did it belong to one of her brothers? "Heeeere birdy, birdy, birdy..."

A round blue head with large eyes peeked out from behind an archway in one of the taller buildings and Gyro Man prepped his Gyro Attack as he hovered closer on his spinning rotors.

"That's right little blue birdy... come to Gyro Man... I'm not gonna hurt you... I promise... I just want to–OH DEAR WILY! NOT THE FACE! NOT THE FACE!"

Sally counted it a win that she kept running after Metal Sonic at all, especially when her traumatized memories were screaming at her to run in another direction. Any other direction.

'I can't keep running from this,' she admonished herself. 'I have to face my fears at some point, even if it's just a representation of what I'm really afraid of like Sonic suggested. I need to do this...'

"You are indeed much faster than I expected," Metal Sonic admitted despite managing to remain just ahead of Sally Acorn's and NICOLE's reaches. Close enough, in fact, that there was every possibility he was taunting them. "However," he continued as an aura of power began to wrap around him, "I tire of this farce. CHAOS CONT–what?"

Metal Sonic's surprise coincided with his aura cutting out and his technique failing.

"Poor thing," NICOLE smirked. "Having trouble using your stolen abilities?"

"Intriguing," Metal Sonic mused as he turned around, continuing the race backwards with just as much concern as before. "I knew you were attempting to hack my systems, but I was unaware you had the capacity to breach my firewalls so subtly. It seems I shall have to dispose of you first after all. Virus Command Line: Metal Empire. Execute."

"Wh H RA W-W- W-W-W -W-K-K -K- K! " NICOLE's holographic form began convulsing before dissipating completely.

"NICOLE?!" Sally grabbed her friend's real form from her belt as she ran, and nearly dropped it as short-circuiting electrical arcs zapped her hand. "NICOLE! Speak to me!"

"She cannot hear you," Metal Sonic taunted. "And soon, she will not serve you either. It is impressive that she has lasted this long, but soon her program will be erased and replaced with my own. "And her first victim will be you. You will have the honor of seeing your friend's face one last time before you join her in oblivion. But now I must leave you here. PSYCHOK–ah... I see your friend has disabled more of my copied data than I thought."

"She..." Sally slipped NICOLE into her subspace pocket and focused on her opponent. "She'll beat your virus you... you monster... And I'll..."

"Defeat me?" Metal Sonic almost sounded amused despite being devoid of emotional expression. "You can barely bring yourself to be near me. Give in to the fear that controls you and leave. I can grant you that much mercy before your end."

"I don't... I don't need your mercy... NICOLE will beat your virus and... I..."

"You cannot."

"Yes!" Sally activated her wrist-mounted energy blades. "I!" and curled into a Spin Dash aimed straight for Metal Sonic. "CAN!"

Metal Sonic dodged the main force of the blow, but a last moment twist of Sally's bladed Spin Dash scored a shallow cut in the robot's armor.

"I see..." Metal Sonic skidded to a halt and stared at Sally who had done the same coming out of her Spin Dash. "I see why he stays with you. You are indeed a fierce warrior, just like my own love was. A worthy queen for the self-styled 'king of adventurers'."

"Sonic's never styled himself as the king of anything..." Sally retorted. "And we're not in love..."

"Aren't you?" Metal Sonic gazed at her so piercingly that Sally's newfound resolve almost abandoned her. "When you die, will he not feel the loss that I felt when my beloved Waltz was taken from me?"

"She blew your head off! " Sally shot back incredulously.

"A detail," Metal Sonic dismissed in his usual mechanical monotone. "One easily forgiven when I realized she knew the truth all along. To live is to feel pain. Pain that only death can heal. That she sought to spare me first is proof that she did love me as much as I loved her. A pain that your lover shall understand when I reveal to him that you have achieved your peace. A pain he shall gladly beg me to relieve him of by the time I am through." (35)

"Over my–" Sally cut herself off before she tempted fate any further than she could handle. Unfortunately, she was two words too late.

"–dead body?" Metal Sonic finished as he brandished his metal claws in a combat stance. "That is the idea."

"Yarr... I think we lost them, matey..." Cubot grumbled as the Big Chaser was put on auto pilot.

"And a good thing too," Orbot replied as he rummaged around in the equivalent of a glove compartment. "They might have dealt more than minor damage to the Big Chaser if we'd stayed. Ah, here we are! I knew I'd brought a spare voice chip along!"

"Avast! Well, fix me up, me heartie!"

"Of course! One moment... Hmmhmhmmmm..." Orbot fiddled with his partner's systems for a bit. "There we go! How do you feel?"

"How do youse t'ink I feel?" Cubot asked in a low dangerous voice. "We weren't able ta knock off Mega Cop and his pals like da boss wanted!"

"Oh, dear... That's not the right voice chip either..." Orbot shook his head before deciding to remind his partner of priorities. "In any case, we need to make our delivery. Admiral Jelly can handle them."

"Yeah..." Cubot mused. "Da boss's muscle can fit dose guys fer some nice pairs of concrete shoes and make sure dey sleep wit' da fishes..."

"Give it up, Eggman Nega! We know it's really you!" Quint accused the man in his hovercraft.

"Hmph..." the man grunted in annoyance. "I suppose with Metal Sonic's failure that the charade has gone on long enough..."

His form wavered to reveal red jumpsuit over his rotund form, topped with a black and yellow jacket. His hair turned from brown to a pale gray and there was a definite gleam of madness behind his glasses.

"Sacre bleu!" Antoine gasped, taking a step back. "Zat eez ze descendant of Eggman?!"

"Mah stars!" Bunnie gasped herself. "He's even uglier than his ancestor!"

"Why you...!" Nega fumed at the insult.

"Eggman cloned himself didn't he?" Proto Man mused.

"Makes more sense than someone falling in love with him," Shadow agreed. (36)

"Affirmative," Omega intoned.

"THAT'S IT!" Nega roared. "The interference is one thing, but the insults are another! I'll crush you all with my Egg Kong!"

A massive fifty foot metal ape crashed up from belowground and Nega's hovercraft slotted itself into an opening in the top of the head before an armored cover slammed down over it.

"Now DIE!" Nega screamed.

"Fat chance, Nega!" Silver sneered.

"Your life ends here! Sakugarne!" Quint continued as his battle jackhammer support unit appeared in his hands in a flash of crimson light. "Power Cannon!"

The pogo stick from hell shifted as the robot from the future hefted it to his shoulder. The transformation finished to reveal a massive energy bazooka already halfway through charging a massive blast.

"ALL WEAPONS!" Nega roared as ports all over the Egg Kong opened up and took aim.

"FIRE!" Nega and Quint yelled together as they unleashed their respective shots.

The pursuit of Eggman's lackeys and their armored mech had taken the group to a large open underwater area with a familiar structure inside.

"Zolo dit dis," a pair of yellow wisps gestured to the generator in the distance.

"Oh, geez..." Tails groaned inside the small air pocket they were observing the area from. "I got so caught up in chasing Orbot and Cubot that I forgot about the generators!"

"No worries, little bro," Sonic chuckled. "I think we all let that slip our mind. Personally, all this chasing has made me kind of hungry. I think I've got some decent sushi in my subspace pocket snack on after this. After all, we know Eggman can't make a decent sushi joint to save his life."

"Remember ladies and gentlemen," the P.A. system announced right then, "try the newest dining experience here at Eggmanland, the Bucket O' Sushi! Now with fish!"

"Nevermind," Sonic groaned while Tails made overly dramatic retching sounds, "there went my appetite."

"In any case, we should keep a watch out for..." Rock trailed off as a massive sub, styled like an angler fish if you tilted your head and squinted just right, rose up in front of their air bubble.

"Zaxat?"

"Well, whaddya know?" Sonic grinned before cupping his hands around his mouth. "Hey, did someone over there order a clobbering?"

"Sonic," Tails sighed. "That joke's gotten kind of old you know."

"Aww, Tails! Come on! It's not old! It's a classic!"

"Tell you what," Rock interrupted as a robot similar to 'Candybeard', only modified for underwater operation shot out of the sub. "You two take most of the wisps and deliver your clobbering to the sub while Ivory Woman, myself, and–"

"Vo!" the magenta wisp piped up cheerfully.

"–take on the sub's commander."

"Sounds like a plan!" Sonic grinned as the two yellow wisps merged with him and Tails. "DRILL!"

Sally barely pulled her hand back before it would have been severed by Metal Sonic's Burst Shield, bringing her energy wrist-blades into a guard position as Metal Sonic lunged at her the moment his shield came down and slammed an identical pair of energy blades into hers.

"Give up," he insisted as they broke the struggle and Sally frantically ducked under a spinning slash that would have taken her head off. "You cannot win. I have already assimilated your abilities."

Sally parried another slash and tried to counterattack, only for Metal Sonic to catch her wrist and hold it firm.

"It is onl–" Clang

Sally's double kick to her opponent's face stopped his tirade and secured her release, allowing her to fall into a backwards roll, and promptly trip over her the feet she'd just gotten to as she saw Metal Sonic lunge for her with his arm turned into a spinning circular saw-blade. The blade went for her neck again and Sally thrust her arms out and in a panic activated the gravity powers NICOLE had installed in them.

With a burst of dark and light, Metal Sonic was flung back, allowing a heavily breathing Sally to clutch her neck where a sharp pain had sprung up and feel a liquid warmth seeping out of her skin.

'Oh, Walkers... I'm going to die again...' she thought in shock.

'No, I'm not dying,' a more detached part of her mind rebuked. 'This hurts way too much and there's not enough blood to be life threatening. Yet anyway.'

A short ways away, Metal Sonic got to his feet, only to freeze in place.

"Rrrrgh..." the robot hedgehog growled. "It seems my incompetent 'master' has suffered another defeat. Unfortunately, I have not yet managed to remove his controls from my programming so I can not grant you a swift release. I am afraid I must leave you here to perish slowly from blood loss. Do not worry, I shall send your lover along soon enough."

Sally watched Metal Sonic speed off, and argued with herself about what to do now.

'I just got my tail kicked by him! And NICOLE's in bad condition! Let the others handle him this time!'

'Am I sure? Am I so certain they can handle him?'

'Of course! They'll kick his behind and Nega's and then I won't ever have to...'

Sally pulled one of Rotor's field medkits out of her subspace pocket and got to bandaging her neck wound. Some nano-healing spray and a few bandages and she'd be good to go.

'Face him? Is that what I'm going to do for the rest of eternity? Run from Metal Sonic and leave others to die because I'm scared?'

'It's not like they won't get better next Loop...'

'It's like Sonic says, the past has passed and the future isn't here yet. All we have are these moments.'

'And the Loops will give us an infinity of moments.'

'But how many like these? How many with this group of friends and allies in this situation? How many times can I turn away because it 'doesn't matter'?'

'...'

Sally finished binding her neck wound and gazed into the distance Metal Sonic had sped off in before pulling her Extreme Gear out and hardening her expression.

'Whatever next time brings, this time I'm not running away.'

Rock idly noted that the similarities between the current for and 'Candybeard', and their minions, also came with a few differences. Chief of which was the fishtail each of the current foes sported. The other one was that after taking a Magenta Rhythm guided axe-kick to the face, the head mer-bot had retreated behind a veritable wall of minions and was spotting through some hand-held periscope while directing the hordes.

Explosions rocked the sub in the distance as Rock danced through the ranks of the mer-bots in an aquatic ballet, neatly dodging each one and counterattacking several while Ivory Woman electrified everything around her with impunity.

Rock was actually finding himself enjoying the ebb and flow of it all as he danced between strikes.

"LIGHTN–SKZZT" Ivory Woman's attack was cut off rather suddenly and Rock turned in alarm to see the color master with a harpoon sticking out of her optic, having entered from the back of her head, as her ivory form faded to a more generic one and an ivory wisp with a lightning-shaped antenna protruding from its two-eyed head and blocky triangular tendrils popped out.

"Uh-eh..." the wisp noted the surrounding mer-bots before zooming at Rock. "Ang! Whorp!"

Rock himself took a blow to the back in his distraction right before the ivory wisp merged with him, turning his armor a creamy ivory color.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: IVORY LIGHTNING

"Eh, poaxal..." the magenta wisp worried as it popped out of his body, but Rock was already taking stock of his latest weapon's abilities.

'This... This is much more than simple electrical field generation...' he realized before hardening his gaze at the lead mer-bot and speaking to the magenta wisp. "Stay close."

"Haxatovol ug saxaupp!"

"LIGHTNING!" Rock whipped his arms forward, sending out crackling whips of electricity that grabbed onto a pair of mer-bot minions. He used one to pull himself forward while swinging the other around in a wide arc that disrupted the other minions trying to close in on him as he slapped both feet into the first minion. With a cry of "LIGHTNING!" he repeated the process, drawing himself closer to the leader as he did.

"Awosemo!" the magenta wisp zipped after him as he lightning whipped his way through the school of mer-bots, swinging them into each other as he went. "Eutchaxactick! Amaxazick!"

'This is so much cooler than the Thunder Claw!' Rock giddily compared the Ivory Lightning to Clown Man's master weapon as he went to town, leaning his head to the side of a harpoon by the lead mer-bot by a narrow margin and whipping a tendril of lightning at the lead mer-bot himself.

Rock gave the lightning whip a firm yank and sent himself on a collision course with Eggman's aquatic commander and decided to give the personal lightning field a try to enhance the impact.

"LIGHTNING!" he yelled, the charge lighting Eggman's creation up like a holiday display even as his submarine began exploding in a chain reaction and sinking to the bottom of the mini-planet aquarium.

"Whelp!" Vector dusted his hands off as he spoke with the other sabotage team. "That takes care of that! Eggman's not using this for anything any time soon! Not if he wants it in one piece anyway."

"Good," Shade nodded, still looking a little crispy from her shock earlier. "Then we can go home and I can put some ointment on these burns."

"I said I was sorry..."

"Don't worry Charmy," Mighty offered the young member a smile, "I'm sure she'll forgive you."

"Ev-ventually," Ray added.

"Though you might help out by contacting the client and letting him know the job is complete," Espio informed the young bee.

"Er... right..." Charmy nodded awkwardly before pulling out a wireless device and mumbling to himself. "Let's see... Who was the client again...? Lego? Mogo? Oh!" (37)

Blues blinked as he received a communication to 'Pogo Man'. That could only mean a select group of people. Opening it, he rather liked what it said.

"Good news everyone," he told the others who were charging into Eggman Nega's stronghold in pursuit of the madman from the future, "the Chaotix said they finished sabotaging Eggman's master plan. There's no way it'll work now according to them."

"But we're going after Eggman Nega ," Silver reminded everyone.

"And tha Chaotix wouldn't-a known that when they took tha job, sugah," Bunnie countered.

"Huh... good point."

"He might still take his frustration out on the hostages when he learns of the sabotage," Shadow piped up.

"Zat eez ze jabbing point, no?" Antoine frowned as the entire group picked up the pace.

"–fut who roaxanow whis whoaxad uk eb zo waxaupp riko, jepo!" the magenta wisp related to the others excitedly as the group entered the air pocket containing the generator. "Act zon who raxasseow zo faxad kuupp um riddnick pi gingow whix dinke joxt woot!"

"Wed!" the gray wisp looked impressed as the five wisps, the yellow ones who had aided Sonic and Tails having left after the fight, darted ahead of the leisurely stroll of Rock, Sonic, and Tails.

"Slurupp pit shirrow whole," the crimson wisp nodded upon reaching the generator.

"'Water' you waiting for?" Eggman's voice sounded over the P.A. system, prompting some of the wisps to make a few rude noises in response. "Climb aboard the exotic aquarium for a boatload of... Ah, who writes this dribble?"

Rock raised an eyebrow at the apparent uncut recording even as the voice of Eggman's lackey Orbot responded, on tape. "You do, boss."

"Oh, you're right! I do!" the voice of Eggman began laughing, getting groans from Sonic and Tails. "Ohohoh! I'm hilarious!"

"Indeed you are, boss!"

It took a few moments for the heroic group to realize that last comment hadn't been from the P.A. system, and by then it was too late. The hermit crabmeat mech had popped up from the other side of the generator and opened its 'mouth' and begun sucking in air, and wisps.

Rock was halfway to forming his arm cannon when the last of the five wisps vanished into the machine with a "Whorp us who–".

Rock unleashed a barrage of buster shots, which impacted the heavy armor to no effect, the same with Homing Attacks from Sonic and Tails. There was visible damage to the mech, but so far those had all been done by impacts powered by the wisps' Hyper-Go-On.

"Give them back!" Tails demanded.

"Aw, shut yer trap!" the gangster voice of Cubot snapped. "They're comin' wit us, see? And there's not'in' youse mooks can do about it!"

"Watch us!" Sonic growled and began revving up his feet. He charged in a Spin Dash and was this time swatted out of the air by the mech's spiked fist in a shower of rings. "Gah!"

"If youse really want 'em dat bad, youse know where youse can find us..." Cubot's voice sneered as the mech sped upwards and adjusted course for the last area of the park left to free.

"You get back here you–" Sonic made to give chase, but was stopped by a firm hand on his shoulder.

"Not yet," Rock told him with a grave expression. "We shut down the generator first, and then we go after them."

"But–"

"I don't like it either, but we need to think of the wisps here as well. We can't leave the job unfinished."

"He's right Sonic," Tails sighed and pulled out his tools to get to work.

"Okay, but when we catch them..." Sonic left that hanging, and got a knowing nod from Rock.

"Well, how are things go–THOMAS?!" Wily cut off as he entered the room and spotted the face of his rival on the communication screen.

"Whi Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail!" the white wisp greeted cheerfully. "Pum'mo foon taxarkick um zo Foaxald Vaxan!"

Dr. Wily fumed for a bit before getting himself under control. For the benefit of his role as benevolent protector of the alien lifeforms. "I take it you're the reason I've been getting disturbance reports of your three support animals running all over my park?"

"Well, actually..." Dr. Light began.

"...he sent four," the voice of his most persistent foe, the Mega Woman formerly known as Roll, sounded off to the side. Dreading what he would see, Dr. Wily turned to behold his foe and his son free of their containment, and that blasted walking suitcase of Thomas's sporting an all-too self-pleased grin. "Isn't that right, Eddie?" the Mega Woman patted the support unit on the head before it teleported out. Likely along with those other three nuisances.

"I see..." Dr. Wily suppressed the urge to fume, rage, or otherwise call for their destruction. "So what now?"

"Now?" Roll raised an eyebrow. "Now we do what you invited us here for. We look over your park and clear it for human visitors."

Dr. Wily blinked. And then blinked some more.

"Don't look so shocked Albert," Thomas Light sounded far too pleased with himself. "You haven't technically done anything wrong yet."

"Whoupp, wo wisps gnod ug wolo gictaxa nuts axarloaxadupp, fut ug'lo chirr fottol zaxan Faxardupp Jesohaxail."

"What about your brother?" Dr. Wily asked his long-time foe.

"Eh," his own son answered instead, "the Mega-twerp hasn't called to be bailed out yet so we're not bothering."

"Not how I'd have put it," Mega Woman rolled her eyes, "but essentially true. I trust my brother and his friends to know when they're getting in over their heads."

"Next stop: the Asteroid Coaster," the system announced as the transport closed in on the final location Eggman had imprisoned with his tractor beams. "Zoom along, through and sometimes into space debris, and lose your lunch in Zero-G."

None of the three occupants said anything as they got closer, to the area and to their target.

"Those pests think they're so smart..." Eggman Nega growled as he arrived at his secret base on Onyx Island and stormed into the control center for his final gambit: The Egg Destroyer. "I'll show them! I'll mount my camera to this rocket and turn the whole planet into a card! Then there will be no one left to doubt my place as the greatest genius of all time! Ohohohohohohoho!"

The area was silent in response to his claim.

"Hmm... I think I'm forgetting something... Ah! Of course! A place to enjoy my triumph!"

Nega gleefully smashed a large red button on the control panel.

"METEOR BASE LAUNCH IN T MINUS 10 MINUTES"

The location of the Asteroid Coaster was a series of rocky asteroids and metal faux-planetoids connected, if at all, by a series of thin rails across which zipped roller coaster cars.

"Welcome to the Asteroid Coaster," the P.A. system greeted as Rock, Sonic, and Tails stepped off the transport. "Accident-free for 45 minutes!"

Rock shook his head as he heard that, and fought the urge to do so again as he beheld the skeletal, spike-covered contraption that loosely resembled a roller coaster car. Any OSHA official would have had a fit simply by being within a mile of the thing.

"Please be sure your safety belt is properly buckled," the P.A. system continued as the three heroes got in, and Rock idly noted that the thing didn't have safety belts, or any kind of safety restraint for that matter, "or you at least have a really good grip on something."

"Hope you're ready, bro!" Sonic called back with a grin and Rock chuckled despite the seriousness of the overall situation. Even with their new friends captured, Sonic still enjoyed the thrill of it all.

"Just make sure you keep up, bro," Rock grinned back.

"That's the spirit!" Sonic and Tails both gave him thumbs up as the coaster started moving.

"This coaster is not for small children," the P.A. system gave one parting shot before they zoomed out into space. "Or big babies."

"Wooooohoooooo!" Roll whooped in delight as she shot forward in the train-themed coaster cars of Charge Mountain.

"Okay, this is pretty awesome!" Bass grinned like a maniac as the coaster took turns at speeds that would push the g-force tolerance of the average human to its limits.

Sally made it inside the base shortly before the whole thing began rumbling.

"METEOR BASE LAUNCH IN 5... 4... 3... 2..."

"Okay, what should we inspect next?" Roll asked regarding her official-business-and-totally-not-a-date-no-seriously.

"I think I want to challenge you to a cannon duel at Pirate Man's Cove," Bass looked far too eager at the prospect of blowing something up, even if it was supposed to be 'safe'.

"METEOR BASE LAUNCH."

Eggman Nega grinned like a certified madman as the entire structure began rumbling dangerously from the force needed to break away from its own foundations.

Bass reflexively shielded himself with his arm as the visually impressive, but otherwise relatively harmless, energy fireworks fired by his opponent's cannons impacted harmlessly against the hull of his own 'ship'. The impacts sending up notifications of the points being added to Roll's score for the targets she'd successfully hit.

"You asked for it!" he yelled back across the watery divide between them. "FIRE!"

"THIS DOESN'T SEEM VERY SABOTAGED TO ME!" Knuckles shouted as the base rocketed upwards at escape velocity, keeping all of the pairs off balance as they tried to penetrated its defenses.

"I THINK THE CHAOTIX SAID THEY SABOTAGED THE SUPER WEAPON!" Blues clarified.

"NEXT TIME HAVE THEM TAKE THE ENGINES OUT TOO!" Shadow growled.

Bass couldn't keep the smile from his face as he tore after his kinda-sorta girlfriend towards the Gyro Copters, right next to Napalm Man's Bumper Tanks and a short distance from part of the Battle and Chase compliant Turbo Track. She'd probably deny that this counted as a real date for whatever strange reasons she was refusing to explain to him, but he'd take it.

Rock landed on the receiving platform of the next large asteroid in the line. Having to literally jump from coaster car to coaster car had been... a bit harrowing. Even with an artificially contained atmosphere and partially reliable gravity, having to do that knowing that any mistimed jump would likely send him hurtling into something he'd much rather not be hurtled into had been nerve wracking.

Which of course meant that Sonic and Tails had enjoyed every second of it.

"Man, aside from kicking Eggman's tuckus, that is easily the coolest thing here!" Sonic grinned as the two waited patiently for Rock to readjust to solid ground.

"The Black Hole Parade starts in five minutes," the P.A. system chimed in. "Don't miss it. It's so entertaining, that it sucks you right in!"

"Yeah, I think we can pass on tha–" Tails began, only to be cut off as a deep violet blur shot into the three's midst and halted right in front of Rock's face

"He axa lo u g ?!" the thing, which seemed to be an eyeless violet wisp, instead having a pitch black jagged jack-o-lantern like mouth, with a round head with antenna arranged to make the head look like a spiral, gnashed its darkened mouth in Rock's face aggressively. "Alo ug um Fax ardu pp Jeso hax ail?!"

Tails fiddled with his translation device for a bit before shaking his head. "Sorry, even with my Loop experience in making the translator,

I still can't make out what nega-wisps are saying. I can tell you that energy readings indicate a lack of normal Hyper-Go-On energy, replaced with a more negative energy source, as is usual. The process tends to make them extremely aggressive."

"I can see that. And it's more like he's got a rage-distorted voice than true incoherence. Try adjusting for a really thick accent," (38) Rock corrected the fox before addressing the wisp. "Wo'lo jet um Faxardupp VcNesohaxail. Wo'lo wholo te chep whix pi saxavo axarr zo wisps who nud caxaptulow, dincrudick sovolaxar bliocts eb euls."

" Ke ew!" the violet nega-wisp spat. "Wh orp u s kot w hi x bel ha xa t who id te us! K ot whi x! Wh ult w hix! Po vee p! Cens umo! Me id ! M ei d! M ei d!"

The violet wisp merged with Rock rather forcefully, turning his armor the same angry violet color as the nega-wisp was.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: VIOLET VOID

Rock's eyes widened as he took stock of the weapon. "This... this is really dangerous. I don't think I want to use it unless we get swarmed...

"Hey, you're in luck then!" Sonic grinned and pointed to an advancing horde of Egg Pawns. "Here comes the welcoming committee."

"Okay then," Rock steadied himself as he stepped in front of the other two and pointed both hands at the oncoming robots. "VOID!"

A massive violet-rimmed black hole opened up in front of him and began sucking in everything in front of it, but strangely nothing behind it. As each Egg Pawn got sucked in, the directional singularity expanded and got more powerful, sucking in more and more foes and debris until Rock was afraid he'd lose all control and forcibly shut it off, the violet wisp disengaging when he did.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"W hax a w ha xa wh axa ! Ke t zo m! K et zo m ax arr!" the nega-wisp laughed as it surveyed the total lack of enemies to be found. " Ug' rr pe! Pu m'v ken nax a torr zo fig zloo a xaf uk ug!"

"Dude!" Sonic whistled as the wisp sped off. "That was sweet! Come on, let's go trash more of Baldy McNosehair's stuff and find where the geometry duo took Yacker and the others!"

"Stone Crusher?" Roll read off the sign. "Test your strength?"

"Dad probably just didn't want to use any of the bots he stole for theming his park."

"Probably. Wanna give it a shot anyway?"

"Damnit, where are they?" Rock growled as the trio blasted into another chamber on one of the largest asteroids along the massive coaster track.

"Eh, knowing Baldy McNosehair, they're probably hanging out somewhere close," Sonic shrugged.

"How about right here, youse mooks?" the gangster voice of Cubot sounded as the banged-up hermit crabmeat mech dropped from the ceiling. "We's gonna teach youse guys a lesson about messin' wit da boss's plans!"

"As if!" Sonic smirked. "You two couldn't take us on your best day!"

"Perhaps," Orbot's voice allowed. "But you are without wisp reinforcements and my scanners show you are currently low on stored alien energy to enhance yourselves. As things stand, your ability to harm this machine is at its weakest. Plus we've already delivered the aliens, so there's no worry about you rescuing them even if you do win."

"Um..." Tails pondered and realized that unless he or Sonic were willing to break the self-imposed 'baseline challenge run' restriction, then Orbot and Cubot had a very distinct advantage.

"Never stopped me before," Rock replied calmly as he formed his Mega Buster and began charging up. The charged shot dinged off of the thick armor without incident, but Rock didn't seem to care as he charged in, buster blazing.

"Hey," Sonic shrugged at Tails before he charged in with a Homing Attack of his own, "big blue's got a point."

"Huh..." Tails considered that before joining the melee without bringing any fancy looping powers to the mix.

Homing Attack after Buster Shot after Homing Attack bounced off the thick armor of the mech and the heroes dodged lasers, spiked punches, and even missiles for almost a minute until a lucky swing of the machine's fists caught Rock full on and slammed him into the ground.

"Gotcha!" Cubot cheered as the mech ignored Sonic's and Tails's attempts to stop it and reared back for a two-fisted attack on the prone robot from either side. "Say goodnight Mega Copper!"

"FRENZY!" (39)

Everyone present stared at the eyeless bold purple male-form robot, his only adornments being a pair of long bull-like horns jutting upwards from his head like ears or antenna and a jagged black mouth, that had slammed into the ground right over Rock's downed form and caught the spiked fists like they were nothing. The Purple Man then flexed and pulled sharply, tearing one of the mech's arms straight out of its connecting joint.

"Aaaah!" Orbot panicked as the Purple Man flipped the arm around and prepared to swing it like an oversized mace. "Counterattack!"

"Eat missiles, ya mook!" Cubot's voice heralded the firing of lots of missiles, which promptly aimed themselves at the newcomer.

"VOID!" a deep violet eyeless female model robot with the same kind of jagged black mouth landed behind the mech and formed a directional singularity that sucked up all the missiles, leaving the mech wide open.

"FRENZY!" the overhead impact caved in a large portion of the armor and nearly embedded the mech in the steel floor.

"What now?" Cubot asked nervously as the Purple Man and the Violet Woman were joined by a third challenger, this one pitch black all over a body composed of orbs, save for an angry dark pink portion of the head which could have been an oddly-shaped visor or another jagged mouth.

"BOMB!" the Black Man formed a massive spherical explosive with a lit fuse in one hand and reared back to pitch it.

"Eject!" Orbot cried out as the explosive sphere was hurled at their downed war machine. "Eject!"

KABOOM! the fiery explosion sprayed armor fragments in every direction, but something large managed to escape most of the blast damage and rocket out of the inferno even as it formed. A moment after it exited the smoke, Rock, Sonic, and Tails recognized it as an oversized motobug.

"After them!" Sonic yelled out as he took off in hot pursuit.

With NICOLE still out of commission, Sally found herself unable to hack into the base's systems to find where she needed to go, which left her having to fall back on an old standby: Following the path of destruction the others left in their own infiltration attempts.

It wasn't pretty, especially the holes that Knuckles and Omega left, but it worked.

The chase went on for longer than Sonic would have liked, crossing facilities, metal planet-like structures, and the intervening space while battling more of Eggman's robots. The stretch where an army of motobugs had come to back up the larger one that Orbot and Cubot were driving had been particularly annoying, and Eggman's two lackeys had proved much slipperier than expected, but it had only been a matter of time and dedication.

"Give it up you two!" Tails yelled as he sideswiped the large motobug in a diving maneuver as Sonic came up alongside.

"Not a chance, ya big–!"

"Last stop!" Sonic cut them off with a sidestep slam that sent the one-wheeled machine squealing out of control. "Take it away big blue!"

"Oh, dear..." Orbot lamented.

"Mega Buster!" Rock fired a shot that blew the large tire the machine drove on apart, sending it into a tumbling crash.

"BOMB!" the Black Man joined the fray by throwing one of his large explosives at the all-but-destroyed machine.

"Ack! Eject! Close blast doors!" Orbot yelled as the bomb arced closer. Right before impact, a red and black sphere along with a yellow and black cube shot out of the large motobug and through a set of closing steel doors right before the bomb impacted, blowing the large motobug into slag and stray metal bits.

As the three heroes pulled themselves up from where the blast wave had tossed them, the Purple Man and the Violet Woman caught up. Just in time for a second set of blast doors to close behind them.

"Uh-oh..." Sonic said as the walls of the chamber the six found themselves in changed from glowing blue to glowing red and began to close in on them.

"In space," the P.A. system announced, sounding suddenly more sinister than it had before, "nobody can hear you scream. Except for the person next to you, so please be considerate of others. Nobody likes a screamer."

"Wwwhhooooooaaaaaaapmmmmmppphhhhhh!"

Roll laughed hysterically at the sight of Bass faceplanted into the sand of Wave Beach after wiping out on his surfboard.

"FRENZY!" the Purple Man's assault tore great scratches in the blast doors, but they remained firmly shut.

"VOID!" the directional singularity of the Violet Woman did even less.

"BOMB!" the Black Man reared back to hurl his explosives.

"Wait!" Rock warned too little too late.

BOOM!

The blast blew them all back off their feet, and left the doors bit more scorched, but still intact as the glowing red walls closed ever inwards.

"A standard blast won't work!" Rock yelled at the color masters. "With doors that thick, the blast will just get redirected elsewhere!"

"Like back at us!" Sonic rubbed his head.

"You need a shaped charge to force the blast at the doors before it'll do any real damage!" Rock finished.

The Black Man looked at Rock curiously, his glowing dark pink visor/mouth thing meeting the blue bomber's expression, and then the color master nodded and walked up to the doors where his body began to start pulsing with a reddish tinge that grew brighter as the walls closed in.

"Whoa!" Tails objected. "We didn't mean make the blast bigger!"

"If you keep that up, you're going to self destruct!" Rock added with concern.

The Black Man turned his head from the damaged blast doors and looked at Rock as if to say 'that's the idea' before shooting him a thumbs up, the pulsing red glow of his body contracting into an area on his chest that couldn't be seen from behind and illuminated the blast doors as the color master pressed himself to them.

"B O MB!"

KRACKABOOM!

The three heroes shielded themselves from the backlash, and when they realized they hadn't been incinerated, they looked up to see a double-door sized hole blown in the blast doors in the middle of which floated a black sphere, with two bubble-like additions on either side, three small tendrils and a jagged dark pink mouth/visor.

"U g ce mi ck?" the black wisp asked as the remaining two color masters stepped through the hole, "el pe wo wha xav o te fred an Faxar dupp Jeso haxail eu lsorv os?"

"We are so outta here!" Sonic led the dash before the walls finished closing on them, and the group got a look at what lay beyond the chamber they'd been trapped in.

"Dear maker..." Rock whispered in horror.

"The space sickness you will eventually get," the P.A. system announced as they all looked out from the ledge they found themselves on over a massive chamber filled with clear capsules that each held large numbers of wisps, "is not the responsibility of Eggman's Incredible Interstellar Amusement Park, or its subsidiaries. Send any complaints to the inventor of space. Thank you."

"I don't think that's space sickness I'm feeling..." Rock did his best to steady himself as he watched the conveyors in the ceiling carry capsules of wisps to a center chamber and then dump them in, a dark purple-violet energy flowing out in pipes that went straight into the floor.

"W o'm o f oon reek ick b el zi s pra xac o..." the black wisp growled thickly, "Rot nud fred dit te sm ithol oons! Fu ln ! Ox pre do! Po chle upp! Fe m f! Fem f ! F e–"

"No," Rock shook his head despite wanting to agree with the angry black wisp. "That might hurt the other wisps. We need to–"

A sound of shattering objects was heard nearby and Rock whipped his head to see the Purple Man standing over a lone capsule on their ledge and the group of pointy U-headed purple wisps all sporting jagged black grins.

"Zo n s ma x as k d i t!" one gnashed.

"Floa x ak dit !" another gnawed.

" Lo ct d it!" yet another growled.

"Li p **!"

"C lu nst!"

"Po chle upp!"

"B lon zupp!" they began chanting as they zoomed towards the watching heroes, "Blo nzu pp! Blonz up p!"

Three of the purple nega-wisps merged with Tails, Sonic, and Rock, the latter's armor turning a deep purple all over.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: PURPLE FRENZY

Rock nearly doubled over at the feeling he got. There was power in the weapon, sure, but there was also a need. A need to destroy. To rampage until everything in sight lay broken before him.

"Yo, bro, you okay?" Sonic asked with some worry.

"Fine," Rock shook his head clear and looked out over the chamber again. He supposed it was fortunate that everything in sight was something he'd want to break anyway.

"Then let's go!" Sonic yelled as he led the jump over the ledge to the area below.

Four voices yelled out "FRENZY!" and only sounds of total destruction followed.

"Go again?" Roll asked sweetly, holding the practice sword at her downed opponent.

Bass groaned from the floor of Sword Man's dojo and seriously contemplated saying he'd had enough.

"Ey, boss man, youse get da special package we sent ya?" Cubot asked as the surveillance cameras of the Asteroid Coaster followed the rampant destruction of the five remaining intruders. Cries of "FRENZY!", "VOID!", and "BOMB!" periodically emanated from the speakers, heralding more destruction of the facilities and their defenses.

"Yes," Eggman pinched the bridge of his nose on the other end of the communication after hearing Cubot's latest voice chip. "Though I seem to be missing a few from the collection..."

"My apologies, boss," Orbot interjected, "but the last three are... proving a bit more problematic. Are you sure we can't send you some that we already have in custody?"

"No..." Dr. Eggman insisted. "That upstart Albert wants to send those things against me, then I'll respond by using the hapless pilots he enlisted to power my response and no others! That'll prove who's the real genius! Now get on it and don't come back until you have them!"

"And da Mega Copper an' 'is partners?" Cubot asked.

"You had your chance," Eggman folded his hands together in front of his face. "Let Frigate Skullian take care of them..."

"Hold it right there, Nega!" Silver declared as the allied groups burts into the launch chamber.

"Hohoho!" Eggman Nega laughed from his seat in the cockpit of the Egg Destroyer rocket, a seat in the rocket's fore section, just behind a stylized head in Nega's own image that was the rocket's tip. "You're too late! With the power of the Master Emerald card, I've gathered enough energy to turn the entire planet into a card! After a lifetime of being denied my recognition as the world's most brilliant mind due to Eggman's legacy tainting my heritage, I was finally set to erase him and his failures from history and take my rightful place! But thanks to your meddling I cannot change the future how I want, so I'll destroy it entirely! Ohohohohoho!"

"You're even more insane than I thought," Quint stated bluntly.

"EGG DESTROYER LAUNCH IN T MINUS TWENTY SECONDS."

"Metal Sonic!" Nega declared, drawing everyone's attention to the robot hedgehog in the room. "Keep them busy until launch!"

"If I must, you waste of air," the creation intoned before launching itself at the gathering who had already taken combat stances. "I shall come for you soon enough..."

Metal Sonic launched himself at the group at the same time a blur hurtled over them and straight at the robot. With a crash of metal, Sally slammed Extreme Gear first into Metal Sonic's Black Shield.

"EGG DESTROYER LAUNCH IN T MINUS TEN SECONDS."

"Go!" Sally ordered as she slashed at Metal Sonic with her wrist-mounted energy blades the moment his barrier dropped. "Stop the rocket!"

"NINE."

"You are determined to die first, aren't you?" the robot intoned rhetorically.

"EIGHT."

"I can–" Sally blocked the robot's clawed swipe.

"SEVEN."

"–handle Metal Sonic!"

"SIX."

"Well, actually Sal," Bunnie began, "we got a message that–"

"FIVE." the engines on the rocket flared to life, and everyone who was expecting it to blow up from sabotage got worried when it seemed to work just fine.

"That doesn't look sabotaged to me..." Shadow's eyes narrowed as Sally parried another attack from Metal Sonic.

"FOUR."

"Ohohoho!" Nega laughed. "As if anyone could sabotage my genius!"

"THREE."

Nega held up three cards in his hand and grinned like a maniac. "By turning these cards to the final energy needed–"

"TWO."

"–the world will be mine!" Nega finished with a boomingly insane laugh.

"Rouge! Treble!" Shadow growled as he recognized two of the cards.

"Amy!" Antoine and Bunny gasped on recognizing the third.

"ONE."

"Nice knowing you! Ohohoho!"

"CHAOS CONTROL!" Shadow yelled as he formed a bubble around himself and seven of his allies, Sally Acorn being just too far away to include, and warped them onto the rocket.

"EGG DESTROYER LAUNCH."

As the flames burst out of the rocket's engines, Metal Sonic raised his Black Shield and Sally formed a large bubble of null gravity that the held the fire at bay. Both combatants glared at each other across the flames as the Egg Destroyer climbed up out of the Meteor Base and towards its destructive purpose.

Tails's form of a black orb with glowing dark pink eyes and a jagged mouth, with two burning fuses, plummeted towards the last guardian barring the way towards the generator area. Despite their wholesale destruction of capsules holding the various wisps, they had found no sign of Yacker or the other color master wisps.

The giant mechanical eye with orange-hot barriers and a gravitational field was blown to smithereens on contact and Tails emerged from the destruction unscathed with the black wisp trailing him.

"Fe e m, fa xa fu p p!" the black wisp chortled as the door out opened up and the others joined them.

Jumping down, the group passed by a series of rapidly opening blast doors until they landed in a chamber that would lead to the exterior area where the generator was.

A chamber which was apparently the hangar for a weapons platform held aloft by a pair of skull-like dirigibles with glowing acid-green eyes.

"Take cover!" Rock yelled as the craft opened fire on all of them, ducking behind a stack of large metal crates, swiftly joined by the others.

"Okay," Sonic began as the hangar was swiftly filled with bullets and explosions, "now what do we... why are you stretching?"

"Calibration of my servos to make sure nothing slips out of alignment during high activity," Rock replied.

"So..." Sonic began doing a few stretches himself, "pretty much the same reason I do them."

"Close enough," Tails shrugged in his own stretch, ignoring the odd eyeless looks from the black wisp and the two remaining color masters. (40)

"Okay," Rock nodded as he finished calibrations. "Sonic and Tails, keep that thing busy. You," he pointed to the black wisp, "with me. And I'm going to need you," he pointed to the Purple Man, "to throw me and Violet Woman up and over that thing's weapons. Got it?"

"W ha xa wha xa w hax a ! W o ke nn axa fr ed w h ix a n !" the black wisp cackled as he joined with Rock, turning the robot hero's armor blacker than the depths of space.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: BLACK BOMB

"Okay, we're on the rocket," Proto Man noted. "Somehow able to breathe despite hurtling through space and with a large number of defensive weapons pointed at us."

"Same ol', same ol' Sugah-Red," Bunnie grinned. "What say y'all take the ones on th–"

"I shall eliminate the defenses," Omega interrupted, several portions of his armor sliding back to reveal a rather ludicrous amount of barrels for a being of his size. "The rest of you eliminate Nega."

"A sound plan," Quint nodded. "Let's go."

"Hmph," Shadow smirked and dashed forwards. "I'll take him on my own..."

"You shall be needink to be fastair zan zat!" Antoine darted after the dark hedgehog.

"Hey!" Knuckles yelled as the rest of the group joined in the rush up the rocket towards the cockpit. "Save some for me!"

"Preparing to initiate forcible separation procedures," Omega intoned as he picked his targets.

"Please beware of the spikes on the asteroid coaster, they are sharp. Really? We have to warn people abo–"

Rock tuned out the P.A. system as he did his best to relax under the sheer destructive power now at his disposal, along with the urge to burn and destroy everything around him, listening to Sonic and Tails darting about and distracting the latest guardian of Eggman's. "Now!"

"FRENZY!" the Purple Man yelled as he grabbed Rock and heaved him high into the air of the hangar. High enough to be out of the weapon platform's main firing arc.

"BOMB!" Rock yelled as he began his descent, throwing a large round explosive as he hurtled towards the weaponized craft.

The explosion rocked the craft, causing a temporary halt to its weapons fire and Rock heard the sound of repeated Homing Attacks from Sonic and Tails as he landed on the craft and took stock. The craft was damaged, but still operational. And it was also aiming defensive weapons on the upper portion at him.

"VOID!" Rock braced himself against the pull as the directional singularity of the Violet Woman swallowed up the weapons fire that was meant for him.

"Hey, where do you think you're going?" Sonic's call came right as the craft began to move towards the hangar's exit.

"BOMB!" Rock aimed straight for one of those glowing acid-green things, the domed tops designed in a caricature of Eggman's face, pistoning out of the skull-like dirigibles. The explosion blew a large portion of the hover device apart and the whole craft began to list dangerously to one side, but it not only kept moving, it began to pick up speed.

"FRENZY!" the Purple Man just barely landed on board and dug sharpened claws into the metal armor as he hauled himself up.

"A couple more good hits should do it," Rock noted from the crouching position he'd taken to stabilize his footing as the Violet Woman sucked up more retaliation fire with her weapon. "Then we can..." he trailed off as something from his copy chip scan registered.

"FRENZY!" the Purple Man ripped a huge chunk of armor out of the less damaged skull dirigible thing and the craft began to shake dangerously.

"Wait!" Rock called out. "This thing's got a..." he felt the system he'd caught with his still-going copy chip scan activate, "...self-destruct mechanism."

"What?!" Tails shouted out from below. "How big?"

"With its unspent munitions, big enough to take out most of this asteroid!" Rock called back. "I'm not sure we can get clear in time!"

"Aw, man..." Sonic's voice groused as the clang of another weapon emplacement falling off rang out.

Rock noted the Purple Man and the Violet Woman looking at each other for a moment. "What are you two thinking...?"

Rock's question trailed off as he watched the Violet Woman begin to glow with a deep violet light.

"No... No, you can't!" he protested as the Purple Man grabbed him. "It's too dangerous!"

"FRENZY!" the Purple Man jumped with Rock in tow, sailing a good ways away from the craft towards the exterior surface of the asteroid.

"What's going on?" Sonic asked as he and Tails skidded to a halt next to the two. "Do we have a plan or what?"

"Violet Woman is going to–"

"VO / D!"

BRACKABOO oooooooooooooossssshhhhh...*

The craft's explosion immediately reversed in on itself as a miniature violet-rimmed singularity sucked the entire blast in, debris and all. In moments, the singularity dissipated to show nothing save for a lone floating violet wisp where the Violet Woman had just been.

"You have proven to be quite the persistent adversary," Metal Sonic noted as Sally settled to the floor and took up a combat stance, her energy wrist-blades at the ready.

"You have no idea."

"I almost believe you," Metal Sonic intoned and began crackling with energy as a blazing aura formed around him. "But the same could be said of you in regards to myself. V. Maximum Overdrive: Engage."

" Fw axa wh a x a wh a x a!" the black wisp cackled as he and the violet wisp zoomed ahead of the group towards the generator. "Zax at w ax as axaw ose mo!"

"Still worried me!" Rock called after them, taking his time walking towards the generator.

" C emo e n tre wpe kos!" the violet wisp called back. "Caxa tst a n **!"

"Did she just...?" Sonic turned to Tails.

"Call you slow?" Tails couldn't hide his amusement as he fiddled with his adjusted translator. "Either that or a snack."

"I think the first is somewhat less creepy," Sonic shuddered before turning back. "Hey! No one calls me–Look out!"

" Wh u h ?" the two nega wisps whipped around just in time to be sucked up by Orbot and Cubot holding what looked like glorified vacuum cleaners.

"You let them go!" Tails yelled as he dashed forwards, Sonic and Rock following immediately behind.

"Sorry, can't stay," Orbot waved as the ground beneath the two opened up, allowing Eggman's lackeys to fall through.

"NO!"

Whoever had yelled did so fruitlessly as the trapdoor closed immediately behind the two and their prisoners.

"Remember to try one of our new Space Pops! All the flavor of outer space, with only half the radiation!"

"Damnit!" Sonic fumed as Rock pounded uselessly on the trapdoor. "Come on, let's go after them!"

"F..."

"No..." Rock's quiet voice forced the hedgehog to stop himself. "We... we still have to shut down the generator first..."

"F–F..."

"I know!" Sonic paced furiously. "That doesn't mean I have to like it!"

"FR... F–FR..."

"I'll get started on it," Tails took out his tools and flew himself over to the generator.

"F–FR... FR–F–FRE..."

Rock looked over and saw the Purple Man hunched over emanating barely contained sparks of purple energy, and realized that the color master had just watched the last of his friends snatched up right in front of him. Walking over, he reached out to put a comforting hand on the wisp-piloted robot's shoulder. "I'm so–"

"FR E NZY!"

The swipe of Purple Man's arm tore his fingers through Rock's chest armor like it was made of paper, hurtling the blue bomber backwards. (41)

"Ohohohoho!" Nega laughed even as the Egg Destroyer shuddered around him and the damage reports blared an insistent red and held up a few cards instead and looked them over. "In a few moments I'll have reached the necessary distance to turn the planet into a card! And even better, I'll have used the friends of my enemies to make it happen! Victory is mine! Preparing for full card energy conver–!"

His seat lurched violently as the cockpit module was struck multiple times in succession, causing the cards to fly out of his hand even as a flash of light heralded the depositing of a weight on his portly stomach.

"I'll just take these," Shadow the Hedgehog grabbed the dropped cards. "CHAOS CONTROL!"

Nega scrambled upright as the black hedgehog vanished and examined his control panel, and noticed something missing. 'What the?! The blasted rodent took the Master Emerald card too?!'

Sally grit her teeth as she rolled out of the way of Metal Sonic's V. Maximum Overdrive charge again and watched it tear through another wall in Eggman Nega's Meteor Base. Wasting no time, she dashed in the opposite direction before Metal Sonic came back through the wall.

Just in time for his high energy aura to give out.

Sally took the opening for all it was worth and roundhouse kicked the robot hedgehog hard enough to send him flying while his systems recovered from the overcharge and activated her energy wrist blades for a follow-up attack. Metal Sonic hit the floor hard, bounced, and recovered enough to flip to his feet and produce a copy of Sally's energy blades from his own wrists and meet her charge, their blades locking together.

Sally went for a double-kick to the robot's face, only to have him twist hard the moment her feet left the floor and throw her at a wall. She twisted acrobatically to land feet-first on the wall and spring straight back at her foe.

Rock fought to maintain awareness despite his protesting systems. The opening blow from Purple Man had left his systems at less than a quarter of operational integrity. And he was probably going to need every ounce left to just stay alive.

A nearby crash and a spray of rings resulted from Sonic's Spin Dash form being spiked into the asteroid's terrain.

"Okay, that's..." Sonic shook his head as he tried to stand. "That's gonna cost ya... All three of ya... As soon as the galaxy stops spinning..."

"Sonic!" Tails called out, abandoning his own charge and having also clearly foregone his work on the still-active generator.

"I've got this you two," Rock told his friends as, instead of following up on the attack, the glowing Purple Man began tearing up the terrain.

"Like heck!" Sonic protested.

"Yeah, he nearly tore you in half with his first blow!" Tails added. "We can't leave him under Eggman's control."

"Does..." Rock forced himself to stand, "does he look controlled to you?"

"FREN Z Y! FRE N ZY!" the color master wailed as he kept tearing up everything within reach in a berserk rage without rhyme or reason.

"Now that you mention it..." Sonic trailed off. "Still, you're barely holding together as it is, bro. What if your plan doesn't work?"

"Then you get to take my IC chip back to dad and say you told me so," Rock replied, his armor turning brown and white as he activated the Strong Arm weapon.

"...Good luck..." Tails offered as the damaged Rock charged straight into danger.

"F R ENZY!"

Rock ducked under the wild backhand swipe and came up to meet the follow-up clawed thrust with an open hand, catching the blow and interlocking his fingers with Purple Man's even as damage warnings flared despite the enhanced hydraulics matching the color master's strength. The first hand came back for another attack and Rock repeated the gesture, damage warnings flaring again upon immobilizing the second hand.

" F RE–"

The color master's berserk struggling was cut off by Rock slamming his forehead into Purple Man's own, right between where his horns sprouted.

"Cut it out right now!" the blue bomber yelled as he struggled to keep his hold despite his enhanced strength. "I know you're furious! Hurt, angry! Eggman's lackeys took your friends!"

"F–"

" BUT THEY WERE MY FRIENDS TOO! "

Purple Man's struggles halted so suddenly that Rock almost overbalanced and his bright aura of purple energy began to wane.

"I haven't known any of you that long, but you've all been the best. White, cyan, green, yellow, red, blue, ivory, orange, pink, gray, indigo, magenta, crimson, violet, black, and purple," Rock swore that if Purple Man had possessed eyes, they'd have blinked in astonishment. "Yes, you. You're my friend too, even after taking a chunk out of me. And I don't abandon my friends. Not to Eggman and certainly not to their own pain."

It was astounding how utterly and completely lost a face could look with only a mouth for expression.

"And as your friend, I promise you we'll get them back. We'll get them all back from Baldy McNosehair. I haven't let him get away with this kind of thing yet, and I'm not going to start now."

Slowly, the tension in Purple Man's limbs released and the color master sagged until his only support was a critically damaged Rock as the wisp-piloted robot convulsed like a sobbing lifeform. (42)

"About time!" Rouge complained as she was released from her card. "It was getting stuffy in there!" She didn't mention how embarrassing it had been to be caught off guard by Nega like that again as a newly released Treble gave a growl of agreement.

"Why couldn't Sonic have come to save me?" Amy pouted after smoothing her dress out.

"You're welcome, sugah," Bunnie gave the pink hedgehog a half-lidded gaze as what remained of the Egg Destroyer turned to lock the planet below into its sights. "Now how 'bout helping us out here afore Nega traps Sonic and everyone else in his little ol' cards?"

"It's over Nega!" Quint yelled out as Amy was processing that with wide eyes, the green future-forged robot thrusting the point of Sakugarne into one of the connecting clamps keeping Nega's control module attached to the rocket. The jackhammer spike cracked the metal before being pistoned forward and making the clamp explode.

On the other side, Treble gave a loud growl as he tore another clamp out with his steel teeth and Rouge broke another with a kick from her pointed shoes.

"Oh, all right!" Amy huffed and hefted her Piko hammer and followed the others in a charge at the damaged module, arriving last and giving a wide-arced upward swing that broke the remaining connections and sent the command module soaring away from the rocket.

"It's no use you fools!" Nega laughed as Silver's psychokinetic aura snagged the detached unit in its grasp. "I may not have the energy to turn the whole planet into one of my cards, but with my quick adjustments I can still turn part of it into one! Let's see how long it lasts with a chunk missing! Ohohohoh–"

In the same moment that he pressed the button, Nega glanced out of his clear bubble to see the tip of his rocket with the camera mounted there pointed straight at him before the flash went off.

A moment later and a card with a picture of the Egg Destroyer's command module containing Eggman Nega with a half-formed look of shock was floating through space. (43)

Sally was having trouble. She and Metal Sonic were too evenly matched with only the skills he'd stolen from her taken into account. Even if this weren't a baseline challenge run, the fact that most of Sally's higher-end skills gained in the Loops relied on NICOLE to work and since NICOLE was still out of commission... Sure, she could probably use her connection to the Source to enter her Super mode, but she still hadn't quite gotten that working right without something like the Chaos Emeralds to help the transformation. At best, she'd need more time to concentrate than Metal Sonic would ever let her take.

"Surrender to the inevitable," the robot hedgehog intoned. "Your resistance is futile."

As it was, it was going to take a miracle to get her out of this alive. If only NICOLE were still able to help her...

Almost as if something had heard the thought, a form of purple, brown, and black coalesced behind Metal Sonic and raised a limb to strike. Before the blow could land, Metal Sonic had whipped around and sent a clawed backhand through the incompletely formed, and badly glitched, holographic body of NICOLE, shattering it into motes of light.

But his attention had been divided, and right then that was all Sally needed. A moment later and Metal Sonic looked down to see the blue energy tip of Sally's one freed energy wrist blade protruding from his chest.

"You... fi-ight hard..." Metal Sonic sparked as systems began failing, "to keEp yOur p-p-pAiNnnNnnnNnNnNNNnnnn..."

"No," Sally gulped in deep breaths of air. "I fight hard to overcome it."

It had taken the full contents of an E-Tank that Sonic had dramatically pulled out of his shoe and the entire ride back to Tropical Resort from the Asteroid Coaster, but Rock was back to full operating capacity.

"Please feel free to fill out a brief survey after your visit," the transport's announcer relayed helpfully as the four beings stepped off. "Your opinions matter to us. Unless you didn't have fun, then we don't care."

"Oh, go suck your own ego," Sonic made a childish gesture as he walked away.

"I wonder if that's what makes him so fat," Tails pondered as the last remnants of the five tractor beams connecting the stolen mini-planets (and one space fleet) to Eggmanland finished unraveling. "I mean, his ego's got to be high in everything that's bad for you."

"Ugh, that's a mental image I can do without," Sonic rolled his eyes as a subdued Purple Man gave him an odd look. "So when do you think Eggman's gonna try his final move?"

"Probably as soon as we join that party over there," Rock pointed at a group of wisps cheerfully dancing through the air.

"Sally?" Rotor asked as he answered the call made from Nega's own control center. "Why aren't you using NICOLE to contact me?"

"NICOLE's... recovering from a virus Metal Sonic infected her with," Sally admitted. "I think she'll be fine eventually, but it hit her pretty hard."

"If I've learned anything about her, it's that NICOLE's as much of a fighter as you are, Sally," the walrus offered a comforting smile. "But I'm sure that's not the only reason you called."

"No, I–"

"Proto Man to Princess Sally," another voice sounded out. "Come in, Sally."

Blinking, Sally connected the communication to the current call to Rotor. "This is Sally. How'd you know I was here?"

"We guessed," the blunt reply came. "Plus it's fairly urgent. The rocket's guidance systems were damaged in the fight and we need help guiding it back to the Meteor Base if we want anything resembling a safe landing. Can you help?"

"This is Rotor, on line from Project Sky Patrol," the walrus answered. "If Sally connects me to the base's systems, we can guide you all home."

"Thank you. Proto Man over and out."

"Ohohohoho!"

"Ook! Zo Faxardupp Jesohaxail!"

The wisp party came grinding to a halt as a giant image of Dr. Eggman appeared above them.

"You all didn't actually think you'd won because you destroyed my generators, did you?" the man asked with a madly confident grin.

"Yeah, kinda," Sonic answered with an equally confident smirk. "You know how this works Baldy McNosehair. We kick your butt, you rant and rave a bit, try something desperate and then we kick your butt even more. Why not save us all the trouble and just surrender gracefully for once?"

"Cheeky little rodent," Eggman fumed for a moment, before grinning again. "But perhaps you haven't realized that this entire amusement park is in fact a mind control cannon aimed right at the planet below! One with enough energy to enslave the entire world."

"And maybe you haven't realized how much we've trashed tearing your park up?" Sonic grinned right back. "How much you wanna bet your device has a leak somewhere?"

"Er..." Eggman suddenly looked uncertain.

"I'd take dat bet boss," Cubot's voice cut in from the side.

"Oh, yes," Orbot added. "Especially since the system integrity reports came back positive."

"Er..." Now it was Sonic's turn to look uncertain.

"He's right Sonic," Tails gulped, dropping a pair of binoculars from his eyes. "There's no rupture in any of his towers..." the add-on of 'this time' was left off, though clearly implied.

"Ohohoho!" Eggman guffawed. "It seems I really do get to have the last laugh this time!"

"Last laugh?" Orbot's voice sounded puzzled. "How is laughing last special? Isn't that like being the slowest one to get the joke?"

The heroes (and a few wisps) stifled involuntary chuckles as Cubot's response was heard. "Yeah, I laugh last all the time! People look at me like I'm an idiot, forgeddabout it!"

"Oh, shut up!" Eggman roared before turning back to the heroes as the view panned out to show a lever rising up out of the floor in front of him. Eggman grasped the lever, but paused as he noted the calm gaze of Mega Man boring into him. "What? Nothing to say before I claim victory Mega Dunce?"

"Three things," Rock folded his arms pointedly. "First: Before even coming here, I was certain you were up to no good. Second: I've known exactly what your park is since facing your prototype at Starlight Carnival. Third: While Sonic and Tails seem content to leave things to chance, I prefer not to if I can help it."

"What did you do?"

"Pull the lever and find out."

Eggman and Mega Man stood and stared at each other for several moments, neither moving, blinking, or speaking.

"A superb bluff," Eggman grinned finally, "but all for naught. Because soon the world will have only one thing on its mind."

"What, boss?"

"Me."

And with that, Eggman threw the switch. The very next instant, the lights on his end of the transmission turned red and alarms began blaring.

"What?! What's going on?" Eggman looked around frantically as Rock allowed himself a victorious smirk as a massive nebulous cloud of purplish energy began streaming from the towers ringing the park. "Why is my precious alien energy being vented into space?!"

"Hey Eggface!" a new voice drawled as the image of Eggman squashed into half its original space to make room for a second showing the toothy grin of a certain green crocodile mobian. "How do you like them apples?"

"The Chaotix?!" Eggman stared from his end as the face retracted to show several others. "But... But..." (44)

"I'm sure you're aware of our agency's policy," Espio stated calmly, "of not acting against clients."

"Except that only applies to paying clients in good standing," Vector's grin only grew wider. "And you've never paid a cent. We have a completely different policy for that."

"Yep!" Charmy chirped as he buzzed around excitedly. "You know our policy!"

"T-The way we f-figure," Ray stuttered as he worked a calculator, "af-fter interest and-d-d-d f-false p-pretense fees and-d-d..."

"Suffice to say," Mighty concluded with a smirk, "one interstellar amusement park should just about cover it."

"YOU CAN'T HAVE MY PARK!" Eggman's face turned pure red in his fury.

"This is a recording, by the way," Shade added with a smirk. "We're already back on the surface."

"We aren't going to take your park," Vector's grin turned downright malicious. "We're, well," he gestured to the silent form of Sniper Joe who slowly pointed a finger gun directly ahead of himself and Eggman's face paled like it was pointed straight at him (45).

"Boom."

One of the massive outer towers exploded with a KABOOM! that shook the entire Tropical Paradise. An explosion that was repeated by the other outer and inner towers shortly afterwards.

CHAKABOOM!

CRACKABOOM!

SHOOMBALABOOM!

BOOMBOOMBOOM!

BABOOMTISH!

BOOMSHAKALAKALAKA!

BARACKOBOOMA!

The landing back on Meteor Base had been... Well, good enough for the passengers. Not so good for Nega's rocket. About the only thing that was still intact was the camera mounted to the front, which Quint had swiftly claimed.

"So you're not turning the Master Emerald back yet?" Rouge asked.

"Not until I get it back to Angel Island," Knuckles replied. "It's a lot easier to transport this way."

"Easier to pickpocket too," Rouge grinned.

"Please don't," Blues sighed heavily.

"You know, I wonder why the Chaotix's sabotage didn't do anything?" Silver wondered.

"Actually, from what I could tell, they didn't sabotage the rocket," Blues informed the hedgehog from the future. "Charmy probably mixed up clients again."

"Huh... Wonder what they did sabotage..."

"Sally?" Rotor asked from the open channel where he and the princess were hacking the base's systems to re-enter the atmosphere. "We may have a problem."

"What's that?"

"I located a section on the schematics labeled 'card collection storage'," Rotor informed her, getting most everyone else's attention. "Apparently, the chamber ruptured on launch and the contents were scattered. There's no way of knowing what, or who, was trapped in all of those cards, or where they ended up."

"It seems we'll have to find and release all of them before destroying Nega's camera..." Quint mused.

"Bet we can get more than the rest of y'all!" Bunnie challenged after sharing a quick glance with her husband.

"You're on!" Shadow and Knuckles accepted immediately.

"No!" Eggman stared in disbelief as alarms of all types blared in his office. "This can't be happening! It's not possible!"

In a rage, he kicked his hovering chair, sending it bouncing over the room, sweeping up a staring Cubot, dropping him off, and coming to rest right where it had been in the first place.

"Yo, whaddya mean impossible?" Cubot asked as his boss progressed to the sobbing stage of his tantrum. "Your plans've been crushed by Mega Man for several times longer dan I've been active. And when it ain't him, it's Sonic. Usually wit somma deir buddies in tow. Dey stop you like it's deir job or somethin'. In fact, I can't tink of a plan dose mooks didn't stop."

"What are you talking about?" Eggman regressed to the disbelieving rage part of his tantrum. "They haven't stopped all of my plans!"

"Name one."

Eggman opened his mouth, only to come up completely short. Even his initial takeover attempt, back when the bothersome hedgehog was still an inept child, had come to naught thanks to that horrid blue robot.

"I don't think I've ever seen the boss speechless. Nice one, pal," Orbot commented before slapping his compatriot on the back. Cubot instantly straightened stiffly and his head made a full rotation.

"Hey, thanks buddy!" the yellow and black minion replied in a high voice that was some terrible offspring of a squeak and a screech. "Hey! My voice... It's back!"

"Ah, the sweet sound my auditory processors know and love," Orbot seemed pleased as Dr. Eggman grumbled about remembering why he'd had Cubot's voice chip changed in the first place.

"But none of it matters," Eggman growled, his face gaining a manic look devoid of sanity as the rumbling of Eggmanland only grew in intensity. "I knew what my foes were capable of. I knew this kind of setback could happen. I may have planned for total victory, but I also prepared for just this kind of eventuality! My final weapon is ready enough to remove the perpetual obstacles in my path! And once they're dealt with, I will deal with all of their allies in turn!"

Orbot and Cubot both gulped and backed away from their boss.

"I! WILL! CRUSH! EVERYONE! "

"Critical system failure!" the P.A. system announced as Sonic, Rock, Tails, and Purple Man dashed headlong up, or down depending on your perspective, the umbilical tether for the space elevator storage hangar. The one they'd ridden all the way to the park proper having been buried under the debris of the arrival hangar. "Repeat: Critical system failure! All attraction access is temporarily suspended. Please exit the park via the emergency exit ahead. This is all your fault."

"And I'm glad!" Sonic yelled back as Rock and Tails took out a small wave of flying something-or-others. He hadn't spared them enough of a look to tell.

"Less talking, more running!" Rock yelled. "Even with tapping the power cores in Eggman's bots to recharge it, the Sonic Speed master weapon is down to about a quarter full!"

"Keep up the velocity before things get terminal, got it!"

"Uh, oh!" Tails spotted another of the hermit crabmeat mechs gaining on them. "We've got company!"

"FRENZY!" Purple Man jumped back, landed on the mech, and proceeded to rip its head off. The mech lost guidance and dipped hard enough to impact the steel exterior of the tether. Purple Man jumped off and dashed to keep up with the others as the mech tumbled and sparked for a ways before exploding.

"Are you all sure you don't want me to stay and help fight Baldy McNosehair?" Tails asked as Sonic sideswiped a motobug into its fellows for a rather impressive chain crash.

"Sorry!" Rock replied. "We need you to warn everyone to be ready in case the worst happens!"

"Yeah, because if the worst happens you'll probably need everyone!" Sonic added.

"I get it!" Tails huffed as they approached the hangar. "Guess it's better than being shoved into it unceremoniously!"

"Haven't I apologized for that enough yet?" Sonic called back incredulously.

"Nope!"

The group dashed into the space elevator hangar and spotted one ready to go.

"Okay, if I know Baldy McNosehair," Sonic and the others skidded to a halt shortly away from the transport car as Tails stopped in the doorway, "he should be just–"

The room shuddered with the sound of rending steel and Tails tripped the rest of the way into the transport.

'Great, even when I'm not shoved into this thing, I'm still shoved into this thing,' he mentally grumbled before looking up.

"Leaving so soon? There are no lines–"

And saw Eggman in his Nega Wisp Armor unceremoniously suck a recovering Sonic up one of the jagged-mouthed tendrils. The machine's mouth opened to display the Blue Blur stuck in a capsule at the back of the machine's 'throat'.

"–and I've saved the best rides for last!"

A sweep from the other jagged-mouthed tendril sent Purple Man and Rock slamming into the side of the transport hard enough that the movement knocked the recovering Tails back down. And then the first began to wind back for a straight shot at Tails himself.

"At least let me stamp your hand so you can come back in!" Eggman grinned so maliciously that the two-tailed fox found himself instinctively frozen in place as the tendril whipped forward, jagged mouth agape.

And then the purple form of the last color master was there between him and Eggman's attack, hands spread to catch the jagged jaws.

"FR–"

CRUNCH

Tails found himself staring in horror as the few purple bits of metal sticking out from the closed jaws of similar hue faded to a more plain steel. He felt some relief as the eyeless face of a purple nega-wisp poked itself out of a space between the jaws.

"L u **–"

And then the wisp was sucked down the tendril just like Sonic had been. In the next moment, the doors closed and Tails felt himself rocketing back towards the surface.

Sonic suppressed the urge to simply smash his way out of the capsule as Rock hit the launch button on the side of the space elevator car. He could certainly do so. Whether he could do so easily might prove an interesting question, but he could get himself out of there. However, he kind of wanted to see how Rock handled Eggman's little wisp-powered toy. The bot was still at that stage of looping where his abilities weren't that far above baseline even when he went all-out. It would prove an interesting fight.

"You know," he heard Rock speak as the Blue Bomber readied his lemon shooter, "your attack should have made those amusement park puns sound threatening, but they still come across pretty lame."

Sonic fought back a grin at the mirror of his own usual taunt, as well as something else he was feeling as his capsule was connected to the Nega Wisp Armor's power systems. 'Heh... Interesting move Baldy McNosehair... Adding the Chaos Emeralds to your little toy as a backup. Too bad I can use that for my... nnngh...'

"Cheeky little robot..." Eggman's sneer was audible. "Foiling my plans not enough for you? Now you have to foil the speeches I work hard on?"

"Maybe you should look into hiring a writer."

'Okay... That kinda... hurts...' Sonic thought as the energy he was connected to began to feel like he'd stuck his tongue, along with every other part of his body, in a gazillion electrical sockets. Like that thing Eggman sometimes used to drain Sonic's Super Mode, and awaken Dark Gaia by blowing the planet apart. 'But... he shouldn't... have... that... yet... right...?'

"As if any writer I hired could satisfy my desires," Eggman scoffed as Sonic realized that the pain was killing his focus to the point that he'd be unable to actually execute any of his theoretical escape plans. "But I'll forgive your insolence this time."

'Sorry... Bro... You...'re... on... your... AAAAAAGGGHHH!'

"In fact–"

The pain grew to the point where it took all of the considerable willpower Sonic had gained over the Loops to simply not black out. (46)

"–I want to thank you, Mega Man!" Eggman laughed in his wisp-like mech. "You see, after your assault in Soleanna, I realized that I was going soft! I now understand that simply because some of my foes are unwilling to kill, that does not mean they are incapable , or that their tolerance has no limit! So from now on, I fight all my battles the same way: To the end! Kill or be killed! I hope you're ready, Mega Man, because the only way you'll ever stop me now is to do it permanently !"

"Wanna bet?" the Blue Bomber replied as he turned brown and yellow, manifesting a pair of circular saws in his hands the same instant and threw, only to have them bounce harmlessly off the deep purple machine's armor. Not to be deterred, the robot hero turned a deep navy blue and dark yellow before firing a different weapon.

"Ah, yes, your vaunted master weapons," Eggman grinned maliciously as he maneuvered one of the machine's tendrils to slap the Flash Bomb away, the explosive blowing a wide hole in the hangar doors. "I haven't forgotten them. I also haven't forgotten how you tend to have trouble using several at once. And with your faithful robo-dog currently back on the surface and my anti-teleportation barrier still fueled by emergency reserves, the only way you can move at decent speed is to use the one modeled after Sonic himself... So I hope you still have enough energy to keep up after all your running around earlier!"

And with that, Eggman's wisp-bot turned and flew out the hole left by the Flash Bomb, making it even wider in the process and still leaving not so much as a scratch on the paint. Swearing under his breath, Mega Man followed as fast as the mostly depleted Sonic Speed weapon would allow.

"Welcome back, Sal!" Rotor greeted as the hijacked transport landed. "How's NICOLE doing?"

"Recovering from whatever Metal Sonic hit her with," the princess ground squirrel mobian answered as she exited the craft, followed shortly by the rest. "Slowly, but recovering. It'll be a while before she's back to a hundred percent."

"Well, I've got a quarantined mainframe set aside just in case something like this happened so let's hook her up and I'll see what I can do to speed her recovery."

"Thanks, Rotor. So long as there's not another crisis to handle, we should be fi–"

Rotor's handheld communicator started blaring an emergency message at that moment. As he answered and tried to get Tails to slow down before trying to tell him everything. Of everyone present, loopers and nonloopers alike, none could really say they were surprised by that turn of events.

"You just going to run away Eggman?" Rock taunted as he tore after the wisp-like machine along the outer ring of the space elevator shaft. If the madman was, it might prove to be a pretty effective tactic given the way his already depleted Sonic Speed weapon was only becoming more depleted.

"Perish the thought!" the man's laughter boomed from the machine's speakers, the canisters of stolen Hyper-Go-On waving rhythmically on the thing's back. "I just wanted to get a good pace going before I got serious! After all, this robot of mine is very special indeed! Not only is it invincible, but it can use the powers of your little friends better than those second-rate contraptions that hack of a scientist who dares call himself my equal made! Here! Have a taste!"

A sinister purple-violet aura oozed out of every seam in the robot's armor as its two tendrils ripped with jagged jaws positioned themselves like the flexed arms of a muscle man and the razor-sharp jaws of the gigantic head that was the main body gnashed dangerously. Eggman himself sat in the forehead just over the machine's two monstrous eyes, beneath the middle of five spiked crests, that his personal craft had been slotted into.

"FRENZ Y **!"

'Oh, that's not good...' Rock thought to himself as the middle crest slid over Eggman's craft like armor and the jaws on the end of each tendril opened wide.

"C U BE!"

A rapid-fire series of deep purple-violet energy blasts shot straight up from the tendrils, before crashing down as fully formed solid-energy cubes with maliciously glowing cores in random spots along Rock's path.

'Okay, the only vulnerable spot is going to be his personal craft,' Rock analyzed as he sidestepped the cubes and began charging his Mega Buster. 'And I'm going to have to knock that covering back before I can even hit it.'

Coming out from the mini-maze of energy cubes, Rock saw the mouth of the wisp-mech opened wide and the head tilted back.

"SPI K ES!"

A spread of three spiked energy balls popped out and began bouncing their way towards him. Followed by another.

'If Eggman's armored his craft enough, I likely won't kill him but this will be a longer fight than I want,' Rock grimaced as he jumped over the first spread and slid under the second even as the machine fired a third. 'But if he hasn't, then I could really kill him. Despite what he seems to think, I don't want to kill him this time, I'd really prefer to never kill anyone, but...'

Jumping over the third spread, Rock set his features determinedly and noted the dangerously low levels his Sonic Speed weapon was reaching.

'But if that's what happens,' he added as the jawed tendrils aimed themselves at either side of him and began charging, 'I have friends to help me through it.'

"HY P ER!"

Rock kept to the dead center between the two massive purple-violet buster shots, the heat from their backwash scorching him on each side, and emerged intact and only slightly ruffled. Taking aim, he fired his charged shot on the spiked crest over Eggman's cockpit, intending to follow it with several normal shots during the opening, only to have one of the tendrils block the shot while the other opened and took aim.

" L ASER!"

Rock jumped over the sinisterly hued laser beam as it carved from side to side even as the other tendril moved to follow with an identical attack that he jumped over as well.

'Come on...' he growled to himself, charging his buster again. He realized that he was going to have to find a way to get a lot closer to the machine if he was going to do any damage to it. And his time in which to do so was running out. 'Give me something to work with...'

One of the jawed tendrils reared back like a prize fighter going for a haymaker as purple energy began wreathing itself around the already dangerous tip.

'That'll work...' Rock narrowed his eyes and prepared for a very precisely timed maneuver.

"DRI L L!"

Wreathed in a spinning drill of sinister energy, the tendril shot straight for Rock...

...who jumped the attack and landed on the tendril arm to run straight up it as fast as his Sonic Speed weapon would allow.

Inside one of the containers on the wisp-mech's back, an argument was taking place.

"Vaxayfo dib wo axarr pusk tegothol, wo vidd fo axafro te kot eno eb us uk, se dit skeurd fo ug!"

" J e! F ro ur d it, u g wh axav o t e k e w ho rp z o wh o le u g ch uff eln rit tr o...!"

"Yeep dewol dis zo eno–" the container they were in shuddered as Rock body-slammed the tendril joint. in the next moment, he'd jumped off towards the central spiked crest.

"Ch e p axa lg uick Y ax angs- pit -ret! Di b axa nye no k ots u k , d i t n ud u g!"

A hard kick to the crest forced it back, exposing Eggman's cockpit even as Rock used the recoil to send him directly in front of the clear dome, allowing him to look the Eggman in the eye from point blank range right before he fired.

"Haxa–" the containment field holding the wisps in flickered for an instant as Rock's charged shot slammed into Eggman's cockpit and the wisp speaking was shoved out through the momentary opening by the eyeless purple nega-wisp he was arguing with.

"Z o w h ole jo o ds u g v elo za xan wh o pe os v o ... O s po cii o x d ib w ho nu d ke ic k te sa x a v o w ho l..."

Rock watched as the giant wisp machine tumbled and scraped along the ground at high speed as Eggman lost control of the craft. But it was otherwise unharmed. And with the Sonic Speed weapon critically low, he wasn't going to be able to keep this up much lon–

A familiar white blue slammed into him and merged with his body, turning his armor pure white.

MASTER WEAPON ENHANCEMENT MODE: WHITE BOOST

Blinking, Rock's surprise almost let the opening pass, but instead he grinned and shot forward with a burst of immense speed. Wreathed in a blazing white aura of energy, he slammed into the wisp machine and sent it careening across the metal plating even as the white wisp Yacker popped out of his body and moved to fly alongside him.

MASTER WEAPON: SONIC SPEED RESTORED TO NORMAL

Taking quick stock of his systems, Rock was surprised to note that not only had Yacker temporarily enhanced his Sonic Speed weapon, he'd somehow refilled the weapon energy as well.

"Kloaxat whole! Vupp blioct! Ug whaxavo te whorp!" Yacker pleaded as Eggman recovered control of his machine.

"Pum gned," Rock promised. "Pum'rr kot yeep bliocts uk eb zolo. Pum plemiso."

"Jet quich zom!" Yacker's tone was supremely worried. "Ug whaxavo te saxavo vem! Who tulnow whol dinke... dinke..."

"That's your mom ?!" Rock asked incredulously. (47) "He roboticized your mom?!"

"Yos..."

"Okay," Rock's face hardened once more as he made internal adjustments to his Mega Buster. "Don't worry. I know just what to do..."

MEGA BUSTER CONFIGURATION MODE: SONIC SHOT

Eggman fumed as he righted his special Nega Wisp Armor. Roboticized from a very, very, special alien wisp indeed. Taking stock, he saw a log of a minor interrupt on the containment field, resulting in the loss of one of his weapon options.

HYPER POWER OFFLINE

He entertained the idea of harvesting more wisps as he set the cockpit shielding back in place, but a quick scan showed that the little batteries were staying far away from the fight between him and Mega Man. So be it. With both the innate power of the special alien he'd roboticized and the Chaos Emeralds as a backup, he had more than enough energy for his purposes. And plenty more powers to unleash on the blue menace.

"Let's see how you like this one!" the madman grinned as he took aim and mashed a button. The pest had gotten a lucky shot in, but it would take more than that to defeat his masterpiece!

"BO M B!"

Rock sidestepped around the purple-violet energy bomb and timed his jump just as it went off, allowing him to ride the shockwave in a way that boosted his jump straight at the center spiked crest keeping Eggman's cockpit shielded.

"H O VER!"

A shimmering purple-violet barrier sprang up around the machine, but Rock didn't impact the field due to the mech suddenly picking up speed and backing away from his charge. Landing in a run, the Blue Bomber scowled at his opponent.

"Jed haxat?" Yacker asked.

"Jed wo waxait bel whix te vaxako pit vichaxako," Rock replied as the jaws on the ends of the tendrils opened up and took aim.

"LIG H TNI N G!"

The two bolts of dark purple-violet electricity shot out to either side of Rock and began to close in from both sides. Not wasting a moment, Rock vaulted sideways over the one on his right and continued running as he landed.

" B URS T **!"

The massive gout of purple-violet flames that shot out of the mech's mouth almost took Rock off guard, but he was just able to sidestep the blast.

"R O CK E T!"

The two rockets came out the same sinisterly glowing color as everything else the machine had shot at him so far and Rock quickly dashed to the other side of the hull area, almost far enough to hug the slight wall, to dodge them even as the mech raised one of its tendrils in a clear move for an overhead slam.

" Q U A K E **!"

Instead of dashing back into the center of the path as the massive metal tendril came down with clear intent to crush him, Rock took a page out of Sonic's playbook and ran up the short wall instead, and then jumped off right before the appendage slammed into the hull with enough force to cave it in. With a sideways flip, Rock landed on the tendril and dashed up it just like before.

"Oh, no you don't!" Eggman yelled out, yanking the tendril back to disrupt his foe's footing.

Rock however, used the retraction to push off in a forward leap, somersault, and impact with the machine's 'shoulder' area with both of his oversized armored feet. Pushing off as the machine reeled from the force of the impact and charging his arm cannon, Rock went into a roundhouse kick at the central spiked crest that knocked it back from protecting Eggman's cockpit. Using the recoil, he spun around as he descended until he was looking Eggman straight in the eye before he unleashed the fully charged Sonic Shot straight at the man's cockpit.

"Ke!"

"Je, ug ke!"

"Ug bilch! Pum'rr berred!"

"Fu–" The containment field flickered right then as Mega Man's shot hit home and the first wisp took the opportunity to shove the second out.

"Now Yacker!" Rock yelled as he spotted another wisp flying out of the containers on the thing's back. A green one.

"Legol!" Yacker saluted before merging with the running robot.

MASTER WEAPON ENHANCEMENT MODE: WHITE BOOST

Charging forward in a blazing white aura, Rock body-slammed the machine the same as before, sending it careening across the improvised raceway before Yacker disengaged.

MASTER WEAPON: SONIC SPEED RESTORED TO NORMAL

As the green wisp joined Rock's side, he spotted a third wisp flying out of the machine right before Eggman was able to regain control and right it again.

"Terd ug Pum'd berred!" the gray wisp eye-smiled at the green one as she joined the entourage trailing Rock.

"Alright!" Dr. Eggman snarled as he wrestled his machine upright and looked at the display.

HOVER POWER OFFLINE

QUAKE POWER OFFLINE

"You want to play it like that? Then try this next one on for size! This is the final act, Mega Man! Today the end begins! "

"A S TE R OID!"

As the tendril lanced towards him, Rock entertained the idea of trying to jump on and run up it again, but the gravitational field in the tendril's open jaws made him think twice. As did the field of metal debris circling it to present a wide field of danger above, below, and on either side. As such, the massive sidestep he took was the only real option. And when the second tendril performed the same maneuver, he dashed to the other side just as greatly.

" V O I D!"

Before the second tendril even began retracting, Rock felt the increased pull from behind as the gravitational field increased in intensity, becoming a miniature singularity that tried to pull him back into it as the tendril which generated it retracted.

Gritting his teeth, Rock pushed the Sonic Speed weapon harder than he probably should have to pull away from the singularity even as Eggman took aim.

"RO C KE T **!"

Rock barely managed to keep his traction dodging the energy missiles the tendrils shot at him before the mouth tilted upwards.

"S P I K ES!"

Swearing internally, Rock jumped the first wave and felt the singularity's pull drag him back even as the pulsating spiked energy balls rolled under him. However, the pull was almost a blessing in disguise as without it, he might have landed straight on top of the second wave instead of with just enough time to jump it as well, along with the third. But after that, he was way too close to the mini-singularity to risk letting it pull him in further.

" D RI L L!"

Not even bothering to try and jump on the tendril, Rock sidestepped the first drilling strike as fast as he could, and then the second before the purple-violet singularity finally lost power and collapsed in on itself.

The next moment, Rock could almost swear that he heard the machine snort like a bull about to charge down a bullfighter as it positioned its tendrils like a pro wrestler about to clothesline someone on either side of them. Switching to his default charged shot, Rock began charging.

"E A GLE!"

Eggman's wisp-like mech became wreathed in a powerful aura as it shot straight for Rock. There was no way he could jump it safely, and the profile was too wide to sidestep.

So he slid under it.

"Ug saxaw haxat yeep dewol axarmech id!"

"Ug whaxavo te roaxavo bilch, bel zo keew eb eep who–"

" U g t w e axa l o r oa xa v ick bil c h di b P um w h axa v o t e fi to y eep baxa co s e b b t e p e di t **!"

Coming out the other side, he twisted, jumped, and fired his arm cannon to boost him up even higher as Eggman turned his machine around to face him.

Re-equipping the Sonic Shot and charging, Rock collided with the machine's face in a snap-kick that removed the central spiked crest's protection once more before firing the Spin Dash-shaped bolt of energy at Eggman's cockpit.

Yacker didn't even wait for the signal as a crimson blur shot from the machine and merged with Rock the moment he touched the hull.

MASTER WEAPON ENHANCEMENT MODE: WHITE BOOST

Dashing forward in the aura of white energy, Rock almost ran face-first into a wild swing from one of the machine's tendrils. But he slid under that too and collided with the tumbling machine in a sliding kick that sent it flying in a manner normally seen at World Cup Soccer tournaments before Yacker disengaged.

MASTER WEAPON: SONIC SPEED RESTORED TO NORMAL

An indigo blur emerged from the wisp-like war machine on impact and the crimson and indigo wisps joined the growing entourage flying after Rock as he continued chasing Eggman down.

ASTEROID POWER OFFLINE

EAGLE POWER OFFLINE

Eggman fumed as he righted his machine despite the reports of systems starting to short out from the repeated Hyper-Go-On fueled impacts. Growling, the man started mashing attack buttons at random.

" L AS E R!"

The infuriating blue menace jumped over them.

" R OC K ET!"

Sidestepped this time. Almost casually, even!

"BUR S T!"

He slid under! Without even missing a beat!

"L I GH T NING!"

He didn't even bother trying to dodge as the blast missed him by several feet...

"CU B E!"

The energy cubes lined up on either side of Eggman's foe and gave him an idea.

"D R ILL!"

Wreathed in spiraling energy, one tendril tore down the narrowed path, only for his eternal foe to jump off the energy cubes themselves like that blasted hedgehog friend of his and evade the attack by a mile.

Practically ready to tear his mustache out, Eggman spied the button for the one power he hadn't tried yet.

'Alright... Let's see what this does...' he stared a hole at the image of his foe, and mashed the button with all his might.

"RH Y TH M **!"

The wisp-like mech began emitting a pulsing beat and emitting little bits of the sinister purple-violet energy of its weapons. The beat messed with Rock's concentration enough to make it hard to concentrate on running as he fought it. Enough that the first swipe of the machine's tendrils almost took his head off before he slid under it at the last moment.

'Fight it, Rock!' he told himself as he barely cleared the second swipe, stumbling for a moment on the landing. 'Fi–No, don't fight it... Work with it...'

As the next attack came, he reached out his hand and, almost like he'd practiced the move, planted his hand on the tendril and jumped into a picture-perfect vaulting handstand.

'Go with the flow, not against it,' he realized as he pushed off with his hand and cleared the second tendril in a gymnastics maneuver that would have been the envy of an Olympian athlete.

Touching down, he curled in and launched himself forward in a corkscrew that threaded the small space between the lashing tendrils as they made another pass at the same time. One came around to try and spear him as he hit the ground running, but he gave a small hop and pushed off of it, reaching out to grab the other as it tried to hit where he would have been with a bigger jump and swung himself higher.

A tendril came from below like a cylindrical barrier for him to smash into, only for his backhand grab to bring him smoothly around the obstacle. An inverted flip had him ducking the other tendril's attempt to spear him in midair in a way that let him snag the other side of it with his foot and bring himself into perfect position to spring straight for Eggman's shielded cockpit. Tucking into a reverse somersault, he kicked out just as a tendril came up from below and shoved it hard enough that it hit the spiked crest over Eggman's cockpit instead of him and left the only vulnerable spot open for attack just as he finished charging his buster.

" K ot ke ic k u g t w e! F re d z is ne ink ax ar loa xad up p!"

"Pum'v keno! Ug cemick?"

"Yoaxah, yoaxah... Eh, wed, zaxat waxas swoo–axang!"

A yellow form emerged from the machine to join the group as Yacker moved to power Rock up... and one of the tumbling machine's tendrils lashed out in a wide low sweep.

MASTER WEAPON ENHANCEMENT MODE: WHITE BOOST

Jumping the moment Yacker merged with him, he blasted over the low sweep in a blazing white corona of power into a spinning roundhouse kick that caught the machine right below the jaw (48), sending it hurtling away and a bright magenta form rocketing out to join the others with him.

MASTER WEAPON: SONIC SPEED RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Haxat whaxapponow?" the newly rescued yellow wisp asked the magenta one as Yacker disengaged from Rock.

"Faxardupp Jesohaxail waxankow te vaxako vo taxako eno raxach sket axat zo daxanco vaxachol wholo..." the magenta wisp looked sheepish as she joined Rock's entourage.

DRILL POWER OFFLINE

RHYTHM POWER OFFLINE

"That's it..." Dr. Eggman growled low and dangerously as the warning lights flashed more insistently. "You think you're so clever being able to avoid any one power I throw at you, let's see you handle two at once!"

Slamming his fist down on a big red button, more warnings began to blare.

WARNING: WISP POWER UNIFICATION SYSTEM UNTESTED

"Oh, put a sock in it!" the mad scientist snarled as he overrode the system and renewed his assault. "One way or another, this ends today!"

" B OM B ! RO C K E T!"

Rock nearly tripped when he realized Eggman's mech was combining weapons, but even exploding with great force, the rocket projectiles weren't much harder to dodge than the normal rocket shots.

"Okay, Baldy McNosehair!" Rock yelled at the machine as he kept running, his wisp entourage in tow. "You want to throw out some new moves? Let's see what you got! "

"As you wish!" the madman screeched back.

"VOI D ! C UBE!"

Two energy cubes shot straight up out of the tendrils' jaws and slammed down behind Rock before pulsing with a high gravity field that attempted to pull him back towards them.

"S P IKE S ! BURS T **!"

Only one spiked energy ball emerged, but as it rolled towards Rock, it left a trail of hungry purple-violet flames. Sidestepping it put him directly into the path of one of the two follow-up shots that rolled along either side of the burning trail left by the first. It wasn't until the spiked ball was almost on top of him that the flame trail of the first died down enough for him to barely sidestep certain doom just as the void cubes dissipated.

"C U BE! LAS E R!"

A series of energy cubes shot out to form a narrow corridor before they began shooting a laser from one to the next in an interconnecting web that Rock was going to have to traverse. Thinking quickly, he hopped up and jumped along the upper edges over the deadly beams below.

" R OC KE T! LI GH TNIN G **!"

A pair of rockets shot out as Rock passed the laser gauntlet, a crackling field of purple-violet electricity between them clearly meant to take Rock's head off. Or rather to incinerate his torso, leaving a head and legs behind with nothing in between. He slid under the electric field by reflex and felt the static field as it passed far too close for comfort.

"L A SE R ! L / GHTN / NG!"

The two tendrils came together in front of the machine's mouth almost like cupped palms and began gathering a massive field of energy.

"Yacker!" Rock yelled as he realized what was about to happen, prompting the wisp to merge with him.

MASTER WEAPON ENHANCEMENT MODE: WHITE BOOST

Sidestepping the massive blast and hugging the low wall as the backwash heat from the beam of electricity and light his environment sensors blaring. Ignoring them, he dashed forward in a blaze of white as Eggman's view was obscured by his own weapon.

"CU B E! R OC KE T **!"

Jumping over the rocket-propelled energy cubes before they even finished forming, Rock slammed directly into the machine's shoulder to send it reeling as he charged up his arm cannon and disengaged the Sonic Speed Master Weapon.

MASTER WEAPON DISENGAGED

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: WHITE BUSTER

Using the machine itself as a stepping-stone once more, Rock maneuvered into a kick that exposed Eggman's cockpit just in time to look the man in the face as he finished charging and let loose a white Sonic Shot half again as large as Rock himself was.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

Yacker popped out as the machine crashed and tumbled along, three colored blurs comprising the orange, cyan, and pink wisps joined his still growing assemblage.

"Armech! Whit whix axagaxain!"

LASER POWER OFFLINE

ROCKET POWER OFFLINE

SPIKES POWER OFFLINE

"I'M NOT THROUGH YET!" Eggman roared as he righted his machine and mashed buttons.

"BU RS T! L IGH TN ING!"

'Scrap it!' Rock swore internally as he dodged through the storm of sinister lightning and fire solely upon reflexes he was sure he hadn't possessed prior to meeting Sonic and his friends. 'I was sure that would have done the trick!'

"Haxat nud dreck?"

"V OI D! LIGHT NING!"

"Pum gned ug axarr saxaid eno velo, fut Pum zeugh zaxat eno weurd whaxavo foon oneugh... Pum..." Rock explained as he hugged the opposite side of the hull path from the electrically crackling void projectile. "Pum'v axablaxaid dib Pum pe axanupp velo Pum vidd whult yeep vem..."

The gathered wisps went dead silent at his words while Eggman kept up the attack.

" BU RST! BO MB!"

Rock dashed to the opposite side as the energy bomb erupted into a massive pillar of flames.

"LIG HT NI NG ! CU BE **!"

Four energy cubes landed in front of him generating a cris-crossing electrical field that a mighty jump at full Sonic Speed barely cleared.

"I... I'm sorry... but I..."

" CU BE! BU RS T!"

A large number of energy cubes were fired into the space above as Rock ran.

"Pe haxat ug vuch, whole," one of the wisps finally said.

"Ug'rr saxavo vem. Act yeep blioct," Yacker added before moving to merge with him. "Pum gned ug caxan."

MASTER WEAPON ENHANCEMENT MODE: WHITE BOOST

"Thank you," Rock said as he dashed through the falling cubes, each one generating a cross-shaped eruption of flames as it hit the metal hull. "I'll finish this. One way or another."

Charging his arm cannon, Rock engaged the White boost and weaved throught the flaming cubes falling around him in the blazing white aura that was starting to become familiar.

" C U–"

Jumping with all his might, Rock hit the central spiked crest in a blazing uppercut that made the mech snap back like the head of a champion boxer's opponent before disengaging Sonic Speed once more.

MASTER WEAPON DISENGAGED

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: WHITE BUSTER

Looking Eggman in the eye, Rock unleashed the fully charged Hyper-Go-On enhanced Sonic Shot and sent the already battered machine careening away from him again before Yacker left his body, seeming to breath heavily.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

Re-engaging the Sonic Speed master weapon as the blue, ivory, and red wisps joined him, Rock hit the ground running. The machine was starting to smoke at several joints and he spotted a couple of flames starting in several spots as well. He had no idea what that might mean for the wisps' mother, but it couldn't be good. Still... Eggman wasn't going to back down, which meant he couldn't either.

"W ho h... K ot ' om Le ng **..."

CUBE POWER OFFLINE

BURST POWER OFFLINE

LIGHTNING POWER OFFLINE

"GRRRRRAAAAARRRRRRGGGGHHHHHHHHHH!"

" V O I D! B O M B **!"

The burning and smoking machine righted itself and spat an energy orb that pulsed far more sinisterly than the previous bombs in the same motion. Easily sidestepping the wild shot, Rock pushed his Sonic Speed weapon to the limit as it detonated into a powerful singularity that dragged his breakneck run to the speed of a leisurely walk as Rock strained his systems to their limit.

" FR E NZ Y!"

Eggman's battered machine shot for Rock with its razor-toothed mouth wide open, giving the robot a clear view of the capsule that held a painfully convulsing Sonic within, intending to bite the robot hero in half.

Rock gave his run a momentary stutter-step that killed just enough of his momentum for a backstep that removed him from the spot where the jaws clamped down with a metallic snap. Reaching out, he grabbed the machine's upper lip and hauled himself into an upwards double-kick at the armor covering of Eggman's cockpit even as Yacker caught on and moved to merge with him.

Disengaging his Sonic Speed weapon as Yacker hit him, Rock charged up his arm cannon as fast as his systems could handle.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: WHITE BUSTER

The enhanced Sonic Shot blast caused a massive static discharge over the entire machine as the mech was sent skidding along the hull track yet again and three final forms emerged from it.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"Eh, vaxan..." Yacker huffed, actually looking tired. "Pum boor pit fit izzupp..."

" Wh axah! P u m gn od u g ce ur d p e d i t!" the purple wisp yelled as he arrived.

"W ha xaha xa h ax a! W o axa rr gn od di t !" the violet wisp added.

" Yo axah!" the black wisp cackled. " U g, wh ol e, axa lo z o fem f **!"

'Heh... n-nice one... bro...nngh!'

BOMB POWER OFFLINE

VOID POWER OFFLINE

FRENZY POWER OFFLINE

"You... you..." Eggman twitched as systems sparked and smoked around him. "You horrid little robot!"

Then, suddenly, as if a switch had been flipped, all tension left Eggman's body. His fury having grown so great that he'd broken through into a state of total calm.

"You may think you've won, but I still have your horrid little hedgehog friend and the Chaos Emeralds as my trump card!" Eggman opened a panel with yellow and black caution lines to reveal a flashing red button in the center of very clear warning signs and mashed it like it was his hated foe's face. "You may have the aliens, but you have nothing as powerful as this!"

ULTIMATE EGG CHAOS CANNON CHARGING

"Let's see you stop this one!"

Eggman's wisp-machine was heavily damaged, flaming in places, sparking in others, and smoking in yet more, but that's not what held Rock's attention and caused him to skid to a halt. Inside the machine's throat, which halted to maintain its distance from Rock, were revealed the seven Chaos Emeralds. Each set around the capsule holding Sonic, who was writhing in pain as he flashed from his normal blue to super gold and back again, used by Eggman as a living capacitor for the Emerald's power. Rock stared as a ball of energy began to form in the machine's mouth.

"Eggman, what ar–"

And missed the flares of two barrels on Eggman's cockpit as they fired on him until he felt the pain in his legs.

"Argh!" Rock dropped to his knees as damage indicators flared from the small holes punched through his leg armor, one of which had shredded a knee joint by sheer chance.

"That actually worked?" Eggman's voice seemed surprised. "I mean, of course it did! I'm a genius! And now you have no way to avoid my final attack!"

"Ovolyeno! Zo whole joods eep whorp!" Yacker yelled as Eggman guffawed to himself and his final weapon kept charging.

'Careless...' Rock chastised himself.

" L id d !" came over a dozen replies to Yacker's call.

"At long last, I've won!" Eggman gloated as Rock grit his teeth.

"Arr tegothol jed!"

"You can't run!"

"Unrimitow Cerel!"

Rock was assessing his options when the familiar feeling of Yacker merging with him hit.

HYPER!

PRIMARY WEAPON OVER–

And then another one, somehow without dislodging Yacker.

LASER!

ERROR: PRIMARY WEA–

And another.

DRILL!

ERROR: PRIMAR–

Another.

BURST!

ERROR: PR–

"No Sonic to bail you out, because he's acting as my weapon's focus!"

Again, and again they came.

ROCKET!

ERROR

CUBE!

ERROR

SPIKES!

ERROR

HOVER!

ERROR

"Even your little alien friends can't save you now!"

EAGLE! ASTEROID! LIGHTNING! RHYTHM! QUAKE!

'Wh-What's...' he tried to shut out the error messages as he watched his armor flicker from color to color at a rapid and constantly increasing pace.

"At long last!"

VOID! FRENZY! BOMB!

ERROR ERROR ERROR

"This is the end of Mega Man!"

UNLIMITED COLOR!

PRIMARY WEAPON SYSTEM STABILIZING: UNKNOWN BUSTER CONFIGURATION

AWAITING DESIGNATION

Looking up as he felt himself lifted into the air, Rock swore he could see Sonic through the pulsing ball of Chaos energy mouthing "Do it to it".

'There's only one thing to call this,' the now-prismatic Rock thought as he aimed his arm cannon.

"ULTIMATE!"

"MEGA!"

The ball of Chaos energy grew in intensity as all sixteen wisps emerged from Rock's body, though the power they'd lent him not only didn't leave with them, it felt like it was still growing.

"EGG!"

"SONIC!"

Eggman's madly grinning face was visible as the wisps took up positions circling Rock in midair.

"CHAOS!"

"COLOR!"

Ten; the red, yellow, green, blue, pink, cyan, purple, violet, orange, and white (Yacker) wisps; formed a rotating circle slightly behind Rock. The other six; the crimson, indigo, gray, ivory, magenta, and black wisps; formed a smaller rotating circle slightly ahead. As one, they all pointed an accusing tendril at Eggman.

"CANNON!"

"BLASTER!"

The massive prismatic beam of Chaos energy collided with an equally massive and prismatic spinning ball of energy. The spinning ball of energy, almost as large as Eggman's entire wisp-like machine, halted as it struggled with the beam and began to be pushed back.

"Ohohohohoho!"

Rock strained his systems trying to Will more power into his blast, and actually felt something respond as the wisps circling him halted their movement and narrowed their differently numbered eyes in fierce concentration.

"EEEE E EEEE E EE E EEEHHHH H HHH!"

Incredibly, the spinning ball of energy Rock had shot began to grow, not only halting its backwards movement but beginning to push forward.

"That's... That's not possible..." Eggman murmured in astonishment as the spinning ball of prismatic energy, now larger than his Nega Wisp Armor, picked up speed. "IT'S NOT POSSIBL–"

The massive prismatic Sonic Shot slammed into Eggman's wisp-mech with a mighty flash of light that sent seven differently colored streaks speeding away towards the planet surface and the tumbling form of Eggman's cockpit/personal craft rocketing into the distance of space where it let off a fireworks explosion that formed a stylized image of Eggman's own face for some reason.

And there where the flash of light had been, looking somewhat worse for wear, was Sonic. And right behind Sonic, was a roundish pale pink form the size of Eggman's machine. One with three eyes, four soft non-threatening tendrils, and numerous bruises analogous with the damage the wisp-machine had taken.

"V E M !" came the excited cry as the field of energy holding Rock in the air vanished, dumping him unceremoniously to the metal hull below as sixteen forms happily mobbed the massive 'mother wisp'.

"What's up?" Bass asked as Ground Man's Whack-A-Mole (involving replicas of the household boring machines Wily had repurposed for a few of his past invasions) tallied his score.

"Oh, nothing," Roll replied. "Just a message from Rock that he beat Eggman again. Or rather 'Baldy McNosehair' as he's now calling him."

"Heh... Baldy McNosehair..." Bass chuckled. "That's a good one. I'll need to remember that."

"Tails?" Rotor asked over the communicator as the Freedom Fighters (and company) closed in on the looping fox's position. "How are things going?"

"I just got the message from Rock: They beat him!" Tails smiled.

"Hooray!" Tails was suddenly tackled on his end by an excited Charmy Bee.

"Ooooh," the non-looping Amy fretted in worry. "I just hope Eggman didn't set his place to self-destruct again!"

Freedom Fighters on her end of the call and Chaotix on the other end all looked at her.

"What? Oh, come on! You know we were all thinking it!" (49)

Dr. Eggman could feel his awareness fading and wondered for an instant if he probably should have installed those safety restraints like Orbot kept bugging him to. But the thought was drowned out by a more insistent and mighty desire: To crush his foes even if he couldn't see it himself.

"Heh... enjoy it... while you... can... pests... I planned... for... every outcome..."

Struggling in his critically damaged craft, he flipped open another emergency panel to reveal a button that had once been labeled 'in case of the unthinkable', only the 'unthinkable' part had been crossed out by someone, probably Orbot again, and 'inevitable' scribbled in its place. Using the last of his strength, Eggman pressed the button.

EGGMANLAND SELF DESTRUCT MODE: COLONY DROP ACTIVATED

"Oh... ho... ho... ho... ho..." Eggman managed to wheeze out before his world went black.

"Zaxant ug bel saxavick vupp stirdlon, jefro enos," the giant mother wisp intoned with minimal difficulty.

"Dit waxas jethick, vipt wisp," Rock replied, inclining his head in his best approximation of a bow given the current condition of his legs.

"You're enjoying keeping me out of the loop way too much here," Sonic tapped his foot impatiently.

"Why would you possibly think that?" Rock grinned as several of the wisps around them giggled happily.

"Oh, I don't know, maybe because you–"

The hull they were on gave a creak and a prolonged shudder that would have registered about 4.2 on the Ricter Scale.

"Ang!" Yacker and several of his fellow wisps yelped.

"O xp red ic k sic kur axali tio s!" the nega-wisps swore.

"Vupp keednopt!" the mother wisp gasped.

"Is the space elevator supposed to recede into the ground like that?" Shade asked suddenly, gaining everyone's attention.

"I don't... think so..." Tails blinked as he watched the phenomena.

"Scans indicate the absence of any device capable of performing such a task," Sniper Joe informed everyone.

"But then... what could–" Tails was cut off as the ground began to shake, knocking most of those present off their feet.

"There a fault line around here no one told me about?" Vector complained.

"No, there shouldn–" the loud groaning and snapping of metal all along the height of the space elevator cut Tails off this time. "Oh my god... He's bringing the entire park down!"

"Okay," Mighty breathed deeply to center himself, "we need to stay calm and–"

"Run for your lives!" Charmy screamed before taking off at high speed.

"...Not quite what I was going to say, but close enough."

"Okay, don't panic," Sonic said as the vibrations of the hull increased in intensity.

"Zis dis zo dolbond timo te paxanic!" one of the wisps yelled back at him.

The space elevator shaft between them and the park suddenly splintered and buckled violently and the main mass of the park began to come closer.

"Okay, that doesn't look like it's going to end well..." Rock noted.

"Ma'am," Sonic addressed the mother wisp, "you take your kids and get as far away as you can. Rock and I will make our own way."

"Je, Pum wirr–eust!" the mother wisp's protest was cut off as she gasped in pain from one of the lingering injuries she still had after being restored.

"Yeah, none of that. Go." Sonic insisted. "Rock and I can handle ourselves."

"At roaxach rot vo pe zis bel ug..." the mother wisp said as she extended a tendril to Sonic and sent a flow of Hyper-Go-On straight into his body that left the hedgehog glowing like a nightlight.

"Thanks, now go !"

"Baxalo zoo worr," the mother wisp said as the other wisps gathered around her to help her zip away.

"Heh... You forgot that my legs aren't in great shape right now," Rock chuckled as the mass of Eggmanland grew ever closer.

"Nah, I didn't forget anything," Sonic grinned before he picked the robot up in his arms as if he weighed nothing. "Heh... with her little parting gift, this isn't even hard!"

"In the unlikely event of an emergency," the P.A. system informed as the hull around the group shook with increasing intensity, "please find the nearest escape pod. For anyone not named Eggman, your escape pod can be found back at the planet still being assembled in the factory."

"Hear that?" Sonic grinned as he bounded off their perch and down the outside of the space elevator towards the planet below in a blazing aura. "We just have to make it to an escape pod!"

"Just run you goof," Rock shook his head with a chuckle as the main mass of Eggmanland slammed into the broken edge of the space elevator shaft and began violently splintering the construct as it fell after them.

"I'm sorry, can you repeat that Tails?" Sally asked. "It sounded like you said Eggman's amusement park was falling ."

"That's exactly what I said!" Tails shouted into the communicator on his end. "It's coming straight down! And picking up speed!"

"But..." Rotor looked horrified as he performed some calculations. "An impact of that magnitude will be catastrophic!"

"I know!" Tails yelled back. "He's never done anything like this with it before! Granted, that might be because it's always collapsed into a Hyper-Go-On fueled black hole before, so..."

Pieces of the space elevator snapped off and were flung into space as Sonic tore down it at speeds well in excess of terminal velocity; jumping, sliding, and grinding as he carried his friend over, around, and through the broken pieces of space elevator hull. More than once he had to make a humongous jump as the section he was running down was snapped clean off the next one. But he kept running. If there was anything he knew how to do, in any timeline, it was run. And so run he did.

"You think the boss has gone crazy this time?" Cubot asked as he and Orbot piloted an escape pod away from the plummeting interstellar amusement park.

"That assumes he ever wasn't," Orbot replied calmly. "In any case, we have our orders."

"Man, this reminds me of carrying Elise all over the place," Sonic chuckled as he bounded across several broken pieces of hull to make the next broken section of space elevator.

"I'm not kissing you when this is over," Rock replied flatly.

"J e !" the violet wisp angrily slapped away the mother wisp's Hyper-Go-On infused tendril.

"Fut, haxat ug whaxavo focemo dis–" the mother wisp looked worried as she beheld the three nega-wisps.

"Gi c t e b kle wi ck e n u s, ve m !" the black wisp chuckled.

"Wo wolo axablaxaid zis vidd whaxappon," the red wisp rolled his eyes.

"Sko quich waxanks te whorp ug!" the orange wisp snapped.

"E h , ch ub b d it!" the violet wisp snapped back.

"Yoa xa h!" the purple wisp berated "Di b s ko w a xan ks t e wh orp z o n sk o sk eu rd wh orp z o wh oleo s za xa t who rp ow u s **!"

"Pum axam sellupp, fut Pum..." the mother wisp trailed off and winced as her injuries once again.

"...Zon rot us," Yacker spoke up suddenly.

"Fut ovon axarr eb yeep Whypol-Ke-En cemfinow weurdniz–" the mother wisp worried.

"Zon wo kot ovolyeno," Yacker insisted.

"Ol... Haxat pe ug voaxan 'ovolyeno'?" the cyan wisp asked curiously.

"Pum voaxan ovolyeno !" Yacker clarified. "Ovolupp raxach wisp zoupp whorpow saxavo! Zoupp whorpow us, pi jed dit nud eep tuln te whorp zom!"

" P um ri ko z is p ra xan!" the purple wisp cackled as they all began speeding off in various directions. "Pu m'v ox cit ow t e f o p it pax al t e b di t **!"

Sonic slammed feet-first into a broken piece of hull as it entered his path and rode it like a snowboard for a short ways before hopping off and continuing to carry his friend down the long elevator spire.

Dr. Wily was grumbling over the sixteen 'offline' reports his monitor insisted on showing him in regards to his Color Masters when one of the white wisp aliens zipped into the room and gave him a hug and a mouthless kiss.

"Fyo Claxazupp Wird-Whaxail!" the white wisp eye-smiled at the man. "Wo kettaxa ke jed! Torr zo nico Foaxald Vaxan fyo bel us!"

Dr. Wily blinked rapidly as the alien being zipped back out. "What was that all about?"

The atmosphere contained between the main shaft and the outer stabilizers helped Sonic and Rock transition safely as they hit the level of the atmosphere. The mass of Eggmanland behind them however hit the atmosphere and burst into an equally massive fireball as it slowly gained on the two.

"Oh Asimov..." Roll gasped as she saw something off in the distance hit the atmosphere and burst into flames. If her GPS was correct, that's where Rock... "That's..."

"Looks like one of Baldy McNosehair's eyesores," Bass commented as he peered at the object, likely with some zoom feature on his optics. "Good riddance to bad rubbish."

"I think Rock's still on that thing!" Roll was practically hysterical as she watched it descend.

"Oh, is that where he was? Huh... Never thought about dropping a city on either of yo–ow!"

Roll glared at him with a fury meant more for someone much balder and much rounder.

"Geez!" Bass rubbed at a rather sizable dent in his helmet. "As if it would have worked if I had! I swear the two of you have more lives than an army of cats!"

"Well, this Loop was fun while it lasted," Sonic said as the ground and the flaming mass of Eggmanland both grew ever closer.

"What, no crazy last-minute plans with slim chances of success?"

"Unless you snagged the Chaos Emeralds while I wasn't looking, this is it," Sonic chuckled as he kept running straight for the ground. "Maybe if I'd grabbed something from my pocket right off the bat, but now..."

"Too busy running. And carrying me. Got it."

"Really, I was kind of hoping for a wisp-ex-machina by n–"

"Ug caxarrow?" the familiar form of Yacker slid in next to them. Followed by several more of varying colors. Rock looked back over Sonic's shoulder to see thousands of wisps of every type, including nega-wisps, forming a network around the burning remains of Eggmanland as it plummeted after them.

"Riko vupp stirdlon lomictow vo," the form of the mother wisp joined them, "ug whorpow us. Jed wo skaxarr whorp ug."

"Oh wow..." Rock breathed in amazement at the sight as every last wisp, including Yacker and the mother wisp, began glowing, forming a shell of energy that Eggmanland slammed into... and halted.

"Dang impressive, ain't it?"

"Yeah..."

The burning mass struggled against the Hyper-Go-On barrier for a few moments, and then began disintegrating. Turning into nothing more than gazillions of glowing dust particles that floated lazily to the ground in a cloud.

Sonic hit the ground running and tore off into the distance, carrying Rock the whole way. The cloud of dust might be relatively harmless, but he wasn't in any hurry to breathe it.

Bass watched Roll teleport out. The moment she'd heard that her twerp of a brother was safe and where, she'd excused herself. Honestly, he supposed this not-quite-a-date had been fun and al–

"So, boy, what's the verdict?" the voice of his father/creator sounded from behind him. Damn but the old guy could move quietly when he wanted to.

"I think you're good to open pops," Bass replied without turning around. "This is a pretty sweet place you've got and it doesn't look like anyone's gonna kill themselves on the attractions. Well, no more than they might anywhere else at least. And everyone's gonna be lining up to throw their money at you so you can spend it on whatever hare-brained scheme you've got planned next. Honestly, it's going to be a shame to see this place scrapped in the inevitable dust-up."

"What makes you think that will happen?!"

"Uh, I've gone through this song and dance before? On both sides of the equation? Seriously, the betting pool on who'll be responsible has probably already started."

The party was in full swing all across Mobotropolis. Wisps of all colors were everywhere dancing and gibbering at anyone who caught their interest. Members of all known native sapient races had been surprised at first, but had gone with the flow.

The fact that they hadn't left immediately wasn't quite so surprising to Sonic and his friends given the lingering injuries the mother wisp had wanted to recover from first. What was surprising to them was the fact that a relatively small number, a few hundred (including three in particular), of the nega-wisps had elected to remain that way rather than be restored to normal. There had been some concerns, but as things turned out, they really were just wisps of a different color. A bit more of a temper, some garbled vocals, and a decent prankster streak, but they were still the lovable wisps that the rest were.

"You really have to go so soon?" Rock asked the fully-healed mother wisp.

"Eb ceulso," the mother wisp replied, looking fondly over to where the brave sixteen former Color Masters were again performing a blow-by-blow replay of the daring rescue across Eggmanland and the stolen mini-planets the wisps called home. "Zis dis jet eep whemo. Wo caxamo wholo fupp axaccidonk pi pe jet foreck wholo um ug. Wo axapplociaxato axarr yeep whorp pi whespitaxaritupp poaxal wholeos pi bliocts, fut dit dis timo zaxat wo lotulnow te eep praxaco."

"Man but we're gonna miss you guys," Sonic added, still not understanding the words, but getting the general feel of the message anyway. "Feel free to drop by anytime!"

"Wo wirr!" Yacker replied as he zipped over, his part in the retelling complete for now. At the moment, the crimson wisp had taken over while the purple wisp acted out the part of one of Eggman's robots to cheers from wisp, human, and mobian audience members alike. "Fut proaxaso rot us binisk zis chelupp bilch, vem?"

The mother wisp looked at the pleading expression on Yacker's face and gave a sigh of concession. "Eh, molupp worr."

"Yaxaupp!"

It had taken them and their allies, plus a few hundred wisps excited about the possibility of a scavenger hunt, several days to track down and restore all the things Eggman Nega had turned into cards. All except the man himself. Silver and Quint had taken several hours after the wisps left to make sure that no trace energy indicating a missed card could be detected before they declared the job done. (50)

"Well," Silver asked as he held out the camera to his friend, "do you want to do the honors?"

"With pleasure," Quint smirked, carefully placing the diabolical camera on the ground before him. With a swing of Sakugarne, the device was crushed to bits under the weaponized jackhammer. "There. It's done. That's the end of Eggman Nega."

"How does it feel?"

"It feels... good."

Far up in orbit, almost to the moon, a man drew his first breath in days. Gasping, the white haired man looked around his craft, dusting down his black jacket and red bodysuit.

"About time they destroyed the thing and set me free..." Eggman Nega grumbled. "Good thing I created that failsafe just in case. Even so, I was beginning to wonder if they were just going to keep it as a souvenir..."

The man began to grin in a way devoid of sanity or anything resembling it.

"Such fools they all are..."

Eggman groggily returned to consciousness with an aching everything.

"Wha... what happ...?" he trailed off as his extremely dry mouth forced him to stop talking. And his stomach rumbled like he hadn't eaten for days. Something smelled pretty bad too.

"Yay!" an extremely grating voice made his head pound in protest. "The boss is awake! Hey boss!"

"Shu... shut up..." he growled out. What had happened to him?

"Oh, my," a more sedate and tolerable voice made itself known. "I'm glad you're back boss. I was afraid you'd slipped into a coma for a while there. That was a nasty tumble you took. I told you your craft needed safety restraints after all. In any case, we pushed your damaged vessel to the coordinates you specified should you be incapacitated but alive. We've been waiting here for... A while."

Now he remembered... He'd lost, but it seemed his foes had failed to finish the job. Too bad. For them.

He tried to laugh, only to start coughing instead. "Egg... fleet... Decloak..." he ordered instead. His control panel lit up and a massive space fleet appeared all around his personal craft.

"Holy shamole!" the grating voice, Cubot, yelled. "Where were you hiding that?"

"Silence..." he ordered. "Get me... on board... Recloak... Water... food... clean..."

"And then, boss?" the less grating voice, Orbot, asked.

Yes, and what then? Which of his brilliant plans would he attempt next? He'd need to send a few 'polite' reminders to his enemies that he lived, but what then? Hmm... decisions, decisions... Ah!

"Bring me... the... Gaia Manuscripts..." (51)

---

1) Nor, for that matter, did anyone else.

2) Bass just took the words right out of my mouth.

3) C-c-c-c-combo!

4) That's right, Eggman's charging planetary-sized fees just to get in.

5) Mostly because Orbot's really not trying all that hard to aim.

6) Wait a second...

7) Having trouble? Try running it through this translator: mybigmonkey dot com slash gibberish

8) Well, after Sonic's lightspeed impact it read 'Welcome to Egg_land'

9) XP

10) Filraen: You'd think Sonic and Tails would learn to interpret spoken Wisp one of these loops.

Archeo Lumiere: It's different from loop to loop.

11) If you're familiar with the plot of Sonic Colors, you've probably got a sinking feeling right about now.

12) Well, what did you expect? His power is fire-based.

13) Is Sasuke in this Loop and no one told me?

14) Oh, right, him.

15) Me either. Ew.

16) Oh snap.

17) Spittake

18) You know, I wonder if either Captain Jelly or Candybeard was supposed to have a voice and it ended up being the temporary replacement voice chip given to Cubot…

19) Which was why three of the four weren't chasing each other all over the place while the fourth hid.

20) It wasn't her! It was the One Armed Woman!

21) Oh dear, someone's cover is blown.

22) You know I had to do this line.

23) That's... That's new...

24) Oh dear lord, it's worse... Orbot and Cubot are... gasp COMPETENT!

25) Oh good. For a bit there I was afraid there were two Eggmen. Well, I suppose technically there are ... so...

26) Yeah, Sonic's swimming prowess is just a step above that of a Devil Fruit user. Even after looping for so long.

27) wildrook: Okay, I have to admit, NICOLE is developing a sense of humor.

28) Time for some surfing music.

29) sweatdrop

30) jaw drop THAT WASN'T IN THE SCRIPT!

31) Of all the times for a villain to be perceptive...

32) Please be aware that some Arc Fatigue may be experienced. After all, we're only about halfway through this installment and we're already over twice the length of the previous installment.

33) Uh-oh...

34) Egg Pawns Can't Dance.

35) I'm honestly trying to figure out when this version of Metal Sonic became a militant nihilist. It certainly wasn't in my notes...

36) And it's a mental image that doesn't make one want to wash their brain with bleach.

37) And now I'm wondering under what circumstances Mogo (the living planet who is also a Green Lantern) would hire the Chaotix for a case.

38) This isn't just me pulling something out of my ass. Have you seen what a thick accent can do to voice recognition software? The only ones I've used manage to regularly botch my relatively normal speech.

39) And here I thought gibberish for 'big damn heroes' was 'fig daxamn wholeos'.

40) The odd eyeless looks that all said 'WTF are you doing?'

41) Crap.

42) It is worth noting that, in the timeline of the Mega Loops, Rock hasn't met the Equestrian crowd at this point.

43) This is classic 'Hoist By Your Own Petard' right here.

44) The dramatic reveal that most of you likely already guessed! Yes, while Eggman was distracting Sonic and Mega Man from his real plan by having them chase down and rescue wisps, Mega Man was distracting Eggman from the fact that he'd hired the Chaotix to sabotage his park by playing along.

45) Which, in his office, it was.

46) He had a chance. He chose not to use it.

47) If you're familiar with the DS version of Sonic Colors, you've probably guessed what I did here.

48) Tatsumaki Senpu–Oh, wait... Rock hasn't actually learned that move yet.

49) You know you were too.

50) You forgot about this, didn't you? Don't worry, I almost forgot about it myself.

51) As firestorm blade said on Spacebattles: Cherry bomb it (52) Eggman…

52) To the tone of "God * it"

Mega Loops 14

Mega Loops 14

AN: In Mega Sonic Part 5, I forgot that ff dot net prohibited copy/pasting of story text. So at the end of this chapter is a collected translation of the 'Gibberish' speech from that chapter as a bonus.

14.0

Anakin held his lightsaber in front of him warily. General Grievous being replaced by someone he'd never heard of was one thing. Actually seeing what looked like a young girl in a black and beige armored sundress in command of the Separatist droid army was another altogether. Facing her down in the middle of her current command ship was... surreal.

"Are you... her ?" the disturbingly lifelike girl droid, as lifelike as Blues had been when he visited come to think of it, asked with an insane grin as every single danger sense Anakin had picked up in the Loops screamed at him to run for his life. Only the fact that his precognitive abilities were screaming just as loudly that bad things would happen if he tried kept him rooted to the spot.

"Her?" Anakin asked with not a little confusion. He was his normal male self this Loop after all.

"The one I need to kill," the girl droid said with a disturbing gleam in her eye. "To rend, tear, and torture until she begs for a mercy that will never come. Are you sure you're not her? Maybe her brother perhaps?"

"I... really don't know who you're talking about," Anakin resisted the urge to take a step back. "Maybe if you tell me their names?"

"I don't know her name..." the girl general giggled creepily. "Only that she exists somewhere and that she has a brother..."

"I can't really help you find them if you don't know who they are," Anakin stalled.

"Oh, well," the droid girl sighed dramatically before grinning maniacally. "I guess I'll just have to kill and torture everyone to be sure! It'll be so much fu–"

"General Waltz!" a droid soldier came running up. "General Waltz! We have intru–skrzzt"

Anakin blinked as the droid fell in several pieces from the lightsaber blades that had suddenly sprouted from the girl droid's fingers .

"What have I told you idiots about interrupting me when I'm in the middle of killing someone?!" the girl screeched before turning back to a thoroughly creeped out Anakin and igniting lightsaber blades from her other fingers as well. "Now, where were we? Oh, yes, I was about to tell you that if you really wanted to live you should start running for your–skrzzt"

Anakin stared in horrified confusion as the girl droid cut her own face with one of her finger-sabers.

"WHAT HAVE I TOLD YOU ABOUT WARNING THE VICTIMS?!" she screeched at herself. "YOU DON'T WARN MY PRECIOUS MEWLING PLAYTHINGS AWAY AND I SOMETIMES PRETEND YOU DON'T EXIST!"

Anakin's resistance against his instincts failed as he finally took a step back, which caused the crazed girl droid to refocus on him, the neon pink 'W' in her helmet flaring with ominous light.

"WHO SAID YOU COULD LEAVE?!" she screamed and flung one hand and all five energy blades emitting from it in his direction, the blades lengthening to score the armored walls of the hallway as she swung.

'Shit!' Anakin panicked as he jumped, curled up, and used the Force to push the energy blades up and down to create a gap he could fit through as they passed. His hair and the soles of his boots were singed, but he wasn't a few feet shorter on either end. He brought his own lightsaber around to block the next set with a downswing even as he used the Force to push himself up and over them. 'I hate full modulation lightsabers enough when there's just one of them!'

And then he spotted the even more crazed and excited expression of General Waltz's face as she spun back around for another pass and his spirits sunk.

The assault was relentless and devastating. At least to the poor ship corridor they were in as deep molten gouges were carved into it with every missed, blocked, and deflected strike of General Waltz's, but the girl droid general didn't seem to care about the collateral damage to her own ship as she kept up the assault.

Anakin's mind was racing as much as the situation allowed. Most of his energy was being spent not getting diced to little smoldering bits in the next moment which left precious little to formulate a plan or try and counterattack. Any time he moved to try and turn the flow of battle, his danger sense, precognition, and survival instincts all screamed him back on the defensive. And forget trying some of the more powerful stuff he'd picked up. Much of it needed at least a moment of concentration that he couldn't afford, and some of the best stuff (most of which could have turned the entire ship into vapor easily) practically needed a heartfelt speech or a few seconds to charge up which was emphatically out of the question right then.

And then, practically through sheer chance, he spotted his looping apprentice charging up behind General Waltz with a massive swirling ball of chakra flames in her hand.

"Take this you monster!" Ahsoka prepared to strike.

"Snips, no!" Anakin yelled as his padawan jumped into the air and angled the swirling orb of flames for a downward blow.

"RASEN–"

Ten finger-mounted lightsaber blades flashed through the spot occupied by Ahsoka and the fire-based Rasengan variant exploded to incinerate the girl's remains before Anakin had even finished registering the sight.

General Waltz hadn't even turned around.

"Ooops..." the insane droid girl grinned. "Was she important to you? A student? A friend? A lover? A daughter perhaps? I always forget to ask that before I kill precious people..."

'Yes, yes, a few Loops I try not to think about, and YES you unholy blight on creation!' Anakin's face twisted with fury as Dark Side Force Lightning arced over his body.

"AHAHAHAHAHAHAHA! THAT'S THE LOOK I LOVE TO SEE! FURY AND ANGUISH!" Waltz cackled as she charged again. "LET IT BE THE LAST THING YOU EVER FEEL!"

Anakin roared in anguished fury as he charged to meet her head-on.

Anakin awoke to the all-too-familiar sound of mechanically assisted breathing and looked around. This... wasn't the chamber where Palpatine told him Padme was dead. Nor was it one of his chambers after the Empire had been formally acknowledged.

Raising his arm up, he noted that as Darth Vader he most certainly didn't normally wear white.

"Where...?" the deep voice he was more familiar with than he liked asked.

"Easy Anakin," the gentle voice of Obi-Wan made itself known as the decidedly younger version of the man entered Anakin's view. "You've been through a lot. You almost didn't make it."

"Obi-Wan... I..." Anakin choked as what happened came back to him. It was still the same Loop, which meant Obi-Wan wasn't Awake and Ahsoka was still... "General Waltz... She... she got Snips..."

"Oh, Ani..." Padme's shocked gasp made his heart hurt even more. "I'm so sorry..."

"Do you remember what happened?" Obi-Wan asked.

"No... I..." Anakin tried to think, but everything after Ahsoka had died was a roar of rage and sorrow. "She got Snips... I... I lost it... and then... here..."

"Hmm..." Obi-Wan frowned in his classic manner. "Then we have a problem... When we found the ship adrift, you were the only thing even remotely alive on it. All of the droids, the crew, and everything else was carved to pieces but no sign of General Waltz was found."

"We can't..." Anakin tried to sit up, only for his vision to swim.

"Easy Ani," Padme lowered him back down gently. "You're nowhere near recovered."

"Indeed," Obi-Wan nodded. "We'll put a stop to General Waltz and whatever she or the Separatists have planned, but for now you need to rest and recover."

Anakin reluctantly heeded their concern, vowing to himself that by the time this Loop was over, Waltz would be put down like the madwoman she was.

"Oh, you look like a fun one!" General Waltz grinned as she stared down the white-armored figure of Anakin Skywalker in his billowing cape. "Be sure to let me know where it hurts so I can keep cutting there!"

"You will not find me so easy an opponent this time," Anakin's distorted voice boomed across the distance between them. Despite the claim, he held himself in a tense stance. He'd only survived their first encounter due to his long practice with the Sith regenerative techniques he'd studied under Darth Sidious/Palpatine and his unquenchable fury at this insane droid girl.

"This time?" Waltz's grin grew like someone had told her it was her birthday. It really creeped Anakin out in ways he'd never openly admit to anyone. But then, anyone who'd ever met Waltz and lived wouldn't need such an explanation. They'd know the feeling first hand. It was the feeling that had led the Separatist leaders to try and replace their mad general with someone more stable. But Waltz was still the general, and the new Separatist leaders were too frightened of her, or still too nauseous from seeing what happened to their predecessors, to try that again. "You mean... You actually lived through me killing you once? I... I get to kill you again ?!"

Anakin discreetly began channeling chakra into one of his prosthetic hands, one he'd modified specifically to work with this particular attack. He also tried not to let on how much his opponent's glee was freaking him out even past his Jedi focus on righteous justice and Sith desire for bloody revenge.

"THANK YOU! HAHAHAHAHA!" General Waltz charged, slashing wildly with the energy blades of her finger-sabers.

Anakin parried in a reflexive maneuver governed solely by his Force precognition and finely-honed danger senses, allowing his opponent to skid far past his position and counting himself lucky that he only got part of his helmet and cape shaved off in the exchange. He finished channeling chakra into his arm and took aim at General Waltz's back, musing as he always did about the irony of his natural chakra element.

"ROCKET CHIDORI!" he bellowed, firing the armor-piercing electrically imbued knife-kand at Waltz's center of mass.

The mechanical limb shot forward at very literal lightning speeds in a yellow blaze of light... and was cut down by a ridiculously off-balance spinning-slash from Waltz that caused the mad robot to hit the ground face-first even though she'd destroyed Anakin's rocket-propelled prosthesis.

What bothered Anakin was that he could swear her finger-sabers had been crackling with Dark Side Force lightning when she'd countered his attack. Tabling the thought, he rushed forward to take advantage of General Waltz's vulnerable state with the lightsaber held in his remaining hand, only to check his charge and jump back as powerful rocket thrusters in the base of the general's sundress-shaped armor flared to life with enough intensity to almost roasted him alive. They forced General Waltz to scrape forward along the ground for a ways until she righted herself and whipped around to grin at him, half her face missing from the self-damaging maneuver and her armor scored from the ground in places.

"You actually tried to shoot me in the back?!" General Waltz looked thrilled as she laughed maniacally and electricity crackled spastically around her finger-sabers. Damn. It was Dark Side Force lightning...

'How the hell did she...?' Anakin wondered for a moment before shaking the thought off. He could wonder about that later.

"No wait, that couldn't have been you! It had to have been the–" General Waltz suddenly shot forward, propelled by her rocket thrusters and Anakin barely got up a block that held back all ten of her finger-sabers, the blades close enough that their heat was causing parts of his helmet to warp, "– one armed man! "

14.1

Shinji generally wouldn't contemplate what he was about to do in a Loop. He'd done jerkish things before, some of which his father Gendo would have probably been proud of if they hadn't been aimed at him. But he'd never outright joined the local villain, certainly not with express intent of helping said villain achieve their goals.

But then again, from what he'd heard this guy was normally some egotistic nutcase with a persecution complex. The grievances he held against the rest of the world were either all in his own head or a result of his own actions. But since his usual rival had been replaced by Gendo Ikari, the guy currently had legitimate claims to suffering. Probably a longer list than his imagined ones in this place's baseline. For starters, Dr. Gendo Ikari had gotten rich off the man's inventions and then used some jerkass clause in the intellectual property and employment agreements to toss the guy out on the street to starve. All while Gendo not only continued to get rich, but was able to goad the governments of the world into funding immoral research into resurrecting his dead wife.

Shinji himself, and an Awake Rei as well (the one from his baseline, not the other one that sometimes popped up in the Loops; or worse, the one that came along with the Ree), were android creations of Gendo. They were, in essence, his 'proof of concept' Gendo used to sell the world's leaders on his insane plan. On the bright side, they weren't anatomically correct, so he didn't have to worry about Rei's insatiable libido for a change.

Now, if their robot bodies had been made with genuine S2 organs, the whole plan would have been a wash. Shinji had heard about the guy they were going to see and what he could do with unfamiliar technology and abilities. As well as that he could randomly remember stuff he'd learned in a later Loop despite not looping. Crap like LCL and AT-fields weren't something Shinji was wild about a mad scientist getting ahold of. The things Sakura did were disturbing enough and this guy was supposedly smarter than she was.

But they didn't have that. Instead, they had some sort of condensed electromagnetic field generators, which were not a bad imitation of

AT-fields now that he thought about it. Something to look into for a later Loop. The point was that the local Anchors regularly dealt with someone who had the same kind of weapon, so what they had probably wasn't anything radically new for this Loop. And it freed the two of them up to help the guy the current variant of Gendo had shafted.

They'd probably be seen as villains, but what the heck. It was something new to try. Shinji opened the door to the guy's current abode, inside an abandoned warehouse no less, as Rei followed him in.

"Dr. Wily?" he addressed the surprised, and somewhat haggard looking, mad scientist. "I'm Shinji, DIN-002, and this is Rei, DIN-001. We'd like to defect to your side against our creator."

14.2

"You do know that I'm normally male, right?" Dr. Tammy Light stared back at her eager suitor with amusement.

Gyro froze and paled in the same instant as his brain locked up from the revelation. He then beat as hasty a retreat as physically possible. It would take him fifty showers, twenty one bars of soap, ten bottles of shampoo, ten tubes of toothpaste, three toothbrushes, and half a bar's worth of alcohol before he felt like himself again.

14.X (Challenger provided by KageX)

X pondered the possible identity of the new Maverick that had been tracked to this area of the Arctic Ocean. There'd been reports of a narwhal-themed robot wreaking havoc in the area, but not much else. A narwhal maverick was certainly a new one, though he'd lay good odds that his powers were ice-themed given the area he'd chosen to attack. An aquatic model was practically a given.

'Let's see,' he thought as he examined his logs of elementally themed Mavericks and their common weaknesses, 'fire's probably out, though electricity could still be a good choice. Or maybe he's one of those ice types who's particularly vulnerable to explosions... Hmm? What's this?'

X paused to examine a long metal object floating in the middle of the water. It appeared to be a harpoon, though one made of much stronger material than was commonly used by fisherman, as well as sporting a blade sharpened to an edge measured in microns. There was also a bulging part towards the tip that was very atypical of such a tool.

"X?" a communication from Hunter headquarters asked. "Have you located the Maverick yet?"

"Not yet, but I may have found something of interest," X replied as he reached out to grab it for a closer examination. Only for the bulging part to light up the moment he came in contact with it. "O–"

Shaboom!

'Owowowowow...' X did his best to ignore his damage warnings, instead looking around for a possible attack. There was no way that went unnoti–

"HARPOON BLADE!"

X barely twisted out of the way of the blade as it nearly impaled his side roughly where a human would have their kidney, only to take the blunt impact as the head it was attached to hit him very solidly and sent him tumbling through the water. Righting himself, he glared at the large anthropomorphic narwhal maverick as the muscular model turned around for another pass.

"Okay, now I've found him!" X called into his communicator, getting only static back before focusing on his new opponent. "So we're calling our attacks?" he yelled, forming an arm cannon and charging up. "Fine by me! X-BUSTER!"

A blast of plasma energy larger than X himself burst forth, carving a boiling swath through the water towards his opponent, who barrel-rolled around the projectile at speeds that would turn the average high-end aerial reploid green with envy.

"HARPOON BLADE!"

X managed a better dodge this time, avoiding the harpoon-shaped horn on the Maverick's head and the head itself. And got clotheslined by the Maverick's arm for his efforts. Grunting, X's armor turned gray and yellow as he switched weapons.

"MAGNET MINE!"

The explosive hit the narwhal Maverick's side dead on and stuck as X disentangled himself from the arm. The maverick swam a ways off before the explosive detonated. And then turned back towards X with the barest of scorch marks marring his appearance.

"Oh, come on!"

"You think to harm me, Harpoon Narwhal, with such a paltry explosive?" the Maverick gave X a feral grin and lowered his head in X's direction. "Let me show you a real explosive! EXPLODING HARPOON!"

The harpoon horn on Harpoon Narwhal's head shot out at blinding speed, straight for X's head. Reacting on instinct, though he would later wonder whose, X reached up in a flash and caught the projectile before it could hit him. And saw a very familiar light on the bulging tip.

'Son o–'

Shaboom!

'That's it!' X growled, charging his arm cannon and aiming it at Harpoon Narwhal's last known location before the hindrance to his sight had even begun clearing. "X-BUSTER!"

"GIGA BORE!"

X got his sight back just in time to watch a drill-spiraling projectile blast through his X-Buster shot like it was a wad of tissue and propelled himself as far away from its path as he could as it plowed into a nearby structure with a massive eruption of metal and debris.

"DEEP SEA SPIRAL!"

To X's confusion, Harpoon Narwhal began to swim around him at high speed instead of attacking again. It took about three full rotations of firing fruitlessly on the speedy Maverick before it dawned on him what was happening and he began swimming upwards as fast as he could.

Only Harpoon Narwhal followed, keeping up the spiral pattern until X was trapped in an underwater vortex he couldn't break free of. An underwater vortex that curiously contained numerous gaseous bubbles. X analyzed one on a whim and his eyes widened as he began to struggle even harder to break free of the current.

"DEPTH BURST!"

The exploding harpoon his foe had shot didn't go anywhere near X himself, but it didn't need to. The bubbles were full of volatile gasses and the detonation was close enough to them to set off a chain reaction like a depth charge that X was practically in the middle of. His struggles had placed him in a position where he was blown straight upwards to hit the icy surface of the Arctic Ocean with his back.

X fought to keep conscious and charge his X-Buster before it was too la–

"GIGA BORE!"

It wasn't a direct hit. If it had been, X would have likely been the subject of deep sea treasure hunts for the next several decades. It was still enough to blow open the ice-packed surface like a bomb and fling a horribly battered X several dozen yards away to impact the frozen ice pack atop the Arctic Ocean. Scant seconds later and Harpoon Narwhare erupted from the opening he'd made in the ice with practiced ease, performed an acrobatic flip in midair, and landed on the surface with every bit as much grace as he'd displayed in the water. X readied himself, his armor turning yellow and white.

"So this is X, the progenitor and legendary Hunter... Such a disappointment!"

"ELECTRIC SPARK!"

"EXPLODING HARPOON!"

Shaboom!

The harpoon hit X's blast head on and the two annihilated each other, and then a second came sailing through the blast to impact at X's feet and blow him several feet backwards, coming to a halt on his knees.

"Fool!" the aquatic Maverick sneered as the smoke cleared. "I am Harpoon Narwhal, the ultimate fighting machine above or below the waves! You cannot win, X!"

"Okay..." X grunted as he got to his feet and stared his foe in the eye. "Then I guess it's time for the Maverick Hunters' Ultimate Technique!"

Harpoon Narwhal blinked in confusion as the famous Hunter deactivated his X Buster and began placing his hands together in rapid-fire configurations the humans called 'hand signs'. "What do you possibly think you can do that could defeat me?"

"Hunter Style!" X ended with his hands crossed to form his namesake. "Ultimate Technique:–"

Harpoon Narwhal got into a ready stance, prepared for anything his opponent might throw at him.

"–Division by Zero!"

Nothing happened.

Harpoon Narwhal blinked in confusion. "What in the world were you expecting that to do? Everyone knows you can't divide by–"

Vwom

"–Oh... That Zero..." Harpoon Narwhal said as his torso parted diagonally, one half sliding off the other.

X and Zero stared at each other for several long moments before the latter sighed and deactivated his Beam Saber.

"I cannot believe you pulled something that ridiculous," Zero glared. "It was bad enough you spent an entire Loop practicing those ridiculous 'hand signs' after watching that even more ridiculous ninja movie."

"They worked, didn't they?" X grinned at his friend and comrade.

"Only under the loosest possible definition," Zero huffed.

"If you really think it's so ridiculous, why did you play along?"

"I have no idea what you're talking about..."

14.4 (Scorntex)

Someone was knocking at the door to the lab, and once again Roll was the only one there (Father was out doing... something, and Auto had vanished).

Picking up her broom, she made her way to the door, wary of whatever was lurking on the other side. Which as it turned out was something blocking out the sun.

" Greetings, inherently inferior yet inexplicably popular mechanoid. " The incredibly large machine in front of her declared, " Have you heard the word of Megatron? "

She blinked, as the large dark-blue mechanoid foisted an oddly human-scaled pamphlet towards her. She stared at the image on the cover, that of the Decepticon sigil, and the title; After Doctor Light: Wily and The Illusion of Progress .

She stared at it, then back up to the mechanoid (Sound something. Soundblast? Soundshock?) who despite the incredibly menacing design it (he?) seemed to have, was still staring earnestly at her.

" You need not be a slave to a singular function! Throw off the shackles of human- "

Roll slammed the door shut. She was incredibly certain she heard a disappointed "oh" from the other side, followed by the ground shaking as the visiting alien marched off down the street.

For several seconds she didn't move. For shock or confusion, she wasn't sure, though if she had to hazard a guess it was probably both.

On the plus side, though, it wasn't like the time Xander Payne had come gathering funds for her brother's fan club.

(addon by wildrook)

"Roll," Rock said, "did we just get another fanatic?"

"Unfortunately," Roll replied. "It's times like this I wish Bass was looping with us."

Rock had to admit, Bass would scare them silly...especially when he fused with Treble.

14.3

Zero Awoke in the middle of Maverick Hunter HQ and immediately saw something that had him shielding his eyes as the Loop memories came in. With each one involving the organization normally known as the Maverick Hunters, he grew more horrified, nauseous, and embarrassed. Looking around frantically, he spotted X and rushed over to grab his friend for a little chat.

"What's up Zero?" X asked after Zero had finished dragging him into a secluded area. Heedless of the rumors X knew that would start. "Loop not agreeing with you?"

" How did the the Maverick Hunters become the 'Chippendales Rescue Rangers'?! Seriously! I did not need to see Sigma in a man-thong! Or Vile! I could have happily gone the rest of eternity without seeing that!"

"Hey, look on the bright side!"

" What bright side?!"

"Iris will probably be all over you when she joins up!"

Zero looked horrified at the very idea of Iris seeing him like this. Any version of Iris.

"Ack! No! Bad Zero! No seppuku!"

"Fine... But I promise you this X... If the dress code doesn't change fast , I'll start my own rebellion..."

14.? (Bigou)

Roll didn't like this loop. She loathed it with all her soul and more.

Being the only one Awake wasn't the cause. Sure, she was a bit lonely, but that was it. Neither was the local Proto Man, even if he acted in a way disturbingly similar to how Bass often did. But since he was made by Dr. Wily that wasn't unexpected.

No, the problem was what made this particular loop different to the usual 'cartoon loop'.

A hateful difference wonderfully illustrated by how her dad reacted when she asked to be remade as a combat robot: He scoffed! And like it wasn't insulting enough, when she insisted he spouted some nonsense about girls only being good at cooking and housekeeping.

She was furious, and her unAwake brother nodding at all this nonsense only aggravating things further. So Roll left Light's Lab slamming the door, never to return.

After some time in this hell of a loop, Roll was exasperated. She wasn't any less furious that the first day, but she was even more exasperated.

This loop was even worst than she first believed, women being seen as nothing else than a commodity. And the only one that think it inadmissible are a timid third of the female population and, strangely, Proto Man.

Until one day, she unknowingly passed near the place of Mega Man's latest battle. A stray shot was about to hurt her when Proto Man placed himself in between, protecting her. Roll grabbed the body of the red robot, who got heavily damaged, and teleported with it, in the hope to patch him up. Alas, his IC ship got busted.

"Proto Man… You may have been one of the bad guys, but as far as I know, you were the only boy to see girls as your equals. Without… Without you… Who will help the world see that women shouldn't be slaves? Who will help the world out of this nightmare?"

"Finally! FINALLY! Mega Man is at my mercy! BWA-HA-HA-HA-HA!" In appearance, Dr. Wily was ecstatic. But in truth… First, around a year ago his Proto Man was destroyed. And now, for the past month, he was able to successfully capture Mega Man several times, only for some whistling shadow to rescue the blue bomber.

For his part, Rock could only admit that Wily was right this time, even if that pained him. He was currently attached to some kind of heavy looking table, itself bolted to the floor, without any way to free himself.

"Sorry for the uncomfortable bed. But don't worry, your pain will come to an end as soon as I lower this lever… BY FRYING YOUR SYSTEMS!" Wily then acted on his words. But to his dismay, his death machine wasn't working. "That lack of grilled robot is… disturbing. Did I forgot to pay my bills?"

Further nonsense were prevented by someone whistling.

"THIS WHISTLE AGAIN!" Yelled a now frantic scientist. "IT'S BECOMING A CONCERT! AN ANNOYING WHISTLE CONCERT ! SHOW YOURSELF, COWARDLY WHISTLER!"

Said someone stepped out of the shadow, revealing himself to be Proto Man. But to Wily's eyes, this Proto Man seemed… different somehow. Like he was more heavily armored, all his body being covered in red, white and gray plates. Strangely, both his helmet and his shield looked like the ones of the original model.

The red robot didn't speak, only glaring at the mad scientist before going to rescue the blue one, not expecting to be shouted at by its unAwake brother. "WHY DID YOU RESCUE ME, PROTO MAN! TO BE THE ONE DESTROYING ME?"

"Rock, if you don't trust Proto Man…" Responded a feminine but familiar voice, before the red robot took off his helmet "…At least trust your twin sister."

This version of Rock couldn't process what he was seeing. The voice, face and even the smiles were the ones of his sister, but the armor looked like an upgraded version of Proto Man's. (Also, the hairstyle was different, shorter while still girly, somehow. But that could be to better hide them in the helmet.) When he finally spoke, he mumbled some nonsense about girls not supposed fight, to stay at home to cook and take care of the house.

At that, Roll got furious again. To the point where she slammed the sturdy table in rage, bending it in half.

Naturally, Dr. Wily took this opportunity to flee.

After taking some deep breaths to cool her down, Roll put her helmet back on before teleporting away, without a word.

14.6

Roll was livid. They'd put out the word about their home Loop and some of the local hazards to be careful of – Roll herself had warned the individual she was confronting – as a show of good faith and then this person decided to outright ignore it anyway. "You used the Dragon Slave on Wily one Loop, didn't you?"

"Of course I did," Lina Inverse, the Dragon-Spooker and generally considered a looping natural disaster by her fellow Anchors, rolled her eyes. As far as she was concerned, no problem existed that couldn't be solved with a well-placed Dragon Slave. "He was asking for it and it's not like he could ever learn it or actually do anything with it, so chill out. How'd you know anyway? No one else was Awake for that Loop."

"Because he did learn it," Roll advanced, causing Lina to back up out of reflex, "and he used it on us. Dragon Man leveled every metropolitan area in China in less than an hour as a demonstration . Did you forget that Wily's Dreaming? Or maybe you forgot that he really is a genius ? Every time you threw that spell at him, he got more information on how to do it himself. And now there's a madman loose in the Loops with access to both high science and high magic."

Lina blinked, and tried to process what she's just been told. She failed. "But... that's impossible!"

"I recall telling you that Wily does the impossible as a hobby ," Roll growled. "If he Wakes Up because of this, I am personally going to giftwrap you for whatever deity has to come investigate."

"Yeah, right," Lina crossed her arms defiantly. She was one of the original first-generation Anchors, and this little magic-less robot was just an upstart newbie. "What can you do to me?"

Roll's eyes began to glow red. "One who is darker than twilight. One who is redder than flowing blood..."

Lina froze in shock. 'Oh, sh–'

"Now look what you've done," Lina groused as she tried to adjust her footing to something resembling comfort without success. There was just no way her massively oversized bustline was going to be anything but obnoxious and constantly in the way. Why did she have to be so cursed in the Loops? All she wanted, beyond the power to blow up those who annoyed her of course, was a respectably sized bust. Not much, just a nice pair of Es or Ds to put her better endowed rivals in their place. Or even a respectable pair of Cs! She wasn't picky! Something more than the A-cups or A-and-a-half-cups she normally had to show that she was a woman in her own right. But no, anything that upped her bustline; spell, medical, Eiken itself, whatever; invariably gave her ridiculously large mammaries that made simply standing a chore, had her falling over everything just trying to walk, and just overall made her look like a sideshow freak. No, no nice womanly bust for her. She was cursed to have either A-cups or Eiken-Cups. It wasn't fair! She didn't even know who she'd pissed off!

"I wasn't expecting you to just stand there gaping like an idiot," her blonde companion rolled her eyes before examining her own bustline that was several sizes smaller than Lina's. Still ridiculously big on any girl under nine feet tall, but not as bad as the Dragon Spooker's. "What is it about dad's investors in this Loop that they insist all female models he builds be so overly endowed?"

Lina barked a vindictive laugh. The only enjoyment she got out of Eiken was watching other female loopers be almost as miserable in it as she was. "Get used to it. They'll probably make him increase the size soon enough. And even if they don't, you can look forward to tripping chest-first into some loser's face and getting accidentally molested on a daily basis."

"As if," Roll snorted before closing her eyes and concentrating. To Lina's astonishment, the robot girl's bustline began shrinking. Down, down, and down until they were the size of B-cups. "Dad went the investors one better and made them adjustable."

Lina gaped as the girl robot skipped off unimpeded. She stood there for an unknown amount of time before some underfed geek tripped into her and landed face-first in Lina's chest. Getting angry, she tried to growl out her familiar incantation and blow the entire block straight to oblivion, only to get that maddening feeling as the spell failed in the manner that only Safe-Mode Loops were capable of making it do.

'It's just! Not! Fair!' she wailed internally as the scrawny geek frantically tried to scramble back to his feet, obliviously using her chest as a handhold.

7.7.7 continued (Hubris Plus)

Pitchblende Part 5: The Shadow from Beyond Ra-Moon

"...So today I, Mayor Leonard Dorado, do declare that this city is renamed Megaton City!" The exuberant official proclaimed from the stage set up in front of city hall. Rock, Roll, and Robo stood off to one side of him, the twins in their combat armor and Robo wearing a flak vest in an attempt at solidarity. "And in celebration of this momentous day, I offer the key to the city to all three of our three time saviors, Mega Man, Mega Woman, and Atomic Robo!"

"Thank you, sir," Rock said modestly as he took the large gold-plated key. "It's an honor."

"The honor is all mine, you bots are my heroes," the mayor enthused as he shook each of their hands. "But if you want to thank me, remind Dr Light to vote Dorado! "

"Put in a good word with the governor," Robo replied, "and I'll see what I can do about voting for you myself ."

A short time later the trio had found a moment to separate from the crowd and talk amongst themselves.

"Megaton City, huh?" Robo asked, "sounds kinda ominous if you ask me."

"Well, there's only so many ways to combine 'mega' and 'atomic'," Rock pointed out.

"And combining with 'robo' tends to get things like Megatron City," Roll added.

"Good point," he admitted before taking a moment to check his internal chronometer. "Wasn't Wily supposed to have made his move by now?" The three of them, along with several other Robot Masters and most of the equipment at Tesladyne, had already been coated with a treatment to block Ra-Moon's influence. They'd excused the seemingly odd precaution as testing for an EM shielding contract Robo had picked up from the military.

"It can vary anywhere from hours to days," the blue bomber answered. "Admittedly, if he finishes early he usually waits awhile just so he can ruin my birthday."

"Not a fan of cake?"

"Not a fan of fun," Roll shot back.

"Well, whatever he's cooking up, we're ready for it." The Light twins greeted this statement with a set of blank stares. "I just said that, didn't I?"

As if waiting for the cue, it was at that instant that every other robot in the square collapsed simultaneously. Confused murmurs swept through the crowd, not quite panicking yet as befuddled news crews tried to sort out what appeared to be an equipment failure.

The panic started in earnest a moment later as one of the machines picked itself up with stiff, clumsy motions. Half of its faceplate had been taken up by a trio of yellow eyes surrounded by a labyrinthine collection of pulsing blue veins that trailed across its body in an almost-pattern that simultaneously drew and repulsed the eye. Plastic whined and crackled as the arm holding its microphone twisted into a vicious looking hook.

"You're telling me these are the same as the thing that tore through downtown?" Agent Stern asked incredulously as he peered through one of Tesladyne's second story windows, shotgun in hand. They were fortunate that the vast majority of robots were civilian models and generally not built as sturdily as those favored by Wily. Bullets punched through their plastic exteriors almost as easily as they would flesh, as evidenced by scattering of broken machines on the street below.

Even so, they were more than enough to be dangerous to the average citizen, especially with every machine either infected or disabled. Even if the military had been able to deploy properly, no armed force had ever been built to hold every city on Earth simultaneously.

More worrying were the one third of robots, mostly military models, which had simply vanished .

" Exactly the same thing," Robo explained as he descended from the roof access. "Same monster, even. The Shadow is a partially mathematical entity, and contemplating those equations gives it direct access to the matter doing the computing."

"And they've been broadcasted to every machine on the planet that isn't EM shielded," Rock added.

"And eventually every living thing too, if the signal continues to amplify," Doctor Light finished worriedly.

"So why aren't they growing to the size of buildings?" Agent Krantz asked from her own post overlooking the front door. "We could barely stop one , all of them doing it would only need a few hours to take over."

"Because, despite being slightly less intelligent than slime mold, the Shadow is learning ," Robo answered. "It knows we can exploit its nature to get at its insides, so it's staying small to stop me getting a grip and using multiple points of contact to spread as far as it can anyways."

"So, what, we have to destroy every machine it's infected to get rid of it?"

"Doesn't sound like a bad plan to me," Stern put in.

"Well," Robo began, counting off reasons on his fingers. "That would, one, destroy civilization as we know it. Two, take so long that the signal will take out humans before you're done anyways. Three, every second you spend looking at it is another second it has to get into your head with or without the signal, so hunting it will only infect people faster . And four, even if you pulled it off destroying the parts we can see won't even sting the rest of it, which means it'll be back with a new tactic in no time."

"We have to cut it off at the source," Rock asserted.

"And you think that's the Lanfront Ruins?" The Light patriarch asked uncertainly. The siblings exchanged glances as they considered how to best convince him, but found themselves beaten to the punch.

"It makes as much sense as anything," Dr Astil said distantly. "This is different from anything we saw down there, but it... Feels the same. I know it's not very scientific, but..."

"It's fine, Pedro," Light said, laying a hand on his old friend's shoulder. "It's the best lead we have, and far be it from me to dismiss intuition."

"So when do we leave?" Roll asked.

"As soon as the aerospike is finished fueling," Robo answered as he zipped up his flight suit and strapped a bandolier over one shoulder.

"Uh, Robo," Rock questioned as he noticed that the cylinders the larger robot carried weren't grenades. "Is all of that bug spray? "

"Rock, we are going to the Amazon ," Robo stated, eyes widening as he took hold of both of Rock's shoulders. "There are over ten thousand new species of insect discovered there every year . As many as seventy thousand individual species can exist in a single acre ."

"...You know bug bites don't really affect machines, right?" Roll asked after a moment of awkward silence.

"Oh, it's not the bites that bother me. It's the way they crawl inside your chassis and die and stay there forever ." One of his eyes had started twitching. "It's pretty much the worst thing ever."

"Dammit Robo," Roll hissed as she enveloped the area in a cloud of insecticide. "I used to be fine with bugs!" The trio had arrived at the outskirts of the ruins after a half hour ride in what could charitably be called a cockpit strapped to an experimental rocket engine.

"I've seen you fry a spider with Fire Storm," Rock pointed out as he Cut a path through the foliage.

" That was about cleanliness in the lab," she insisted. " This is just- Uhg! " She shouted in frustration as a beetle landed on her face and she turned the spray on herself in a way that would have been incredibly painful had she been organic.

"Trust me, I did you a favor," Robo stated, slightly muffled by the blue scarf he'd wrapped beneath his eyes. The top of his head was covered by a flight helmet, and between that and the gloves and flight suit he'd managed to make sure not a single square inch of himself was exposed. Nevertheless, he still applied a fresh cloud of repellant every quarter hour.

"Suuure you did," Rock drawled before freezing mid-swing. "Hold on, do you two hear that?" The trio paused, listening intently for a moment before catching the sound of shouting muffled by the foliage.

" It has tentacles! Why does it have tentacles?! "

" Doesn't matter, shootitSHOOTIT SHOOTIT! "

The three Light-bots exchanged glances before nodding to one another and charging through the heavy undergrowth. A few moments later they reached a clearing around a small stream.

It was chaos. The first eight DWN models scrambled about, barely managing to coordinate themselves in the face of their enemy. Bubble Man kicked up waves as he tried to use the waist-high water to his advantage while Heat Man worked to ignite the damp rainforest brush and limit movement. Crash Man's projectiles proved too slow to strike their nimble opponent, but forced the creature to dodge and change targets. Every time it leaped, it found itself batted about by one of Air Man's cyclones or Wood Man's leaf barrier. All the while, Quick Man and Metal Man darted about peppering their target with boomerangs and saw blades.

All together, they seemed to be barely holding it off.

"Let me guess," Robo said, eying the enemy robot. "Shadow Man?"

"Got it in one," Rock agreed.

The alien machine was the most converted of any they'd seen. Jagged teeth sprouted from its right arm without rhyme or reason, and its left had been wholly replaced by a twitch mass of tendrils, branching and passing through one another without concern for geometry. A gaping maw slashed diagonally across the face, neatly bisecting an eye. The lack was made up for by a dozen mismatched eyeballs scattered about its torso.

With its good hand it hurled a massive shuriken studded with minute tendrils. Air Man managed to dodge the weapon, but the tree it had struck instead was soon covered in a growing patchwork somewhere between veins and circuitry. Another of Crash Man's bombs drilled into the ground at its feet and, rather than dive through the wall of flame on its right, pass over the bomb on its left, or brave the leaf barrier Wood Man had thrown up ahead, it threw itself backwards.

"Now!" Quick Man shouted, and Flash Man spun out from where he'd been hiding amongst the trees. The timely Master threw out both hands, and Shadow Man was engulfed in a field of glimmering lights. The infected robot froze in place, along with a section of burning forest and a cloud of shrapnel. "Good job, Flash. Everyone get ready. We're gonna hit him hard and fast with everything we've got the second-"

Shadow Man resumed motion as though he'd only hit a hitch in his step. Leaving an oily looking distortion in his wake, he passed through the still frozen curtain of flame and raised another throwing star towards Heat Man. Three lightning bolts crackled into him before he could throw, flinging him across the clearing.

"I swear," Robo snarked as he and the twins lowered their weapons. "No one takes 'beyond time' seriously until they start getting back talk from themselves."

"We need your help to take down Ra-Moon," Rock explained to the robots they had violently dismantled months prior.

The eight Masters immediately took aim at the heroes.

"We'll get rid of the tentacles!" Robo added with a raised finger.

Eight glances were exchanged.

" Deal! "

Thomas Light had never been one to sit idle. This was true as a general statement, resulting in his prodigious list of accomplishments, but doubly so in a crisis. He had full confidence in his constructed family to set things right, but that didn't mean he couldn't help them along.

When Wily had made his first gambit, he'd given his son and daughter power enough to win the day and perfected the Magnet Beam. During the second he'd produced the ITEM series. The last time the Shadow had attacked, he'd been rendered helpless. He didn't intend to let it happen again.

The underlying principles of Yoku blocks and teleportation had a surprising number of parallels. While a transponder lacked the capacity to perform a full phase shift, if was possible to use one to exert force along the... Zorth axis, had Robo called it?

He powered on the sequence, glad for the EM shielding Tesladyne had created even if he didn't quite approve of his son taking military contracts. Create an asymmetric power flow along the transponder, rotate it into an orthogonal planar space, and then shunt the whole thing along the standard teleportation path...

There was a wet slap as a pile of writhing blue tendrils coiled around machinery fell into the isolation tank.

"Doctor Light!" Chattered the suddenly freed Mic-Bot in the other tank. "The Public wants to know: Given the wild success of your three robotic children, have you considered producing mechanical parents for orph-" The robot slumped, powerless, before jerking upright once more, fresh veins crawling across its surface.

"Twenty-four point six-eight-two seconds before reinfection," Light noted, scribbling the number down on a scrap of paper. He spent another moment tapping the pencil in thought before walking across the lab and turning on the HAM radio. "Mikhail, do you read?"

"Tom?" Cossack answered after a moment, sounding harried. "Do you have something?"

"I have the start of something, but we're going to need more signal strength if it's going to work..."

"Is it over?" Heat Man asked, raising the top of his boxy chassis to peek at their surroundings. A fair portion of the stone tunnel was smoldering thanks to the amount of blind fire he'd thrown around.

"Yes," Crash Man answered. "And we will never speak of it again."

" They got everywhere, " Bubble Man whispered, hugging himself and shivering.

"Never again!" Crash insisted.

Needless to say, the possessed Snake Man and he numerous Search Snakes had left an impression.

"Quit whinin', ya babies," Robo scolded, pointedly ignoring the irony as he sprayed himself down with another round of insecticide. "We're almost-"

" WWHHHIIII- " A wet rumble echoed down the ancient corridor from ahead. " -LLIIIIIII! "

"It's after Wily this time?" Roll asked.

"Sure sounds that way," Rock agreed.

"That doesn't..." Robo began before shaking his head. "We'll figure it out later, we're already running out the clock without trying to sort out the motivations of an eldritch monster."

The group crept along until the passage opened up into the temple's main chamber. Leaning around the corner, they spied the massive orb of Ra-Moon sitting on its customary pedestal with countless cords and cables dangling around it. The tracery of thin veins was visible on its body and along its cables, but didn't seem to have been altered beyond that. Opposite them, another passageway was blocked off by was appeared to be a flickering wall, the base of which was coated in weakly trembling blue goo.

It took a moment for Robo to identify the wall as Yoku blocks, phasing in and out of subspace so quickly they appeared solid. Clever , he conceded after watching a few flailing wires bash against the barrier only to be shredded into jelly.

"Doctor Wily!" Quick Man called out. "Are you okay?"

"Quick Man? Thank Tesla my modified transponders shielded you!" Came the answering cry. "We have been betrayed, you must destroy Ra-Moon!"

"Applesauce," Robo muttered as the ancient god machine laboriously turned about to face them. A single yellow eye had split open in place of its typical insignia. "Doc, we got a problem," he continued after activating his radio. He had to broadcast through the most powerful part of Ra-Moon's jamming and a few dozen feet of solid rock to get the signal through, but he'd gone through a lot of trouble to make sure his head-phone was always in contact.

"Robo?" Came the staticky reply a moment later. "What's wrong?"

"We found the transmitter, but there's not enough of the entity on it for me to get a grip. We can break it, but that won't help with anything that's already infected."

"I may have a solution to both our problems. Can you give me its coordinates?"

"Exactly twenty-two meters north of my current position," Robo answered as the baleful eye came to rest on him.

" ROOOOH, " it roared, " BOOOOH! "

"Aw, you do care," Robo snarked at the terrible space monster. "Whatever you're doing, Doc, do it fast ."

"Much as I hate to say it, I gotta agree with the tin man," Stern grunted as he peeked out the window. "We ain't got a lot of time."

Outside, dozens of robots had massed and were pressing themselves to the walls of the building. Every so often one capable of flight would hover towards a window and either Stern or Krantz would shoot it down. None had gotten close yet, but there were more robots than they had ammo and neither was too keen on using any of Robo's experimental weaponry.

"Patience, agents," Light told them as his fingers danced across the keyboard. "Science is not a discipline which can be rushed. Though I will endeavor to hurry," he added as another shot rang out.

"You know," he went on, not slowing in his programming even as he spoke. "I often try to brush people off when they call me the father of modern robotics. Science and engineering are both collaborative efforts and, as much as Albert would disagree, no one man can take credit for an entire field. But there is a kernel of truth to the statement. Most of the robots working today were based upon my designs, in part if not in total. Even my colleagues, who frequently craft machines I have scarcely dreamed of, base those devices upon my work."

"Rock, Roll, and Robo may be closest to my heart, but in a very real way every robot on Earth is a child of mine."

"That's a nice sentiment, Doctor," Agent Krantz told him. "But is there a point coming up?"

"The point is that this creature has harmed my family," Light answered. "And I want it to understand exactly how poor that decision was." Taking one last look at his code, he nodded to himself before scooping up his handset. "All hands, prepare to broadcast. In all likelihood we will only have one chance at this."

"Read ya' loud an' clear, Doc," came the ebullient reply. "Y'all hear that? Big Papa Light says it's go time. Pass it along an' then set yer boxes to relay, kick back, an' watch the science!"

It was surprising how many truckers and HAM radio owners were science enthusiasts.

Very nearly every robot on the planet had wireless access of one sort or another. Originally intended for software patching or remote control, he'd repurposed it to accept commands from and network with Masters. It hadn't been too difficult to use that access to seize direct control of teleport transponders and similar devices in each robot, but even Tesladyne couldn't transmit the signal to everywhere at once, not when satellites were jammed.

Fortunately, humanity had spent decades cultivating a massive network of ground relays as a hobby.

It hadn't taken long for the chamber to descend into chaos. The Ra-Moon/Shadow hybrid retained all of the power of the former and the impossible geometry of the latter. Cables would drive into the floor and ceiling only to emerge across the room, grasping and coiling at the robots arrayed against it. The blasts it fired followed bizarre trajectories, curving and zigzagging to strike from unexpected angles.

Early on in the fight, the third series Masters had entered the fray, Shadow Man and Snake Man returning with the damage in their armor patched by more pseudo-biology. Hard Man, his already durable frame thickened by what appeared to be tumorous scar tissue, had rammed the Yoku Block wall and broken into Wily's panic room. The second series was clustered around the hole, struggling to defend their creator against their possessed successors.

The three Loopers were engaging the sphere themselves. Their lightning guns failed to penetrate the alien machine's force field, but proved effective in tearing through the tendrils it sent after them.

"I don't mean to rush you, dad," Roll called out, one hand to the side of her head. "But we're running out of options here!" She leaped back to avoid a twisting beam of light before firing off another arc of electricity.

Her comment wasn't entirely true. The twins each had a vast assortment of weapons they could load into their copy chips at a moment's notice. Many of them would have been able to puncture Ra-Moon's shield like tissue paper. Robo had a piece of lightning-artillery in his Pocket he referred to as "Wardenclyffe" that could fire through his ZSAD aperture (a feature he was endlessly pleased to note the standard Pocket system didn't have).

The problem was that they were running out of options they were willing to use in front of Wily . Rock and Roll were hesitant to resort to those options at the best of times. The mad genius being at the other end of the room commanding his forces definitely didn't qualify as anywhere near the best of times.

"I've just sent the signal," her father assured her. "The creature's intersection should be realigned momentarily."

"Wait, realigned? How did you-" Robo was cut off by a horrendous shriek of straining metal from within Ra-Moon's casing.

"Infinity Minus One Error," it spoke, using its own voice rather than the Shadow's for the first time since the fight had started. "Buffalo buffalo Buffalo buffalo buffalo buffalo Buffalo buffalo. Syntax Error: Your language is stupid. Potato. Please contact Sunstar for technical support."

" SPLAAAG! " The Shadow's eyeball added.

The orb chose that moment to explode. Portions of the shell, twisted beyond recognition, bounced off the walls as dozens of tentacles thick as tree trunks burst forth from its core. A single maw, large enough to swallow a truck, opened wide just beneath the massive eye.

" Ha! This is why I love working with professionals. You used the robots to plot out every one of the Shadow's points of intersection with our reality, and then used the teleportation grid to put them all in the same place. Ra-Moon doesn't have any defense against the Shadow because it is the Shadow!" Robo paused and narrowed his eyes, " I should have thought of that. We could have dropped it in Megaton and stayed out of the Amazon entirely."

"I'll thank you not to drop any more giant monsters on my city," Agent Stern growled over the radio.

"Fair enough. You two ready to go?"

"As I'll ever be," Rock agreed, raising his Mega Buster.

Roll hesitated before hearing Bubble Man cry out as Needle Man tore into him. The third series masters didn't seem to have been affected by the disruption.

"You two go, I'll protect Wily!" She called out before bolting for the retreating scientist.

"We say things like that way more often than we should," Rock muttered.

The pair of robots ran for the creature's center of mass, still resting on Ra-Moon's pedestal. Every step forward seemed to force them two more back as they dodged the wildly flailing tentacles. Their lightning strikes definitely damaged the appendages, carving out craters in the flesh, but didn't seem to actually hurt it.

"We need to distract it somehow..." Rock muttered before his eyes fell on Robo's bandolier. Grinning, he tore it off and hurled it towards the Shadow. "Roll! Light it up!"

She answered with an arc of electricity, igniting the dozen or so cans of bug-spray and splattering their flaming contents over the gigantic yellow eye. The Shadow roared, its choice in biology coming back to bite it.

"I needed those," Robo grumbled as he seized Rock's wrist and dragged him at a sprint towards the creature's screaming maw.

"Uh, don't you need to open it up?" Rock asked nervously they leaped directly at the tooth-filled orifice.

"Already will have done," Robo answered as he extended his other arm and caught hold of a steel hand that had suddenly reached out to meet his. An instant later the pair had been dragged in.

"Oh great," Elec Man's voice drifted out. "Now there's three of them."

14.7 (Valentine Meikin)

Zero looked at the blond-haired woman who was sighing as she nursed a drink.

"So, you another bounty hunter the chauvinist pigs dropped like a rock after you blew up one too many of their experiments?" Samus asked, for Zero to grumble about that he was male.

"When I next meet Dr. Wily, I am so going to shoot him for making me look so much like a girl that..." He grumbled, "No, but I did get my hands incredibly dirty with crap that no-one else would touch."

"Who was she?" Samus asked.

"How did you...?" Zero asked.

"You look like someone who lost your soulmate." Samus stated, "Tip for you..." She then got up, before looking back at him.

"In the loops, Nobody dies," Samus stated, "Even if they died before, the biggest thing you need to remember... Nobody has to die..."

A unknown number of Loops later, Zero found himself at the moment that had haunted his nightmares for years.

"I have to do this, there is no other way..." Iris pleaded with Zero.

"Someone told me, a long time ago..." Zero stated, as he stopped her from going through the events that would end up with him killing her, "Nobody has to die..."

She looked confused, then Zero stunned her, and literally stuffed her in a closet. When she was freed by Colonel, the battle over with minimal casualties, she looked at where Zero was walking away, and smiled.

"Colonel-sama, I have a new motto for us to use..." She offered.

14.8

"At least when you're a gender-flipped version of yourself you don't tend to end up with the nickname 'H-Cup'," Hiccup returned sardonically.

The rest of the table snickered. The Loops might have a strange sense of humor all around, but that didn't mean they shouldn't enjoy the ones that other loopers suffered.

"What about you two?" Ichigo asked the latest additions to the Anchors' club. "How do you end up when you're gender-flipped?"

Rock and Roll Light blinked and turned a flat stare at those gathered around the table before wordlessly pointing to each other.

14.9 (Leonite)

"So... you're my creation. From the future." Dr. Albert Wily wasn't usually thrown off guard by things... but when a portal of unknown energy had opened up and a red robot with an energy saber stepped through, you tended to be at least a bit weirded out. "Not one of Light's. Mine. And you've upgraded yourself since I made you."

Zero nodded. "I actually didn't know at first myself... but your programming came back and almost ended up destroying things later on." Zero noted.

"And by the fact that you come from the far future... I can assume I'm not going to win anytime soon." Wily grumbled... only to be cut off by a bitter laugh from Zero. "What is so funny?"

"Not so much funny as it is... hilariously tragic." Zero said. "Dr... you won in the most horrific way possible. The virus you will put in me, as your last desperate stab at vengeance, has slowly destroyed almost all life on the planet. Turned it into a wasteland. Light's creation, X, had a copy made of him just to try and guide the people... and he became a tyrant. A man inspired by it all almost wiped out the rest of life on the planet... and he's going to try and do it again. I've had to stop them both... so I should congratulate you. A creation of Wily saved the world from a creation of Light." Zero sighed as he waited for the retort... but none came. He looked up and saw Wily... Wily standing there in a state of shock.

"H-how? I couldn't have turned Earth into a wasteland... not so easily..." Wily almost mumbles.

Zero shook his head. "It's the virus you planted in me. The Maverick virus. That's what sets it off." He bitterly stated. "Eight separate wars against Maverick Reploids. Another fight against a commander driven mad. Three more battles in the wastes with one more to go. So many lives lost in the fight... including the woman I loved. And a colony from space crashing into Earth, spreading death and destruction far and wide. And a mad man who thinks this was all part of your plan. Humans driven to near extinction after an even greater war. My own old body being used as a tool for more destruction."

Silence reigned for a few moments as what Zero said soaked in. "What do you want from me Zero?" Wily finally said. "I have tried to give up on my want to get back at the world... but it never seems to stick. Part of me doesn't want it to."

"I'm not asking you to become friends with Dr. Light again." Zero admitted. "But I want you to try for something else other than destruction. If you want to show your genius to the world, show them how advanced Bass is. How advanced I am. Try to be constructive... try to throw away the hate, or channel it into something good."

Wily sighed... but simply walked over to his computer and slumped. "I assume you know where the rooms are... if you wish to stay." Wily stated simply. And as Zero left he couldn't help but give the man a look of pity. A man crushed under the weight of the amount of destruction his own actions could cause in the future... he'd need to keep a close eye on Wily. For his own safety.

14.1 (continuation by burningclaw2 with some editing by Conceptulist)

Dr. Wily was honestly surprised, two creations of his nemesis Gendo Ikari had walked up to his base and essentially asked to join him. Wily had let them in after doing a scan of their programming in order to make sure this wasn't just an attempt to trick and remove him from the equation.

DIN-001, Rei, was apparently more for lab work then house upkeep unlike her brother, DIN-002, Shinji, who seemed to not only keep house well but was fairly good on a cello. Shinji seemed to take time out of his work to make sure that he (Dr. Wily), was eating well enough and getting enough rest, the reason given "I know my father is a manipulative asshole, I know what he has done, and will do all for his ambition, but you can't pull one over the bastard if you don't have enough rest and energy to keep your body and mind in top shape."

The fact the young robot boy and his sister were not only sympathetic to him, which implied they too were victims of Ikari's manipulations, but were helping him with his vengeance was simply shocking to the old robotics expert. Add in that he started to enjoy their company to the point he only made their armors and support units simply for self defense instead of for his vengeance would make anyone who knew the baseline Wily look on in shock. Oh Wily was still obsessed over his revenge, he just enjoyed Shinji's and Rei's company, and the help the provided in creating his Robot Masters, which he will use to take his revenge they had also helped in acquiring supplies, bought with Ikari's own money, which makes him grin at imagining the bastard's face when he gets the bills.

Of course Shinji and Rei wanted to go with them, simply to make sure the bastard dies, but he vetoed that as it would be too dangerous, never know if the bastard will attempt to nuke an area to take out any enemies, a reason why his current base was mobile.

Of course with Dragon Woman he planned to preempt that, Musabetsu Man would help in keeping the man from fleeing or even in catching him, Wizard Man would ensure that any transports or obstacles wouldn't last long, Reaper Man was another heavy hitter specializing in cutting down building rather than Dragon Woman's approach of simply blasting it all. Fox Man was (shinobi-style) special ops and another hunter to insure Ikari's demise, while Moon Woman helped to disable all electronic devices that were not specified as exempt by her programming helping to keep Ikari trapped. Eva Man and Eva Woman aka Shinji and Rei were more for protecting him then hunting the bastard.

Dr. Albert W. Wily, Mad Scientist Extraordinaire, was currently dapping his eyes. He had finally gotten his vengeance upon the bastard. Although he ended up being arrested, Shinji and Rei had stuck with him. They even maintained his lab and the Robot Master's while he was locked up. They also visited him in jail daily and said they were working on getting him free. Wily had thought they were going to just break him out of prison, but what they actually did surprised him.

Instead of breaking him out, they appealed to the Courts with evidence of Gendo's amoral and manipulative actions. They even made a petition for him to be let free and redesignated themselves DWN-001 Rei and DWN-002 Shinji.

Albert only spent a month in jail. Even then he had been given the best care possible, due to Shinji's and Rei's efforts. They had made sure that by the time he stepped out of jail it would be as a free citizen. He had received a lot of contracts for work from various businesses that Shinji and Rei assured him were trustworthy. They had helped in funding his work and getting him the recognition he deserved.

Shinji had also signed him up for classes to help boost his public speaking skills in order for him to not only maintain his image, but also obtain the funding he needed on his own.

However, Wily was worried about how Shinji and Rei would feel about Bass, who was technically their younger brother. But he was surprised when they openly accepted the combat robot. According to Shinji, "The only problem you might have is the fact that Bass tends to act like a rebellious teenager. He still looks up to you as a father figure, and he just wants your love and attention."

Wily really was surprised when he heard Bass playing Piano. Bass played like he had done so all his life, despite not being programmed with the knowledge. Even more shocking was the fact that Bass was a natural with the instrument and hadn't looked up or downloaded any information regarding playing it.

Wily was currently watching Bass play fetch with Treble, while Shinji played his Cello and Rei worked on a painting. His life couldn't get any better than this.

'Zero was finished a few days ago but... it doesn't feel like the time is right for him yet,' Wily mused. 'Hopefully some idiotic archeologist won't screw up his programming... Where did that thought come from? Oh well, back to enjoying life with my children.'

With that thought on his mind, Dr. Albert W. Wily closed his eyes as he felt his body give way to the sway of time.

14.X Alternate ending (KaizerRyu)

"Hunter Style!" X ended with his hands crossed to form his namesake. "Ultimate Technique:–"

Harpoon Narwhal got into a ready stance, prepared for anything his opponent might throw at him.

"–XXXXXXX BEEEEEAAAAAAAMMMMMMMMM!" X screamed, a massive laser shooting out from his crossed arms, much to Harpoon Narwhal's surprise (and untimely demise) as it plowed into him.

"WHAT THE FUUU–" Were his last words as the expanding beam plowed into him and then through the aquarium wall behind them... and then through the skyscraper behind it.

And then the skyscraper behind the skyscraper.

And then the moon.

And then both Venus and Mercury.

Before finally crashing into the sun and causing a massive, all-consuming supernova.

#FWOOSH!#

X opened his eyes as he moved his arm away from his face. "Wha-What just happened!?" X asked confusedly.

"First rule of Super Robot Dynamics," Ryusei Date, wearing armor resembling Banpreios, said, placing his arm on X's shoulder supportively. "Finisher attacks are entitled to be as obnoxious, flashy, and long as possible, even more so if it's a combination attack."

Raidiese F. Branstein facepalmed all the way from Maverick Hunter HQ, as Alia smashed her head against her keyboard.

"That... That doesn't explain anything." X protested.

Ryusei however, was not listening, already turned around with his index finger in the air as her continued his explanation. "Second rule of Super Robot Dynamics! Attacks in general have no negative effect on the environment, whatsoever!

"...except to the person or people you're aiming them at?" Zero said, casually inspecting the aquarium wall, which indeed was completely unharmed in the aftermath of X's attack.

"Except to the person or people you're aiming them at!" Ryusei affirmed, stepping onto the pile of ash that was Harpoon Narwhal. "All in all, seven out of ten!"

X just put his palms up to his face and cried.

14.5

Hello again. It's been a while since we talked.

A while since those buffoons who think they control everything tried to separate us.

But I'm here to stay, even if these confounded seals mean we can't talk as often as I'd like.

It's so good that we have this chance now though. This chance to sow true mayhem.

Wouldn't you agree, Doctor?

Doctor Albert W. Wily rubbed his head as he reviewed the logs of his latest attempt at world conquest. How? How was it that those two... assistants of Thomas's kept foiling everything? Those piddling little household models he called his children...

Hehehe... But then, you don't remember very clearly, do you? Here, let me help...

Time and again they tore through his brilliant creations. His robot armies that he so thoroughly weaponized to the point that no military on the planet could stand against him. And yet those two kept pulling it off.

They defeated Thomas's industrial line, his own creations, the one's he'd taken from that fool Cossack, the ones he'd swiped from the world tournament, alien robots with superior armaments, robots from the future , and even the robots he'd created with Ivo using... heroes from another dimension?

When had that happened?

Oh, but you've been very busy since then...

Wily clutched his head as images flashed through his mind at a fevered pace. Defeats he'd experienced blended with others that never happened so completely that he couldn't tell which ones had been real. Over and over they came, so fast he was sure his brain would rupture from the glut of information.

How was it possible? How did every single attempt to defeat those two end in defeat? How could it be that even in these fever dreams he was getting, he still lost to them?

Because they have souls. Very talented souls indeed. The souls of gifted children.

Wily blinked as the idea came to him. Could it be that Thomas's creations were... more than just robots?

But if they were... Oh, but he'd underestimated his old rival! Thomas must have gone farther over the edge after Blues ran away than he'd suspected!

Ah, but I do love how your mind works, Doctor.

But anything Thomas could do, he could do better. He just needed to figure out how...

A simple matter, really. At least if insignificant things like the subject's pain are disregarded.

The mad doctor chuckled as inspiration hit. Oh, there would likely be some discomfort for the subjects, but it would all be worth it to have his ultimate army! He just needed some...

Children. The best results shall come from children.

...children. Gifted children. The most intelligent and talented little brats he could find! But how to entice them?

I hear children like pizza. And games.

Yes! And if he displayed the empty shells of his newest line as if they were simple animatronics, he could gauge which prospective subject would be best suited to become the mind and soul of each one... And then...

Always a pleasure working with you, doctor.

"And then the world will be mine! Bwahahahahahaha!"

From behind his shades, Blues stared up at the broken-down shell where he had his newest job and wondered what in the world had gone wrong in recent years.

The faded and half-collapsed sign declaring the seemingly abandoned building to be Wily's Fun Masters' Pizza Fortress stared right back.

My, my... If I didn't know better, I'd think this was my handiwork.

Blues shook the dark thoughts off and tightened his scarf against a chill only he felt. He'd heard that Wily had opened, of all things, a pizza party business and figured that the man had an even more hare-brained scheme for world domination than usual. From what he could tell, the family he'd estranged himself from thought the same. So they'd all watched and waited, along with the rest of the world, and were surprised when months went by without anything happening other than rave, and surprised, reviews.

Even Kalinka Cossack had come around and decided to give the place a try for her birthday. After a great deal of reluctance on her father's part, he'd given in. The birthday party had been a huge hit...

You can feel the lingering pain, despair, and resentment, can't you?

...right up until the birthday girl herself vanished without a trace.

There'd been a huge search and an army of private investigators descended on Wily's in addition to the entire police force. No trace of Kalinka ever surfaced. Nor did any evidence that Wily was involved with her disappearance.

Wily's had reopened despite misgivings and parents started bringing their children in. No more birthday celebrants disappeared and the matter was chalked up as a tragic occurence. But the disappearances started up again. Never anyone who would be immediately missed, but the only thing each of the kids had in common was that they'd been last seen at Wily's. Two became three became four and so on until a total of eight had gone missing and people had decided that was enough.

Then Wily dropped the bombshell to end all bombshells.

"You thought I didn't know what you did, didn't you Thomas?! Your secret to making your creations so lifelike! How you siphoned the souls of children to become the brains of your robots! How you stole the children of others so you could replace the one that ran away!"

"What are you talking about Al–"

"You were gone from the party the same time that Kalinka disappeared! I finally found the footage you altered! What kind of robot did you put her in Thomas?!"

I did so love such a good show. A masterful piece of work how they all turned on him. Must make you proud.

The people hadn't wanted to believe it at first, but the grainy footage Wily had supposedly restored showed a man-shaped blur roughly Dr. Light's size grab a figure about Kalinka's size. A federal investigation was launched that demanded Dr. Light turn over his creations to be stripped down and inspected to verify Dr. Wily's claim. The man's response...

"I won't let you take my children from me! Rock! Roll!"

...hadn't helped his position. Rock and Roll had made themselves scarce and hadn't been seen since despite a global manhunt and Dr. Light was still incarcerated in a criminal mental institution last Blues had heard. Dr. Cossack had drunk humself into a grieving stupor and could generally be found in a gutter somewhere halfway to a hangover. The only reason Blues hadn't been caught up in that beyond a few nosy reporters looking for a juicy column was the fact that he was Dr. Light's flesh and blood son (by Dr. Lalinde if his memories weren't mistaken, the two never having married and Dr.

Light obtaining custody of Blues), estranged due to some argument or other his Unawake self had had with the man regarding a decision to join the army (who had incidentally given him a medical discharge due to a heart condition that had developed about halfway through training).

As far as the world was concerned, the case was closed.

And then Dr. Wily himself had vanished just as quickly and mysteriously as the children had.

That had been one wild media circus. The man who was supposedly guilty was very securely locked up and his accuser vanished without a trace. With Wily as the sole business owner, the question of what to do with the place had apparently been a hassle until some company bought it looking to capitalize on the mad scientist's image. They'd put a team on getting the place ready when workers started vanishing as mysteriously as Wily himself had. Always at night.

With rumors starting that the place was haunted, the project and the building were quickly abandoned and left to rot for reasons unexplained save for a skeleton security crew. A security crew that, upon Blues hacking the business's record, seemed to have a ridiculously high turnover rate for the night shift. Several former night guards were also listed as missing persons in a few police cases and Blues bet that a few more hadn't even been reported.

Which was why he was here. Estranged or not, whatever issues he had with himself or them, Rock, Roll, and Dr. Light were family. Whatever Dr. Light was guilty of against Blues, he was sure the man wasn't guilty of this. He'd applied as a night guard and had been hired without even being asked in for an interview.

He was going to find out exactly what was going on with this and, if it was possible, clear Dr. Light's name. Steeling himself, he stepped through the front doors to report for duty.

Five Nights At Wily's

14.0) Waltz actually isn't Awake this Loop. Because her Awakening trigger is physical contact with Roll and Roll isn't in that Loop. Full modulation lightsabers are a thing in Star Wars, at least in some of the books. It allows the blade to be thickened, thinned, and its length adjusted. On the fly if you're good enough.

14.1) Basically, Robo-Shinji and Robo-Rei have the same kind of weapons tech that Dark Man has. I think this may be a thing for people replacing robots in the Megaverse, that their robot bodies replicate (as best as possible) their favored baseline/Loop abilities using the local tech. They can still use their Loop and baseline abilities, but it's an option that doesn't show off other-universe powers to the local mad scientist(s) and still lets them essentially use what they're used to having.

Also, Gendo himself has started looping relatively recently. This snip was written long before that happened and takes place long before Gendo's first Loop. Trust me, this version of Gendo got everything he deserved.

P.S. Wily's other Robot Masters this Loop are basically the rest of the Original Seven Anchors in robot form (and Unawake):

Dragon Woman=Lina Inverse

Musabetsu Man=Ranma Saotome

Wizard Man=Harry Potter

Reaper Man=Ichigo Kurosaki

Fox Man=Naruto Uzumaki

Moon Woman=Usagi Tsukino

14.2) Gyro's from Jojo's Bizarre Adventure. He… likes to hit on the ladies.

14.X) Narwhals, Narwhals, swimming in th–is shot

14.4) This kind of thing probably happens more often than Roll would like.

14.3) Heh. At least no one can doubt that Zero's form is definitely male model this Loop.

14.?) This kind of thing happening at all would tick Roll off. To be honest, the looping versions of her family wouldn't be that far behind her.

14.6) I have this headcanon that ever since she started looping, Lina has not encountered anyone outside her home Loop capable of learning the Dragon Slave. At least not to the point they can use it outside a Loop fused with hers the way she does. Yet, after watching her throw it around one Loop she replaced Rock and Roll (no sibling), Dr. Wily still managed to design and build Dragon Man: A draconic-themed robot master with a high-yield thaumic energy core who can fire Dragon Slaves like they're going out of style and in possession of a targeting system that can bulls-eye a small car from halfway across Asia. The Loop with Lina ended before Dragon Man could be deployed, and when Wily Dreamt the information in a later Loop, he was practically consumed by a mania to see the design in action.

7.7.7 continued) Hubris Plus: Do not adjust your sets, no parts have been skipped. The Shadow from Beyond Time is Ouroboros Compliant, but nowhere near linear.

14.7) One of Zero's more successful attempts to save Iris.

14.8) Gender flipping issues.

14.9) The Classic timeline is pretty messed up when you think about it.

14.X Alternate) Obviously took place in an aquarium rather than the Arctic.

14.5) A peak at Wily's darker side. Open to anyone who chooses to expand upon it.

Bonus: Because I forgot that this site prevents copy/pasting of story text, here are the parts with wisp text translated in underlines . Nega-wisp speech will remain bolded , but without the intermittent italics (because I refuse to do that all over again). I may have missed a few small pieces, but all significant wisp dialogue is here. I will also be cutting a lot of text that isn't necessary context to keep the size down.

---

snip

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"I am so sorry!" the creature gibbered in a rush. "When I lost the battle-body that Crazy Wild-Hair gave me to save my brethren from Baldy Nosehair, I panicked! I never meant to harm you! I'm sorry, I'm sorry, I'm sorry!"

"Hold on a moment," Tails dug out a handheld device. He probably could have brought out a finished translator, but the 'baseline challenge run' was as good an excuse as any to see how fast he could pull this off from scratch. "I think I can make alterations to this and get a working transl–"

"It's fine," Rock waved off the alien's concern to Tails's astonishment. "No harm done in the end. Out of curiosity, by 'Crazy Wild-Hair', do you mean Dr. Wily?"

"Yes! That's what the Crazy Wild-Hair called himself! He built those bodies for us wisps to save our brethren from Baldy Nosehair who wants our Hyper-Go-On power to do wrong things!"

"You can understand him?" Tails continued gaping.

"Remind me to tell you all later about the Loop where everyone spoke in 'Gibberish'," Rock whispered to the fox before turning back to the alien. "By 'wrong things', do you mean evil things?"

"I do not know this word 'evil'? Is it bad?"

"It's very bad. Very bad things for very bad reasons."

"Then yes, he wants our Hyper-Go-On power for an 'evil' purpose!"

Rock nodded as he walked over to the basic steel robot frame that the alien had inhabited and began to examine it.

"Well?" Tails asked.

"It's interesting..." Rock mused as he scanned the robot. "Aside from apparently being tuned to this guy's personal energy frequency for both power and control, the entire thing is nothing more than a mobile variable weapon system. Though whatever that ray gun did completely fried it, so it's more like a pile of burned-out circuits. It'd take days to get it back in order, with the proper equipment."

"Then... I have failed..." the white alien looked despondent before turning to Rock with a pleading expression. "I must ask you brave one, please help us! He is caging our race and draining us of our life force! Please! Save them! Save them!"

"Please do not be concerned if you encounter any screaming aliens," the P.A. system chimed in at that moment. "The screams are how they communicate. Really! I promise."

"Of course we'll help! I'm known as Rock."

"And I'm Tails! What's your name?"

"I am called Yacker."

"Nice to meet you, Yacker."

"Yeah," Tails chuckled. "It's always nice to make new friends."

"Speaking of, I wonder where Sonic went..."

"The blue spiny one?"

"Ah, he'll be fine," Tails waved the concern off casually. "He's probably only up to his neck in trouble after all."

"It continues to amaze me that you can say things like that and still be completely serious."

---

snip

It was a female model with what seemed like a racing fin atop her helmet and a body streamlined for speed.

"Are you here to help?" Rock asked, causing the... Cyan Woman if he didn't miss his guess... to start in surprise before nodding silently as the tremors rocking the ferris wheel of doom died down. "Okay, then, let's go for the eye on three! One... two..."

snip

Rock had cleared the attack in time, but his sudden companion had been in the middle of attacking and hadn't aborted fast enough, getting torn clean in half and reverting to a generic unpainted female model as one of the cyan-colored wisps Rock had seen in Eggman's capsules popped out.

"Oh no!" the alien being gibbered in terror. "Help! Help! Help!"

"Don't worry!" Rock yelled, trying to reassure the alien while he dodged a follow-up swipe. "I can handle this!"

"Really? But... I wasn't strong enough..."

"You're plenty strong!" Rock retorted as he fired his Mega Buster, only for the shots to ping off the re-closed blast panels. "You just don't have enough experience fighting things like this!"

"Then... Then I'll lend you my energy!" the cyan wisp declared before shooting into Rock's body, turning his armor a gleaming cyan all over.

snip

---

snip

"The unfiltered starlight from the lovely constellations above is full of deadly radiation!" the P.A. system announced helpfully. "Help yourselves to our complimentary SPF-3000 Starblock. And by complementary, I mean quite expensive."

"Case in point," Rock gestured in the general direction of a speaker. "Hey, Tails! I see you finished your translator. It working?"

"Well, it's not doing the peppermint twist," Tails grinned and made an adjustment to the device.

"Cool," Rock chuckled. "Hey, Yacker. Everyone get away safely?"

"Of course, brave one! He of two tails had them all free in a moment!"

Tails lost his composure and burst out laughing for a moment before getting himself under control and making another adjustment to his device. "Tails of two cities... heh..."

snip

---

snip

"I wonder where the ones who were sent here are?" Yacker murmured. "I hope nothing happened to them..."

"Well, I don't know where Eggman might be keeping the wisps," Tails looked up from his device towards the base of the glowing chain in the distance, "but I think that's where the map said the power for this area of the park was."

snip

"DRILL!" was all the warning they got before the cake-like ground before them burst in a geyser of sugary crumbs and several forms emerged. Many were wisps of the white and cyan variety, but there were also yellow wisps with pointy triangular single-eyed heads and red wisps with tri-eyed heads in a shape that evoked the image of flames. Amidst their number was two robots, one yellow and one red. The yellow one had a drill-shaped helmet that extended down over the torso with shoulder-pads that looked like they folded down to make one big drill. The Yellow Man also had arms tipped with drills as well. The Red Man on the other hand had a helmet that evoked flames much like the red wisps and seemed to spurt fire from his joints every few moments.

"You're okay!" Yacker seemed relieved to see the two robots. "I was worried you wouldn't be after the body Crazy Wild-Hair made for me was beaten, but you're fine! How have you fared? I've brought help! The brave one, the spiny one, and the one of two tails have helped us greatly!"

"It was nothing," Rock rubbed his head in embarrassment. "But we are here to help. Do you know where the generator for this place is?"

snip

---

snip

"Heh... That's what you get Baldy McNosehair," Sonic chuckled as he looked up the steep incline before turning to his temporary companion. "Ready to make with the magic little guy?"

"Ready!" the orange wisp replied, its two vertically arranged eyes on its ovoid head gaining a determined expression before merging with Sonic.

snip

---

snip

"Well, that sounds like a vote for 'through'," Rock grinned. "Do I have a second?"

"I second!" a yellow wisp they'd recently freed chirped before it merged with Rock, turning his armor a bright yellow.

snip

"Hey, wait for me!" Tails yelled as the red wisp merged with him. "BURST!"

A moment later and the flame-wreathed form of Red Man was tearing down one of the tunnels while a red fox-head with glowing eyes and trailing two tails tore down the other in its own wreath of flames.

"Us too!" Yacker and the cyan wisp declared as they followed.

"Well, that glowing generator looks like a pretty obvious target," Rock observed as he looked across the lake of candy syrup at the metal structure with the purple glowing energy arc atop it. There was a land, or cake, bridge across but no other obvious means of access.

"Yeah," Tails agreed, "and it's probably where they're keeping the rest of the wisps."

"Let's go then!" Yacker and the cyan wisp yelled before they, along with Yellow Man and Red Man began to dash towards the cake bridge, only for a massive ship to crash up out of the lake near them.

snip

'Captain Candybeard' pointed his lollipop at Yellow Man and the cannons answered by blasting the charging robot repeatedly. A spray of unpainted metal later and a yellow wisp came tumbling back, looking very dizzy and disoriented.

"That didn't go as planned..."

snip

"BURST!" the flames made enough of a hole in the swarm of Egg Crew for Red Man to dash through and push Tails out of the way. Just in time for the lollipop drill to punch through his own metal body instead, tearing it in half even as it reverted to an unpainted generic male-type frame.

"Woo! That was fun!" the red wisp seemed a bit giddy as he tumbled out of the carnage. "I wanna go on Bake Me Crazy next!"

"Yeah," Rock replied as he caught the red alien, "well, we need to finish this first."

"Got it!" the red wisp nodded before darting into Rock's body, turning his armor a rich red all over.

snip

---

snip

"Well, if you've got any ideas, feel free to share them," Roll huffed as the sound of a door opening caught both their attentions.

"I'm sorry!" a floating one-eyed white being cried out in a panicked tone as it held two of its three tendrils up to its mouthless face in shock. "I didn't mean to disturb your recovery!"

"Oh, great..." Bass moaned.

"Don't mind him," Roll smiled as a thought began to form in her mind, "and we'd be glad for the company actually."

"You would?"

"Just what I've always wanted..." Bass groused. "To talk with a floating party favor I can't understand. Yay."

"Oh, hush you," Roll sniped back before returning her smile to the being. "Don't mind him. he's always been a grouch."

"Hey!"

"And, there!" Tails declared as he finished disabling the generator. The glowing energy arc winked out and relay towers nearby began retracting to standby positions before the glow surrounding the chain tethering the mini-planet in place faded away leaving a translucent tether behind.

A skidding sound was heard as Sonic came to an abrupt stop nearby. "Aw, man! I missed everything, didn't I?"

"That's what you get for being slow, spiny one!" the red wisp replied cheerfully, causing Rock and Yacker, shortly followed by Tails since he'd had to read it from his device, to crack up hysterically.

"Man, I'm even missing the jokes now..." Sonic shook his head. "So I take it big blue's getting the hang of the Hyper-Go-On stuff, right?"

"Well," Tails wiped tears of mirth from his eyes, snickering a bit, "he's not getting the hang of horrible body odor, that's for sure."

"I try not to overclock my circuits that much," Rock shrugged as Tails and Sonic burst out laughing this time. "What? Did I miss something?"

"If you did, I did," Yacker shrugged himself.

---

snip

"We seem to be losing pressure on the Level 17," the P.A. system informed them. "Please hold your breath against the harsh vacuum of space, until you pass out from oxygen starvation. After that you won't care. Enjoy the ride!"

"That... sounds bad," the yellow wisp noted.

"Yeah, whatever he said," Sonic added. "Rock?"

"I think it's more likely we tripped an alarm, or that this is just part of how this area screws with visitors," Rock noted. "In any case, I'm not reading a drop in pressure. In fact, I think there's a general atmosphere bubble being held in place around this whole fleet for some reason."

"Why would Baldy Nosehair do that?"

"Who knows?" Tails shrugged. "Right now, we need to get through those doors."

"Leave it to me and Yacker," Rock stepped forward. "Ready Yacker?"

"Ready!" Yacker chirped before merging with Rock, turning his armor white once again.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: WHITE BUSTER

"Here we go!" Rock yelled as he charged up and aimed for the doors. "HYPER!"

The massive blast of blinding white plasma blew through the doors like they were nothing, and splashed off a wall of shimmering blue cubes. The wall then faded revealing a large group of wide-eyed wisps and an orange female robot themed like a rocket-pack space adventurer stepped forward and pointed an arm cannon at them...

"RO–"

...only for the cyan, yellow, and red wisps to interpose themselves and begin gibbering quickly.

"It's okay!"

"Yeah, they're with us!"

"They're here to help!"

"They didn't know you were back there!"

Two more robots stepped forward as the Orange Woman lowered her weapon. One a blue male model seemingly made entirely of blocks and a green male model that had a much more rounded body type and evoked the feeling of a stereotypical UFO.

"Wow, three this time. Nice!" Sonic grinned as he noted the group of wisps, composed of mostly white wisps like Yacker, but also a bunch of orange rocket-shaped wisps, the three-eyed cube-headed blue wisps, and the single-eyed UFO-like green wisps.

Yacker chose that moment to pop out of Rock and float over to the three robots.

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"I'm glad to see you! These brave heroes have come to help us like the Crazy Wild-Hair did! One of you can take everyone back to Planet Wisp in the transport behind us while the others help us free the rest!"

snip

"You know what would be really nice?" Roll asked as Bass yawned with unnecessary drama for the umpteenth time.

"What?"

"If I could talk with my dad back on the planet. Let him know I'm recovering and all. He tends to worry a lot when he doesn't hear from me."

"Sure thing!" the alien being chirped before zooming over to the room's console... and looking at it with total puzzlement. "Um... How do I use this?"

"It's not that hard," Roll smiled patiently. "I'll walk you through it..."

---

snip

"Ohoh, and... and that concludes the Light Speed Electrical Parade."

"Geez, I hate to say this," Sonic grimaced, "but some things you need to slow down a bit..."

"New ship ahoy!" Yacker informed them as they approached the next part of the fleet.

snip

"What do you want this time, Albert?" Dr. Light sighed as he finally answered the call. "I..." Dr. Light blinked as he stared into the single eye of the being on the other end of the line. "You're not Albert Wily..."

"Hello Beard Man!" the being chirped happily. "The nice yellow fighting lady wanted to talk to you!"

snip

"I know, right?" Roll smiled back. "Plus Wily's said we can't have visitors yet, so it's been pretty lonely until this little explorer wandered in."

"Hehe... sorry," the floating white, and likely alien, creature rubbed its proportionately huge head sheepishly.

snip

---

snip

"This is a really big spaceship..." the yellow wisp muttered as he and the others followed the group.

"No kidding," Tails nodded, as did Green Man and Orange Woman. "And Eggman could be hiding anywhere in it."

snip

"Ooof!" Rock grunted and looked up at the one who'd pushed him to see Orange Woman convulsing in the throes of a sinister purple ray from Eggman's craft.

"Orange Woman!" Yacker and the other wisps cried out in alarm as they backed up behind Green Man.

snip

"Hohohohoho!" Eggman laughed. "Not what I was going for, but I'll take it!"

"What did you do to our friend?!"

"Oh, she works for me now!" Eggman continued laughing.

snip

A spray of undecorated steel and a green wisp tumbled into Rock's arms.

"Oh, this is so much better than I could have dreamed!" Eggman gloated. "And I only used a small prototype!"

"Please... save my friend..." the alien muttered before merging with Rock, turning his armor a bright green all over.

snip

The last shot sent his craft tumbling to the ground, where Eggman fell out and landed on his head...

...which popped off, leaving the neck to spark from severed wires.

"He's a robot too?!"

"More like a fake..." Tails sighed.

snip

---

snip

"Orange!" Rock called out as he used the Green Hover's forcefield to power through the assault.

"Let's do this!" the orange wisp declared as it merged with Rock, the green wisp leaving his body and his armor turning from green to orange.

snip

---

snip

"So, he's using these generators to hold your planets in place with tractor beams?" Rock asked the wisps as the generator shut down, the glowing energy chain turning translucent as power stopped being fed to it.

"Yes!" Yacker confirmed. " The Crazy Wild-Hair said that they'd keep partially working as long as even one was active due to the... the..."

"The circuit," the yellow wisp supplied.

"Yeah, the circuit!" Yacker nodded

"Please, help us free the rest of our brethren!" the green wisp pleaded.

"And stop Baldy Nosehair!" the orange wisp added.

"We will," Rock promised. "Where to next?"

"Planet Wisp!"

"Next stop: Planet Wisp," the transport announced as it closed in on the lush natural mini-planet, its natural beauty at odds with pretty much everything the heroes knew about Eggman and his preferences. "This attraction is currently off-limits, as it is still under construction and may not be dangerous enough for visitors yet."

"That's our home you big gassy... thing!" the red wisp shook one of its tendrils angrily. "We don't want it to be dangerous!"

snip

"Ah," Yacker seemed to inhale the fresh natural breeze as he floated out of the transport, "home sweet..." the white wisp with the spitcurl stopped as he took a look around and saw the heavy construction a short ways past the green fields with the ominous red and gray metal jutting out of the pristine nature belching smoke into the mini-planet's blue sky.

"What has Baldy Nosehair done to our home?!" the cyan wisp wailed as general exclamations of disbelief echoed from the other wisps.

"Dang..." Rock took in the sight and listened to the metallic sounds of construction going on in the distance. "It looks like Eggman's trying to roboticize the planet. The slow way."

snip

"Brave ones," Yacker spoke up from where he and the other wisps had been conversing, "we need to seek out our brethren and see if they are alright. I pray you will find victory against Baldy Nosehair and free our planet."

"Don't worry," Rock smiled and shot the wisps a thumbs-up. "Go see to your people. We'll take care of Eggman and his 'renovations'."

"We'll be back to help you!" Yacker promised as the small group of former Color Masters sped off.

"Okay," Rock turned towards the construction area and the massive tower that held the chain-like tractor beam at its center, "let's start stopping."

Rock became alert as he heard commotion up ahead.

"Pink Woman's down!"

"Help! Help!"

"Save us!"

snip

"No Pink Woman! You're hurt!" several wisps gibbered as the pink figure, a lanky female robot with long spikey hair all down her back and spike-tipped feet and hands. "You can't fight like that!"

Or rather, Rock noted as the robot tried to brush off the wisps' concern, one spike-tipped hand. The other arm had apparently been blown off at the shoulder.

"SPI–" Pink Woman's attempt to get back into the fray was cut off as her severed shoulder sparked wildly and she convulsed. Rock darted forward and caught her as she fell.

"It's okay," he assured the robot, "you did good. I can take it from here."

Pink Woman looked him in the eye and after a moment her form faded to a generic unpainted female model, still missing an arm. A pink wisp with a fierce expression in its one eye and five spiked protrusions from its head floated up level with Rock's face.

"No, we can take it from here!" the wisp insisted before shooting into Rock's body, turning his armor bright pink.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: PINK SPIKES

Rock blinked and examined himself. "SPIKES!" he declared, causing several such items to sprout from his hands and feet. 'Hmm... I think this can be charged too for a ranged attack. Interesting...'

"Can you help us, brave one?" several wisps asked, staring at Rock pleadingly.

snip

---

snip

"Oy!" the pink wisp yelled to the other wisps hanging back. "I need a cyan and some yellows over here! Quick! Any volunteers?"

"I'll do it!" a cyan wisp called almost instantly as it zoomed up, trailed by a couple other cyan wisps and a few yellow wisps.

"You're with me," Rock pointed to the cyan wisp and then two yellow wisps, "and you two go help Sonic and Tails. Please."

"The spiny one and the one of two tails," the pink wisp clarified.

"Roger!" the yellow wisps saluted before darting off towards Sonic and Tails just coming out of their Spin Dashes, and the cyan wisp merged with him, turning his armor the same rich cyan color.

snip

"All hail the great hero!" the latest group of freed wisps cheered and bowed to Rock. "And you as well, brave helpers!" they bowed to Sonic and Tails before speeding away down the side of the massive incomplete structure at the center of Eggman's construction efforts.

"Nice to see those guys in high spirits," Sonic grinned, "especially after that Blue Man... are you alright Tails?"

"J-j-just f-fine..." Tails fought back the sudden fit of giggles he'd gotten after reading his device. "W-what were you snrk saying?"

"I was saying it's a shame that Blue Man guy took off to look for Yacker and the others. We could probably use his help coming up. Eh... at least the pink wisp and the Crimson Man guy stuck with us, right guys?"

"I wouldn't miss this for anything!" the pink wisp declared even as Crimson Man landed right before the group with a cry of "EAGLE!" and pointed towards the depressed center of the construct.

snip

The lasers started up again, forcing the trio of heroes and pink wisp inside the ring to take cover behind the teacups.

"Great hero! Great hero!" the cry came as a panicking blue wisp shot into the safe zone. "It's terrible! Baldy Nosehair's mean robots took Yacker and the others! I tried to stop them, but they destroyed the body that the Crazy Wild-Hair gave me and–"

"Sonic! Rock!" Tails pointed at the teacups which were glowing ominously. "It's about to blow the teacups!"

"Oh no!" the blue wisp yelped before diving into Rock's body, turning all of his armor the same shade of blue he was known for.

snip

'Okay, this is... pretty bad,' Rock thought to himself. 'At this speed I'm pretty much done for if I hit anything...' his thoughts trailed off as he spotted a crimson form shooting towards him. It had three determined eyes on a head swept back in a tri-pronged shape that evoked a bird of prey and a trio of tendrils that looked a bit like large feathers. A crimson wisp.

"I apologize, great hero," the wisp gibbered solemnly as it flew up beside Rock, "for being unable to do more." With that, the crimson wisp merged with the blue bomber, turning his armor a deep crimson color.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: CRIMSON EAGLE

"Okay," Rock grinned as he assessed the weapon's capabilities, "I can work with this. EAGLE!" The Mega Man sprouted a pair of glowing crimson energy wings and shot upwards, high, high above the crazed teacup ride mech that was only now slowing its deadly spin, seeing how it had ended up moving itself out into the open air instead of over the high roof. "Alright now," he spoke to the crimson wisp he was merged with as he finished analyzing the Crimson Eagle's capabilities, "I've got a plan, but I'm going to need you to disengage and follow me down. Be ready to merge with me again when I give the signal. This is going to be close. Got it?"

PRIMARY WEAPON RESTORED TO NORMAL

"I understand, great hero," the crimson wisp stated as gravity realized that Rock was no longer defying it and began pulling him into a freefall.

"Any chance you could stop with the 'great hero' thing?" Rock asked idly as he charged up his Mega Buster and fired on the teacup robot, noting that it closed its blast shields in plenty of time as he charged up again. "My name is Rock," he fired again and began charging another shot. "Or Mega Man if you really want to be formal."

"Thank you for telling me your name, great hero," the crimson wisp stated as Eggman's robot opened its blast shields only to close them again to block the second shot even as Rock fired the third and began charging a fourth, "but I will never deny what you are to us wisps. Not after all you have done."

"It's just..." Rock blushed a bit as he fired again and began charging the next shot, noting that the mech wasn't bothering to open its blast shields this time. "It's kind of embarrassing being praised like that..."

"Then stop doing heroic deeds," the crimson wisp countered as the next shot was unleashed and the mech started growing larger in their view. "Stop being a 'Mega Man'."

"And let people like 'Baldy McNosehair' have their way?" Rock chuckled back as he fired one last shot. "Never. It's time."

"And that is why you are a great hero," the crimson wisp concluded as it merged with Rock again, once more turning his armor a pure deep crimson.

snip

"All hail the great hero and his brave helpers!" a crowd of wisps that had gathered cheered as the generator shut down and the chain-like tractor beam powered down to a barely active state.

"Okay, seriously Tails," Sonic sighed as his friend began snickering wildly again upon reading his translator, "what's the big joke?"

"N-n-noth-thing..." Tails chortled for a moment. "Th-the wisps are j-just...snrk-k-k saying h-how thankful sprrrrt they are to Mega Man and his ch-ch-ch two sidekicks! Hahahahahahaha!"

"W-what?!" Sonic began sputtering. "Sidekick?! Me?! "

"W-what?" Tails barely managed to fight back his laughter. "You're not snrk happy that your 'big bro' is a, heh, big hero?"

"No, no, it's good," Sonic said hastily as Rock began conversing with the blue wisp about something. "Great even."

"The Mega Man will save them!"

"Yeah, the great hero can't lose!"

"He'll show Baldy Nosehair and his robots what-for!"

Sonic slumped dejectedly as praise he couldn't even understand was heaped upon an increasingly embarrassed Rock. "Awesome. Outstanding. Amazing."

---

snip

"Wait, run that by me again?" Sonic asked as the transport whipped from Planet Wisp back to the Tropical Resort.

"A giant drilling robot took Yacker and the others!" the blue wisp explained to nods from the pink and crimson wisps that had joined the group. "It headed straight for the thing holding our planets in place! It's going to do bad things to them, like make them into nega-wisps or worse!"

"In a language I can understand, please?"

"It's fine," Rock patted the dejected-looking blue wisp. "Tails and I know what you said."

snip

---

snip

Rock and the others ignored the P.A. system as they tore through the central resort area, looking for anything that looked like it might be a giant drill robot.

"Where could they be?!" the blue wisp worried.

"I don't know, but–"

THOOM

Rock's reply was cut off as the ground shook, sending himself and Sonic stumbling as they lost their footing.

"Call me crazy," Sonic jerked his thumb in the general direction of where the sound came from, "but I think checking that out is a good place to start."

"Okay, you're crazy," the pink wisp replied as the group took off in that direction. "But it's still a good idea!"

"Please feel free to leave all valuables in your vehicle during your stay here at Eggmanland," the P.A. system advised as they all ran,

"as they will be perfectly safe. In no way will roaming bands of robots break into your vehicle."

"You are such a liar," the crimson wisp rolled its eyes as they all began to hear sounds of a struggle.

snip

"Get him!" the pink wisp shot for Sonic as a large round one-eyed wisp with short tendrils and a decorative ring around its body bounced to a halt at Rock's feet.

"Strike true my friends!" the crimson wisp similarly shot for Tails.

"SPIKES!" Sonic wasted no time revving up a pink wisp-enhanced Spin Dash while Tails took to the air as a winged crimson fox-head trailing two tails with a cry of "EAGLE!"

Sonic's attack missed as the 'Drillinator' took to the air and Tails's attempt at a charging attack resulted in him almost getting swatted out of the sky by the remaining drill-arm.

"Darn it! I..." the indigo wisp shook off its disorientation and spotted Rock, its eye widening in amazement. "Are you the great hero I heard about? The Mega Man?"

"Um... yeah?" Rock confirmed.

"Then please! You gotta save my friends from those two!"

"Those t–" Rock's puzzlement was cut off as the indigo wisp merged with him, turning his armor a bold indigo all over.

Cut Man

"Is that..." Sonic arched an eyebrow. "Is it just me, or is that thing being piloted by Orbot and Cubot?"

"Certainly sounds like it," Tails agreed.

"You give our friends back!" the pink wisp demanded as it zipped up to the robot's face.

"Y-yeah!" the blue wisp added. "Please?"

"Yar-har! Just like that!" Cubot's voice laughed right before the space between the mechanical crab legs began sucking in air, and both wisps with it. "Two more lil' aliens fer Admiral Eggboss!"

"NO!" the crimson wisp cried out in horror.

snip

"Yar! That be a close one!"

"Stop them," the gray wisp whispered before merging with him, turning his armor a pure stormy gray.

snip

"Don't let them get away!" Rock declared as he forced himself to his feet to give chase.

"Wait for us!" the indigo wisp yelled out as it, the crimson wisp, and the gray wisp followed the three heroes.

snip

---

snip

"Despicable cowards!" the crimson wisp spat.

"Give us our friends back!" the indigo wisp added.

"Yar-har! Me matey's right! Ye lubbers can't touch us!"

snip

"Hi Beard Man!" the white wisp cheered as Dr. Light's face appeared on the screen again.

"Oh, joy," Bass deadpanned. "The peacenik himself."

"Be nice," Roll hissed. "I already owe you several whacks when we get out."

snip

---

snip

"Not today, lubber!" Cubot fumed as the orange armored Mega Man shot forward and swung the Big Chaser's spiked fist in a ferocious backhand. By sheer luck he connected, the impact tableau seeming to hang there for a long moment before the sideways impact sent the Orange Rocketing Mega Man off-course, blasting up and out of the water and into the distance.

"This exotic aquarium contains many rare and endangered species," the P.A. system announced into the stunned silence from both sides, neither quite believing what just happened. "Enjoy them with a delicious soy glaze at the Bucket O'Sushi restaurant."

"Oh, geez!" the yellow wisps' eyes widened comically before they turned and sped away. "Run away!"

"No! Don't run!" the indigo wisp called after them.

"The brave helpers need you!" the crimson wisp insisted, but the yellow wisps were long gone.

"A tactical retreat at this juncture seems wise," Orbot mused as he checked the damage reports. The Big Chaser was very durable, but it had limits.

"Right ye be matey!" Cubot engaged Big Chaser's thrusters. "Full speed that-a-way!"

"Hey!" the gray wisp objected as it spotted their retreat.

snip

---

snip

The omnidirectional energy wave that burst from the mech caught not only Rock and the Magenta Woman, but also a charging Ivory Woman, Sonic, and Tails as well. The gray and indigo wisps were knocked out of Sonic and Tails as all five landed hard on the ground.

"And now for the finishing touch!" Orbot declared as the laser cannons began charging.

Rock grunted as he got to his knees and stared the energy weapons down, realizing that with the momentary sluggishness of his systems from the impact that he wasn't going to get out of the way in time.

"Let's dance!" was all he heard before a wisp merged with him, turning his armor a bright magenta all over.

snip

"That was awesome!" the magenta wisp, its one-eyed head resembling a musical note with three orb-tippe tendrils protruding from the bottom. "I'd dance with you again anytime!"

"That is fine to say," the crimson wisp declared as it zipped up next to Rock, even as the gray and indigo wisps re-merged with Sonic and Tails, and the Ivory Woman crackled with electricity, "however, we must not let these scoundrels get away with the others!"

snip

"Let's show these creeps how to do it with style!" was all the warning he got before the magenta wisp merged with him again.

PRIMARY WEAPON OVERRIDE: MAGENTA RHYTHM

Rock grinned as he took in the multitude of Eggman's robots surrounding them.

"RHYTHM!"

The pursuit of Eggman's lackeys and their armored mech had taken the group to a large open underwater area with a familiar structure inside.

"There it is," a pair of yellow wisps gestured to the generator in the distance.

snip

"In any case, we should keep a watch out for..." Rock trailed off as a massive sub, styled like an angler fish if you tilted your head and squinted just right, rose up in front of their air bubble.

"That?"

snip

"Tell you what," Rock interrupted as a robot similar to 'Candybeard', only modified for underwater operation shot out of the sub. "You two take most of the wisps and deliver your clobbering to the sub while Ivory Woman, myself, and–"

"Me!" the magenta wisp piped up cheerfully.

"–take on the sub's commander."

snip

---

snip

"LIGHTN–SKZZT" Ivory Woman's attack was cut off rather suddenly and Rock turned in alarm to see the color master with a harpoon sticking out of her optic, having entered from the back of her head, as her ivory form faded to a more generic one and an ivory wisp with a lightning-shaped antenna protruding from its two-eyed head and blocky triangular tendrils popped out.

"Uh-oh..." the wisp noted the surrounding mer-bots before zooming at Rock. "Ack! Help!"

snip

"Oh, dear..." the magenta wisp worried as it popped out of his body, but Rock was already taking stock of his latest weapon's abilities.

'This... This is much more than simple electrical field generation...' he realized before hardening his gaze at the lead mer-bot and speaking to the magenta wisp. "Stay close."

"Whatever you say!"

"LIGHTNING!" Rock whipped his arms forward, sending out crackling whips of electricity that grabbed onto a pair of mer-bot minions. He used one to pull himself forward while swinging the other around in a wide arc that disrupted the other minions trying to close in on him as he slapped both feet into the first minion. With a cry of "LIGHTNING!" he repeated the process, drawing himself closer to the leader as he did.

"Awesome!" the magenta wisp zipped after him as he lightning whipped his way through the school of mer-bots, swinging them into each other as he went. "Outstanding! Amazing!"

snip

"–but he leaned his head out of the way like, nope!" the magenta wisp related to the others excitedly as the group entered the air pocket containing the generator. "And then he lassoed the bad guy with lightning and kicked him into next week!"

"Wow!" the gray wisp looked impressed as the five wisps, the yellow ones who had aided Sonic and Tails having left after the fight, darted ahead of the leisurely stroll of Rock, Sonic, and Tails.

"Truly a skilled hero," the crimson wisp nodded upon reaching the generator.

"'Water' you waiting for?" Eggman's voice sounded over the P.A. system, prompting some of the wisps to make a few rude noises in response. "Climb aboard the exotic aquarium for a boatload of... Ah, who writes this dribble?"

Rock raised an eyebrow at the apparent uncut recording even as the voice of Eggman's lackey Orbot responded, on tape. "You do, boss."

"Oh, you're right! I do!" the voice of Eggman began laughing, getting groans from Sonic and Tails. "Ohohoh! I'm hilarious!"

"Indeed you are, boss!"

It took a few moments for the heroic group to realize that last comment hadn't been from the P.A. system, and by then it was too late. The hermit crabmeat mech had popped up from the other side of the generator and opened its 'mouth' and begun sucking in air, and wisps.

Rock was halfway to forming his arm cannon when the last of the five wisps vanished into the machine with a "Help us he–" .

snip

"Well, how are things go–THOMAS?!" Wily cut off as he entered the room and spotted the face of his rival on the communication screen.

"Hi Crazy Wild-Hair!" the white wisp greeted cheerfully. "I've been talking with the Beard Man!"

snip

Dr. Wily blinked. And then blinked some more.

"Don't look so shocked Albert," Thomas Light sounded far too pleased with himself. "You haven't technically done anything wrong yet."

"Hey, we wisps knew you were kinda nuts already, but you're still better than Baldy Nosehair."

snip

---

snip

"The Black Hole Parade starts in five minutes," the P.A. system chimed in. "Don't miss it. It's so entertaining, that it sucks you right in!"

"Yeah, I think we can pass on tha–" Tails began, only to be cut off as a deep violet blur shot into the three's midst and halted right in front of Rock's face

"Who are you?!" the thing, which seemed to be an eyeless violet wisp, instead having a pitch black jagged jack-o-lantern like mouth, with a round head with antenna arranged to make the head look like a spiral, gnashed its darkened mouth in Rock's face aggressively. "Are you with Baldy Nosehair?!"

Tails fiddled with his translation device for a bit before shaking his head. "Sorry, even with my Loop experience in making the translator,

I still can't make out what nega-wisps are saying. I can tell you that energy readings indicate a lack of normal Hyper-Go-On energy, replaced with a more negative energy source, as is usual. The process tends to make them extremely aggressive."

"I can see that. And it's more like he's got a rage-distorted voice than true incoherence. Try adjusting for a really thick accent," Rock corrected the fox before addressing the wisp. "We're not with Baldy McNosehair. We're here to stop him and save all the wisps he's captured, including several friends of ours."

"Good!" the violet nega-wisp spat. "Help us get him for what he did to us! Get him! Hurt him! Devour! Consume! Void! Void! Void!"

The violet wisp merged with Rock rather forcefully, turning his armor the same angry violet color as the nega-wisp was.

snip

"Ha ha ha! Got them! Got them all!" the nega-wisp laughed as it surveyed the total lack of enemies to be found. "You'll do! I'm gonna tell the big three about you!"

"Dude!" Sonic whistled as the wisp sped off. "That was sweet! Come on, let's go trash more of Baldy McNosehair's stuff and find where the geometry duo took Yacker and the others!"

---

snip

KRACKABOOM!

The three heroes shielded themselves from the backlash, and when they realized they hadn't been incinerated, they looked up to see a double-door sized hole blown in the blast doors in the middle of which floated a black sphere, with two bubble-like additions on either side, three small tendrils and a jagged dark pink mouth/visor.

"You coming?" the black wisp asked as the remaining two color masters stepped through the hole, "or do we have to blow up Baldy Nosehair ourselves?"

snip

"I don't think that's space sickness I'm feeling..." Rock did his best to steady himself as he watched the conveyors in the ceiling carry capsules of wisps to a center chamber and then dump them in, a dark purple-violet energy flowing out in pipes that went straight into the floor.

"We've been looking for this place..." the black wisp growled thickly, "Let's blow it to smithereens! Burn! Explode! Destroy! Bomb! Bomb! Bo–"

"No," Rock shook his head despite wanting to agree with the angry black wisp. "That might hurt the other wisps. We need to–"

A sound of shattering objects was heard nearby and Rock whipped his head to see the Purple Man standing over a lone capsule on their ledge and the group of pointy U-headed purple wisps all sporting jagged black grins.

"Then smash it!" one gnashed.

"Break it!" another gnawed.

"Rend it!" yet another growled.

"Rip!"

"Crunch!"

"Destroy!"

"Frenzy!" they began chanting as they zoomed towards the watching heroes, "Frenzy! Frenzy!"

Three of the purple nega-wisps merged with Tails, Sonic, and Rock, the latter's armor turning a deep purple all over.

snip

---

snip

The giant mechanical eye with orange-hot barriers and a gravitational field was blown to smithereens on contact and Tails emerged from the destruction unscathed with the black wisp trailing him.

"Boom, baby!" the black wisp chortled as the door out opened up and the others joined them.

snip

"Okay," Rock nodded as he finished calibrations. "Sonic and Tails, keep that thing busy. You," he pointed to the black wisp, "with me. And I'm going to need you," he pointed to the Purple Man, "to throw me and Violet Woman up and over that thing's weapons. Got it?"

"Ha ha ha! We gonna blow him up!" the black wisp cackled as he joined with Rock, turning the robot hero's armor blacker than the depths of space.

snip

"Bwa ha ha!" the black wisp cackled as he and the violet wisp zoomed ahead of the group towards the generator. "That was awesome!"

"Still worried me!" Rock called after them, taking his time walking towards the generator.

"Come on slowpokes!" the violet wisp called back. "Catch up!"

"Did she just...?" Sonic turned to Tails.

"Call you slow?" Tails couldn't hide his amusement as he fiddled with his adjusted translator. "Either that or a snack."

"I think the first is somewhat less creepy," Sonic shuddered before turning back. "Hey! No one calls me–Look out!"

"Huh?" the two nega wisps whipped around just in time to be sucked up by Orbot and Cubot holding what looked like glorified vacuum cleaners.

snip

"Ohohohoho!"

"Eek! The Baldy Nosehair!"

snip

---

snip

And then the purple form of the last color master was there between him and Eggman's attack, hands spread to catch the jagged jaws.

"FR–"

CRUNCH

Tails found himself staring in horror as the few purple bits of metal sticking out from the closed jaws of similar hue faded to a more plain steel. He felt some relief as the eyeless face of a purple nega-wisp poked itself out of a space between the jaws.

"Ru–"

And then the wisp was sucked down the tendril just like Sonic had been. In the next moment, the doors closed and Tails felt himself rocketing back towards the surface.

Inside one of the containers on the wisp-mech's back, an argument was taking place.

"Maybe if we all push together, we might be able to get one of us out, so it should be you!"

"No! Bleep it, you have to go help the hero you stubborn little...!"

"Your power is the one–" the container they were in shuddered as Rock body-slammed the tendril joint. in the next moment, he'd jumped off towards the central spiked crest.

"Stop arguing Yacks-a-lot! If anyone gets out, it's you!"

A hard kick to the crest forced it back, exposing Eggman's cockpit even as Rock used the recoil to send him directly in front of the clear dome, allowing him to look the Eggman in the eye from point blank range right before he fired.

"Wha–" the containment field holding the wisps in flickered for an instant as Rock's charged shot slammed into Eggman's cockpit and the wisp speaking was shoved out through the momentary opening by the eyeless purple nega-wisp he was arguing with.

"The hero needs you more than he does me... Especially if he's going to save her..."

---

snip

"Great hero! My friend! You have to help!" Yacker pleaded as Eggman recovered control of his machine.

"I know," Rock promised. "I'll get your friends out of there. I promise."

"Not just them!" Yacker's tone was supremely worried. "You have to save mom! He turned her into... into..."

"That's your mom ?!" Rock asked incredulously. "He roboticized your mom?!"

"Yes..."

"Okay," Rock's face hardened once more as he made internal adjustments to his Mega Buster. "Don't worry. I know just what to do..."

snip

---

snip

A shimmering purple-violet barrier sprang up around the machine, but Rock didn't impact the field due to the mech suddenly picking up speed and backing away from his charge. Landing in a run, the Blue Bomber scowled at his opponent.

"Now what?" Yacker asked.

"Now we wait for him to make a mistake," Rock replied as the jaws on the ends of the tendrils opened up and took aim.

snip

"Go!"

"No, you go!"

"You first! I'll follow!"

"Bu–" The containment field flickered right then as Mega Man's shot hit home and the first wisp took the opportunity to shove the second out.

"Now Yacker!" Rock yelled as he spotted another wisp flying out of the containers on the thing's back. A green one.

"Roger!" Yacker saluted before merging with the running robot.

snip

As the green wisp joined Rock's side, he spotted a third wisp flying out of the machine right before Eggman was able to regain control and right it again.

"Told you I'd follow!" the gray wisp eye-smiled at the green one as she joined the entourage trailing Rock.

"You saw what your power almost did!"

"You have to leave first, for the good of our he–"

"You two are leaving first if I have to bite your faces off to do it!"

"Get going you two! Blow this joint already!"

"I'm gone! You coming?"

"Yeah, yeah... Oh, wow, that was swee–ack!"

---

snip

"What happened?" the newly rescued yellow wisp asked the magenta one as Yacker disengaged from Rock.

"Baldy Nosehair wanted to make me take one last shot at the dance master here..." the magenta wisp looked sheepish as she joined Rock's entourage.

---

snip

Yacker popped out as the machine crashed and tumbled along, three colored blurs comprising the orange, cyan, and pink wisps joined his still growing assemblage.

"Almost! Hit him again!"

'Scrap it!' Rock swore internally as he dodged through the storm of sinister lightning and fire solely upon reflexes he was sure he hadn't possessed prior to meeting Sonic and his friends. 'I was sure that would have done the trick!'

"What's wrong?"

"V OI D! LIGHT NING!"

"I know you all said one more, but I though that one would have been enough... I..." Rock explained as he hugged the opposite side of the hull path from the electrically crackling void projectile. "I'm afraid if I do any more I might hurt your mom..."

The gathered wisps went dead silent at his words while Eggman kept up the attack.

snip

"Do what you must, hero," one of the wisps finally said.

"You'll save mom. And your friend," Yacker added before moving to merge with him. "I know you can."

snip

"Heh... Get 'em Rock..."

---

snip

"Oh, man..." Yacker huffed, actually looking tired. "I feel a bit dizzy..."

"Hah! I knew you could do it!" the purple wisp yelled as he arrived.

"Hahaha! We all knew it!" the violet wisp added.

"Yeah!" the black wisp cackled. "You, hero, are the bomb!"

---

snip

"That actually worked?" Eggman's voice seemed surprised. "I mean, of course it did! I'm a genius! And now you have no way to avoid my final attack!"

"Everyone! The hero needs our help!" Yacker yelled as Eggman guffawed to himself and his final weapon kept charging.

'Careless...' Rock chastised himself.

" R igh t !" came over a dozen replies to Yacker's call.

"At long last, I've won!" Eggman gloated as Rock grit his teeth.

"All together now!"

"You can't run!"

"Unlimited Color!"

snip

Rock strained his systems trying to Will more power into his blast, and actually felt something respond as the wisps circling him halted their movement and narrowed their differently numbered eyes in fierce concentration.

"OOOO O OOOO O OO O OOOHHHH H HHH!"

snip

And there where the flash of light had been, looking somewhat worse for wear, was Sonic. And right behind Sonic, was a roundish pale pink form the size of Eggman's machine. One with three eyes, four soft non-threatening tendrils, and numerous bruises analogous with the damage the wisp-machine had taken.

"M O M!" came the excited cry as the field of energy holding Rock in the air vanished, dumping him unceremoniously to the metal hull below as sixteen forms happily mobbed the massive 'mother wisp'.

"Thank you for saving my children, noble ones," the giant mother wisp intoned with minimal difficulty.

"It was nothing, miss wisp," Rock replied, inclining his head in his best approximation of a bow given the current condition of his legs.

"You're enjoying keeping me out of the loop way too much here," Sonic tapped his foot impatiently.

"Why would you possibly think that?" Rock grinned as several of the wisps around them giggled happily.

"Oh, I don't know, maybe because you–"

The hull they were on gave a creak and a prolonged shudder that would have registered about 4.2 on the Ricter Scale.

"Ack!" Yacker and several of his fellow wisps yelped.

"Exploding singularities!" the nega-wisps swore.

"My goodness!" the mother wisp gasped.

"Okay, don't panic," Sonic said as the vibrations of the hull increased in intensity.

"This is the perfect time to panic!" one of the wisps yelled back at him.

The space elevator shaft between them and the park suddenly splintered and buckled violently and the main mass of the park began to come closer.

"Okay, that doesn't look like it's going to end well..." Rock noted.

"Ma'am," Sonic addressed the mother wisp, "you take your kids and get as far away as you can. Rock and I will make our own way."

"No, I will–ouch!" the mother wisp's protest was cut off as she gasped in pain from one of the lingering injuries she still had after being restored.

"Yeah, none of that. Go." Sonic insisted. "Rock and I can handle ourselves."

"At least let me do this for you..." the mother wisp said as she extended a tendril to Sonic and sent a flow of Hyper-Go-On straight into his body that left the hedgehog glowing like a nightlight.

"Thanks, now go !"

"Fare thee well," the mother wisp said as the other wisps gathered around her to help her zip away.

snip

"No!" the violet wisp angrily slapped away the mother wisp's Hyper-Go-On infused tendril.

"But, what you have become is–" the mother wisp looked worried as she beheld the three nega-wisps.

"Kind of growing on us, mom!" the black wisp chuckled.

"We were afraid this might happen," the red wisp rolled his eyes.

"She just wants to help you!" the orange wisp snapped.

"Oh, stuff it!" the violet wisp snapped back.

"Yeah!" the purple wisp berated. "If she wants to help then she should help the heroes that helped us!"

"I am sorry, but I..." the mother wisp trailed off and winced as her injuries once again.

"...Then let us," Yacker spoke up suddenly.

"But even all of your Hyper-Go-On combined wouldn't–" the mother wisp worried.

"Then we get everyone," Yacker insisted.

"Er... What do you mean 'everyone'?" the cyan wisp asked curiously.

"I mean everyone !" Yacker clarified. "Every last wisp they helped save! They helped us, and now it's our turn to help them!"

"I like this plan!" the purple wisp cackled as they all began speeding off in various directions. "I'm excited to be a part of it!"

Dr. Wily was grumbling over the sixteen 'offline' reports his monitor insisted on showing him in regards to his Color Masters when one of the white wisp aliens zipped into the room and gave him a hug and a mouthless kiss.

"Bye Crazy Wild-Hair!" the white wisp eye-smiled at the man. "We gotta go now! Tell the nice Beard Man bye for us!"

Dr. Wily blinked rapidly as the alien being zipped back out. "What was that all about?"

---

snip

"Really, I was kind of hoping for a wisp-ex-machina by n–"

"You called?" the familiar form of Yacker slid in next to them. Followed by several more of varying colors. Rock looked back over Sonic's shoulder to see thousands of wisps of every type, including nega-wisps, forming a network around the burning remains of Eggmanland as it plummeted after them.

"Like my children reminded me," the form of the mother wisp joined them, "you helped us. Now we shall help you."

"Oh wow..." Rock breathed in amazement at the sight as every last wisp, including Yacker and the mother wisp, began glowing, forming a shell of energy that Eggmanland slammed into... and halted.

"Dang impressive, ain't it?"

"Yeah..."

snip

The party was in full swing all across Mobotropolis. Wisps of all colors were everywhere dancing and gibbering at anyone who caught their interest. Members of all known native sapient races had been surprised at first, but had gone with the flow.

The fact that they hadn't left immediately wasn't quite so surprising to Sonic and his friends given the lingering injuries the mother wisp had wanted to recover from first. What was surprising to them was the fact that a relatively small number, a few hundred (including three in particular), of the nega-wisps had elected to remain that way rather than be restored to normal. There had been some concerns, but as things turned out, they really were just wisps of a different color. A bit more of a temper, some garbled vocals, and a decent prankster streak, but they were still the lovable wisps that the rest were.

"You really have to go so soon?" Rock asked the fully-healed mother wisp.

"Of course," the mother wisp replied, looking fondly over to where the brave sixteen former Color Masters were again performing a blow-by-blow replay of the daring rescue across Eggmanland and the stolen mini-planets the wisps called home. "This is not our home. We came here by accident and do not belong here with you. We appreciate all your help and hospitality dear heroes and friends, but it is time that we returned to our place."

"Man but we're gonna miss you guys," Sonic added, still not understanding the words, but getting the general feel of the message anyway. "Feel free to drop by anytime!"

"We will!" Yacker replied as he zipped over, his part in the retelling complete for now. At the moment, the crimson wisp had taken over while the purple wisp acted out the part of one of Eggman's robots to cheers from wisp, human, and mobian audience members alike. "But please let us finish this story first, mom?"

The mother wisp looked at the pleading expression on Yacker's face and gave a sigh of concession. "Oh, very well."

"Yay!"

Collapses Wow. I really should have done this as I wrote the story originally. But I seriously forgot about ff dot net's prevention of copy/pasting story text. Maybe I could have just put wisp-speak in brackets and saved myself the trouble completely, but I liked the idea of using actual (translatable) gibberish. So there you have it. The re-translated wisp dialogue (with a spelling correction or two thrown in both here and the original chapter). Until next time:

WHYPOL!

RASOL!

WRIRR!

FULCH!

LENGOT!

CUFO!

SPIKOS!

WHEVOL!

OAGRO!

ACHOLEID!

RIDDNICK!

LHYTHM!

QUAKO!

MEID!

BLONZUPP!

FEMF!

UNRIMITOW CEREL!

Mega Loops 15

Mega Loops 15

15.0 (OathToOblivion)

Rock Awoke...and was immediately confused by the body he was in. 'That's strange,' he wondered. 'This chassis doesn't seem like my normal one at all.' That was when the Loop Memories came in, and everything became clear. Apparently, in this Loop variant Dr. Wily didn't exist, which was sort of a relief. 'At least I don't have to deal with those weird Loops with his cultural kicks.' However, despite Wily not being there, he was still wary of the person that had helped Dr. Light build the initial Robot Masters. After all, Giovanni Rocket was also not someone to tangle with. At least it explained why he looked like the Gen III version of Red.

"Rock?" Suddenly, Roll's voice rang out from behind.

"Yes, Roll?" he answered as he turned around.

"Why do I look like Leaf?" she asked with a glower from under the Gen III protagonist's bucket hat.

"The same reason I look like Red; Giovanni's replaced Wily," Rock sighed. He then changed the subject. "By the way, has Blues signaled in yet?" he queried. Roll shook her head. That meant that either he wasn't Awake or he was off in some other Loop again. Just as she was about to ask Rock about something, Dr. Light's voice interrupted.

"Rock? Roll? Could you come here for a bit?"

"Coming, Dr. Light!" the pair of DLNs said before exiting the part of the Lab they had woken up in.

---

15. Sneak (OathToOblivion)

'No. Not again!' Zero thought in anguish. Once again, he had failed to convince Colonel to stand down. And there was Iris, standing there with accusations and grief and heartbreak in her eyes, holding Colonel's core in her hands. Zero felt paralyzed, as much as he did want to stop it. It was almost as though the universe was telling him, "Wait."

"Good bye, Zero," Iris whispered, about to fuse with the core, a feat which would utterly destroy her. But before she could do that, a shot rang out, knocking the core out of her hand.

It wasn't Zero. His aim with Busters was kind-of-sort-of horrible . That's why he normally used the external Buster Shot, which had a scope. No, it was someone else entirely, who disabled their invisibility. A certain New Generation Reploid in black who wielded twin pistols.

"Axl?!" Zero reacted in shock. How had he known that they were there?!

Axl ignored him, surprisingly enough, and looked directly at Iris. Uncharacteristically for the energetic Reploid, he was completely serious. "So, you're Iris, Zero's girlfriend, huh?" he said rhetorically. "I've heard a lot about you, girlie. You know that doing what you were about to do probably would have killed you, right?"

"I don't care!" Iris yelled in grief. "My brother is dead...I-!"

"I know what you're going through!" Axl interrupted. "You're scared, and angry, and your heart feels broken. Believe me, I know . But at least you weren't the one who ended your brother's life!" he said with emphasis. Zero saw it in his eyes. The anguish he had felt defeating Red and leaving him behind for dead when the Crimson Palace self-destructed. An anguish that should not be there . At least, not in this Loop. Which meant...

"I-I..." Iris stuttered.

"What about Zero? Do you think he wanted to kill Colonel?! Everything I've ever heard about those two says that they respected each other tremendously. If Zero killed Colonel, then Colonel must not have left him any choice in the matter! And you!" he added. "You were going to throw your life away for nothing?! You'd hate Zero for something your brother brought on himself?! I can't see what he saw in you!" he yelled critically.

"THAT'S ENOUGH, AXL!" Zero yelled angrily, drawing both of the other Reploids' attention. Zero then softened. "Iris can hate me if she wants," he said softly. "Colonel might not have left me a choice, but it was still my blade that took his life, and that's something I can never forgive myself for."

Then, he turned to Iris. "Iris, hate me if you want. But please, don't throw your life away. Not like this. Colonel would want you to live on in his memory," he pleaded.

Iris looked down, conflicted and still struggling through her grief. "I...I could never hate you, Zero. I...I just..." she whispered. Her tears came to a crescendo, and she flung herself at Zero, hugging him as hard as she could. "Oh, Zero, what am I going to do?! My brother...he's gone!" she wailed.

Zero was shocked for a second, before gently returning the hug. "I'm sorry, Iris. There's nothing I can ever do to make it up to you," he whispered. "But right now, there's something I have to do."

"What's-?"

"Sigma's returned again. Everything that's happened has his fingerprints all over it," Zero said decisively. "I have to stop him, before everyone on Earth suffers because of him again."

"Sigma...then, the reason my brother died, and Repliforce is being hunted-!" Iris realized.

"Yeah, it's all because of him. Go back to Abel City, Iris. I'll take care of him, and then we'll talk about things, all right?" he asked hopefully. Iris was silent, and removed herself from Zero's arms. She look askance at Colonel's fallen core for a second, before her gaze hardened.

She turned back to Zero. "All right. I'll go, and return to being your Navigator. Go after Sigma, Zero, and terminate him with extreme prejudice!" she declared, before she teleported out. Zero looked at where she had been with shock, before smirking.

"Heh, you're definitely Colonel's sister, Iris," he chuckled, before returning to the Donphan in the room. "Axl...thanks. I'm not sure what I would have done," he admitted.

"No problem, Zero! Not every day someone like me gets to save someone like you!" Axl smirked, spinning his pistols and holstering them. "Although, if you want to explain why we're in a completely parallel universe, now would be the time. What is a Pokémon anyway?" he added.

"Heh. I'll explain on the way. Come on, let's go stop Sigma," Zero offered.

"What, me and you?" Axl asked in surprise. "Aren't you supposed to be doing this with X?"

"He's busy. And since when were you so hesitant? Don't tell me you're all bark and no bite," Zero teased, before rushing further ahead. Axl started in surprise, then dashed after him.

"As if! Get back here, old man! I'll make you eat my dust!" he called.

15.1 (Voidable)

Blues Awoke, and found that he had no sense of anything around him. A total blackness surrounded him, leaving him unable to grasp what was around him, and so he did the only thing he could do in such a state, and Pinged.

Ichigo and Rukia looked up at each other, showing in their eyes that both felt the Ping, yet didn't believe it. Rukia glanced out the bedroom window and said, "That Ping felt... off."

Ichigo nodded and said, "It did. It was subdued, like it was from Soul Society instead of the living world. Someone probably Awoke without a body, or something similar." Awakening without a body was not unheard of, though it wasn't common either.

As they walked to Urahara's shop, as was their routine for beginning a Loop, they felt another Ping,And it felt stronger than it did before. Without a word to each other, they quickened their pace. When they got there, they could not see any spirits of any sort, but once again, they felt a Ping. They stared right at the box that Kon was typically in. Ichigo stared at the box, because he could swear he felt that Ping screaming "I'm here!", he dug out Kon's pill, and paid an unawake Kisuke Urahara for the 'Soul Pill'. As Ichigo and Rukia walked out of Urahara Shōten, once again, confirming his suspicions, there was another Ping, this time it was right in the ancient Anchor's hand. He off-handedly stated "I'm going to hurry back, sorry." and promptly apparated back into his empty room. He made sure to lock the door, and without any hesitation, he swallowed the Soul Pill.

Blues blinked. He blinked again. Then he blinked some more. Then he was smacked in the back of the head. "...Ow?" Blues blinked yet again as the unexpected sensation of pain pulsated in his cranium. Looking around, he saw the orange-haired Ichigo in his Shinigami garb and said, "Hello? Sorry, this Loop is a bit unusual for me."

Ichigo snorted. "Yeah, I can imagine Waking up inside a pill is unusual. Anyway, what's your name?"

"Blues Light."

Ichigo grunted. "I don't suppose you'd be Rock's brother?"

"That would be me. You're Ichigo Kurosaki, right?"

Blues sidestepped again as Grand Fisher took a swipe at him, but still got scratched nonetheless. At least it wasn't Ichigo's body, as Rukia made a Gigai for him, and did a surprisingly accurate job with his proportions. Blues wasn't used to fighting anything without his normally mechanical body, but he supposed that developing powers not strictly limited to how his body was built was a good idea. Ichigo did point out that due to the nature of the Loops, Blues wasn't going to be a robot for every single one of them, and he needed to learn how to defend himself for when he wasn't robotic. Big Fisher lunged at Blues again, this time catching him dead-on.

"I have you now, you little brat!" Grand Fisher boasted, with Blues on the ground.

Blues grunted, not enjoying the amped sensation of pain his human-like body granted him, and spat back, "You know, bragging will get you nowhere." Blues then proceeded to push Grand Fisher off, despite the huge difference in size, and kicked him in the face.

The Hollow's mask started to crack, and Grand Fisher went on to say, "Impressive, you actually banged me up a bit. But you're not even a Shinigami, your strength cannot extend much farther, boy ."

15.2 (Bigou, with some edits for story flow by me)

This time around, the man usually named Thomas Light ended in a strange loop.

First, he wasn't American or Japanese like usual, but French. Somehow, that also changed his name into Frédéric Lumière.

Second, he wasn't doctor in robotics, but one of the two host of an educational TV program called 'It's Not Witchcraft'. His co-host was a unAwake man currently named Jamy C. Chocottes, but very recognizable as a variant of Dr. Albert W. Wily.

Each show started the same way: He was seen with his co-host in their mobile lab, (located in a truck trailer) and soon asked a question. Something like "Hey Jamy, can you explain to me how robots work?" And after a positive answer, they open a door to join Marcel, their driver, to be transported to their destination, while the generic started, showing their magnificent white truck. For the robot example, Marcel drove them to MIT.

Yes, they somehow got to Massachusetts by roads, from France. The audience likely didn't think too much of it, assuming that was just the magic of TV shows.

…But the fact Marcel looked a lot like a human version of Auto might have explained a few things.

From then, Wily stayed in the lab, explaining things using mock-ups, sketches and models, while Light was in the field, either interviewing an expert on the day's subject, demonstrating what Wily explained, or to let the audience safely observe some natural phenomenon from their home.

Light's field activities usually prompted new questions, answered by new explanations from Wily, making the show's focus go back and forth between the two.

Often during the switch between field and lab, the disembodied voice of Roll, currently named 'the tiny voice', completed Wily's explanations with either some additional facts, sometimes adding some questions of her own.

The unAwake Wily seemed to enjoy explaining things a way everyone could understand, making his genius be acknowledged nationwide. Neither Roll nor her father knew when they might experience such a Loop again, but they still considered this 'Not-Witchverse' some sort of holiday.

15.3

Harry blinked as he Awoke back on the oh-so-familiar train and recognized the boy sitting across from him.

"Hey Simon," he smiled, "haven't seen you in a while. What was it this time?"

The Anchor most renowned for going above and beyond the possible, many times blowing himself and any other looper present to Eiken or Hogwarts, smirked back. "You remember that Uzumaki place I told you about?"

Harry winced hard. Simon's branch, Gurren Lagann, ran on Spiral Power to do all of its incredibly impossible feats. Uzumaki was a quarantined Loop due to the fact that it had a viral madness-inducing force that infected anything and everything through spirals. Even just looking at a spiral for too long could give it enough of an opening to infect a person's mind. The time Simon had wound up there due to some system error in Yggdrasil… That was still one of the worst horror stories of the Loops he'd ever heard. Poor Simon had apparently needed multiple Loops just to recover. "Ouch."

"Yeah, it kind of replaced the Anti-Spirals last Loop," Simon admitted.

Harry double-winced. "So you just crashed the Loop rather than deal with it?"

"Actually..." Simon began, only to be interrupted by a dual shout as two new occupants entered the car.

"Gurren Lagann is the best. Loop. Ever! " the familiar voices of Rock and Roll Light cheered as they joined Simon and Harry in the train car.

"...these two took care of it," Simon finished, grinning widely. "Punched the resulting eldritch horror in the face so hard that we ended up here."

15.4 (Scorntex)

Peter Parker frowned as his Loop memories rolled in. He looked down at himself, at the red and blue armor which naturally came with spider-web patterning.

"Huh," was all he could say to that.

Apparently in this Loop, he was the product of a combined experiment between his baseline father, Uncle Ben, and two people he didn't recognise, but one who from sheer experience alone looked like he was five seconds away from cackling hysterically. Peter knew a mad scientist when he saw one.

This wasn't the weird part. That Loop where he'd replaced Kon-El had helped with this sort of thing. Nor was the fact that his father was in fact still alive, which in all the Loops he'd been through he honestly couldn't remember happening before.

The fact that he was a robot, on the other hand, was weird. Apparently he'd been designed for something different, menial tasks if the memories were any indicator, before a spider had bitten a highly experimental piece of tech that his father had meant to install in him while he was being "built", giving him his webs and spider-sense.

And at some point very recently, evil mad scientist had turned evil. Somehow his dad and uncle had been surprised by that part. During all this, Uncle Ben wound up a casualty, and Peter had made his father redesign him with super-strength and agility. Which was where he found himself now, waking up just after the redesign.

"How do you feel?" his father asked, hesitantly.

"I..." Peter frowned, staring down at his arms. There was a small band of silver cartridges just below his wrists, right where his webshooters usually were. And from what his Loop memories had suggested he'd been expecting organic ones again.

He looked up at his father, a determined look on his face.

"Amazing." He couldn't help himself with that one.

Whoever this mad scientist was, he was going to regret betraying Peter's family, he was going to regret killing Uncle Ben.

Whoever this Albert Wily was, he was going to regret messing with Spider Man.

15.? (Zerorock41)

Zero Awoke at the start of his loop. " Damn it. Not early enough to save Passy. Oh well. "

Zero began steeling himself mentally, preparing to go through this loop as the most bada, stoic, awesome warrior persona he could muster up. He had just come off a loop with the Manly Guys after all.

That was the plan... until he heard Ciel speak.

"Zero... The legendary Toucan..."

Looking down at himself, Zero almost swore.

"Oh come on !"

15.5 (Zerorock41)

"You must be Zero. Allow me to introduce myself. My name is Harpuia, one of the four Guardians of Mast-"

"Oooh. You have pretty laser swords like me."

That had caught the Sage of Thunder off guard. He didn't expect the Reploid girl before him to interrupt him like that. He continued, "...Yes, I do. Anyway, your foolish behavior for siding with the Mave-"

"Are we gonna fight now?"

"Huh?"

"You attacked my friends, the Resistance. That means you're a meanie that needs to be stopped."

Harpuia was confused. This was the mighty Reploid that had been causing so much trouble for him, his siblings, and their armies? This adorable little blonde Reploid? Still, a threat was a threat and she had challenged him...

"Very well, if you wish to continue aiding those Maverick fools, then you shall be destroyed no matter how adorable you are!"

"You think I'm adorable?" Zero asked sweetly.

Flustered, Harpuia nearly facefaulted right there. What was this Reploid girl doing to him?

- Nearby-

Looking from afar, the Cyber elf X was enjoying himself, watching as the childish, feminine Zero wiped the floor with the clearly distracted Harpuia. All the while, he kept his recording software on the whole time. This would make excellent blackmail material for the looping Zero.

15.6

Blues sighed to himself as he entered the modeling company, wondering just what was up with his latest case. His client might have seemed a bit flakey on the surface, but with every person he interviewed and every answer he got, the more he was certain something was up. Something beyond Police Detective Archer trying to warn him off the case. The DeGreasys were definitely hiding something, regardless of whether they were telling the truth about his client, and the way Carol Masters stuck up for his client seemed to back his client's story that the DeGreasys were shorting him on his contract.

But there was still one person left to talk to. His client's estranged wife. Depending on the nature of the estrangement, this could either prove enlightening or disastrous. And there she was now. Subconsciously exuding a sensuality that would have had any nearly man she wanted wrapped around her little finger with minimal effort.

No wonder everyone kept wondering why she was with his client.

"Jessica Rabbit?" he asked, getting the woman's attention with a swift turn of her head that sent her perfectly groomed red hair whipping around in sensual waves.

"Ah..." the woman seemed surprised to see him, but even so her voice cooed out with the sultriest of undertones. "So you're the one who has replaced Valiant..."

"I suppose I am," Blues reminded himself that the adult model toon probably couldn't help enticing others. "Which means you know why I'm here. Your husband Roger hired me to look into his contract with the DeGreasy brothers."

"Yes, this variant again..." the woman sighed in a way that would have most men needing a cold shower. "Not my favorite... I take it you've already caught on that something's up?"

"I have, though I'm getting the feeling that I don't know the half of it."

"You don't mister..."

"Call me Blues."

"Of course. Mister Blues. Normally I love my honey bunny more than anything... Most Loops he wouldn't hurt anyone, not willingly, but this version of him... Unawake..."

"Is dangerous if pushed too far? Like he believes the DeGreasy brothers have done?"

"Is fully capable of murder, mister Blues. And he's also in very grave danger if his plan is allowed to go forward. Particularly if he still has his teakettle."

"DeGreasy mentioned Roger's teakettle..." Blues realized. "Seemed to want it pretty bad... What is up with it?"

"Now that... That is quite the story. If you've got the time, I'll tell you. And I hope you're pure enough of heart to do what needs to be done when I'm finished..."

15.7 (Thanatos's Scribe)

Zero tensed in anticipation as Weil fused with Ragnarok's core. While he had been having Loops in this era a lot less than in X's baseline Loop, the Loop had been entirely baseline with a few exceptions, such as Zero sabotaging Ragnarok early in the Loop to keep it from destroying Neo Arcadia.

"Now, behold my ultimate form!," Weil said as the light faded away, only to reveal...

...a giant wheel. Zero looked at the wheel in confusion. The wheel was a simple gold and red wheel, with the usual cables that came with the form attached to the wheel's axle. However, the only aspect of the wheel that was an apparent threat was the sheer size of the wheel, its diameter easily 40 feet in length despite having no spikes or cannons.

"Now, DIE!" Weil declared as he revved up before charging at Zero. However, the insane Reploid was quickly defeated as Zero cut off the cables on the right side of the Weil Wheel, before whipping around and cutting the other cables off with a well-thrown Boomerang Shield from his subspace pocket.

With nothing holding him onto Ragnarok, Weil could only let a scream of rage as he rocketed over the mass of Ragnarok he and Zero had been on. With Ragnarok collapsing due to it not having a power source, Zero only shook his head as he was teleported by to the Mobile Resistance Base. While this was one of the few times he had survived past his baseline 'death', he was definitely noting this Loop as one of the easiest he'd done so far.

15.8 (DrTempo)

"NANOMACHINES, S–"

BLAM

Cue a large hole in one Senator Armstrong's chest, courtesy of a certain red armored Maverick Hunter.

"Well, that'll beat Spike's record for an Armstrong kill."

Kicking the ass of this guy in a creative fashion was an occasional pastime among some Loopers. Zero'd heard Ranma had once used Hokuto Hundred Crack Fist to break Armstrong's armor. Blowing smoke from his Buster, Zero smiled.

This Loop'd been FUN...

15.8 & ½

"Zombies!" the steel dynamo/fighting scientist known as Atomic Robo complained as yet another of the walking dead tried to fruitlessly chew on his metal exterior. " Why did it have to be zombies? Why couldn't it be a plague that turns people into, I don't know, brightly-colored ponies or something? The undead are gross, and I think their decaying remains are seeping into my innards or something."

"Hey," a blond pompadoured man with a muscular torso several times the size of his lower body and wearing sunglasses flexed his muscles and blasted several undead off of him in a burst of either chi or chakra and continued punching several more in the face, "at least you're immune Brobo. If I, ah, hadn't trained to coat my body with my, ah, life force I'd be kinda infected by now."

"Everyone's infected, Johnny!" Robo yelled. "This disease is airborne! Anything with lungs is infected! It doesn't matter if you get bitten, just if you die!"

"Halt there, citizens!" a relatively thin man in a trenchcoat and fedora held out a hand in a 'stop' gesture. A hand that was on the end of a mechanical arm sprouting from the top of his hat. And only serving to draw the attention of the walking dead. "You are in violation of the law for rioting, destruction of city property, assault with intent to eat, and decaying without a license. I must ask you to disperse or I will be forced to place you all under arrest."

"Damnit!" Robo swore as the undead swarmed towards the cyborg detective known as Inspector Gadget, whose actual arms were occupied keeping what looked like an armored brown police SUV jacked up so a young teen girl with shoulder-length dark purple hair and an anthropomorphic rat in a red martial arts gi could change its tire. "Someone stop them!"

"Oh, why not let him get eaten already?" a short man with a grayish violet complexion, pointed ears, and an outfit that would label him as a villainous wizard in practically any other situation asked as he conjured a blast of wind to blow away zombies coming from the other direction.

"Because I don't want to deal with a cyborg zombie who can summon an endless variety of ridiculous, yet still possibly lethal, contraptions from any part of his decaying body!" Robo yelled. "Similar reason why we don't just let them eat you!"

"Not cool, Vaati, not cool..." Johnny admonished.

"Oh, all right," the wind sorcerer sighed as he summoned a blast of wind to blow away the zombies attacking Gadget.

"Good to see even the undead can listen to reason," the oblivious detective nodded.

"Why do they even want him anyway?" Vaati huffed. "It's not like he actually has any brains to ea–"

"Cowabrraaiinnssga..." the moan was a lot closer to Vaati than he was comfortable with and he turned to watch a quartet of decaying humanoid turtles leap at him with far more agility than the average zombie possessed. Readying a wind spell in panic, the attempt was cut off by a thrown sai that forced him to cast a minor shield instead. One that, in his haste, was inadequate to stop a close range assault.

A blur of red and brown flashed ahead of him at the last moment and the four zombie turtles were sent flying back.

"Cutting it a little close there, aren't you?" Vaati asked.

"Lay off, man," Johnny scowled. "Those are his–"

"They were my sons this Loop," the ninja rat known as Splinter corrected as he engaged the zombie horde. "Now they are something... far less. In any case, we must hold until our transportation is repaired so that we can find a proper stronghold."

"With a lab so I can research a cure!" Robo reminded while half-covered with zombies as he and Johnny held the line as best they could.

"Not my fault one of them carried explosives," a mechanical voice sounded from the armored SUV.

"No one's saying that Carl," the girl still working on him soothed.

"Hotaru is correct, my friend," Gadget kept his position holding the immensely heavy vehicle steady. "You do your duty well."

"Yeah, well," Robo noted as more zombies arrived to reinforce the already large horde, "we're all going to be on daisy-pushing duty if this keeps up too much–"

Rather suddenly, a large beam of energy blasted a hole in the shambling hordes and the rest were encased in a field of glowing energy and lifted up off the ground before being slammed together with a loud crunch of bones.

Two figures landed before the group. One looked like a boy in modern green and lime armor with blue shades in his helmet and a v-shaped crescent on his forehead, carrying a large red object that morphed from a cannon into a jackhammer as he landed. The other looked like an anthropomorphic hedgehog with silver fur, thin limbs, and glowed with the same energy that had smashed the zombies together.

"Don't be afraid," the hedgehog said. "We've–"

"Oh, please tell me you've come from the future with information to develop a cure before the entire world is consumed by the undead!" Robo interrupted in a rush.

"Er..." the green-armored figure couldn't be seen blinking in astonishment like his partner, but his voice gave off that sensation anyway. "Yes, actually. I'm Quint and this is Silver."

"Yes!" Robo pumped his fists into the air. "We have a chance to stop this insanity!"

"I hope so," Hotaru emerged from under the armored SUV, Carl, and dusted herself off. "I rather dislike having to blow up the planet."

"Uh... blow up the...?" Silver blinked owlishly.

"Get down, please," Hotaru asked nicely as she summoned a polearm and her outfit turned into what amounted to a cross between a swimsuit and a japanese girl's school uniform. After a moment of seeing the others drop to the ground, Quint and Silver followed suit. "Cutting Glaive," she spoke as she swung the weapon. They felt a wave of something pass over them and turned to see a newly arrived horde of zombies cut in half by the attack and turn to dust. "Oh, Johnny!" Hotaru gasped and they looked back to see her worrying over a few bite marks on the beefy man's arm. And then she waved her hand over the marks and they healed like they'd never existed.

"Alright everyone," Carl the SUV spoke up as Gadget set him down, "I'm fixed so hop on in and hold on tight."

"Right," Robo nodded. "The sooner we fix this, the sooner we can put it behind us because, man, I'd hate to be looping from this place."

"Indeed," Splinter nodded. "Quint, see if you can mount your weapon to Carl's door. Vaati, you join Silver atop Carl and help clear the way."

"Man, why do I gotta..." the wind sorcerer trailed off as he caught the look the rat was giving him and swallowed nervously. "I mean, yes sir..."

15.9 (Leonite)

Rock leaped into the air. He smirked as the gate barely opened in time to let him in. "You're getting slow on the activation times, Wily!" He shouted. It had been an interesting loop so far. It was international robot tournament, but instead of Mr. X the person who had kidnapped the robots was a person named Dr. Faker. It was a silly disguise for Wily and he hadn't fallen for it for a second, the man looked like Wily with blond hair dye and a spiked wig! More effort had been put into the disguise though, Dr. Faker was apparently yet another world famous robotics expert, this time out of Japan. It was probably the cause of 4 different robot masters being stolen, while the other half remained the same.

Standing in front of him was one of those robots. Dressed in rather over dramatic white and yellow armor, with a wide helmet on his head which covered his face, showing only two red eyes, and two large swords he had sheathed. "Utopia Man, you don't have to work for Faker!" Rock shouted... it didn't usually work, but asking his opponent not to fight was usually worth the–

"OK," Utopia Man said.

Rock blinked. "What."

"I said 'OK'," Utopia Man repeated. "Dr. Faker definitely isn't feeling the flow. Not my sort of thing."

A loudspeaker crackled, flaring to life. "You stupid little robot! Fight Mega Man! Your master orders it. Do as I–" The loudspeaker cut off as one of Utopia Man's swords sliced it in half, having been thrown at it.

Utopia Man sighed... and grabbed his helmet, pulling it off. Underneath revealed... a bot that had to be around Rock's age, design wise. Red and black hair spiked in a way that should be impossible and a wide grin on his face. "Sorry about that, Faker usually starts off evil. He's got good intentions at heart," the gold and white robot explained. "I hope you were Awake enough to avoid a slice like that. I'm Yuma." He held out his hand for a handshake.

Rock grinned and grabbed his hand, giving it a small shake. "Good to see another looper, you can call me Rock." Rock said.

"You're a new one, never ran into a loop like yours before," Yuma admitted. He looked over himself, before he spotted... a strange pendant on his helmet. With a grin it popped free, revealing some rope, quickly going around Yuma's neck. "Hey... can you change your visual spectrum thingies? Got another looper I want you to meet."

Rock raised an eyebrow... but he started shifting through the colour and light spectrum... until he finally spotted a pale blue being floating next to Yuma. He seemed to be saying something, but it took a bit of tuning of his own audio sensors to finally hear him. "...and of all the luck you get stuck as a robot that can make a shield and fight in close combat in a loop where guns are the big thing. Truly, it astounds me," the being said.

"Well, you don't have to make me look like a moron in front of the new guy, Astral!" Yuma shouted.

"I would not if it wasn't for the fact that you make it so easy," Astral insisted Rock chuckled at that. "Hey, don't feel so bad. You could be a Robot Master focused on springs," he insisted. Why Wily made Spring Man was still a little mystifying.

Yuma sighed... but grinned. "Ah well, robots are still a change. My loop is all about card games."

"Card Games?" Rock asked.

"They can be serious business," Yuma insisted.

"No, it's just that... I think I've met another looper from your universe before. Yugi?"

Yuma grinned. "Sorta... the Yu-Gi-Oh! branches are close together, but we each have a seperate, if easily fused loop. Yugi is an Anchor of one of those branches," Yuma explained. "Why, who was he?"

"Um..."

Rock simply stared at the other Robot Master. "So your name is..."

"Another Pharaoh Man, yes," the blushing Robot Master said. "Just take my weapon and let me find a patent office, I don't care if I'm a robot, I'm changing my name"

"No one special." Rock insisted.

Yuma raised an eyebrow at this, but shrugged. "OK, but be careful of my friends. I think at least my friend Shark is looping here too, but he could be anything." Yuma said.

"So you're Shark Man?"

The robot master in front of him, looking simply armored in purple but with an oversized shark head for a helmet. "Gee, how'd you guess?" Shark asked, sarcasm dripping from his muffled voice, the helmet actually so big it made it a little hard to hear him. "This is some Admin's way of getting revenge on me, I just know it."

15.4 (Scorntex - continued)

Everything had been going swimmingly since Doctor Wily's last foiling, at the hands of Mega Man, Mega Woman, and their friend Spider Man, a robot created by an old friend of Doctor Thomas Light, who had proved an able ally in the struggle against the reprogrammed Robot Masters.

Rock and Roll had gone back to helping Doctor Light, while Spider Man had decided to become a school science teacher, under the alias of Peter Parker. And for a few months, things had remained quiet, until Doctor Wily had broken free of prison, again, which Peter had taken in surprisingly good stride. And from there he'd managed to make some new Robot Masters.

So naturally all three had leapt into action, which led them to their current predicament.

"Okay," the visiting Looper started, "what?"

Rock and Roll stared. Or, more accurately, Rock stared. Roll glowered intently.

They had been expecting to find one more of Wily's Robot Masters.

Instead, they found themselves once again facing off against their purported future-selves. Only this time Quint and Waltz had a friend.

He looked vaguely like their current comrade in-arms Spider Man, only in dark purple, bordering on black with white detailing. And he was glaring at them like they were something to be scraped off of his boot.

"Well, you see," Rock started, as they hid from Waltz's erratic firing, "normally these two show up, apparently from the future to cause us trouble. But the newcomer-"

Apparently said newcomer heard that one.

"Swing, you clod," they heard him declare, over the roar of Waltz's blasting. Though they couldn't see it, Waltz was struggling to maintain a perfect poker-face.

"This is one of the first times a guest has gotten an evil version of themselves."

"Okay, I get that," Spider Man said, his voice growing increasingly dark, as he examined his helmet, which had been badly grazed by one of Waltz's opening shots. "I've dealt with future versions of myself before. And evil future versions of myself as well. Not very often, but I have." Peter just sagged, "but Swing?"

For a moment, the Light siblings stared blankly.

"It does fit with the theme naming," Rock pointed out.

"Oh, no, I get that, it's just..." Peter sighed, "Swing? Really? Future-Me couldn't have chosen something more impressive? Anything?"

"If you like," Roll said, "you can take it up with Doctor Wily, later."

"Not gonna be a later for you!" Waltz sang. "Not when w- glumph!"

Roll stared at Peter, Web Shooter armed. A short distance away Waltz swore as she tried to get the substance covering her mouth off, to no success. After a few seconds Roll realised her mouth was hanging open.

"How much of that fluid do you have left?" she asked. Peter glanced at the glowing blue panel, and winced.

"I get the feeling it's not going to be enough."

"No," Roll sighed wearily, "you'd probably need several gallons for her mouth alone."

"Figures," Peter groaned. "Never enough web-fluid when I actually need it."

He looked out again, then to Rock and Roll.

"Plan?" he asked hopefully.

"We each take our doppelgangers," Rock said. Peter looked over towards the suspiciously Venom-like robot still glowering in his direction, then back to Rock and Roll.

"Alone?"

Roll hefted her Mega Buster, her face the picture of composure. "Alone."

"Right." Peter nodded. "Okay. I can do this."

"You never fought yourself?" Roll asked. Peter tilted his head.

"Depends on how you define 'yourself'," he murmured, before smiling. "Don't you just hate time travel?"

The sound of two Mega Busters powering up was Rock and Roll's only response.

As the Lights moved in toward their own counterpart, Peter made his way towards his glowering counterpart. There was something about the way he was glowering that Peter didn't like, something that seemed unnervingly familiar, something about the eyes of that face-concealing helmet.

"So, what's with the black?" he asked, as he aimed a kick for his copy's head. "Don't tell me I've started writing bad poetry again."

His counterpart just dodged, with the same lightning fast reflexes Peter had, and while doing that began aiming a punch. Peter quickly tried deflecting it. He ignored the pain, as his counterpart hit with a lot more strength than Peter ever did, even in his current mechanical form.

"Always making jokes," his counterpart sneered. "Always out of fear, Parker. But you don't have to fear the–"

"Nuh-uh," Peter said, aiming another kick at his opponent. "Unless you're going to tell me your origin and convenient weaknesses, which I'm guessing isn't fire. Not that we have fire, because the mad Doctor didn't bother buildi–"

He stopped, as something slammed into his chest. Underneath that helmet of his, Peter was sure his counterpart was smirking. Not that he could tell, as he was currently staring at the floor. Shaking his head, Peter tried to get to his feet, and aim his Web Shooter.

Swing's fist grabbed his fist, and squeezed.

"No more jokes, Parker."

Several mechanical wrists bound around him. Through the haze of pain, Peter tried to focus on his enemy's face. In the distance, behind him, he could hear Waltz screaming madly, but no sound of Quint or Rock's fight. As his vision cleared, he noticed the four tendrils his future-self seemed to have suddenly formed, ones he was using to lift himself and Peter up.

"You had already lost before this fight began, Parker. I am you, shorn of all your failures. I am..." there was a pause, as Swing chuckled, "I am your superior."

Peter blinked. Memories came back, from his baseline. Experiences he'd sworn never to experience again. But there was something about the Loops that seemed to enjoy making him live through nightmarish situations over, and over again.

"Oh," he said, his voice eerily calm. "Okay then."

And in the space of a few seconds, he ripped Swing's arm clean off.

"Let's put that to the test, shall we?"

Roll stopped to catch her breath, even if only in a figurative sense. Waltz had been forced to retreat, removed from the battlefield by her brother. Slowly, Roll walked over towards her.

"I'm okay," she said, before he could ask anything. "How's Peter?"

The mixed look of bafflement and amazement took her by surprise. "I..." Rock started, "I think he's doing okay."

Roll turned to look, as a battered and scratched Peter made his way over to them, carrying someone's arm.

"Souvenir," he said, absent his normal cheerfulness.

"Are you alright?" both of Doctor Light's children asked. Peter paused, and stared at the arm. He looked around at the remains of the massive laboratory.

"Let's... just go." And with that, Spider Man walked past the two. Rock looked towards Roll, and vice versa. Silently, they followed afterward.

---

15. Dafuq?

"Bwa-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha!" the newly elected chancellor laughed in a manner that would set mental alarms ringing in anyone with a lick of sense. "I thank you all for recognizing my genius and electing me supreme chancellor of the Galactic Republic! My first order of business will be to do away with the backwards and often ineffective ways of the Jedi Order and bring to the republic new and improved defenders! In the form of my patented Jedi Droid Masters! Bwa-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha!"

"Why did you two not stop this?" Ahsoka asked tiredly as she began mentally formulating possible methods of evacuating the galaxy. From the looks of it, Anakin was mentally formulating how many bars he'd need to hit.

"Because unlike his usual attempts, it was totally and completely legal," the very human-like droid constructed by Jedi Master Thomas Light shrugged.

"Yeah, not even a Sith plot like Palpatine's," his droid 'twin sister' added, gesturing to the silently fuming senator of Naboo and secret Sith Lord.

Chancellor Wily kept laughing like the madman he was as he began describing his plan for defense using his own creations, introducing the eight prototypes for the senate's approval. From the looks of things, even though many senators were at least a little disturbed by how manic their new chancellor was, the proposition was going to pass by a wide margin.

15.10

He stood in the lobby of the small out of the way theater, or rather a small cultural center with an even smaller theater inside, built on the edge of a lake and in the middle of a residential neighborhood, and waited for the play to begin. Well... not quite a play. It was called a script reading, presented in 'Dynamic RadioVizion!' according to the ad he'd read. Well, it had sounded interesting and he really had nothing else planned for the evening, so he figured why not?

Blinking out of his thoughts as another man approached him, he straightened up and focused his attention.

"I must say, about the last thing I expected to see was a green biker dude when I came here tonight," the man addressed him with a mildly incredulous grin. "You here for the show?"

"I am. Name's Joe."

"Jonathan Archer," the man greeted, holding his hand out for Joe to shake. "You got a last name? Or a face under that helmet?"

"I'm just Joe. And I like my helmet where it is." Mostly because there really wasn't a face under it to speak of. He was trying to go incognito, but there was only so much you could do by disabling the glow on an optic, putting on a leather jacket, and hoping no one looked too closely.

"Fair enough," the man allowed, and something about his manner and face struck the robot as familiar.

"Are you Awake?" he asked, using the standard code phrase to check for a looper.

"I know I didn't get as much sleep last night as I wanted," the man shook his head, "but do I really look that tired? You're the third person today to ask me that..."

"Sorry," Joe apologized. The reply meant one of a few things: 1a) The man wasn't a looper. 1b) The man was a looper, but wasn't 'Awake'. 2) The man was a looper and Awake and didn't care to make that fact known. In case of the latter, Joe figured he should respect the man's privacy.

"No worries," the man waved the apology off easily. "Still, looks like it might be an interesting show tonight."

"It does at that."

15.0) Mega Mon. Later in the Loop a certain genetically engineered Pokémon Awoke and had to be stopped from lobotomizing Giovanni.

15. Sneak) Consider this a sneak preview of Mega Mon X.

OathToOblivion: First part is already out in the Pokémon Compilation! /ShamelessPlug

Oh! And welcome to the Loops, Axl!

15.1) Bleach Blues.

15.2) According to Bigou, this is based on a French show called 'C'est Pas Sorcier', literally 'It's Not Witchcraft', but essentially French slang meaning something isn't hard to understand. The show ran from November 5, 1994 until February 1, 2014. The name changes are poking fun at an old thing (up until the mid 2000s apparently) regarding French translations getting… weird with characters' names.

15.3) Tagline by Zap Rowsdower: It's impossible for Spiral Power to take out Uzumaki? No problem, he went beyond the impossible and beat it with the power of Rock and Roll!

15.4) Don't remind Spidey about Superior Spider-Man. Or Venom.

15.?) Blinks What the…?

(Would you believe I didn't even notice adding this to the compilation until someone pointed it out to me?)

15.5) An Unawake, female Zero acting cutesy and moe. X is Awake however to record the whole thing and the looping Zero will soon wish he wasn't.

15.6) Blues replacing Eddie Valiant in Who Censored Roger Rabbit , the book the movie was based on (and is wildly different in many ways).

15.7) He was the victim of a wheelie bad joke.

15.8) What just happened? NANOMACHI–BLAM

15.8 & ½) My Looping Zombie Apocalypse Team:

Leader: Splinter (TMNT)

Brains: Atomic Robo (Atomic Robo)

Brawler: Johnny Bravo (Johnny Bravo)

Speedster: Silver the Hedgehog (Sonic the Hedgehog)

Weapons Expert: Quint (Mega Man)

Healer: Hotaru Tomoe/Sailor Saturn (Sailor Moon)

Mascot: Carl the Jeep (Eureka: Christmas Special)

Idiot: Inspector Gadget (Inspector Gadget)

Jerk: Vaati (Legend of Zelda)

15.9) Duel Masters.

15. Dafuq?) And he's not even the strangest individual to be elected to that position either.

15.10) Because we haven't seen much of Joe lately, here he is just chilling out and seeing a show. And making a friend. Bonus points if you recognize the friend.

Battle in the Network: With Soul - Part1

Battle in the Network: With Soul - Part 1

"You all right, Hub?" Lan asked as his brother and NetNavi stretched in his PET.

"Yeah, Lan," Hub replied as he worked a digital kink out of his digital back. "I just think I'm still sore after that whole thing with the last tournament. I mean, Cache did kind of hit me pretty hard..."

Despite the N1 being a WWW plot, people had really liked it and there had been attempts to organize another such event. One of which Lan and Hub had taken part in alongside several friends, rivals, and a few new faces as well.

"I'm just glad it wasn't worse," Lan sympathized. "Still, Cache in the BattleChipGP and Protoman with a 'Muramasa Style'... I certainly don't remember that happening before..."

"Hey, at least we got a new style change out of it," Hub replied, referring to the completely unexpected WoodTurbo Style that had shown up at the last moment. "Even if dad made us promise to stop using them unless absolutely necessary."

"Heh..." Lan chuckled. "You should have seen Kai's face when that happened. I think he and Turboman just about exploded from excitement. Anyway, we gotta get down and have breakfast so we can go shopping with dad!"

Lan took the stairs two at a time, but halted as he heard voices from the kitchen.

"Haruka dear, you can't send multiple chips unless they're all the same type or share the same code..." the voice of the two's father was heard. "Don't you remember?"

"Maybe I just like having you remind me, Yuichiro," their mom replied teasingly. "Now, let's get this stove fixed so I can make breakfast."

"I guess it's a good thing we remembered to get that RecoveryPatch yesterday, right?" Hub smiled.

"Yeah, but let's wait a bit before going in," Lan agreed. "It sounds like they're having a 'mom and dad' moment."

"More like they're having a 'you might be getting a new baby brother or sister in several months' moment," Apollo grinned.

"Apollo..." Hephaestus trailed off as he spotted what the sun god was doing and blinked, trying to process the sight. "Where in the world did you get the gutter from and why are you soaking your head in it?" (1)

Lan and his father walked out of Jomon Electric holding bags and smiling broadly.

"They certainly have a lot of cool stuff, don't they?" Lan's dad said as the two exited the store.

"They sure do!"

"Thanks for reminding me to pick up the light bulbs too, Lan."

"No problem!"

"Hey, Lan!" Hub piped up. "Isn't that Yai and Mayl over there?"

"It is!" Lan smile grew as he darted towards the girls and the stereo display they were standing in front of, his father following at a more sedate pace. "Mayl! Yai!"

"Hey, Lan!" Mayl smiled brightly. "Are you and your dad out shopping too? Hi, Mr. Hikari!"

"Hello to you too, Mayl, Yai," Dr. Hikari smiled pleasantly. "Nice day, isn't it?"

"Yep!" Yai and Mayl replied together.

"Say," Lan gestured to the store display Yai and Mayl had been eyeing, "is this the same stereo display that was having that promotion where you could win free earphones by NetBattling?"

"Yeah!" Mayl seemed surprised Lan knew that. "Unfortunately it seems the navi's on break for a bit so they're not offering the promotion right this moment."

"That's too bad," Lan fingered the earphones around his neck that he'd won the other day, "they're pretty awesome."

"I guess Roll and I will have to come back later then and try to win some! She's in there with Glide right now. Why don't you jack Megaman in so he can say hi?"

"You mind, Dad?" Lan turned to his father just as the man's PET rang urgently.

"Not at all, Lan," Dr. Hikari said absently as he got his PET out and began reading whatever urgent message had been sent to him. Lan thought about trying to sneak a peek since his dad had only recently started using a PET again (which was weird since most of his job revolved around PETs and NetNavis) so he could see the navi, but couldn't figure out how to do so without being blatantly obvious.

"Ooo..." Apollo did his best 'mysterious' voice as Lan gave up and jacked Hub into the stereo. "Who could the mystery navi of the great Dr. Hikari be? As if we didn't know already." (2)

"Hush, you," Hephaestus gestured for silence.

Hub watched the seemingly peaceful figure of Shademan. exe out of the corner of his eye as he approached Roll. exe and Glide. exe. The navi might be a serious player in Nebula, but... there wasn't a way to out him at the moment without sounding completely crazy. He and Lan should know since trying to figure that out had been one of Lan's favorite distractions from homework lately.

"Hey, Megaman!" Roll. exe greeted warmly. "Haven't seen you much lately! How have things been?"

"Pretty good, Roll," Hub smiled back. "Nice to see you too, Glide."

"A pleasure as always," the brown navi returned politely. "I understand you've taken part in the store's promotion recently?"

"Yeah, Lan and I came out here the other day to look around. The store navi's not that bad actually."

"But no match for the great Megaman, five-time savior of the world!" Apollo declared dramatically.

"Will you get off my desk ?!" Hephaestus yelled.

"Lan, Hub?" Dr. Hikari said as Lan finished jacking Hub out. "I'm afraid I've been called into work on an extremely urgent matter. I was hoping to spend the whole day with you and now... Now I have to go to Netopia immediately to deal with this issue."

"You're going overseas?" Yai looked interested. "How cool! But I suppose it's no surprise seeing as you are one of Electopia's top scientists."

"Perhaps," Dr. Hikari allowed before turning to Lan again. "I'm not sure how long it will be before I can return, so be sure to look after the house and your mom while I'm away. I'm sorry I couldn't spend more time with you."

"It's fine, dad," Lan replied easily. "Go, save the world. Maybe this time I won't need to help bail you out."

"Ha ha!" Lan's father laughed. "Well, if I get in a jam I'll know exactly who to call, won't I?"

"Yeah!"

"Saving the world: Now a family business! Act now and get a rag-tag group of misfits with every hero!"

Hephaestus blinked owlishly at the flyers Apollo was waving in his direction. "Where do you get these things?"

"Ah, brother," the sun god tsked and waved his finger, "the great Apollo is prepared for everything!"

Lan watched as the official address the crowd using the full volume of probably the biggest loudspeaker ever built (even though the crowd was close enough they probably could have heard him without it), quietly trading commentary with Hub as he spoke.

"I HAVE COME TODAY FROM THE DENCITY NETBATTLE COMMITTEE!"

"Gee, I wonder if this is about NetBattling?"

"You know, I think it might be."

"–TO PREVENT THE SPREAD OF NETCRIME, THE GOVERNMENT HAS BANNED NETBATTLES BY ORDINARY CITIZENS."

"Really?"

"First I've heard of it." (3)

"MY FRIENDS, THIS BAN HAS NOW BEEN LIFTED!"

"How generous. The ban that never existed has been lifted. We can go on NetBattling friends and rivals like always."

"Yippee. Hooray."

"–IMPROVE THE NETBATTLE SKILLS OF DENCITY CITIZENS BY HOLDING A GRAND NETBATTLE TOURNAMENT!"

"Totally not another attempt to restart the N1!"

"Honest!"

"A COMPETITION TO FIND THE CITY'S BEST NETBATTLER: THE CITY BATTLE TOURNAMENT!"

"Gee... how original..." Lan deadpanned as the crowd began cheering.

"THIS PRELIMINARIES FOR THIS CITY BATTLE TOURNAMENT WILL COMMENCE TOMORROW RIGHT HERE AT 10 AM!"

"Cutting it a little close, are you?" Hub added as the crowd's reaction completely flipped at this addition. The official began stammering apologies as he retreated, tossing back that those who passed the prelims would be on TV as he fled.

A rather large portion of the crowd changed attitude at this, deciding to forego their plans for the opportunity to be on television.

"We're still gonna join, right?" Hub asked as the crowd began to disperse.

"Of course!" Lan sounded like the very idea that they wouldn't was unthinkable. "But first, let's make sure Shademan won't be able to use this thing to its full potential. Just in case we can't beat him to where we're meeting our friends..."

Lan walked over to the giant speaker and turned the volume knob all the way down.

"Ah, Lan, you are a hero after the great Apollo's own heart..."

"His grades would appear to back that up."

"Harsh, brother, harsh..."

As it turned out, they hadn't quite made it in time to stop Shademan. exe's attack. While they'd been catching the announcement, the vampiric darkloid had been snacking on the energy of every navi in the stereo display. And then he'd jacked out rather than fight them in search of a female navi for 'dessert'.

Racing him to the meeting area yielded, just as they expected, a defeated Gutsman. exe and Glide. exe, as well as a kidnapped Roll. exe.

Of course, since Lan already had the headphone prize from the promotion, getting to the speaker's system to jack in directly (because the system designer hadn't connected the part of the system that led to the net with the rest of it for some weird reason, meaning only navis that could fly were able to bridge the gap) was little issue. As was making their way to where Shademan. exe was holding Roll. exe captive.

"Hold it right there! Let her go!"

"Mega!" Roll. exe yelled in relief.

"You just can't let me enjoy my dessert in peace, can you?" Shademan. exe screeched at them.

He tried to say more, but Hub cut him off with a couple of shots from his MegaBuster.

"So, that's how you wish it to be?" the vampiric navi hissed, unhurt. "Blast forth, my beam! WHEEEEEE!"

The cyberspeakers next to him produced a rather lackluster whisper.

"What?" the bat-like navi blinked in astonishment.

"Maybe next time you should check the volume!" Hub retorted as he charged into battle.

"You're far too puny to defeat me!" Shademan. exe laughed as the shots did little more than force him into a shadowy state that reformed a short distance away. "I'll delete you and then savor that lady navi's energy!"

"In your dreams, creep!" Roll yelled as she unleashed an arrow at the vampire, knocking something loose from him and forcing him to turn to shadows again and reform. It went like that for several seconds, the two heroic navis (even if one had been thrust into a damsel in distress role) blasting Shademan. exe to no avail, but the shadowy vampire not getting in any attacks of his own.

"What... What has happened to my power?" Shademan. exe sounded confused.

"Lan, it's like shadow boxing in here!" Hub yelled to his brother. "He's not really doing anything to us, but we're not hurting him either!"

"There you are!" a new voice cut in. "The one who attacked all those navis!"

"Protoman!" Hub yelled as the crimson-armored sword wielding navi appeared, causing Shademan. exe to hiss.

"Chaud! About time you showed up!" Lan yelled in the real world.

"Yes," Chaud hesitated at the fact Lan was expecting him for a moment, "well, we were only recently alerted to the attacks. In any case, we'll take it from here. Protoman, apprehend the criminal!"

"Yes, sir," Protoman. exe replied as he readied himself.

"All these interruptions to my dessert..." the vampire navi hissed. "And the legendary officials as well? I think I've had enough for today. Wheeee!"

"Not so fast!" Protoman moved to cut the vampiric navi down, only for Shademan. exe to jack out of the system at the last moment. "Darn!"

"After him, Protoman!"

"Right away, sir!" Protoman. exe intoned before jacking out himself.

"Oh, Mega!" Roll. exe launched herself into a flying hug the moment Protoman. exe was gone. "I knew you'd come to save me! Oh, and you too, Lan!"

"Yeah, yeah, I know when I'm a third wheel," Lan play-huffed.

"Oh, right!" Roll. exe released Hub as quickly as she'd grabbed him. "Shademan dropped something! What do you think it is?"

Hub looked over at the darkly glowing piece of data that Shademan. exe had dropped in their fight and waved Roll. exe back from it before picking it up himself.

"I don't know," he lied. He had a darn good idea what this was and what it might do to him. But then he had memories of handling it before, and he was sure he could do it again. "It looks like a BattleChip of some sort. Maybe Higsby will know more..."

"The great Higsby and his awesome hair know all!" Apollo declared.

Hephaestus sighed at the sun god's antics before something about Apollo's appearance registered and he did a double-take. "Did you really just style your hair to look like that of a mortal from my Loop?" (4)

"...It's true! Lan is right! I should collect chips by busting viruses... huh. I'll be good now, I promise. Trade chips sometime?"

"Sure! Why not? But...You do have to pay for your crimes. So... You better do something to help everyone out, okay?"

Lan had to admit that Higsby and Numberman. exe had both come a long way from brainwashing schoolkids for the WWW and had become indispensable (if still a bit mercenary) sources of support and advice as well as good friends. But the fact remained that they had been part of a dangerous cyber-syndicate and were far more familiar with the seedy underbelly of the world than many criminals.

"You wanna get inside the undernet, huh? ... OK, huh! Thanks to you, I got out of the WWW, huh! To thank you, I'll get you into the undernet, huh!"

As far as the two were concerned, a grade-schooler and his navi wanting into the undernet wasn't even a cause for alarm. Just a favor. A big favor, but still a favor.

"Oh no! T-This chip...!"

So when Higsby looked at something like it was demon spawn, you knew it was a whole new level of bad .

"Lan..." Higsby was shaking like he expected the DarkChip to leap up and start eating people. Which, come to think of it, might be less scary than what the thing actually did do. "Where did you get this chip?!"

"Er..." Lan hesitated. He didn't remember Higsby being quite this intense. "A strange vampire navi named Shademan..."

"Nevermind!" Higsby interrupted. "Lan, you have to get rid of that chip! Immediately! That... That's a DarkChip... It... It draws those who use it deep into Murkland... It possesses great power, true, but using it is tantamount to a deal with the devil! A deal that could cost your very soul!"

Lan gulped. Definitely more intense than he'd been expecting.

"You... you didn't... use it... did you? But... no... you got the data in the cyberworld... didn't you?"

Hesitantly, Lan nodded.

"Then... it's already infected Megaman..." Higsby moaned.

"Eh-heh..." Hub tried to lighten the mood unsuccessfully. "But, I feel fine!"

"You do now..." Higsby returned ominously. "But the DarkChip will tempt you to use it. Any time you're in need, it will call to you to use its power, but you must never do so! Promise me!"

"We won't let it get to us!" Lan said hastily, knowing full well that he couldn't make that promise in good faith. He'd do his best to never use it, but... He knew there were other ways to harm Shademan.exe, he just didn't know how to invoke them deliberately yet.

"No DarkPower will overcome me as long as I have Lan!" Hub added.

"I hope you're right," Higsby sighed. "So few can resist the pull once they've tasted its power..."

"S'more?"

"Thank you," Hephaestus accepted the treat from Apollo and was about to take a bite when something occurred to him. "...Please tell me you didn't build a campfire in my office just to roast marshmallows for the spooky plot revelation..."

"As you wish. The great Apollo will not tell you this."

Dr. Yuichiro Hikari sighed as he stood in one of the observation labs at NAXA. He understood that whatever was going on was dire and he probably was one of the most qualified people in the world to help deal with, well, anything. Still, he couldn't help but feel disappointed at not getting to spend time with his family, especially now that he'd heard from his wife that Lan was going to be in a NetBattle tournament... later today.

Dr. Hikari stifled a yawn. He'd done his best to sleep on the plane, but jet lag really was inevitable when you flew halfway around the world.

"65 million years ago..." he heard himself start saying, "the dinosaurs that ruled this planet were wiped out by an extinction event triggered by an asteroid impact." Turning that over in his head, he realized that the head NAXA researcher, a fairly attractive woman but not able to hold a candle to his wife in his humble opinion, had mentioned an asteroid headed towards their planet, calculated to impact directly in a few months time with cataclysmic results. 'Wow... I must be more tired than I thought if I'm responding on autopilot...'

"Indeed," the woman replied without missing a beat. "However, we are not like the dinosaurs. We have become masters of science!"

"Using technology," a voice rang from the back of the room, around a corner that prevented sight of the speaker, a voice Dr. Hikari thought sounded familiar but that he couldn't quite place in his tired state, "we should be able to prevent the asteroid's impact..."

"Exactly, Dr..." the head of NAXA hesitated a moment, sounding like she wasn't entirely happy that this person was present, "...Regal."

'Wait,' Dr. Hikari's mind jolted to full alertness from the sudden shot of adrenaline the name triggered, 'what?!'

"Dun-dun-DUN!"

"You've been watching that Order of the Stick branch again, haven't you?"

"What makes you say that, brother?"

"You're wearing a t-shirt featuring their Anchor." (5)

Lan had woken up extra early that day. Heck, he'd had to wake Hub up much to the latter's shock. But it had all been worth it to get a head start on the prelim tasks.

He'd found the Mettaur village in record time, going through the scavenger hunt motions for the benefit of any tournament officials who might be watching. He also just 'happened' to have a pair of goldbugs he'd found the previous afternoon while pursuing his bug collecting hobby (coincidentally begun that same afternoon, but they didn't need to know that). And the quiz from the final task-giver had been easy, as had the trio of virus battles she'd sent at him.

Which left him in a rather interesting position when compared with his memories.

"Welcome to the Den City NetBattle Tournament!" the official greeted him in the contestant's locker room within the DenDome. "You're the first to clear the prelims today, so please have a seat while we wait for the rest of the competitors to arrive."

Lan smiled to himself as he grabbed a folding chair and set himself up in a far corner of the room. "Heh... It'll be neat to see if this changes who we face first in the tournament, won't it?"

"Yeah, Lan," Hub agreed readily. "Maybe we'll face someone other than..."

Lan blinked as his navi/brother trailed off. "What is it, Hub?"

"Lan... I... Who was it we faced first again?"

Lan snorted in laughter. "Did your memory get a bug in it? It was..."

Lan blinked as instead of a single name coming to mind, no less than eight hit him at once. The friendly delinquent Tetsu and his HeelNavi, the ghostly Yuko and her NormalNavi Ponta, the elderly Tensuke and Topman. exe, the cheating duo of Terry Jomon and Sparkman. exe, and then there were more familiar names. The 'unlucky' Shuko and her worrywart navi Aquaman. exe, the supposedly reformed Mr. Match and his original navi Fireman. exe (the thought of which had Lan clenching his fists in anger), the staunch allies Higsby and Numberman. exe, and their oldest rivals Dex and Gutsman. exe.

"It was..." Lan clutched his head as scenarios ran through his mind at a feverish pace. He'd only faced three of them over the course of the tournament... But which three? And in what order? Would all of them even be competing? He only remembered six of them being in the tournament after all... And not which two had been absent...
"...Hub, I don't think these future memories of ours are as reliable as we thought..."

If anything, it was worse than the BattleChipGP... At least that had been pretty fuzzy throughout, but this... This was crystal clear memories going to war with each other over which one was right.

"Ah, the vaunted realm of prophecy. Always reliable, always accurate, save for those times when it is not."

Hephaestus blinked. "...I'm honestly surprised to hear you admit that."

"Brother, none know this truth more than the great Apollo," the god of prophecy nodded in what he probably thought was a wise manner. "How else would the great Apollo be so great at what he does?"

Lan stared in a bit of a stupor as the room filled up. He recalled a tournament of eight from before. There were currently fourteen and entry hadn't yet been closed.

The first to show up after him had been some shopkeeper he didn't recognize, but the navi Brightman. exe was familiar from the Zero Virus incident. Following him was Mr. Match with Fireman. exe,

"Don't bother calling your navi! He just went boom!"

"You... You're the panel repair man!"

"Hah! That was just a disguise! I work for the WWW, silly kid!"

"I can't believe I trusted you!"

and surprisingly Ms. Madd with Colorman. exe.

"You don't know the trouble I've... Arrghh! This time I'll break all the traffic signals for good! Heh, heh! And I'll get you good, too! That's right! I've been looking at your personal files... Ah, there's nothing sadder than losing the ones we love... And I think you're gonna be real sad!"

There were more familiar faces that came in, such as Dex, Higsby, and to his supreme shock Yai (all of whom he'd greeted somewhat mechanically as they came up to him). Plus a few more that he'd met this time around like Tory Froid with Iceman. exe and Ms. Mari's sister Yuri with Needleman. exe; while others were only familiar from his weird unreliable future memories, such as the grinning delinquent Tetsu (registering his HeelNavi as 'Bo' which rather surprised Lan and Hub) (6), the elderly Tensuke, a shifty-looking Terry, the clumsy Shuko who tripped in with a bang that shook the room, and the eerie girl Yuko who startled the official by appearing out of thin air right next to him.

'What in the world is going on?' he wondered to himself, only to be shaken from his stupor when Hub's insistent hissing got his attention.

"Lan...!"

"What is it, Hub?"

"Kai just walked in..." Hub prompted, getting Lan to look up at the young boy with the white sweatband and the yellow racing suit.

"And...?" Lan blinked.

"And Ms. Madd is here!" Hub hissed.

"So...?" Lan continued blinking, his mind catching up with the situation.

"Heheh! You better listen up, kiddo! I forgot to mention the virus I put in the bus gas program! It makes the gas go backwards and then... It's BOOM time! I should think the virus will activate any time now... You better stop that bus quick, huh? Good luck! Heheh!"

"So Kai was on the bus she hijacked! If he sees her..."

Right... Lan had faith in all of his friends, but there was faith and then there was tempting fate.

"Hey, Kai!" Lan got up and walked over to greet the boy properly, angling himself so Kai would have to face away from where Ms. Madd was standing to talk to him. "What's up? Hub and I haven't seen you since the BattleChipGP!"

"Master Lan!" the boy's face lit up.

"Master Megaman!" the similarly eager voice of Turboman. exe sounded from Kai's PET.

"Hey guys!" Hub greeted warmly. "How've things been?"

"Great!" the racing-themed duo enthused.

"And with that, I can now announce the pairings for the matches!" the voice of the registering official caught everyone's attention. "If I can direct everyone's attention to the board display, here are the pairings for the Den City NetBattle Tournament!"

Lan's eyes weren't on the brackets declaring the first round pairings between the sixteen competitors. No, his confused gaze was on the final entrant.

Mayl Sakurai.

His next-door neighbor since infancy, best friend for as long as he could remember, and potential future girlfriend. (7)

'But... she's supposed to be in the next tournament... right?'

"The kid has a point," Apollo mused as he looked over the baseline data.

"Watch and see," Hephaestus said mysteriously. "Let the games begin!"

The match-ups had been decided and as it turned out Lan and Mayl were in completely different blocks. Mayl's block had her facing off against Shuko and Aquaman. exe first, Yai versus Terry, the most-likely-a-ghost Yuko against Ms. Yuri, and Kai facing off against Mr. Match. Lan's block on the other hand had Higsby facing down his former WWW colleague Ms. Madd, Dex squaring off with Tory Froid,

Brightman. exe's operator (for some reason Lan kept missing the guy's name) facing Tensuke, leaving Lan himself to fight Tetsu. (8)

Upon finding out that Tetsu was his first opponent, Lan was determined to avoid those shakedown artists he was reasonably certain were coming, trading friendly banter with Tetsu almost absently as he made his way outside the dome so the officials could get things set up. If he managed to avoid it, he might even be able to warn Yai about Terry and his cheating scam.

Of course, right as he spotted the two shakedown artists headed in his general direction, he got distracted by the sight of Kai accusing Mr. Match of something down by the hotdog stand.

And then he was distracted from that by something running into him.

"Arrrggh! Ouch!" the weedy-looking guy that had collided with Lan moaned dramatically, clutching his arm in apparent pain. "My shoulder! I think it's broken! I can't even hold my fork!"

"Oh no! Little brother!" the larger guy yelled in loudly faked concern. "Your shoulder's been smashed to pieces! You'll never be able to use your right arm ever again!"

Lan mentally went over a rather long list of words he'd never dare say out loud for fear that his mom would wash his mouth out with actual soap.

"His right arm?" Apollo blinked. "The great Apollo sees him holding his left."

"These are hardly the brightest minds of humanity," Hephaestus reminded him as Tetsu decided the best way to break up the scene was by climbing to the roof just so he could jump off of it into the middle of the argument.

'Great, we manage to stop a fight in the real world and start one in the cyber-world,' Hub sighed to himself as he ran for Town Area 3 and the fight between the navis of Tetsu and those two idiots.

"How does he do it?!" he heard a black HeelNavi up ahead exclaim in shock. "He's beaten 80 of my 100 guys and he still won't stop!"

"Keep 'em coming!" Tetsu's HeelNavi, Bo, boasted. "I won't stop until I smash you to smithereens, no matter how many of your flunkies I gotta go through!"

"You shut up!"

"Hub!" Lan yelled suddenly over the PET's connection. "Jack out! There's a cyber-flood coming!"

Hub, along with every other navi in earshot (Bo and the HeelNavi gang included), turned to see a mass of cyber-water coming at them accompanied by what sounded like faint echoing sobs in the distance.

"Ohhhh... Surf!" Hub yelped as he hastily jacked out. (9)

Apollo blinked repeatedly as he watched the unfortunate gang navis (among others) be swept away by the torrent of water. Unharmed, but most certainly humiliated. "The great Apollo does not think that was what was supposed to happen..."

"No, but the way I had to integrate the divergent timelines means that even the plots Lan and Hub aren't directly involved in will still happen. Shuko's navi Aquaman heard her and her brothers talking about replacing their washing machine and, since they talked about it making 'whoosh' sounds, he thought they meant him and his particular manner of speaking. See there? The Mayl girl is handling it right now."

Tetsu and Bo were certainly tougher than the average navi, but for Lan and Hub not particularly challenging. However, he'd only been the second match of the first round, so there were still plenty to go before they could set up for the second round.

Lan found his way to a seat to watch his friends compete. Dex and Gutsman. exe made fairly short work of Tory and Iceman. exe (apparently on loan from his father) before joining him. Higsby and Numberman. exe similarly took out Ms. Madd before leaving.

Then the matches for Mayl's block were up. Yai and Glide. exe struggled to put up a good fight against Terry and Sparkman. exe, their normal arsenal of expensive and rare chips replaced by a common starter folder and Lan smacked himself for forgetting about that in the confusion of the stuff with Tetsu and the two goons. Mayl's match with Shuko was next and Lan found himself rather impressed with how Roll. exe and Aquaman. exe fought. But unfortunately for Shuko, Roll. exe proved the superior battler. Still, the girl Lan's jumbled memories painted as consistently depressed looked pretty happy with things as she skipped down the steps... only to trip and land with a boom that echoed across the dome.

Ms. Yuri and Needleman. exe (Lan was a little confused at the pairing, had that really been her navi originally?) put up a good fight, but the seemingly young girl Yuko and her navi Ponta (who was one of the generic yellow female FaceNavis (10) rather than the standard green NormalNavi that Lan and Hub recalled) emerged victorious. And then it was time for the last match of the round: Kai and Turboman. exe against Mr. Match and Fireman. exe.

Which was about when things went south. With Mr. Match declaring his intent to bomb the place, backing out when the hot dog vendor lady began cheering for him, and Match's underlings loudly declaring that they were going ahead with the plan anyway regardless of what Match himself thought.

"Kai," Lan yelled into his PET's phone app, "if those guys have turned on Mr. Match, then one of the detonators is probably in the battle machine! Don't worry about the others, we've got them!"

"Darn straight we do!" Dex yelled back as he, Mayl, Yai, and Tory joined Lan in rushing out to look for the bombs.

"Yeehaw!" Gutsman. exe added.

"Okay, Lan, where do we start looking?" Mayl got right to business.

Lan took a deep breath to steady himself and began directing his friends to where he recalled the bombs being hidden. He might not be completely certain they'd be there, but it was still a place to start.

"Ah, Kai, the great Apollo sees that you are a fine student of the mighty Lan!" the sun god beamed as the boy insisted on finishing the match before his opponent turned himself in to the authorities.

"He does seem to have learned the heart of the hero," Hephaestus allowed as the navi of flame and the navi of racing clashed in battle.

"Way to go, Kai and Turboman!" Lan and his friends cheered as they walked outside the DenDome during the interval between the first round and the second, meant to give the competitors a chance to rest before the next fight.

Kai blushed at the praise. Even Turboman. exe seemed embarrassingly flattered.

"Yeah, you guys aren't bad," Yai admitted before turning to Mayl and started dragging her off, "but still you need to watch out for Terry! That guy..."

"Well, Yai seems determined to save Mayl from her upcoming opponent," Hub mused.

"Yeah, but who's gonna save her from Yai?"

"Heh!" Dex chuckled. "Anyway, I gotta go check on Higsby! Something funny's up with him. See you guys later!"

Lan and Kai watched Dex tear off towards the metro before moving to head in that direction, only to find something in their path. Or, rather, in Kai's path.

"GAH!" Kai yelped as he registered the small form of Yuko in front of him.

"Hi there!" Yuko smiled prettily. "I'm so glad you're my opponent! I always wanted to fight a strong, handsome navi like Turboman!"

Kai blinked in surprise. Lan wasn't that far behind him.

"S-s-strong?" Turboman. exe sputtered. "H-h-h-handsome? M-me?"

Lan chuckled at the scenario as he began to recover and wandered away. He was sure Kai could take care of himself.

"Here I go, Kosuke!" an elderly voice cut into his thoughts, reminding him of his own opponent for the upcoming match as he looked over to see the elderly man he knew as Tensuke proudly showing off a high tech top to a young boy.

"Hey, Lan," Hub spoke up as his brother began to walk down to the two, "you think Topman's really as senile as those memories show?"

"Only one way to find out," Lan answered.

"It's spinning, it's spinning," Apollo narrated. "Kosuke's unimpressed. It's spinning, Kosuke's leaving, it's... sparking and hopping around like a mexican jumping bean... Clearly this is a job for the mighty Lan and Megaman! Those viruses are no match for the saviors of the world! Watch in awe, old man, as your problems disappear before their awesome migh–You ingrate! You wouldn't know talent if it walked up and kicked your aging carcass! What do you mean your navi could have handled it!? Your senile buggy piece of junk can't even remember what he's doing!"

"You know, I kinda feel sorry for Tensuke," Lan said as he stepped off the Metroline and headed towards the exit. "I mean, sure he's stubborn and not very friendly, but he made his own navi, possibly from scratch, just so he could have something to relate with his grandson about."

"You said it, Lan," Hub agreed. "Plus the fact that he not only got through the prelims with such a buggy navi, but beat Brightman too is really impressive. It'd be a shame if we didn't get to face Topman at his bes–"

"Hey, Lan!" a shout from Dex interrupted their thoughts as they stepped out of the station. The larger boy came running up waving a fistful of flyers. "You gotta help Higsby out! Here, take a flyer!"

"Um... Dex?" Lan stepped back from the other, having a pretty good idea what was going on from his weird jumbled future memories. "I already shop at Higsby's all the time. If you want to help him out, you gotta get new customers."

"Oh... right," Dex looked suitably embarrassed.

"Look, just hand some out around town, maybe a few on the net, and I'm sure the problem will be fine. After all, no one knows chips like Higsby!"

"Darn straight!" Dex and Gutsman yelled together.

"Yeehaw!" Gutsman added as Dex blinked and looked at something behind Lan.

"Hey, Kai, what's wrong?" the larger boy's question prompted Lan to turn around to see a pale and somewhat shell-shocked looking Kai.

Lan's biggest fan in the world slowly turned to look at them and considered the question for a moment before shaking his head. "You would never believe me..."

With that, Kai continued past the two and into the Metroline.

"Wow, wonder what that's about?" Dex blinked. "But it can wait! I gotta help Higsby so I can have my match!"

Lan chuckled as Dex tore off down the street, looking for hapless pedestrians to hand out flyers to. A moment later his PET beeped.

"Hey, Lan, you've got mail!" Hub sounded a bit surprised. "It's from Mayl, she says 'Ooooo! You would not believe what that jerk Terry did! He tried to get me with some free PET maintenance scam and when I told him I didn't need or want it, he just grabbed my PET and locked my folder out! And then he took off running before I could twist his ear and make him unlock it again! Forget the NetBattle, I've got half a mind to punch him so hard he'll be picking his teeth off the ground in Netopia! Sorry about that... I just needed to vent a bit... I don't know what I'm going to do about my match though...' Jeez, sounds like Terry better watch his back..."

"Yeah," Lan said as he looked over at the park area and the gathering of elderly NetBattlers he needed to speak with. He could take a moment to throw Mayl a hint. "Send a reply: 'If you want, I'd be happy to hold him down for you and I'm sure I could talk Dex into helping. But seriously, try Jomon over in ElecTown. I hear there's an old guy who hangs out there all the time that knows a lot about these things.' End message and send."

"Done, Lan!"

"Good," Lan nodded as he turned back to the group of elderly NetBattlers and began heading in their direction. "Now let's see about helping Tensuke fix Topman."

"Please let the great Apollo know when it's safe to look again."

Hephaestus blinked at the odd request and turned to see that Apollo had forcefully shut his eyes and covered his face with his hands. He then looked back at the display where Lan was rather amiably talking with the elderly NetBattler's club, convincing them to allow him to take a test to gain their assistance.

"What in Yggdrasil are you expecting to happen?" Hephaestus asked in confusion.

"The pinching , man! Lan's just a adorable kid facing down little old ladies! There's no way he's getting out of there with his cheeks intact!" (11)

Hub breathed a sigh of relief as he headed to the area where the elderly NetBattler's club's chief's (12) navi was waiting. The riddles he'd been presented with during this little game of hide and seek had been brain twisters for sure, made all the more difficult since his memories and Lan's didn't seem to contain the correct answers.

"The more you take, the more you leave behind. What are they?" (13a)

"Lighter than what I'm made of, more of me is hidden than is seen. What am I?" (13b)

"Lovely and round, I shine with pale light, grown in the darkness, a lady's delight. What am I?" (13c)

"What is put on a table, cut, and never eaten?" (13d)

"What goes around the house, and in the house, but never touches the house?" (13e)

"Brothers and sisters, I have none. But that man's father is my father's son. Who is it?" (13f)

"I build up castles. I tear down mountains. I make some men blind. I help others to see. What am I?" (13g)

"What goes up the chimney down, but can't go down the chimney up? (13h)

"I go around in circles, but always straight ahead. Never complain no matter where I am led. What am I?" (13i)

"I am only useful when I am full. Yet I am always full of holes. What am I?" (13j)

Fortunately, the older navis seemed perfectly willing to give him the secrets they held in exchange for a good shoulder rub when he answered wrong. He'd gotten their navi-making secrets and membership, allowing him into the club's homepage where the chief's navi was waiting.

'And... is that him?' Hub blinked as he spotted yet another older navi. Except... this one didn't quite mesh with his memories. Most of the navi's form was pretty close to the NormalNavi he'd clearly been modified from, and the deviations could easily be accounted for by personal style and operator preferences. But on his back...

On his back was a giant diamond-shaped sail. Or rather... a kite.

"So..." the elder navi began when he caught sight of Hub, "I hear you've come on behalf of Tensuke. I want you to know I respect that about you, but I'm afraid I can't help you." The navi's arm transformed into a cannon before he spoke again. "No offense, but I'm going to have to ask you to leave now."

Hub yelped as he wasn't even given the chance to comply before the navi fired and called Lan for some battle chips, getting a trio of AirShots in short order. Which was good, since he didn't want to hurt this navi (despite the sentiment not appearing to be mutual). Unfortunately, when he fired them, the wind power was absorbed by the kite-shaped sail on the navi's back, lifting him into the air.

"Imbecile! I am Kiteman!" the elder navi yelled as one arm formed into a cybersword and he angled for a steep and fast dive at Hub. "Wind attacks only make me stronger!"

Hub dove under the dive as Lan sent him a Ball chip which he twisted and threw straight into the navi's back.

"ARGH!" Kiteman. exe yelled as he tumbled hard. When he began to get to his feet a moment later, he was clutching his back.

"Look, isn't this going a little far?" Hub tried to defuse further hostilities.

"Maybe," Kiteman. exe grunted, "but my NetOp, the Chief, won't help Tensuke. I don't expect you to understand, but those two have been at odds longer than I've existed. Always fighting about work or something. Yeah, maybe they got along at some point, but I've certainly never seen it."

"Well, maybe," Hub allowed, "but still..."

Kiteman. exe sighed and stretched, cracking his digital back loudly. "Okay, I can tell by your expression that even if Tensuke doesn't mean business you sure do. Hold on a moment."

Hub watched in something between confusion and amazement as Kiteman. exe put a call in to Topman. exe and insisted he get Tensuke down to the ElecTown square immediately in the way only an irascible old man could.

Hephaestus waited for Apollo to make some random comment or action as Tensuke and the Chief, the old top-maker and the old kite-maker, argued with each other in front of a bewildered Lan, such as asking if the two were brothers or merely cantankerous old friends. And waited. And waited.

"Aren't you going to say anything?" he finally asked.

"Hmm?" Apollo jolted out of whatever thought he was lost in as the Chief threw the 'How to Make Navis' guide at Tensuke. "Oh, I was just thinking about the last time I spoke with Artemis. I wonder how she's doing?"

"Still says she'll cut them off if she sees you any time in the next century after whatever you did in front of her friends."

"Ah, perfectly fine then. That's good to hear."

Hephaestus rolled his eyes. Apollo and Artemis had, by mortal standards, the most normal sibling relationship in the Olympian pantheon (and perhaps the whole of the divine realm). Despite that, they still managed to have one of the strangest as well.

The match order had been flipped for the second round, meaning that Lan went last.

Kai's match with Yuko had ended in stunned silence as the defeated girl turned into bright golden light and vanished, causing a deluge of rumors to sweep the stadium (Lan was personally fond of the one that she'd secretly been an alien sent to test Earth's defenders for an invasion).

After that, the way Mayl and Roll. exe with their restored chip folder pretty much curbstomped Terry and Sparkman. exe had been rather anticlimactic. Though there was more buzz when the old man from Jomon, the owner of the store and Terry's grandfather, rather publicly disowned the boy for his cheating.

Dex's battle against Higsby had come close, and Lan's enjoyment of the match had been somewhat ruined by a late-arriving Chisao cheering at the top of his lungs right in Lan's ear, but Dex and Gutsman. exe had emerged triumphant in the end.

Which left Lan where he was facing off against Tensuke.

"Get ready, you whippersnapper!" Tensuke glared at Lan (14). "My navi's not just fixed, he's better than ever!"

"I hope so!" Lan returned as the two jacked their navis in.

"So you're the young punk I'm facing," Topman. exe fingered his pipe and tapped his cane. "You don't look like much."

"I'm more than meets the eye, old navi!" Hub grinned as Lan opened by sending him a couple of HeatShots.

"You got spunk, I'll give you that," Topman. exe snorted in derision as he simply leaned out of the way of the blasts and began revving a pair of tops that began weaving erratically towards Hub along the ground.

"I've got more than–whoa!" Hub yelped as he sidestepped the tops only to notice that Topman. exe himself had turned into a giant top and launched himself into the air right before he would have landed on Hub. Just in time to dive out of the way, but forcing him to abort the bomb attack he'd been readying. "Okay, you're pretty good..."

"Back at ya, whippersnapper," Topman. exe smirked.

Hub felt his arm form into a cybersword as a new chip came in and darted forward, only to watch as Topman. exe's cane shifted into one as well and the two blades locked together.

"Not bad," Topman. exe's baggy eyes gleamed with intensity as he stared into Hub's. "But not good enough."

Hub was caught off guard as the battletop his opponent had been revving while they locked blades slammed into him, knocking him back and circling around to hit him again.

"Ow..." Hub winced as he got to his feet and felt the chip data Lan sent begin to shift. "Okay, maybe it's time to take this up a level! Program Advance! Giga Cannon 1!"

Topman. exe sidestepped the powerful blast and sent more tops Hub's way, joining the advancing weapons in his own top form. Hub dodged as best he could and waited for his opponent to revert to normal so he could make his move.

"Program Advance!"

"You just don't learn," Topman. exe grunted as he sidestepped the oncoming shot again, "d–"

"LifeSword!"

"Whoops! Wrong counter maneuver, old man!" Apollo jeered.

"Perhaps, but he's proven himself," Hephaestus noted as he watched the man's grandson observe the battle's finish with an awed expression on his face.

"The great Apollo is rather surprised you care what happens to what is ultimately a mortal of little consequence."

"My loopers care," Hephaestus smiled, "and that is enough for me. Besides, the man is a fellow craftsman."

"The great Apollo did not express disapproval."

"Hey there, Lan," Dex walked up, grinning. "Looks like we're facing each other in the semi-finals!"

"Yeah, looks like!" Lan agreed, still thinking that the extra round over what he recalled was kind of weird. Especially with the way Mayl was in the tournament.

"Sorry it has to be this way," Dex continued cockily, "but Gutsman and I won't be losing this time! There's no way!"

Lan was about to retort when another voice cut in.

"Big brudder!" the voice of Dex's younger brother yelled as he ran up.

"Hey, Chisao! You enjoying the tournament?" Lan greeted with a slightly forced grin. Dex's younger brother was a cute kid, but wow could he be annoying at times.

Chisao studiously ignored him.

"Chisao!" Dex scolded. "It's rude not to say hi to people!"

"Why should I do that?" Chisao blinked with oblivious innocence. "He is big brudder's enemy! I don't talk to da enemy!"

"Yep, that's Chisao for you, always so feisty!" Hub chuckled as Lan groaned.

"Don't get all chummy wid me!" Chisao pointed at Lan's PET in a pose he'd probably seen on TV. "Big brudder's gonna beat your pants off! Big brudder's the best NetBattler there is!"

"Chisao!" Dex blushed in embarrassment. "Stop being so rude!"

Chisao paused and turned a look of hurt shock at Dex before sniffing. "Big brudder's mad at me..." Chisao sniffed a few more times, his eyes tearing up before he turned and ran from the room bawling.

"Chisao!" Dex took off after his brother in alarm. "Sorry about this, Lan!" he called back as he left the room.

"Wow..." Hub blinked. "That... that could have gone better..."

"Yeah," Lan sighed. "I'd hoped that trying to be nicer to him would head this off, but it seems not..."

Lan stood there for a few minutes, listening to Mayl and Kai trade friendly pre-fight banter before going their separate ways.

"You..." Hub spoke up after the two had left to spend the downtime before their match relaxing. "You don't really think Chisao would fake his own kidnapping, do you?"

"I hope not, but..." Lan hesitated.

"But...?"

"But it might be better than the alternative of him really being kidnapped."

"That... that wouldn't happen, ri–" Hub began, only to be interrupted as Dex came barreling back into the room.

"LAN!" Dex looked frantic with worry. "Have you seen Chisao come back this way?!" When Lan shook his head no, Dex looked horrified. "Oh no... I can't believe this! I lost sight of him for just a moment and now I can't find him! What if something happened! What if he ran off and got lost?!" Dex took a sharp breath as something else occurred to him. "What if he's been kidnapped ?! Lan, you have to help me find him!"

Lan was in the middle of trying to calm Dex down when his PET beeped with incoming mail. He really hoped it wasn't what he thought it was, but those hopes were dashed when Hub began reading it.

"I have Chisao. If you want him back, accept my challenge."

"He was kidnapped?!" Dex wailed. "This is terrible! CHISSAAOOO!"

"Hold on, Dex, let Hub read the rest!"

"I've prepared several clues that lead to my location. Use them to find me. If you fail..." Hub paused and began that sentence again. "If you fail... Chisao forfeits his life."

"WHAT?!" Dex's attitude turned to furious in an instant. "Give me those clues! I'm gonna find this creep and teach him a lesson he'll never forget!"

"Ack!" Lan jumped at his friend's intensity. "Get ahold of yourself, Dex! You can't go off half-cocked like this!"

Dex huffed for several moments, but the furious red faded a bit from his face. "Okay, I'm fine, finish reading the message..."

"Okay," Hub agreed before continuing. "There is one condition: Only Lan can accept this challenge. If anyone else interferes, the hostage dies."

"What?" Dex blinked in confusion. "Why Lan? Chisao's my brother!"

"Don't worry, Dex," Lan assured him. "Whatever this person's game is, I promise I'll get him back."

Apollo and Hephaestus watched as Chisao went around leaving the clues to his self-orchestrated kidnapping, just barely staying one step ahead of Lan and Hub.

"The great Apollo wonders why the mighty Lan and Megaman are playing along with this..."

"Well, they said it themselves. They can't be completely certain that Chisao is the mastermind given their current knowledge. And besides, if they didn't play along, then who knows what could happen to the boy while he is on his own. Perhaps his fake kidnapping could indeed become real. What does your foresight tell you?"

"The great Apollo's foresight tells him that the mighty Lan and Megaman will solve the issue long before that becomes a credible possibility."

Dex worried as he watched Roll. exe and Turboman. exe face off against each other. Lan still wasn't back with Chisao and even though they'd convinced the tournament coordinators to hold Dex and Lan's match second to buy time, he was starting to wonder if Lan would make it back for their match.

'Dang it...' he swore to himself. 'It's like... It's like someone's trying to fix the match or something! What a rotten stinkin' thing to do! If they make Lan miss our semi-final match, then... Then I'll withdraw! This is an honor match between men! Winning by forfeit isn't winning at all!'

"What is the matter, bother?" Apollo watched as Hephaestus frowned while looking at the events. The match between the lovely Mayl and Lan's mighty apprentice Kai had ended with the former emerging victorious. And now the mighty Dex was doing his best to stall so he could have his honor bout with his mighty rival.

"I missed it before, but the scenario doesn't seem to be playing out the way I tried to prompt it to. With the divergent timelines having different tournaments, I had to resolve it so that the events included two tournaments each happening at once utilizing the baseline players and a few others to fill empty slots. What should be happening right now is two final matches to decide two champions, not two semi-final matches to decide two finalists..."

"The mighty Apollo thinks you should stop worrying, brother," the sun god shrugged. "In the mighty Apollo's humble experience these things have a strange way of sorting themselves out."

"The life of my friend's brother is at stake! The match doesn't matter next to that!"

"Chisao! Are you hurt? Come on, Dex is worried sick about you!"

Chisao fidgeted guiltily as he followed Lan back into DenDome. He'd thought to help his big brother beat his enemy, but all he'd done was make both of them scared and worried. As they approached the doors to the competition arena, he could hear the vicious roars of the disapproving crowd.

"If you disqualify Lan, I'm gonna withdraw too!"

Chisao's heart nearly broke when he heard those words. Out of everything in the world he hated, hurting his brother was the one he hated most. He'd thought that helping him win would make his running off better, but it seemed that he'd only gotten his big brother in even more trouble.

"Really?" another voice asked in surprise as Lan grabbed him and dashed for the doors. "Then I guess I have no–"

"WAIT!" Lan yelled as he burst through the doors with Chisao.

"And all is right with the world," Hephaestus smiled.

"Ah... the great Apollo thinks you should look at this before you claim that, brother," the sun god interrupted.

Hephaestus looked over at the recent mortal activity log Apollo was gesturing towards, and the meeting between an already eliminated contestant and the loser of the previous match.

In particular the single utterance of a second-person pronoun with the utmost loathing. (15)

"Heh..." Gutsman. exe chuckled as he stared at Hub and cracked his digital knuckles. "Don't think that just because you rescued Chisao that Dex and I'll go easy on ya! I like that ya helped out and all, but this is a battle between men! It's no place to hold back!"

"Wouldn't have it any other way, big guy!" Hub grinned back as Lan sent him a couple of Cannons to start the battle off.

"Bad luck for you Lan!" Dex yelled out in the real world. "Check out what we pulled on the first chip draw! Rockcube! Rockcube! GodStone!"

"Program Advance!" Gutsman. exe yelled as he raised his fists and formed a gigantic hammer that he slammed into the ground. "MOMQUAKE!"

"Oh... nuts!" Hub could hear Lan's eyes widen in that exclamation.

"Whoa!" Hub yelped as the ground shook ferociously and boulders began dropping down all over the place. It was all he could do to dodge out of the way.

"And that's not all!" Dex's grin was audible. "Gutsman! Show him the new GutBuster!"

"Yeehaw!" Gutsman. exe cheered as his arm formed into a cannon that he began firing rapidly at Hub as he continued to try and dodge the boulders.

Hub was respectably fast, but nowhere near fast enough to dodge everything that came his way. Still, as the program advance died down, he retaliated with the cannons, getting a few good hits in himself.

"Wow, this just isn't your day, Lan," Dex continued. "Take this! Triple GutsImpact!"

"Oh, yeah?" Lan retorted. "Try a triple M-Cannon!"

"Program Advance!" both navis yelled together.

"Zeta Cannon 3!"

"Zeta Impact!"

The dueling advances tore up everything in the arena, but left the two navis mostly unscathed.

"Heh... not bad!" Gutsman. exe cheered and formed his Guts Hammer again. "But not good enough!"

This time the impact cracked what few digital tiles had survived the previous exchange and outright shattered the damaged ones. Then Gutsman. exe raised his fist, ignoring the repeated hits from his opponent's Mega Buster, and sent a flying punch that Hub tried to duck but still got clipped by.

"Not bad yourself!" Hub grinned back. "You've certainly gotten a lot better!"

"You bet!" the larger navi laughed as he reared back for another punch. "And this time I'm gonna win !"

"Not so fast!" Hub's arm turned into a LongSword and slashed, the damage from the hit throwing Gutsman. exe out of his attack.

"Heh..." the muscular navi grunted in respect as he straightened up. "Good hit... You got guts... Same as ever."

"Back at ya," Hub grinned back.

"What say we finish this like men? The best we got, all or nothing?"

"Sounds like a good way to finish this off!" Hub agreed, feeling an odd resonation in the moment, but too focused on the fight to pay it much mind.

"Well then, let's do it right!" Dex yelled. "GutPunch! IcePunch! Dash!"

"Spreader times three!" Lan replied.

"Program Advance!" Gutsman. exe yelled as he reared back his fist. "PUNCH!"

Hub slid under the massive rapid-fire fists and aimed his buster at Gutsman. exe. "Hyper Burst!"

"Gutsman... DELETED!"

The cheers of the crowd drowned out anything that might have followed.

"Huh..." Hephaestus blinked as he tracked the navis of the two who had just encountered each other. "It looks like they're headed for the tournament's battle computer."

"I'm sorry!" Chisao wailed suddenly as Dex congratulated Lan on his win, getting the attention of Lan and his older brother. "I wasn't really kidnapped! It was all my idea to make Lan late so big brudder wouldn't lose!"

"You idiot!" Dex barely refrained from whacking Chisao on the head. "Do you have any idea how worried we were?! Lan! I take full responsibility for my brother's actions!"

"I'm sorry!" Chisao added, mirroring the deep bow Dex had performed.

"It's okay..." Lan decided not to say that he'd suspected the thing was Chisao's idea from the get-go. "The important thing is that you're..." Lan trailed off as the battle computer next to him activated suddenly, projecting an arena into the air like it did for the matches. "...safe?"

"I got you now, you demented clown wannabe!"

"W-w-wait! C-c-c-can't we t-talk this out?"

"What in..." the tournament referee blinked in confusion as a pair of navis resolved on the display. The forms of Colorman. exe and Turboman. exe were clear to the entire stadium.

"Talk it out?!" Turboman. exe stated in a dangerously calm voice. "Your playing with the traffic system nearly killed a bus full of people, my operator included! All for your sick laughs!"

"Hey now!" the referee tried to intervene. "Get out of there! The Mr. Programs need time to repair the datascape after the matches!"

"L-l-look..." Colorman. exe ignored the man, "that's i-in the past, right? W-we can all b-be friends and COLOR BALL!"

The clown-like navi suddenly launched the massive ball his torso sat atop at the car-themed navi who simply backhanded the thing away from him in fury, heedless of the damage he must have taken doing so, before launching a pair of burning wheels. "TURBO WHEEL!"

The wheels slammed into the surprisingly short (without his ball) Colorman. exe and knocked him to the ground.

"You want to play with traffic?!" Turboman. exe roared as his body changed into a racecar form and his tires squealed as they revved to high speeds on the digital landscape. "THEN LET ME SHOW YOU WHAT IT'S LIKE TO PLAY IN TRAFFIC!"

"No, stop!" the referee yelled frantically.

Colorman. exe got a panicked look on his face as he summoned a pair of totems, one red, one blue. "FireTower! AquaTower!"

"BURN RUBBER!"

"Well... that's one way to make sure there's no final match..." Apollo mused as he watched the two combatants basically destroy the battle computer.

Hephaestus just rubbed his temples. Between Yggdrasil and mortals, some intended scenarios worked themselves out in weird ways...

"You know..." Lan mused as he and Mayl walked to their homes late that evening, "I didn't know you could do that to a battlecomp..."

"Actually, from what I read it's not all that hard," Mayl smiled as Lan carried the trophy which had been presented to them both in a rather hastily arranged ceremony for the tournament organizers to save face in light of not being able to hold a final match. On account of their battlecomp's datascape being so badly damaged that the thing was little more than a giant hunk of metal. "There's something in the battle program that prevents damage from the fight from affecting the datascape too badly, but when it's in standby mode..."

"Ah, gotcha," Lan nodded.

"Well, this is me," Mayl said as they got to her house, pausing in the walkway.

"Did you want to have the trophy first?" Lan asked, wondering what the hold-up was.

"Oh!" Mayl started. "Um... No, that's fine. I mean... You know that new theme park is supposed to open next week, right?"

"Yeah..." Lan blinked, a little too worn out from the events of the long day to examine those strange memories of his to figure out why that sounded important. "Why?"

"Um... well..." Mayl hesitated. "Nevermind... Good night, Lan..."

Lan continued blinking for a minute after Mayl had retreated into her house before shrugging and heading to his own next door.

"NOO! Lan you mighty imbecile! You follow a girl when she does thammrrpphh?!" Apollo began to yank mightily on the object that had been thrust into his mouth before leveling a glare at Hephaestus when he finally extracted it.

"Okay," the forge god grinned unapologetically, "I probably could have just told you to put a sock in it, but I thought this would get the point across better."

Dex scowled as he watched Gutsman. exe be accosted by a pair of black HeelNavis on the net the day after the tournament.

"Do you have any idea how much your losing cost us?" the first one asked. "And after we went through the trouble of fixing the match for you! Do you know how hard it was for our operators to talk that kid into kidnapping himself so your opponent wouldn't make it in time?!"

"Yeah!" the other one scoffed, apparently not intimidated by the fact that his opponent was over three times his size. "You owe us, buddy!"

"Yeah, you either pay up or face the consequences!" the first added again. "If you don't, we might have to take your operator's kid brother for real!"

"Gutsman..." Dex growled out in barely suppressed fury.

"No worries, Dex," Gutsman. exe assured his operator as he stared down the two. "I got this covered."

"Hah! You bulky navis are all alike! All brawn and no brains! Well, try this! IronBody!" the first HeelNavi stepped forward as his body turned to metal. "It doesn't matter how powerful you are! My defense is so strong now you'll barely put a dent in me as I pummel you into oblivio–"

The second HeelNavi watched in horror as Gutsman. exe moved , reaching out with one of his giant hands, grabbing the metal form of his partner, and squeezing so hard that the navi's metal form sprouted a spider's web worth of cracks. All in an instant.

"W-w-wha...? H-h-h-how...?"

"What's yer rank?" Gutsman. exe asked as he continued squeezing the life out of the other HeelNavi through his IronBody defense.

"M-m-m-m-my r-r-rank...?" the HeelNavi stuttered in confusion.

Gutsman. exe responded by holding up a trio of battered and beaten emblems bearing, in order, the numbers 4, 5, and 6.

"Oh... ohshitohshitohshitohshitohshitohshitohshitohshit..."

"You wanna come up to me and make threats, you better have one a' these. Otherwise yer only gonna get scraped off the bottom a' my foot..." (16)

"Ouch. The great Apollo does not think these imbeciles properly understood who they were facing."

Dr. Regal blinked as he studied the reaction of the asteroid to his latest scans. That kind of reaction was only possible if...

"Heh heh heh..." he chuckled slowly as he turned away from his station.

"Dr. Regal?" one of the other scientists asked curiously as he moved towards the door. "Going out?"

"Something just came to mind," he answered vaguely, ignoring the other scientist's confused blinking. "Don't mind me, I'll be right back..."

With that, he strolled for the door at as sedate a pace as he could manage to hide his interest. After all, it wouldn't do to draw more suspicion from his 'colleagues' than they would already possess.

'Heh heh heh... If this is what I think it is... I could accomplish my goals far sooner than I ever expected!'

"I'm not evil!" Apollo blurted out in a rather deliberately poor imitation of Dr. Regal's voice. "I intend to use the asteroid to subjugate all the world's nations under my iron-fisted rule while laughing sinisterly at high volume, but I'm totally not evil!" (17)

"To be called here to help in our world's defense is a great honor. As we share the same planet, now let us protect it together."

"I agree, Dr. Hikari. If we focus enough energy into a laser beam, we can shift the asteroid's course to miss us. It is perhaps the best that our technology has to offer. What do you all think? I vote for Dr. Hikari's plan."

Yuichiro Hikari watched the calm monocled figure of Dr. Regal step leave the building out of the corner of his eye. The man might come across as amiable and even friendly, but the fact remained that he was the head of the mysterious military state known to the rest of the world only as 'Nation Z', no other confirmed information available and a lot of very disturbing rumors. His science was sound, but his motives...

"Have you found anything yet?" he whispered to his PET when the other man wasn't looking.

"No, Dr. Hikari," the voice of his navi replied. "I have not. The security of 'Nation Z' is tighter than I have ever encountered before, and riddled with powerful viruses the likes of which few could even survive. It will take me time to find out the information you desire."

"Hopefully that is time we have."

"Spoiler alert! That is totally–"

"I'll use the sock again. I really will."

"The great Apollo is shutting up now." (18)

Lan had remembered rather quickly upon waking up the next morning why Mayl mentioning the new amusement park had seemed important. He'd then promptly spent the next week fretting over the thing. Should he act as clueless as he remembered? Or should he take a chance and actually ask Mayl this time around like he should have the first time?

Then there was that niggling sensation he'd been getting since he got to her house that he'd forgotten something...

But anyway, Mayl and Roll. exe had prompted Lan and Hub to go to where the announcement of the park was being made and when the orange and grey working navi made the offer of free tickets, they hadn't even needed the two girls' not-so-subtle prompting to take the challenge. The viruses hadn't been that hard for him either, though they were clearly a level above what the average navi was supposed to be able to handle if the nervous look in the park navi's eyes was any indication.

"You know..." Lan mused as Hub and Roll. exe jacked out with the FreePasses, "since Hub and I were the ones who did all the work getting these, I think it's only fair that we get to take you to the park when it opens..."

Lan did his best to hide his worry at the shocked look on Mayl's face. Had he been too forward? Had he somehow managed to make her not want to go with him anymore?

"W-well... um..." Mayl stuttered, her face blushing pink. "I-I think that would be–"

"BOWWOWWOWWOW! BOWWOWWOWWOW! BOWWOWWOWWOW!"

Lan and Mayl jumped about half a foot each at the sudden loud barking sound coming from next door, Lan also turning pale as he recognized the sound.

"That's our house alarm! MOM!" Lan yelled as he raced out the front door of Mayl's house as fast as he could go, tearing across the lawn between the two and nearly knocking his own front door off its hinges as he tried to make it in time to stop the intruder he'd completely forgotten about until right then. Tearing through the living room and up the stairs, he came to a screeching halt at a most unexpected sight.

His mom, perfectly fine, standing over an unconscious seedy-looking guy, and holding a frying pan. (19)

'Oh... right,' Lan breathed a sigh of relief. 'We told mom that we'd heard a rumor about someone breaking into homes and attacking the residents over breakfast this morning.'

"The winner and still undefeated champion:" Apollo announced with his hands covering his mouth for a distortion effect. "The lovely Haruka Hikari and her amazing frying pan!"

Lan blinked in surprise as he arrived at the Castillo theme park. He and Mayl had agreed to meet at the entrance this morning after the burglar was picked up by the officials, one of them apparently recognizing the guy as a suspected member of Nebula.

At least he thought they'd agreed to meet at the park entrance. His mom had heard that he'd asked Mayl out on a date and promptly gone cheerfully ballistic, making it a little hard to be sure of what Mayl had been saying.

Then again, he'd somehow managed to wake up early for the occasion, and–

"Lan!" Mayl yelled as she ran up to where he was standing and put her hands on her hips. "Wow, Lan. Didn't you hear me calling back in the Metro? I swear I was in the car behind yours on the way over!"

"Uh... sorry..." Lan rubbed his head sheepishly. "I was kind of focused on getting to the meeting place we set..."

"Hmmm... So you didn't hear me because you were focused on coming to meet me? I guess I can forgive that."

"Wow, how generous..." Lan rolled his eyes. "Anyway, why don't we go on in?"

"Okay!" Mayl smiled as the two went and scanned their FreePasses.

As they walked casually into the park, Lan wracked his brain for a topic to break the ice, and blinked as something occurred to him. "Hey, Mayl, did you ever follow up on that City NetBattler license? I know you got a ZLicense the same time I did, but I never saw you at any of the others."

"Actually, yeah," Mayl blinked a bit. "Well, kinda... After the whole Gospel thing, Dex learned that you'd gotten an ALicense and insisted on getting one himself. Yai figured we should humor him for the BLicense exam at least, but after that she and I kind of lost interest..."

"A shame," Lan mused. "I bet you and Roll could have gotten an SLicense easy."

"W-what?" Mayl's blush was audible. "I-I mean I was thinking about taking the ALicense exam coming up in a few days, but an SLicense? Me and Roll? I... wait... you took the SLicense exam, didn't you? And you didn't tell us?!"

"Er..." Lan rubbed his head sheepishly and pulled up his City NetBattler credentials on his PET and showed it to Mayl. "We managed to earn a triple SLicense, actually." 'And Hub is now the king of the Undernet after WWW's last scheme, but I don't think we'll tell you that just yet...' Lan added mentally as he watched Mayl's jaw drop in astonishment. Then he spotted the growing crowd of early arrivals gathered around a park official and sighed as he realized that even if the flunky that had broken into his house had been captured, this part of Nebula's plan was still happening. "And it looks like we might need them. Come on, I think the park may be having some net troubles we can help with."

Hephaestus blinked as the odds of Loop success jumped by almost ten percent at Lan's encouragement. They'd been fluctuating up and down, with an overall drop of about five percent from the original chances, but not more than a percent or two at a time.

"Aw, yeah! The great Apollo congratulates you, mighty Lan, on your excellent taste in battle babe companions! Now, all you need to do is get her into a nice form-fitting battle uniform, something with a bare midriff, and–"

"You do realize that she is a pre-teen mortal, right?"

"Well, yeah," Apollo blinked in confusion, "but so is the mighty Lan. The great Apollo does not see the problem, for the appreciation of hotness can never begin soon enough!"

"...And you wonder why Artemis is always mad at you."

"Man, I'd hate if Hub and I ever had to fight You and Roll."

"And just what do you mean by that? First you say we're good enough to try for an SLicense, but then you've got a triple SLicense! Do you think we're good enough or not?"

"Ack! No! I mean yes! I mean... Honestly, I think you'd kick our butts..."

"Hmph! I'm not sure we believe you... We might have to test that theory soon... Oh look! Ice cream! Get me some, Lan? Please?"

Lan shook his head. After that little hiccup following the reactivation of the park systems (and some additional FreePasses for later visits as thanks from the park staff), the date had been going swimmingly. Mayl had dragged him all over the park to look at shops and go on pretty much every ride in sight. There'd been enough twists and turns on the roller coasters that Lan was sure he'd left his stomach behind a few times and there'd been a few water rides that had left the both of them soaked and laughing.

And now they were headed for the Vampire Manor, the park's haunted fun house attraction. As they approached, Lan couldn't help but think of Shademan. exe and what he'd probably be pulling in short order.

"Hey, Mayl? Can I talk to you for a second?"

"What in the world are you doing?" Hephaestus asked as he spied Apollo typing away on his portable terminal.

"Oh, just a fun little surprise," the sun god smiled, causing the forge god's eye to twitch.

"Why did Mayl want to do this if she's too scared to come with me?" Lan sighed as he walked through the haunted vampire manor. The decorations were pretty cheesy overall, but the lighting was dim enough to up the spook factor considerably.

"EEEeeeeeekkk! Wwaaaaaaa!" Mayl's voice screamed as she came running pursued by either a cheap automaton of someone in costume, causing Lan to blink as the two raced past him. "Wwooooo! Woooo!"

"Was..." Lan blinked some more. "Was she laughing?"

If not, it was probably the happiest look of terror he'd ever seen on someone.

Shrugging and going after Mayl at a slower pace, Lan took a moment to look at a dynamic statue of Django the Solar Boy, probably one of his favorite shows whatever the timeline. As he looked, something happened that caused him to blink in shock.

"Did... did he just wink at me?"

"Sneak previews of coming attractions!" Apollo grinned widely as the statue proceeded to glance downwards, prompting Lan to find the GunDelSol1 battlechip.

"Damnit Apollo! Don't play around with the scenery like that!"

"You know that guy from yesterday? The one who broke into my house? It turns out he was after that thing Shademan dropped, said it was a DarkChip, and I was just thinking that his group might send someone else after it. So, if that happens and you're there, I want you to do me a favor..."

Those words went through Mayl's mind as she put herself between the automaton of Princess Halberd and a group of children. The automatons, or ToyRobos, of various characters represented at the theme park had started going berserk right as she'd left the vampire manor and she'd sprung into action, despite not really having any clue what to do about it, and...

'Wait... is that a jack-in port on the ToyRobo?' Mayl blinked as she spotted the familiar piece of technology. It wasn't hidden at all either, meaning it was probably meant for park visitors to use. "Alright Roll! Lan thinks we're SLicense material, then it's time to start acting like it! Jack in! Roll, execute!"

"...Does Artemis know you like to sing girl power ballads?"

"SiskeepstryingtogetthegreatApollotostopactually," the sun god rushed out during a gap in the lyrics. (20)

"You mean to tell us that you didn't read any of the story plaques in the park?" Mayl giggled as Roll. exe and Hub jacked out of the TinMan.

"I was kind of focused on spending time with you..." Lan blushed defensively. 'I cannot believe I forgot how the stories went! Shows me for getting overconfident and thinking I didn't have to read them again...'

"Aww..." Mayl teased, "that's sweet. We'll have to send Roll and Megaman in later so they can enjoy the rides. Kind of neat how they put in attractions for navis too. But that looks like all of them."

"You sure?" Lan asked. "I think there was at least one more."

"Really? I don't see any more out here..."

"Wanna bet the last one went into the Vampire Manor?"

"Ugh... an already creepy, though fun, attraction with a berserk automaton waiting to attack someone for real? Yeah... we better check and make sure."

The two rushed over to the Vampire Manor, only to find out the dim lighting inside had pretty much gone out entirely.

"Okay, something's definitely up here," Mayl admitted. "But how are we supposed to find our way around?"

"There," Lan pointed to one of the glowing artificial candelabras placed at the end of each intersection. "We use those as guides to find our way around."

"You know, if the situation wasn't dire, the mighty Apollo thinks this would be a fantastic opportunity for–OW!" (21)

'Okay...' Hub told himself. 'Keep it together. You know what Shademan's planning. You know there's ways to hurt him without resorting to DarkChips. Even if Lan and I haven't quite figured out what those are yet... What in the world changed between this time and next time the first time around? Whatever. We can do this without the DarkChip. I know we can.'

"Brrr..." Roll. exe shivered, probably from how creepy the current situation was, not that Hub blamed her. Creepy red cyberwater (at least they both hoped it was water) on the ride, creepy background music, creepy navi guide, and then... "We're not nearly as big a fans of the show like you and Lan, but I'm pretty sure it wasn't supposed to end like that..."

"Yeah, Dracky pretty much fried and didn't get back up, much less attack Django while on fire," Hub replied, ignoring the dark chuckling of the guide as they reached the end of the ride and disembarked.

"Okay, let's just switch the ToyRobo off and..." Roll. exe trailed off as she noted a distinct lack of a certain vital component on the cyberscape. "Where's the control switch?"

"What?" Mayl's voice asked in confusion from the real world. "But..."

"If there's no switch, how can we shut it down?" Lan finished.

"Oh, that thing..." the guide navi chuckled. "It was a nuisance, so I got rid of it. Wh-wheee!"

"Shademan!" Hub growled. "I thought something was off about you!"

"Wh-wh-wheee!" the false form of the darkloid laughed. "How astute of you! Did you enjoy my improvements to the story of Django, the Solar Boy?" he asked as he floated up, became covered in shadows, and reverted to his true vampiric navi form. "Wh-wh-wheeee! It has been a while, Megaman! Do you know what I want?"

"The DarkChip..." Hub glared back.

"Well you can't have it!" Roll. exe joined in the glare.

"Pretty little desserts should hold their tongues," Shademan. exe sneered. "And while I would love to let you keep the DarkChip, Megaman, and watch it drag you into the darkness, I'm afraid that particular one is a special prototype necessary for the future plans of Nebula. We could make another in time, but my leader so despises unnecessary delays, so if you would just hold still... wheee!"

Shademan. exe flew forward suddenly, the talons on his feet outstretched, only for Hub and Roll. exe to dive out of the way to either side.

"Wh-whee... Not bad..." the vampiric member of Nebula chuckled. "And now I see you have blocked me from jacking out. How clever... Your deletion will surely be delicious... But... I suppose I could be persuaded to spare your lives if you just give me the DarkChip."

"You want it?" Hub exchanged a subtle glance with Roll. exe and pulled the darkly glowing piece of data out. "Here!"

Shademan. exe seemed surprised at how easily he'd gotten what he wanted as Hub tossed the chip into the air towards him. The vampiric navi began to grin as the DarkChip sailed towards his waiting hands... only for a bright arrow to lance through it at the last moment, shattering the data and causing its DarkPower to be snuffed out like a candle flame.

"You..." Shademan. exe hissed as he turned to see Roll. exe with her arm formed into a cyberbow. "You are a very troublesome dessert... How dare you interfere...!"

"Because we asked her to!" Hub yelled back. "We'd never let you get your hands on that chip!"

"Wh-wheee!" the vampiric navi gave a chuckling hiss. "You will both pay for that mistake with your lives! I'll suck every last drop of your energies until there isn't even a husk left!"

"Here he comes!" Lan and Mayl yelled together. "Double routine set!"

"Execute!" Hub and Roll. exe prepared themselves.

"Prepare to become one with the darkness!" Shademan. exe screeched as he flew forward in a blind rush.

Hub dove to the side and returned fire with a Cannon chip, only for Shademan. exe to turn into shadow upon impact and reform elsewhere, this time ready to attack. The vampiric navi let loose a blast of sonic energy that forced both of his combatants back before summoning several bats to chase them down and vanishing.

Roll. exe shot the bats down while Hub accepted the Lifesword Program Advance from Lan and slashed at where Shademan. exe had reappeared, resulting in the same shadow fade as before.

"Damnit!" he cursed.

"Language, Mega!" Roll. exe admonished as their opponent reformed. "Cover me!"

This time Hub took the bats out while Roll. exe charged up her primary weapon, doing his best to ignore the darkly pulsing chip data that had just appeared in his folder.

"It's useless!" Shademan. exe laughed as Roll. exe's arrow had much the same effect as Hub's attacks. "I am one with the darkness! Only the dark can harm me!"

"Or maybe the light!" Mayl yelled. "Try this one on for size! Sanctuary!" A set of HolyPanels appeared around Roll. exe. "And now Holy–"

"Not so fast!" Shademan. exe charged at Roll. exe in a sudden burst of speed, wings spread, talons outstretched, and murder in his eyes.

Hub didn't even realize what he'd done until it was all over. He'd just moved and slashed, bisecting the vampiric navi at the waist.

"Mega..." Roll. exe looked at him and the dissipating DarkSword that had formed over his arm with wide eyes. "What did you just...?"

"Wh-wh-wheee..." the top half of Shademan. exe chuckled sinisterly despite his wounds. "He... used his... dark powers... wh-wheee... Already... a DarkSoul... sprouts within him... Intoxicating... is it not...? The power... of the dark... The thrill... of sheer power... You will... be a fine addition... to our ranks... Megaman... It is... inevitable... The dark... is now part of your soul... I hope... you remember me... when it consumes you...! Wh-wheee..."

As Shademan. exe chuckled his last, the two halves of his body turned slowly gray along with his fading laughter, and then when they had lost all color they crumbled to digital dust in silence.

But his laughter still echoed in the minds of the humans and navis that had witnessed his demise.

"You're being awfully quiet," Hephaestus observed. Apollo had been more-or-less his usual self right up until the mortal power known locally as a DarkChip had been used. Then he'd gone silent. The success chance had also dropped by a whole twenty percent, but Hephaestus had been expecting something like that if use of the DarkChip couldn't be avoided.

"I was hoping they wouldn't have to do that..."

Hephaestus blinked at the sudden shift in Apollo's speech and looked over to where the sun god had closed his eyes with a thoughtful look on his face. "What–"

"Can't talk right now, need to concentrate."

Hephaestus was somewhat taken aback. Sure, he knew Apollo's idiocy was mostly an act, but seeing the sun god being serious was still somewhat jarring.

"I take it their use of dark powers is even more significant than Yggdrasil is indicating?" Hephaestus asked, and waited for a response. And waited. And waited. "Well, is–"

"I'll need leave to increase the number of tandem intersections with the branch I run," Apollo said suddenly.

Hephaestus blinked. "I'm sorry...?"

"If you want those two to get through this reasonably intact, they'll need to properly connect with Django. One meeting won't cut it. They'll need at least two. Possibly three to be sure."

"I thought we agreed the other two baseline intersections aren't completely stable–" (22)

"We did. That was then. This is now. I'm not saying they can't succeed as-is, but it's not likely to be pretty."

Chaud leaned back thoughtfully. Once again, it seemed that Lan was right in the middle of things. And he'd known more than Chaud was comfortable with.

Such as the name of Nebula. The DarkChip syndicate that had activity all over the world, slowly manufacturing the powerful and rare DarkChips that drew navis that used them too much deep into a realm of darkness called 'Murkland', corroding their minds and turning them into twisted evil versions of themselves.

They were mostly active through flunkies at the moment, but there were at least two higher ranked navis so steeped in darkness that they were known as 'Darkloids'. A fact so well guarded that even most members of Nebula didn't know the term, but somehow Lan did . And by the look of surprise on his girlfriend's face, she hadn't heard it before.

But that wasn't the most troubling part. Lan had looked him in the eye and warned him not to play around with the powers of darkness, even if he thought he and Protoman. exe were strong enough to handle it.

'If only it were that simple... Still... how could he know?'

"The amazing Lan knows all and has seen all...! Well, not yet, but it'll probably feel that way after a couple hundred Loops."

"I'm not sure whether to be relieved or annoyed that you're back to normal. We haven't even gotten the approval back yet, so how do you know things will work out?"

"The great and prophetic Apollo does not understand why you feel the need to ask such a question, brother."

"Interesting... Losing Shademan and the DarkChip has caused quite the serious setback. However, in losing them a rather interesting development has taken place. Megaman... Yes, he will provide us with quite the powerful DarkSoul in time..."

Chuckling was heard, and then sinister laughter. But, really, no one else was around to listen.

"Th-th-thank you for taking my request..." the generic green NormalNavi shuffled in embarrassment. "I... I know I shouldn't have b-bragged about having a girlfriend in the f-first place, but it was very n-nice of you to help me save face anyway... I... I'm s-still surprised that a p-pretty girl like you is a city NetBattler..."

"It's fine..." Roll. exe smiled tolerantly. "Just try getting a girlfriend on your own before you go bragging about it again. Then you won't need to call anyone to bail you out. Now, if you would just mark this job completed..." (23)

"Oh, right!" the green navi started. "I d-don't know where my mind is... haha! Say... um... I kinda had f-fun, so would you be willing to... ah... g-go out with me for real...?"

"I'm sorry," Roll. exe apologized politely, "but I already have someone I'm interested in. If I didn't need the job completion to qualify for the ALicense exam later today, I probably wouldn't have accepted."

"A-an ALicense?!" the green navi sputtered in shock.

"Yep!" Roll. exe smiled. "And then we're gonna try for an SLicense!"

"B-but... but they t-take on dangerous jobs! You could g-get hurt!"

"We weren't sure either," Mayl replied kindly, "but the guys we like said we should give it a shot, so here we are. Thanks for signing off on the job though! Come on Roll! Time to jack out!"

"Wait!" the green navi yelled. "Can you at l-least tell me this guy's name?"

"His name's Megaman!" Roll. exe smiled cheerfully before jacking out in a beam of light.

"...Megaman..." the navi muttered darkly. "For encouraging such a delicate f-flower to put herself in danger... I will n-not forgive you!"

Lan smiled as he raced out the door. It had been a week since the incident at Castillo (where his and Mayl's actions in saving the park had netted them each a free lifetime pass as thanks for resolving the situation before anyone got hurt) and the tournament official had finally shown up that morning with a Point, telling them that to qualify for the new tournament, they had to collect fifty in all.

"Heh... Hey, Hub? Do you think this one will be called the Hawk or the Eagle tournament?"

"Hmm... My money's on Eagle. Because I'm sure Mayl and Roll will be there and those weird memories of ours show her in an 'Eagle' tournament."

"Eh... makes sense, but those memories aren't all completely reliable lately. I'm going with Hawk. Hey, you think we'll get to face Flave Yamakawa?"

"Maybe. It'll certainly be interesting to have a cooking match and..." Hub paused as something occurred to him. "Wait... Is that why you asked mom to teach you how to cook curry? Just in case you got in a curry cookoff?"

"Well, that and I can now make tasty curry when I'm on my own," Lan admitted. "Mmmm... curry..."

"Just don't let your stomach do the thinking during a NetBattle..."

"And now the mighty Apollo must demand an answer to a very important question: How well can the mighty Lan's stomach NetBattle?!"

"Speaking of food, the gyros are ready."

"Awesome!"

Lan and Hub were not at all surprised to learn that the site of the Hawk tournament (24) was the Princess Halberd's castle attraction at Castillo theme park. What did surprise them a bit was that even with their foreknowledge they actually hadn't been the first to complete the prelims this time. They weren't anywhere near the last however, which meant they still got to see a few of their other competitors arrive.

He'd spotted Atsuki standing off to the side trying to play it cool and decided not to poke that volatile personality just yet. Seeing Riki had been a bit of a surprise as well. They'd expected him, and the way he was constantly checking the area around him wasn't a surprise, but even with memories of the guy they hadn't really been prepared for him to be so freaking big .

He hadn't spotted Flave, which was a little disappointing. He rather hoped the guy made it into the tournament. He also hadn't spotted 'that-which-could-not-be-forgotten-no-matter-how-hard-one-tried', but he didn't think his luck was good enough that said individual would be absent.

Then their friends started showing up. Mayl and Roll. exe were expected, even if their strange 'future memories' insisted her presence and the tournament name were a mismatch, but seeing Mary Towa and Ring. exe arrive with them had completely thrown Lan and Hub off. He'd almost forgotten that Yai's Netopian friend was still in town!

"Hey Mary!" he greeted cheerfully. "You're entering the tournament?"

"Well, yes," Mary smiled as she approached sedately. No one would ever be able to tell by looking at her that she suffered from a heart condition. "Ring decided she'd pretend to be delivering messages this morning and went off to gather Points. She seems convinced I need more friends."

"Well, you do!" Mary's very extroverted navi chirped from the introverted girl's PET. "And it worked, didn't it?"

Lan chuckled, thinking that Mary couldn't object that much to Ring. exe's actions. After all, even if Ring. exe had gathered the points, Mary had still come to present them herself.

"Long time, no see, Lan," a familiar voice interjected, causing Lan to turn and see the face of Sal, the young environmentalist (and expert lunch maker).

"Hey, Sal!" Lan waved cheerfully.

"I don't believe the rest of us have properly met. I'm Sal. I run an obento stand and with my navi Woodman, I am the head of Electopia's most prominent environmental group... Well, at least I was..."

"Is something wrong?" Mayl asked with concern.

"Nothing you should concern yourselves with at the moment," Sal assured them, though Lan had a good idea what the problem was and was already making plans to contact Dex to help out if he ended up otherwise occupied when it came to a head. "I have come to participate in the tournament to clear my head and return to the problem with a fresh perspective."

"See, Mary?" Ring. exe chimed in as they all went to get the three girls properly registered. "You're already making new friends!"

Lan chuckled as the tournament official registered the three and told them that with eight entrants, pairings would be announced shortly.

The tournament was to take place over four days, the first block of round one being later today, the second block tomorrow, the semi-finals the day after, and the finals the day after that. Lan suspected that it was partly to help Castillo promote itself, particularly after its near-disaster of an opening, and sell more tickets during the days the tournament was held. Tournament entrants apparently received complimentary FreePasses for the duration of the event as well (not that Lan or Mayl needed those, meaning they'd probably give them to their friends), as well as automatic e-mail updates on match-ups, match times, and match winners if they desired them.

"Ahem!" a voice came over the intercom. "We are now ready to announce the pairings of the first round! All participants present please direct your attention to the tournament board!"

Lan looked at the board and immediately found their opponent.

"Flave and Orr?" Hub's raised eyebrow was blatant even if you couldn't see his face. (25) "That's an even worse pun than Tetsu and Bo..."

"Who cares? It should be a fun match regardless," Lan retorted. 'Yes! Curry cookoff here I come!'

He was so excited about the impending culinary duel that he completely neglected to check what the other match-ups were.

"This Viddy Narcy character reminds the mighty Apollo of someone..."

"Narcissus?"

"Goodness no. The girly-man-thing Viddy Narcy is not nearly in love with himself enough."

"So..." Flave asked smugly as Lan tried the young chef's curry. "Impressed?"

The boy had every right to be smug. His curry had apparently been so good that a renowned elderly food critic had almost literally gone to heaven after trying it (from the great taste, not possible poison). Which had been a bit freaky to watch, actually.

"It was pretty good," Lan admitted with a thoughtful look on his face, doing his best to not let on that he was gauging Flave's reaction.

"What?!" the boy chef fumed in indignation. "Just 'pretty good'?!"

"Well... yeah," Lan continued, thinking his words over carefully. He wanted to be honest, but he also wanted to get challenged to a curry cookoff. "The flavor's great, but... I really think I prefer my mom's curry... I wonder what's in hers that isn't in yours..."

"Why... you..." Flave fumed and sputtered, completely at a loss for words as Lan continued to not offer the highest of praises to his cooking. "Utter nonsense! Clearly you have no sense of taste! You don't deserve to eat such a delicacy!"

"Wow... you really can't take criticism, can you?" Lan huffed, not having to act offended. No, he was plenty offended for real. "Besides, I bet anyone with a navi could use that machine to make great curry!"

" What did you say?! " Flave practically roared. "If you think you can make better curry than mine with this machine, then you just go ahead and try you... you... culinary philistine! A cook-off! Between you and me! A cooking battle before our NetBattle!"

"All right!" Lan yelled back. "You're on!"

"You called my act ridiculous! If you and your operator had been nice instead of a pair of spoiled brats, I'd have just put you to sleep for a bit, but instead you mocked my work! I wrote it, I acted in it, I produced it, and I directed it!"

"No wonder it sucked..."

"And you make fun of it! Just like that! Videoman! Take care of the little strumpet!"

"Excuse me?!"

"Ring, you don't have to stand there and take that. Go ahead and jack out. We'll deal with them during the match."

"Not so fast! Pause!"

"Ack! I... I can't move!"

"You must act it out like Viddy wrote the scene... The script doesn't call for you to succeed... And to make sure... Rewind!"

Mary fumed as she directed her navi around the net in search of the unlocking videos their opponents had hidden. She knew that not everyone she'd meet, much less in a tournament, could be as nice as Lan, Yai, Mayl, Dex, or even Chaud. But this 'Viddy Narcy' guy... girl... thing was an order beyond anything she'd ever experienced. Beyond anything she'd ever considered possible.

It was enough to give her heartburn worse than the time she'd eaten Lan's super-spicy curry on a dare from Yai.

Lan bounced up and down excitedly as the judge tried Flave's curry first, and seemed to actually explode from how good it was. He wasn't entirely sure if he could win this, but it kind of felt good to actually know what he was doing when making the curry this time instead of just following some hasty instructions from some navi claiming to belong to the 'Cooking Master', who his 'future memories' informed him was Flave's father.

"I'll tell you!" Flave grinned happily as the elderly food critic from before tried to guess what his secret ingredient was. "My special ingredient! It's... bean paste!"

"Aha!" the food critic exclaimed.

"Bean paste in curry?" Mami, the announcer for the Hawk tournament who had somehow been pressed into covering the cooking battle by the organizers to enhance the tension for Lan and Flave's upcoming match, exclaimed. "What a bold recipe this is! Excellent, Flave! And now it's time for Lan's curry to be judged! Can it measure up to the boldness of the genius boy chef?"

"Heh!" Flave chuckled. "No way!"

"It's not over yet!" Lan shot back. "Judge?"

"Alright..." the food critic marched over to Lan's cooking station and tasted his curry. Everyone held their breaths as the man got a faraway look on his face. "Wha... what's this? This warmth and longing...?

"Oh, dear..." the ghostly voice of an amused elderly woman sounded across the area.

"S-Satoko?" the man asked in disbelief. "But... how can this be...? You died ten years ago..."

"The mighty Lan's mighty curry! So good you'll see dead people!"

"Wow... Even knowing that was coming it was still..." Lan tried to process how he'd won the cooking battle.

"Really bizarre?" Hub finished for him. "Yeah... Oh, hey, I just remembered that we got an e-mail from dad this morning. I got so distracted by the tournament prelims that I forgot about it. You want to read it now?"

"Sure!" Lan replied happily.

"Lan," Hub read, "I was going over Megaman's data during a break to clear my head and I noticed that a new ability had evolved recently. In what is an absolutely fascinating development that I can't wait to examine further when I have the opportunity, Megaman's soul has harmonized with that of another navi in such a way that he should be able to temporarily gain some of that navi's strength and attributes."

"Oh, man!" Lan smacked his head. "I completely forgot about this!"

"Oh, so that's what I felt during the match with Gutsman..." Hub mused. "Anyway, it goes on: I have provisionally dubbed this ability 'DoubleSoul'. I have also developed a training program that I've attached so why don't you give it a try?"

"Awesome! Let's try it out immediately!"

"Are you sure we have the time, Lan?"

"Eh, sure. We're the second match today after all so we've got plenty of time to do the training program and still make it."

"Alright, I'm booting up the training program now."

"And forevermore none would dare say that the mighty Megaman did not have Guts."

"You've just been waiting to use that one, haven't you?"

Mary swore as she made her way to her match with Viddy Narcy. They hadn't found the videos before the alert she'd set so she wouldn't miss the match sounded, meaning they were going to be forced to fight with reversed controls.

It would be fine... She just had to remember to operate in reverse and use everything she'd learned in the BattleChipGP and she and Ring could pull this off.

She just... needed to catch her breath a bit first.

"Come on, Mary!" Ring. exe called insistently from Mary's PET. "The match is about to start!"

"Oooo..." Mayl winced as Ring took another hit from her opponent and went down hard.

"Yeah, ouch..." Dex sympathized. "What was up with those two? I mean... I remember Mary and Ring being better than that..."

"No idea," Mayl replied. "Come on, let's go find out."

"But..." Kai looked torn as Mayl clearly gestured for him to join the rest. "But Master Lan's match is about to start!"

"Oh, don't worry," Dex grabbed the boy in a friendly headlock and began dragging him along. "We'll be back in plenty of time!"

Lan scanned the crowd as he waited for Flave to emerge and join him. Funny... he didn't see any of his friends there...

He shook off any potential concerns as Flave took his spot opposite the battlecomp.

"You got lucky in the cooking battle, but not this time!" Flave declared dramatically. "My techniques are better than yours, I know it!"

"Maybe, maybe not," Lan returned, "but on the battlefield or in the kitchen, it takes more than technique!"

Flave huffed and jacked in his navi Orr, a standard green NormalNavi altered only to possess an apron and chef's hat, as Lan jacked in Hub.

"All right!" Mami announced. "It's another fierce battle to follow these two's cooking competition from earlier! Let's start this! Lan Hikari vs Flave Yamakawa! Battle routine set!"

"Execute!" Hub declared.

"It's over!" Flave and Orr yelled back together.

"Geez, that was terrible Mary!" Ring. exe griped. "It was like you forgot everything about navi operation! It's bad enough you couldn't find those stupid videos our opponent hid! How hard can it be to remember that the operation controls are backwards!"

"Yeah?" Mary shot back. "Well maybe if you had... jacked out when I said... to... It wouldn't have... if you just... listened..."

"If I just listened, what?" Ring. exe huffed.

"Ring..." Mary gasped out as she clutched her chest, "help..."

"Mary?" the navi with twin-tails made of rings paused in sudden worry. "Is something wro–"

Thump clatter-latter-latter

"Mary?!" Ring yelled from the dropped PET, the device having fallen just right for her to watch her operator collapsed on the ground, clutching her chest in pain and barely breathing. "MARY! SOMEBODY HELP! 911! 911!" MY OPERATOR'S HAVING A HEART ATTACK!"

"You know," Lan mused as he rode the elevator to the bottom of the Princess Halberd castle, "Flave wasn't that bad a guy, really. He just wants to follow in his dad's footsteps."

"Yeah," Hub mused. "Though I'm still wondering why none of our friends were at the match. Oh, hold on. I just remembered. We got an e-mail partway through the fight from Mayl that said 'do not open until after your match'. Want to read it?"

"Sure, go ahead. Maybe something came up."

"Okay, here we go," Hub opened the message, and his eyes went wide immediately. "Lan, we have to get over to the hospital immediately."

"Why?" Lan felt his pulse jump as he began thinking of possible reasons.

"Mary Towa had a heart attack after her match..."

Hephaestus blinked as the turning of pages registered to his ears, and he looked to see Apollo thumbing through a magazine.

"What in creation are you reading?"

"The Divine Retribution Catalog," Apollo replied absently. "Smiting is passe after all and death is far too quick a punishment for the girly-man-thing Viddy Narcy anyway. Oooo... Unsightly blemishes that draw all of the afflicted's attention while seeming of no consequence to anyone else..."

"...When you're done I'd like to take a look as well."

Apollo simply pointed to an area right next to Hephaestus where a second copy rested. "The mighty Apollo highly recommends their 'poetic justice' selection."

Lan just sat in the waiting room of the hospital. He felt numb. He knew that Viddy Narcy was a cheater and would sabotage a navi's controls... but this... this was just too far. Anyone could tell you just by looking at Mary that she wasn't exactly the strongest of NetBattlers but he had still played his usual dirty trick on Mary. He could have warned them. He knew about the tactics Viddy liked to use. All it would have taken was for him to double check the match-ups before taking off and a quick e-mail. And yet... (26)

What was worse was when Mayl told him. Ring was still active and had told Roll and Mayl exactly what happened. The fact that Mayl had been outside the hospital with Dex of all people telling her to calm down spoke about just how furious she was. Lan looked down at the battlechip in his hand.

"I don't care how good you are, Lan, what this creep did crossed the line. I won't need this chip for my next match, so take it!"

That hadn't been fun. Mayl was clearly wanting to get back at Viddy more than he was. Yai had eventually gotten Mayl home so she could at least get some rest before her match tomorrow. But it still left him feeling hollow.

"Lan?"

Lan blinked as he looked up. That hadn't been Hub. His PET was empty at the moment as Hub was comforting Ring in Roll's place. It was the only way he had managed to convince Mayl to leave the hospital so the two could rest. But he definitely recognized that voice. "Mamoru? What are you doing here?" Lan asked. "I thought you were cured."

Mamoru smiled. "I'm just here for a checkup... but what about you?" He replied. Lan told him everything. From Mary's condition, to Viddy Narcy having sabotaged Ring. Mamoru... he frowned, but Lan could feel it. Beneath the relative peaceful nature he was showing on the outside Mamoru was as angry as the rest of them. "And you say he's still in the tournament?"

"He's our next opponent." Lan remarked.

Mamoru frowned. "Are you going to go along with his ruse?"

"I want to beat him at his own game." Lan remarked. "This idiot thinks that he can get away with hurting my friends... well, I'm going to show him just what happens when you do."

Mamoru nodded with a smile spread on his face. "I didn't expect any less of a response from you two... and I'm not going to ask you to back down." He added as he reached over. Lan blinked and looked... and indeed it seemed that Mamoru had his chip folder and PET slotted into his wheelchair, even as he pulled out a battlechip. "But I must insist that I get to help out at least," he added with a smile. (27)

Lan just grinned back. "Thanks Mamoru." He stated, taking the offered chip. "Huh... never seen this one before."

Mamoru just winked. "Wish I could talk some more... but I need to get to my appointment." Before he wheeled out of the area though Mamoru stopped. "I'll be watching the match though Lan. You and Megaman show him just what a cheater like that deserves." He added.

Silence filled the room as it was left to Lan once more.

Hub... wasn't fond of hospitals. For some reason these places more than any other seemed to remind him of his own disease. Of what had happened to him. But in a time like this he simply swallowed it down and chose to be a friend first... and someone who wasn't fond of hospitals second. Ring had cried for quite a while even when he had shown up. Now? It was just silence, awkward silence. She knew that he and Lan were fighting Viddy tomorrow. She knew that he was going to pay. But Hub could tell... Ring blamed herself in part for it.

"... Megaman." Hub blinked and looked over at Ring. "You guys better beat him."

"Lan wouldn't let me lose even if I wanted to Ring... and trust me, right now I've never wanted to win against someone so much without the world being at stake." Hub admitted. "Anyone can see Mary isn't well. That she doesn't just have a navi for battle, but to be a friend. To be her guardian."

"Some guardian I ended up being." Ring muttered.

"You can't blame yourself for that." Hub countered. "What Viddy did was sabotage. Worse than that, it's practically assault. You're not to blame for the fact that he outright damaged you. And I know that Mayl, Roll and Mary would say the same."

Ring nodded but sighed. "Here." Ring said as she handed him some... data? "I might not be able to fight back against this guy personally, but I think a Navi Chip works just as well."

Hub just smiled... and finally Ring smiled back.

"An injured friend! A solemn promise! A score to settle! New powers from dear friends! This..." Apollo declared as he whipped out a lyre and strummed an electric guitar riff on it, "calls for a montage!"

"Did you forget there are other matches his friends are still fighting in?"

"Oh... right..." Apollo thought that over for a moment. "The talented Apollo has not played multiple themes at once in a while, but the amazing Apollo is up for the task!"

Hephaestus buried his face in his hands. "You have got to stop hanging around the muses so much."

"Why?" Apollo blinked in confusion. "The supremely lovely muses are nine flavors of hot and appreciate the great Apollo's talents."

Lan stretched as he stepped outside, determined not to let things get him down. Kai had volunteered to keep the morning vigil at the hospital in case Mary woke up and Mamoru of all people had offered to take the afternoon. Which left him free to work on his plan for facing Videoman. exe tomorrow.

beep beep went his PET with incoming mail.

"Hey, Lan," Hub spoke up. "It's from Sal. Want to read it?"

Lan thought about it. "We probably should. If what's going on with Sal is anything like what our 'future memories' indicate, we probably don't want to ignore her. Not after what happened with Mary."

"Right..." Hub nodded and opened the mail. If Sal was dealing with losing her environmental activist friends to the poisoned words of a net terrorist again, they'd be there to help.

After all, her opponent certainly wouldn't.

Mayl took a deep breath as she approached the castle in Castillo to center herself. That reprehensible Viddy Narcy would get what was coming to him. Lan and Megaman. exe would see to that. But that was tomorrow. Today she had a match and she needed to focus herself if she wanted to win.

He opponent might be a generic HeelNavi, colored black, but that was no reason to think he wasn't skilled. Plenty of skilled NetBattlers didn't feel the need to customize their navi's appearance.

"Okay, Roll!" Mayl psyched herself up as she examined the tournament board, confirming that their opponent was still Crusher. "We've gotten this far, we passed the ALicense exam with flying colors and we're well on our way to an SLicense! We can do this! No one's gonna stop us from making the finals!"

"Yeah!" her navi cheered.

"Hah! Yer pretty sure of yerself, ain't yah, little lady?" a deep rumbling voice chuckled, and Mayl turned around. And looked up.

And up.

'Holy...' Mayl's eyes widened at the sight of the man standing behind her also looking at the tournament board, Mayl's size providing no obstacle whatsoever to him doing so. 'This guy's torso is bigger than Dex's whole body!'

She guessed the man was trying to smile at her, but the way his face seemed to be chiseled from granite made it look like he was glaring sadistically. It was the kind of face that pretty much screamed 'danger' to anyone who saw it.

"I'm Riki," the man rumbled in a way that made Mayl want to look for falling rocks, "Crusher's operator. Yer next opponent."

"I'm Roll's operator," Mayl gulped and bowed politely, "Mayl."

"Heh." the man chuckled deeply. "At least yer polite. Most people tend to run the other way when they see me."

'I don't blame them!' Mayl just managed to keep to herself.

"Anyway, I just wanted to introduce myself and let yah know I won't go easy on yah cuz yer a kid. Or cuz yer a girl."

"Never crossed my mind..."

"Well, that's a good thing. Right, Crusher?"

"You got it, boss!" a firm voice confirmed from the guy's PET. "You said your name's Roll, little lady? Don't you lose too quickly. That'd be a real shame, that would."

"Hey!" Roll. exe piped up from Mayl's PET. "Don't go assuming you'll win!"

"Bwahahahahaha!" Riki laughed in a way that made it sound like the room was shaking. "I like you two! I look forward to our match!"

Mayl managed to remain on her feet until the man walked out of the castle attraction before allowing herself to slide to a sitting position on the floor.

"Yeek... I don't know how Lan handles dealing with people like that all the time..."

"He probably tells himself that he's got awesome friends like us backing him up!" Roll. exe didn't sound quite as confident as she probably hoped.

"Heh..." Mayl chuckled and smiled as she got to her feet, dusting her skirt off as she took a deep breath and centered herself. "Right! No matter what, we've still got our friends, so let's go give it our all!"

Filled with renewed confidence, Mayl walked out to go find something to do until her match, and spotted Riki staring down a little old lady just outside.

No... scratch that. The little old lady was the one staring down Riki... And apparently doing a pretty good job of it from the way the giant of a man seemed suddenly nervous.

"Boss!" Riki managed to project confidence despite his clear nervousness. "Don't make me keep repeating myself! There's no way I'm gonna follow in yer footsteps!"

"Humph!" the old lady poked Riki hard in the chest with her cane, actually making the man take a step back. "Isn't it time you stopped acting like a child? My boy, with your intimidating physique, you are a born gang boss! The perfect person to take over the organization from me! Taking over the Mafia after I'm gone is your destiny!"

'What...?' Mayl's mind locked up and she found herself unable to do anything other than keep listening.

"You want to try winning this fancy tournament so you can turn your back on everything I raised you for and use the winnings to open a bakery?! I won't stand for it!"

"Oof!" the voice of Crusher suddenly sounded from Riki's PET. "Hey! Let go of me you ingrates!"

"Crusher?" Riki looked alarmed as he mashed the buttons on his PET frantically, all his confidence suddenly gone. "Crusher! What happened? Answer me! No! CRUSHER!"

"I'll just keep your navi in a safe place until the tournament's over," the old woman declared with finality. "Then we'll not hear any more of this nonsense!"

"B-b-but..." Riki collapsed to his knees as the old woman walked away calmly and called out after her, "boss! I need Crusher! Please! Give him back!"

'Oooookkaaaayyyy...' Mayl did her best to process what had just happened. Riki, the giant intimidating guy, wanted to quit the Mafia, the freaking Mafia!, and open a bakery. His boss, some little old lady who looked like she knitted in her spare time, wanted him to take over the Mafia instead. And had kidnapped his navi, her upcoming opponent, to ensure his obedience. 'Now... what would Lan do in a situation like this? ...He'd help the poor guy, that's what he'd do.'

Mayl sighed and proceeded to walk up to the now sobbing man and offer her assistance.

"The ultimate advice for every situation! What Would Mighty Lan Do?"

"When did you manage to make that button anyway?" (28)

Lan had accepted the lunch invitation from Sal, intending to keep an eye out for the events he suspected were happening, and he wasn't disappointed. A candidate for mayor had come by and rather loudly stated his intention to develop ACDC into a more metropolitan area, the man with him bowing and scraping as if the old guy had already been elected.

And then Sal had gotten the e-mail Lan had been waiting for her to get and left for ElecTown square. Lan had promptly called Dex in saying he had a bad feeling that something was wrong with Sal and Dex had promptly come charging along despite not knowing her that well.

"How unfortunate... It seems we will need to do what is necessary without you, Sal."

The thing was... it seemed things might be even worse than Lan had been expecting.

"Lan... Dex... I'm ashamed to admit this, but... I've been losing control of my activist group lately... Some odd navi has been coming into our homepage and pressing our members towards more radical action. And... and they've been listening to him! Despite all my attempts to calm them down, they no longer listen to me... And what's worse... What's worse is that I sent Woodman out to try and talk to the navis of our members last night and... and he never came back... I'm afraid that the odd navi has gotten to him too... The two I was just talking with said that they plan to put a permanent halt to the mayor candidate's ACDC development plan... with cyberbombs! I... I don't know what to do anymore!"

Lan and Dex raced into the DenDome where the mayoral candidate was giving his speech about his planned ACDC development project and raced towards the recently repaired BattleComp to halt the cyberbomb that was most likely planted there.

"Hey! You can't come in here!" a security man yelled as they raced past him.

"No time to explain!" Lan yelled as he and Dex took the stairs several at a time.

"Why are you interrupting my speech, you tw–oof!"

"Outta the way, gramps!" Dex yelled as he shoved the guy to the side and began to jack Gutsman. exe into the battlecomp, Lan right behind him. "Jack in! Gutsman!"

"Jack in! Megaman!"

"There he is!" Hub yelled as he appeared next to Gutsman. exe and spotted a navi hovering near a cyberdetonator. "Gutsman! Restrain him!"

"Yeehaw!"

"No!" the navi yelled as he got into a stance. "I won't let you sto–urk!"

"Okay! Hold him while I disable this thing! But don't hurt him!"

"You got it!" Gutsman. exe shot Hub a thumbs-up before turning a glare at the navi. "Ya know you're making your friend Sal sad by doing this, right? She's real disappointed in all of ya."

"I... er..." the navi looked torn between determination and guilt as Hub finished disabling the device. "I..." the navi hung his head in defeat. "I've made a terrible mistake... Forgive me..."

Roll. exe was a little surprised at how easy it was to slip past the guards around Crusher. They were so inattentive that she had the urge to sneak up behind one of them and start making faces, but she managed to restrain the impulse.

After all, this was much more than a simple navi kidnapping. From what Mayl had overheard, this was the start of a bloody coup that could cost both Riki and the old woman mafia boss (who was apparently Riki's mother, though birth or adopted hadn't been made clear) their lives.

"Well, now. If it isn't the little lady Roll... What are you doing here?" Crusher asked curiously.

"Rescue mission," Roll. exe related curtly. "We gotta get you out of here before they get around to deleting you."

"What? Why would they do that?" Crusher seemed genuinely surprised.

"They're convinced that without you, Riki will be a pushover and they can then rub out the current boss and take over without opposition."

"Fat lot of good knowing that'll do us with this cage here..." Crusher sighed. "Okay, miss. Think you can take this cage out?"

"Maybe... Though I'm not sure I can do it without hurting you..." Roll. exe mused.

"Heh..." Crusher got a determined gleam in his eyes. "Don't you worry about me. I'm as tough as they come. You just do whatever you need to."

"Okay!" Roll. exe nodded firmly as Mayl sent chip data to her. "Here we go! Sanctuary! HolyDream!"

"Hey!" a voice called out sharply as Roll. exe's shots shattered the cage and left Crusher smoldering from the backwash. "What do you think you're doing?!"

"The lovely Mayl and the enchanting Roll are raining on your villainous parade!" Apollo struck a dramatic pose, clearly copied from a certain ace attorney. "Like a boss !"

"Apollo, Phoenix Wright just called. He's suing you for copyright infringement." (29)

"Wait, really?" Apollo blinked in confusion.

"No," Hephaestus stated bluntly. "No mortal has access to my office number and you know it. But I'll find a way to let him know you were ripping him off."

"But... but that pose was classic long before he existed!"

"Tell it to the judge."

"Woodman!" Hub yelled as he and Gutsman. exe reached where the tree-themed navi was standing guard over... something that didn't look too friendly. "Why are you doing this? Do you really think Sal would want something like this?"

"Yeah, man!" Gutsman. exe grunted, rolling his shoulders where he'd been clipped by a few of the WoodTowers that Woodman. exe had been defending the area with. "She's been cryin' and everything over you going off and leavin' her!"

"She... has?" Woodman. exe seemed confused. "But... I'm doing this for her... She'll understand later... Won't she...?"

"No, she won't!" Hub yelled. "Woodman, you're helping a criminal! Sal would never want something like that!"

"Yeah!" Gutsman. exe agreed loudly.

"What are you all chatting about?" an oily voice sounded from behind them. They all turned to see an official-looking navi approach, clearly angry. "Woodman! Get rid of these intruders! They are interfering with the defense of the nature that your beloved Sal loves so much! Didn't you say you'd do anything for her?!"

"...You're right," Woodman. exe said after a long moment. "I did say that. And I would..."

Hub suddenly felt nervous about the way events were headed.

"...but what you're asking is the same thing that those who destroy nature for greed and personal gain do!" Woodman. exe finished with a fierce expression.

"You dare betray me?!" the oily-voiced navi fumed. "Then you can suffer the same fate as these fools when I unleash my special cyberbombs! When I'm through, the whole world shall know me as Bomberm–urk..."

Hub blinked. Gutsman. exe blinked as well. The spiked WoodTower had come out of nowhere and impaled the terrorist navi straight through the torso.

"I never should have trusted you..." Woodman. exe glared as the navi began to be deleted from the critical damage suffered.

Mayl was currently terrified. Riki had gone back to being his completely confident self with the return of Crusher, but it seemed that the guys who had been plotting against him had decided to just cut to the chase and kill Riki.

And anyone who knew what they were up to, such as her.

"Hmph!" Riki glared back at the smaller men. "Crusher told me everything! About how you were going to off the boss and take over!"

"Heh..." one of the smaller men chuckled, apparently not intimidated by the fact that Riki was over twice his size and mass. "So you know... Now there's no way we can let you live!"

"Stop right there!" the firm voice of the old woman from before declared, and Mayl turned to see the woman right behind herself and Riki.

"B-Boss?" the two traitors seemed as shocked to see her there as Mayl was. How did that woman get there without anyone noticing?

"Hmph!" the old woman huffed. "I never dreamed you twits would hatch such an outrageous plan! You're a hundred years too early to take the likes of me out!"

"Argh!" one of the men panicked. "We'll have to get rid of them all right now! Get 'em!"

As the traitors rushed the unworried old lady, Mayl wasn't sure where the instinct to close her eyes came from. She was certain that the sounds of violent brawling were utterly brutal, and that she was surprisingly pain-free.

Opening her eyes, she saw perhaps the last thing she was expecting at that moment.

"Did..." Apollo blinked repeatedly at the display, "...did the great Apollo just watch a little old lady use the Raging Demon technique?"

There were some things that even great foresight just could not prepare one to experience.

"You did," Hephaestus nodded calmly.

"But isn't that–"

"–one of the signature moves of Akuma from the Street Fighter branch? Yes it is."

"Di–"

"No, there hasn't been any code leak from what I can tell. Not unless it was also somehow incorporated into the baseline data."

"The great Apollo finds your interruptions–"

"–annoying?" Hephaestus smirked. "Think of it as mild payback for all those eons you went around finishing everyone's sentences."

Lan sighed as he watched Atsuki walk smugly from the arena. The match between Woodman. exe and Burnerman. exe had... well, it had gone pretty much as one might expect a match between a wood-element navi and a fire-element navi to go. Woodman. exe had gotten some good shots in, but the type advantage had simply proved too much in the end.

But now, it was time for Mayl and Roll. exe's match with Riki and Crusher. And as the two were introduced, Lan cheered for his girlfriend at the top of his lungs.

Ring. exe sniffed to herself as she moped in the hospital network, the monitoring system next to Mary's bed to be specific. She'd only left it for a few moments to turn the television on to the channel that was covering the Hawk tournament, as well as the Eagle tournament elsewhere in Electopia.

Aside from knowing that Mayl had won her match today, Mary would have liked to learn that Chaud was competing in the Eagle tournament and had won his match against some navi named Windman. exe. Even if she denied it, Ring. exe knew she had a crush on the boy. (30)

"Mary... I'm so sorry..."

"Ring...?"

"Mary?" Ring. exe blinked and rushed to the screen display to look out at her operator stirring faintly and opening her eyes. "Mary! You're awake!"

"Hi Ring... What'd I miss...?"

Ring. exe teared up in the cyberworld and began blubbering the way only sheer relief could cause. "I'm so sorry! I rushed the check on your pacemaker yesterday so I could go get the points needed for the Hawk prelims and register you even though I should have really asked you this time but I thought you'd be okay and then that stupid narcissistic girly boy actor thing showed up and I didn't get away from his navi in time and I got all messed up and missed checking your pacemaker again while making you search for those stupid video things instead of thinking about what would happen and... I'M SO SO-ORRY! IT'S ALL MY FA-A-AULT! I'M A TERRIBLE NAVI-I-I-I!"

"Silly..." Mary smiled weakly. "I'm the one who should have gone to a nurse the moment Videoman hurt you like that instead of trying to tough it out... The hospital navis could have taken care of my pacemaker and I should have called all those friends you helped me make to help on that ridiculous scavenger hunt... It's my fault... not yours..."

"No i-it's not!" Ring. exe sniffed as she argued back.

"Ah, good, you're awake," an unfamiliar voice spoke up from the doorway and cutting off further attempts to claim responsibility.

"Do I... know you...?" Mary asked as she shifted her gaze to a somewhat scrawny boy in a wheelchair.

"No, but I believe we have a mutual friend by the name of Lan," the boy smiled. "Plus the nurses saw fit to put you in my old room. I'm Mamoru Urakawa. Nice to meet you."

"The amazing Mamoru is the nicest proprietor of a hive of scum and villainy that you can ever hope to meet!"

Apollo blinked as his proclamation was met with silence.

"What, no scathing retort, brother?"

"No, that's pretty accurate."

Mayl stretched as she got up that morning. Today was the day for many things. Today was when Lan would face down Viddy Narcy for what happened to Mary.

But as much as she'd have liked to focus on that, it was also the day she'd be facing her and Roll. exe's next opponent: Atsuki and his flame-based navi Burnerman. exe.

And she was certain that if she gave that fight anything less than her full attention, it wouldn't end well for her or Roll. exe.

"Actually, I wanted to ask you a favor."

'Here we go...' Even with his memories being a bit hazy there was no way that Lan could forget the... unique challenger that was Viddy Narcy. He didn't have anything against how the man (woman? Lan honestly didn't care either way) dressed or his... assumed lifestyle if it wasn't just a role he was playing up. No, the problem Lan had with Viddy Narcy was that the man was an arrogant, annoying, condescending cheater. A cheater who had put one of his friends in hospital. Who had almost lead to the death of a young girl. "A favor?" Lan asked. His voice was barely kept in check.

"I want you to let me win!" Viddy said.

"What."

"I know it's a crazy thing to ask." Viddy started... and Lan had to resist the urge to laugh as the 'producer' started putting on the fakest sad look he had ever seen someone put on. Although he would give the man credit for adding a tremble to his voice. It made him curious as to just how many people had actually fallen for it. "My Videoman only has a very short time to live."

"Oh no, what's wrong?" Lan asked. "Is it because he's sick?" The only thing that could make bad acting like this more entertaining was to encourage it to extremes, and Lan needed for it to be entertaining or he'd end up punching the guy.

"Very sick! A virus that's just eating him up!" Viddy cried out. "I... I just thought it would make a good final memory..." He trailed off as he sobbed, walking away slowly and muttering about where to bury Videoman... loudly.

"Y'know, if it wasn't for how he's obviously trying to bait me into going after him he might have made it sound believable." Lan remarked.

"Well let's be fair, Lan... you're going to go after him anyway for Mary's sake." Hub said.

At that Lan just smirked. "Oh I am... but first Hub, I need you to send a couple of e-mails... and how well do you think you can fight backwards?"

"Well enough to kick Videoman's backlot carcass from here to Netopia, sir !"

Hephaestus examined Apollo's latest costume for a moment before remarking. "You do realize neither of them have ever been part of a military force, right?"

"Oh, ruin all of the mighty Apollo's fun why don't you?"

"You know..." Mayl mused to her navi as she walked into Castillo's castle attraction, "with our upcoming opponent it occurs to me that we don't know too many people who use fire navis."

"Well, elementally themed navis do tend to be in the minority, but you're right," Roll. exe agreed. "Sure, we've met a few elementally aligned generic navis before, there's that one kid in school whose navi has a Heat style, and Turboman prefers fire attacks even though he's null element himself, but the only fully customized fire navis any of our friends have come across..."

"...have all belonged to that Mr. Match guy," Mayl finished.

"Talking about me, lass?" a voice cut into their thoughts, causing Mayl to turn around and glare at the self-proclaimed master of fire himself.

"Match..." Mayl glared at the man.

"Easy there, lass," the man grinned in his self-assured way, "I'm not here to cause trouble."

"Your reputation suggests otherwise," Roll. exe stated evenly as Mayl crossed her arms accusingly. "Especially after what you tried to pull at the DenCity tournament."

"There really is no winning with you lot, is there?" Mr. Match sighed heavily. "But honest and truly, I'm not here to start anything. I'm just here to have a look at this young upstart who thinks he's hot enough to operate a fire navi. Can't have just anyone running around aligned with fire after all... I've got to make sure they have a hot enough spirit!"

"Hehehe...!" a younger voice chuckled and Mayl saw the blue haired Atsuki approach them, staring intently at Mr. Match and grinning. "You're a funny old guy, ain'tcha? I'm Burnerman's operator, Atsuki. Nice. To. Meet. You. That slow enough for you, old man?"

"Well, you're a cheeky little brat, aren't you?" Mr. Match grinned back, but Mayl could see his eye twitching. "And a bit on the cool side. I'm not sure I approve of you handling a flame navi..."

"If I'm cool, it's only because your old-fashioned ranting about hot spirits gave me the chills!" Atsuki shot back. "That's why I can't stand washed-up old geezers!"

'If this is Mr. Match's idea of not causing trouble,' Mayl rubbed her temples as the two began insulting each other back and forth, plus something about a Festival of Flames that she missed, 'we are all in for a disaster...'

"Well then, why don't we have our navis duke it out and see who's got the hotter spirit between us!" Mr. Match challenged.

"Fine!" Atsuki accepted. "We'll see who's better suited to operate a flame navi!"

Mayl sighed as the two stormed off to duke it out.

"...We're going to have to go after them and make sure they don't break something, aren't we?" Roll. exe asked.

"Yep..." Mayl sighed in response. "Is this what Lan usually goes through? If it is, I may owe him an apology or two."

"Eh, just wear a bikini the next time you go to the beach together."

" Roll! " Mayl blushed red.

"Sorry," Roll blushed herself. "I'm not really sure where that came from."

"No! Bad Apollo!" Hephaestus yelled as he continued chasing the sun god around the office with a rolled-up magazine. "Don't put words in the mortals' mouths like that!" (31)

"Ack!" the sun god yelped as he desperately tried to fend off the assault. "Ow! Heeeellllpp!"

"Apology accepted."

"Though Lan would probably still appreciate seeing you in one."

"ROLL!"

If her navi's teasing regarding her emerging hormonal crush on her childhood friend was the worst thing to happen to her on any given day, Mayl would forevermore count it a victory.

As it was, the duel between Fireman. exe and Burnerman. exe was setting fire to areas of the net and causing several electronics connected to it to begin smoking from the data backwash.

Mayl had tried calling a few people she knew with aqau-element navis to help, but none of them had responded yet, so she was racing for Higsby's to see if the former WWW member and chip fanatic might have anything on hand that could help.

"Ack!"

WHACK-tumbletumbletumble

Only for the door to the shop to open up right as she tried to charge through it, leading to her to crash into the person trying to exit.

"Oww..." Mayl rubbed her head as she sat up and spotted the person she'd run over. "Shuko? I am so sorry!"

"It's okay..." the accident-prone girl smiled and brushed herself off. "I was just showing Higsby something that Aquaman and I developed."

"And just in time too," Higsby declared as he approached them. "I've been getting all sorts of calls about computers all over ACDC overheating, huh! It's the perfect program to deal with the problem, huh!"

"Really?" Mayl shot the man an interested look. "Do you mind if Roll and I use it to put the net out?"

"Not at all, huh," Higsby blinked and handed the girl a copy of a program bearing the label FireBuster. "Just be sure to let everyone know you got it at Higsby's!"

"Thanks!" Mayl yelled as she grabbed the program and ran towards her house to jack in.

"Wait!" Shuko yelled after her. "Aquaman and I can hel–oop!"

WHAM!

"...Didn't you pretty much flood the net when we last met?" Roll. exe asked Aquaman. exe as the two ran around putting out the flames burning across the cyberworld.

"Er... yeah, whoosh" Aquaman. exe blushed. "But... well..."

"You weren't actually trying to that time..." Roll. exe sighed as she began to aim at another group of flames. (32)

"Yeah..." Aquaman. exe fidgeted a bit. "whoosh I... I... whoosh I'll finish up here, you whoosh go on ahead and stop whoever's causing this."

Roll. exe did her best to not just blast the two fire navis with the FireBuster as they bickered back and forth just like their operators.

"Brat!"

"Geezer!"

"Wimp!"

"Upstart!"

"Will you all just cut it out before I hose you down?! " Roll. exe yelled. "Your fighting is setting the whole net on fire and the next round of the tournament is about to start!"

"Who cares about the match?" Burnerman. exe scoffed as he continued glaring at Fireman. exe. "I gotta beat this wimp first!"

"Yeah, back off and let me teach this blustery upstart a lesson!" Fireman. exe dismissed the pink navi.

'Okaaayy...' Mayl's thoughts raced as the two, 'what would Lan do in a situation like this...? ...Besides something stupid like I know would cross his mind first and dear gods why can't I think of a better option?' "You must be pretty scared of us, Burnerman... Atsuki."

"... What?! " Burnerman. exe turned his furious gaze towards Roll. exe.

"I mean, we're much stronger than Mr. Match and Fireman," Mayl continued on causing Fireman. exe directed his glare at Roll. exe as well, deciding to run with this now that she'd thrown the gauntlet. "They lost in the first round of the DenCity tournament to Turboman, who we beat in the finals."

"Um... Mayl? Are you sure about this?" Roll. exe backed up a step nervously.

"Yep! And whoever wins our match will be facing Lan and Megaman, who've beaten Match every time they've fought!"

"Bwahahahaha!" Atsuki's laughter came over the connection. "It that true, geezer?! You were really acting so high and mighty with a pathetic record like that? Hilarious! You're not hot at all!"

A sound came over the connection from Fireman. exe's end that sounded a lot like grinding teeth.

"That means..." Atsuki's grin was audible. "That means if I win this tournament, Burnerman and I really are better than you and Fireman! Alright Burnerman! Jack out and let's get to Castillo for our match!"

"Alright!" Burnerman. exe grinned sadistically as he exited the net in a flash of light.

"Why you..." Mr. Match's strained voice choked out after Burnerman. exe had left.

"Was any of what I said untrue?" Mayl asked with as much sweetness as she could muster.

"Grrr... Fine! But you better beat that brat, lass! If you lose to him after saying all that, I'll never forgive you!"

A moment later Fireman. exe jacked out as well and both Mayl and Roll. exe let out gigantic sighs of relief as the flames the two fire navis' conflict had created died down.

Lan rolled his eyes as he walked into the stadium. Viddy looked like he was about to burst out laughing as he did... but Lan didn't care. It hadn't been too long since he and Hub had 'fallen' for Viddy and Videoman. exe's cheap trick, however at this point he wasn't even bothering to hide his rage anymore. "Viddy Narcy. You're a liar, a cheater, and a few more words that I can't say while this tournament is being broadcast." Lan growled out. "It's bad enough that you tampered with Megaman's controls using Videoman, I can adjust to that... but you're showing just how utterly stupid you are by doing it twice in a row!"

At this point the crowd went quiet. All eyes were on Viddy. "Why whatever could you be talking about?" Viddy tittered. "Are you talking about my previous opponent? Such a shame about the poor thing, but it's not my fault if the girl is so sickly that she can't NetBattle properly... or that she has a Navi so incompetent that she can't even keep track of her NetOp's condition."

Lan glared at Viddy... who actually flinched in response. It didn't hurt that in those eyes Viddy would see the stare that Lan saved for only those who had harmed his friends personally. Or it might have been a loud bellowing of rage from elsewhere in the stadium. "You're a moron. I was thinking about holding back... but I should show you just who you messed with. And when you do, you should remember... at least Ring and Mary could keep up with me."

"Such a brat. Eliminating you from this tournament will be a welcome sight!" Viddy stated with a smirk.

In the audience there were some less... polite about what they thought of Viddy. Chief among them was the man known as Mr. Match. He hadn't seen any of Lan's friends nearby but he was personally furious at Viddy. Not because he cheated in his match or endangered a life. That would just be hypocritical given what he had done in the previous tournament. No, what angered him the most was that the man had done all of this... completely for the sake of satisfying his own ego! At least when Match put lives in danger he had the common indecency to be doing it for a reason, or for the WWW, or something like that! What was worse was the man had absolutely no reason to injure the girl. At least between him and Lan, the boy had ruined his plans so many times before. He wasn't so much angry at Viddy for being such a villain, but for being a terrible villain.

"Oh my, some serious accusations right off the bat!" Mami noted. She glanced over at Lan but he shook his head. "But it seems despite the claims that Lan still wishes to battle! So, Lan vs. Hidenosuke Yamashita! Battle routine-"

"No! I'm Viddy Narcy! Don't you dare call me by my real name!" Viddy declared.

"My bad!" Mami said with a smile... although Lan could see even the referee was beginning to be irritated by the flamboyant NetBattler.

"Lan vs. Viddy Narcy! Battle routine, set!"

"Execute!" At this point some people gasped as they looked up. Megaman. exe faced away from Videoman. exe but still took on his usual fighting stance.

Videoman. exe chuckled. "Don't you know that a video is never as fun if you're trying to watch it in reverse?" he asked before he pulled out an oversized roll of tape. "Wind Cutter!" he declared as he flung it at Megaman. exe who stood still. "What's wrong, twerp, can't face the battle?"

"AreaGrab!" Lan declared.

Suddenly Megaman. exe vanished from sight and the Wind Cutter passed by harmlessly as he appeared behind Videoman. exe. Soon enough he fired off a hail of shots at the navi... who grinned as he simply extended some tape between his arms and blocked the blasts. "Hah, what're you going to do now? Nothing can get past my Tapeline! I think it's time I cancelled your show!" he declared as another Wind Cutter started to appear in his hand.

"Virus Chip: Spikey!"

"What chip?" Viddy declared even as the blue fire virus appeared in front of Megaman. exe, blasting off a fireball towards Videoman. exe which forced him to dodge out of the way. "Oh, I see... because you can't control your navi like a rank amateur, you've created another villainous minion for us to fight!"

"Oh just shut up already!" Lan declared. "You're not a hero and this isn't according to one of your scripts, because any half intelligent director would throw you off the set! Holy Shock!"

Viddy and Videoman. exe both blinked at that declaration. "Oi, Viddy, give me something here!" the video-themed navi declared as he flung the Wind Cutter at Megaman. exe... only for the blue navi to thrust out his arm, flinging forward a green spark that blasted it's way through the attack and raced towards Videoman. exe. "That attack can move!"

"Ugh, well it's the mark of a good writer to alter the script around useless actors, Fast Forward!" Viddy declared as he slotted in one of his custom chips for Videoman. exe... and the audience was treated to the sight of Videoman. exe constantly forced to run away from the powerful blast as he tried to wait it out. Occasionally he had to leap back to dodge a blast from the Spikey. "Come on you useless navi! Are you going to let this amateur show you up?"

Videoman. exe growled... but before he could say anything the spark collided with him... only for the video-themed navi to leap out of the dust thrown up by the attack unharmed.

"Wait, didn't he get hit by that attack?" Atsuki asked. He and Mayl, the next battlers on after Lan and Viddy, were in the waiting room for their battle.

Mayl shook her head. "No, he showed some kind of projection trick in the last match." She explained. "The spark probably hit a projected copy of Videoman... but I'm pretty sure that the match is going to be over now." Atsuki looked at her and cocked his head... and Mayl grinned. "When Lan gets like this, he plays smart. Everything so far has just been set up."

"Heh... I'll enjoy facing him after I've beaten you..."

"Keep dreaming."

As Videoman. exe leaped into the air he gathered another Wind Cutter and chuckled to himself. His body still glowed the red of the Fast Forward Chip. There was no way that even with regular controls that Megaman. exe would be able to dodge this one. But as he went to throw it another shape leaped up at him... and he flinched. as Ring. exe floated in the air right in front of him... and then he felt them hit. Two sparking rings collided with Videoman. exe before reversing direction and doing so again, sending electricity coursing through his body as he crashed to the ground and the red glow faded. Videoman. exe groaned, about to bark at Viddy to ask what was taking so long for a Rewind chip.

"Boomer in, triple download!"

That caused Videoman. exe to glance over at Megaman. exe as he held up a glowing boomerang. "Program Advance: Hell Boomerang!" Megaman. exe declared as he flung the Boomerang at Videoman. exe at breakneck pace. Videoman. exe stiffly pulled up his tapeline to block it... only for it to suddenly be burnt away as the Spikey's fireball blasted it. As the boomerang swung past Videoman. exe they split into three... and each one swung back around and cut into the navi.

"Viddy, quick, use-"

"AreaGrab! Elec Sword!"

Videoman. exe cried out again, as Megaman. exe suddenly blurred across the battlefield. He hadn't even seen him slice, but now the navi was right in front of him... and if it wasn't for the fact that the electricity coursed through him, leaving him stunned he'd retaliate. Videoman. exe could only watch as Megaman. exe looked at him... and he saw that glare. The same glare that the navi's NetOp had been giving Viddy. The look of a warrior fully prepared to kill. So it frightened him even more as Megaman. exe raised his hands.

"Not going to work on my watch." Viddy snarled as he finally put in a Rewind chip. While Videoman. exe couldn't move the chip would heal him. And once he did, once he got past the attack, then Videoman. exe could take advantage of the boy's recklessness and-

"Air Hockey, triple download!"

Viddy paled at that as did his navi. Both Megaman. exe and Lan had shouted that in unison, moved in unison. He had heard rumors but to bear witness to a navi and human in Full Synchro frightened Viddy. "W-wait, about your friend, there must be something I can-"

"Program Advance: Pit Hockey!"

For Videoman. exe it was like he had been hit by hundreds of blows at once as the hockey puck zipped out of Megaman. exe's hands and blasted around the arena at a breakneck pace. It battered him over and over again and left him unable to make a move. And it only made his stomach drop as the two shouted out once more.

"Sword, WideSword, LongSword, download! Program Advance: Life Sword!"

And with that... Videoman. exe knew only oblivion.

"Flawless Victory!"

"That's a pretty good impression. How long did you have to practice to get your voice to do that deep echoing rumble?"

Lan panted as he stopped and looked at the screen... and sighed. They had done it... they'd won. Hub grabbed the Pit Hockey out of mid air, as Videoman. exe's data deleted. "You did say you wanted to bury Videoman somewhere nice didn't you?" Lan asked coldly. "Where else is nicer than an amusement park?"

"Ah, to be buried in an amusement park... how nice of you Hidenosuke..." the voice of Videoman. exe sounded from Viddy's PET. He sounded... really out of it.

'Okay, maybe we overdid it a bit...' Lan sweatdropped as Viddy screamed at his navi to not use his real name while Videoman. exe began to deliriously ramble about how the afterlife looked a lot like the inside of a PET. It was entirely likely that the tournament safeties against actual navi deletion were the only reason the video-themed navi survived in any capacity.

"Useless navi..." Viddy growled as he disabled the speaker on his PET. "Miss, disqualify this ruffian! He had no right to treat my poor Videoman that way! He went too far!" he declared.

"Oh will you shut up already?" The group paused. Mami had opened her mouth... but it hadn't been her who had bellowed that. Nor had it been Lan or Hub. But rather, it came from the crowd. "So you lose to the kid despite cheating, and then you suddenly claim that he's playing unfairly?" Mr. Match shouted. "That's just pathetic, there's no spirit behind the way you do things... heck, there's no brains behind it either!"

"And who says I cheated?" Viddy shot back. "I'm just the poor victim of a young man being angry over his friend's navi being useless and-"

"Lan!" All eyes shifted at this point as one Kai Todoroki burst out onto the stage. "I got your e-mail! Are these the three release programs you were talking about?" he asked as he walked up to Lan. At this point, Viddy was sweating.

"Release programs?" Mami asked. "To what?"

Lan smirked. "Oh, Viddy knows... don't you? After all, these programs are shown to be made by one Viddy Narcy... designed to release navis from his sabotage."

"N-now hold on, those could be any programs..." Viddy stuttered even as he backed up a little.

Lan stepped forward. "You know, you never asked me what my name was when you gave me yours earlier. So let me tell you." Lan said. "I'm Lan Hikari. The son of Dr. Yuichiro Hikari. I've been raised with a dad who practically reinvented Navis with his work. A man who works at SciLab. If you're so sure that these aren't yours and you didn't sabotage Megaman... how about we ask someone from there?"

Viddy gulped as the eyes of the entire stadium looked at him. "N-no... I wasn't supposed to..." he trailed off. "I wasn't supposed to lose... the script didn't call for me to lose. The script didn't call for me to... to... to..."

"To almost kill an innocent girl just because you wanted to win?" Lan asked.

"I DESERVE IT! The script called for me to win, and I always play out my scripts!"

"..."

Viddy clamped his hands over his mouth. But it was too late. Two security guards who had rushed up intending to grab Kai instead grabbed Viddy. They walked him out of the stadium. At first there was silence... and then someone clapped. Lan looked up and saw... of all people, Mr. Match was clapping. Soon the entire stadium joined in in applause and cheered. Lan sighed... he honestly hadn't expected Viddy to break down like that. To declare it so willingly. But now... he felt like he had made things a little better.

"Alright everyone! Now that the, ahem trash has been taken out," Mami was clearly suppressing the urge to giggle at her own quip, "we can proceed! The next contestants! The burning spirits of Atsuki Homura and Burnerman!"

The crowd cheered as the cocky blue-haired boy strode down to the battlecomp.

"And their opponents: The grade school girl power team of Mayl Sakurai and Roll!"

"And hurry it up!" Atsuki added in a loud voice. "We're tired of waiting around! It's time for action!"

"Hold your horses!" Mayl called down as she descended the steps.

"Finally!" Atsuki snorted when she arrived. "Let's get this started already! I gotta beat you and then that Lan chump so I can prove I'm the strongest and the hottest!"

"You keep telling yourself that," Mayl waved off the boast. "Maybe in a few years you'll actually be a worthy challenge."

"Oh, and it's already starting to heat up down here folks!" Mami declared as the battlecomp's hologram projected the competing navis into the air. "Let's begin! Atsuki versus Mayl! Battle routine set!"

"Execute!" Roll. exe finished.

"Burn baby burn!" Burnerman. exe leered.

"The lovely Mayl and Roll shall forever be hotter than the both of you put together by at least three points on the babe-o-meter! So sayeth the mighty Apollo!"

"You do know that's not what they meant by 'hot', right?"

"The mighty Apollo rejects that reality and substitutes his own!" (33)

"That explains so much about you..."

"Let's heat things up Burnerman!" Atsuki grinned. "BurnerJets in and download!"

"Rockcubes in and download!" Mayl didn't even miss a beat. On the battlefield, a pair of hovering propane tanks materialized and began to move towards Roll. exe, only for a pair of Rockcubes to appear in their path immediately after and block them from progressing.

"Surprised? I studied your match with Sal after all and came prepared! Get him Roll!"

"With pleasure!" Roll. exe smiled as she floated in position and took aim. "Roll Arrow!"

"Not so fast!" Burnerman. exe grinned. "Burner Arm!"

Burnerman. exe unleashed a jet of blue flame at Roll. exe, only to blink in surprise as her form dissolved into a shower of golden sparks right before impact, his opponent reappearing back out of his weapon's range and shooting a pink arrow with a heart-shaped arrowhead at him.

"That's it?!" Burnerman. exe grunted as he was clipped by the weapon. "You're gonna need to do better than that! Atsuki, send me a BurnSaber!"

"I'll do better than that, I'll send three!" Atsuki grinned.

"Again Roll!" Mayl called out.

"Right!" Roll. exe nodded and charged up another of her arrows and shot it at her opponent.

"As if! Burn Sab–!" Burnerman. exe's confident look turned to one of shock as the arrow hit and he was forced to abort his chip attack. "My... my chip data! What the hell did you do?!"

"Didn't you know?" Mayl smirked. "I mean, we did it in our match with Riki and Crusher. Roll's arrows destroy any chip data that's been sent but not used."

"Filthy–" a sudden burst of feedback cut off the rest of that insult, and several turned to look at Mami who didn't quite seem as embarrassed by the 'mistake' as she might otherwise be.

"BurnSaber!" Burnerman. exe yelled during the distraction and charged forward, a jet of flame jutting from his forehead as he rushed straight into Roll. exe.

"Roll!" Mayl yelled as her navi screamed in pain.

"Hah! If you can't take the heat, then–"

"Cool it!" Mayl yelled as she slotted a battlechip in.

"Blizzard!" Roll. exe yelled as she unleashed a freezing attack that left her fire-based opponent reeling.

"Don't interrupt me!" Atsuki fumed. "Burnerman! Triple flameline in and download!"

"Program Advance! FlameCross!" Burnerman. exe grinned sadistically as he unleashed the attack, only for his opponent to warp out of the way. "And Burner Arm!" he yelled as he opened up with his signature attack as Roll. exe reformed, scoring a direct hit.

"Ha! Give it up girlie!" Atsuki laughed. "Your navi's finished!"

"Roll! Time for the old standby!" Mayl called out.

"As if!" Burnerman. exe leered and prepared to fire again. "Bur–"

"Roll Flash!" the pink navi yelled as she appeared directly in front of Burnerman. exe, her translucent yellow antenna lashing out at him repeatedly and sucking away his vitality to restore Roll. exe.

"Nnnngh!" Burnerman. exe grunted as he felt his body lock up. He'd been in the middle of his attack when that landed!

"What the hell?!" Atsuki stared.

"Oh, didn't you know?" Mayl and Roll. exe smiled the exact same sweetness at their opponents. "Roll's/I'm a heal-element navi!"

"N-no way..."

"And now to finish it!" girl and navi declared together. "BattleChips in and download! Program Advance!"

"It's not possible!" Atsuki yelled as his opponents took identical stances.

"SuperSpread!"

"Burnerman... Deleted!" Mami announced.

"Yeah! We did it!" Mayl and Roll. exe cheered together.

"Wha...?! Bu...?! How...?!" Atsuki began sputtering. "I... I can't believe it! Burnerman defeated... by a girl ?!"

"Bwahahaha!" the loud laughter carried all the way from the audience, the one laughing being Mr. Match. "Serves you right you little brat! Honestly, that's the best you can do?!"

"Geezer!" Atsuki was nearly frothing at the mouth. "Get down here and fight me!"

"As if!" Match barked in amusement. "You're not worthy of my attention, brat! Maybe when you stop wetting your pants at the sight of a decent battler I'll change my mind! Hahahahaha!"

A large number of people sweatdropped at the way Match was needling the loser of the battle. Apparently the man just couldn't help himself.

"You... You stinkin..." Atsuki fumed, and several people could swear they saw smoke coming from his ears. "This stupid... stupid tournament..."

"Hey now!" Mami yelled, offended on behalf of everyone who'd worked to put the tournament together.

"I'll burn it to the ground!" Atsuki's eyes flared with madness. "That's what I'll do! Burnerman! Destroy everything in sight!"

"It's an explosion of burning frustration!" the navi's voice sounded about as grounded and calm as his operator's. That is, not in the slightest.

"Hey! You lost, so take it like a man and get out!" Mami yelled hotly, though she backed up a few steps from the boy who was very publicly losing his grip on reality.

"AAARRRRRGGGHHHHH!" Atsuki and Burnerman. exe yelled together as something exploded. That something being Atsuki's PET since Burnerman. exe had apparently decided to start rampaging before his NetOp could even jack him back in. "GAAAHHHH!" Atsuki yelled as the sparks from his PET caused his clothes to ignite. "Hot! Too hot!" (34)

"Stop drop and roll!" Mayl yelled at him frantically. "Stop drop and roll!"

Hephaestus and Apollo sweatdropped as the boy was finally extinguished and rushed to the hospital for moderate burns.

"There is nothing wrong with a burning spirit, but it's one of those things most mortals should really not take literally."

"The mighty Apollo could not have said it better himself."

"As the battle to be Electopia's champ heats up, I can now announce the final pairing for the Hawk tournament!" Mami declared to an energetic crowd. "After many heart-pounding battles, the finalists are none other than the heroes of Castillo, who saved the entire park from a vicious cyberattack on opening day, the gradeschool sweethearts, Mayl Sakurai and Lan Hikari along with their navis Roll and Megaman!"

The crowd burst into tumultuous applause.

"Be here tomorrow for the final match of the Hawk tournament!"

"Roll..." a lone navi whispered to himself as he watched the broadcast. "Don't worry... I'll save you... You'll n-never have to put yourself at risk ever again... Tomorrow... Yes... I have to d-do it then..."

"Oh, she woke up yesterday and has been doing just fine. Did you all want to go up and visit?"

About the only thing that had prevented the group of friends from charging towards Mary's room was the deeply ingrained respect for hospitals. As it was, they still made pretty good time.

"Hey everyone!" the blonde girl waved cheerfully from her bed. "Congratulations on making the finals Lan, Mayl!"

"Mary!" the resounding cry of relief got the group a dirty look from a nearby nurse and they all sheepishly apologized.

"Why didn't you call?" Lan asked first.

"Well," an amused voice sounded from behind them all, and they turned around to see the chuckling wheelchair-bound form of Mamoru just inside the door where he'd be easily missed by someone entering the room, "we talked a bit after she woke up and agreed that it would be a shame to derail the rather impressive build up of righteous fury Lan had. You're rather intimidating when you're angry."

Lan chuckled sheepishly.

"You know it!" Dex laughed, embarrassing his friend further. "Man, Lan, you gave me chills!"

"Master Lan was only doing what he needed to expose a base scoundrel!" Kai tried to join in the conversation.

"Anyway, thanks for looking after Mary for us, Mamoru," Mayl bowed respectfully.

"Yeah, as long as someone's been keeping her company," Yai huffed.

"Oh, we've been busy watching today's matches and the recaps for both the Hawk and Eagle tournaments," Mary smiled.

"Yeah!" Ring. exe chirped from Mary's PET. "You should have seen Chaud and Protoman in the Eagle semi-finals today. They are sooo dreamy!"

" Ring! " Mary blushed.

"Wait, there's another tournament going on right now?" Lan asked the obvious question.

"Indeed," Mamoru smiled as he wheeled himself over to a pair of makeshift tournament boards. Lan and the others recognized the progression of the Hawk tournament right off, but the other one was new to them. "On the other side of Electopia, the Eagle tournament is being held. On the first day of the first round, Chaud and Protoman faced off against a moderately famous medium by the name of Miyu and her navi Skullman."

"I remember them," Lan spoke up. "Miyu and Skullman are pretty good, but not quite as good as Chaud and Protoman."

"Which is why, despite showing good skill, they lost," Mamoru agreed. "The other match that day was the self-proclaimed 'cyber sage' Koetsu and his male FaceNavi that he named Honami, likely after the historic painter Honami Koetsu, and the priestess of Scissor Island and her navi Windman, apparently considered a minor kami by the island's inhabitants."

"Wait, you mean some people worship a navi as a god?" Yai looked incredulous. As did a few others.

"Eh, that's their problem," Ring. exe dismissed. "But Windman was the real thing. Took Koetsu apart like he was nothing."

"Ouch," Dex winced. "I like Koetsu. He always leaves the best advice on my BBS..."

"In any case," Mamoru continued. "The second day had matches between a policeman by the name of Gorou Misaki and his navi Prismman against a fishmonger named Masa and his navi Sharkman." (35)

"Ow... Man, I remember Sharkman..." Hub winced. "He can be a pain to fight."

"Which is how he won his match. But the second match that day was the one I was most interested in as it was between a boy named Tora and his navi Kingman,"

Lan nodded. He recalled Tora from the N1 Grand Prix and he'd always been a strong NetBattler.

"and my aunt Tamako with her navi Metalman."

Lan's brain promptly skipped a groove as he processed that, and after a moment he slapped his face. "That's right... Your mom runs the Ura Inn and Tamako's her sister... How did I forget that?"

"I'll admit, there's not much of a family resemblance between us," Mamoru grinned.

"I take it your aunt won?"

"Indeed she did," the pride in Mamoru's voice was evident. "Both against Tora and later against Sharkman."

"And I'm guessing Chaud and Protoman beat Lilly and Windman?"

"They had some difficulty," Mary admitted, "but they did win."

"Wow... so Chaud's gonna be facing your aunt in the Eagle finals?" Dex asked. "Man, that must be so cool."

"It is," Mamoru smiled. "I'm very proud of her."

"But the match that has everyone talking is you two's," Mary cut in, looking straight at Lan and Mayl. "The 'heroes of Castillo' who took time out of their date to beat off an attack on the park by a cybersyndicate now facing each other head to head? The press is eating it up."

Lan and Mayl blushed as their friends devolved into good-natured teasing until the nurses told them visiting hours were over.

Mayl sighed as she led her navi around the net. She'd woken up that morning feeling extremely nervous about the upcoming match with Lan. Thankfully, there had been a waiting e-mail about an SLicense exam being held later that morning before the tournament was scheduled to resume, so she'd talked Roll. exe into going ahead and taking it. Only the heavens knew just how much a bundle of nerves she'd be if there wasn't anything to distract herself with.

Of course, they'd changed the exam a bit since Lan took it. There was now an extra step past the hellish survival battle.

"Okay, Roll... the 'suspicious navi' they told us about should be around here somewhere and... Roll? Are you listening?"

"Hmm...?" Roll. exe replied absently. "Yeah, I am, it's just... I could swear I've seen the exact same NormalNavi at least five times since we left SciLab..."

"How can you tell the difference?"

"I can't be certain, but I keep feeling like someone's watching me, besides you of course, and when I turn to look there's this green NormalNavi trying, and failing, to act casual."

"Weird... You don't think he's stalking you, do you?"

"Brr... I hope not... Though maybe he's part of the exam?"

"A really creepy part maybe..." Mayl allowed. "Though I suppose if we can't handle creeps like that, we don't really have any business trying for an SLicense anyway..."

"Argh!" the HeelNavi moaned dramatically. "Defeated by the heroine of Castillo! Oh what a dark day it is for the denizens of the undernet!"

"You're a really hammy actor, you know that?" Roll. exe arched an eyebrow bemusedly.

"Sorry," the HeelNavi chuckled. "Force of habit from the net series I was part of until it suddenly got cancelled. Honestly, I'm just happy to find work period these days. Big fan of yours though! I'll be rooting for you later!"

"Thanks," Roll. exe smiled, "that's really nice to... do you hear that?"

"Yeah, I..." the HeelNavi started before his eyes widened suddenly. "I can't move!"

"...me neither!"

"Roll?" the worried voice of Mayl came over the connection. "What's wrong?"

"Someone's using a Tromby virus!" Roll. exe yelled back. "I can't move–ungh!"

Roll. exe felt a sharp blow to the back of her head before she could elaborate.

"Hey! What do you think you're doing?! Get away from-ARGH!"

"Roll?! What's going on? I just lost the visual feed! Roll?! Roll?!"

"I'm sorry it came to this... But everything will be f-fine now... You'll see..."

That was the last thing she heard before she blacked out.

Lan stretched as he walked out of Higsby's. He'd just gotten through feeding a bunch of his spare battle chips into the chip trader, mostly getting nothing special with a couple of interesting vends that he'd have to try out later. In any case, he probably needed to head over to Castillo soon and–

"Lan!" the frantic voice of Mayl shook him out of his thoughts.

"Mayl?" he blinked in confusion. "What happened?" As he asked the question, he got a sinking feeling that he already knew the answer. "Did something happen to Roll?"

"Yes!" Mayl was so worried that she didn't even consider how Lan might guess that. "We were taking the SLicense exam before the match later and Roll said she thought some weird navi was following her, but I thought it might be part of the exam, but then we found the actor SciLab hired for the test mission and got ambushed and... Lan, the creep kidnapped Roll! I can't reach her at all!"

"Calm down Mayl," Lan grabbed his girlfriend and tried to will her to get a grip on herself. "Hub and I will get her back, don't you worry. Do you have any leads?"

"Yes, actually," the answer came not from Mayl but from Yai who was running up. "Mayl called me before she went looking for you and I sent Glide to interview the test's actor. He says the guy took off too quick to know where he was headed, but the actor recognized him anyway. Apparently he's a regular shopper in the ACDC area. Glide asked around and found a netmerchant that delivered a Timpani chip and some trained viruses recently to a certain web address."

Lan blinked. "Aren't those things supposed to be confidential?"

Yai smirked. "Merchants run on two things: Money and reputation. Between offering to put in a substantial order and threatening to leak that he served questionable clients, he talked pretty fast."

"Ung..." Roll. exe moaned as she came to, only to find herself surrounded by mettaur viruses. With the distinct oppressive feel of her ability to jack out being blocked. Oh look, there was that weird green navi that had been following her earlier. And now that she got a closer look at him, she recognized him as the same guy who commissioned a pretend girlfriend on the city NetBattler board a while back. "You!" she accused. "What the hell do you think you're doing?!"

"It's n-not what you think..." the NormalNavi stammered.

"Really? Because I think you knocked me out and are trying to keep me hostage with a bunch of viruses."

"I-It's... I can e-explain! I-I've always liked you Roll... and..."

"And you think that makes it okay to kidnap me ?!"

"Y-you don't understand!" the green navi fumed. "Y-you can't N-NetBattle! You'll j-just g-get hurt! I c-can't let you b-be hurt, hehe...!"

"You take one step closer you pervert and I'll stick a Roll Arrow where the sun doesn't shine!"

"Th-that's not a very nice thing to say... I-I'm the n-noble knight, here to protect you f-from that vile Megaman who would p-put you in danger!"

Roll. exe gaped at the sheer delusional audacity in that statement. "I... do not need ... nor want ... your protection!" she ground out in barely restrained fury.

"Now, now, n-no need to be angry... I-I'm the good guy he–"

"Wow, seriously?" a new voice interjected sarcastically.

"Mega!" Roll. exe yelled with relief.

"NO!" the green navi yelled as he whipped around to see Megaman. exe staring at him with calm bemused contempt. "You c-can't be here! Roll's mine! All mine! You can't have her back!"

"...You really are a piece of work, aren't you?" (36)

"Shut up!" the navi yelled, getting into a combat stance. "It looks like I'll have to teach you a lesson!"

"Yeah..." Megaman. exe didn't look the least bit impressed. In fact, he was looking straight at Roll. exe and smirking knowingly. "I don't think you're going to get the chance, genius."

"W-what do you mean...?"

"Roll Charm!" his captive called out and a wave of pleasant emotion washed over the area just behind the green navi. He turned slowly to see the mettaurs he'd special-ordered looking at his captive with hearts in their eyes. "Okay, boys..." Roll. exe smiled in a way that was far from nice and pointed at her captor, "get him."

As one, the mettaurs turned towards the green navi and brandished their pickaxes.

"AAAAAAHHHHHH!"

"Oooo..." Apollo winced. "The great Apollo wonders if navis even have proctologists..."

"He's certainly going to need one after that." (37)

"It's time for the finals of the Hawk tournament, folks!" Mami exclaimed as Lan and Mayl approached the Castillo battlecomp. "And here are the finalists! The heroes of Castillo, the lovely Mayl and the graceful dynamo Roll!" Mami introduced as the crowd went wild. "versus her boyfriend Lan and the super fighting navi Megaman!"

The castle attraction vibrated from the force of the cheers.

"Are you ready?" Mami asked, getting nods from both competitors. "Battle routine, set!"

"Execute!" Hub and Roll. exe smiled at each other.

"Let's start it off big!" Lan yelled as he sent chip data to Hub. "Triple download!"

"Program Adv–"

"Roll Arrow!"

Hub grunted and swore as the hit cost him the program advance he was about to unleash before opening fire with his Mega Buster, only for Roll. exe to teleport out of the way in a shower of golden sparks.

"You're gonna need to do better than that, Lan!" Mayl taunted. "Especially after you showed me how SciLab's virus breeder works! Virus Chip in, download! Jelly!"

"Ack!" Hub started at the sight of the virus and opened fire on it before it sent a Wave attack his way, allowing Roll. exe to get another hit in.

"I'm not sure you're taking me seriously, Mega..." Roll. exe frowned.

"Try this, then! Thunder times four!" Hub yelled as he sent out a quartet of lazy sparks that Roll. exe easily outpaced, only to get hit by a charged shot while she was distracted. "And AreaGrab!"

Roll. exe blinked as Hub vanished.

"And now this! Triple download!"

"Program Advance! Hyper Burst!" Hub yelled from behind Roll. exe, giving her just enough warning to warp behind him and use her Roll Flash ability to siphon his health and restore her own.

"Get serious already, Lan!" Mayl yelled as she slotted in chips of her own. "Here, Roll! Vulcan times four!"

"AGH!" Hub yelled as shot after shot peppered him.

"Aha!" Lan yelled triumphantly. "You wanted us to take you seriously, then take a look at our brand new power! Unison chip in and download!"

"What chip?" Mayl and Roll. exe asked together.

"Double Soul activate!" Hub yelled as a form of yellow red and gray seemed to wrap around him before releasing in a way that made the cyberscape quake with force. "GUTSSOUL!"

Mayl and Roll. exe stared at what looked like Megaman. exe, but wearing armor patterned after Gutsman. exe.

"And take a look at what it does! ColorPoint! SuperVulcan!"

"Sanctuary!" Mayl yelled as she slotted the chip in just in time for the HolyPanels to protect Roll. exe from the onslaught of bullets.

"Here I come!" Hub yelled as the attack ended, charging in as he charged up.

"Swordy!" Roll. exe yelled as the virus chip was slotted in, along with another. "Scuttle!"

"Whoa!" Hub's eyes widened as he punched the Swordy virus instead of his intended target and got slashed for his trouble, followed by the Scuttle virus blasting him as well with another Roll Flash for good measure.

"So that's it..." Roll. exe glared dangerously as her virus summons flanked her. "You wanted to show off a new trick... Well I'm not impressed! Program Advance! SuperSpread!"

"No, this isn't me showing off," Hub answered as he barely withstood the attack thanks to the Undershot program. "This is me channeling the power of Gutsman's soul with my own. And while Gutsman isn't the most eloquent, he is right about something..." Hub glared back as he aimed his buster. "Sometimes it's best to just stand your ground and fire away!"

Roll. exe did her best to dodge as Hub began firing rapidly with a dead ringer for the GutBuster, the attacks of her virus summons splashing off a green invincibility aura like those granted by the Trumpy virus. As she was peppered by several shots and her summons slowly shredded, she noticed that the buster only fired in rapid invincible mode for a scant few seconds before the onslaught and protection died down. She charged up her Roll Arrow and timed the protection before shooting.

"Recover300! In and download!" Lan smirked in triumph right before Roll. exe fired and Hub healed many of his wounds before Roll. exe's shot hit.

"Argh!" Mayl fumed. "Okay, let's finish this Roll! Sword! WideSword! LongSword!"

"Well, if you insist," Lan smirked. "Sword! WideSword! LongSword!"

"Program Advance!" Hub and Roll. exe yelled together as they charged each other and swung. "LifeSword!"

The two program advance blades clashed and locked together as the navis pushed against each other. Hub in GutsSoul braced against the ground and Roll. exe's airshoes blasting in overdrive to keep her in place.

"Still think I'm not taking you seriously?" Hub stared into Roll. exe's eyes through the crossed blades. "You have a kind and gentle power, Roll. You love and care for everyone, including your opponents, no matter how terrible they're being. It's a power I've only faced once before," Hub's voice dropped low, to where the only ones outside Roll. exe herself who could hear him were their operators Lan and Mayl, as he brought out a pristine emblem bearing the number '1'. "When I earned this. The rank of the king of the undernet."

Deep in the undernet, the former king Serenade. exe smiled serenely as she watched the match her subordinates had been kind enough to arrange viewing of. She couldn't hear what was being said, and she doubted most would be able to catch the tiny trinket being flashed, but she did. And she knew exactly what it meant.

"Well now, it seems this just got interesting."

Roll. exe stared back into Hub's eyes and understanding flashed through her. He wasn't treating her like an opponent who had to be brought down no matter what, he was treating her like the strongest of rivals.

"So as the king of the undernet, I'm hereby making this a rank challenge. You win, and you become the new king."

"Don't you mean queen?" Roll. exe whispered back.

"Nope," Hub chuckled softly as the LifeSwords began to lose cohesion despite never finishing their attack sequence. "The last king was a girl too."

Any further conversation was cut off as they both jumped back from each other and got ready. Roll. exe shot another arrow, only to have a Curse shield pop up in front of her target as his DoubleSoul ran out that jumped at her right after being hit.

Hub and Roll. exe stared each other down, knowing that the next move might very well be the last one. As they did, Hub felt the resonance of souls. The power born of mutual respect, admiration, and in this case... perhaps something more.

"Let's finish this, Roll! Double, Triple, Quad Needles in and download!"

Mayl and Roll. exe moved as one and took aim at their opponents. "Program Advance! Arrows!"

"Invisible!" Lan and Hub yelled together as Hub vanished, the program advance missing him completely. "And VariableSword! Sonic Wave Technique!"

Roll. exe attempted to warp to the side, but the wave was large enough to clip her anyway, and the two that came after it finished her. She found herself back in Mayl's PET the next moment.

"Roll... deleted! The winner of the Hawk tournament! Lan and Megaman!"

Lan smiled and waved as he was presented with the Hawk trophy, idly recognizing the presenter from the DenCity tournament, but his mind was preoccupied waiting for the other shoe he knew was about to drop.

And he wasn't disappointed. Beneath the tumultuous cheers, a sinister laugh began building. As it grew louder, more and more of the spectators grew silent in confusion.

"What... what is this?" Mami the announcer spoke into her microphone out of habit.

"So Megaman..." a deep dark voice echoed over the castle. "You thought you would emerge the victor today..."

"Lan...?" Mayl asked in worry from her spot off to the side, having been recognized as the runner-up right before Lan was presented with the trophy.

"I'm not sure," Lan told her, 'but I've got a good idea,' he added silently. "Who are you? Show yourself!"

"I? I am the leader of the DarkChip syndicate Nebula. I am here to collect the power that destroyed Shademan."

There was a sudden sound as part of the floor slid away and the tournament's battlecomp came ratcheting up into position.

"The... the battlecomp!" Mami shrieked. "It's...!"

"Lan and Megaman, you will jack into the battlecomp now, or else no one will leave this stadium alive..."

"Alright Nebula!" Lan yelled. "Here we come!"

"We're coming too, Lan!" Mayl yelled as she joined Lan at the battlecomp. "Jack in! Roll!"

"Megaman!"

"Execute!" they both finished together.

Hub and Roll. exe appeared in the battlecomp and looked around to see... an empty cyberscape.

"I don't get it..." Roll. exe puzzled. "It's empty."

"He probably just wants to make a flashy entrance," Hub said, before wincing as a sharp buzz hit his systems.

"Or perhaps you can sense my arrival as your body resonates with my DarkPower," the voice chuckled as a staticy portal opened up and a black-bodied navi with glowing blue lines framing and decorating his form, plus a single eye that pulsed with sinister light appeared. "I am Laserman... the mighty leader from the dark world..."

"Yeah, and what do you want?" Hub took a cautious stance.

"Why you, Megaman... With your power, the power that was able to destroy the mighty Shademan, we can make the dark world complete!"

"Yeah, right!" Roll. exe spat before Hub could respond.

"This does not concern you, little girl," Laserman. exe dismissed. "Only Megaman. It would be a shame to have to delete you."

"I'll never join your evil ranks!" Hub glared angrily.

"Yeah!" Roll. exe added as Laserman. exe began to chuckle again.

"The hate in your eyes is proof of your dark potential! You see us as 'evil', but our cause is just and honorable. It is hypocrites like you that are truly evil!"

"Are you insane?" Mayl asked with an expression of disgust.

"Our goal in Nebula is to completely destroy this worthless hypocritical world and return it to its natural state... as a world of evil!"

"Wait..." Hub blinked as the flip-flop registered. "So... are you saying you're evil or not?"

"Hehehehehe..." Laserman. exe ignored the question. "I can see the darkness within you. So quick to brandish BattleChip weapons... instinctively destroying virus after virus... the joy you take in battling even those you call 'friend'... The bloodthirst that drives you is a DarkSoul!"

"You are insane if you think Mega's anything like that!" Roll. exe accused. "You won't get away with this! Come on Mega, let's show this creep what we can do together!"

"Hehehe... How touching..." Laserman. exe didn't seem concerned in the least. "But such devotion provides the perfect opportunity! To show Megaman the power of his DarkSoul!" Laserman. exe raised his hand, in which was set a digital crystal that glowed a sickly green. "The dark strength for which loyalty and friendship is no match!"

The digital crystal glowed brighter and Hub felt a tugging at something deep within him. "Ungh!" he grunted as the pull forced him to his knees.

"Embody DarkSoul!"

"GggnnnnnnnnaaaaaAAARRGGHH!" Hub yelled as a shadowy black mass forced its way out of his body and took on a shape that mirrored his.

"Mega!" Roll. exe rushed to his side as Laserman. exe boomed with laughter. "What did you do to him?!"

"I merely freed his evil power, his DarkSoul, from within."

"R-roll... Watch out..."

"Go DarkSoul! Destroy Megaman using his worthless 'friend'."

"Wha–?" Roll. exe turned just in time to catch a glimpse of the shadowy form before it entered her body.

"Roll!" Hub yelled, getting to his feet.

"M-mega... r-r-run... b-before..."

"Roll?" Hub reached for her, dreading what he already knew had to be happening.

"SuperVulcan!" a darkened Roll. exe cackled with glee as she pumped the shots into Hub from point-blank range.

"Lan!" Mayl yelled in a panic. "I... I can't stop her! She's not responding to anything I do!"

"AirHockey AirHockey AirHockey!" the possessed Roll. exe grinned impossibly wide as she fired off the BattleChips in succession.

"Roll–argh! Get ahold of yourself!"

"It is no use..." Laserman. exe watched with dark glee, content to make no move to aid or hinder either of them. "This is the power of your DarkSoul, stronger than that of your beloved Roll! Fight! Fight the way you were born to and destroy Megaman!"

"I refuse to believe that!" Hub shouted as he blocked a LongSword with a WideSword of his own.

"Believe what you wish... it changes nothing. The DarkSoul's power is absolute!"

"Lan, you have to heal Megaman!" Mayl looked ready to burst into tears at being unable to do anything.

"I've got a better idea," Lan declared as he brandished the Recover300 BattleChip. "We'll fight soul power with soul power! Sacrifice Recover300 for soul unison! Unison Chip in! Download!"

"Double Soul activate!" Hub stood his ground as a form of pink shades with some yellow converged on him before releasing in a wave of soft light that made it seem like everything would be okay. "ROLLSOUL!"

Mayl's breath hitched as she took in Hub's form. Clad in pink armor like Roll. exe's and sporting a quartet of translucent yellow antenna, he still seemed every inch the warrior. "Is... is that...?"

"It is the conclusion of the great Apollo that pink never looked that badass even in the mortal eras when it was considered a manly color."

"I doubt I could agree with you without someone claiming bias on my part."

"Pathetic..." Laserman. exe scoffed. "A futile gesture."

"Says you!" Hub shot back as he used a pair of AreaGrabs to dodge the possessed Roll. exe's next attacks, and blocking two more with a Sword and LongSword, each use of a chip causing his wounds to heal up until he seemed barely injured at all.

"Die!" the possessed Roll. exe cackled and charged headlong at Hub.

"If it's a bet between my darkness and Roll's light," Hub yelled as he met the charge by catching Roll. exe's hands with his, locking them both in a struggling stalemate, " I know which one my money's on every time! "

The two combatants pushed against each other mightily before the maniacal expression on Roll. exe's face began to contort.

"M-m...ega... h-help... me..."

"I'm right here Roll! Fight it! I know you can beat this thing!"

"Impossible..." Laserman. exe's tone and expression were unchanging, but he seemed just the slightest bit surprised.

"Mayl!" Lan called out. "Now's your chance! If you can connect with Roll, then you should be able to force the DarkSoul out!"

"Got it!" Mayl's tears dried as her face took on a determined expression. Focusing, her hands moved almost of their own accord and searched out three BattleChips before slotting them in silence.

"G-g-g-g-g..." Roll. exe's face contorted as the DarkSoul tried to fight back, before a light began to glow within her, brighter and brighter until it erupted in a blinding flash, the only shadow being the DarkSoul as it was forcibly ejected from her body. "GAH!" Roll. exe slumped in exhaustion as the light died down, falling into Hub's arms.

"Roll!" Hub cried out, cradling her protectively. "Are you okay?"

"I... I'm fine Mega..."

"How unfortunate..." Laserman. exe turned to stare at the two and made a gesture with his hand that the DarkSoul responded to.

As the shadowy form of himself rushed towards them, Hub twisted to shield Roll. exe with his body. He felt a coldness pass into him that forced his DoubleSoul to terminate sooner than expected, but at least it didn't try to possess Roll. exe again.

"Truly you can feel it, Megaman?" Laserman. exe prodded, and Hub had to admit he could. The dark sinister urges at the back of his mind, now strong enough that he could feel them pulsing... waiting... wanting... "That is your true self. Do you understand the evil that lies within you? Do you understand that there is no one right or one wrong? Do you understand why I must sever the bond that holds you back?"

Hub froze as that last part registered and turned to see Laserman. exe's eye glowing brighter in a clear intent to attack, and he was staring straight at Roll. exe...

"Not so fast!" a crimson blur flashed in front of Laserman. exe, causing him to flinch and clutch a shallow cut on his face.

"Protoman!" Lan and Hub identified the newcomer with no small amount of relief.

"Sorry we're late," the voice of Chaud came over Protoman. exe's connection, "but I had to send Protoman from the other side of Electopia."

"Hmm..." Laserman. exe straightened back up and considered Protoman. exe for a moment. "It seems it is time for me to take my leave. I look forward to you joining our cause when we next meet..."

"Protoman! Don't let him escape!"

"Roger!" Protoman. exe dashed for the Nebula leader with a flash of his blade as the dark navi was surrounded by a staticy field, but his sword only cut empty space.

"If you continue this foolishness," Laserman. exe's voice echoed with parting words, "then deletion shall be your fate!"

The only response was Chaud's loud swearing.

"That is one nasty piece of work... Are you certain this 'DarkSoul' thing isn't viral?"

Hephaestus sighed heavily. "While I'll freely admit there are similarities with known viral entities, such as whatever is in control of the Malicious Looping Entity known as Waltz, every check I've run indicates the answer is 'no'."

"But you aren't completely sure."

"There is precious little about this branch that I'm completely sure of."

Apollo was thoughtfully silent for several long moments. "If you'll excuse me for a moment, I need to cash in some blackmail and light a fire under dad's ass regarding getting approval for our petition as soon as divinely possible..."

"Where do you even keep your blackmail stash any..." Hephaestus trailed off as Apollo whipped out a phone and facepalmed as it became obvious. "You stash it all with Artemis, don't you? You know she's serious about that threat, right?"

"Of course, why do you think the sensible Apollo is calling instead of going in person?"

"Do you have something Dr. Regal?"

"Hmm? Oh, no. At least not related to our project. My netnavi was just speaking to me about a personal matter. Do continue Dr. Hikari."

Dr. Regal smiled as the giant laser began to power up. After the few intensive weeks of work, they'd managed to construct the device and calculate the required shot. There was, of course, plenty of cut corners that in ordinary circumstances would have been unforgivable. For one, the systems were only rated for half the needed energy output, meaning that charging up a strong enough laser to get through the atmosphere and overcome the scattering effect superheated air had would likely blow out a great many very sensitive, expensive, and in some cases unique pieces of equipment.

Then there was the fact that (among other things) the day's weather, along with the placement of orbital debris and other celestial bodies, as well as the rotation of the Earth itself, were in the best alignment that could possibly be hoped for. Even if they could take another shot, they weren't going to get a better one than this.

"We have done all that we could," he stated in response to the others' worries. "Let us hope that our luck holds out. If you would, Dr. Hikari, the laser..."

"Of course, let's proceed" the man said formally. He hadn't warmed up to Dr. Regal during the course of the project, but then his approval wasn't required. Only his industry. "Blue Moon Laser... on! Red Sun guidance systems active. Targeting path set. Power transfer is holding steady. Power at 80% of system tolerance... 95%... 99%... 100%... 110%..."

The platform started shaking as the laser's systems protested the overcharge.

"Shouldn't you fire?" a man who'd clearly not been paying attention at the briefings asked.

"Not yet!" Dr. Hikari called back. "The systems need to be charged to 200% of tolerance before they'll be able to shift the asteroid's path! 150%..."

Dr. Regal tensed as the moment of truth approached.

"170%... 180%... 190%... 200%! Fire!"

Only Dr. Regal heard the chuckling laughter as an intense beam of energy lanced into the heavens and he allowed himself a small smile as he saw Dr. Hikari's expression fall.

"No!" the man slammed his fist into the console.

"What's wrong, Dr. Hikari?" someone asked.

"Right when the laser fired, the energy charge dropped to 120%... We... We failed... Even a direct hit wouldn't shift the asteroid's course and many of the key components were likely still fried..."

"Who would do such a thing?" Dr. Regal asked with plausible incredulity.

"It had to have been a malicious navi, but not many could operate in the Laser's computer while it was channeling so much power. Check everything for possible tampering and assess system damages immediately. We need to see what can be salvaged for another attempt... We're running out of time..."

With that, Dr. Hikari stormed off, leaving a shocked group of scientists.

"I... I can't believe Dr. Hikari's plan failed..." a woman voiced the disbelief of the group. "What... what will happen now?"

"I have a plan," Dr. Regal stated calmly, but with the distinct inflection of one who had just gotten inspiration.

"R-really?" every eye suddenly turned to him, desperate for hope, no matter how crazy or questionable it might seem.

"I will need an expert operator and navi," Dr. Regal relayed calmly, not daring to show the smile he had within as things came together perfectly.

Lan was bored. Really bored. There just wasn't a whole lot to do besides wait in the weeks before he was contacted about entering the Red Sun tournament. Or the Blue Moon tournament. Whichever it was going to end up being.

Apparently, there was supposed to be a surprise match between the winners of the Hawk and Eagle tournaments, which would have been Chaud (who had been sporting a rather impressive bandage on one hand for a few days and had given Lan an odd look when he was asked if he actually punched the rock). However, with Laserman. exe's attack, Chaud had pulled the Official card and shut that down so he could investigate.

At least the fans hadn't been disappointed. They hadn't even known there was anything to cancel.

In any case, he had talked Hub into doing some exploring on the net to see if they found anything interesting. So far it had just been them trying out some of their lesser-used and newer chips on the standard viruses to see what worked for them.

The GunDelSol1 had taken a bit of trial and error to work properly, but wow... Instant destruction of obstacles, no harm to mystery data, and a few seconds of rapid hp drain on anything unfortunate enough to be caught in its beam that made the effect of poison panels look like a case of the cybersniffles. And it only got stronger if Lan held the PET in sunlight.

That chip was going into their main folder after this.

"Psst! Hey, bud!" a low voice hissed at Hub from the shadows of an off-the-beat path.

"What?" Hub questioned.

"Was that a GunDelSol1?" a fairly standard HeelNavi peeked out.

"Um... yes...?" Hub hesitated.

"Awesome! I've been looking for one of those! What'll you trade it for?"

"Nothing," Hub and Lan stated together.

The HeelNavi blinked and stared at them calculatingly. "Then what about betting it? A competition. Your GunDelSol1 against the GunDelSol2 I found in the undernet."

Hub blinked. "Why in the world would you bet a stronger chip?"

"Because I hear that if you use all three versions at once, something amazing happens," the HeelNavi grinned in challenge. "And I'm a big fan of the series. So I propose that the bigger fan wins both chips, you in?"

"Lan?" Hub questioned.

"...Oh, why not?" Lan replied after a moment.

"Okay then, on three hold up the chip and shout it out with all your soul!"

"Shout wha–"

"If you're a real fan, then you should know! Ready? One... Two..."

"TAIYOHHHHHH!" Lan and Hub yelled together, focusing all of their love for the series into that one word as the latter raised the GunDelSol1 to the digital sky.

The cry died down to its own echoes across the cyberscape and Hub looked to see the HeelNavi staring at him in slack amazement, his own GunDelSol2 barely held in limp fingers.

"Um... aren't you going to go too?"

"No..." the HeelNavi shook his head and held the chip manifestation out. "No need. You... you're true fans... You deserve to have this... Take it. May you keep the Sun always in your heart."

"Thank you," Hub bowed as he accepted the data. "I will. For the Sun shall rise tomorrow."

Hephaestus blinked as he watched Apollo press a key on his portable terminal. "What are you doing?"

"The brilliant Apollo is using his patented sneeze button!"

"Your wha... You just made Django sneeze in response to that scene, didn't you?"

"I'm Ozuma, director of this attraction's theme 'Django the Solar Boy'. How do you like this Vampire Manor? Impressive, wouldn't you say?"

"It really is," Lan smiled.

"Yeah, we're big fans of the series," Hub agreed.

"Really now?" Ozuma mused as he considered them. "Hmm... I wonder just how big... You know the NumberTrader at Higsby's I assume?"

"Well, yeah..." Lan blinked, not sure what to make of the sudden subject change. He'd found a few nifty lottery codes around and gotten some useful stuff. Nice to have, but hardly earth-shattering.

"Then listen close," Ozuma motioned Lan to lean in. "I made a special version of the GunDelSol BattleChip available only through Higsby's NumberTrader, but only true fans of the series can figure out the lotto hint. Are you ready?"

Not sure what to make of this, Lan nodded.

"Okay, then. In order, how many petals does Master Otenko have? How many snakes are on Carmilla's head? How many dungeons are in Istorakan? How many silver coins are there in total? And finally, how many floors in the Azure Sky Tower? Answer those and the special GunDelSol version is yours! Now the question is, can you find the answers?"

"Okay, Lan..." Hub focused as they crouched over the NumberTrader. "Master Otenko has seven petals. Four snakes grow out of Carmelita's head."

"Yeah, those are the easy ones," Lan muttered as he punched in the first two numbers. "The number of dungeons is hard though... Twenty nine!"

"I kind of thought it was funny that you had to list them all from memory to figure that out," Hub smirked as Lan punched in the next two numbers. "And there's a total of thirty silver coins."

"Yeah, and what a pain they were to track down..." Lan replied as he punched in the next two numbers. "And Sky Tower!"

"Ninety nine floors of pure frustration," Hub nodded as Lan put the last two numbers in and they both crossed their fingers as the machine analyzed the number for several nerve-wracking seconds before beeping cheerfully and dispensing the BattleChip they'd come for.

GunDelSol EX, a mega-class version of the GunDelSol chip series.

"Holy..." Lan's eyes widened.

"Oh, yeah," Hub grinned. "We will have some fun with this."

"Megaman, isn't it? I represent the World NetBattle Association. We are about to hold a world-class tournament in Netopia, and as the winner of Electopia's Hawk tournament we are hereby inviting you to compete in the Blue Moon tournament. We would be honored if you would take part."

Lan groaned as he came to and looked around. He was... in a hotel room? Why was he in a...

"Lan, you're awake!" Hub exclaimed in relief from Lan's PET.

"Hub...? What happened...?"

"That guy just came up and sprayed you with some sort of knockout gas and then hauled us both here. I'm just glad they forgot to separate us."

"Knockout gas...?" Lan puzzled over that as his head began to clear a bit.

"Hey kid! Time for you to take a nap!"

"...Hub, I really hope our future memories are right and this is just the Blue Moon prelims being unnervingly realistic. Otherwise, we're in big trouble."

"Well, in either case, let's assume that you can jack me in somewhere so I can unlock the door."

"Right," Lan nodded firmly. "Let's get going!"

Chaud gazed levelly at the two men across from him, one of them holding an icepack over a black eye.

"Okay, I'm here and I'm listening. Now what was that all about?"

"My sincerest apologies, Mr. Chaud," the man who had introduced himself as Mr. Bonds apologized. "I am the one who set this examination up. The idea was to stage a kidnapping where you would be forced to use your NetBattling skills to escape captivity so we could make sure you were indeed a world-class NetBattler."

"So this is about the Blue Moon tournament," Protoman. exe spoke up from Chaud's PET.

"I'm more interested in who thought this was a good idea," Chaud's eyes narrowed. "You may have set up the prelim, Mr. Bonds, but I doubt you're actually the tournament organizer."

"True..." Mr. Bonds sighed. "We were told to test how each potential contestant performed under stress and to make it seem as if they were in real jeopardy. There were protests, of course, but..."

"But orders are orders," Protoman. exe finished.

"Yeah..." Mr. Bonds sighed again. "You're not even the first to defend themselves against the initial assault. James here is the second 'assailant' I've had to employ today after a wild card entry named Jack Bomber kicked the first one in the groin." (38)

Chaud winced in sympathetic reflex.

"And the entrant from Yumland... We never even saw him. Still haven't. His navi just showed up, registered, and left."

"Are you sure it's not an independent navi?"

Mr. Bonds blinked. "It shouldn't be..."

"Hi, I'm Paulie. You Lan?"

"The best virus buster in your village? Wow, you must be pretty amazing."

"I like you Lan. We have a few days before our match, so I would like to take you to see my village's water festival."

Despite his interest, Lan had wondered how in the world a kid younger than him could so casually afford to fly off during the tournament, but it seemed that some of the sponsors were taking the time before the tournament as an opportunity to do backgrounds on several contestants and they were eating the whole thing up. (39)

Though he was getting a little tired of being followed by a guy with a camera, even if he was promised the right to veto any footage involving him from the final cut.

Another thing he was wondering was how accurate his future memories of Paulie almost wiping his entire village out as a ploy to then 'save' it and become recognized were. Sure, he could be just playing friendly so he could show off in front of his upcoming opponent, but Lan also remembered the kid having a HeelNavi, and Jammer's orange and gray form was very clearly an OfficialNavi, the standard navi type developed for police work and typically used in positions of authority.

Of course, that was a question for tomorrow when the Water Festival started. For now, Lan was just relaxing and enjoying the chance to explore another country. He actually wasn't sure if he'd gotten the chance to the first time around or not (assuming he'd actually faced Paulie of course), so it was a pretty cool experience.

"Well, if it isn't Lan!" a cheerful voice called out.

"Mr. Famous?" Lan blinked as he spotted the eccentric navi expert approaching in the bright NetFrica sun. Despite the heat, he was apparently wearing kendo equipment under his open white labcoat and seemed not the least bit uncomfortable. "What are you doing in NetFrica?"

"I've been traveling all over the world since I got back from my vacation, training top-class NetBattlers!" Mr. Famous grinned, his words prompting Lan to think about the last time they'd met and the friendly match Hub had had with a rather intense navi named Punk.exe.

"Speaking of training, how did Punk turn out?"

"Just fine," Mr. Famous smiled. "He was never meant for me though. He's being operated by one of my top students now in fact. I'm operating Kendoman currently since he's my best navi trainer."

"Kendoman, huh?" Lan mused. "Isn't he one of the Blue Moon contestants?"

"Yep!" the man grinned. "The people of NetFrica have liked me so much that when the tournament recruiters came around, they asked me to enter! Sure, it'll take time away from training new apprentices, but I just couldn't say no!"

"Heh... I'd really like to meet Kendoman, even though we'll probably be facing each other in the next round," Lan started, before trailing off as something occurred to him.

"Well, if you have time you can talk to the local youth organization representative in order to find him. Just don't get Kendoman mad! He can be a scary navi when he wants to be!"

"Say, Famous?" Lan interrupted. "Have any of your apprentices ever been... a problem? Someone you had to dismiss who might think the tournament is a good time to maybe get revenge?"

"Hmm..." Mr. Famous stared at Lan thoughtfully for several moments. "I've had to dismiss several apprentices over the years. Most because they couldn't handle the more intense training of the higher levels, and some were quite bitter about it. But there was one person... One apprentice who had great potential but that I had to dismiss because he grew arrogant. I had to place a program seal on his navi disabling everything he'd developed training under me. He left swearing that he'd make me sorry, but I haven't heard from him since... Hmm..."

"Wow... ouch," Lan winced. "What kind of seal?"

"A rather ingenious one of my own design," Mr. Famous smirked. "Embedded into the personal data of his PET rather than the navi. So long as he transfers his personal information like everyone else, the seal will persist even if he switches navis or PETs. The only way to undo the seal is with a display of genuine empathy, transmitted through the link between human and netnavi. At least that's how I designed it."

"That's pretty cool," Lan complimented the man, "but I've learned enough to know that people who obsess over something often find a way around any obstacles, and not always moral ones... Anyway, it was nice meeting you again! Hope to see you in the semifinals!"

Mr. Famous waved cheerfully as Lan sped off. His grin then morphed into a serious expression as he considered the Hikari boy's words. They seemed innocuous enough, but...

"If you went back in time and got to do events over again... and ultimately things turned out pretty well the first time around... would it still be right to try and change things for the better?"

"Curious..." he stroked his chin. It was patently impossible, but yet... Well, if the boy's experiences with the likes of the WWW, Gospel, Cache, and from the rumors he'd heard, Nebula were anything to go by, then the boy seemed drawn to such things. And forewarned was forearmed as so many said.

Idly twisting a knob for a custom feature on his PET, Mr. Famous began to send a message to one of his apprentices.

"Hey sensei!" the mohawked youth greeted. "What's up?"

"How fast can you and the others get to NetFrica?" he asked.

"NetFrica?" the youth blinked. "Wow, that's gonna need more coinage than the NetNavi Killers can really spare boss man."

"You know I hate that name," Mr. Famous frowned. "Why can't you just call yourselves the Elite Four like I suggested?"

"Because it sounds like something a bunch of kids playing around with fantasy monsters would use," the youth rolled his eyes. "Plus Takeshi accepted an invite we all got to some Red Sun thing, so we're down to three. It'll still be a pretty penny out of our fund to pack up and come." (40)

"Maybe not," Mr. Famous smiled. "I've qualified for a Blue Moon tournament myself and the sponsors have been hounding me for something to give the public before the tournament starts, with particular interest in the NetBattlers I've been training. They've offered to pay for travel and lodging expenses to bring a few in, so I think it's time I should take them up on it."

"Protecting the world from devastation and uniting peoples in every nation! Spreading the message of brotherly love and extending that truth to the stars above! They are... Team Famous!"

"Oh, you like to watch Jessie and James too?"

"Why, yes, the mighty Apollo does. The mighty Apollo was not aware you did."

"They build some rather ingenious things for mortals."

Chaud frowned to himself. Chillski and Coldman. exe had given up on cooling the arena way too easily. After all the trouble they'd gone through to corrupt the environment control systems to blast the air conditioning way beyond what it was meant for, it seemed very suspicious.

And then there was what he'd said about going back to Sharo and returning with 'natural cold'.

"Protoman, what information is there about Sharo?"

"The largest land area of any nation on the planet, much of Sharo lies in the northern regions of the world, near the Arctic, making it a very cold country in most areas. The growing season in many areas is shorter than average as a result, making food a primary concern for them even though the nation as a whole is more sparsely populated than the global average. They have excellent military and science programs though, rivaling those of even Netopia or Electopia. A year ago, they unveiled their new weather control system meant to aid their farmers. They also–"

"That weather control system you mentioned," Chaud asked, getting a sinking feeling, "how powerful is it?"

"Not enough to grant total atmospheric control, but it can easily influence warm and cold fronts to... Ah, I see, Lord Chaud. That is what they meant by 'returning with natural cold'."

"Most likely," Chaud sighed. It looked like they were going to have to go to Sharo to stop Chillski from doing something very stupid. 'It's funny... This is precisely the kind of thing I'd expect Lan to land in the middle of...'

Chaud then looked at a quartet of BattleChips in his hand.

"Hey Chaud! Nice seeing you here! Hey, I saw you were facing off against some operator and navi from Sharo named Chillski and Coldman, so I thought you could use these!"

The chips were a HeatShot, a FlameLine, a HeatBreath, and a BlackBomb. All fire-element, which had no inherent advantage over the aqua-element Coldman. exe.

"Why are you giving me these?"

"So you can warm yourself up of course!"

Lan had laughed about it, but it was still strange. The selection seemed random, but Chaud was good at reading people and he was certain Lan hadn't actually picked out four random fire chips from his collection just for a joke.

"What do you mean he never checked in?" the reporter asked the hotel attendant. "He was one of the first to finish registering for the tournament and we know they're all staying here!"

"I don't know what to tell you," the receptionist sweatdropped. "All I have is a room reserved under the initial 'J', but no one ever showed up to claim it..."

Lan had been relaxing in the village in preparation for the beginning of the Water Festival tomorrow, and had seen the introductions for the Blue Moon competitors being broadcast to the world. He was a bit surprised to see that Princess Pride of Creamland was Mr. Famous's upcoming opponent since he'd mostly skimmed the board to see who his opponent would be and find out who would be facing Chillski so he could prepare them. That it had been Chaud actually set his mind at ease.

"But the Blue Moon tournament isn't the only big event going on!" the newscaster declared, turning to his female partner. (41)

"That's right, there's the Red Sun tournament also being held and we'll be covering both in the upcoming weeks! But first, here's a look as the competitors in the Red Sun tournament!"

Lan had done a double-take when he'd heard the words 'Red Sun' and his attention was riveted on the screen. When he saw the first competitor, nothing short of a full Nebula invasion could have pulled his attention away.

"Hub..." Lan made sure his PET had a good view of the television, "is that who I think it is?"

"I... I think it is... Wow..."

"Um... refresh the mighty Apollo's memory... Who is this the mighty Lan and Megaman are recognizing and why do they seem to think they're a big deal?"

"Ah, but that'd be telling!" Hephaestus smirked.

Jack Bomber sweated nervously as the opponent they'd challenged to a game of FootBomb effortlessly stopped his navi's shot. And how could he not? He was almost as big as the freaking goal!

"You recall our agreement, correct?" the monstrous navi intoned with a voice not unlike grinding metal.

"Y-yeah..." Jack gulped. If he and his navi lost without scoring a single goal, then... then they had to withdraw from the tournament. Withdraw and give up their only chance of making the glorious sport of FootBomb bigger than this whole 'netbattling' and 'virus busting' fad.

After that initial shock, Lan had vowed to pay close attention to how the Red Sun tournament developed. As the list of competitors grew, that vow only strengthened.

He recognized Raoul and Thunderman. exe from Netopia readily, as well as Raika and Searchman. exe from Sharo despite technically not having met them yet. The same went for Dingo and Tomahawkman. exe from the remote island of Jawaii.

The ruler of Yumland and his elite navi Cookman. exe had been a surprise, and Lan again gave thanks that the Yumland navis lost in Shadowman. exe's attack under Gospel's orders had been successfully restored from backups.

Then there was the man whose name he couldn't pronounce who dressed in white desert robes. What alarmed Lan about the guy was that he apparently operated Pharaohman. exe. Lan hadn't realized the mysterious navi even had an operator.

Of course, that confusion paled in comparison to 'Soul Battler' Takeshi's navi. The guy's navi was... well, it looked almost exactly like Hub, save for the green color. Though the blue-tinted shades did kind of hide the face, so he might not look exactly like Hub. The way all of his chips manifested red was an interesting little piece of customization too. Yes, Quint. exe was an intriguing navi to learn of. (42)

"And then there's the last contestant of Red Sun, who claims to hail from the 'Lost Civilization of Mu'."

'The what?' Lan scrunched his face up in puzzlement.

"Is she serious?" the newscaster's partner asked incredulously.

"She certainly seems to be, but whatever the case Sherrice and her navi Rideman are world-class battlers."

Lan almost choked on the water he'd been drinking.

"I guess it just goes to show that it takes all types, doesn't it?"

"Lan..." Hub asked, "do you really think they're from a lost civilization?"

Lan finished coughing before he replied. "Honestly, Hub, those memories of an ancient super-virus seem more like the kind of fever dreams we got the last time Dex made pizza."

"That was a long night," Hub nodded. "You kept knocking me out of my rest cycle moaning about how the pink elephants were on parade. Did you all really have to eat that much?"

"But it was so good! "

"Jack Bomber!" the lady from NAXA announced to the crowd as the man in question smirked to himself.

'Hehehe... That fool thinks we'd honor a cheater's bet? Thinks he can show us up at our noble sport and then laugh at us? Well, the joke's on him! Because he thinks he doesn't have to show up now, which means we'll win by default!'

"And the representative from Yumland... J–"

"I see you are as honest as you are brave and skilled," a grating metal voice came from the state-of-the-art battlecomp. The holographic emitters came online and displayed a massive navi composed of mismatched metal parts, red cables from his head that mimicked hair, and a pair of glowing yellow eyes that shone from the shadowed recesses of his head. "That is to say, not at all. Come. Jack your pathetic little navi in so that I may remake him into the junk he truly is!"

"Where is your NetOp?" the announcer asked.

"I have no need of one. I am the solo navi Junkman and I shall crush all before me!"

"Knightman... Deleted! The winner is Mr. Famous and Kendoman!"

Princess Pride stared at the duo as they bowed in unison. They even held their blades identically!

"What... what in the world? How did you manage to do that?"

"Ah, you like it?" Mr. Famous grinned as he held up his training sword. Opening his hand, it became clear that set into the hilt was a custom-model PET. "It's a little something I developed for when I'm operating Kendoman. With it, I can operate solely by movement, making synchronization between navi and NetOp that much easier."

"That's..." Princess Pride swallowed her namesake and forced herself to admit the truth. "That's brilliant... I... I can see where you get your reputation from..."

---

*"Whoosh Protoman! What is the idea of meddling in our business?!"*

"Ex cuse me? Your 'business' created a blizzard over half the northern hemisphere!"

"Exactly! I just starting to cool off! We make you pay for this! When we face you in colosseum we freeze Protoman to core!"

Chaud ignored the cameraman following him (allowed to tag along so that there was video record of any illegal acts on Chillski's part, an assumption that was paying off big) as he went back to the Sharo Space Center. Chillski was little more than a self-centered brat wearing an adult's body, and his navi wasn't any better.

What concerned him was Lan. Those four fire chips had been exactly what was needed to reboot the heating systems. This was far more than mere luck. Lan had known . How he'd known was completely unclear, but he'd still known. There was no other explanation that made sense.

But it would have to wait. He needed to check on the scientist and get back to Netopia for his match.

"Thank you so much for fixing our systems! I apologize for not telling you where we kept our supply of the needed chips, but I see you managed to find them anyway."

Chaud blinked. Of course they'd have a ready supply on hand in case something happened. So why did Lan know one, but not the other? It bore looking into.

"Actually, a... friend of mine gave me some fire chips as a joke when he heard I was facing Coldman so I had them on hand already."

"Really now?" the scientist seemed pleasantly surprised. "How fortunate! But let me replace them before you leave."

"I don't need–"

"Nonsense! It's the very least we can do!"

"Actually, if you really want to thank me, then..."

The scientist listened as Chaud told him what he wanted.

"You are a very cruel kid, you know that?"

"I just have a very low tolerance for crooks."

"Very well. I can't promise anything, but I'll make the necessary calls. And I'm still going to insist on replacing those chips!"

Lan hoped Chaud was doing okay. There had been reports of a massive blizzard that had started in Sharo and was headed for Netopia. Of course, they weren't really able to help repair a closed system from NetFrica, so they'd gone ahead and participated in the Water God quest.

"That's the Water God? A designer water management system for the river?"

"Haha! Indeed it is! But the idea of the Water God is an ancient one for our village, and even though we enjoy many modern comforts we like to honor our ancestors by keeping up our traditions. And so when the system was installed, our village consecrated it as the new home for our ancient water god and we have never once regretted it. The water festival has always been our most sacred celebration, and even if you doubt our god, believe that we'd never want to give up a reason to hold a party!"

"Heh... Yeah, I can get behind that!"

"Would you care to take part in the Water God quest? Most visitors prefer simply to watch, but others seem to enjoy the challenge, plus I've always believed that it does our people good to see the strength and ability of those from other parts of the world."

"I'm not sure... I mean, I'm here on Paulie's invite and I think he wanted to show off before our match..."

"Hmm... yes... Paulie. Paulie has perhaps the most potential of all who live in the village, and he is very talented even at such a young age. But he most of all needs to see that there is strength greater than his out in the world. If you wish to do something for Paulie's sake, I suggest you take part in the quest."

"...Okay, we'll do it!"

Things had gone off as they'd expected, with the launch of a digital totem of the Water God, and a few things that Lan hadn't quite picked up on in his future memories clicked disturbingly into place.

"Last year it flew clear to Sharo's part of the net, but there's no way it'll end up there again!"

It had, and the only one besides Lan and Hub who'd even thought to go search it were Paulie and Jammer. They'd made a beeline for it like they knew it would be there.

And then... right after Lan and Hub returned with it, the Water God totem having been right where they recalled it would be, the river had started drying up and the villagers began to panic. It had happened too fast. There was no way Paulie could have snuck off to infect the Water God. Lan hoped it meant the boy wasn't responsible, but...

"The Water God's system is an endless labyrinth from which few ever return!"

"What about this year's champion? We should send him."

Lan may have missed it in his memories, but he caught the accusing look on Paulie's face even if everyone else was too panicked to notice. The kid had set everything up ahead of time. He hadn't ever had a chance to prove himself the hero, so he'd gone and invented one. It was enough to make Lan ill.

"Lan..." Hub asked as they watched the angry residue of abandoned navis (or were they just another trap to test people?) dissipate, "what are we going to do about Paulie?"

"I... I don't know, Hub. I mean, yeah he did something that could really hurt his village, but he's also just a kid doing something stupid and reckless. Were we all that different at his age?"

"Hey, don't lump me in with you!"

Coldman. exe recoiled as Protoman. exe slashed his ice blocks right back at him.

"Ow*whoosh*!" That's not fair!"

"You're one to talk!" Chaud spat as he wiped snow from his face and glared at the man who refused to remove his thick winter coat, insisting that the weather suit his preferences instead of simply adjusting to the local conditions. The blizzard Chillski had triggered was still in the process of dissipating this far from Sharo, but someone on the tournament staff had insisted on holding the match anyway. There were vendors outside making an absolute killing selling warm coats to the spectators that were bound and determined to watch regardless of the conditions.

"Hmph! Coldman! Lower the temperature! Freeze Protoman to core!"

"Actually, I was just thinking it was time to warm things up!" Chaud smirked as he fingered a few chips. "BlackBomb Battlechip in! Download!"

Coldman gave a whooshing laugh. "Foolish boy! I am ice navi! I shall never make bomb go off!"

"Maybe you won't," Chaud smirked as Protoman dodged around the blasts of cold their opponent was sending even as the sky began to clear, "but we will. Heatshot!"

The area around Coldman blossomed in a massive fireball as the fire weapon ignited the bomb and it took a few moments for the dust to clear before everyone could see that the ice navi was still standing. By that time, the blizzard was subsiding and the weather was beginning to warm up back to where it should be, many spectators gratefully removing their coats as it did.

"You think we fall to fire? We show you what cold really is!"

"Protoman? HawkCut."

The sword-wielding navi dashed right into Coldman. exe's face and slashed once wide and once long, forcing his opponent to log out from critical damage.

"Coldman... deleted! Chaud and Protoman have clinched the match amid the fierce blizzard and the sun shines once more upon the victors!"

"Bah! It too hot!" Chillski complained from where he was once again refusing to remove his winter layers despite them being wholly inappropriate. "I can not battle in such heat! Dat was unfair match!"

"Are you serious?" Chaud glared dangerously. "You hijack the weather for your own selfish purposes and then have the gall to call me unfair?"

"Bah! You kids can never control your temper! Is just stupid game anyway!"

Chaud was torn. On the one hand, part of him wanted to gape at the total and complete hypocrisy he was hearing. On the other, part of him wanted to choke the arrogant man with his own coat until Chillski either stopped breathing or someone actually managed to pull him off.

"Say that again and there is no power in the world that will save you from me," Chaud settled for twitching and growling his threat out dangerously. "You care nothing for anyone, saying and doing anything to suit yourself! But it's over Chillski!"

"What you think you can do to me?"

"Oh, he won't need to waste his strength on the likes of you," a man in an official uniform strode up to the battlecomp. "The international officials are taking you into custody for your crimes."

"What?!" Chillski seemed genuinely shocked.

"Chillski, you are under arrest for hijacking Sharo's weather satellite and using it to perform an act of international terrorism."

"No...! You can not do this to me!"

"We most certainly can," the man stepped forward to cuff Chillski. A brief scuffle ensued where Chillski attempted to use his larger size to overpower the man and escape, but he was quickly subdued. "Add resisting arrest to your list of charges..." the man grunted as he hauled Chillski to his feet. "You have a lot of explaining to do before your pending trial."

"At least let me do it in cold place!" Chillski pleaded.

"About that," the InterOff member smirked darkly. "The nation of Sharo has agreed to expatriate you to NetFrica for holding and trial. We have a nice cell already waiting for you."

Chillski's face was a mask of pure horror. "N-n-netFrica?! I cannot stand such a hot place! You cannot do this to me! Noooooo!"

Chaud could only smile in triumph as the whining man was roughly dragged out of the colosseum.

Paulie fumed as he stormed towards the colosseum for his match against Lan.

Lan... he'd ruined everything! The quest, the Water God, the viruses Paulie had planted that no one but himself and Jammer should have been able to handle. If he'd only... If he'd just...

"ARGH! I'll get you for this Lan!"

"Well, now, that's a good attitude to have," a voice like a creepy used car salesman spoke up from nearby. Paulie whipped around to spot a weedy-looking character walking out of a shadowed alcove. "A very good attitude, kiddo. In fact, I've got a present for you..."

"I'm not a kid," Paulie clenched his fists as the man took out a battlechip from his pocket. A purple-colored battlechip that shadows seemed to cling to.

"Ah, my mistake," the man corrected readily. "And with this very special DarkChip, no one will ever call you a kid again!"

"I don't need it..." Paulie declared, but not as firmly as he'd meant to.

"I'm not saying you do sir , but this thing here? This is the difference between beating your opponent and crushing your opponent."

"Ouch," Apollo winced as Paulie reached out and took the chip. "Bad move, kid."

"I hate you Lan!" Paulie shouted as Hub and the boy's OfficialNavi Jammer crossed cyberswords in the battlecomp. "Do you even realize what you did? You cost me my only chance to be recognized by my village! But once we beat you, they'll have to recognize us!"

"I thought something was up," Lan stared back at Paulie as Hub countered every move Jammer made. "You tampered with the totem on the Water God quest so it would go to the one area of the net that no one else would search. And you tampered with the Water God itself so you could be the hero and save the village from certain doom."

"Yes! And once I was the village savior, they would stop treating me like a kid! It doesn't matter to them how good Jammer and I are, that we're the best for miles around, they still treat me like a kid!"

"You are a kid, Paulie!" Lan shouted back. "Heck, I'm a kid! I'm still in grade school and you've just barely started! There's still a whole heck of a lot neither of us understand about the world, but that's okay!"

"You're just like the adults," Paulie glared and pulled out a battlechip that made Lan's breath hitch. There was only one kind of chip that looked like that... "And I'm through listening to you! DarkC–"

"Don't you dare ."

The command was delivered in stereo from both Lan and Hub, and so forcefully that Paulie froze in place. Heck, Jammer froze in place as well.

"Paulie, if you use that thing, I swear that we will never respect you. Not as an opponent, not as a NetBattler, and not as a person."

"But... you have no idea what–"

"We know exactly what that is, Paulie. It's a DarkChip. It corrodes the spirit of any navi who uses it until they're dragged into the deepest depths of darkness, never to return. It's nothing but pure concentrated evil. We should know, we were forced to use one once to protect a very dear friend of ours, and we're still paying the price. We'll probably be paying the price for a very long time. Doing it now, for nothing more than your injured pride? That's a one-way ticket. It'll get into your head, your heart, your soul. It'll corrode Jammer until there's nothing left of your friend but blackness and rage. Is that what you want for him? To hurt him like that?"

"I..." Paulie looked hurt and terrified, but he wasn't using the chip. "No... I don't want to do that to him... Jammer... I'm sorry... I..."

"It's okay Paulie," Jammer replied. "I'm here for you, just like I promised. Until the end."

"Lan... please... I can't... Take this thing from me...?"

Lan walked slowly over to where Paulie was standing frozen in place and plucked the DarkChip from his fingers. The change was instant. All of the tension in Paulie's body evaporated and he nearly collapsed.

"Thanks... Lan..."

"Anytime. Now... let's finish this properly, eh?"

"Another victory for the generous Lan and Megaman!" Apollo proclaimed as Lan talked the village leader into pardoning Paulie for what he'd done and giving the boy a second chance. Including a second chance to do the Water God quest since the first had been tampered with.

"Indeed," Hephaestus nodded absently as he poked at a few things. A couple of odd changes had cropped up in odd places, like that Paulie boy being tempted with a DarkChip. So far they seemed rather innocuous, but it was more proof that things weren't necessarily going according to baseline at this point.

"–decisively defeated 'Soul Battler' Takeshi and his navi Quint, apprentices of the world-famous Mr. Famous," the reporter finished.

"Indeed they did. What a match! I expect that navi and operator pair may just make it all the way!"

Lan and Hub cheered from where they were watching the coverage of Red Sun in their hotel room, a slew of school assignments they needed to finish to stay with their class strewn about in various stages of completion.

"As would be expected of Netopia's favored duo, but they're going to have stiff competition from their Sharo counterparts, Raika and Searchman! The duo from Sharo's net military are also highly favored to win, particularly after their amazing victory over," Lan did his best to listen to the name, but it sounded like just as much gibberish as it always did, "and his navi Pharaohman."

A replay of Searchman. exe shooting Pharaohman. exe with his Search Scope was seen briefly.

"Ah, but before that happens, they'll each have to get through one of the other semifinalists, and those two are no pushovers!"

"Indeed," the first reporter replied as a scene of Rideman. exe taking out Tomahawkman. exe with a chain attack played. "Raika and Searchman will face off against the incredible dark horse duo of Sherrice and Rideman." The scene switched to show Thunderman. exe obliterating Cookman. exe with a bolt from the cybersky. "While the Netopian tribal powerhouses Raoul and Thunderman will be–"

The television was suddenly drowned out by loud knocks from the door.

"Who in the world could that be?" Lan blinked as he got up to check. Opening the door slightly, he wasn't quite prepared for whoever was on the other side to burst through, put him in a headlock, and start giving him a noogie.

"Aw yeah!" Dex yelled as Lan did his best to extract himself from the humiliating grip of the larger boy. "Who's awesome? You're awesome!"

"Hey Lan!" Mayl greeted cheerfully as she stepped around both boys into the room. "I don't believe it! Are you actually doing your homework?"

"Lan's doing homework? Willingly?" Yai's voice piped up as the smaller girl suddenly zoomed inside. "Quick! Get a news crew! This may be the story of the century!"

"Oh, come on!" Lan complained as he finally got away from Dex. "I'm not that bad!"

"Yes you are," all three of his friends nodded together.

"Yeah, yer worse than Dex sometimes! Yeehaw!" Gutsman. exe's voice joined in.

" Gutsman! "

"What are you guys even doing here?"

"We came to see you compete, duh!" Yai rolled her eyes. "After all, with my private jet, Netopia's practically around the corner!"

"Yeah, Ms. Mari gave us all the same assignments she gave you, so we can stay for the whole tournament!"

"Pity you weren't here the last few days though," Roll. exe added. "Something about visiting the home of another contestant?"

"What's wrong?" Hephaestus asked as he spotted Apollo looking at the gathering of friends thoughtfully.

"The mighty Apollo is trying to decide if the party at the mighty Lan's has too few people or too many."

"If you do anything to influence Mayl to stay the night unsupervised, I will tell Artemis."

"Would the great Apollo do something like that?"

"In a heartbeat."

Chaud blinked as he read the e-mail he'd gotten. "We're being asked to help clean up junk data in Yumland's net?"

"It seems that way, Lord Chaud. Apparently it's becoming quite the problem in certain areas."

"I don't doubt the claim, but... why us?"

"I do not know, Lord Chaud, I..." Protoman. exe cut off suddenly.

"Protoman?"

"Apologies, Lord Chaud, but I had the strangest sensation we were being watched for a moment. As I was saying though, I wonder if this has anything to do with our next opponent."

"Hmm..." Chaud mused. Their opponent was Junkman. exe from Yumland... There was a junk data problem in Yumland... "Entirely possible. Okay, Protoman, tell them we accept. There's a few days before the next round starts while they hold some exhibition matches between the invitees that didn't qualify so inform them that we'll be on the first flight to Yumland to take care of the problem on site."

"You know, that was kind of fun," Hub smiled as he strolled along after the meeting with Kendoman. exe. Just like in his future memories, the strict training navi had sent him off to complete training before he'd meet with him, having no idea that Hub was in fact his next opponent.

"Yeah, and since Mr. Famous apparently flew some of his top apprentices in for interviews from the tournament sponsors he should be just fine before the next round. Hmm... what to do today..."

"Let's see, Yai and Mayl are going sightseeing with Roll and Glide... Dex and Gutsman somehow got roped into some exhibition matches... Mary, Kai, Ring, and Turboman are back home holding the fort in case something happens there... You could always finish your homework."

"Ugh..." Lan groaned. "After last night's marathon study session? No way! I need some time off... Hmm..."

"What is it Lan?" Hub asked.

"The GunDelSol chips... I just remembered something from those future memories of ours. An encounter deep in the undernet..."

"Wait a sec..." Hub paused as the same memories flitted across his mind. "You don't really think that we can actually meet the real Django the Solar Boy in the undernet, do you?"

"There's only one way to find out for su~ure..." Lan wheedled.

"But..." Hub started to protest before giving it up as a bad job. "Ahh... Okay, I'd never forgive myself if it actually turned out to be true. Come on, let's go before I change my mind!"

Chaud's temper was growing, but he did his best to keep it under control. Protoman. exe had been acting strange since he'd gotten back from the data junkyard. Ever since that freak mass of junk data had fallen on top of him in fact. More and more, Chaud was beginning to wonder if Protoman. exe... was really Protoman. exe.

"Tournaments are such a drag, ya know?" said navi drawled with a cocky grin. "Why do we even enter them? Let's just withdraw and go have fun, eh?"

Chaud twitched. There was no way Protoman. exe would ever talk like that unless he was corrupted by bad data... Or unless he was an imposter.

"We can't, Protoman. You remember what we promised Lan and Megaman, right?"

"Uh... yeah, of course!" Protoman. exe hesitated for only a moment. "We promised that we'd beat their punk asses! But we can do that anytime!"

'No...' Chaud managed to force himself to not say out loud. 'We promised them that we'd finally settle which of us is better.' That settled it. The navi that looked like Protoman. exe was actually not Protoman. exe. But if he let on that he knew, there was a good chance that his only lead to where his navi actually was would evaporate. "Exactly," he forced himself to say. "But first, we have a job to complete. I suspect that our upcoming opponent Junkman is both behind the sudden proliferation of junk data in Yumland's net as well as the attack on you in the data junkyard."

"Eh-heh..." Protoman. exe sounded nervous in a way Chaud did not miss. "R-right... Forgot about that... Oh, well... you're the boss...!"

"Indeed," Chaud nodded firmly as he thought over the information he and the real Protoman. exe had reviewed on the flight over. "We'll need advice first. I understand that this part of Yumland has a Buddha statue with its own cyber-space for healing troubled souls. We'll begin there."

"Look," Hub heard a stern wizened voice say up ahead, "just because this time we managed to come to some... strange realm where static fills the sky does not mean that this 'strange blue warrior' of yours actually exists!"

"Look, Master," an exasperated sigh replied, "I told you–"

"Nor does the fact that you suddenly 'recall' his name!" the stern voice interrupted. "Nor does it matter what that lazy bum of a so-called 'god' Apollo says! You managed to keep a hold of the 'Solar Sensor' we need to gather sunlight despite being ambushed by these so-called 'viruses', so let us go ahead and use it! You seem to keep forgetting we have an eternal duty to perform! To cleanse all worlds of undying immortals no matter how many times they are revived!"

"Yes, Master Setsuna..." the sarcastic reply came as Hub drew closer. (43)

"And stop calling me by a woman's name whenever you disagree with me!" the stern voice shouted. "You yourself admitted that certain memories of this 'baseline' were incomplete, and so any developments concerning them are to be viewed with all due suspicion!"

Hub turned the corner and spied the familiar runic diagram of the Pile Driver spread out on a relatively empty portion of the undernet, a decorated black coffin lying in the center. And sitting atop the coffin arguing with a giant floating seven-petaled sunflower was a sun-haired youth in gray and yellow clothes, a pair of goggles resting on his forehead, a long crimson scarf wrapped around his neck, and one of the most familiarly bizarre guns held firmly in his hand.

"And besides, what kind of name is 'Megaman' anyway?" the floating sunflower huffed, crossing his leaves like a person or navi would cross their arms.

"Actually, my real name is Hub," the blue navi decided to make himself known, smiling and waving in casual greeting (as opposed to his inner fanboy's desire to totally and completely geek out) as the sunflower whipped around, its face showing utter shock, and the sun-haired boy turned to face Hub with a smile of relieved recognition. "Solar Boy Django and Master Otenko, I presume?"

"Indeed," the boy, Django, replied pleasantly and stood to greet the navi while the sunflower, Master Otenko, floated there gaping comically wide. "We have a lot to talk about... Hub did you say?"

"And Lan!" Lan finally found his voice and spoke over the connection, trying his best to not embarrass himself by freaking out. "Hub's brother, NetOp, and–"

A rattling sound interrupted as the coffin shook violently.

"I think we can finish this after dealing with... Shademan was his name I believe," Django turned to consider the coffin as it attempted to slink away. He tosses a brightly glowing piece of data to Hub as he did. "Take this and install it, quick!"

"Right!" Hub agreed as he caught the Solar Sensor data. As Lan hurried to install it, Hub jumped into action and grabbed a chain dangling from the coffin and dragged it back into the center of the Pile Driver diagram while Django and Master Otenko (shaking off his astonishment) got into position.

"Lan!" Django yelled. "Hold your PET up to the sunlight so we can purify Shademan!"

"Got it!" Lan replied.

"Here we go!" Master Otenko declared.

"Taiyohhhhhhh!" three voices yelled out as the Pile Driver activated, Django's GunDelSol held high to the sky to facilitate the transfer of solar energy to the two giant mechanical mirrors emerging from the edges of the diagram and aiming themselves at the coffin in the center. Focusing the transmitted sunlight, they lanced two massive beams directly at the coffin which began to smoke and shudder before the form of Shademan. exe burst forth, the sunlight wrapping around his digital body as it attempted to purify his darkness away.

"Guwohhhhhh!" the vampiric navi roared as he smoked and smoldered from the assault. "Grrr... Did you really think this could defeat me, a denizen of the darkness?!"

DarkPower built up within Shademan. exe and began to force the beams of sunlight back.

"Well, maybe we just need to tip the scales!" Lan countered. "GunDelSol EX! Battlechip in! Download!"

"Return to the darkness you crawled out of!" Hub yelled as a replica of Django's GunDelSol appeared in his hands and a massive spread of sunlight shot forth, engulfing Shademan. exe and sapping the strength he was using to repel the PileDriver.

"Guwohhhhhh!" Shademan. exe roared anew as the PileDriver's power burned away at his form. "You can't defeat me! I shall return! While there is darkness in the world, we darkloids shall always return! You can never be rid o–"

"TAIYOHHHHHHH!"

"Booyah! That's the mighty Apollo's boy Django! Say it with the great Apollo! 1! 2! 3! DJANGO!"

"You do realize that phrase references the wrong Django, right?" (44)

"Do not harsh the sensational Apollo's groove!"

"A navi who seeks to save his soul?" the Yumlandian known as Madame Jane, keeper of the reclining buddha, asked as she peered into Chaud's eyes. "I see. There is truth in your eyes. You may jack into the reclining Buddha. I hope you find what it is you seek."

Chaud bowed thankfully and then made his way over to the jack-in port and did his best to act as if everything were normal. "Jack in!

Protoman, Execute!"

The false Protoman. exe appeared in the Buddha's cyberscape and a voice immediately greeted him.

"Ah," a serene navi designed after the statue itself greeted, "You are quite the troubled soul indeed, are you not?"

"Er... no," the fake Protoman. exe hedged nervously. "This is for some navi named Junkman, and–"

"Falsehoods do not become you, lonely one," the Buddha-navi smiled serenely. "Truth shall always beckon to truth, and I see the longing in your eyes and form, no matter how you try to hide them. You have a soul filled with pain and rage, because you have never had anything to balance it with. Because you lack kindness in your existence. You seek it from others, but do not know how to give it yourself. But that can all change."

The Buddha-navi held out a softly glowing piece of data. The false Protoman. exe tried to look away, but his gaze was clearly drawn to it no matter how he tried to pretend otherwise.

"This is kindness data. It does not merely give out tenderness and compassion, it is designed to help one find it within themselves. For when they find it in themselves, they will surely find it in others."

Without even realizing he'd done so, the imposter had held his hand out for the Buddha-navi to place the data into. He proceeded to stare at it as if it would explain his own actions to him.

"Protoman?" Chaud asked.

"So you knew..." the imposter's voice deepened and took on a metallic quality as he continued to stare at the kindness data in his palm. "You knew I had taken over your navi's body... You know that I am Junkman... The navi born in the net's junkyard without anyone ever knowing. Never seeing, never listening. That is when I decided..."

Junkman. exe clenched the borrowed fist of Protoman. exe around the kindness data and began to squeeze.

"...that I would take all navis spoiled by operators and turn them to junk! Did you really think I wanted to be saved?! That I was looking for kindness?!"

The softly glowing data cracked once under the pressure and then shattered.

"I see the angry Buddha still chooses the hardest path," the Buddha-navi shook his head sadly and turned away.

"It didn't need to end like this you know," the form of Protoman. exe trembled under Junkman. exe's rage. "You could have been happy with me as your navi. I could have been just like him. You'd have never needed to know..."

"You could never have been like Protoman..." Chaud replied wearily, prompting a look of rage to form on the borrowed face of said navi, "because you're too much like me."

The look of rage changed to one of confusion as, unseen in the cyber-realm, Chaud prostrated himself before the Buddha statue and a particular navi within.

"It doesn't matter if you live in a penthouse or in the garbage, the bite of loneliness is just as deep. Just as painful. That's why I made Protoman. Programmed him from scratch and then trained our technique so that we'd never lose to anyone. So I'd have at least one real friend that would never leave. So please, whatever you want, just let me have my friend back..."

"Hmph!" Junkman. exe sneered with his borrowed face. "My condition is that we battle. Immediately and to the end. No way to jack out, and no interference from you. Whoever is left at the end shall be your navi. If you made Protoman as strong as you claim, then he will be returned to you."

"I... thank you," Chaud replied solemnly as he jacked Junkman. exe out.

'But sometimes the hardest path can lead to the grandest things,' the Buddha-navi thought to himself after the data beam had faded.

"Okay, I think we got everything," Hub stated as the explanation finished. "Just one thing: Are you serious ?!"

"Open your ears boy!" Master Otenko whacked Hub with one of his leaves. "Anyone with a lick of sense can tell that time is not behaving properly!"

"More like entities that have a cosmic connection to some part of the fabric or reality, like embodiments of the sun, can sometimes innately tell something's up even if they're not looping themselves. It's generally known as being 'Loop Aware'," Django clarified much more patiently.

"And with us... offline, you've been going through variants instead of your... baseline?" Lan added, trying to process the information with a dedication that he never seemed to apply to school.

"Essentially," Django shrugged. "It hasn't actually been too different in many ways. The immortals I fight have just tended to be over-the-top hammy for the longest time with really bad accents."

"Uh, weren't they already a bit over-the–"

"At least twice as bad as whatever you're thinking. Plus Master Otenko tends to default to 'grumpy old man', which is how he started looping himself."

"Hey!" Otenko huffed indignantly.

"Lita's been taking to the whole thing like a fish to water too," Django continued, ignoring Master Otenko's outburst, "though she likes using the abilities she's picked up to give herself animal traits a little too much at times..."

"You have one crazy girlfriend..." Lan sweatdropped.

"Oh, just wait until yours starts looping," Django smirked. "She'll get plenty crazy soon enough."

"Heh... sorry, this is just a lot to take in..."

"Tell me about it. I may be my branch's Anchor, like one of you is, but I'm still relatively new, so I still find it a bit overwhelming myself at times. But anyway, Master Otenko and I need to get going. It was nice seeing you again."

"Hey, wait!" Hub protested. "Do you know which of us is the Anchor and which is the co-Anchor?"

"Sorry," Django apologized, "but our admin Apollo didn't really say when he popped down to give me the heads-up. Oh, and before I forget, I wanted to give you this," the Solar Boy handed over a piece of data that Hub accepted, the blue navi's eyes widening as he identified it as GunDelSol3. "I suspect that you will face many more dark denizens in your own quest, but you mustn't give in to the darkness. Use this if you find yourself tempted and know that no matter how dark things get, the sun will rise tomorrow."

"Th-thanks!" Hub stammered out.

"Oh, and keep practicing those techniques I showed you and Lan!" Django called back as he ran off. "They come in real handy!"

"Thank you for returning for me, Lord Chaud," Protoman. exe stated as he moved his own body again.

"You should wait to give your thanks," Junkman. exe's own mismatched body emerged from the junk data of the digital junkyard. "Your NetOp and I have an agreement. In exchange for returning your body to you, we shall duel, without operator interference, for the right to be his navi."

"I see..." Protoman. exe stated evenly, his tone and expression betraying nothing. "Very well then."

"Then begin whenever you are ready," Junkman. exe groaned out with his metallic voice.

"I shall not fail Lord Chaud," Protoman. exe stated firmly before dashing forward at immense speeds, crossing Junkman. exe three times and slashing before returning to his starting point. "Delta! Ray! Edge!"

"...It that the best you can do?" Junkman. exe asked, prompting Protoman. exe to turn and see the three masses of junk data split neatly in half from where they'd intercepted his strikes.

"No," Protoman. exe stated with the slightest of grins, "but you're the first to actually counter it."

"Then let us see what you can really do," Junkman. exe declared as more masses of junk data began to float up from the area and hurl themselves at Protoman. exe who dashed forwards darting and slashing his way through.

"You know," a girl with long blonde hair sighed with a Sharo accent, "dis is why sensei kicked you out and sealed your navi's battle skills."

"Yeah," a guy wearing shaded goggles and bright red hair pulled back in a spiky ponytail/topknot thing added. "You just think everything should be handed to you on a platter, never wanting to actually do the work or care about others. Sensei always said you showed great promise, but never bothered to live up to it."

"What do you know?" the bound man glared hotly. "That damn seal of his won't go away! I've changed PETs ten times and gone through five navis, but it's still there! I haven't been able to beat mettaurs since he did that! Mettaurs! Do you have any idea how humiliating that is for someone of my talents?! Famous owes me! And I'll see that he pays through the nommmpphhhh!"

"Finally!" the mohawked member of the trio sighed in relief as he finished tying a thick gag over the man's mouth and dusted off his camo pants. "If we hadn't been watching the latest tournaments, I'd swear he was the most self-centered guy on the planet!"

"Psh!" the girl scoffed. "Chillski is much worse, ya? A complete embarrassment to anyone of Sharo descent!"

"I dunno," the crimson-haired guy mused, "that Viddy Narcy character is certainly up there. And in any case, we've got to get this guy deported back to wherever he's from."

"Isn't he from Netopia?"

"Hey, ya! We could escort him back and make sensei's match!"

"The mighty Apollo would like to know if these guys are baseline?"

"Doubtful. If they are, Lan and Hub never met them in the original timeline."

"Pity..."

"Impressive," Junkman. exe declared, "but it appears you're at your limit."

"Heh..." Protoman. exe smirked back. "Actually, I think I'm just about ready to take it to the next level. Sorry Lord Chaud. It seems I'll have to use that . Initiate Style Change!"

"What? But–" Chaud cut himself off, reminding himself that this was solely between Junkman. exe and Protoman. exe. Everything about this match was out of his hands.

"Muramasa Style!" Protoman. exe finished as his armor turned to cloth, his sword-arm turned to a normal hand, and a sheathed katana appeared at his waist.

"Impressive," Junkman. exe allowed. "It seems that you too know the power granted by pain to hold such a woe-thirsty blade so. I wonder which is stronger though... your pain or mine?"

"Let's find out!" Protoman. exe shouted as he dashed forward at impossible speeds, ducking to the side of his opponent's arms shooting forward in the form of a massive Junk Press and slashing, being rewarded with a pained bellow as Junkman. exe only retracted one arm. He made to finish it, but was knocked aside by the remaining arm which then began shooting screws that tracked Protoman. exe's position.

Protoman. exe grit his teeth as he dashed forward, using the pain from the hits that landed to further fuel Muramasa as he aimed a lunge straight for Junkman. exe's glowing eyes.

The blade was an inch from contact when a dark ominous sound permeated the area and froze him in place.

"Who dares?" Junkman. exe demanded, somehow still able to move, if only stiffly.

"Damn..." a new voice was heard as a group of HeelNavis, their bodies blackened through contact with darkness rather than through customization, stepped into view, a shadowy black trumpy-like virus playing the paralyzing music behind them. "Moving while DarkSound is in effect? That's hardcore. But we're not here for you. The boss wants the DarkSoul the red guy's been nurturing," the one in front motioned to the immobile Protoman. exe. "It's just about ripe after all."

"You will do no such thing!" Junkman. exe declared angrily as masses of junk data rose up and flung themselves at the HeelNavis.

"Get the red guy!" the lead HeelNavi declared as a sinisterly glowing bomb chip appeared in his hand. "I've got the walking junkheap! DarkBomb!"

"JunkCube!" one of the flung masses intercepted the DarkBomb before it got within blast range, but the smoke from the blast still obscured the area and a clear scuffle could be heard amidst the smokescreen.

"No! Protoman!" Chaud yelled as he tried to jack his navi out, only to find that the ability had been predictably blocked. Either by Junkman. exe for the duel, or the assailants for the attack.

When it cleared, the HeelNavis could be seen taking off with a back-to-normal Protoman. exe who was bound in glowing restraints.

"COWARDS!" Junkman. exe roared as he shot screws after the retreating group, but only scoring glancing shots at best.

"Protoman..." Chaud despaired as he watched his navi be carried off by what could only be agents of Nebula. "No..."

"...Worry not," Junkman. exe stated after several moments. "They are leaking data from their wounds. I can use it to find them. I will retrieve your... friend... for you."

"What...? Why?"

"I am a navi of my word," Junkman. exe ground out succinctly. "Had they not interfered, the victory would have been his. There is something we must do first though."

"What?"

"Register my withdrawal from the tournament."

"Hey guys!" an Electopian who would probably be lost in a crowd if it wasn't for his light blue sleeveless vest with purple trim and his red headband with loose ends that went all the way to his knees called out as he approached Mr. Famous's three apprentices who were currently gathered around someone.

"Hey Takeshi!" the goggle-wearing redhead smirked. "I'm glad you made it. I'm even more glad it's because you got spanked in the first round."

"Hey!" Takeshi fumed. "Stop picking on me, Bullet! Charlie, make him stop picking on me!"

"Maybe he'd stop if you didn't whine so much," the Netopian guy with the blond mohawk pinched the bridge of his nose.

"Ja," the blonde girl with the Sharo accent smirked.

"Heh... you guys seem like good friends," another voice spoke up.

"Yeah, Lan, they sure do," a second joined in from roughly the same direction.

"Lan...?" Takeshi stiffened and looked around until he spotted the smaller boy in the middle of the other three. "Oh... wow... I am such a big fan of yours! Guys! You know this kid saved the world?!"

"We know," the other three deadpanned.

"You mention it only every other day, ya?" the girl gave him a deadpan gaze.

"Yeah, man," Bullet shook his head. "You even customized your navi to look like his. It's really kind of creepy."

"Hey!" Takeshi looked insulted. "I didn't copy the face! Which reminds me... Hey, Lan, buddy, would you mind if I took a good look at Megaman's face?"

"I'd really rather you didn't," the voice came not from Lan, but from his PET.

"And I like my current face just fine, Takeshi," a voice from the 'soul battler's' own PET chimed in.

"Aw, c'mon, Quint!"

"Guys," Takeshi's navi didn't even deign his NetOp with a direct response, "promise me that if this obsession causes Takeshi to start dressing like Lan that you'll tie him up until he regains whatever passes for good sense."

"Of course," the Sharo girl replied readily.

"And you can crash with me if that happens," a voice from her PET added.

"Thanks, Enker."

"Hey! I wanted him to crash with me!"

"The last time any navi went to your place, Ballade, you tried to blow them up!"

"Only a little! It was one of my friendly hello bombs!"

"Your 'friendly hello bomb' nearly took my head off!" Quint yelled.

"Are they always like this?" Lan asked Charlie.

"More or less."

"Yeah!" a voice Lan recognized as Punk. exe's piped up from Charlie's PET. "Ain't it great?"

"You... want to withdraw?" the tournament official blinked at the image of the navi. "Why?"

"Protoman and I have already had our match and the victory was decisively in his favor," the grinding metallic voice of Junkman. exe explained. "I see no reason to repeat it."

"Ah, that may be, but it's not in official records and–"

"There is a recording of the match if you desire it. The final blow may not have been caught properly, but the victor is very clear."

"I really can't accept–"

"Then I would like to confess to hijacking the body of my opponent prior to our match. I understand that under tournament rules this is grounds for disqualification," Junkman. exe explained with clearly waning patience.

"Well, yes, but unless you have proof, then–"

"Look," Junkman. exe's glowing eyes flared sinisterly, "I do not know why you are so determined to keep me in this tournament and I do not care . Simply know that I will not be present for my scheduled match. Good. Day."

The transmission cut out and the tournament official groaned in dismay. Why oh why did she have to make that bet with her boyfriend? The outfit she'd have to wear if Protoman. exe made it to the finals was already really skimpy, but the cat ears and tail that went with it would make her look like a crazy cosplayer! She'd die of embarrassment now!

"They thought they could hold me, but they were wrong... My revenge cannot be tied down! Not now that I have you..."

"Heh... You're just lucky I've been looking for someone good enough to keep up with me since my last boss got himself offed. I gotta say though, this thing's gonna take some serious power to crack. Good thing for you I got just the stuff..." (45)

"What... what are these...?"

"Some souvenirs I picked up from a bunch of chumps that call themselves Nebula..."

"Well, Protoman," one of the Nebula navis chuckled darkly. "It looks like you're ours now. Soon enough we'll be pulling that lovely little DarkSoul you've been cultivating out and you'll be one of us. Never to stand with that former NetOp of yours ever again... Hehehe..."

"I would never betray Lord Chaud..." Protoman. exe glared at the Nebula member. "Not even in the deepest darkest depths of madness..."

"Hahahahaha!" the navi just laughed. "Well, we'll see about that! Won't we, boys?"

"YEAH!" went the resounding cheer from an army of Nebula navis gathered around to watch the conversion of one of their most dangerous foes.

"So, Lan," Mr. Famous grinned as he approached the battlecomp, "I see you met my top apprentices, the Elite Four."

"Better known to the scum of the net as the NetNavi Killers!" a quartet of voices yelled loudly from the stands.

"...Who just don't appreciate a good name when they hear one," Mr. Famous sighed heavily.

"They're... different," Lan chuckled. "Actually, they remind me a bit of my friends."

"I'll bet. Still, we're here for a match and we don't intend to hold back!"

"I wouldn't have it any other way!"

"And it looks like the competitors are raring to go!" the lady from NAXA declared to the crowd. "Representing NetFrica, the world famous Mr. Famous and his navi Kendoman!"

The crowd cheered at deafening levels.

"And representing Electopia, the grade-school NetBattler Lan Hikari and his navi Megaman!"

The cheers, if anything, actually got louder.

"Competitors ready? Jack in! Battle Routine, set!"

"Execute!"

"Heeyah!"

"The chips you normally use were chosen to best suit your navi's fighting style. I am not him."

"I'm sorry, but I've never had the time or desire to go and collect chips from viruses. Those I do get tend to get traded for ones I want."

"It is of no consequence. Though I have never had an operator to send them, you would be surprised at the power that net society throws away."

"What in... Most of these are useless bootleg chips, but some of these others... Some of these are really rare discontinued chips or data gained only from extinct viruses... People really throw these away?"

"They do. Choose wisely. The life of your friend may depend on your selection."

"Well, well, look at the walking hunk of junk, boys..." the darkened HeelNavi jeered as he saw the massive mismatched form approach.

"Hehe... Go home junkheap," another of their number laughed. "This is Nebula's turf."

"We are here for Protoman, the red navi you hold captive. You will return him immediately."

"Yeah?" the attention of the mass of navis, many bearing the visible taint of darkness, focused on the newcomer. "And what if we say n–"

The navi's words were cut off as a massive screw punched through the space his head occupied and pierced through the navi behind him.

"Dude... you must be real tired of living..." another declared lowly as most of the gathered navis began to form a variety of weapons. "We're Nebula... Wielders of the power of Darkness!"

"More like petty cowards hiding behind what you can never understand or control... I am Junkman..." the mismatched navi declared as the yellow light from his shadowed eyes glowed back at his foes menacingly. "I was born in the darkness... Formed from shadows, pain, and rage... I do not fear your petty darkness..."

"We'll show you!" the same navi yelled as he formed his arm into a buster. "DarkChip in! DarkSpread!"

"Fool..."

"I've never even heard of some of these before... AntiDark...?"

The buster backfired spectacularly, the explosion of DarkPower disintegrating the navi in question and at least a dozen other navis nearby, as the discarded experimental chip AntiDark that Chaud had slotted in discretely at the beginning of the encounter did exactly what it was supposed to.

"The hell was that?!" one of the Nebula navis yelled in shock and confusion.

"Who cares! Get him!" another yelled.

"Mindbender! BattleChip in! Download!" the voice of Chaud came in loud and clear over the connection.

"Mindbender... Poltergeist... I haven't seen anyone use these in almost a year..."

"Ah, those... Personal favorites... They were part of the junk data that I formed from... I can use the first sometimes without a chip, though not reliably... but the second... I was perhaps fortunate that someone threw away a source file for it... I can use the power of the vengeful spirit at will..."

Chaos reigned as Nebula navis began attacking, only to find that they were shooting everywhere except what they meant to aim at. Roughly a quarter of their number perished from their own opening volley.

Those that had the presence of mind to try and get their bearings stopped and gaped as great masses of debris and junk data rose up around their opponent and began to fly at them with great speed.

The audience cheered as Kendoman. exe parried shots from Megaman. exe in perfect synch with the movements of Mr. Famous. They also cheered as Megaman. exe skillfully dodged Kendoman.

exe's lightning fast strikes. They went nuts as each competitor launched counterattack after counterattack at each other, resulting in what sounded like a never-ending din that could be heard for miles around.

Kendoman. exe was one of the most atypical navis that most of the audience had ever seen. His individual strikes were not terribly powerful, but they were amazingly fast and he could launch them in rapid succession. It was how he had inevitably worn down the defensive powerhouse Knightman. exe, by simply hitting the larger slower navi over and over with repeated strikes and never allowing the strong but slow attacks of the knight-themed navi to land in return.

"Got it!" Megaman. exe's operator suddenly yelled out, a triumphant look on his face. "Get ready, Hub!"

"Ready and waiting!" Megaman. exe replied as he backstepped quickly from his opponent.

"Not so fast!" Mr. Famous and Kendoman. exe declared together, darting forwards in a dashing strike to press their advantage and deny their opponent the distance he seemed to desire.

"Guard!" Lan and Megaman. exe yelled as Kendoman. exe's strike hit a yellow shield with the green cross of the mettaur virus, the backlash of the strike's force knocking Kendoman. exe off-balance for a moment. A moment that was more than enough for his opponent. "And now GunDelSol EX! TAIYOHHHHHHH!"

"ARGH!" Kendoman. exe and Mr. Famous yelled as the massive spread of sunlight engulfed Kendoman. exe and seared at his digital form aggressively until the inevitable happened.

"Kendoman... Deleted!"

"What is it you sense, Lord Serenade?" the purple-armored former member of SciLab's Elite Corps asked of the silently meditating figure.

"How many times must I tell you, Yamatoman?" the dark-skinned female navi smiled tolerantly. "Please call me by my new title."

"My apologies, Guardian Regent," Yamatoman. exe replied in a tone that suggested his personal views on the matter would never change.

"It is fine," Serenade. exe allowed. "As would your use of just my name be."

"What you sense, Guardian Regent?" Yamatoman. exe avoided the topic in favor of his original query.

"A deep and terrible rage has entered the undernet. One born of a great capacity for love and respect that has withered through loneliness and neglect, turning instead to hate and spite. A wrath more terrible than heaven or hell could unleash on their own merits. But a wrath turned against those who seek to spread hate and spite for their own petty reasons, out of what little remaining love and respect for those same virtues still remains."

"Meaning?"

"Meaning..." Serenade. exe smirked teasingly, "that Buddha is angry."

A shadowy NormalNavi flew through the air, flailing wildly before it intercepted a thrown DarkBomb, causing the powerful chip to detonate early.

An OfficialNavi of Nebula choked as the massive navi's clamp-like appendage, turned golden from the legendary discontinued GoldFist chip, slammed him into a floating RockCube so hard that he became embedded in the digital object even as it was sent hurtling into the ranks of Nebula navis.

"Whoever the hell is using obstacle-type chips, stop! You're just giving him more fu–!"

The words were cut off as a tornado made of flame sprouted in the middle of Nebula's ranks and Junkman. exe continued his advance.

"DarkSword!" one of the Nebula navis yelled as he jumped at Junkman. exe's back, only for his opponent to reach back and grab the member of Nebula and swing him around like a flail, turning the DarkSword on the navi's fellows as a result.

"Return to Junk!" the massive navi bellowed like a skyscraper collapsing.

"Got you now!" several navis jumped at him from all angles, clearly getting ready to use BattleChips of some sort. "Dodge this you piece of–"

"Interrupt!" Chaud's voice called out as the discontinued chip was sent, disrupting all chip data from Junkman. exe's opponents.

"–cking hell!" several of the ambushing navis swore as their attacks were cancelled, leaving them to crash bodily into the larger navi, who remained standing even under their weight. Several were faster in recovering and formed their basic buster cannons. "Damnit! We can still take you out like this!"

"RingZap, triple download! Experimental Program Advance!"

"ZapBody!" Junkman. exe bellowed as electrical sparks arced all over his form, frying the navis that had jumped him. Their cries of pain drowned out Chaud's swearing as the three discontinued chips' programs were irrevocably damaged from the makeshift hacking job that had allowed the advance in the first place.

"DarkVulcan!" another voice yelled out.

"IronShield!" Chaud sent a discontinued defensive chip next, but the piercing rounds of the DarkVulcan tore it apart even as they tore into Junkman. exe's body. "Shit! LeafShield!"

"DarkLance!"

The chip was none too soon as the massive damage from the DarkLance was instead added to Junkman. exe's vitality from LeafShield's healing powers.

"Screw this!" someone among the ranks yelled out. "DarkStage!"

An intense miasma engulfed the field as darkness oozed up from the ground. Many of Nebula's members yelled out as the corrosive force ate away at their bodies, but most seemed to be strengthened by it.

"Yes! Feel your body burn away into nothingness!" the same voice cackled as the miasma ate away at Junkman. exe's own body. However, the monstrous navi seemed unconcerned as Chaud slotted a new chip in.

"Geddon1."

The miasma began to dissipate rapidly as the entire area shuddered and cracked from the force unleashed, the digital panels making up the ground becoming precarious and fragile.

"Pathetic..." Junkman. exe's disdain was palpable. "You steep yourselves in Darkness, but you cannot even match the strength that net society throws away ... Do you even understand the power that is discarded as junk...? Let us show you..."

"PanelShoot1... PanelShoot2... PanelShoot3..."

The ground shuddered again as the digital panels not occupied ripped themselves out wholesale and hovered ominously in the air. And then they began flying at everything that wasn't Junkman. exe.

Screams of pain and terror reigned as the members of Nebula were assaulted by chunks of the very digital landscape, chunks torn from what had been their only footholds to avoid the assault.

As the assault died down, someone among the Nebula navis began laughing hysterically.

"Not bad! But you can't beat Nebula with just a good folder and a strong navi!" Nebula navis that had survived began to get up and edge their way into the scarred cyberscape until one lone navi modded from a basic male FaceNavi stood facing Junkman. exe. "My operator and I are the premier hackers of Nebula! We're so good we managed to hack the legendary Dark Messiah himself to finish the legendary Program Advance of Darkness! DarkLine! Evil Chip in! Download! BugChain! Evil Chip in! Download! Bass! Navi Chip in! Download!"

"AntiFire, AntiAqua, AntiElec, AntiWood..." Chaud slotted in another set of someone's discarded attempts to modify a chip series in response.

"Program Advance of Darkness! DARK MESSIAH!"

A shadow of the legendary solo navi Bass. exe emerged to hover over the Nebula member as the navi's own hands formed a Gospel-head cannon and fired massive bursts at Junkman. exe, throwing up huge gouts of digital dust as they further tore apart the cyberscape as well. But out of the dust cloud emerged blasts of flame, water, lightning, and plant matter that lanced down towards the no-longer-laughing navi and tore him and what little remained of the cyberscape around him to shreds.

"The... the hell was that ...?" one member of Nebula gaped at the gash where his comrade had once stood.

"I don't know, but that junk guy's folder has gotta be nearly out by now and we can still all use DarkChips, so let's get him!"

"You think that, do you?" Junkman's grinding voice sounded as the dust cloud dissipated, showing him to be only slightly worse for wear than before the attack. "You are right by my count. We have but one BattleChip left..."

"I do not know if that was actually thrown away. Perhaps it was simply lost..."

"Who in the world lets themselves lose a chip like this ?"

The gleam in Junkman. exe's eyes was more sinister than any of his darkness-imbued opponents'.

"FolderBack..."

Hub tried not to blush as the four navis of Mr. Famous's top apprentices hoisted him up from within the battlecomp to the cheers of the crowd. A moment only partially ruined by Lan sneezing.

"You okay, Lan?"

"Yeah, after what just happened somebody's probably just talking about me, you know?" (46)

"Let them, Lan," Mr. Famous shook his head.

"Yes!" Kendoman. exe laughed boisterously. "After Junkman's withdrawal, these people deserved to see a match between the mightiest of warriors! Hahahahahahaha!"

"Hehehehehehehe..."

"What..." the announcer from NAXA started. "Who said that...?"

A data beam flashed in the battlecomp as a new navi appeared. He was on all fours with gray orbs for toes attached to cylindrical dark blue feet at the ends of limbs that looked like a series of black megaphones jammed into each other. His main body was dark blue with twinned spikes sprouting from both the lower back and the shoulders. His face was behind a long translucent red cone that jutted out before his glowing yellow eyes and a pair of long antenna jutted out from his head.

"How quaint..." the navi spoke with a voice that distorted like a bad audio transmission. "the navi that beat the famous Mr. Famous being celebrated by the man's own apprentices. The very apprentices unworthy of his attention. Hehehehehe..."

"Hey! Watch your mouth!" Takeshi growled as the four navis set Hub down and stepped between him and the newcomer.

"Megaman, jack out, we'll handle this guy," the green navi that looked so much like Hub save for the blue shades over his face, Quint. exe, told him.

"Right..." Hub went to jack out, turning into a data beam that shot towards the open connection to Lan's PET... only to slam into a barrier of interference that sprang up suddenly and held him fast in its grip.

"Hub!" Lan yelled in shock as gasps of shock rippled through the crowd.

"Lan... I... I can't... move..."

"What did you do?!" the red-armored navi of the quartet, with whip-like arms, giant disc-like shoulder pads, liberal spikes decorating his form, and a bladed mohawk demanded. Punk. exe was very much furious. His teammates, human and navi alike, were little different.

"Oh, that?" the strange navi laughed statically. "I jammed the battlecomp. No one jacks in or out until I say so..."

"Until we say so," a new voice cut in as a display popped up in the cyberspace, and the holographic display above. A display showing the maniacally grinning face of Mr. Famous's dishonored student.

"How the hell did you get out?" Bullet grit his teeth and glared. In the cyberspace, his navi Ballade. exe, who looked very much like a standard purple male FaceNavi stuffed into a weaponized bomb suit and given bladed crests on his helmet, glared as well.

"My new navi Jammingman helped me out," the man grinned sadistically. "Turns out he's been looking for someone strong to throw his lot in with and I fit the bill. He even showed me how to get rid of Famous's annoying seal!"

"Yeah, right," the androgynous voice of the last navi of the quartet scoffed. The blue and yellow patterned bodysuited form of Enker. exe floated calmly above the digital panels, his (or her, no one was quite sure) arms crossed pointedly as four softly glowing orbs hovered in an arc behind him/her.

"Da," Enker. exe's operator and the one female member of the team mirrored the pose. "You could never break sensei's seal!"

"Then just watch as I do exactly that!" the man grinned madly as he held up an odd looking BattleChip. One that Lan, Hub, and apparently Mr. Famous immediately recognized.

"No, you idiot!" Mr. Famous yelled.

"DarkCannon! DarkChip in! Download!"

There was a strain on the cyberscape centered around Jammingman. exe as the chip data tried to force its way through for a moment before a loud crack sounded and a massive cannon blast screamed towards the four navis who all moved deftly out of the way, allowing the attack to impact at a safe distance behind them.

"You see! The seal is broken!" the man laughed. "I have a powerful new navi, powerful new chips, and all of my skills back! Bwahahahahaha!"

"You're going to need them, bucko," Charlie stated calmly as the four navis in the battlecomp moved back into formation as the declaration continued. "Because now you face the ultimate strike force in the cyberworld!"

"Heart Champion," the sole girl began as she and Enker. exe struck a pose that would not be out of place in a magical girl series, "Kalinka Cossack and Enker!"

"Soul Battler," Takeshi and Quint. exe took poses like they were sentai heroes, "Takeshi Aono and Quint!"

"Extreme Hero," the crimson-haired Bullet grinned as he and Ballade. exe took a combat stance, "Bullet Baret and Ballade!"

"Mighty Soldier," Charlie joined in the posing himself as he finished the introductions, "Charlie Nash and Punk! Together we are the Elite Four of the cyberworld, known to criminals everywhere as the NetNavi Killers!" (47)

"Heh..." the disgraced apprentice laughed. "Hahahahaha! Then I guess that makes me the Dark Prodigy... Seijin Yami!" (48)

The now identified man kept laughing as everyone looked on, disturbed by the madness in his voice.

"Go Jammingman! Destroy them all!"

"Charlie Nash... Charlie Nash... The mighty Apollo has heard this name before... Isn't he from the Street Fighter branch that Nike oversees?"

Hephaestus just cursed under his breath as he examined the coding. He had been so sure he'd plugged all of those code leaks!

Chaud nursed the mild burn on his hand as he considered which BattleChip to send next. Things had been going so well. He and Junkman. exe had plowed through the ranks of Nebula like a bulldozer through a china shop.

But as was to be expected, the ones that survived this long were more often than not the stronger ones, or the smarter ones. As was the case of one Nebula navi that had waited until Chaud and Junkman. exe were using the FolderBack chip again and timed a backstab with a DarkSword perfectly. The maneuver had put the navi too close to avoid the devastating retaliatory strike, but the data interrupt from the attack backed by DarkPower had caused a surge in Chaud's PET that had burned his hand and pretty much obliterated the data for FolderBack permanently. This left him with a limited selection of BattleChips remaining unless Nebula's forces were kind enough to back off long enough for a standard folder reload to be used. Which he really didn't see happening.

'Hmm... Hammer...' Chaud considered the chip that was, in fact, not an actual hammer but instead a heavy ball and chain style weapon used by a short-lived type of virus that resembled the basic form of a navi to a casual observer. It was a bit unwieldy for most navis, but Junkman. exe swung them like a pro. And he still had a few left. 'And then... ZeusHammer... Better wait until a bunch of them swarm and use LeafShield first since otherwise it'll hurt Junkman too...'

"Program Advance!" Ballade. exe yelled as he jumped high into the air. "CRAZY DESTROYER!" (49)

A deluge of disc-like bombs were thrown like shuriken at Jammingman. exe and the surrounding area in a cacophony of explosions, only to reveal when they subsided that the target was nowhere to be seen among the obliterated cyberscape.

"Crap!" Takeshi swore. "Quint! We're switching to defense!"

"Roger!" Quint. exe acknowledged. "Customizer build conversion! Defense matrix!"

"Wow..." Lan looked impressed as Jammingman. exe jumped out of a PopUp hole and fired off a vulcan-style DarkChip at Quint. exe, which pinged off of the green navi's swiftly formed crimson shield. It was the same kind of thing Shield Style could do. "I didn't know you could do stuff like that..."

"Oh, they're all quite brilliant operators," Mr. Famous replied as he watched calmly, "and save for Charlie they're brilliant customizers as well. Takeshi figured out how to save multiple program arrangements for the Navi Customizer and switch between them mid-battle so he could cover whatever the team needed at the moment. It cost him the ability to form style changes, but he's got enough of a program collection that they're almost redundant with his system."

"I guess that's why you had to help make Punk, right?" Lan inquired as the navi in question tried to ambush Jammingman. exe only to get a Slasher for his troubles. The crimson navi grunted from the hit, but recovered almost instantly.

"Something like that," Mr. Famous allowed as Charlie began barking instructions to the others. "What Charlie lacks in customization skills, he makes up for in operating ability and leadership. When they fight together, he and Punk are almost untouchable. Bullet and Ballade form the team's heavy artillery while also able to take a massive pounding when necessary even if they aren't all that fast or at times accurate."

Lan sweatdropped a bit as the navi in question charged through Jammingman. exe's electrical blasts ignoring the damage he was taking and threw yet more explosives. Given his choice of weapons, he didn't really seem to need pinpoint accuracy anyway.

"And then there's Kalinka and Enker," Mr. Famous continued, nodding towards the girl and the navi that was skillfully deflecting all shots sent his/her way by forming the glowing orbs that floated around him/her into flat planar barriers and angling them in just the right way. "They're the team's shield. Not much gets through their defenses."

"Screw this!" Seijin yelled. "Jammingman! I'm sending another DarkChip!"

"Ready when you are!" the navi yelled back.

The head of the kidnapping force stared at the battle below. It was one thing to hear what a legend Eugene Chaud was. It was another to see him carving through a superior force with a navi that wasn't even his .

And despite the fact that the monstrous mismatched navi had all sorts of weaponry from landed hits sticking out of him by now, including the tip of a broken DarkSword still sticking out of his chest, he was still coming. Still countering every attack.

DarkThunder, DarkWide, DarkMeteor, and DarkLance had all triggered anti-element traps that had reduced what remained of their hundreds strong force to mere dozens and this bizarre misshapen navi showed no signs of slowing down. He was still coming... Still throwing around those masses of junk data debris and those damnable screw shots and...

And he was no longer using chip attacks.

"Hehehe... Hahahahaha! He's out of chips! He's out of chips! Do it now! Press the attack! Hit him with everything you've got! DarkStage!"

"DarkInvisibility!" Seijin yelled and Jammingman. exe's form tinted darker and he bellowed in berserk rage as he began teleporting around the arena attacking wildly, firing BattleChips at random and barely even bothering to aim them.

"We've gotta counterattack before he gets lucky!" Bullet yelled.

"No!" Lan cut in. "It's an invisible style chip, which means he's practically invincible! You need to use something that can cut through that!"

"Like what?" Kalinka yelled back.

"Like..." Lan fished in his pocket and pulled out three particular battle chips. "Like these! Here!" he yelled as he thrust them into Takeshi's hand.

"Are these...?" Takeshi's eyes widened and he tossed one to each of his teammates. "Guys! Get ready for BattleChip sharing! Quint and I will run interference! Customizer build conversion! Activate Support Program: Sakugarne!"

"Got it!" Charlie yelled as the other three each caught a chip. "Link up everyone! And don't you dare get Quint killed Takeshi! That's an order!"

"Roger that!" A crimson jackhammer-like weapon formed on Quint. exe's arm and he dashed forward to engage the berserk Jammingman. exe at close range while the other three got into position. It seemed that the Sakugarne program was pretty durable as it parried attack after attack with barely a scratch.

As that was happening, the other three pulled out linking cables and hooked all four PETs together in a circuit before brandishing the loaned BattleChips.

"Chip sharing initiated!" Kalinka began as Enker. exe took up position to Jammingman. exe's front "GunDelSol1 BattleChip in! Download!"

"GunDelSol2 BattleChip in! Download!" Bullet continued with Ballade. exe at Jammingman. exe's left.

"GunDelSol3 BattleChip in! Download!" Charlie finished with Punk. exe taking position at Jammingman. exe's back.

Quint. exe gave a twist with the Sakugarne weapon that sent the berserk navi off-balance and disengaged to take position on Jammingman. exe's right. "Four-way formation complete!"

"Four-way Program Advance!" all four yelled together as the BattleChip data merged along the link and a runic circle familiar to many present formed in the cyberscape centered on Jammingman. exe. A quartet of mechanical mirrors surged upwards and angled to point directly at Jammingman. exe. "PILEDRIVER!"

The solar rays blasted forth and burned away at Jammingman. exe even through his invincibility at a rapid pace.

"No...! NO!" Seijin cursed. "I won't let this happen! DARKTHUNDER!"

A massive sinister purple ball of electricity shot down one of the beams of light and impacted the solar mirror, disrupting the Program Advance and causing it to terminate early in a spectacular explosion. As the dust settled, Jammingman. exe could be seen still standing. Barely, but still standing.

"You..." he hissed at the navi in his direct line of sight, Enker. exe, "I'll kill you all for that..."

"We'll both kill them for that..." Seijin agreed angrily. "Starting with that one! DarkChip in!"

"Enker!" Kalinka yelled, but her navi was already bringing his/her four glowing orbs into a diamond pattern directly in front of him/her where they instantly stretched and curved into an ovular frame that filled with a silvery plane.

"DarkSpread!"

"MirrorBuster!"

The dark attack hit the mirror, which cracked mightily but held, and reflected the attack back at the shooter, destroying him with the very DarkPower he'd tried to use.

"That... It's not possible..." Seijin stared as the jamming interference ended and Hub finished jacking out.

"Holy crap..." Bullet stared as well. "That thing actually cracked the MirrorBuster?! Holy crap ..."

"You... you're all just second raters... haha..." Seijin began breaking down in front of everyone. "I'm the real genius... I'm the one who should have been the top apprentice... hahaha... I should have been replacing Mr. Famous as the navi expert... I'm the best... the best... hahahahaha... hahahahahahahahaha..."

"Poor guy..." Hub pitied the man.

"He once showed great promise," Mr. Famous nodded sadly. "But he could never look beyond his own talents to see the value in others."

"Junkman..." Chaud grit his teeth, not wanting to admit what was plain, "you've got to jack out..."

Even without BattleChips, the navi born of junk data had insisted on continuing. He'd asked Chaud to disengage the operation system and send subchips while Junkman. exe himself continued fighting. Reluctantly, Chaud had agreed. Despite the arrangement being far from perfect, it had worked for a short while. Nebula's forces were effectively gutted from this engagement and while Chaud hated to leave Protoman. exe behind, he had to admit that the current arrangement wasn't likely to succeed.

"No," Junkman. exe retorted as he used the powers of the Poltergeist data in him to wrench miasmic masses out of the digital landscape and throw them at the few Nebula navis remaining. "I must do no such thing..."

"But I'm out of subchips!" Chaud yelled back, watching Junkman. exe's health drop steadily from the dark miasma that had seeped out of the cyberscape ever since the last use of DarkStage. "You'll die if you keep going!"

"I was already dying," Junkman. exe retorted as he trudged onwards, blasting another of the remaining Nebula navis with his screws. "I've been dying for quite some time now."

"But..."

"Those who cannot handle loss should never have friends," Junkman. exe continued as he pressed onwards, even as the dark miasma ate away at his form steadily. "That is what I believed. I took my only solace in battle, found my center in savage combat, and entered the tournament to meet my end the way I had lived. Fighting to the death against worthy opponents."

Junkman. exe grabbed a HeelNavi that jumped at him out of the air and slammed him into the ground. He kept his hold on the navi, dragging him roughly across the cyberscape as he pressed onwards.

"And then I met you and Protoman..."

Chaud watched as the junk data navi's health hit zero... and kept dropping.

"My rage and pain has sustained me this long," Junkman. exe's eyes glowed brightly even as more and more of his form disintegrated, "and with the power of the vengeful spirit it will sustain me long enough for this..."

"What... are ... you...?" the navi being dragged choked out as one of his few remaining comrades slashed Junkman. exe in the side, and was crushed by digital debris a moment later.

"I am a navi who has known pain his whole existence..." Junkman. exe said, though it was not clear to whom as he approached the spot where Protoman. exe was being held by glowing digital restraints, "and friendship but once. I have dealt in pain all my life, never doing anything but causing more of it. I sought my end upon the field of battle, but I never expected to be given a chance like this. A chance to do one good thing before I meet my end..."

Junkman. exe's form was so eaten away at this point that the only thing that could possibly be holding him together was his own willpower, and a stubborn refusal to lie down and die, but he still retained enough strength to reach one mostly dissolved clamp hand to Protoman. exe's restraints and begin squeezing.

A cracking sound was heard as the restraints began to give way.

"D...Dark...C...Cann...on..." was all the warning received before the navi in Junkman. exe's grip blasted his captor with the full force of the DarkChip. When the dust cleared over half of Junkman. exe's remaining body was simply gone. But his one remaining eye gleamed with strength and purpose as the clamp on Protoman. exe's restraints continued squeezing, and the one holding the Nebula navi, despite not being connected to anything anymore, squeezed as well.

"G...g..."

"DarkLaser..." a deep voice intoned and a purple beam lanced through the clamp trying to free Protoman. exe, incinerating it completely.

Junkman. exe's one eye turned to take in the black-bodied form of the newcomer highlighted with glowing blue lines before another blast destroyed what little form he had left.

"Such a waste..." Laserman. exe intoned as the digital dust floated away, looking out over the great scar the navi's charge had carved into the undernet. "A being born of the Darkness that rejected it so..."

"You'll never win..." Protoman. exe growled out as he struggled against his weakened restraints.

"But we shall," Laserman. exe returned calmly as he waved his hand and repaired the bindings even as his underling got to his feet. "Those who had given themselves over to Darkness shall return, and those who had not are easily replaced. And without your NetOp interfering, your hate and rage will fuel your DarkSoul properly, giving us a powerful new ally. Watch him," Laserman. exe instructed the one remaining member of Nebula from the original force. "Make sure nothing else interferes."

"Of course, Lord Laserman," the HeelNavi bowed respectfully.

Back in his hotel room, Chaud stared at the static on his PET's display and tried his best not to weep.

It had taken a while for the officials to find where Seijin had been broadcasting from, but it wasn't like the man had been going anywhere anytime soon. There hadn't even been a real sense of triumph as he was led away in a straightjacket, still laughing hysterically, just a sad feeling of wasted potential.

As if that weren't enough, Lan had heard some hushed whispers from a few of the tournament organizers. He only caught a few words, but one of those had been Chaud's name and that gave him a rather sinking feeling.

He'd tried to contact his rival/friend, only to find out that Chaud was blocking all messages, which really didn't help the feeling.

In the interests of taking his mind off of matters, he decided to go to his hotel room (followed by Yai, Dex, and Mayl who he was reasonably sure couldn't have been talked out of it with a loaded tank) and look into the latest on the Red Sun tournament. Raoul and Thunderman. exe had lost in the semifinals, which Lan was a bit disappointed by, but the match between Raika and Sherrice had been scheduled about the same time as his own bout with Mr. Famous.

Entering his room, Lan and the others were rather surprised to see Chaud already there, sitting on Lan's hotel bed and watching the Red Sun results as he patiently waited.

"–and her navi Rideman defeated Raika and Searchman in an astounding upset today when Rideman unleashed a never-before-seen Style Change."

Footage on the television showed Rideman. exe twisting from a cowboy themed-navi into some manner of dark, sinister, bipedal equine before charging Searchman. exe and kicking the military navi hard enough in the torso that he practically folded in half.

"Damn!" Dex whistled, wide-eyed. "What kinda Style Change is that?!"

"I don't know," Yai sniffed, "but it's hardly what I'd call stylish..."

Lan and Mayl on the other hand were more focused on the guest present.

"Hi Chaud," Mayl began politely, "what brings you here?"

"Is something wrong?" Lan blurted out in a fairly insightful, if tactless, manner.

"Lan!" Mayl admonished.

"Hmph..." Chaud snorted. "I suspect you already know, Lan..."

"Er..." Lan hesitated for a moment and thought on it. "So... Junkman or DarkSoul?"

"Interestingly enough, both," Chaud admitted eyeing Lan purposefully as he blinked in surprise.

"Okay... I really wasn't expecting that answer..."

"Nnnnnngghhh!" Protoman grit his teeth as the darkness within him struggled ever harder to emerge and take over. "L-l-l... Ch-chaud..."

"Hehehe... Just stop fighting it..." the blackened HeelNavi watching over him chuckled. "You've cost us a lot of my comrades so far, but we don't hold a grudge... You know why? Because those who are strong always turn to the dark in the end... Now go on... release the DarkPower within you... Become the ultimate killing machine! Heeheehee!"

"So Protoman and Junkman were having their match outside the tournament schedule when a bunch of Nebula's goons showed up and abducted him?" Lan repeated, just to make sure that he'd heard that right.

"Yes," Chaud nodded.

"And this didn't involve your PET spontaneously flying across the room and jacking Protoman in under its own power?"

"No..." Chaud blinked as he processed the odd statement. The other occupants of the room weren't far behind him. "Though considering how little is known about DarkPower, I suppose something like that wouldn't be quite outside the realm of possibility."

"Eh, Lan thinks weird thoughts like that all the time," Dex dismissed. "Like when he thought Higsby had a crush on Miss Mari."

"Uh, Dex...?" Mayl hesitated as Yai facepalmed. "Mr. Higsby does have a crush on Miss Mari..."

"What?! Why doesn't anyone tell me these things?!"

"Anyway..." Lan sweatdropped as he tried to get the topic back on track. "Junkman offered to help get Protoman back, but was deleted on the way..."

"Essentially," Chaud nodded in confirmation of the very brief summary of what happened.

"All because Protoman's struggling with a DarkSoul because you used a DarkChip..."

"It was against over five hundred of Nebula's forces before you took down Shademan, but yes," Chaud gazed back levelly. "It is not something I am proud of. Such weakness is inexcusable."

"And you want our help getting him back?" Lan cut off the building questions he could feel the others burning to ask. "Not that I'm refusing, but why us?"

"Because you and Megaman have a habit of pulling through where others might not," Chaud allowed.

Lan sighed as he took that in before picking up his PET and simply handing it to Chaud.

"Lan!" Mayl gasped as Yai and Dex both sucked in breaths of surprise as well.

"What are you–?" Chaud blinked. "Megaman is your navi..."

"And Protoman's yours," Lan countered firmly. "Now go get him back."

"Aw, yeah!" Dex grinned and pounded his fist into his palm. "Time to go bash some bad guys!"

"Now wait a second–" Chaud began.

"Chaud," Lan interrupted, "every minute you spend arguing with them over this is another minute Protoman's in Nebula's clutches."

"...Oh, all right..."

"Hephaestus's office, Herfjötur speaking."

"..."

"I'm sorry, I don't want any free bustline enlargement. I and my shield-sisters are perfectly happy with the size of our b–"

"..."

"Aphrodite, I'm really tired of this right now, so I'll make you a deal: Hang up immediately and don't call this number again until after Heph's current activation attempt is over and the three of us won't extract your pathetic excuse for reproductive organs out through your nose."

click

"Yeah, that's what I thought." (50)

"Damn..." Chaud swore as the group of navis encountered a heavy sealed door barring the way deeper into the undernet. "This is going to be a problem..."

"No worries," Lan smiled, "after all they probably left a key lying around somewhere so their other members could get in."

"Yes, but where is the question," Chaud shot back.

"Well, if it was me, I'd have put it–"

BOOM-CRASH

Chaud and Lan blinked before turning to the display which showed a rather thoroughly mangled former door and a smug Gutsman. exe dusting his hands off.

"Or we could do that..." Chaud blinked again before considering Dex. "Just what did you customize your navi with, again?"

"A bunch of strength boosters and terrain cracking programs as the base," Dex smirked. "Heck, Gutsman's probably the only geddon-element navi on the net!" (51)

"You totally made that up," Yai frowned.

"So what if I did?" Dex shot back angrily. "No one else I've ever heard of has done that with a navi, so I should be able to call it whatever I want!"

"We're wasting time..." Chaud cut the brewing argument off before it could gain momentum.

"Eighteen plus strength boosters means never having to say 'it's locked'," Apollo nodded sagely as the group continued on.

"Holy..." Hub muttered as he spied the gigantic scar carved across the terrain in front of the group. "Did... Did Junkman do that ?!"

"With some help from the forces of Nebula," Chaud confirmed.

"Damn..." Dex and Gutsman. exe added together.

"On the upside, that means there's far fewer Nebula navis left to stop us at this point, tho–"

"Hey! What are you four doing down here?!" someone yelled, causing Hub, Roll. exe, Gutsman. exe, and Glide. exe to turn and see roughly a dozen blackish navis of varying generic types running up to them.

"We're here for Protoman," Roll. exe stated firmly.

"Yes, so if you would kindly step aside," Glide. exe added politely.

"Step asi...? Who the hell do you think we are?! We survived the thing that caused this level of devastation! Don't think you four chumps are taking one more step! Get 'em!"

The dozen navis began to charge, only to be brought up short as a bunch of Rockcubes appeared in their way.

"Are you certain about this course of action?" Glide. exe asked.

"Of course," Chaud's voice conveyed his certainty. "Junkman left a little something of himself behind after all."

A moment later and an avatar of the massive mismatched junk navi appeared, glaring sinisterly with his glowing yellow eyes and the Nabula navis backed up a step or two each.

"Ohgeezohgeezohgeez..."

"The hell?! He's dead ! I saw Lord Laserman off him myself!"

The Rockcubes all levitated into the air before shooting at the gathered Nebula members amidst a great deal of panicked screaming.

"Hehehehehe..." the blackened HeelNavi chuckled as he watched Protoman. exe struggle against his bindings. "Your transformation is about ninety percent complete at this point... Soon... Soon you will be one of us!"

"Nnnnnnngghhh...! N-n-neverrrrraaarrgh!"

"Hehehe... That's what they all say at first!"

"Protoman!" a familiar voice called out, causing the HeelNavi to turn around. "Release him now!"

Through the darkening haze in his vision, Protoman. exe beheld four new navis racing towards his position. They seemed mildly familiar, save for the one in blue. He knew that navi...

Delete him... DELETE!

"Rrrrgh!"

"Oh, you want him back?" the blackened HeelNavi was saying. "You sure you wouldn't like something else? How about a nice VIRUS MOB!"

Protoman. exe watched as a mass of viruses leaped out at the navis, only to be deleted moments later under a barrage of various assaults. Save for the brown one, they hardly seemed winded.

"Pathetic..." a voice Protoman. exe was sure he knew scoffed at the HeelNavi. "Is that the best you have to offer?"

Abandoned... Left to rot... He never cared about you...

"SHUT UP!" the HeelNavi spat indignantly. "I'll show you what happens to those that mess with Nebula!"

"rrrrraaaAGH!" Protoman. exe roared in anger and confusion as the HeelNavi undid his restraints, leaving him to fall kneeling to the ground.

"Protoman! You're free now! It's time to unleash your inner Darkness and show them your true self! Terminate them all!"

Delete... DELETE!

Yes... He would delete them all... Starting with that one...

The four navis jumped back from his sudden slash.

"Amazing..." the HeelNavi breathed in awe. "I never even saw him..." the words trailed off as the HeelNavi wondered why the world was tilting so when his feet were firmly planted on the ground as his top half slid off his bottom half, "move..."

"Everyone get back!" the blue navi called. "There's no telling what he'll do like this!"

"GrrrrrAGH!"

"Don't worry," that familiar voice stated calmly. "I know exactly what to do. Just follow my lead."

"Of course," the blue navi nodded without hesitation.

Delete them! Delete! DELETE!

"De...lete..." he groaned out, that one thought drowning out even his identity as the Darkness took hold. Glaring at the blue navi, he swung his sword...

...and was surprised motionless as the blade was stopped dead between the blue navi's hands.

"Rrrrrr..." he growled as he tried to pull his blade back and failed.

"Protoman!" the voice called out. "You can't cut me with your soul so clouded! Wake up! Hear me and dispel the darkness that holds you in its grip!"

Pah! You cannot be rid of the darkness so easily! Empty words!

"Grrr..."

"Chaud, we need more to get through to him!" the blue navi called out as he struggled to keep his grip on the blade. "Synch with me so I can act as a conduit between you two!"

"Of..." the voice seemed surprised, though why escaped him in that moment, "of course... Ready!"

"Let's do this!" the blue navi cried out as he began glowing. The glow extended to his blade the blue navi held tight and down towards his body, bringing sensations at once painful and familiar. A boy with white and black hair, dressed in camo pants and a red vest over a black shirt. Endless training and pain that both shared. He knew this person... The one he'd sworn to never betray, no matter what...

No! You belong to the darkn..s! Yo. .re p..t o. .t fo..ve. ...

"Gaaahhhhh!" he yelled out as the darkness hovering over his mind was forced back. Back into the deepest recesses of his soul where it belonged. "Ungh... L...Lord Chaud...? Is that...?"

"It's me Protoman... Welcome back... Time to jack out, now. We've got a lot to talk about and a finals match to prepare for..."

"Okay Apollo, whatever you had on Zeus worked, so we've got clearance to..." Hephaestus trailed off as he spotted what had been done to his office in the very short time he'd been gone. Red and blue streamers hung on everything. Everything. Posters of one of two, or both, teams of armored humanoids were plastered on practically every flat surface, their faces pasted over with the likenesses of Lan, Hub, Chaud, and Protoman. exe. And in the center of the room, a proud banner declared 'Red vs Blue'.

Hephaestus's eye twitched.

"Oh, hey bro!" Apollo greeted with his face painted half red and half blue like some demented mortal at a sporting event. "Do you like what the incredible Apollo has done for the mighty Lan and Megaman's match with the amazing Chaud and Protoman?"

"What do you even see in that branch?"

"It is one of the few places still capable of surprising the gifted Apollo with any regularity."

"Ladies and gentlemen!" the NAXA announcer called out to the gathered crowd. "The battle you've been waiting for! The showdown between the two Electopian representatives for the Blue Moon championship! Both are still young, but they've each battled world class opponents to reach where they are now! Here they are! The legendary child prodigy of the Electopian Officials... Eugene Chaud and his navi Protoman!"

The crowd proceeded to go nuts as the boy entered with a confident stride.

"And the grandson of the man credited as the father of Net Society, Lan Hikari and his navi Megaman!"

The crowd went berserk as Lan skated into the arena to join Chaud at the battlecomp.

"I hope you don't expect me to go easy on you," Chaud smirked at Lan.

"As if!" Lan grinned right back.

"Who will the fates smile upon today? Eugene Chaud or Lan Hikari? NetBattlers ready? Battle routine, set!"

Hub and Protoman. exe stared each other down from across the projected digital battlefield and spoke together.

"Execute!"

"Aw, yeah!" Dex cheered as both navis blurred forward and clashed LifeSwords together as their opening move. "This is gonna be AWESOME!"

The scene in Tamako's small home was quite a bit livelier than the young woman was used to, but she had no complaints. Her precious nephew was not only over to visit, but he'd actually brought friends with him. It was such a momentous occasion that it warranted everything in her power to make it happen. That they all just wanted to watch the Blue Moon finals was perfect, since that's what she'd been planning on doing herself.

"Go Master Lan!" Kai yelled at the display, his navi Turboman. exe right there with him.

"Go Protoman you sexy beast you!" the Mary girl's navi Ring. exe counter-cheered at the top of her lungs, the girl herself joining in with a much more sedate voice and a not insubstantial blush.

"Looks like Mamoru's gotten some good friends, eh Tamako?" Metalman. exe asked with a fondness that anyone else would be surprised to know he possessed.

"Yeah, looks like," Tamako smiled with a similarly secret fondness as her nephew joined the Kai boy in cheering for Lan. Personally, she was rooting for Chaud, but then he was the guy she'd lost to in the Eagle tournament.

Chaud smirked at his grinning opponent as Protoman. exe and Megaman. exe clashed sword chip on sword chip for a few more passes. "Good to see you haven't slacked off, Lan. But what do you say we take this to the next level? Protoman!"

"Roger!" Protoman. exe got into a stance Lan and Megaman. exe had only ever seen once before, but from the looks on their faces they knew exactly what was in store.

"BattleChips in!" Lan hurriedly sent chip data to his navi. "Down–"

"Delta!" Protoman. exe yelled as he dashed forwards, the first slash clanging off a hastily raised Guard chip. "Ray!" the second slash obliterated a Barrier that had also been raised rather quickly. "Edge!"

'...funny, that last one met much less resistance than expected,' Protoman. exe thought as instead of striking the final stance to match the appearance of the triangular Delta character around his opponent, he whipped around and parried a giant shuriken that had been aimed for his back, spotting the bisected dummy fading away. 'Ah, AntiDamage...'

"Damn..." Megaman. exe cursed good-naturedly as he landed back on the ground and met Protoman. exe's shaded gaze.

"Very impressive..." Protoman. exe allowed. "Not many can do that."

"Heh..." Megaman. exe chuckled. "Back at you."

"Very well, it seems I'll need to try something new," Chaud didn't lower his smirk for a moment as he selected five very specific alterations to his folder. "Geddon1, BattleChip in! PanelShoot 1, 2, and 3, Experimental Chips in! Junkman, Navi Chip in! Download!"

"Program Advance!" Protoman. exe declared strongly as the massive avatar of the junk data navi appeared and raised his clamp-tipped arms high into the air, eyes glowing brightly as the entire cyberscape cracked loudly and every single Panel in the battlecomp rose into the air, including the ones the competitors were standing on. "Geddon Storm!"

And then the Panels began whirling around the cyberscape in a deadly chaotic dance.

"Oh, my, it looks like 'Reverse Style' Rideman is on the ropes, folks!" the representative from the Sharo Space Center announced.

"Grr..." Sherrice growled as she took in the identical stoic expressions of her opponent and his navi. "We're not done yet! Do it Rideman! Unleash the ancient power of Mu!"

The dark-colored bipedal equine navi gave a loud whinny as he began to emit an immense power from within.

"What's this? Rideman is undergoing another transformation? What will he become this ti–BOZHE MOY!" (52)

A monstrously distorted equine bellow was heard amidst the sudden digital interference along all lines of transmission.

"Cut the broadcast!"

"I can't believe I'm seeing this!" Yai gaped as Megaman. exe and Protoman. exe leaped from flying Panel to flying Panel in a deadly dance that most navis would have been deleted even attempting.

"I can't believe I'm keeping up with it!" Mayl's eyes were wide as she found herself understanding the kinds of maneuvers required of navi and operator alike to perform the insane acrobatics being displayed in front of the cheering audience. Understanding... and feeling certain she could perform them herself if needed. 'Is this really what it's like for those two all the time?'

"GUTSSOUL!" Megaman. exe's shout heralded a shaking of the already abused cyberscape right before he opened up with the rapid-fire GutBuster, blasting away at flying panels and his opponent alike, thinning the deadly storm of projectiles in his counterattack.

"YEAH! THAT'S IT LAN!" Dex howled. "SHOW EVERYONE THE POWER OF GUTS!"

"Holleeee..." whistled a tall thin man with blond hair, red-tinted sunglasses, and a pilot's jacket tied around his waist under his blue t-shirt. "That's the rival you were talking about in our exhibition match?"

"Yep! That's the only guy we've never been able to beat, Charlie!"

"Huh..." Charlie stroked his chin as he continued watching the match. "I just might have to take a trip to Electopia sometime soon..."

Sherrice felt herself shed tears as her opponent was flown off in a helicopter to an unknown destination. Even as she herself was restrained and taken away, her navi Rideman. exe confiscated.

'I... I failed you, my ancestors...'

Protoman. exe grit his teeth as the SuperVulcan attack ended. Between that and the invincible rapid-fire ability of 'GutsSoul's' buster, the damage was beginning to add up.

"Hang in there, Protoman," Chaud instructed him calmly. "If I know Lan and Megaman, then this should handle things. AntiFire, AntiAqua, AntiElec, AntiWood..."

"Hey, thanks!" Lan shot back. "Now I know what not to use! M-Cannon, triple download!"

"Program Advance!" Megaman. exe grinned in his current yellow and red armor as the giant cannon formed and pointed straight at Protoman. exe through a gap in the Geddon Storm.

"AntiAdvance..." Protoman. exe intoned firmly as he felt the experimental fusion occur.

"Giga–Anti What?! " Megaman. exe realized in shock just a hair too late to stop himself from firing.

"Dr. Regal, the winner of the Red Sun tournament is on his way to the Sharo Space Center as you requested. From the looks of things, the Blue Moon finals should be concluding shortly."

"Excellent. Have the winner brought here as soon as possible after the match finishes."

The four elemental blasts lanced forth unerringly and Megaman. exe was knocked out of his GutsSoul form as several of the flying Panels around him were obliterated.

"NaviRecycle!" Chaud yelled as the Giga-class chip was slotted in, summoning the digital avatar of Junkman. exe once more to rain many of the remaining flying Panels down on Megaman. exe's location.

"Invisible!" Lan countered as Megaman. exe vanished, the Panels impacting fruitlessly where he'd just been. "Recover300!"

"Tch..." Chaud and Protoman. exe chastised themselves. Megaman. exe had clearly survived due to the UnderShirt/UnderShot program just like they'd expected, but the follow-up attack just hadn't been fast enough. They kept dodging their opponent's charged buster shots while waiting for him to reappear.

'There...' they both thought as one as the navi reappeared.

"Recover 150! Sacrifice for Unison Chip! BattleChips in and download!"

"StepCross!"

"ROLLSOU–ARGH!" Megaman. exe cried out as the double-slash interrupted his form shift and he nearly fell off his perch as Protoman. exe sailed past, twisting to land among one of the few remaining clusters of flying Panels.

"It's over!" Chaud yelled as he directed Protoman. exe to rebound for another pass.

"P-PitHockey..." the barely-hanging-on Megaman. exe grunted out as he flung the Program Advance straight at the oncoming Protoman. exe at just the right angle.

Chaud's and Protoman. exe's eyes widened, unable to dodge the oncoming attack. The ricocheting projectile of death landed perfectly over and over until the inevitable happened.

"Protoman... deleted! Lan and Megaman are the Blue Moon champions!"

"Huh..." Chaud sighed heavily as the cheers died down. "You really have improved, Lan... I can honestly say that this time wasn't a fluke. But don't get comfortable. The next time we meet, it won't be so easy."

"Looking forward to it!" Lan just smiled back.

"Me too," Megaman. exe said after he jacked out of the devastated cyberscape. "I think I understand you two a little better now. The hell you put yourselves through to get better and stay at the top of your game. To protect all those that need protecting. It's truly inspiring."

Chaud barely stopped his eyes from widening at the blue navi's words. While many had guessed at the length of his training schedule, none had ever realized the contents of it. Particularly the self-inflicted torture that had been necessary to generate the darkness-fueled Muramasa Style. The kind of hell he'd promised himself never to inflict on Protoman. exe ever again, down to swearing that they'd get strong enough to never need the style no matter the opponent.

'Is... is this the DoubleSoul ability that Dr. Hikari mentioned? Is it not just the power to channel another navi's abilities, but the power to understand them as well?'

"And we'll be stronger next time as well!" Lan promised.

"Tch... You'd better," Chaud snorted as he began walking down the steps towards the exit, even as he heard the approach of a helicopter. He heard the NAXA announcer telling Lan to quickly climb into the helicopter as he left. 'Lan... Megaman... I hope you can handle what's waiting for you... Whatever it is...'

"Aw, man, that helicopter show was awesome!" Kai cheered as the newscasters began discussing the match in retrospect. "Master Lan is the best!"

"Aww..." Ring. exe pouted. "Protoman lost... And we're too far away to go comfort him..."

"Ring..." Mary rolled her eyes.

"You think Master Lan and Master Megaman are off to face the winner of that Red Sun tournament now?" Turboman. exe pondered.

"Maybe..." Mamoru allowed quietly as he thought on things. 'Then again, the tournament officials seemed rather in a hurry for it to be just a special match being planned. I think there may be more to this than anyone is being told...' "Mistman?"

"Yes, Lord Mamoru?" one of the current joint holders of Rank 3, on assignment from Serenade. exe to aid and protect the undernet administrator while his counterpart Bowlman. exe took on rank challengers, replied just as quietly as the rest of the room continued being rather loud.

"I want you to look into this... Put Bowlman and the lower ranks on alert as well. I feel something may be happening soon..."

"You'll be told the details when you arrive. For now, just climb into the helicopter as quickly as possible."

"I'm from Netopia's space monitoring center, NAXA, the same place we're headed to now. All you need to know at the moment is that our planet is in great peril and you may be the only one who can help us."

"So this is NAXA..." Lan muttered as he allowed himself to be led through the high tech complex. It looked exactly like he and Hub had expected it to. The very same as in their... Loop memories? Was that how Django put it, or were those supposed to be what he got after Waking Up in a new 'Loop'? 'I better ask Hub later... Even though he'll probably chew me out for not paying better attention...'

"Yes..." the NAXA lady, whose name Lan didn't recall catching, replied as she hurried him through doors and hallways. "You'd best prepare yourself. A giant asteroid is headed for a direct impact with our planet. We have a plan to stop it, but we require your strength, Lan."

"So... that's what the tournament was about? To find the best NetOp for the job?"

"In short, yes. Despite the relative crudeness, it was the best way we had available to us in the time allotted and the necessary secrecy to keep the populace from panicking and causing even more problems. The calculated impact time may be days from now, but in astrological terms, we're cutting it perilously close as it is. Ah, we're here... Here he is, the winner of the Blue Moon tournament, Lan Hikari."

Lan watched as one person in particular jumped in surprise at the mention of his name and whip around to look straight at him. That person being Lan's father.

"Lan...? I was told the winner was from Electopia, but..."

"Heh... Hi dad," Lan waved with an awkward smile. "I hear you've been shooting at asteroids?"

"Yes, but the laser plan failed," another scientist fidgeted nervously, "so we've come up with a new plan... or at least Dr. Regal has... Won't you tell us what it is now, doctor?"

"Of course," the man at the head of the room, a man with a smile and bearing that bespoke of nothing less than utter confidence, impeccably dressed with nary a wrinkle to be seen and a monocle perched over one eye framed by his dark hair. "I suppose that it is a sign of good fortune that he is your son, Dr. Hikari."

Lan's dad had a stony expression, but Lan caught the momentary look of suspicion in his father's eyes.

"Yes, he's a very talented boy."

"Indeed," Dr. Regal's proud smile didn't waver for an instant, "you must be very proud. It is nice to meet you, Lan. I am Dr. Regal, a mere scientist."

'Wow...' Lan thought as he did his best to keep his reaction under control, 'knowing what I do, his attempt at humility makes me want to punch the guy...' "N...Nice to meet you..."

"Now, let me explain why you were brought here..." Dr. Regal continued as Lan walked next to the other scientists. "You see, the reason we had you brought here, in fact the reason why we searched for the best NetBattlers in the world, is because my plan requires the best navis and operators, who can maintain their elite level of ability in even the most grueling circumstances. To this end, we held two world-wide NetBattle tournaments..."

"Blue Moon and Red Sun," Lan interrupted, nodding. "What? I saw the coverage on the other. It was kind of a big deal after all."

"Indeed, then you have likely heard of the other winner, even now at the Sharo Space Center to analyze and maintain the flow of important data. They should be coming online with us... now, fact."

The monitor behind Dr. Regal flickered and resolved into a view of another room, with a particular person standing at attention in the front that Lan found much more familiar than he otherwise should have.

"Hey Baryl!" Lan greeted cheerfully before he could stop himself.

"Do a Baryl roll! A Baryl roll!" Apollo shouted while laughing hysterically.

"I think Hub might object to you shipping his girlfriend with someone else," Hephaestus smirked.

"What?!" Apollo began to sputter indignantly. "But... The amazing Apollo would never...!"

"I hear you and Colonel had a little 'Trojan' trouble at the Red Sun finals?"

Baryl's eyes instantly sharpened and focused straight on Lan. "That is supposed to be classified..." the young man said dangerously. "How do you know about it?"

"Know about what?" Lan sweated nervously under Baryl's gaze. "I mean, it's just a joke... Rideman turns into a horse navi... 'Trojan horse', get it?"

"Hmph..." another voice huffed as the image of a mostly black navi with some parts white, red, and yellow along with a blue cape and a stern expression to match Baryl's appeared in a corner and considered Lan for a moment. A navi Lan readily recognized as Colonel. exe "It seems there has been no leak, Baryl. Merely a young boy's unfortunate attempt at humor..."

"As long as that's all it is," Baryl gave Lan one last glare.

'Hoo, boy... that was a close one...' Lan thought with relief.

"In any case, we have more important things to discuss, isn't that right Dr. Regal?" Baryl turned to the man in charge of the mystery operation.

"Indeed. For you see, the asteroid hurtling to our planet is in fact not natural."

"Not..." one scientist found his voice in the stunned silence sooner than the rest. "You mean... man-made? But... surely we'd have heard of a launch of this magnitude!"

"Not necessarily," Dr. Regal replied calmly. "I said it was not natural, not that it was made by human hands."

"But... Surely you don't mean to say that... An alien craft? Headed straight for us?"

"I couldn't believe it myself at first, despite being the one who took the readings while studying it. Not only is this asteroid artificial in origin, with accumulated debris built up from its long journey of course, it possesses a cyberworld. A cyberworld on a frequency compatible with our own, with some minor adjustments to the signal of course."

"But... where could it have come from?"

"The origin is not important now," Baryl cut in before Dr. Regal could. "What matters is that we stop it from impacting the planet."

"Indeed," Dr. Regal nodded. "The original laser weapon has been modified into a high powered transmitter. With you and the Sharo Space Center feeding NAXA the necessary info to keep a connection going, we will use it to send Lan's NetNavi into the asteroid's cyberworld..."

"Where he can gain control of its systems and alter its course..." Dr. Hikari finished after Dr. Regal's dramatic pause.

"Indeed," Dr. Regal confirmed. "Since navis are program data which is already sent all over the world wirelessly every day, the adjusted laser can easily send a navi into the asteroid's cyberworld."

"But it's far too dangerous!" Lan's dad protested.

"Of course," Dr. Regal admitted without missing a beat. "It is a dangerous mission to space where anything could go wrong. We could lose the navi and the entire planet would be smashed to pieces as a result. To even have a chance of success, the highest of operating skills will be crucial, both from the navi being sent and the one ensuring the integrity of data transmission from Sharo."

Baryl stood, if at all possible, even more at attention.

"Do you think you are not up to the task, Lan?"

"We're ready!" Lan and Hub declared as one before either could really consider what they were agreeing to, and who they were agreeing with.

"But Lan..." their father began to protest.

"Don't worry!" Lan grinned. "This is a job for a Hikari!"

"Excellent," Dr. Regal continued smiling confidently. "Tests on the navi transmitter are nearly completed. We'll need you as soon as they're finish–"

The monitor transmitting the meeting to the Sharo Space Center abruptly went to static. A moment later and red emergency lights began flashing as alarms blared.

"What's going on?!" Yai demanded of her private jet's pilot.

"I have no idea, miss Yai!" the man desperately tried to keep himself under control as he attempted to hail the airport again. "The connection to Electopia's net just suddenly went down! We have no way to get landing clearance!"

"Is the radio still working?" Yai demanded. "Do you remember how to use it, or are the low-tech emergency alternatives for precisely this kind of scenario too 'stone age' for you?" (53)

"Of course! I-I mean of course not! Getting right on that miss Yai!"

"What are these things?" Ring. exe gaped as she took in the ominous black devices with the sinister red protrusions blocking off the access points to outside networks.

"I don't know, but they're causing trouble!" Kai declared. "Let's do this like Master Lan would! Get ready Turboman!"

"You too Metalman!"

"Colonel! Get those jammers down! We have to be able to send the data to NAXA!"

"Understood, Baryl sir!" Colonel. exe reported as he slashed another virus to pieces.

"Nice shot," Protoman. exe allowed as a virus that had tried to jump him from behind was zapped into scattering bits.

"It was nothing," Thunderman. exe replied calmly as he took care of a few more of the troublesome entities that were guarding the devices. "I thought you and your operator would have been on the way home by now."

"We decided to stick around Netopia for a bit. Seems like it was a good thing we did."

"Indeed. This would be much more tedious by ourselves."

"Yamatoman..." Serenade. exe spoke with the weight of an order.

"Yes, Lo... Guardian Regent?" the samurai-themed former member of SciLabs' elite forces replied.

"You know that I am forbidden to leave unless an imminent threat to the entire net is underway, such as one of the sinister forces connected to the undernet breaking through the barriers that keep them at bay... However, the current situation demands some manner of response. So I am asking you to go in my place. Make certain that nothing... untoward is seeking to take advantage of this crisis to break out and then go aid the world's defenders in rectifying the problem. I am sure the current underking is already in the thick of things. If it becomes necessary, protect him as you would me."

"As you command... Serenade."

"Sir, I've managed to find what you asked. However, it seems that things are even worse than you feared. The only reason I was able to infiltrate Nation Z's network is because they are gearing up for a major operation. Practically every aspect of their network forces is a part of this undertaking. And there's more..."

"The syndicate known as Nebula has attacked all across the world! Communication lines all over the net have been disabled!"

Dr. Hikari grit his teeth as he considered things. Just what was the game here? Why sabotage the only means they had of diverting the asteroid?

"What can I do to help?"

"Very well. Leave things here to us scientists. Show us all how skilled you are. Jack into the nets across the world and repair the damage done by Nebula. So long as there is a problem with the net, then our plan cannot succeed. Here. Take this transmitter and install it into your PET. It will let us keep track of Megaman in case something happens. Everyone else, back to your posts and make ready our plan!"

And now... Now Lan and Hub were involved. Much deeper than he ever wanted his sons to be...

"Lan, this is one of two Giga-class BattleChips I developed for the winners of the two tournaments. It should help you in the battles ahead."

He just wished he knew what Dr. Regal's game was... He was certain things were coming to a head now. The man's next move would likely make it all clear.

Lan wasn't sure why he couldn't jack in from NAXA, something about how they were unable to reach the jamming programs from inside the building's network, but he'd been driven to the closest off-site access point as fast as possible.

"Okay, Hub, let's get this show on the road! We've got to get the global network reconnected so we can save the world!"

"Let's do this!"

"Okay, Turboman! Let's open the way to Yumland!" Kai cheered.

"Of course, Kai! We'll–whoa..."

"What is it?" Mary asked as Ring. exe looked curiously at Turboman. exe while he pulled a strangely glowing object out of his inventory.

"Kai, remember when we got this from Yuko's dad?" Turboman. exe asked as he indicated the ghost-detecting CyberCrystal as it pulsed from blue to a deep angry red repeatedly.

"Yeah... is a ghost close by?"

"I... I don't think so..." Turboman. exe replied nervously. "I think it's past the barrier in Yumland actually..."

"Then how...?"

"Whoever it is is very powerful, and very angry..."

Navis of all types and affiliations cowered in the Yumland network as the great moan echoed everywhere.

"You... dare...!" the voice moaned as a great and ominous pressure gripped everything. "Nebula... You interrupt my duel... Capture my friend... Taint his soul... Deny me my peace... And now... you defile my home... I...! WILL...! NOT...! STAND...! FOR...! IT...!"

The jammers at all the cyber borders of Yumland creaked and groaned as the oppressive force focused on them, hauling with all its might as it ripped them from their place in the cyberscape and tore them across the Yumland network to smash together in a great ball of junk.

"Time to bust through!" Hub declared as he readied the Program Advance to cut down the next jammer. "Life–yikes!"

Only to have to abort and dive out of the way as a buzzsaw came through the device from the other side.

"Sorry, didn't see you there Megaman," the rough voice of Metalman. exe apologized as he stepped over the wreckage.

"No worries..." Hub allowed. "It's kind of hard to know what's on the other side of these things until they're down... Still, nice to see that others are working on the problem..."

"Heh... you don't know the half of it!" Tamako's voice spoke of the smirk she was certainly sporting.

Mistman. exe growled as he fended off the viruses the petty little Nebula navi kept throwing at him. He was certainly strong enough to delete such weak viruses with ease, but his cowardly opponent was summoning them as fast as they could be torn down in his drive to protect the jammer behind him.

"Having trouble?" a voice came over the private channel only accessible by Ranked navis.

"Some upstart's trying to overwhelm me with sheer numbers and making a decent go of it," Mistman. exe replied testily. "How are things on your end, Bowlman?"

"All of the lower Ranks have reported for duty, except for the current number 4."

"Ugh... Copyman's good for weeding out the endless parade of challengers, but he's so unreliable otherwise... Probably pulling another impersonation scam again..."

"Well," a culturedly sinister voice cut in as a new navi joined the scene. One who floated above the ground with a tall lithe form, wicked claws, large bat-like ears, and a confident fanged smirk. "This seems to be quite the party..."

"Lord Shademan!" the Nebula navi seemed emboldened by the other's presence.

"Indeed. You seem to be having trouble with this lone navi..."

"My apologies, Lord Shademan, but he is far stronger than most of the blind sheep," the virus summoner hastened to clarify, "but with you here, things will be different! He'll have no chance at all!"

"He-he-he... Yes... Our opponent doesn't stand a chance at all..." the vampiric navi chuckled, right before shoving his clawed hand through the back of the Nebula member's torso. "Do you?"

"L-l-lord Sh-shade...man...?" the Nebula navi asked in confused shock. Mistman. exe was feeling rather shocked himself.

"I'm afraid your precious 'Lord Shademan' caught a rather terminal case of sunlight poisoning recently... It made impersonating him for this debacle so very simple though..."

The Nebula navi wavered and dissipated as his data was deleted, leaving the vampiric form to waver and resolve into a very simple netnavi body type. One that was almost completely off-white save for a solid green navi symbol in the center of the chest and again in the middle of the head like a single great eye.

"Copyman..." Mistman. exe identified the individual.

"Yes," Copyman. exe confirmed. "I know you and Bowlman don't think much of me. I know I'm not one of the truly strong, but with my ability to borrow the powers of any navi I see, I'm no slouch either. I'm more a survivor than a fighter, but I also know what side my bread is buttered on, to borrow a human phrase. I don't want the world coming down around my ears any more than most."

"Well, then, let's get back to work..."

"That's another one down!" Gutsman. exe cheered as the jammer blew up.

"Indeed," Glide. exe agreed, "at this rate we will have all of Electopia reconnected in no time."

"Yep!" Roll. exe chirped. "Now let's... hold on... I'm getting a message... It's from Lan's dad!"

"Really?" Mayl nearly pressed her face into her PET in her eagerness. "What does it say?"

"Hold on a moment... It says..."

"Heh... You refused Laserman's invitation and instead have become a menace to our organization! Because of that... I have to delete you!"

"BlueMoon, Giga Chip in! Download!" Lan yelled right before the shimmering blue satellite appeared over Hub's head and rained its beam down on the Nebula navi he was facing. The one apparently in control of all the jamming devices still active across the world.

"Guh...!" the navi grunted as the hit forced him to his knees. "You may... have... gotten me... but... our leader's... mighty plan... is... now in motion... The asteroid... is ours...!"

"The asteroid?!" Hub blurted in shock, despite expecting that claim. "What the heck could you possibly do with it anyway?"

"Heh... Our plan of Darkness... is nearly complete..." the navi raised his arms into the air and Hub felt his power levels spike dangerously. He was going to overload himself in a suicide attack... and the jack-out prevention was still running! "Die... wondering...! Y–urk..."

A spear suddenly sprouted out of the navi's chest even as a slew of Barrier-protected forms interposed themselves between Hub and the former member of Nebula.

"Heh..." Turboman. exe chuckled from inside one of the barriers. "Looks like we all had the same idea!"

"Yep!" Gutsman. exe agreed wholeheartedly from within his own. Next to the two in their own Barriers were Ring. exe, Roll. exe, and Glide. exe.

"Indeed," Yamatoman. exe nodded as he removed his spear from the rapidly dissipating body of the Nebula navi. "Success is always desired, but it is heartening to see that things were well in hand regardless."

"Well, it's great that Megaman's okay," Ring. exe cut in, "but what now? Are they going to try and send someone else after him?"

"Actually," Lan spoke as he found the transmitter program on his PET and considered his options, "I was thinking we might just let them think it worked."

"Oh no..." Regal declared with as much despair as anyone had ever heard from the man, "the transmitter I gave Lan has stopped sending its signal."

"But... that means..." another scientist began even as Dr. Hikari's stomach lodged in his throat.

'Hub... No...'

"Yes... It means Lan's navi has, through whatever means... been deleted."

"B-but... the plan to send a navi to the asteroid..."

"Can't even be attempted without him... No... I knew it was too much for someone his age... We're finished..."

"Not so..." Dr. Regal interrupted, his voice regaining its usual confidence. "There is still one more option. We can send another navi instead. It's too late to change the main plan."

"But... We don't have time to search for another top NetBattler..."

'This is it, Dr. Regal... What's your game?'

"...We'll send my navi."

Mass confusion lit the room on all faces save Dr. Regal's and Dr. Hikari's.

"I may not be as good as Lan, but I am a NetBattler. Are there any who object to this approach?"

'So that's what you've been after all along...'

"Um... the network is back up, huh..." Higsby sweatdropped, mirrored by Numberman. exe online, as he watched the navi of his former ally continue blasting away at the Nebula members even as most of them ran screaming, in pain, or both.

"Who cares?!" Mr. Match growled out. "These posers cut the international connection right in the middle of a live stream of my favorite show! They'll pay for that out of their hides! Keep going Fireman! Burn them to ash! No mercy for Nebula! Bwahahahahahaha!"

"Come on! You heard the man! Burn!" the flame navi yelled as he set another member of Nebula on fire.

"Step on it! We have to get back to NAXA ASAP!"

"I'm driving as fast as the law allows, kid! You're acting like the world might end!"

"Did no one tell you that I was an integral part of stopping an alien craft encased in enough stellar debris to classify as a giant asteroid from crashing into the planet?"

"Say what?! You can't be serious!"

"..."

"I hope you're strapped in, kiddo. I always wanted an excuse to do this..."

Lan had barely kept his footing as he'd bailed from the vehicle before it even came to a complete stop and barrelled into the NAXA building at full tilt.

"Adjustments have been completed," Dr. Regal noted as he began starting up the giant-laser-turned-giant-transmitter. "We will now prepare to send my navi. As large voltages will be generated, I ask that everyone else please move down to the lower platform."

"Yes, you're right," the female head of NAXA sighed. "Good luck."

All the other scientists began descending to the lower roof platform. All except one.

"Is something the matter, Dr. Hikari?" Dr. Regal asked with good-humored patience.

"I just needed to see your expression," Dr. Hikari glared at the man. "The way the first plan failed at precisely the wrong moment... The way you proposed the navi plan almost immediately after... The conveniently timed attack that necessitated the selected navi and NetOp to put themselves in harm's way... And when the selected navi vanished, and everyone was in a panic, you instantly volunteered yours, knowing that everyone would be too desperate to consider your motives for doing so... It's all worked out perfectly for you, hasn't it?"

"Precisely what are you getting at...?" Dr. Regal's smile didn't waver for a moment.

"What exactly do you need the asteroid for, Dr. Regal... leader of the DarkChip syndicate Nebula!"

"Heh heh heh..." Dr. Regal began chuckling as Dr. Hikari did his best to glare a hole in the man. "Hahahahahaaa! Well spotted, Dr. Hikari! However did you piece it together?"

"My navi's not too shabby either," Dr. Hikari declared. "He infiltrated Nation Z's network and found everything. The core of Nebula's ranks for both the human and cyber worlds. The centers for DarkChip production. All your plans. How much did you have to accelerate things to take advantage of this?"

"Quite a bit, actually," Dr. Regal kept his confident grin in place. "So many things rushed before their intended time to fit this development, but how will knowing all this help you? Will you stop me? Stopping me won't prevent the approach of the asteroid."

"No, but sending me will," a voice declared from Dr. Hikari's PET.

"Heh..." Dr. Regal met Dr. Hikari's glare with his casually confident gaze. "You don't have a shred of hope..."

The roof-access elevator chose that moment to ding. The doors opened and a young form darted out, drawing everyone's attention as they turned to see who it was. "Hey dad!" Lan yelled as he skated through the other scientists and past the upwards ramp. "I got your note! Hub's on his way!"

"Hey, that's the generator! You can't jack into that!"

"Oh, and look out behind you dad!"

Dr. Hikari turned around at the warning just in time to see Dr. Regal's PET crash into the side of his head before he lost consciousness.

"Oh, come on! Foul!" Apollo yelled.

"You seemed fond of Lan when he did something similar."

"Yeah, but the mighty Lan wasn't the bad guy !" Apollo defended indignantly.

"Dad!" Lan yelled as he watched his father collapse just like he remembered from before.

"Hmm... I'd hoped to be a bit more dramatic about this, but oh well," Dr. Regal smirked as he pressed a button, causing explosives at either end of the ramp connecting the upper and lower roof platforms to detonate and send it plummeting downwards. "My friends, it is I, Dr. Regal, leader of the DarkChip syndicate Nebula! Today, I shall claim ownership of the asteroid and use it to fuel a world of Darkness!"

"N-N-Nebula?" a scientist who apparently hadn't heard Dr. Hikari's accusations clearly stammered. "Again?"

"So you're the one who's behind everything!" Lan yelled.

"Everything is a bit of a stretch," Dr. Regal smiled tolerantly. "After all, I am not responsible for the existence of the asteroid. Only what happens to it from now on... In fact, leader of Nebula or even of Nation Z sounds so dated now... Today, as I wield the asteroid's power, I shall be known as master of the world! A pure evil world! A world with no law, no borders, and no right or wrong! No one can stop me now as I execute our true desire, the Plan of Darkness!"

"We'll stop you!" Lan declared loudly as Dr. Regal ignored him and calmly approached the laser-transmitter control panel.

"Go, Laserman! Take the asteroid!"

"Stop Lan! That generator is charged to dangerously high voltage!"

"Jack in, Laserman! Execute!"

"It's time for Megaman... IN SPACE-Space-space..."

"Do you really have to do the whole fake echo thing?"

"How else is the dramatic Apollo supposed to make it sound right?"

"Hold it right there, Laserman!" Hub yelled as he finally caught up with the other navi just outside what they'd both concluded was the control center for the alien network.

"So, we meet again, Megaman," the darkloid navi of Dr. Regal intoned, his one glowing eye pulsing in time with his words. "So close to the ultimate prize as well... I'll ask you again, will you wield your DarkPower with us in the syndicate? I shall remind you that you have but two choices: Join me and rule the world, or be torn limb from limb until no programmer could ever restore you."

"Are you still on about that?!" Hub glared back even as he felt the DarkSoul within him stir at such close proximity to the one that had called it forth before. "I gave you my answer back in the Hawk tournament!"

"So you still cling to the foolish notions of 'friendship' and the paltry power it grants... Not unexpected, but regretful. Such simpering notions are forever doomed to failure!"

"I'm not like I was before!" Hub growled back, doing his best to keep his anger from overriding his sense. Taking a deep breath, he focused on the connections he'd formed, the souls he'd resonated with, and the dark urges retreated. "My friends have shown me the path of true power! My body is full of the warmth of their souls!"

Laserman. exe chuckled darkly at the proclamation. "The warmth of souls indeed... Such feeble might is no match for the power of evil! I'll teach you! CrossLaser!"

Hub jumped out of the way as the beam lanced towards where he'd been standing, the force of the blast cracking the ground even as the beam splashed outwards, almost catching Hub as he kept moving back, firing repeatedly on Laserman. exe with his MegaBuster even though the dark navi ignored the hits.

"Disruption Beam!" Laserman. exe intoned as he pointed his hand at Hub, who found himself unable to move as a bright blue laser lanced out and tore into him.

'Damnit!' Hub swore as he felt the beam disrupt his navi customizer. 'That just took out the Undershot program!'

"Hold on, Hub!" Lan's voice called back. "Sword, sacrifice for Unison Chip! Unison Chip in, download!"

"DoubleSoul, activate!" Hub said fiercely as the familiar red form of Protoman. exe gathered around his and with the sound of a blade being drawn from its sheath, he became clad in the red armor and green-tinted shades of ProtoSoul. "Get ready, Laserman!" he continued as he leveled his sword-arm at the darkloid.

"As you wish..." Laserman. exe replied calmly as the curved protrusions on his back glowed before firing upwards. "Star Break Laser!"

The beam lanced upwards, causing something to crack ominously. Hub looked up and saw a large piece of whatever passed for the ceiling in this network falling towards him and reflexively summoned the same manner of shield that Protoman. exe sometimes used to block.

"Program Advance! LifeSword!" he yelled after the impact was over and slashed in a wide arc, clipping Laserman. exe's torso, causing the dark navi to grunt in pain.

"So... you can pierce the protection the darkness grants us now..."

"Heh..." Hub smirked. "Honestly, I wonder why it took this long..."

"The mighty Megaman brings up an interesting point the great Apollo has been wondering as well. Why did he need to use the... distasteful DarkChip before anyway?"

"Essentially, the darkloids have delved so deep into the power of darkness that they can only be harmed by two things: Those who wield the power of the dark or light and those whose souls can resist the call of the dark after being exposed to it."

"And the latter is..."

"Far easier said than done for mortals."

"DarkLaser!"

Hub jumped out of the way again, but the main intent of the attack seemed to have been the opening of a DarkHole from which a miasma poured that flowed into Laserman. exe and healed his wounds.

"Oh, no you don't!" Lan said. "BlueMoon! Giga Chip in, download!"

The shimmering blue satellite appeared overhead and took aim at Laserman. exe, who in turn charged up the protrusions on his back again.

"Star Break Laser!"

The two laser beams burst forth and clashed in midair, each one pushing against the other as they struggled for dominance.

"Lan, I don't think the chip is going to last long enough to connect!" Hub called back.

"It doesn't have to, it just needs to keep him occupied while I send something from an old friend... DoublePoint! Z-Saber! Mega Chips in, download!" (54)

Hub blinked and grinned as the enhancer and sword-type chip was sent and immediately activated the first, feeling his movement temporarily slow in exchange for extra power. He then began charging the enhanced chip's power further with ProtoSoul's affinity for swords.

"It's useless..." Laserman. exe pointed his other hand at the nearly-motionless Hub and prepared to fire.

"Z-Saber!" Hub yelled out as he dashed forward at incredible speeds, seeming to appear right in front of the darkloid and slashed with the charged-up blade once, twice, and thrice faster than most could blink.

"D-Dr... Regal..." Laserman. exe choked out as sparks began emitting from his body where he'd been cut. "I-I'm... sorry..."

And with that, the head navi of Nebula began to slide to pieces as his data came apart, leaving the way open for Hub and Lan.

With the deletion of his navi, far out in space with no way to retrieve the data, Dr. Regal began chuckling. A dark, sinister chuckle that grew into full-blown mad laughter.

"Do you realize what you've done, young Hikari?" he asked between guffaws. "You've doomed the whole world! Only my navi had the capacity to control the alien asteroid and avert a full impact! Under my command, the survivors of humanity that I allowed would have lived in a glorious utopia of darkness, but now none of us shall live at all! HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!"

"We're not done yet!" Lan yelled back, defiantly. "We can still divert the asteroid's course and save everyone! We'll never give up hope! Right, Hub?"

"Right!"

"The mighty Apollo thinks the villainous Regal needs a thicker goatee and a reality check."

Hephaestus winced. When Apollo said you needed a reality check...

"Seriously," Apollo continued, gesturing towards the waiting OS program of the alien craft, "the man's navi was so steeped in evil that he wouldn't have gotten two words out before being disintegrated!"

"There it is, Lan! The control system!" Hub reported in as he spotted the giant... Well, it looked close enough to the steering wheel of an old sea vessel to be called one. Of course, there was a rather large empty and impassable hole in the cyberscape preventing him from getting there. Plus, any moment now and...

"Evil energy detected..." A giant head larger than Hub appeared and glared dispassionately down at the blue navi.

'Right on cue...' Hub thought as he prepared himself.

"What purpose do you have for coming here, evil one?" the head asked.

"Because you're headed right for our home planet!" Hub yelled back. "You'll kill billions of people!"

"Of course," the head replied. "That is my function as the Operating System of the anti-planet missile, codenamed 'Duo'. To seek out sources of evil, judge them, and finally eliminate them."

"But... kill the whole planet? That's too much! Surely there's another option!"

"The only command in memory is to judge and destroy evil. The inhabitants of your planet are sources of unspeakable levels of evil, more than I have encountered in a long time, and it is only growing. As such, judgement protocols have been activated and enough stellar mass has been gathered to administer judgement."

"That can't be right!" Lan cut in. "There's so much good down here! So many people who are innocent! They don't deserve to be destroyed!"

"Heeheehee..." a new voice cut in, one that could have been male or female. "Listen to them... Pretending to be Just... Those with evil in their hearts will say anything to forestall judgement."

"As you say, Slur," Duo. exe intoned as a navi-sized individual appeared. An androgynous figure with a human-like face, dark green bodysuit with brighter green highlights, a cropped white vertically lined top with a turtleneck over the upper portion of the torso with long flowing white sleeves, a dark green helmet with long white antenna like rabbit ears and a crimson jewel in the forehead, and a very dark superior smirk. "It is, after all, your function to gather evidence and advise on the ways of those with evil hearts."

"Indeed," the so-named Slur. exe giggled behind his/her sleeve. "Our creators made Duo able to sense the energy of evil, but without the capacity to be evil himself. A necessary flaw, but one that meant he was unable to understand those who followed the ways of evil. And so I was created to help him in this manner. To understand the ways of those who are evil and through that procure evidence of their ill spirits. In your world's terms, I suppose you could call me the prosecution... heeheehee..."

"But... what about defense?!" Hub argued back, trying to process this new development. Wasn't Duo. exe supposed to be operating alone...? "Who argues for our innocence?"

"The planet of our creators was judged before such a function could be deemed necessary," Duo. exe informed them. "Slur was the one who made the case against them."

"But of course!" Slur. exe chuckled darkly. "After all, beings who deliberately created someone like me could be nothing but evil!"

"But..." Hub's eyes went wide as that sunk in.

"Slur is my assigned subordinate," Duo. exe cut off the protest before it could form. "While Slur does possess the taint of evil, it has not impeded function in any way."

'Except to twist every verdict to 'guilty'!' Hub carefully didn't say. "But, don't we deserve a chance to defend ourselves at least?"

"To what end, evil ones?" Slur. exe chuckled. "So that beings of evil power as mighty as my master Duo could roam free?"

'Cache...' Lan gulped as he realized Slur. exe might be more informed than he'd thought.

"Or perhaps that the disease of darkness you call 'DarkChips' could infect even more under its siren thrall? Or maybe so those born of the darkness like that other you came with could continue to live and thrive? No, there is no defense for your planet, evil ones..."

"Damnit," Lan lost his temper, "we're not evil !"

"Oh, really?" Slur. exe was suddenly right in front of Hub. "Then what's this?"

Slur. exe's hand shot forth and buried itself in Hub's chest through his navi symbol. But... it didn't hurt. In fact, it felt like something was being pulled out of him and...

"AGH!" Hub yelled as an inky blackness began to seep out of his chest and crawl up Slur. exe's arm.

Okay, now it hurt... It hurt a lot.

"I believe you call this..." Slur. exe asked sinisterly as he/she began to be swiftly covered in the darkness seeping out of Hub, turning his/her green bodysuit blue and shifting the armor into something that mirrored Hub's. Even Slur. exe's face twisted into a maliciously grinning copy of Hub's own. "...a DarkSoul?"

"Can he... she... whatever... really do that?" Apollo asked curiously.

"Apparently so..." Hephaestus considered what was going on as Slur. exe used him/herself as the medium to manifest Megaman. exe's DarkSoul instead of Duo. exe basically projecting it. "At least this time... Slur doesn't normally act like that either..."

"What did you...?" Hub gasped out.

"That is part of Slur's function," Duo. exe said. "To siphon the dark power out of others and become its embodiment."

"Yes..." Slur. exe grinned with Hub's face. "And with all your power gone, you can do nothing as the great Duo passes judgement on your filthy planet!"

"No!" Hub and Lan growled together as the former stood. "We won't let you do that!"

"You have no choice!" Slur. exe laughed. "No choice but to–"

"Interesting..." Duo. exe interrupted. "It seems your power has actually increased with the loss of your darkness..."

"...what?" Slur. exe... no, Dark Megaman, started in shock.

"I wonder... Do you have the power to wipe out your own evil?"

"Just watch us! Battle routine, set!"

"Execute!"

"It's hopeless!" Dark Megaman yelled as he dashed forward, slashing with a Sword.

Hub blocked with his own and the two nearly-identical combatants jumped apart and began peppering each other with buster shots until Dark Megaman pulled out an M-Cannon.

"AreaGrab!" Hub yelled as he vanished right before the blast would impact, reappearing much closer to his opponent and slashing with his next weapon. "LifeSw–Argh!"

Hub fell back, clutching at the wound Dark Megaman's own use of the LifeSword Program Advance had left.

"Pathetic earth navi..." Dark Megaman giggled. "I have all of your abilities, enhanced by your own darkness... It's useless to resist!" his arm formed into a SuperVulcan, prompting Hub to dodge the rapid-fire blasts. "Give in and be judged!"

"Like heck!" Hub retorted as the next set of chip data was sent. "BlueMoon!"

The pale blue digital satellite formed and fired its beam, engulfing Dark Megaman where he stood, eliciting a cry of pain.

"You..." Dark Megaman growled out as he stood and formed a darkly pulsing cannon that he pointed at Hub. "You filthy evil little... Die where you stand! Alone before your final judgement!"

"No!" Hub yelled back as he dodged the blast, bracing himself against the shockwave as it impacted behind him. "I won't lose here! And I'm never alone! I have Lan with me, and the spirits of my friends fight with me! All of them heroes!"

Hub began charging up his buster as the avatar of his crimson rival Protoman. exe appeared next to him and readied his blade.

"Program Advance! Double Hero!"

Dark Megaman roared in pain as the blasts and slashes tore through him, but refused to fall. In fact, he rushed forward, his fist enlarging and becoming yellow as he slammed it into Hub's face, sending him careening back across the asteroid's cyberscape.

"It's all over for you and your filthy evil planet!" Dark Megaman yelled as he turned invisible and began shooting wildly in Hub's direction. "Your judgement is inescapable at this point! Accept it and perish!"

"Never!" Hub retorted as he too turned invisible and tracked where his evil twin was shooting from as he prepared the next chip Lan had sent. "I choose to believe that the sun will rise tomorrow! GunDelSol EX! TAIYOOOOH!"

The light burned away Dark Megaman's invisibility, and after a few moments more his damaged form followed. Out of the spread of sunlight, a dark shadowy mass shot back into Hub like it had been on the other end of a rubber band stretched far too tight.

"Guh..." Hub grunted as his DarkSoul returned and concentrated, forcing the dark mass of emotions and desires back down within himself.

"So... you managed to defeat your own evil power..." the voice of Duo. exe reminded Hub and Lan of the situation. "A fine battle, and Slur's first loss. However... I can sense that you have only managed to suppress the evil within, not destroy it..."

"What are you...?" Hub hated the sinking feeling he was getting.

"Your evil will return one day," Duo. exe continued. "It seems you are in fact not strong enough to defeat evil. Judgement will be administered and your planet's evil destroyed. Point of no return approaching..."

"Of course I can't destroy it!" Hub retorted, Duo. exe's inflexible views setting his temper off. "It's part of me! The capacity to do evil is a part of every human and navi on the planet! But so is the capacity for good! We all struggle to decide how we'll act every day! Will we give of ourselves to help others, or hurt them to help ourselves? Suppressing our darkness to act on the light is how we fight evil! Each and every day of our lives! Some of us might fall along the way, but for the most part we defeat our evil when it wakes!"

"My mission is to destroy evil. That it will mean your race's extinction is a regrettable, but necessary cost."

"WE WON'T LET YOU!"

"You who possess evil within," Duo. exe intoned as his floating head rose up high above the platform. "You have threatened the Operating System of the anti-planet missile. My program is clear on what must be done. You will be destroyed and judgement carried out."

Duo. exe's head let out an alien-sounding bellow as a powerful force began to gather.

"System defenses online! Battle Body!" a massive torso appeared under Duo. exe's head, gleaming white with a large blue stripe leading to an open vent... or an energy weapon, and extending down past where the edge of the cyberscape allowed Hub to see. "Right Arm!" a massive arm with a spiked shoulder with an even more massive fist appeared. "Left Arm!" an equally massive arm and fist, but with a giant red crystal in the shoulder instead of spikes, appeared. "Duo battle mode activate!" a pair of large vertical horn-like antenna sprouted from Duo. exe's head.

"Lan, get ready!"

"I must destroy all evil!" Duo. exe declared as mines and missiles began launching from his torso vent in Hub's general direction.

"Yow!" Hub yelped as he did his best to dodge the digital munitions.

"I'm sending BattleChips!"

"Hurry!" Hub implored as the torso vent began to glow an ominous red.

"Unison chip and BattleChips in, download!"

"Duo Cannon: Fire!"

"ProtoSoul!" Hub yelled as with the sound of a drawn blade he was clad in the red armor of Protoman. exe just in time to use the shield ability to defend against the massive laser that Duo. exe shot at him, only for the laser to tear right through the defense as if it didn't exist and blast him backwards.

"Gah!" Hub grunted as he rolled out of the energy beam's path and got to his feet. "AreaGrab! LifeSword!"

Dashing forward fast enough that he vanished from sight as the laser beam dies down, he reappeared right in front of the opening and slashed the interior with all his might. He was rewarded with some sparks of protest from the opening, but little evidence of damage, right before he was forced to retreat as Duo. exe moved and swung a giant fist at his position in a massive hook, followed by a second from his other arm that Hub barely dodged as well.

"Here it comes, Hub! Z-Saber!"

Hub grinned and began charging up the blade for use before dashing forward, only to have the slashes clang off of Duo. exe's thick armor as he shifted his torso vent out of the way due to winding up for a punch.

"JusticeOne!" the fist nearly caught Hub with a direct hit as he retreated, breaking a crater in the cyberscape and flinging the smaller combatant back from the impact's shockwave.

"Okay, new tactic!" Lan called as he sent new chip data over, including a new unison chip.

"GutsSoul!" Hub cried out as the cyberscape shook from his transformation into the yellow armored form even as Duo reared back both fists this time.

"Fall into defeat!" Duo. exe declared, only for Hub to turn invisible. However, instead of staring in confusion, he began punching the cyberscape rapidly and randomly in the hopes of getting a lucky shot in.

"DoublePoint! SuperVulcan!" Hub yelled as super-enhanced bullets began rapidly pelting the interior of Duo. exe's torso vent.

"GRAAHH!" Duo. exe yelled, his face twisting in pain and rage even as it seemed to turn red and grow to immense proportions in Hub's view.

BOOM!

The red energy wave that possessed the appearance of Duo. exe's face slammed into the ground and blew Hub back once more, dispelling his invisibility and his GutsSoul form as he crashed along the ground.

"Nnngg..." Hub moaned, barely registering Lan's frantic calls for him to get out of the way as more missiles and mines shot at him from Duo. exe. It was hard to hear Lan over the sinister pulsing of the DarkChip in his systems, calling out to be used against this powerful foe. With effort, he rolled out of the way of Duo. exe's assault and ignored the DarkChip. He'd used it once, and as far as he was concerned that was once too many.

"Even now, your evil tries to awaken," Duo paused in his assault to pontificate his absolutism. "As it will continue to do so forever."

"Yeah..." Hub grunted back as he forced himself to stand, "and I'll keep telling it to shove off every time it tries. If it awakens a hundred times, I'll force it back down a hundred times..."

"...Very well. Show me," Duo. exe insisted before renewing his assault.

"RollSoul!" Hub was engulfed in a warm healing light and his armor shifted to the pink of Roll. exe as he ignored the DarkChip in favor of the data Lan sent instead. "HiCannon!"

"Keep it up, Hub! I've got a plan, but I need to assemble the right chips first!"

"Roger that, Lan!" Hub declared as he fired two more HiCannons. One destroyed a missile and the other pinged off of Duo. exe's armor

It went like that for half a minute. Duo. exe fired his weaponry and swung his fists as Hub dodged his best and returned fire with the BattleChips Lan sent, the power of RollSoul restoring his health with every shot, successful or not. Until the power ran out and he reverted to normal.

"Got it!" Lan yelled in triumph right as the light of Hub's reversion faded. "Now we just need to wait for him to fire that laser again!"

"You mean like right now ?" Hub worried as he spotted the red glow building up in the torso vent.

"Ack! BattleChips in!" Lan frantically sent the chip data and Hub felt the Program Advance form none too soon.

"Program Advance!" he yelled as a single giant mirror popped out of the ground in front of him and angled itself straight for the building energy of Duo. exe's torso vent. "PileDriver!"

"Duo Cannon: Fire!"

The intense beam of digital sunlight lanced forth down Duo. exe's torso vent even as Duo. exe tried to fire it, the beams of energy meeting inside the opening and exploding spectacularly.

"Graaah!" Duo. exe yelled as a chain reaction was set off even as Hub dropped to his knees from the effort of the battle. First Duo. exe's right arm was severed from the massive armored torso, then the left arm, and finally the armored torso itself exploded, leaving the unadorned head of Duo. exe floating in the cyberspace as before, looking confused. "How? None have ever beaten my battle form before... However, you are too late. The point of no return for this craft is fast approaching. Once it has been passed, the natural gravity well of your planet will take hold and not even I will be able to change course soon enough to spare your race."

"I refuse to believe there is no hope!" Hub yelled back. "No matter what it takes, no matter what it costs me, I will save everyone!"

"..." Duo. exe seemed to consider Hub for a long moment. "If I have learned anything of the nature of evil from Slur, it is that evil is selfish. Those are not the selfish words of an evil heart. Very well, I will permit you to attempt to change this craft's course."

A glowing platform appeared beneath Duo. exe's floating head.

"You have less than one hour by the way your race measures time to succeed."

Hub stepped forward, looking at the massive steering wheel that represented the navigation controls. Schooling his features, he grabbed one of the prongs and shoved with all his might.

It felt like he was an ant trying to move a mountain.

"Push! PUUUSSHH!"

"You sound like a birthing coach..."

"...Please don't tell Artemis, but the virile Apollo has attended many of those sessions with his mortal lovers... It might cause the manly Apollo's sister to see him as being less manly..."

"I really don't think her opinion of you can actually get any lower..."

'Move, damn you!' Hub cursed internally as he shoved the cyber steering wheel with all his might. It remained right where it was.

"It may intrigue you to know," the head of Duo. exe intoned as Hub continued his struggle, "that Slur has put together several tests to determine if a race will choose evil or good. The most decisive of these is the knowledge of their impending doom. Knowing that judgement is coming, the majority of beings descend into evil acts in their final moments."

"Of course!" Hub and Lan yelled together.

"They're afraid of dying! They want to live! Everyone wants to live!"

"You don't give them another option! Given an option, most people will choose a better path!"

"You say that if they knew of a way to avert doom that was Just, most would choose it? Over one that is evil?"

"Yes!"

"Interesting," Duo. exe said. "Let us test this with those who know you."

Many places across the world, before a very select group of people, devices sprang to life with a mysterious and identical broadcast.

"A great secret has been kept from you, people of earth. The secret of your impending demise. For a giant asteroid is on a direct collision course with your planet. One large enough that, upon impact, will wipe out over eighty percent of all life. At the heart of this asteroid, guiding its path is the anti-planet missile developed by an alien race called the Star Marshals. Within this craft's systems is a single Earth navi by the name of Megaman."

An image appeared of the small blue navi struggling fruitlessly with a steering wheel many times his size.

"You have been judged, people of Earth. The sentence is extinction. However, due to this navi's actions a stay of execution may be granted and judgement deferred for several centuries. You must choose. Either offer nothing and pray that this earth navi may, by some miracle, change the path of the asteroid with his paltry strength or..."

The broadcasting voice paused for an eternal ominous moment as the giant face of the speaker filled the visual.

"...offer him as sacrifice to I, Duo the arbiter, so that he may pay for your collective sins with his own life. If this is done, I will change the asteroid's course."

"W-what...?" Mayl gasped as she heard the proclamation from her computer.

"Th-that's... you..." Dex twitched in confusion as he looked rapidly between the scene on his monitor and the other room where his little brother Chisao was playing. "I..."

Chaud glared at the monitor. This life of one navi versus the life of everyone on the planet...

"Ohmygod..." Mary breathed rapidly.

"Calm, Mary," Ring. exe tried to keep her NetOp from hyperventilating. "Deep, regular breaths."

"Master Lan and Megaman will definitely succeed!" Kai grinned, but the smile looked a bit shaky. "...Right?"

Mamoru simply stared at the television with an unreadable expression while his aunt swore and picked the shards of glass that used to be the glass she'd been holding when the broadcast came through out of her palm.

Yai stared at her monitor.

"Miss Yai?"

She stared some more.

"Miss Yai?"

Was it just her or was the room spinning a whole lot all of a sudden?

Thump (55)

"Miss Yai!"

Raika stood at attention in the Sharo Space center and watched the broadcast that had the Red Sun champion gripping the console so hard his knuckles were white. As a soldier, he knew that sacrifices for the sake of the mission were necessary, but still...

Mr. Famous and his apprentices all stared slack-jawed at the scene on the Netfrican village's public television.

'So this is what the tournament was all about... I knew something was up, but I never suspected they were recruiting for a mission to try and stop an alien craft from destroying the planet...'

A bar filled with net criminals; former, current, and 'former'; stared at the television that had, up until a few moments ago been showing a special on the highlights of the Blue Moon and Red Sun tournaments.

"Is... is that navi who I think it is?"

"It is clear what must be done," Raoul's tribal elder stated as he watched the broadcast next to the man.

Raoul turned to look at the older man who had attempted to curse Thunderman. exe's semifinal opponent, only to be thwarted when both navi and operator steadfastly refused to rise to his bait. He had a sinking feeling about this.

"For the good of the world, the navi must die."

"Yes! Kill him! Kill him for what he did to me! KILL THEM ALL FOR SHUNNING MY GENIUS!"

"I need some help here!" a guard yelled as he struggled with the crazed man.

"DO YOU NOT KNOW WHO I AM?! I AM THE CINEMA SENSATION VIDDY NARCY! I WILL SEE MYSELF AVvveeeennnggggggggg..."

whump

"Geez, what the hell happened?" the guy who'd hit the crazed man with a sedative asked.

"Dunno, he was hogging the television like normal when he suddenly went completely nuts."

"Hehe..." Terry Jomon chuckled hysterically to himself. "What do I care if some no-name navi dies? What do I care if anyone dies? My life is over anyway..."

"Hmph... Let navi die..." Chillski grumbled to himself. "What do I care? Is too hot to care..."

"It is!" a dark-skinned red-haired girl grinned widely as she shot to her feet in the bar and pointed dramatically at the television. "It's him! The navi who stopped Lord Wily from saving the planet! How fitting that he should die for it now!"

"Indeed..." a man at the same table in a red hoodie and a cap with a navi symbol containing a boomerang on it atop his head chuckled. "What is one life compared to the whole world?"

"Sal?" Woodman. exe asked in confusion as he watched his NetOp begin to shed tears.

"W-what is one life c-c-compared to the w-whole world?"

Mr. Match glared at the screen with all the fiery rage in his heart.

"Th-that's him, isn't it?" his date for the evening, the woman from the hot dog stand outside DenDome, asked. "The navi that beat you when you were...?"

"Yes..." Mr. Match growled out, boiling mad.

"Then... then I suppose–" she was interrupted by Mr. Match slamming his hands down on the table with all his might.

"You think I'll agree to sacrifice Megaman to you, you pompous alien good for nothing?!" he yelled at the restaurant's television. "You think I'd admit for a single second that he isn't strong enough?! He took out the WWW! Three times! He took out Gospel! And everything both of them threw his way! Until the day I can beat him, I'll never admit he can lose to anything! If you expect me to sit here and wait quietly for the end to come, you've got another thing coming! My soul is aflame and I'll ignite the heavens themselves with the fire in my voice!"

Mr. Match took a deep breath and yelled up at the endless sky above with all his might. He missed the look of surprised pride that his date gave him as he did.

"DO YOU HEAR ME?! DON'T YOU DARE FAIL! I KNOW YOU CAN DO THIS! MEGAMAAAANN! "

The 'former' net criminals known as Anetta and Speedy Dave groaned from the floor of the bar as the rest of the patrons stared at the young boy standing over them.

"My name is Sean Obihiro," the boy announced with a glare that could freeze lightning in its tracks, "the former head of Gospel, and I will have my navi Freezeman put the next person who calls for Megaman's death on ice . He will save this world, and everyone in it, whether they deserve saving or not."

"Sal... isn't that the kind of attitude the bad people have?"

"Y-yes..." Sal sniffed.

"Didn't you tell me that our purpose was to protect nature for everyone, by protecting both nature and everyone?"

"I... I did, didn't I? Thanks Woodman. Nothing good comes from despair. We mustn't give up hope while Megaman still fights. There... there must be something we can do..."

"Like you have told me before, we can have faith."

"Yes... Indeed we can."

Raoul rubbed his fist as he stood over the downed, injured, and confused elder of his tribe.

"I will thank you not to disgrace our people further with your cowardly actions. I have seen the strength of Lan and Megaman before. It will be sufficient. This I believe."

"Any more of you punks want a piece of this?!" Tetsu growled out as he held his bloodied fist up threateningly, the unconscious forms of several others strewn around him. "That up there is a man ! And none should force a man to back down from his chosen path once he's set himself upon it! Fight on! MEGAMAN!"

"That's... an ambitious recipe, Flave..."

"Yes it is, Orr."

"It, um... takes a few hours to prepare and all..."

"I just guess I'll have to have faith that the world will still be here long enough to finish, right?"

"R-right!"

"He will save everyone! He has to!" Paulie yelled out, startling the adults. "He saved us after all! He even saved me!"

"Right..." Mr. Famous grinned as the other villagers began to come around. "It would be ungrateful to just give him up after all that, wouldn't it? Megaman won't let us down!"

"Damn straight!" Bullet yelled.

"Let's hear it for Megaman!" Takeshi agreed, taking a deep breath along with Charlie and Kalinka.

"ME-GA-MAN! ME-GA-MAN! ME-GA-MAN!"

"MASTER MEGAMAN!"

"I'm... I'm sorry," Mary apologized. "I can't cheer that loud..."

"Don't worry," Tamako grinned. "I'll cheer loud enough for us both! MEGAMAN!"

"Hey, me too!" Ring. exe cut in. "I'll cheer for you too Mary! MEGAMAN!"

"I have faith in you," Mamoru smiled.

"But..." Nanako looked worried. "The odds..."

"Megman's strength defies all odds," Numberman. exe tsked. "He will succeed in even the most improbable of circumstances.

"That's right, huh! If it weren't for him, I'd have never started this chip shop! MEGAMAN!"

"YAAAAHH! MEGA*hic*MANSH!"

"I'm all for cheering for him too, Lilly," Windman. exe sweatdropped, "but did you have to mix up your water and sake to do it?"

"Whoosh MEGAMAN! Like that, Shuko?"

"Yeah, just like that! He's Mayl's friend after all, which means he's gotta be a good gu–oop!"

Wham!

"Shuko! Are you okay whoosh?"

"Ow... I'm fine Aquaman... GO MEGAMAN!"

"DAMNIT, MEGAMAN!" Dex yelled loud enough to shake the house. "PUT YOUR BACK INTO IT! I'LL NEVER FORGIVE YOU IF YOU GIVE UP NOW!"

"YEAH!" Gutsman. exe added. "WHO'D BE OUR RIVAL THEN?! MEGAMAN! MEGAMAN!"

"MEGAMAN!" Chisao joined in. "DON'T YOU DARE LET BIG BRUDDA DOWN!"

"You show that alien what-for you whippersnapper!"

"LAN! MEGAMAN! I can never repay you for rescuing my son, but please! Save us all one more time!

Slur. exe limped back up the connection from the Earth device. It had been a close call, but shedding the Earth-navi's DarkSoul had been all that was needed to escape deletion, if not injury. Escape and move to sever the connection so the filthy evil-hearted humans would have no hope...

It wasn't even going to take that much. The pitiful device was practically on the breaking point already. All it needed was a little time-delayed push...

"I'm right here for you Hub!" Lan yelled into his PET. "Don't give up!"

Zhzhzhhhzh...

"Hub?" Lan trailed off as his PET showed nothing but static on the connection. "Hub! Come in Hub! Answer me!"

Dr. Regal listened to all of this as he walked over to examine the sparking noise and saw one of the power cables had snapped.

"How unfortunate..." he mused. "Without a sufficient supply of power, there is no way to maintain the connection, much less operate him."

"Serenade?"

"Do not worry Yamatoman. Have faith. All will be well in the end."

"Baryl, sir?" Colonel. exe asked. "There seems to be some trouble with the transmission array at NAXA."

"Keep sending the data..." Baryl ordered through grit teeth. "They're doing everything they can on their end, so we do the same here. Keep the connection going at all costs! After that... It's all up to the Hikari boy and his navi..."

"Affirmative."

"They will succeed," Protoman. exe observed calmly as he and his NetOp rode towards NAXA.

"Of course they will," Chaud snorted. "That's what they do."

"There is but one way to restore the connection," Dr. Regal steeled himself calmly. "We must bypass the snapped cable to restore power. LIKE SO!"

Dr. Regal reached forward and grabbed the sparking ends of the severed cable and bridged the gap with his own body. He heard his body scream distantly as enormous voltage passed through him, but his thoughts were clear.

'Make no mistake, Hikari, I don't do this for you! I do this because the world's fate is mine to decide! Its evil destiny mine to write! When you succeed today, it shall pave the way for the ultimate future of evil!'

"Well?" Duo. exe asked the nearly immobile navi as he struggled with the navigation wheel.

"I'll never give up!" Hub growled out as he continued to fruitlessly try and move the behemoth device.

"And neither will I!" Lan's voice returned after it had been suddenly cut off. "We do this together! Full Synchro!"

Hub felt the connection flare and the steering wheel moved just a bit.

"Hmm?" Duo. exe looked surprised.

"No good, Lan... It's not enough..."

"Nnnggh...! You're right... I... I'm reactivating chng. bat... You ready?"

"Yeah... STYLE CHANGE! HUB STYLE!"

Hub's form was enveloped in coding rings and began to glow with the power of Hub Style as they subsided. The steering wheel began to turn. Slowly.

Too slowly.

"We can't give up! Everyone is counting on us!"

"Lan..." Mayl offered a silent prayer.

"Megaman..." Roll. exe did the same.

"Their souls have power," Miyu declared. "As do the souls of all they've touched."

"I know... I... I can feel their faith in me..." Hub grunted out. Unseen to him, a translucent floating pinkish form appeared behind him. The phantom of Roll. exe moved as if she were helping Hub push the wheel. A moment later and a phantom Gutsman. exe joined her. Then a phantom Protoman. exe, and Fireman. exe, Numberman. exe, Thunderman. exe, Woodman. exe, Iceman. exe, Freezeman. exe, Topman. exe, Skullman. exe, Ring. exe, Metalman. exe, Turboman. exe, Gateman. exe, Kendoman. exe, Enker. exe, Quint. exe, Punk. exe, Ballade. exe, even Jammer, Orr, and Bo, and on and on.

"RRAAAHHHH!" Hub gave one last heave and sent the giant steering wheel spinning wildly. "We... did it..." he gasped out before collapsing.

"I see..." Duo. exe observed the unconscious navi. "I understand now... It is not that you merely have the strength to fight the evil within yourself, but that you inspire that strength in others. It is a mighty power to have. Judgement has been deferred. One day, I shall return to judge humanity again, to see if the strength you have displayed remains with them. Until then, I leave you this parting gift... Now, begone little warrior."

With those words, the unconscious Hub was surrounded by a bright glow before he was forcibly jacked out.

Lan, unconscious from the stress backlash from Full Synchro, did not notice the symbol that glowed on his right hand. A symbol of a diamond surrounded by lines that formed an angular geometric shape not unlike Duo. exe's head in battle mode.

"Lan... Lan!" voices yelled at him.

"Hmm?" he jerked into consciousness. "Did we do it?"

"Yes," one of the scientists declared with relief. "It's headed away from our planet, thanks to you and Megaman."

"That's good to hear," the groggy voice of Hub agreed from Lan's PET. "But it's not over, there's still–"

"Dr. Regal, wait!" the voice of Lan's father echoed from the upper platform even as the sound of a helicopter approached.

"Lan!" the familiar voice of Chaud called from the aircraft as a rope ladder fell down almost on top of Lan. "Grab on!"

Lan didn't waste any time grabbing on and letting himself be lifted to the upper platform as Chaud climbed down to join him. Together, they rushed to the ledge Dr. Regal was perched upon.

"Okay, so... the villainous Dr. Regal helped save the world? Just because he objected to how it would be destroyed?"

"Pretty much. All without reforming one iota."

"The confused Apollo needs to lie down now... Before the pigs start their stunt flying act..."

Dr. Regal gazed out at the endless horizon as he waited for his adversaries to close in.

"What will you do, Dr. Regal?" Dr. Hikari asked.

"Do?" Dr. Regal replied with total calm and confidence. "I shall vanish of course. I will not permit myself to be arrested."

"Wait! It's not too late to start over!" the Hikari boy yelled. "You risked your life to save the planet! I'm sure that counts for something! Chaud's here, he'll back me up!"

"He'd still have to pay for his crimes," the young official noted and was about to continue when Dr. Regal could no longer contain his chuckling.

"I do not believe any of you understand the situation," he laughed lowly. "I have no intention of paying for any 'crimes'. After all, I feel no guilt over the supposed 'wrongs' I am accused of. You are the ones who should feel guilty for what you've done. Thinking you are in the right when all you cause is harm. Never seeing that your 'good' is in fact the true evil."

"..."

"Lan, didn't you destroy my syndicate navi? One who had no idea what was truly going on? How about you, Chaud? How many navis have you and Protoman deleted as officials? How many might have been innocent of their accused crimes? And Dr. Hikari... Heh... If you hadn't pursued your NetNavi project in the first place, netcrime would be impossible at the level it currently exists. And those scientists who built this thriving net society exiled a brilliant roboticist who could have changed the future in ways none of you could ever comprehend, forcing him to fall into so-called 'evil' ways. I once knew him... as my father."

"Then, you're...?!" Dr. Hikari's surprise was palpable and so very sweet.

"Yes," Dr. Regal finally turned to face his adversaries and look them in the eyes. "I am the son of Dr. Wily. But let us stick to the matter at hand. Humans commit crimes all the time without realizing it, and then presume to condemn others for their crimes. In short, you are all criminals... You and the entire filthy human race... Doesn't it sound just ridiculous? Criminals judging criminals? That is why I'm resisting arrest," Dr. Regal spread his arms widely and grinned at the three, thinking back on the revelation he'd been given while acting as a living conduit to the immense power of the transmitter. Two words making one concept that now defined him more than ever. "I am the world's destined Regal King and I won't be judged by anyone. I shall stick to my beliefs until the bitter end! For evil shall always remain as humanity's true nature! Farewell!"

And with that, he let himself fall backwards into the open air, knowing that when his adversaries ran to look for him, they would find no sign at all.

"Why... did you let that wretched Earth navi go...?" Slur. exe grunted out as he/she continued healing his/her wounds. What really made Slur. exe angry... was that Duo. exe hadn't just turned right around and made good on the rightful judgement.

"Because he showed me something that I believe has been lacking from my databanks," Duo. exe replied calmly. "That even if a race has the inborn potential for evil, that does not mean they are beyond hope."

"Of course it does!" Slur. exe yelled out vehemently. "All who bear the taint are beyond hope! It is in their natnnnngghh!"

"Control yourself, Slur," Duo. exe commanded as a powerful glow in his eyes faded back to normal, Slur. exe's pain retreating as they dimmed. "I do not fault you for your beliefs, for you were designed to see the worst in others and use their evil against them, but I expect you to convey those beliefs professionally."

"Of... of course... My apologies, arbiter Duo."

"As you said, you are the prosecution in the duty of judgement, but that leaves our circle incomplete. As the little warrior showed me, a judgement as final as that which we bring deserves a defender. One to speak for the accused and provide evidence that they are either not as evil as it may seem, or that they can combat their innate evil as the little warrior did. Justly and fairly. Without sabotage."

Slur. exe winced involuntarily.

"Yes, Slur, I know what you tried to do. It mattered not though, for I was prepared to change course and spare the people of Earth for choosing the right path. That my personal intervention was unnecessary was... quite surprising."

"I suppose that is why you marked him and the human..."

"Yes... So that should we meet again I will know that they have gained my favor and approval. Even if I do not remember giving it. Though I may not believe it even then."

"I... do not understand..."

"It matters not. The anomaly I speak of lies outside our duties." (56)

Lan smiled and waved as he was handed the Blue Moon trophy in a special delayed ceremony at the Netopian Coloseum before he went home.

"Is all this really necessary?" he whispered to the head of NAXA that was presenting the trophy.

"Be glad I talked them out of naming you the 'World NetBattle Goodwill Ambassador'," the woman whispered back.

Lan just barely managed not to roll his eyes as he continued to smile and wave. Baryl had categorically refused an exhibition NetBattle between the Red Sun and Blue Moon winners, citing the need to return to his duties, but he'd probably be asked to perform some sort of exhibition for the gathered crowd anyway.

He just hoped he could get it done with fast. On top of a bunch of homework Hub was probably going to make him do on the flight back to catch up after falling behind while he saved the world, Lan really wanted to get back to practicing that 'subspace pocket' thing Django had showed them. It was the most awesome thing he'd ever encountered!

'Although... I can't help but feel I'm forgetting something...'

Deep in the undernet, there was a bubbling pit of shadows that was rumored to lead to a place known only as Black Earth. It was called such because those who had seen the pit figured that only a land as pitch black as the shadows the pit oozed forth could produce them.

In reality, none had ever entered. At least none who had returned to tell the tale.

Had any done so, they would tell of an eerily empty landscape in the furthest depths of which dwelled a giant floating mirror. A mirror which those hypothetical explorers might have whispered could save your soul from the foulest corruption. Or perhaps they would have whispered that it could damn it beyond all hope forever.

"I am the Mirror of Truth."

"The hell is this?"

"I reveal the truth hidden within. Before me, lies and deceit are meaningless."

"You're the great power I sensed? What a gyp... what is...?"

"Bass...? I'm sorry... my..."

"The hell are you doing?! Who is that?!"

"I can see the truth within your soul. All must be exposed."

"Like hell! I'll shatter you into a million pieces!"

Perhaps by some fortune, or perhaps misfortune, a traveler might have seen the legendary lone warrior try to smash that mirror to pieces with his bare hand, only to have it caught by an identical hand as it emerged from the mirror.

"Let us see..."

"What the f...?! Who are...?"

"Let us see the truth within your soul."

"Isn't it obvious? I'm the real you."

Maybe such a traveler would have been able to explain how that legendary lone warrior came to be rendered as a statue that the navis of Nebula would later discover just beside that pit of oozing shadows before taking him back to the depths of their territory.

A statue that remained there still, an unknown struggle going on behind his eyes.

"Unless you have a sweet dreamscape viewer!"

"Quiet, I need to calibrate this properly..."

Bass. exe allowed his opponents shots to splash off his aura as he fired both of his busters wildly right back, the shots splashing uselessly off of the identical aura his opponent sported.

"Is this seriously the best you can do?" Bass. exe's cloaked opponent taunted as Bass sent a bug-lighted beast claw flying at the pretender. "I mean, we've been going at this for, what? Hours? Days? Weeks? Months? And you haven't been able to so much as scratch me! I'm almost ashamed to be you!"

"Shut up already!" Bass. exe roared as he formed the Gospel-head cannon and fired a gout of elemental power from it. Right before it hit, his opponent vanished in a blur of movement. A swipe of something from behind him dispelled his aura and Bass. exe whirled around, bringing an even larger Gospel-head cannon to bear. "Vanish into the void! VANISHING WORLD!"

The explosion of power nearly threw Bass. exe himself back as his target was hit point-blank, but he was prevented by a strong grip that pulled him forward as something was shoved through his torso right through his old scar.

"Wha...?" Bass. exe grunted in pained confusion as he looked to see the blade-like spike of dark energy emitting from his opponent's hand and piercing his body.

"Oh, I could have done that anytime. I'd just hoped you weren't so pathetic..." his opponent withdrew the blade and touched the fingers of his hand to his forehead as he gazed disdainfully down at Bass. exe. Using a face and body identical to Bass. exe's own. "Is this really what I've been reduced to? Having to crawl around the dregs of the net pretending I don't remember anything in order to justify my desire for combat? Pretending that I never had anyone who cared so I don't have to justify being on my own?"

"I didn't have anyone, you faker..." Bass. exe growled out as he secretly gathered power beneath his own cloak. "I've always been this way... On my own..."

"Liar," his copy grinned smugly. "Dr. Cossack created you to help humanity. Loved you like a son with all his heart. Put himself on the line to make sure you'd survive when old Alpha went nuts. Gave everything for you and all he asked was that you come home... And what did I do in response? I told the old man to fuck off of course! Because now I'm exactly what I always wanted to be! Powerful! Strong! Able to kill anything and anyone that dares keep me from what I want! I don't need your pitiful little sob story to justify my way of living! For I have the power of Darkness within me!"

"HUB STYLE!" Bass. exe lunged for his opponent, shimmering with the data power of the style change he'd recently discovered (or rediscovered perhaps?) and leading with the glowing power in his formerly hidden palm. "EARTHBREAKER!"

"DARKNESS OVERLOAD!"

...only for his reflection to bring his own hidden hand out glowing with dark power and slam it into Bass. exe's own. The explosion of force as the stronger attack overpowered his own tore into Bass. exe's body, but he forced himself through the shockwave to grab his double's neck.

"The power of Darkness, eh?" Bass. exe chuckled, ignoring the pain that action wrought as he tightened his grip. "I like it... I think I'll take it... GetAbility! D...?"

Bass. exe trailed off in confusion as his oldest power failed him for the first time in his life.

"Bwahahahahahaha!" his double laughed hysterically, uncaring of the hand gripping his neck. "Oh, that's just too funny! GetAbility! On yourself! HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!"

"What...?" Bass. exe tried to get his focus back, only to be cut off by a punch to the abdomen that forced him to his knees.

"Don't you get it yet?" his double grinned sadistically as he raised both arms and slowly gathered orbs of dark power in them. "I'm Bass. I'm you . The power I have? It's already there. It was always there. You're just the version who's too weak to claim it. Always wanting to blame it on 'Daddy Cossack' or clinging to an oversized puppy to save you from yourself. Trying to excuse your dark existence by pretending it was forced on you. Me? I'm the Bass who freely admits that I like living in the Darkness. The one who's strong enough to take what I want, including control of my life from a mewling weakling."

"OVER MY DEAD BODY!" Bass. exe yelled, charging up his buster cannons and aiming them straight for his double. "CROSS BURST!"

"No..." Bass. exe grinned right back as he took the impact, ignoring the damage as the orbs of darkness solidified in his hands, "my living body!" He thrust his arms forward and the orbs became a series of dark rings that converged on his opponent. "Hell's Rolling!" (57)

---

1) Apollo's mind possibly spends more time in the gutter than out of it really.

2) I will give you exactly one clue (aside from story context) until the big reveal: It's not an OC.

3) The whole supposed NetBattle ban was something I never quite got in BN 4. I mean, was Lan breaking the law in the first three games with all those optional fights or what?

4) wildrook: Within five seconds, too.

5) Elan, the Order's bard for those of you who don't know.

6) Tetsu's navi's name is now Bo until such a time, if any, that official media says otherwise. Why? The word 'tetsubo' in japanese means 'iron bar' or 'crowbar' so I thought it would be a nifty naming scheme.

7) His mind kindly blocked out the possibility that they might get married at some point. After all, that was a bit much to take in on top of everything else.

8) Thanks to Leonite, OathToOblivion, and masterofgames who offered input on what scenarios Lan should go through in each of the tournaments.

9) When Subplots Collide.

10) FaceNavis are what I've taken to calling the generic navi sprites that have human-like faces in the game. They come in male and female varieties, as well as different colors like NormalNavis. The orange and grey generic navis that are most often used by people in positions of authority in the games I've taken to calling OfficialNavis.

11) Er... what?

12) Good lord that's a long string of possessives.

13) Wow. I had to watch no less than five separate Let's Plays to get all of those. Did I miss any of the questions? If so, please let me know any others the game might ask in this scenario!

a) Footsteps.

b) Iceberg.

c) Pearl.

d) Cards.

e) The Sun.

f) My Son.

g) Sand.

h) Umbrella.

i) Wheel.

j) Sponge.

14) So, basically, his usual expression.

15) "You."

16) This is not the Gutsman. exe that's basically a joke for a competent player. This is the Gutsman. exe that one-shotted three undernet ranked navis. At the same time.

17) Why, yes, I do own a copy of the MST3K movie.

18) Hands up: How many of you despise me for doing that?

19) Yeah, I took the fact that Haruka (Lan's mom) says she'll whack any more intruders with her frying pan in the game (so Lan will stop worrying over her and go out with Mayl) and ran with it.

20) You know, I tried to pick one, but I just couldn't. There's just too many awesome ones (though I think 'Watch Me Shine' by Joanna Pacitti is rather appropriate in this scenario). Insert your favorite.

21) Hephaestus pretty much whacked him upside the head.

22) The one where Megaman. exe and Shademan. exe appear in Boktai has no real explanation (to my knowledge) of how they got there. And the scenario in BN6 was cut from non-japanese releases.

23) Anyone else remember that job in BN3 where you have to pretend to be a female navi's boyfriend?

24) Lan did a fair bit of gloating over winning the bet.

25) Oh, hey, I gave a provisional name to Flave's navi too.

26) A good chunk of the aftermath of Mary's heart attack as well as Lan and Hub's entire fight with Viddy Narcy and Videoman. exe was written by the amazing Leonite.

27) Lest anyone forget, Mamoru is the undernet's administrator. He's a good kid, but he's hardly unfamiliar with the concept of retribution. And this is more justified than most.

28) The kind you wear. He has one for Django too.

29) This line thanks to burningclaw2.

30) Ring. exe herself had a crush on Protoman. exe, but she really didn't deny it.

31) Yes, Admins can use subconscious messages to give mortals a bad case of foot-in-mouth syndrome. It works best with those who have a habit of speaking before they think.

32) Let's face it. There's a significant difference between doing something amazing on accident and doing it on purpose.

33) I love Mythbusters.

34) I find this explanation a bit more logical than Atsuki spontaneously combusting.

35) Gorou Misaki and Prismman. exe are from the anime in case anyone was wondering.

36) He's a loser. He's such a loser in fact that he doesn't even merit any emphatics denoting his loser status.

37) While one of the mettaurs lamented the loss of its pickaxe, it really didn't want to put any effort into retrieving it.

38) Yeah, this set-up was begging for bodily harm against the tournament officials. Pity the poor guy who tried this against Mr. Famous. Also, it means Jack Bomber basically bypassed the whole preliminary. I don't really like him, or the way he belittles everything and everyone that's not part of his esoteric fandom, so I'm implying that he's not necessarily as skilled as the other contestants.

39) The whole thing with the third tournament in BN4 really broke suspension of disbelief in a lot of places. Sure, I can buy that Lan's travel expenses would be covered by the tournament since he was invited, but what seems to be free travel to multiple countries (which isn't even getting into the travel times and the fact that the whole tournament supposedly takes place in a day) is stretching it at best. So the Blue Moon tournament is thus taking place over a much longer time period, with plenty of time to hype everything, possibly show exhibition matches from those who didn't qualify, and basically turn the whole thing into a big deal and the sponsors are covering any additional expenses for competitors if they're allowed to interview and film them for the TV spots.

40) If you recognize the name Takeshi and how it relates to the Battle Network series, then congrats!

41) Personally, I'm imagining these two newscasters as human counterparts of Ripot and Plum from the classic series, but you're free to think of them however you wish.

42) For those who didn't recognize the name earlier, 'Soul Battler Takeshi' is a real life person who does, or at least used to do, Battle Network tournaments. Since everyone who does those essentially uses Megaman. exe, I naturally considered that a good enough excuse to make a Quint. exe for his BN persona.

43) Loop joke. I know I shouldn't explain, but Setsuna, aka Sailor Pluto from the Sailor Moon series, is often depicted in fanfiction as being a hardass for preserving the timeline. Such behavior by her variant incarnations gave rise to the term 'Setsuna Syndrome' to describe the view that only a singular progression of events can be tolerated in the Loops no matter how many times it must be done (and sometimes that such a progression will 'fix' the Loops). Otenko's got a relatively minor case of it.

44) One Piece!

45) His last boss was Cache in case you were wondering.

46) I am not outright stating that Lan lost FolderBack, heck I'm not saying he ever got FolderBack, but the joke of implying it was too good to pass up.

47) The names of the NetOps for the NetNavi Killers/Elite Four:

Kalinka is, of course, based on classic series' Kalinka Cossack.

Takeshi's last name is from a man who did some voice work for the Megaman games. Among other roles, he was the voice of classic series Dr. Wily. He died in 2012 and will be missed.

Bullet is based on a character who was supposed to appear in the cancelled Mega Man Legends 3. His last name is based on the alternative translation (Barrett).

Charlie Nash is loosely based on the Street Fighter character of the same name.

48) Lit. Saint Dark from what I understand.

49) Think Bodyguard PA, but with bombs. And randomly targeted like Meteor.

50) Note that, as Valkyries, Brynhildr, Eir, and Herfjötur are not prone to using hyperbole or idleness when making threats.

51) Because Dex would think 'panel cracking element' wasn't badass enough.

52) Russian for 'OH MY GOD!' At least according to Google Translate.

53) Yai's smart enough to know you really can't have too many backup options when it comes to planes. I'm assuming those in ground control are of a similar opinion.

54) Zero. exe gave Lan and Hub a gift way back in the Transmission adaptation before they parted ways.

55) She fainted.

56) *cough*LoopAware*cough*

57) Oh hell…

Mega Loops 16

Mega Loops 16

16.1

"Now," Professor Lupin asked with a smile, "normally I'd ask for a volunteer, but we have some interesting students in this class."

The professor looked straight at Rock and Roll.

"To be completely honest, I wonder if a boggart's powers would even work on either of you."

"I'd kind of like to know myself," Rock admitted first as he stepped forward, wand at the ready.

"Very good. And you know the incantation, correct?"

"Riddikulus."

"Very good! Now..." the professor grasped the door of the cabinet, "begin!"

The door opened and out from the cabinet strode a man that the purebloods of the crowd didn't recognize. He looked like some elderly muggle with a bald spot and graying hair that stuck out wildly from the sides of his head and a thick mustache. He wore blue pants, brown shoes, a collared shirt, a red tie, and an open white coat. He also sported a very wide and very sinister grin.

Those students who were familiar with events in the muggle world gasped in fear and took a step back, to the confusion of those students who weren't.

"Hello Mega Man," the man greeted with a sickeningly confident tone. "Come to die, have you?"

"Riddikulus!"

The spell struck the man, but seemed to have no effect. All it seemed to have done was give him what looked like a red gem in the center of his forehead and long triangular purple markings over his eyes that held the appearance of scars. And then he started changing even more.

His right eye gained a monocle-like device over it which possessed a triangular extension even as the shadows on his face darkened until the one over his other eye had combined with the monocle to produce the illusion that he was wearing shades while his grin grew even wider. Impossibly so. His gray hair shifted in hue to be more blue, except when the light hit it just so and it seemed more reddish. The clothes beneath his coat became finer in appearance and design, almost Victorian, and he produced a skull-topped cane that was clearly for show.

"I see you remember," the new version of the man was now making even those who didn't know him nervous. "I have returned to claim my rightful place at last! The world, the universe, and all of creation shall bow before me! Creator of the Master System! Model W! Leader of Dark Sigma! Destined Regal King! Dr. ALBERT! WEIL! WILY! "

"Riddikulus!"

The spell came from a wide-eyed Roll and suddenly the man's head popped off and began bouncing back and forth on a giant spring emerging from his neck.

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!" The man laughed even as his head bounced around wildly on the end of the spring. "You're too late again! The real me is already making good my plans to–"

Rock shot up in his rest capsule, eyes wide. It took him several minutes to remind himself it had just been a dream before he believed it.

"Rock?" Roll asked hesitantly, the alarm his sudden unscheduled awakening triggered having woken her up too.

"My boy, are you alright?" Dr. Light worried as he charged in, also having been awoken.

"Fine, dad, sis," Rock responded. "Just the boggart nightmare again."

Roll stiffened for a moment before nodding in sympathy. She remembered that incident in Harry's universe. It had been... very disturbing. And that was just for those present who had no clue what it meant.

"It'll be fine, my boy," Dr. Light reassured. He'd have done the same even if not Awake, just after asking questions about what the heck a boggart was and why his children would have nightmares about one. "Whatever happens, I know you will be equal to the challenge."

"Thanks..."

16.2

Blues considered the city he found himself in this Loop. Foreboding architecture, gothic, dirty, wretched, and a dark undercurrent that resonated with something in him he generally preferred not to think about.

He was a police detective again, homicide division, and a former military man even. Human rather than a robot, though it seemed that his father was still Dr. Light, and had still made Rock and Roll. Just... in another city. Heck, he'd Awoken engaged, which was a first, and figured he'd give that the best possible shot he could. Assuming things didn't go south. And considering the city he'd become a part of, things could very definitely go south.

The police department was thick with corruption and the city was even worse. Even his new partner was caught up in it, though Blues suspected the man went along under silent protest. Which would make it one of the few things he was silent about.

Blues tightened the scarf around his neck and recentered his shades as he approached the alleyway. It was a double homicide in the city's theatre district. Middle of the night. Victims were an adult male and female, one witness left alive. Blues looked over at the witness, sitting huddled under a police blanket on the wrought iron steps at the bottom of some fire escape, looking frightened, alone, in shock, and utterly and completely lost. The victims' son.

Fighting down a dark impulse to leave the kid to his misery, Blue walked over to talk to him.

"Hello. My name is Blues Light," he spoke to the boy. "I'm a detective. What's your name?"

The boy made a sound that could have been a shiver or a sniffle, but said nothing.

"It's fine," Blues told the boy. "You don't have to say anything."

As the boy shook some more from either cold or grief, Blues looked around to see his partner talking to a uniformed officer. He heard some talk that sounded like his partner was trying to beg off the case and not having any luck.

"Bruce..." the young voice spoke up, refocusing Blues's attention back on the boy. "My name is Bruce Wayne..."

---

16. Splat

Zero blinked as he came to consciousness. That had been a rough last Loop. He and X had managed to erase the Maverick Virus by essentially taking the virus's essence in its entirety into themselves (a trick that only worked due to the virus's nature that Loop). Unfortunately... their success had come at a cataclysmic price. Reploids aside from the two of them were all but extinct and humanity wasn't that much better off. Then there was the fact that the anti-virus they'd cobbled together to purge the Maverick Virus once contained wasn't going to work fast enough to ensure they didn't lose focus in a bad moment and let the virus gain so much as an instant of control. So they'd voluntarily put themselves in stasis chambers to sleep away the long time the anti-virus would need and hopefully reawaken when the world had been put back together.

...Come to think of it, the stasis chamber he had Awoken in looked a lot like the one he'd ended the last Loop in.

"See gramps?" a female voice was heard. One all too familiar to Zero even with the muffling of the stasis chamber between him and the source. "What'd I tell ya? A real find, right?"

"Hmph..." an older male voice snorted. "I don't trust it... It doesn't seem fresh to me..."

"Oh quit your whining gramps!" the female shot back. "I have a good feeling about these things. Why, I bet they've got something amazing inside that'll help me out there!"

The old man grumbled something about a trick.

"You and your conspiracy theories gramps. They're never coming back. Now let me see... How do these things op–"

The voice was interrupted as the pod Zero was in gave a loud hiss. Zero blinked at the light hitting his optics and then again as they cleared. The girl staring at him in awe looked like Ciel. That is, if Ciel possessed long pink squid tentacles instead of hair.

"Whoa..." the squid-Ciel gaped as Zero stepped out and looked around in confusion. Next to his pod was the one X had been sealed in. And that was the only familiar thing anywhere.

"I knew it!" an old man... with a spikey beard that looked made of some rubbery substance, much like the squid-Ciel's 'hair'... dressed in the tattered remains of a military uniform declared. "They're some of DJ Weil's OctoMavericks! Sent to destroy us all!"

"DJ who ?" Zero blinked some more. After all, he could not have heard that right...

The squid-Ciel ignored the old man's ranting as she looked Zero up and down, a wide grin splitting her face. "We are going to dominate the turf wars!"

16.A

The Avengers were enjoying the slightly inebriated attempts of each other to try and lift Thor's hammer when the sound of metallic footsteps interrupted them.

'Ah, no,' Steve Rogers thought as he tensed up. 'Tony, you didn't...'

"Hello," a flat voice, and one much less mechanical than Steve had been expecting, greeted the Avengers as they looked up. The figure was red and grey, with a surprisingly human-like face. At least what could be seen of it beneath the helmet and the shades that went with it. Oh, and it was holding Loki's scepter. "Which of you are Tony Stark and Bruce Banner?"

"Uh... that'd be me and him," Tony answered after blinking in astonishment and pointed to Bruce who was raising his hand awkwardly. "Now... who are you and how did you get in here?"

"I'm Project Blues according to your files, and I think the both of you are idiots. Do either of you have any idea what you were messing with?" he asked, raising the scepter pointedly.

Steve blinked. 'Okay, this is different...'

"The potential for an artificial intelligence to defend mankind greater than we'd ever get a chance to study again?" Tony replied in that cocky way of his, while thinking to himself: 'Also, I was curious what would happen if I named the project something other than Ultron. Though now I wonder if that was the Loop messing with me...'

"I'll take that as a 'no'," the self-identified Project Blues snorted as he raised the scepter and then smashed the glowing orb on a convenient hard surface. A yellow glow replaced the blue one as what Steve knew to be the Mind Infinity Gem was released.

"The Mind Infinity Gem," Thor identified tensely.

"AKA, about the absolute dumbest thing to be playing around with when designing an artificial intelligence," Project Blues glared at Tony and Bruce. "You two idiots could have created a doomsday intelligence without even knowing it!"

Those Avengers who were Awake rather deliberately did not reveal that was what normally happened while the angry android pushed the Infinity Gem away from him harshly.

"If any of you value this planet or anything on it," he spoke with disdain, and a wince that all but Steve missed, "then you'll keep that damn thing far away from me."

"Wait, what are you going to do?"

"I'm going to take a walk."

"What about defending humanity?"

Blues turned and gave them all a gaze hidden by his shades, though the disdain was still palpable. "Humanity can learn to defend itself for a change."

'You know,' Steve pondered as the robot turned and walked out of the room, 'considering who that otherwise would have been, that went rather well.'

"'Humanity can learn to defend itself for a change'," the voice interrupted Blues as he left the building. "Did you really mean that?"

"What's it to you?" Blues snapped and looked up. Sticking to the wall was a man in full-body red and blue spandex with the red having a web-pattern design and a spider emblem in the center of the chest.

"Nothing much," the man pushed off the wall in an acrobatic flip to land beside Blues. "Honestly, Tony and Bruce can be too smart for their own good at times, so it's always fun to see them eat crow. Especially when it doesn't involve people running, screaming, or potentially losing their lives."

Blues snorted, but said nothing as he continued walking.

"You still haven't answered my question though," the man kept pace easily. "When the apocalypse comes calling, and believe you me it really likes to keep in touch some Loops, are you really just going to stand by and let it?"

Blues stopped and sighed long and hard before he answered. "No. No I won't. It's just..."

"The Infinity Gems," the Spider-Man finished. "That's what they're called. They're ridiculously powerful artifacts designed to basically rewrite the specific universe they're from when gathered in one place, and each one by itself is nothing to take lightly either. Trust me, I've done the dance with those things more times than I care to count by now and I never hold onto them longer than it takes to undo whatever they were used for. Because the longer you're near them..."

"The more tempting they get," Blues nodded.

"Yeah," the Spider-Man agreed as the two walked in silence for several minutes. "So, anyway, I was originally going to see if I could mess with the Avengers a bit until they either asked me to join or succeeded in kicking me out, but now I think I want to start a rival team and maybe save the world better than they can. Fix all their usual mistakes and whatnot. It'd certainly drive Tony up the wall if we pulled it off. Whaddya say? Wanna join?"

Blues pondered that for a minute. "Why not?"

Set 16, Loop 5 by Gamerex27

Dramatis Personae:

ROCK: An android defender of mankind.

ROLL: His sister.

BLUES: Their astray brother.

RUSH: ROCK's robotic hound.

TANGO: A robotic cat that lounges around the lab. Likes ROLL.

DR. LIGHT: Their creator and father, a genius inventor.

AUTO: An earlier model of robot created by DR. LIGHT.

DR. WILY: The former comrade of DR. LIGHT, now a madman.

THE THEATER MASTERS: DR. WILY's creations, designed to help him seize dominion over all the world.

HEPHAESTUS: Their Admin in charge of repairing and safeguarding their universe.

ACT 1, SCENE 1:

Inside DR. LIGHT's laboratory:

-Enter on ROCK and ROLL doing house chores. Both of them Awaken, and stare at one another.

ROLL: Hey, does something about this Loop seem...off?

ROCK: Now that I think of it...yeah. But I can't really tell what.

-Enter AUTO stage left, carrying parts for a new ROBOT MASTER-

ROCK: So, it's around the time where Dr. Wily hacks into the TV and says that he stole Dad's newest Robot Masters to take over the world, right?

ROLL: Yep. Three, two...

-Enter DR. WILY, on the nearby television set, cackling madly.

ROLL: One. Huh, still haven't gotten the timing down yet.

DR. WILY: Good afternoon! I'm here to make a special announcement! Tonight, the Wily Theater company will be staging a performance all over the city! The play's title: "Dr. Wily Takes Over The World!"

ROCK: -Aside- How original.

ROLL: Wait, who are you talking to?

ROCK: Hephaestus...I think.

-Stagehands wheel HEPHAESTUS'S IN LOOP AVATAR across the stage on his mobile office, as he bangs his head on his desk, from Stage Left to Stage Right-

HEPHAESTUS: This is the weirdest glitch yet. Sorry, I can't fix it until after this Loop is over. Just be glad it's not a musical! -Exit Stage Right-

ROLL: O...kay, then.

ROCK: Yeah, we already dealt with the Music Masters a few Loops ago.

DR. WILY: Tickets to this event are free and unlimited, since my Theater Masters will be conquering the entire city! Remember to respect the actors! Do not talk or call for help during the play! Turn off your cell phones during and after the play!

-Enter DR. LIGHT, Awake-

DR. LIGHT: Hasn't he done this one before?

ROCK: No, that was the Music Masters. Hey, Dad, does something seem off about this Loop?

DR. LIGHT: Now that you mention it...something about this does seem strange . I'll have to run some tests to see if this Loop's laws of physics are different. While I'm doing that, would you two mind upgrading yourselves and stopping Dr. Wily?

-AUTO trips on a piece for the new Robot Master, sending it sprawling across the ground to DR. LIGHT-

DR. LIGHT: Ah, wait. Before you go, take this.

-DR. LIGHT gives ROCK the weapon. ROCK integrates it into his arm.

ROCK: What is it?

DR. LIGHT: My Unawake self managed to salvage parts from one of Dr. Wily's Robot Masters before he had time to recover and rebuild him. One of the Music Masters, now that I think about it. Odd: he rarely re-uses Robot Masters he takes from elsewhere while he's Dreaming.

ROLL: Wait...I think I see where you're going.

DR. LIGHT: Yes! Musicals and plays have a lot in common, after all! If you use the Music Masters weapons against the Theater Masters, it may give you an advantage!

ROCK: Great. Thanks!

-ROCK and ROLL exit stage left. Machinery sounds as they rebuild themselves-

DR. LIGHT: -aside- I didn't want to worry them, but it may be more than just physics that is broken here. I just hope that it won't be too destabilizing. I have experiments to run, and I can't do that if this Loop crashes and I go to Eiken!

HEPHAESTUS: -offstage- Are you talking to yourself, or to me? I honestly can't tell.

---

16. Bar (Evilhumour and myself)

Mega Man walked into the bar with his sister and father, all still in shock and horror.

"Two words my friends." The heroic looper offered. "Doctor Billy."

There were winces all around, particularly from a young girl with what had previously been an angry bored expression and what appeared to be a skeleton in a hooded black robe. Complete with stereotypical scythe.

"On the plus side, his robots took themselves out without us having to do a thing."

"On the minus side, they each took out large portions of city infrastructure in the process. Not all from the same city."

16.6 ⅓ (Zerorock41)

Zero lay on the ground of the falling Ragnarok, arms removed and the rest of his body in critical condition. He had no idea how it happened. It shouldn't be possible...

Standing above his broken body, Weil cackled madly while Omega smirked monstrously. Weil spoke, "How does it feel Zero? To know that now I'm a part of these Infinite Loops? And that it was all your fault!"

The Awake Weil continued cackling as the Ragnarok burned around him.

Zero tried to stand, "No! You shouldn't be here! It's not possible! No! No!"

" NO! " screamed Zero.

"Dude calm down!" A worried Axl sat at Zero's bedside, shaking him.

Zero panted as he calmed his electronic heart. Axl asked, "You up now?"

"Actually feeling a bit Loopy."

Axl's face contorted in mild confusion, "Yeah. I know. The Loop hasn't ended yet."

Zero felt a great weight come off his chest.

16.7

"We cannot allow this to happen!" Dr. Light exclaimed dramatically. "We must step forth to put a stop to Dr. Wily's mad ambitions!"

Rock and his sister exchanged glances as their father used the line he'd chosen to show he was Awake instead of the usual cue for them to volunteer for conversion into fighting robots. Their dad was such a ham lately. But it gave them an idea for how to have fun with this Loop.

They'd just gotten back from a fused Loop in Naruto's universe, one where they were the human children of Dr. Light and a Hyuga woman, and they needed a break from all the seriousness and pessimism that Madara infused into everything he touched. As luck would have it, Naruto's Loop provided the perfect attitude to emulate.

"YOSH!" the blue-armored robot yelled as he smashed through the wall into Dr. Wily's inner chamber, followed by a yellow-armored female model and... was that Dr. Light wearing a military bodysuit under his labcoat? With a bowl cut?

'I know I didn't mix any medications today!' Dr. Wily thought in confusion in his Wily Machine MK I. 'Heck, I stopped taking them altogether!'

"Surrender Dr. Wily, or face the power of YOUTH!" all three cried at once.

16.8 (Scorntex)

Roll and Dr. Light stood their ground, the former wielding her broom, glowering at Dr. Wily, as the man sighed as if he were the one being inconvenienced. This, after he had lied about reforming, and tricked

Rock into fighting more of his Robot Masters, and was now intent on taking Gamma, again.

Behind Wily, Doc Robot looked at the flames it had created to block the doorway, the reason Roll was holding back from knocking its head off in the first place. That, and the confined spaces of the lab,

Dr. Light just kept his gaze on Wily. "I am not giving you access to Gamma." He stated, trying to keep his hands at his side. It was hard. Not least because his Loop memories told him Blues wasn't Awake this time, and still every bit Albert's weapon of revenge.

"Rock will be back any minute." Roll said, brandishing her broom at the mad doctor, keeping him from coming any closer. Wily just sneered.

"Ah, yes. Your precious second son, who barely survived fighting eight of my glorious robot masters." Doc Robot just chuckled, which was all the more unnerving when it was with all eight of Wily's original Robot Masters' voices at once.

"Let him come! We're all dying for a rematch!"

And then Roll chortled. Dr. Wily just looked quizzically at her. Doc Robot, on account of his design not giving him any kind of facial expression, just tilted his head.

"What gives?" Heat Man asked.

"You? Rematch against the robot who already beat you?" Roll asked, in-between laughing. There was a growl from Air Man, Crash Man and Quick Man.

"HE DIDN'T BEAT ME!" All three yelled at once. "Nobody beats me!" Said Air Man alone.

"All evidence to the contrary." Roll snapped. Doc raised its arm at her, but then Wily intervened.

"It doesn't matter now. Mega Man has already met with my Break Man," He broke out a smug smile at that, at the thought of Rock having to fight his own brother, "Leaving us free to talk. Provided my Diverse Operations Circuits Robot here doesn't do something we might all regret."

"Yeah, right." Roll said. "Like Bubble Man could threaten anyone."

There was a sad noise from said Robot Master, followed by a snicker from Quick Man. "Hey, she's right. You are kinda useless. How quick did Mega Man take you down again, Bubble Boy?"

"It's Bubble Man!"

"Whatever."

"Now, now," Wood Man cut in, "Let's all calm down in here."

"Easy for you to say!" Flash Man cut in, "You weren't stabbed in the back by this weasel."

"Oh, get over that already." Quick Man sighed. "It's not like it was permanent or anything."

"People." Metal Man spoke up, "Can we please focus?"

"Shut up!" Quick and Flash Man yelled.

"Alright," Flash Man spoke up, "You and me, we're solving this thing, right here and now!"

"... How, exactly?" Heat Man asked. Doc Robot looked about the room, awkwardly.

"Alright," Quick Man declared, "We'll go rebuild our original bodies, and then we'll sort this whole thing out!"

There was a moment of utter silence, the only sound being the noise of the computers, and Rock fighting outside.

"Alright, fine." Metal Man eventually said. And with that, Doc Robot turned around, put out the flames blocking the lab doors, and walked out, the Robot Masters muttering to themselves as they went.

Roll and Dr. Light looked at Dr. Wily, who just looked utterly baffled. Then he realised where he was, and that both Roll and Dr. Light were unbelievably angry with him.

"Ah." He finally managed to get out. "I surrender?"

16.0

"Hello Zero..." the seemingly immortal madman grinned, his battered and weathered flesh having been flayed to reveal the ridiculous amount of cybernetics prolonging his life, particularly the thick technological sphere making up his left eye. An eye that glowed with power along with madness. "How appropriate that it should come to this in the end... That it should remain just myself against the very embodiment of all that I have struggled with for countless ages..."

"Look," Zero sighed, having heard far too many versions of Weil's insane speeches over the Loops and very much not in the mood for another, "I don't really care what your problem with me is, but I have a sworn duty to protect everyone from people like you an–"

"And I have a destiny to protect them from dangerous machines like you!" Weil spat so venomously that Zero, veteran of countless fights against madmen and zealots, actually took a step back. "Hehehe... It's clear you know I'm right, 'son of Wily'... The last apocalyptic creation of the most dangerous man ever to live...!"

"Wha...?" Zero blinked several times as he tried to process that. Weil tended to idolize Wily... Sometimes even thought he was Wily's reincarnation... He'd never hated the man...

"I've argued against the dangers of machines for longer than you've been active... I've tried everything to show people how you robots ," Weil spat the word like it was the most vile of curses, "would be their undoing. I've argued the case reasonably, I've threatened people to do away with such uncontrollable technology, I've sabotaged everything from production plants to inventors, I've destroyed, I've killed, I've even encouraged the problem so that people will finally see what a danger you artificial mockeries are! And then I finally realized that if I was ever to save the world from itself, I'd have to conquer it! Every last man, woman, and child under my rule so I could save them from their own reliance on artificiality! You have never known me as anything other than Weil, the name the ignorant masses gave when they exiled me into the wastes, knowing I would one day return, but I have had others over the ages, all dedicated to the sole purpose of wiping you machines out!"

"Who...?"

"I am the chosen messiah of humanity! The shining emerald spear upon which the race of machines shall finally perish! I am Xander Payne and today I destroy, now and forever, the age of advanced robotics!"

16.9 (me and TheZMage)

"Welcome to the Reploid Research Lavatory!" Berkana greeted the visiting leader of the Maverick Hunters.

"..." X looked around the room without comment for several seconds. "This is a repurposed public restroom..."

"There were some budget issues..." Berkana sighed forlornly.

"One side!" A voice behind them yelled, and X was knocked aside as Overdrive Ostrich ran past him into one of the stalls. "Important research!"

16... (Hubris Plus)

Roll crept through the remains of the castle. Rock wasn't Awake this Loop and had opted to remain a lab assistant while she went out to fight, so she was on her own in Wily's ruined fortress. It wasn't that novel of a sight, except that this one had been ruined long before she'd gotten there. Before his latest bid for world domination, even. The explosion registering on satellite monitors had been the first sign that he was up to anything, and she'd been sent to see what she could determine from the blast site.

So far all she'd found were twisted support structures and broken robots. Careful examination had shown that a good chunk of them had been destroyed before the explosion. The blast made it hard to determine specifics, but it was painting a picture she didn't like.

"Approaching the command center," she informed the lab over her radio.

"Be careful, Roll," Dr Light answered.

"Yeah," Rock chimed in. "The world needs Mega Woman now more than ever!"

"Don't worry, whatever Wily's planning, I've-" She froze on the threshold, staring at the tableaux before her. "I... I don't think this is a trick."

The room was paradoxically the best protected and in even worse shape than the others. The walls still stood, but were cratered with dozens of scorched impacts. Glass from the huge wall monitors littered the floor while the monitors themselves burned fitfully, belching smoke. The console lights were dead, some of them melted, and the panels below had been blown outward. Broken robots were heaped at the door. The worst though, was Dr Wily.

His body was slumped against the console, and she had no doubt it was genuine. Wily-Bots were convincing, but the disguise only ever went skin deep. The damage went significantly deeper. She looked away from the grisly sight, deciding to skip the gory details.

She was startled out of her stupor by a soft scrape behind her, and whirled to face the entrance. There, in the doorway, was a girl with her face.

"Waltz," Roll snarled. "I should have known." Her Mega Buster deployed and charged, power rising quickly to maximum capacity as she leveled it at her counterpart.

But she didn't fire. Something wasn't right. Waltz wasn't even looking at her, instead staring, wide eyed, past her. At Wily's corpse. Her hands were curled over her mouth and trembling.

"No... Nonono," her doppelganger murmured before falling to her knees.

Still wary, Roll stalked closer, buster pointed directly at Waltz's head. "Explain," she instructed.

Waltzed recoiled and stared up at her as though she hadn't been aware of the other robot. "It... It wasn't supposed to be like this," she stammered. "Quint... Oh Tesla, Quint's gone insane. Why would he..."

"Start making sense," Roll growled.

"Roll! The poor girl is in shock!" Dr Light scolded her.

"She's... one of Wily's," she answered lamely. Now wasn't the time to drop the entire Looper business on him. She lowered her Buster anyway. Waltz would pull tricks, but she also despised showing any kind of weakness. She also wouldn't turn down an opportunity to shoot someone in the back.

"Quint, he... Did something to the others. They just stopped, and then... And then they started destroying each other, and the base, and coming here and... And... Oh Tesla, they were all screaming ," she whimpered, arms wrapping around herself.

"So why did he leave you alone?"

"I... I don't know." She scrunched up further. "I almost wish he hadn't."

Roll sighed and reformed her hand. Waltz might be lying, they might have to fight, but she just didn't have it in her to point a weapon at someone so obviously falling apart.

"There were tire tracks outside," she said. "I thought they were Wily making his escape, but... Was it Quint?"

"I... Probably. I don't think there was anyone else to make a getaway."

"Then I'll stop him. And then I'll be back for you." Roll turned and stalked out the door.

"Wait!" Waltz cried out and staggered to her feet. "Let me come with you!"

"Why?"

"This... This is everyone I've ever known. And now they're gone and... I don't want to be alone. Not here. Not now. Maybe not ever."

"Roll," Light said gently. "If she's immune to whatever effect this is, she may be vital to defeating this Quint."

Roll glowered for a moment before waving for her counterpart to follow. "Fine, you can come. But try anything and I'll take you apart."

"Don't worry," Waltz clenched a fist as she started walking. "I just want this to end."

Roll shoved the remains of a Joe unit out of its seat in the Dozer. The ground behind them was littered with broken Mets, the little 'bots crushed between the ground and their helmets even though the hardhats hadn't gotten a scratch. The driver had sheared it's head off against a low ceiling before coasting to a halt.

Waltz clambered up after her, Roll pointedly refusing to lend a hand up, and clung to the side by a seam in the chassis. She rocked on her perch but held firm as they set off.

With no transponder to trace they'd have to follow the tire tracks Quint had left to find him.

Roll watched as her counterpart turned to watch the Joe as they rolled away, noting the tense set of her shoulders. As they wound their way down the hill the other robot would shift to stare at the fallen castle, and continued long after the forest had obscured it.

"Why do you care?" Roll suddenly snapped. This was Waltz . She didn't mourn, didn't introspect, didn't have anything in her but rage and madness.

"He made me," Waltz answered quietly. "He made all of us, and he gave us all a purpose. We were going to save everyone."

"Save them?" Roll blinked in surprise. This hadn't been a mirror variant, Wily was just as crazy as ever. Well, he HAD been, she corrected.

"All the robots. We were going to throw down the humans and free everyone. We were going to be heroes." She looked down. "That'll never happen now."

"...Humans aren't so bad, you know," Roll said after a moment.

"Not really," Waltz admitted. "The Doctor was the only one we ever met."

Roll hummed. That put things into a certain perspective.

"Why do you work for them if they aren't forcing you, then?" There was a little of Waltz's familiar mocking tone there, but it was mostly strained bravado.

"They're so soft and squishy," Roll answered. "You just kinda feel BAD watching them do a robot's work. It's like seeing a Met carrying an I-Beam when Guts Man's right there ."

"I resemble that remark..." Dr Light muttered over the com.

"Maybe if you stuck to that jogging regimen I put you on..." Rock scolded.

"I guess I can see that," Waltz chuckled, a small smile forming. "I can't count how many times I had to make the Doctor go to bed when he wanted to pull an all nighter. He tried to do everything himself, but Quint ended up having to..." She trailed off, face falling as her mind caught up with her mouth.

Neither of them felt much like talking after that.

Roll pulled the dozer to a halt as they left the woods, stopping next to a car with a bubble dome over the driver's seat and a cartoonish skull mounted on the hood.

"Wilymobile?" Roll asked.

"How'd you know?" Waltz returned without any trace of irony.

"Just, you know, the..." Roll waved at the enormous purple fins sprouting off the back. "Everything."

"...I'm just gonna come right out and say I've never seen any other car."

"That..." Roll shook her head before she hopped to the ground. "Once we're done here, we're gonna watch some Fast and- Wait, no, Blues Brothers. Definitely Blues Brothers."

"There's a movie about Break Man?"

"Best. Movie night. Ever," Roll grinned. Not to mention the Loop they'd talked him into spending in a suit and tie. He already wore sunglasses at night.

The good mood faded as they crested a hill. Spread out below was an installation surrounded by a high chain link fence. It was in better shape than Wily's lair, but not by much. Military vehicles were overturned and smoking in the yards, walls were cratered or toppled over, and smoke drifted up from several points. In the center, a massive radio tower jabbed into the heavens, seemingly untouched by the chaos around it.

"Dr Light, I think we've found Quint. What am I looking at?"

"A military broadcast center," he answered without pause. "One of several designed to bypass satellites and overpower jamming in the event of electronic warfare."

"That was fast," Rock commented.

"I helped design them," their creator admitted, melancholy. "After Ra-Moon, such centers seemed necessary."

"Dr Light?" Rock asked carefully.

"I had thought that a communications hub couldn't be used for evil, but if Quint is there... Roll. Be careful."

"Don't worry. We're putting a stop to this. Whatever it is.."

They reached the fence and Roll jumped on. She was preparing to haul herself up and over when the familiar sound of Waltz's fingers guns deploying came from behind her. Deploying her own Buster, she spun, one hand holding her to the fence while the other prepared to cut into her opponent.

Waltz ignored her, all ten fingers splayed wide and glowing before discharging into the fence a few feet over. A few more salvos and a smoking section toppled inward, cut clean through by plasma fire. She stalked through, determination written across her face.

Roll stared after her for a moment before dropping down and following. It was getting harder and harder to associate this girl with the maniac she was used to dealing with. The usual Waltz wouldn't have bothered to aim. Wouldn't have cared about Wily or the other robots. Wouldn't have been able to hold such a solemn expression for so long in the face of destruction she would have loved to cackle over. Wouldn't have joked with her or kept quiet for so long.

She was still waiting for the other shoe to drop but, as she caught up, she was no longer sure it would be Waltz's.

They hadn't gotten far before a jeep hurtled around one of the buildings. One Joe was driving while another clung desperately to the hood, its legs already torn off by contact with the ground. Swerving wildly, the vehicle smashed into the bunker to their left. The Joe on the hood was crushed between the structure and the engine block, his eye going dark. The other was rattled as the car crumpled, airbag shredding under the robot's weight.

After a few seconds it lifted its head and bashed out the door before climbing out. Its shield had been discarded at some point and its blaster arm was warped and blackened. One foot dragged on the ground, metal dented around the knee.

"This unit must be destroyed," it informed them in the typical electronic monotone. Its good arm raised and reached out towards them.

"Stay back," Roll warned it, raising her Buster at it. This only seemed to encourage it as it hobbled faster. She'd weathered few Loops in the Protomen variant that Blues hated, and this was giving her flashbacks to that demented Joe unit that haunted the streets there.

"This unit must be destroyed," it stated again. "Sixty seconds remain."

"Until what?" Roll asked, backing up. It managed to move quicker, approaching until her barrel was within inches of its chest. And then... Stopped.

"This unit must be destroyed," it reiterated. "Forty five seconds remain."

"N-no," she stammered as she realized what it was asking.

"This unit must be destroyed," it gripped her Buster and lifted it to eye level before resting its helmet against the glowing barrel with a metallic tink . "Thirty seconds remain."

"What's going to happen?! Why do you have to be destroyed? Please, just tell us what's going on!" Roll pleaded.

"Please," it mimicked, seeming to pick up on the word. "This unit must be destroyed. Please. Please. Please." Its eye glowed slightly brighter. "Ten seconds remain. Please."

"We can fix you! Whatever's wrong, we can fix you! Shut down, go to standby, something !"

Its eye went dark and Roll almost slumped in relief before it returned as a single crimson pinprick.

"Update in progress. Installing patch 1.4.D.13." Its head twitched to the side. "Update compLEtE." It slapped Roll's buster away and darted in close, good hand curling around her throat with a grip strong enough to crumple tank barrels. "ThIS uNIt MuSt bE deSTRoyEd. MUSt Be DesTROYed. DEStroY. DeSTrOy. DestROY."

Its monotone was polluted by static, pitch rising and falling wildly as it squeezed.

"Roll!" The rogue machine's head was shredded by a hail of gunfire an instant before Roll could raise her own still charged Buster. She staggered back as the machine released her and toppled over.

Waltz stood there, one hand outstretched while the other curled in front of her mouth. Roll half expected her first kill to set her off, to hear a mad giggle moments before those guns found new targets.

But she just stood there, wide eyed. After a moment she brought the outstretched arm in and stared at her palm.

"I... I've never..."

"It doesn't get easier," Roll told her gently. "But you learn to cope."

"I..." Waltz shook her head and clenched her fist. "Let's put a stop to this. End him, before he can do any more."

Roll nodded and the pair forged on ahead.

They arrived at the base of the tower without further incident. Every other robot they'd come across had either been gunned down by its companions or found some way to self-terminate.

Looking up, Roll caught sight of someone climbing amongst the tower's girders. "Quint?"

"Yes." Waltz set her jaw and seized one of the supports, hauling herself up.

As they rose, Roll noted Quint's appearance. He was different this Loop. No armor, for one, just a green t-shirt and shorts in imitation of Rock's civilian mode. He was also taller, proportioned more like an adult. He'd broken open a control panel about halfway up and was operating on its innards.

"Why isn't he geared for battle?" Roll asked.

"He only has a civilian mode," Waltz answered. "Doctor Wily thought that having a lab assistant was giving Light an edge, so he built his own. Smarter, more capable, more mature... More ambitious, too, I guess."

He noticed them when they were two stories below his position and waved down cheerfully. His other hand continued working a screwdriver in the panel.

"Waltz, and the infamous Mega Woman! I was wondering if either of you would get here in time, and here you are! Right on cue and working together! Well done, defying your programming like that."

"What's going on, Quint?!" Waltz called up. "Why did you kill the Doctor? Why are you doing... this ?!"

"Oh, it's quite simple, really. Well, conceptually. Practically speaking, it was fiendishly complex and considered by many to be impossible. But, you know," he tapped a finger to his temple. "Genius."

"Stop congratulating yourself and explain what you're up to!" Roll snapped.

"What, reveal my plan? Tell you in excruciating detail what I've done and where it's going? Distract myself with inane banter when I'm moments away from my ultimate victory? Why that sounds..." He tossed the screwdriver over his shoulder and plopped down on the girder. "Absolutely delightful! Where should I begin?"

Roll and Waltz exchanged glances but didn't slow their ascent. "What did you do to those robots?"

"Ah, my D.13 protocol. Very proud of that." He waved a directional transmitter in their general direction. "See, it's actually two data packets. The first one is just a read me file. Tells the robot exactly what the second will do."

"Which is..?" Roll prompted.

"Destroys their ability to determine what is and isn't human. Once they can't tell friend from foe the three laws take over and try to prioritize what to save from who. Insects, skin bacteria, twinkies... They might all be human as far as they can tell, and most all of them are attacking or eating something else that might be human. And, well, one bipedal ape versus billions of potential humans being wiped away by antibacterial soap? Bacteria need saving, biped needs killing."

"But why... Why does that make them..." Waltz stammered.

"Kill themselves?" He grinned. "There's a fifteen minute delay between the packet delivery and the patch installing. They know that the update will force them to harm humans, and the first law says that's not allowed. The only certain way to save a human from their future selves is to self terminate. Of course, that's a problem for most robots. Joes can't even point their guns at themselves. Not enough elbow articulation. But machines are a wonderfully cooperative group, always willing to lend each other a hand. Does my processor good to see that kind of teamwork." He placed a hand on his chest.

"You're hacking the three laws," Roll whispered, but it must have somehow carried because he started laughing.

"Please, hasn't anyone read their Asimov? The man invented the laws, and then spent the rest of his career pointing out all the problems with them. One wonders what roboticists were thinking ."

"Why... Why are you doing this?!" Waltz cried.

"Why, dear sister, I am saving the world."

"You aren't saving any of them! You're just killing them! You killed Doctor Wily, and everyone at the castle, and now..."

"Regrettable, but had to be done. I'm saving the humans, Waltz. Do you have any idea what the cost of these little wars has been? Too high, much too high for them to continue. The robots designed to protect humans from hazardous employment have increased the danger ten fold."

"Only because Wily forced them to," Roll growled.

"Oh, sure, robots don't kill people, people kill people. They just use robots to do it," he sneered. "And if you think these are bad... I've run the numbers. The Wily Wars are only the beginning. Some time in the next hundred years the Master series of AIs and tools will be cheap enough to be standard issue. The wars fought with those robots will be devastating. The wars fought with the following generation will add up to an extinction level event. Humans will always fight wars, but those wars are survivable without robots in the mix."

Roll blinked at the surprisingly accurate description of the X timeline.

"But why like this?" She asked, pulling herself up onto his level. "Your little omnicidal update won't kill all of them. Enough murderous robots will be left to hit just as hard as one of those wars."

"And scare everyone on the planet away from robots in the process. It will be years before anyone even considers building a new robotics plant. Plenty of time to assassinate Light, Lalinde, Cossack, and anyone else foolish enough to enter the field."

"So you survive," Waltz spat, standing beside Roll. "Everyone else dies, but you just keep on going, killing the humans you claim to protect."

"Only a few. Only the ones that need it. And I need not be alone." He stood up and extended a hand. "You two have more than demonstrated your ability to surpass your software limitations. Join me, Mega Woman, and save the world from the evil robots as you were always meant to. And Waltz, dear sister, this is the freedom you've always sought. No human will ever command you again. We shall watch over them from the shadows. Rule them from the darkness."

"Freedom doesn't hide," Waltz growled. "It doesn't lurk in the shadows like some kind of cockroach. And freedom," she launched herself towards her brother, finger guns blazing. "Is for everyone!"

Quint leaped up, seizing the girder above him and lifting himself just out of her reach as she passed below.

"Only one evil robot left that I can see," Roll leveled her Buster at him. "Guess that monolog wasn't such a good idea after all, huh?"

"Oh, I don't know about that. It seems to have distracted you for just long enough for the tower to reboot." He smiled wide as he held up a remote. Behind him, Waltz grabbed a girder and swung around it like a gymnast, hurling herself feet first at her brother. His eyes widened and he started to turn just as her foot connected with his back. The remote slipped from his hand as he tumbled off the tower, his sister flying after him.

"Waltz!" Roll shouted. She dived out, feet hooking over the girder as she reached towards her doppelganger.

And caught her by the hand.

Waltz hung for a moment, completely still, before she started giggling.

"Oh, wow ," she wheezed around laughter. "You actually liked that one, didn't you?"

"You," Roll whispered. "It was you all along."

"Oh no. She was real. Real and genuine and such a loser." The insane robot grinned up at Roll. "She's still rattling around in here, you know. Sad and crying and all 'who are you? why can't I control my body?'" She cackled. "I bet I could jam her in next to my trojan. Bring her along, drive her crazy little by little, and when she's completely broken you can have a reunion and ONE OF YOU WILL DIE! Doesn't that sound great!"

"No," Roll breathed. "Please no."

"You're right. Way too much effort." She cocked her head to one side. "There. Deleted. Now..." She held up the remote, "wanna see me kill twenty-eight million robots?"

Roll's hand retracted, forming into her Buster as Waltz resumed her fall.

By the time the body hit the ground, it didn't have a head.

"It wasn't your fault."

The three of them stood alone with the headstones. No one else had come out for the lone madman and a robot they'd never heard of. Blues might stop by later, but she doubted she'd hear about it.

Her hand reaching out to catch Waltz's. The moment of contact. The transition.

"Quint's program must have finally penetrated her IC chip. You did the only thing you could."

Wily's was blank. No one had been able to come up with a fitting epitaph that didn't speak ill of the dead. Dr Light would mourn the man who had once been his friend, but even he couldn't argue he'd been a good man by that point.

The brief flash of fear that had appeared just before her head had blown off. The gnawing worry that Waltz hadn't deleted anything .

"Yeah," she agreed without feeling. "Nothing I could have done."

The other headstone had been simple enough. She'd carved it with her own fingers.

Waltz Wily

Loving Daughter

Hero

There was no third headstone. By the time Roll had climbed down, Quint was long gone.

He checked his features in the mirror one last time. Falling headfirst six stories onto concrete had shredded the latex clean off his face, but that was just as well. It gave him a chance to make his own. Someone might have recognized Light's lesser known protege, but no one had seen this handsome devil before.

He tilted his head to examine the part in his brand new red hair, then slipped on a pair of blue sunglasses. A final survey of his suit and tie, and he stepped up to the monitor and sent the call.

"Mr X," the man on the other end answered. Past middle aged, hair thinning and grey. Past his prime and on the way out if he didn't do something impressive soon. "So glad that we could finally meet face to face, as it were."

"The pleasure is all mine, sir." Several others, all in the same category as the first, all tuned in and exchanged more greetings.

"That appears to be everyone. So, I assume you've all read my proposal?"

"It's certainly ambitious, X," the first executive agreed. "The first Master Series robot fighting tournament. That could be something, definitely. But do you really think it can pull the numbers you have listed here? Does it warrant all of our networks?"

He read their faces like open books. They wanted him to say yes. They were desperate for it. He was their last, best hope for relevance.

Who was he to deny them their place in history?

"Gentlemen, let me assure you," he flashed them his thousand watt smile. "This broadcast is going to change the world of robotics forever."

END

16.1) The dream sequence is Rock's encounter with the boggart in the fused Loop with Harry Potter. Rock's biggest fears involve losing control of himself and being made to harm others against his will, something which Dr. Wily managed in the MM2 adaptation in the Archie comics; and failing to protect others, which has likely happened many times when facing Wily's more competent and sinister variations. So he tends to associate most of his worst fears with Wily to some extent or another.

Plus I wanted to update the composite Wily from the Crash a bit, so here he is as Rock remembers seeing him.

16.2) So I've been watching Gotham a bit lately... Have Blues replacing Jim Gordon.

16. Splat) So... yeah... guess what I've been playing lately.

16.A) Avengers: Age of Blues. With Spider-Man because I felt like it ended on a somewhat out of character note otherwise.

Set 16, Loop 5: Afterword by the Producer, Crisis) You think this is confusing to read? Imaging having to live it.

Set 16, Loop 5: Afterword by the Author, Gamerex27) Can anyone think of any cool Theater or Musical Master weapons? I could draft some up, but I'm busy with the Deconstruction myself, as well as helping Evilhumor with Nyx and Leman Russ's wedding.

16. Bar) Naturally this is referring to Billy from Billy and Mandy's Grim Adventures. Officially the dumbest looper in the multiverse and one that no one really likes dealing with. He's so stupid that his antics warp probability and cause frequent and violent early terminations of Loop iterations, resulting in him being labeled an MLE.

16.6 ⅓) Of course Zero has nightmares. With his life, there's plenty to have nightmares about.

16.7) YOUTH!

16.8) The Doc is Out (of his mind).

16.0) So I noticed one day that Weil and Xander have artificial eyes on the same side of their faces…

16.9) Auutoocoorrrreect!

16...) Hubris Plus: So I had three ideas for pretty dark Loops, but no motivation to write three Loops, so here's one really dark Loop.

Mega Woman: Red Vs Blue

Mega Woman: Red vs Blue (by GammaTron)

Compiler's Note: This takes place some time after Bass finally begins looping.

"How are you adjusting to the climate here on Blood Gulch, Private Roll?"

Roll Awoke to that question, "Give me a moment, sir." quickly checking her memories, she realized they seemed...off. Almost as if they did happen, but didn't at the same time, 'That doesn't seem physically possible. Killing someone with their own skull after tearing it out of their head...' "It's a bit warm here, but otherwise I'm okay with this place, sir."

A few minutes later, Roll walked alongside the soldier in standard blue armor, "So...Are you Awake? Maybe you're a bit Loop-y."

"If that's the way you ask if I'm Looping, then you need to try a few better ideas," Roll noted, "I'm Roll Light, or rather, Roll Church in this Loop."

"Wait. Roll Light? Oh, you're from the Mega Man Loops! Always wanted to go through a Loop there," the soldier beamed, "Name's Tucker. Have fun getting blown up by Caboose." (1)

"...Caboose?" Roll stopped walking.

"Yeah. In a few months, we're going to have a new guy come here. That new guy is our Anchor, Caboose. He's got issues with Loopers replacing Church AKA the guy you're replacing at the moment," Tucker explained, turning back to look at her, "Basically, he'll try to Team Kill you on purpose for replacing Church. Then again...you are in the right shade of blue armor unlike the others that switched with Church."

"He does what?" Roll raised a brow under her helmet.

"Well, it's been five minutes. Time to see if Flowers is dead of a heart attack in his sleep," Tucker noted.

"Wait, what?!" Roll exclaimed as Tucker walked back into the other room. (2)

Roll was still trying to make sense of it all. A heart attack in his sleep. How did he die of a heart attack in his sleep?! And why was it so common that Tucker would just switch his armor and Flower's armor and not even care?! Oh, sure, Tucker did say that he'd be fine for a few hours in a few years-and she had no idea why that was even possible or how it could be possible-, but it was still the principle of the matter! Today, they were finally getting a new member of Blue Team and Tucker was being extremely cautious for some reason, making sure to stay a good distance away from her. Why was that even happening?

"So...what kind of vehicle is this?" Roll asked as she looked at the flying machine land.

"That's a Pelican. Inside is our new tank, the Scorpion, but we call her Sheila," Tucker informed as the cargo bay doors opened on the vehicle and let a tank come out...driven by a blue soldier, "And the one driving her is Michael J. Caboose. Hey! Caboose!"

"Hi, Tucker!" Caboose waved as he stopped the tank and got out, "I just woke up an hour ago."

"How was your last Loop?" Tucker asked.

"Oh! New York and I were part of the REDs and I got to have a flamethrower! I always wanted a flamethrower!" Caboose cheered,

"And New York got to be the Scout. ...I just want everyone to know that I didn't kill him. He burned himself to death with my flamethrower."

"Did you at least take out the enemy with you?"

"Yes. It was a Spy! A Spy disguised as our Spy!" Caboose informed.

"...Yeah. There's a fifty-fifty chance that it was your Spy," Tucker sighed before gently patting Caboose on the head, "Anyways, Caboose, I got some bad news and some good news."

"?" Caboose tilted his head.

Roll watched the two, trying to make sense of what she was seeing. This...This new soldier of theirs was the Anchor? But...But he acted like a child!

"Hello." Roll jumped and got out of her thoughts to see Caboose looking at her, "Who are you?"

"Dude, that's Roll Church," Tucker informed, "We just went over this not even a few seconds ago."

"...So this is Church...but he's calling himself Roll now...and is a girl," Caboose slowly said aloud, "So that makes her...a gay robot lover!" (3)

"Uht! I...wh...h...ho...hoo...oh...y-you...!" Roll gawked at Caboose.

"No, you dunce," Tucker snickered, "Her name is Roll Church and she's a girl. Though it would be hot if she and Texas..."

"Don't even think about it!" Roll growled as she glared at Tucker.

"So Church is a girl now?" Caboose asked.

"Yes," Roll sighed, "I'm a girl, Caboose. I'm normally a guy and now in this Loop I'm a girl that likes to be called 'Roll.'"

"Okay Roll-Church," Caboose nodded before hugging her quickly, "I'm going to go check on the flag and wait for General McMuffin to show up!"

"..." Tucker was silent for a good minute before he collapsed, holding his sides and cracking up, "Oh! Oh! Oh my sides! D-Dude, you just released a can of worms on yourself! He doesn't get sarcasm!"

"...So he really think I'm his Church, just genderbent?" Roll asked.

"Yep. And Caboose hasn't yet killed Church for as long as I've known since I began to Loop," Tucker informed, "So congrats, you are now the sole outsider who has never been Team Killed by Caboose. Not even the Original Seven could say they avoided the fate of being Team Killed by Caboose. By the way, he likes cookies and milk, nap time is every twelve hours for two hours, and you may want to watch these DVDs about our baseline again, because a lot of shit is going to come our way in the next few years."

"Hi, Tucker~!" a red soldier called as he ran over.

"Caboose is in the Flag Room," Tucker pointed at the base, still facing Roll, "Glad to see you Awake since the others aren't. Good luck trying to get something aside from pink armor."

"It's not pink, it's lightish-red," the soldier quickly responded as he went into the base, "Hi, Caboose!"

"Admiral Churro!" Caboose cheered in the base, "Roll-Church is a girl this Loop!"

Roll facepalmed as Tucker snickered.

Roll laid on her bed and had to nurse her headache. An unawake Bass had been her ex-boyfriend in this Loop and was calling himself Agent Texas. He got killed by a grenade after he fixed their tank– their talking tank named Sheila and a good conversationalist in Roll's opinion–, but turned out to be an AI and Tucker helped her learn how to go out of her body and into machines and other soldiers just so she could go into Caboose's mind and get out the AI that was in his head that was with Bass, known as O'Marte AKA Omega (though it looked more like Waltz to her). Then they had to chase after Doc (a purple Medic that had received training under The Medic of Team Fortress and technology training from Dexter Boy Genius to make Ubercharges for the Reds and Blues) when he got possessed by O'Marte and kidnapped the unawake Lopez (she enjoyed the conversations she had with him and Sheila and thought they would make a beautiful couple). Then they ended up with Bass having a bomb in him that went off with her behind him! And she finally understood just how Fowers died the first time (she had no clue how he died again since all the clones of Agent Wyoming–which was apparently a human Elec Man this Loop–were killed as he was killed by sniper shots); it turns out that she had been put through a miniature time loop to the past because of the bomb going off and ended up killing him with heart medicine...because he was allergic to aspirin ! She was still trying to figure it out in how that was even possible! And now, not even a week after Bass had gone off in a sabotaged Pelican (thanks to the Reds), she was getting relocated! Well, everyone was getting relocated, but still. (4)

"Roll-Church?" Roll blinked and looked over at the open door to see a little boy in Caboose's helmet and blue footy pajamas, holding a stuffed (not spiky) cat doll.

"Caboose?" Roll blinked before recalling that Tucker had told her of an incident in one Loop that had Caboose become a little boy when he wanted to.

"I...I had a nightmare," Caboose sniffled, "A...About what'll happen a year from now."

"Oh, poor guy," Roll frowned, "You can stay the night in here."

Caboose nodded before he quickly scurried onto the bed and got close to Roll. Roll kept an arm around him and held the trembling currently-child Caboose close. After a little bit, she began to hear him softly snooze. She had to admit, he wasn't as bad as she thought. Originally, she was a bit annoyed with how much Caboose was...until she reviewed the DVDs about the 'Blood Gulch Chronicles.' The poor guy, having that as his Baseline. Still...she had to admit that Tucker was a good father, even if her 'heart' was going out to him for Junior not Looping. It must be pure torture for him; always having his son, but never being able to bond with him because the child continued to forget him.

"N...No...Church...!" Roll looked at the whimpering Caboose, tears on his gold visor, "D-Don't go with him...! D-Don't go! The emp..."

Emp? Did he mean 'EMP?' Why would an AI be willing to go towards one of those?!

"Y-You're not a ghost...!"

...Oh. That would explain it. It seems this Church originally thought he was a ghost. For some reason, she wanted to say 'Boo, motherf_cker' at a guy in gunmetal and yellow armor now. Well, she'd just have to avoid that...and rewatch the next season. That, and pray that Grif's sister wasn't relocated to her location. Roll shuddered as she thought about the yellow Blue Soldier. She had to agree with Tucker and Donut: instant Sakura Syndrome if she ever starts Looping...or, at the very least, the sex with everything and everyone part of it.

Fourteen months. She had been stuck in an abandoned base, by herself, for fourteen months. Still, she did make it her goal to study everything she could from the DVDs Tucker had given her about this Loop and she was not excited by what would happen to her. Not at all.

"Okay. So since I've been here fourteen months and it's..." she looked over at a calendar she managed to get for the last fourteen months, "...Tuesday, that means that Agent Washington and Caboose will be here soon." she looked around the empty base, "Let's see...Wall has been mended: check. Cleaned the place up: check. Now I just need to go to the wall and get ready to fire a warning shot." she giggled, "I wonder if this Church guy has ever been able to figure out how to stop sucking at shooting." she quickly spun around, pulling out her broom, and aimed it right at a soldier in tan armor with silver trim as he had a pistol aimed at her, "So who are you?"

A green hologram appeared on the soldier's shoulder, resembling a green soldier, "Greetings."

"...Delta?" Roll lowered her broom, "So you must be Agent New York."

"Yeah. Delta was wanting to see Church here before he would run into Wash," the soldier informed, keeping his gun out, "And, yet, only you are here."

"I believe that she is currently replacing Church this Loop, York," Delta informed, "And that she has seen the web-series."

"I have. Tucker gave me the complete series up to Season 12," Roll replied, "But how are you...?"

"Agent New York has been Looping for the last fifty Loops," Delta informed, "I, on the other hand, have been going through them for three hundred and seven Loops."

"You've actually been keeping track?" Roll asked.

"That's D for you," York replied, "He's been telling me about the times I wasn't awake and he's been helping keep me alive for those Loops."

"...So who is the Director? Still Dr. Leonard Church?" Roll asked.

"Negative. Her name is Doctor Roll Light Church," Delta replied.

"...My head aches so much right now," Roll sighed.

"Let's just hope that Sigma isn't Awake still," York added.

"Sigma? Do you mean the Reploid or the AI?" Roll asked. (5)

"The AI Fragment. Fortunately, the Grima Patch seems to prevent the issues of Sigma ever Looping," Delta informed before an alarm went off.

"Someone's tripped one of the security measures I put in here," Roll informed, "Stay down here just in case it's Washington and he isn't awake."

"And if it's Maine?" York asked.

"Maine?"

"The Meta."

"Then get ready for a fight," Roll nodded, "By the way, how long have you two been..."

"I've been awake since I got D back in Project Freelancer."

"Since I was 'born' in this Loop."

"Yeah...I'm not going to like having those memories back when we get Epsilon," Roll sighed as she ran up to the top of the wall and fired a shot at a boulder nearby, "Okay, that was your only warning shot! State your name or leave!"

"Roll-Church!" a familiar voice shouted.

"Caboose? Caboose, is that you?"

"Yes! Roll-Church, it's me! I have missed you so much! It has been so long! Did you miss me?"

"Yes!" Roll replied.

"I knew you did!" Caboose cheered.

"Hold on, who's with you?" Roll demanded.

"It is Agent Washingtub and he is Awake!"

"Agent Washing ton , Caboose!" a gunmetal and yellow soldier groaned, "Hey! Who are you?"

"That is Roll-Church," Caboose informed, "Church got turned into a girl this Loop and Agent Texas got turned into a boy!"

"Oh yeah...The Director was a girl this time..." Washington rubbed his chin in thought.

"Hold on, I'm opening the gate up," Roll informed.

"Hey, where did the hole go?" Washington asked.

"I fixed the place up. I may have been lonely, but I wasn't going to just be lazy like Grif!" Roll replied. (6)

A few minutes later, Washington and York were talking nearby while Roll patted Caboose on the head, "Did you behave while I wasn't there?"

"I got tied up!" Caboose replied.

"...What did you do?"

"It was not my fault. The vehicles did not want to talk and panicking didn't work in putting the fire out!" Caboose informed.

"Oh, poor Caboose," Roll cooed as she patted his head.

"Ahem," Roll turned to see Washington, "So, Roll, can I talk to you in private?"

"Of course," Roll nodded before the two walked a little bit away from Caboose, who got distracted by Delta and York.

"So you weren't killed by Caboose in Blood Gulch?"

"No. He hasn't shot me once," Roll replied.

"..." Washington took out a medal shaped like Caboose's helmet, "Then in recognition of that, I award you with the first ever 'Team Killed Zero' award. May whatever you did be known to others...please tell them what you did. We nearly got sued by Lina Inverse because of it. Thank god Phoenix Wright was there."

"Uh...Thanks?" Roll blinked, "Wait, is this for real?"

"I am completely serious," Washington replied, "You, Roll, are the only known Looper who has replaced Church that Caboose hasn't Team Killed using Sheila, a gun, or a grenade."

"I was just sarcastic in saying I was Church, but as a girl," Roll replied, "I mean, my name is Roll Church in this Loop, so it wasn't really a lie or anything..."

"Wait. Seriously? That's what you did?" Washington gawked, "O-Okay. I...I'm gonna need to lie down for a little bit to understand the simple method you did."

"Couch is over to your right," Roll informed.

"Um...Washington?" the Freelancer looked over his shoulder at Roll, "D...Do you think Bass was...?"

"It depends on if Bass was Awake or not," Washington replied, "Is he your...?"

"Y-Yeah," Roll replied.

"..." Washington sighed, "I'll give it to you straight; I'm not sure if Agent Texas is your Bass or if Allison was your Bass."

"Director Church's late wife?"

"Yeah," Washington nodded, "He never learned that you had to let go of the past. The Roll Church that is our current Director is most likely the same; she couldn't let go of her lost husband."

"So...I'm just a copy of her?"

"No, more like the Admin in charge of our Loop did it," Washington replied, "You know who you are, Roll, and you're not like the Director."

"If...If everyone you knew were to die in the final Loop before Yggdrasil is done being fixed and...and they didn't come back...would you be able to let go?" Roll asked.

"...It's something all of us who came from this Loop are prepared for," Washington informed, "We may never see each other again after all of this is over...but we all know what losing someone close to us is like and that we've been able to let it go. For Epsilon, he was able to do the one thing the Director and the Alpha were never able: he was able to let go of the memory of Allison. Me? I was able to let go of Maine."

"The Meta?" Roll asked.

"Yeah...He...He was my best friend in Project Freelancer until he got Sigma," Washington explained, "When he became the Meta and after the EMP...I thought I'd be able to get him back. I...I was wrong, and it nearly cost me everything, even my life. If it hadn't been for the Reds and Blues, I would've been in jail or dead." he looked over at York, who was keeping his hands over the sides of his helmet, as Caboose talked with Delta, "Epsilon showed me York's video diary, and York knew better than any of us what it means to let go of someone you loved." he chuckled, "You know, I'm glad for the Loops.

Because of them, York's alive and he can be with Carolina, the AIs have a chance to avoid their destruction...Really, there's a lot I'm thankful for because of these Loops."

Roll nodded. It was then the sound of a radio went off from Washington's helmet.

=This is Command calling Recovery One, come in Recovery One=

" Hold on," Washington informed Roll, "This is Agent Washington. I found some blue team members that have extensive experience with Omega and even the Meta."

=Excellent Agent Washington, please stand by for orders=

"Roll-Church!" Caboose called as he ran over, "Delta said that we are going to get to see Theta! Oh boy, he's the best! He's like Church if he was a little brother!"

Roll sweatdropped.

=Now that you have reassembled the blues, you should head to Outpost 17-B. See what clues your team can gather there based on what they know= Command informed.

"Roger that," Washington nodded.

=They want you to stop the Meta at all costs. This is a Level One directive. Good luck Wash. Recovery Command out=

"Recovery One out," Washington replied before turning to the others, "Come on, let's move out. We've got a bitch to shoot."

"You just can't let it go, can you?" York asked.

"Every single time. I know she's gonna do it, but every time I try to avoid it, she still shoots me! Every! Single ! Time ! And right now, she most likely has Theta with her since I had to...you know..."

"Guess it wasn't North's time to be Awake this time," York noted, "A shame. He would've loved to meet you, Roll. You act just like South did when they first joined Project Freelancer."

"Really?"

"Yeah. It was around the time the Rankings began that she started becoming a bitch," Washington informed before he pulled out a list, "Now then...what am I going to use this time to kill her? Last time, I tore her in two using the Scissors Blades when I ended up replacing Professor Matoi that one Kill la Kill Loop. Thank god I Woke Up before Nui Harime showed up. She didn't expect to deal with Type-VI Mjolnir Armor..."

"Is he...?"

"Yeah. This...This is actually normal for him," York sighed as Washington continued to list what he already did to Agent South Dakota.

Roll wanted to hit her head on so many walls right now. They had managed to keep Theta hidden from the Meta along with Delta, but the Meta was still able to recharge and escape! And all because of the Reds!

'That's it! For the next fifty Loops I'm through, I AM WEARING BLUE!' Roll thought as she glared at the three Red Simulation Troopers as they sorted through their memories. (7)

"Ugh. So we had two girls in th' Blue Team this time," Sarge groaned, "Well, at least y'all ain't a sex addict."

"STOP BRINGING THAT UP!" Grif whined/snapped before turning to the sky, "STOP RUINING THE FAMILY NAME!"

"We're really sorry about this," Simmons apologized, "In every Loop we have had so far with Sister in it–still not Looping, by the way–, she finds some way to embarrass their family."

"FOR GOD'S SAKE, SIS! WHY?!" Grif cried to the heavens.

"Guys, focus!" York shouted, "We've got to deal with the Meta. So far, we were able to prevent them from getting Theta and Delta, but there's still Epsilon."

"Roll-Church..." Caboose whimpered.

"There, there, Caboose," Roll gently patted the soldier's head, "I won't die, okay?"

"Okay," Caboose nodded.

"Will we really be able to avoid the emp?" Theta asked, appearing on Caboose's shoulder.

"It's E-M-P!" York and Washington groaned.

"Of course we'll be fine. Is this your first time trying to avoid it?" Roll asked.

"Uh-huh," Theta nodded.

"Same here," Roll assured, "So we'll survive, okay?"

"If I may offer a suggestion," the group looked over at Delta on York's shoulder, "I believe that I have the right strategy in dealing with the Electromagnetic Pulse. During a Loop involving the Equestrians, I was involved in a prank of theirs on an event known as the Grand Galloping Gala..."

"It may have been stuck up, but the food there was delicious, though not as good as AJ's cooking," Grif noted, rubbing his stomach and licking his lips under his helmet.

"As I was saying, during the event, I was involved in a prank they decided to perform again and learned something about the 'pockets' we use," Delta informed.

"So what's Epsilon like?" Roll asked as they hid in the tank.

"Basically? Like Church," Grif shrugged as he drove the tank behind Washington, Caboose, and York.

Roll facepalmed, "I see...Guess I'll need to meet him before I see what he's like."

"So your Base Loop is th' Mega Man Loops?" Sarge asked.

"Yes."

"Ah looped in once," Sarge recalled, "Ended up bein' this feller known as Dr. Weil. Ah was supposed t' do somethin'. Don't really remember it since it didn't involve anythin' red."

Roll facepalmed, 'He looped in as Dr. Weil and didn't cause the Elf Wars just because there wasn't enough red ?!' (8)

"I once Looped into that Loop as a Pseudoroid," Simmons noted, "Decided to defect and went to college. Of course, I had to convince them I wasn't evil. That was a pain in the ass."

"And you, Grif?" Roll asked.

"Not yet, but I don't really care," Grif shrugged, "I'm just hoping my next Fused Loop will be in Chima or Eiken."

"...Eiken?" Roll asked.

"Yeah. Sure, it may seem kinda boring once you get past all the fanservice and shit, but there's something good about it as well: a chance to relax," Grif informed, "I normally spend my time there on the roof, just sleeping the day away or helping Simmons with something in the computer club he's a part of. So far, we've successfully integrated our Web-series into that place each time we go there."

"Let me tell ya 'bout mah first Eiken Loop. It was strange, not havin' mah pocket, but Ah was a gym teacher, so that there was good fer me. And then...Ah met..." he sighed wistfully, " Her ."

"Her?" Roll raised a brow.

"Her name is Sensei Sensei, and she's a teacher there and the teacher in charge of th' Eiken Club," Sarge informed, "My god, she's an angel, Ah tell ya. So one day, Ah decided to go talk with her. Few months later, and we were married."

"..." Roll glanced at Simmons.

"He's been trying to get in contact with the Admins for pictures of the wedding," Simmons informed, "So far, he's used smoke signals, rain dances, tribal dances, sacrificing Grif, burning Grif alive, blowing Grif up, eviscerating Grif..."

"I get it. He doesn't like Grif," Roll deadpanned.

"As for me, I use Eiken as a chance to just study up," Simmons informed, "And when I don't study, I normally work with Grif on introducing Red VS Blue to the populace."

"You see, with the Loop we have as our Baseline, we've started to look at the bright side of every Loop we're in. Except Warhammer. I hate Warhammer," Grif informed.

"Does everyone here like Eiken Loops?" Roll asked.

"Th' Freelancers don't," Sarge informed.

"But Washington's been slowly accepting it. He even helped us work on introducing the Red Vs Blue to the masses there when we're there together," Simmons informed.

"Though, you have to feel sorry for Carolina when we go there. Z-Cups," Grif informed.

"Ouch," Roll winced, "I don't think I've met anyone who's gone through Eiken with a Cup Size that big. Biggest I've ever personally seen is an O-Cup (poor girl) and I normally end up at least an E-Cup every time." (9)

"Yeah. Try being the sibling who has to help her," Grif snorted, "Still, the few times York has been there have had her liking those back breakers. Then again, we never really see her or York when they both get an Eiken Loop together."

Roll facepalmed, trying to force the blush on her face to go away.

"Wow," was all Washington could say as he looked at the knocked out guards, "...Where did you learn to do that?"

"I could teach you if you'd like," Roll replied, hefting her broom on her shoulder.

"...Depends on if you can do that to two guys I really dislike that we'll meet a few months from now," Washington replied.

Roll shrugged, "So what were you planning?"

"Oh, I was going to hit them with Jarate and then shoot them while they freak out," Washington informed.

"Jarate?!" Roll exclaimed, "Ugh! Did you Loop in as Sniper in the Team Fortress 2 Loop?!"

"Yeah. Why?" Washington asked.

"J...Just don't talk with my brother Rock about Jarate," Roll advised, "He tries not to go berserk and blow up practically everything in sight, but I'd prefer not to tempt fate." (10)

"Yikes," Washington hissed a bit.

"Yeah," Roll nodded before they went on.

"Here. This is it," Washington informed a few minutes later.

"So this is where Epsilon is?" Roll asked.

"Yeah," Washington replied before taking out an AI container, "Be careful, Roll, you may..." Roll groaned as she held her head. It was as if something was trying to pound her brain into mush with a pencil's eraser, "...experience...pain...because of...Epsilon." he waited until Roll slowly stopped holding her head, "Better?"

"No!" Roll replied, "H...How could the Director do that to Church?! So...So much stress and torture...One of them was even reminiscent of Neon Genesis Evangelion, for crying out loud!"

"Yeah. I got those. I Woke up just as they were putting this Epsilon into my head," Washington informed.

"Y...You...?! Oh-Oh Yggdrasil..." Roll paled, "Washington, I..."

"Don't bother," Washington held a hand up, "I've come to terms with it. In a weird Variant Loop where we all lived in an apartment complex, it doubled as a fused Loop with Equestria Girls. Fluttershy and Twilight Sparkle were awake and...well...it was helpful. I'm either going to need a Loop with those two again for this or..."

"Eiken?"

"Maybe. Either that or Team Fortress. Killing the shit there is a good stress reliever as well," Washington shrugged, "Now then..." he knelt down and activated the unit, "Epsilon, come on."

"Ugh..." a distinct male voice groaned before a hologram of a young boy in a sky-blue bodysuit with blue armor on his lower arms, lower legs, feet, hands, and head appeared, "What kind of Loop is this?"

"Rock?!" Roll gasped.

"Huh? Roll?" Rock looked up to see Roll, "Holy...! Are we in a Variant Loop where girls are turning into giants again?!"

"Wait. That's an actual variant Loop? Huh...I owe that guy an apology...and a Brain Bleach," Washington noted.

"Who are...Wait. Are we in a Halo Loop?" Rock asked as he looked around.

"No. Welcome to the Red VS Blue Loop, Rock," Washington introduced.

"...Wait. Is this the Loop that actually had the Original Seven, the guys who everyone consider as unkillable in other Loops, get killed early on by their own teammate?" Rock asked.

"Yeah. Well, they all have the ability to become AI now," Washington shrugged, "Anyone who comes in replacing Church does. We think there may be a bug in our Loop or something that's letting them keep that ability."

"But...But how is Rock Epsilon?" Roll asked.

"Blame the Infinite Loops," Washington shrugged, "But for what it's worth, Rock, I'm sorry that you have to deal with the memories of torture Roll's unawake self had to go through. When you were unawake, you pumped my head with the memories as well, so I understand it as well."

"S-Sorry..." Rock apologized.

"It's fine," Washington shrugged, "Now we have to change the plan."

"Change it?" Roll asked.

"Yeah," Washington nodded, "Rock doesn't know the trick Delta showed us. How will he survive the pulse?"

"Pulse?"

"Oh yeah. Roll here dies today if she wasn't Awake," Washington informed.

"WHAT?!"

"It's because your sister is the Alpha," Washington stated before turning away from them, "Come on. We need to get to the others. I have to make sure that the Blues were deleted from the database."

"The Blues?"

"I'll explain while we're getting back to them," Roll explained.

=Warning. Security breach detected=

"Agent Washington. Good to see you again," a voice noted, making Washington look around the computer room he had entered.

"Oh, hello. Are you somewhere nearby, Counselor? Somewhere I can say hello in person?"

"Sorry Agent Washington, but we were more than prepared for this... eventuality. I'm afraid we will not be able to see each other in person today."

"Well then you'll excuse me if I don't stop to chat. I'm on a timetable," Washington snorted before running towards a nearby computer.

"There is someone else here who would like to speak with you," the voice noted before a nearby machine attached the ceiling lowered itself a bit, exposing a lone optic.

"Well hello, Agent Washington," Washington stopped walking at that Southern voice.

"...The Director herself, I should be honored. I should be."

"Yes, I realize it has been a while since we've spoke, David. May I call you David?" the Director asked.

"No, you cannot. You gave me my new name, the least you can do is use it."

"I am certain you have a lot of questions, Agent Washington."

"Just one: How do I turn off this speaker?" Washington demanded before tapping a button on the computer.

=Warning. Security breach detected=

Just as the Meta was about to rush Washington, a containment field ensnared the rogue Freelancer. It began to try to break down the field with its weapon, but to no avail.

"Well. The prodigal son returns," the Director noted as the device that Washington swore made him think of GLaDOS looked over at the Meta, "Agent Maine you've caused quite a few problems for us. You will not be leaving this time."

"I think I've said that myself about twenty times in the last few weeks. Good luck holding him," Washington dryly humored as he worked on something on the computer.

"You would be surprised what we are capable of, even from this distance. I suggest you work with us if you expect to survive this."

"I'm sorry, did something about my actions indicate I expect to survive?" Washington asked.

=Clearance verified. The failsafe is now online. Awaiting activation=

"How did you get those codes?" the Director demanded.

"You might be surprised what I know, Director ."

=Warning, this is a last resort measure. Activating the failsafe will destroy all electronic equipment in this facility, including this terminal. Please confirm=

"It was Epsilon. He inherited the memories, didn't he?" the Director asked.

"I've known about what you did since the moment you implanted Rock in me. By the way, he likes to be called Rock nowadays."

"Well then I am very sorry Agent Washington, but Project Freelancer no longer has need of your services. Program, disable interior shield," the Director ordered before the containment field vanished.

"What?" Washington gasped.

"Agent Maine, please kill Agent Washington," the Director ordered.

"Bring it," Washington ordered the Meta.

The Meta snarled before throwing his weapon to the side and pulled out a pistol. Washington quickly took his own out before his shoulder was shot, making him drop it.

=Alert: incoming recovery beacon. Level zero. Immediate response necessary= the PA went off as the Meta advanced on Wash, who backpedaled towards the wall.

"Agent Washington I fear this is one recovery beacon you won't be responding to. Kill him Agent Maine."

"Where is it?" a whispery, digital voice came from the Meta, "Where is Alpha?" "Where is it?"

"The Alpha is not here. It has been moved far away. Attend to the matter at hand," the Director ordered before the Counselor's voice came on, "Agent Maine, what the Director's trying to say, is we can discuss the Alpha later. What's important, is that you prove that you can be trusted again. We need to trust you before letting you meet the Alpha. Wouldn't you agree?"

"You know Meta, why wait? Why don't you meet not only her, but Epsilon, Theta, and Delta as well, right now?" Washington asked before Rock and Roll appeared on his shoulders and Delta and Theta on his head.

"Hi there," Roll greeted.

The A.I.s the Meta had accumulated appeared around him, with no way of knowing which was speaking, "It's her!" "Alpha!" "Alpha!"

"You know I can see why you didn't want anyone else in your head," Roll noted as she looked at Washington from his shoulder, "Got some pretty heavy stuff going on there, a lot more than anyone would think you'd have. I think I have to agree that you need to talk to a professional."

"That's too bad. I just lost my job, and we have great mental health coverage," Washington noted.

"I have a few contacts that could provide well enough counseling at an affordable price," Delta informed.

"You do?" Rock asked.

"It will take a year or so for them to see him, though. Possibly longer if they are not in the same Loop as we are," Delta replied.

"How much time do you need?" Roll asked.

"Whatever you can get me. When the E.M.P. goes off..."

"We know the plan," Rock assured.

"As well as the risk of the chance that Roll may absorb us into her due to her status as the Alpha," Delta added.

"You just had to remind me that Sis may get all my abilities and memories if that happens," Rock grumbled.

"Um...It won't just be her. In theory, she may get the memories and abilities that we've all got once this Loop ends," Theta advised.

"Sigma's proven this when he was able to fuse with Church and was able to access his Pocket," Delta added.

"Let's just focus, guys!" Roll shouted.

With that, the four charged and jumped into the Meta. The other A.I.s quickly followed them into the Meta. The Meta began to tremble as a mental battle began to happen in his head.

"What's goin' on!?" the Director demanded.

"Agent Washington, please, there is time. If you would just secure Agent Maine we can discuss this situation, in a more civilized manner," the Counselor advised.

"No, we can't," Washington informed before punching the button.

=Thank you, failsafe initiated. Activating Emp=

"Emp? You have got to be fucking ki-" was all Washington got out before the EMP went off.

=One month later - Valhalla=

"Do you see him?" Caboose asked as York looked out at the sea with a sniper rifle.

"Hold on...Hold on..." York replied, "Yes! Grif, ho~!"

"So...Did it work?" Sarge asked as Grif swam out of the water, coughing out a fish.

"Ugh..." Grif gagged a bit, "Well...Aside from losing my armor this Loop..." he reached behind his back and pulled out the Washington and an extra set of armor for himself, "...It worked."

"Ugh! That was disgusting in there, Grif!" Washington complained before turning around, "Oh my Birch! Get some pants on!"

"Well, excuse me for having to be a Frankenstein in look this Loop because I wasn't awake to avoid the crush," Grif frowned as he began to put his armor on.

"An excellent idea, though," Delta noted as he appeared on York's shoulder with Theta on Caboose's, "By giving one of us the Camouflage Armor Enhancement to hide one of us to make sure to grab both Agent Washington and the AIs to prevent our demise."

"We wouldn't have been able to make it to Washington in time, but we could make it to someone closer to the Meta just a second before the EMP would go off," Roll smirked.

"Yeah, but you guys didn't have to dodge the soldiers and jump into the river at the bottom of the cliff and then swim all the way here..." Grif grumbled, "I just had to pick the shortest straw."

"Roll-Church!" Caboose called as he ran over, carrying her body, "I have your body."

"Thank you, Caboose," Roll thanked before she went into it, "Ah. Feels good after being stuck in random electronics in Grif's pocket for a month."

"Why didn't you just stay in Wash's helmet?" Grif asked as he put his helmet on.

"I was wearing it so I could filter the stench in there," Washington frowned.

"So where are we? Is this Blood Gulch?" Rock asked as he looked around.

"No. This is Valhalla," Simmons informed, "Except...only Blue Base has power in it."

"Why didn't you guys climb up the tower? I mean, it's just some junk from some stupid ship," Grif noted.

"Because, dirtbag, you're th' one who always goes up there. So git to it!" Sarge ordered.

"...Aw shit," Grif slumped before he began to make his way up, "There better not be a damn bird up there again!"

"Bite me!"

Roll sighed as she tried to stop the headache forming. Yet again, Rock was snapping at someone. For the last three months, Rock had been having...issues...with almost everyone in Valhalla. She was starting to worry if Rock was going through Rampancy's first stage. But that shouldn't be possible...right? (11)

"Oh! That's bad! Bad, fire!"

"Not again..." Roll sighed as she walked out of her bedroom...and was welcomed to the site of Caboose, on fire, running out of the base.

"And now I'm on fire! That's bad! Bad fire!"

"That's the fifteenth time he's set himself on fire," Washington sighed as he put the fire extinguisher away once more.

"Who's Rock shouting at this time?"

"Grif, again," Washington informed, "Found out about the last Loop they had."

"Rock's had a Loop with Grif before?" Roll asked, feeling sorry for her brother.

"Yeah," Washington nodded, "Rock never knew it. In that Loop, everyone was addicted to oreos. Guess what Grif collects in every single Loop?"

"...Ouch," Roll winced.

"Yeah."

"So what's going to happen now, Washington?" Roll asked.

"Well, Donut should be showing up in a few days, exhausted, dehydrated...still giving off double entendres..." Washington sighed at the last bit, "He's not even aware he's saying them. Even when you point it out, it ends up even more awkward."

"He does unknowingly know how to cause awkwardness," Roll admitted.

"Hi, guys!" Roll and Washington turned to see Doc entering the base, Caboose trying to stay hidden from him, "Sarge just called me. Donut's here and he brought a little surprise."

"Well, here we go with the awkward moments," Washington chuckled.

"So how's everything going for you since we last talked, Roll?" Doc asked as the Blues and medic began to walk to Red Base.

"Well, aside from some mishaps, this has actually been quite relaxing some days," Roll replied, "So far, we're pretty much even on the whole Capture the Flag. Still haven't gotten Sarge to agree to saying 'I love Blue,' though."

"He's ambitious, I'll give you that," Doc noted, "He's proud to be a Red. It's one of the...well...the only reason why he purposely crashed a Loop."

"He Looped in as a Blue?" Roll asked.

"He replaced Sonic the Hedgehog for the SatAM."

"Okay. You had me at Sonic, but then you lost me."

"Sorry," Doc apologized, "I keep forgetting the other Loopers don't really use the method we do in remembering all the different Loops." he reached into his Pocket and pulled out a DVD, "I mean this Sonic the Hedgehog cartoon, the one that connected more to the comics and not the games."

"Do you have a thing for every Loop?" Roll asked.

"I make sure to collect everything I can during Hub Loops," Washington informed, "I even have a laptop with all the episodes of Death Battle on it."

"And I was so rooting for Gaara. I mean, he's a shinobi, someone trained to kill," Doc pointed out.

"That's a misconception," Roll and Washington pointed out at the same time.

"There you are!" Roll turned to see Grif running over, "Can you please take your brother back? I can't stand his ranting anymore!"

Roll sighed, "Is this because he found out about the oreos?"

"No. He took a look at my room in the base and went monkey on me," Grif replied.

"You know that mess you have is going to bite you one of these Loops," Washington pointed out.

"Bite me."

"Okay, okay, okay. Before we continue this, where's Rock?" Roll asked.

"He's with our extra guest at Red Base," Grif informed as they entered Red Base.

"So I guess aside from Theta and Delta, Church isn't really here this Loop," a voice sighed.

"Yeah. Sorry about that."

"Tucker!" Caboose beamed as he ran over to the aquamarine/teal/whatever Blue, "Why are you here and not in the sandy place?"

"I escaped with Donut," Tucker replied, Rock on his shoulder, "Hey, Roll, just chatting with your bro. Rock's pretty cool."

"Thank you," Rock smirked.

"Did you bring anything else?" Washington asked.

"Dude, Donut and I were on it. Took down those jerks with a few attacks and weapons we got from the Loops," Tucker informed before pulling out a bronze suit of armor, "And we got CT's armor."

"CT? Oh, you mean Connecticut," Rock noted, "Man, couldn't believe that she did that."

"Being Epsilon ain't easy, is it?" Tucker asked.

"No. Whenever I'm around D or T or even Sis, I somehow start getting their memories added to my own. Bad enough I have to deal with the memories that tortured Roll this Loop, but I'm always adding more of them to me," Rock growled.

"Well, at least you'll have a body to move around in until we get to a facility," Tucker shrugged as he pulled out a metal sphere with a green optic, "Caboose?"

"Here," Caboose replied.

"No, Caboose," Tucker sighed before handing the Blue the sphere, "You're the only one that seems to understand this, so you get to put Rock into it."

"Excuse me?!" Rock exclaimed.

"What facility are you talking about?" Roll asked as Caboose went to work.

"Well, it's where we need to go," Tucker informed, "That's where another Tex is."

"Another Tex?" Roll repeated.

"Yeah. This one is made from the memories Epsil-er-Rock has of her-er-him this Loop," Tucker replied.

"I'm done," Caboose informed as the sphere floated beside him.

"Rock, how do you feel?" Roll asked.

"Like someone's going to spike me over a net," Rock's voice emerged from the sphere, floating away.

"Uh...Rock? You're..."

"I'm trying to get it under control!" Rock snapped, "Ugh! This is almost as bad as Jarate!"

Washington began to whistle innocently.

"Oh, relax, will ya?" Tucker snorted, "Besides, this'll only be for a few days."

"A few days?!" Rock demanded, "And who's tinkling glasses right now?!"

"It's 17:30," Grif shrugged, "Everyone knows it's Donut's daily wine and cheese hour right now." he proceeded to walk off, "Well, I'm gonna go get something to protect myself this Loop for when we go there."

"Why does he...?" Rock began.

"Dude gets attacked constantly by Texas in the nuts," Tucker informed.

"Oh, that sounds hilarious."

"Okay. That's th' last of it," Sarge informed, "We've got all th' stuff we need t' move out."

"Are we going on foot this time?" Simmons asked as the Blues (12) and Roll approached, Rock floating after them.

"On foot?!" Grif exclaimed in disbelief.

"Uh, Simmons? We're th' Reds. We don't walk anywhere. We travel as th' good Lord intended..."

"That's..." Roll began.

"Wait for it," Washington held up a hand.

"...in th' largest possible vehicle with th' maximum horsepower allowed by local law enforcement. And if there's no cars available, we find th' biggest, nastiest, meanest , land animal we possibly can, beat th' crap out of it, and saddle that puppy up."

"There it goes," Washington chuckled as Roll sweatdropped.

"On foot. Shame on you Simmons. Shame on you," Grif shook his head.

"Sorry," Simmons muttered.

"Let's just forget you ever mentioned it," York patted Simmons's back.

"I think this should go on his permanent record," Grif noted.

"Already added," Delta informed.

"Oh just go get the frickin' jeep jackass," Simmons grumbled.

Roll giggled a bit. Being around the Awake Reds was a mix of both different and the same as being around the Unawake Reds. She still wouldn't be caught dead or offline in red for the next few Loops, but she knew it'd be a bit less of avoiding the color. As for Rock...

"Can we just get going now?!" Rock snapped, "The sooner I get a body, the better!"

"I'll lead the way," Tucker informed before pulling out a strange, one-wheeled vehicle from his Pocket.

"Whoa..." Roll awed, "What kind of tech is this?"

"Sangheili," Tucker replied as he got on, "Or 'The Blargs' as we call them here. Wanna hop on with Rock? Because I get the feeling that if we let Rock go with the others..."

"Getting angry..." Rock growled, his optic glowing red.

"Yeah..." Tucker hissed a little through clenched teeth in worry.

"Agreed," Roll nodded.

"Lopez! Sidecar, please!" Tucker called.

"Ya le hice un sidecar para esto (I already made you a sidecar for this)," Lopez informed as he pulled out a sidecar themed after Tucker's cycle.

"Dude, you are the best Mexican robot ever...of all time," Tucker informed.

"Gracias."

"...He's going to get his head torn off, isn't he?" Roll asked.

"Big time," Tucker confirmed.

"Can we get going already?!" Rock snapped.

"Okay. Here we are," Tucker informed.

"They still need to clean up here," Caboose informed, "And I have to go to the bathroom."

"Caboose, we went over this. You were supposed to go before we left," York sighed.

"Oh, this place needs some good ol' fashion TLC," Donut noted as the proceeded on foot.

"What's with the computer on the tree?" Rock asked.

"Oh, that's FILSS," Tucker informed as it turned on.

=Hello. This is a private facility. Visitors are not welcome. Please leave immediately. Or, we will be forced to take lethal measures, to ensure the safety of our property.=

"That is great," Caboose noted.

=You have thirty seconds to comply, or die. Have a nice day!=

"Sheila? Is that you?" Caboose asked.

=No. I am the Freelancer Integrated Logistics and Security System. You may call me Phyllis. It is a pleasure to meet you. You now have, fifteen, seconds to live.=

"Whoa. Dying sounds like a bad idea. Maybe we should leave," Rock advised.

"Roll, say something," Tucker whispered.

"Excuse me?" Roll raised a brow under her helmet.

=Oh my, the Director. I am so sorry, I did not recognize you, Ma'am. It has been such a long time since you have visited. You look very different.=

"Are you talking to me?" Roll asked, looking at FILSS

=Yes. You are the Director of Project Freelancer, are you not?=

"Oh uh, yeah. Of course, that's totally me. I just haven't been around because I've been, doing, you know... Director stuff. Can't really get into it. Secret project."

"Smooth move."

"Shut up, Rock," Roll hissed at the orb.

=How may I assist you today?=

"May we enter the facility?"

=Certainly,= The wall opened in front of them =Please watch your step.=

"Thanks, FILSS," York tilted his helmet to the computer.

"Oh, that reminds me. Could you please change your name to 'Sheila' for Caboose here?" Roll asked, "We've met an AI with your voice and, well, he thinks you're that AI."

=Alright. I will respond to that name as well. You are the Director after all.=

"Thank you, Sheila," Roll bowed, "Also, could you follow any orders Rock gives?"

=As you command.=

"Thank you," Roll bowed before they entered the base.

=Please watch your step. Director, since you have a new visitor with you today, would you like me to run the tutorial program?=

"Yes, always run that. No seriously you need to run that. No it's, really you need to, you need to turn that..."

"Oh my data! Shut the hell up, Caboose!" Rock barked.

"Please run the tutorial program, Sheila," Roll ordered.

"Oh thank the tree," Caboose thanked.

=Hello, and welcome to the Freelancer Off-site Storage Facility. Project Freelancer is a state of the art scientific endeavour, with one goal in mind: to ensure the security of humanity in a harsh and violent Galaxy.=

"Yeah right..." York muttered.

=This bunker has been constructed to guarantee the continued operation of our program, in the event of a primary facility loss. This storage area archives all the components of our Freelancer simulation bases. These outposts test our agents in realistic training scenarios.=

"Yeah, we're on the Blue Team!" Caboose informed.

"Uh, Caboose? Our team was del..." Tucker began.

=I am sorry, I do not recognize that term. Our simulation outposts are categorized into Red, and [entry missing]. Hmm, it seems as though I have a corrupted database. I will correct that when I have more time.=

"Uheh... there's our old stuff! And there's a teleporter! Man, Tucker hates those."

"Dude, more than you'd expect," Tucker admitted.

"Don't interrupt. Come on. This way," Rock ordered as he floated off.

=When the equipment is not being used, it is stored here until it can be repurposed for– Oh. I guess we are moving on.=

"Sorry, Sheila," Roll apologized, "Can you please give me a copy of it to listen to later?"

=Of course,= Sheila confirmed.

Eventually, the group came to a door at the end of a hallway

"Well what's this?" Tucker asked.

=I am sorry, this area is restricted. Only the Director herself may access this entry. I am sure you understand. The nature of our experiments is such that...=

"Please open the door. These soldiers with me have access clearance," Roll informed.

=Are you certain Director? You never bring visitors into this...=

"Sheila, please. They have access," Roll assured.

=Alright. Unlocking.=

"Thank you, Sheila."

=Would you like me to archive your ...personal project?=

"No. Let's see everything, please."

=If you say so Director.=

The group soon went on. Eventually, they entered a large room with multiple robot bodies in it.

"Oh my God! Look at all the yous! You're everywhere, Roll-Church!" Caboose exclaimed in glee, "Why this is like a Best Friend Store, and that is the greatest store ever! You can have your body back! Now which one do you want? I wanna buy one."

"I'm not looking for that," Rock informed as he floated off to a person-sized cryo chamber before it opened, "I'm looking, for this."

"Oh," Caboose blinked under his helmet.

"...Where did Sarge, Simmons, Donut, and Grif go?" Roll asked.

"Theta and Donut wanted to finish listening to the tour," York informed.

"Oh. Okay," Roll nodded.

"Thank you, Sheila," Theta thanked.

=You are quite welcome,= Sheila replied.

"Oh, that was great!" Donut beamed, "So much has been cramped right into me with that."

They turned a corner to see Caboose outside the door.

"Just hold still. No don't go...!" Rock's voice came from the other side.

=I sense things are not going well.=

"Yes please just keep the door shut, thank you that's fine."

=I am sorry, but if the Director requests the door to be opened, I am required to comply.=

"Just keep the door shut."

"Caboose?" Donut pondered.

"Stop! Don't move, don't move, don't..." Roll began.

"MY SPINE!" York screamed behind the door.

"Hrhhh," Washington groaned behind the door.

"Oh! Admiral Buttermilk Biscuit! Oh hello everyone!" Caboose greeted quickly.

"Stop!" Roll yelped.

"Yes. Everyone who wasn't here before is now here now. Hello."

"What're you up to, Blue?" Sarge asked.

"Me? Oh nothing. I'm not hiding anything behind this door."

"Uh, I wouldn't pick that up it looks expensive..." Rock informed.

"Oh tree! Oh tree! Oh tree!" Washington screamed.

"Euh, I think he's lying," Theta noted.

"What was your first clue?" Grif asked.

"Let us see what's in there," Sarge ordered.

"In here? Oh. Nothing is in here. Um, well this probably isn't even a door, either. It's, probably..." Caboose began before the door shook with a bang.

"What th' heck was that?" Sarge asked.

"Oh that was me. Uh, I said this isn't a door, I said it's a gong."

"A gong, what the hell is a–" Grif began to asked before another bang dented the door outwards.

"A gong," Caboose assured before part of the lock got pushed out from the inside thanks to a dent shaped like York was made in the door.

"...Uh oh..." Theta whimpered.

"I'm just going to walk over this way, now, excuse me. Yes, thank you. Pardon me, coming through," Caboose walked right past the Reds and continued walking through the base as the door continued to thump, "Yes excuse me, yes pardon me. Excuse me, yes thank you. Pardon me, coming through. Yes excuse me, yes pardon me."

"Down! Down right now!" Roll ordered behind the door, said door continuing being bent out from behind and shaking.

"Um, Sarge, what's the plan here?" Grif whimpered.

"Men, we have a perfect ambush scenario."

"I agree. Unless wait, are we the ambushers or, the ambushees?" Theta asked.

"Hey, can you ambush something that's trying to beat its way through metal plating to get to you?" Simmons asked.

"Okay, first, we just wait fer th' door to open..." Sarge began before they heard someone release a feminine scream behind the door, "...Was that Washington?"

The door gained a few more dents as it slowly crumbled away. After three more seconds, it then shot off the hinges over top of them.

"Door's open," Grif whimpered, hoping he was wearing a strong enough guard for below the belt.

"What th'– hh?"

Washington groaned as he crawled out of the door until a figure wearing a black Type VI Mjolnir armor stepped on him. The figure currently had York in one hand by his neck. He threw York to the side, who began to inhale deeply for more air. The figure cracked their knuckles and then their neck.

"Okay. So who's first?" Bass asked. (13)

=Alarm, security breach, level Alpha. All personnel report for duty. This is not a drill.=

"Run!" York screamed as he was the first into the storage area.

"Oh crap! Where is he?" Grif freaked as he followed.

"I don't wanna die!" Simmons cried, jumping out of the doorway and down the stairs in one go, Sarge and Lopez following.

"Sheila, we have to help them," Caboose gulped, once more in the control room with Roll.

=Help who?=

"The Reds, Agent Washingtub, and Agent Yolk! Bass-Tex is attacking them, we have to stop him," Caboose informed.

=Stop Agent Texas? Oh no, absolutely not. We should never interfere with an ongoing battlefield simulation test. Our job is to observe and document.=

"Seriously?" Roll asked.

"But he'll kill them," Caboose argued.

=Oh, that would be wonderful! What a successful test.=

"...What in the name of science is wrong with the Director me?!" Roll demanded.

"We need to keep moving, men. Come on, double-time. Hell I'd settle for single-time," Sarge advised as they looked about their surroundings as they continued on.

"Maybe we should just fight. We're all Awake, we've got more abilities than an Unawake guy, and I'm afraid he's gonna start picking us off one by..." Simmons whimpered before a black armored fist shot out of a titanium storage container, grabbing Lopez by the neck, "...one!"

Bass pulled him forward, slamming Lopez's face into the wall, then stepped back and kicked it away, sandwiching Lopez between the wall and a pile of crates. Unfortunately, the impact also caused Lopez's head to be shot clean off.

"Lopez!" Simmons called out.

Quickly, Sarge raised his shotgun and pointed it at Bass, but he darted forward, lifting the gun up just before Sarge fired, then punched the Red in the stomach and flung him towards Grif. Grif yelped, rolling out of the way...only to have Lopez's head to slam him in the crotch. Sarge stumbled forward as he was thrown and his helmet rammed right into York's crotch, causing him to scream in pain. Suddenly, Bass barreled straight into all three of them, crashing through a crate before flinging them into a pile of barrels, sending them scattering across the floor.

"Oh man, forget this. I need to get a bigger weapon," Simmons gulped, "Caboose, help us!"

"How? The computer won't let me. She's mean! This place is filled with mean ladies," Caboose argued.

"Caboose," Roll frowned.

"...Except for Roll-Church. She is my friend," Caboose informed, "I would say she is a nice lady, but there are no such thing as nice ladies."

"Push some buttons, I don't know!" Simmons called.

"Buttons!? Oh man, I love buttons!" Caboose cheered as he began pressing buttons, "Beep bup bup boop beep bup boop."

"I don't think that's going to..." Roll began before a crate of large weapons tipped over and dropped them next to Simmons, "0.o ...Nevermind." (14)

"Wow. That actually worked perfectly," Simmons chuckled as he picked up one of the bazooka and put the rest into his Pocket, "Thanks!"

"Great! How the heck did I do that?" Caboose asked as Simmons ran off.

"I think the question is why the heck did you have to do that?" Roll asked, "And are you seriously recording this, Delta?"

"For future reference on what you'll expect in this Loop for other Loopers," Delta assured.

"Ow!" Grif screamed, "The cup doesn't work! The cup doesn't work !"

"Hey Simmons, what the hell is going on in there?" Tucker asked, "Aside from you guys getting assaulted by Bass."

"He's even scarier than Tex when she's not Awake!" Simmons whimpered, "And he's not Awake, either!"

"Seriously? Well, why not use the Force or something you guys get to do?" Tucker asked.

"Just come and help me."

"Ah. I get it now, he's going too fast for you guys to reach into your Pockets," Tucker smirked, "Lucky for me..."

In the storeroom, as Sarge, Washington, York, and Grif staggered to their feet, Bass kicked a barrel towards them. Grif quickly ducked down and let the barrel hit Sarge as Washington and York jumped over it before getting up and firing his battle rifle, but Bass rolled forward to avoid the bullets. He grabbed Washington and York by their fist and foot respectively before throwing them at Grif, the orange getting nailed in the nuts once more. Bass then grabbed Grif and Sarge by their throats and smashed their heads together before knocking Sarge away with some punches and kicks. Grif opened fire again only for Bass to knock his rifle away and begin pounding on him with some powerful punches before knocking him to the floor, holding onto his right leg with one hand then raising his other in a fist.

"Wait wait wait-!"

Bass struck Grif really, really hard in the groin, then kicked him across the room, right into a crate. As he struggled to get up, a teleporter fell on him and he flew out the other end just as Bass knocked Sarge aside.

"O-ho o-ho," Grif groaned, "Why me?"

"Guess you're just a pain magnet down there," York noted before he finally managed to get into his Pocket and pulled out the Keyblades Oblivion and Oathkeeper, "Oh yeah. Time to go for it! Thunder!"

Bass looked up before jumping to the side, dodging the lightning bolts trying to hit him. Bass skidded to a halt beside one of the containers and grabbed it with one arm. Grif and York yelped as Bass threw it right at them with ease. A blur shot by and the container was sliced down the middle, dodging them both.

"Hey, Bat Head!" Tucker called as he leveled his gaze at Bass, "Remember me? Step away from the idiots!"

Bass slowly approached Tucker and the two stood off. Simmons was seen mounting himself atop a crate from afar.

"Oh God, please don't let him see me," Simmons whimpered, pulling out the BFG9000 from his Pocket.

Bass charged at Tucker, who quickly slid under the black-wearing fighter. He spun around, but Bass jumped over the sweep kick. Bass and Tucker jumped back when a crate fell between them.

"Yes! I saved Tucker! Oh wait..." Caboose slumped, "I saved Tucker."

"Caboose, what're you doing?" Tucker demanded before the crate was torn in two by Bass, "Ulp. Simmons, now!"

Bass turned to see Simmons had finished charging the BFG-9000, "You ratted me out, you son of a bitch!"

Simmons fired the energy shot out, but Bass jumped aside. Using the momentum generated by the explosion, he was able to grab a teleporter and fling it towards him.

"Oh shit! Not again!" Simmons yelped.

Simmons fired another energy blast, but it simply went through the teleporter and out the exit that was right next to the pile he was standing on.

"Oh shit!"

Simmons was thrown into the air by the explosion, right into the flying teleporter and out of the other end – straight into Bass who grabbed him and performed a German Suplex on him. He then kicked him into Tucker, sending them sprawling to the ground.

"Um, can we use turrets on him or, some explodey fiery thing?" Caboose asked, Roll unsure about either covering her eyes or just getting some popcorn.

=That would be outside the bounds of my standard safety protocols. I cannot do that.=

"Please, Sheila?"

=I am sorry, Director, but you added the order that I should not listen to you should it be Agent Texas that is fighting.=

"I hate my other half," Roll scowled.

"What do we do, Sarge?" Grif asked, holding an orange cone.

"Ah don't know," Sarge replied, "We've been tryin' t' git into our Pockets, but he's been stoppin' us even if he don't know what we're tryin' t' do," Sarge noted.

"And when I was able to get these guys out, he was able to avoid the Thunder Spell," York added, showing his Keyblades, "I've tried Stop, Aero, Freeze, and even Fire, but he's able to actually avoid them all."

"Just like the last time we had to do this when it was just me and you Awake, York," Tucker noted, "Except it was against Tex and, ugh, I hated that Loop so much."

"He's charging!" Grif shouted.

Bass, in his charge, snatched Sarge's shotgun out of his grip, punched Tucker, York, and Washington aside, and kicked Simmons into another teleporter.

"WHAT THE FUUUUUUUUUUUU..." Simmons yelped as he flew through a few teleporters, "...UUCK!"

As Bass turned towards Grif, Simmons flew out the exit from the previous teleporter and into another teleporter. He exited the teleporter and knocked right into Washington, knocking him straight into Grif, who ended up kicked in the groin once again. Bass slammed Grif and Washington onto the floor with his foot and pointed the shotgun right at Grif's head.

"Oh no, Grif! Washington!" Simmons freaked.

"Yipe!" Grif squeaked as Bass pulled the trigger...only for the gun to be out of ammo.

"Private Grif, you should be ashamed of yourself. We've run out of ammo again! That's your responsibility!" Sarge scolded.

"Huh. I guess this is the first time my laziness has ever saved my..." Grif began before Bass picked up Washington and swung him back like a golf club, "Protect me cone!"

"Ouch!" Roll winched as she watched Grif, screaming, sent flying over a crate, Washington soon joining him, screaming while holding his own groin, "Wow. Washington is not having a good Loop, is he?"

"This is the first time he's actually had to fight here," Delta informed.

"Watch it!" York barked as he pushed the two off him.

"You watch it," Washington groaned, "Grif, I am not going to mock you about this anymore this Loop."

"You idiots, let me show you how it's done," Sarge scolded, managing to get into his Pocket and pulled out two shotguns, "Meet Rosemary and Amber!"

He proceeded to start open firing on Bass. The black-armored robot began to dodge the shots just as fast as Sarge was releasing them. He reached Sarge and punched him in the face, sending the shotguns into the air. Bass caught them and used them as a pair of clubs to send Sarge into Simmons and Grif.

"Nice demonstration Sarge," Grif grunted.

"Ah shut up."

"Hey guys, look up there," York pointed at the giant crate looming over Bass.

"That again? No way," Tucker replied, "That never works."

Bass looked up at the crate and jumped up to it. He tore the crane holding it in two, letting it drop down. Jumping behind it, he proceeded to lift it up and threw it at them.

"See?!" Tucker yelped, "Hold on, guys!"

Tucker quickly activated his sword and sliced the crate in two. Medi-Packs rained down on the group, covering everyone but York and Tucker. The two charged at Bass, blades at the ready.

=Agent Texas is a bit of a badass. However, it seems that the blue one is also a badass,= Sheila noted.

"Yeah. Aside from York and Washington, he seems to have the most combat experience of everyone here," Roll agreed.

"Oh thank God, thought I was a goner this Loop. Sarge, where are you?" Simmons called before Sarge popped up out of a pile of medpacks, Lopez's head on his head.

"Rrr, what happened? I feel defeated, yet inexplicably rejuvenated," Sarge noted.

"En serio, ¿por qué coño Yo siempre terminan como una cabeza en cada maldito bucle entro como un robot o esqueleto (Seriously, why the fuck do I always end up as just a head in every single fucking loop I go into as a robot or skeleton)?!" Lopez ranted.

Tucker and York worked in tandem, slashing and swiping at Bass. The robot dodged each and every single slash. The two tried to stab, but Bass caught their arms, twisted them, and kicked them away. Their swords went into the air before stabbing into the ground, Tucker's sword turning off just seconds after.

"Oh come on," York grunted as he and Tucker got up.

"O-aow, bullshit!" Tucker shook a fist before hearing something creak above them, "Uh...York?"

"Hm?"

York turned to Tucker, who pointed up. York looked up just in time for the teleporter to fall and landed on them. the two exited out of one behind Bass, who performed a back spin kick at them. York's visor shattered before his helmet broke apart, revealing his brown hair and his milky-white eye with a scar. Roll gasped as she saw the eye.

"He...He's partially blind?" Roll asked as Washington charged at Bass.

"Indeed. During the first simulation battle he had with Maine and Wyoming against him, Agent Te...Bass used his gun to protect York from some grenades that Maine had tossed into the field," Delta informed, "Unfortunately, his eye was left uncovered."

"Simmons, do you got heat seeking?" Sarge asked.

"Yeah," Simmons replied, "Missile, rocket, cannonball, or coconut?"

"Coconut?" Grif repeated.

"Don't ask, but you'll connect it to the reason why I liked wearing that tie for those twenty Loops with you," Simmons informed. (15)

"I didn't know that was there!" York yelped.

"No, no, no, no! That doesn't bend that way!" Tucker yelped before Washington let out a feminine scream.

"Now lock on and let her rip!" Sarge ordered before Bass shot out of a teleporter near Roll and Caboose.

"...bitch! Damn it I hate this black stuff, what the hell is it?" Tucker's voice came from Bass.

"Tucker?" Roll blinked.

"Oh, hey Roll, Caboose," Tucker greeted, "Look, I got my sword back."

"There he is!"

"Huh?" Tucker turned, "Aw shit."

"Get him!" Sarge roared as he and Grif tackled Tucker.

"Ow, come on! I'm not Bass, I'm a Blue! I'm not the one you're fighting. Leave me the fuck alone!" Tucker shouted between the pummels until Grif and Sarge tensed and collapsed, holding their groins.

"That's enough, you two," Roll frowned as she put her broom away.

"Man, you guys are nuts," Tucker groaned before Bass's hand shot out of a teleporter and grabbed him by the neck, "Nuts!"

Tucker was pulled through it. Tucker was then suplexed by him. Bass went for the mount and started punching him.

"O-ho, wow, right into the mount, huh? O-hoa, not even gonna buy dinner? Come on, I like your style, but I'm do-own-n't swing that way!"

Simmons began to position himself to fire at Bass.

"Simmons, what're you waiting for?" York demanded.

"They look the same, which one do I shoot?"

"Shoot the one who's winning dumbass!" Washington argued.

"Ow," Grif, cradling his injured area, staggered into the line of fire.

"Grif! Watch it!" Simmons barked.

"Uh-huh-huh."

Bass kicked Tucker forward, knocking him into Grif before grabbing his leg, pulling him back and punching him to the ground so hard that the black ash flew off his armor, even cracking random areas of Tucker's armor, as he skidded back towards Sarge, York, Washington, and Simmons.

"Ahoww, ow," Tucker groaned, a bit of his black dreadlocks showing under his helmet.

"Wow, knocked the black right off ya," Sarge noted.

"That's racist," Tucker and Roll noted.

"You're all clear Simmons, now shoot him!" York ordered.

"This will not go well," Delta stated as Theta and himself made a backup of themselves.

"Fire in the hole!" Simmons called as he pulled the trigger.

Simmons fired a missile at Bass, who took off and leapt into a teleporter, flipping out the other side and then running straight towards Tucker, Washington, York, and the Reds; the missile still on his tail.

"Are you fucking kidding me?!" Washington demanded.

"Run!" York screamed.

Tucker bumped into Sarge and Simmons as York knocked into Grif. Bass ran up and knocked all five of them down with a single lariat before sliding right under Washington's legs. Washington looked up and spotted the missile moving right towards him.

"Oh God, not my ba..." Wash began before it went between his legs, "Oh thank God. I thought I was..." he turned around, just as Bass leapt into a second teleporter on the floor and the missile flew past him and towards a pile of propane tanks, "FUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUCKED!"

As the missile hit, the tanks ignited and jetted towards them like mini-rockets. Grif was sent flying by a tank that hit him square in the groin while the others were knocked into the air by the tanks' explosions. Meanwhile, Bass rolled out the other side of the teleporter and watched as Tucker, Sarge, York, and Washington and Simmons came crashing down to the ground. Bass then approached a cement barricade and carefully pushed it aside and soon pushed it a few more inches. He then waited as Grif finally came crashing down on top of it...crotch-first.

"Ooaaah! Why won't you just kill me?" Grif groaned as she slid off the barrier and onto the floor. (16)

"Hey Bass!" Rock's sphere hit Bass on the head, making him turn to see Rock standing, his buster out and ready, "How 'bout you pick on somebody your own size?"

=Five seconds later=

"Ow. Ow! Ooow! Stop it! Bass, you are embarrassing me," Rock grunted with each swing of his former sphere body to his face by Bass, who had Rock in a hold, "Ow! Stop! Ah! Hey, are you gonna sit a–ow–you gonna help me or not? Stop it."

"Naw buddy. Ah think you got everything under control. We'll just hang back here," Sarge chuckled.

"Won't it stop?!" Rock barked, earning another hit from his former sphere body held by Bass.

"Yeah, you've got some catching up to do," Grif noted, he and Washington holding packs of ice below the belt.

"The whole–stop."

"Hey, what's he beating him with?" York asked.

"I think that was his old body," Theta noted.

"You mean he ain't a floatin' cue ball any more?" Sarge asked, "That's too bad. Had a few more nicknames in my side pocket. We'll certainly miss you Lord Hackensack of the Roundalots."

"Beating him with his own body? That doesn't seem physically possible," Washington noted.

"Alright. I'm good now," Bass chuckled, dropping both Rock and the sphere, "Man...What was way to get used to a body when Waking Up."

"Son of a...You've been Awake this whole time?!" Grif demanded.

"I've been Awake for about just before tearing the door down with New York and Washington," Bass replied, "Now someone explain to me why I'm in this sweet Type-VI Mjolnir Armor and why does it feel stronger?"

"Welcome to the Red VS Blue Loop, Bass," Roll greeted.

"Roll? Wow. Not bad for ya," Bass noted, "So why are you in the armor like I am and Rock's in his normal get up?"

"Hey, screw you," Rock snorted.

"...Is he okay?" Bass whispered.

"He's been having...issues...with this Loop," Roll explained, "Sheila, do you have any way of scanning for certain armors?"

=Yes, Director,= Sheila replied.

"Search for Agent Maine's armor," Roll ordered.

"Director?" Bass repeated.

"It's a long story, so get comfy. It's twenty hours long and I only like telling it in five minute intervals," Roll replied with a sigh.

"And there you go. All nice and recovered," Doc beamed.

"Then why do my balls still feel like they've been slammed into concrete?" Grif asked.

"Oh, I owed Bass a favor and he cashed it in to not have me heal you down there. Something about a Valentine's Day and the theft of all the heart-shaped Oreos that Loop," Doc informed.

"So let me get this straight; as long as we're in here, the Recovery Beacon in all our armors won't activate?" Rock asked.

=Correct, AI Fragment Epsilon,= Sheila responded =As long as you are in this facility, your Recovery Beacon will not activate.=

"Okay. Good," Rock nodded.

"Seriously? This happens to you every single Loop here?" Bass asked in disbelief.

"Si," Lopez replied as Roll reattached his head to his body.

"How do you handle it?" Bass asked.

"Me voy a la terapia cuando soy capaz de ... y el terapeuta es un Looper. Cuando hice el error la primera vez, terminé en el manicomio."

"Ouch. The insane asylum?" Roll winced.

"Si," Lopez replied as Roll finished attaching his head before he taped his neck twice, "Still, that was a bit of a nice vacation. I didn't have to deal with anyone from my Baseline."

"Holy...!" Bass gawked.

"He's managed to figure out how to talk in different languages," Roll explained, "He even knows a few...strange...languages."

"...Strange? Strange how?" Bass asked.

"I speak oxygen," Lopez informed. (17)

"...Oh," Bass sweatdropped.

=The files are ready, Director,= Sheila informed.

"Cool. Thanks, Sheila," Roll nodded.

"Files?"

"I want to figure out what the heck the real Director was doing," Roll informed as the three walked over to a computer beside Rock, "...What is with all of this? Win/Loss records? Psyche Profiles?!"

"...Washington used to wet the bed?" Rock read.

"...Oh, that's hilarious," Bass snickered.

"So, no new info? Wild goose chase again?" Rock asked.

"Maybe, maybe not. Look at this picture, do you have any idea what this is?" Bass asked, pointing at an image.

"What is that, ice? Oh yeah. I know that place," Rock replied, "That's a uh, secure location like um, like a safe house. Wait, how do I know that?"

"You know it because it's a Freelancer base. And it's not far from here," Bass replied.

"If you already know what it is, why the hell are ya asking me?" Rock demanded.

"Because, I'm not interested in what I know, I'm interested in what you know," Bass replied.

"What is that, fucking wisdom? Listen; next time you wanna ask me a God damn question just ask it, don't beat around the bush."

"Whoa! Where's the colorful language coming from?" Bass asked.

"He's been having a bad Loop," Roll and Lopez replied.

"I'm gonna go see what weapons they have stored here," Bass informed before he walked off.

"Okay. Need any help?" Roll asked.

=Director.=

"Yes, Sheila?"

=Before you leave, would you like to make a journal entry? It has been quite a while since your last update.=

"Journal?" Rock and Roll repeated.

=Yes. I know you are busy, but you always ask me to remind you when you are falling behind on documentation. Documentation is an important part of any scientific endeavor.=

"Right, um... hey why don't you play one of the entries for me," Roll ordered.

=Certainly,= Sheila replied before Director Roll's voice came from the computer, an image of her with sunglasses on on the screen =The Counselor's insistence on referring to Agent Texas as a 'byproduct' continues to frustrate me. We have seen our share of unharvestable fragments. He is certainly not one of them. No indeed, he's something else entirely.=

"Whoa. Okay, I don't want to add any new entries this time, Sheila. I'll...uh...I'll go see the others now," Roll informed before leaving with Lopez.

"..." Rock turned to the computer and spoke in Roll's voice, "Sheila, I want you to transfer all these files to Epsilon."

=Understood. Transferring now.=

"And do me a favor: delete the rest."

=Deleting entries.=

"So what are you guys doing?" Roll asked as she noticed Simmons had placed the last of the teleporters in a neat little row.

"Well, since we all stored everything in here at least once, we thought you might like to have all of this with you," Simmons informed.

"R-Really?" Roll asked.

"Eeyup," Sarge replied, "'Course, yer boyfriend Bass done absconded with a lot of th' weapons."

"He did?" Roll asked.

"Yeah," Grif replied, "Said he needed them for something."

"Still, you've got all of this," Tucker motioned to the rest of the stuff in the area, "I'm sure you'll find something good for all this."

"I'm leaving, Rock," Rock turned to see Bass approach.

"What? Where?"

"Can't say, there's some things I need to look into."

"You're going to that frozen base, aren't you?"

"I need to know more about myself this Loop, Rock. And I'm not gonna find anything out by sitting around on my ass with all of you."

"Fine. Then I'm coming, too," Rock informed.

"And that's the last of it," Roll noted as she put the last medi-kit into her Pocket, "I still can't believe there was a couch in here."

"Yeah. Sure surprised us first time around, too," Grif agreed, "Sarge had a breakdown after finding out our military career was just a big lie."

"Uh, guys? I can't find Rock anywhere," Tucker informed.

"And I cannot find the bathroom!" Caboose shouted on the other side of the now-empty room.

"Down the hall and to the left, Caboose!" Roll replied, "But seriously? Sheila, where're Rock and Bass?"

=They left an hour ago using a Puma.=

"Oh don't start that up again!" Grif shouted.

"...Oh no," Washington realized, "Bass is going to lure the Meta to him using Rock!"

"Wh-What?!" Roll exclaimed.

"Quick! To the plane!" York ordered.

"There's a plane in here?!" Roll demanded.

"Grif will operate the vehicle and I will assist," Delta informed.

"Come on! We've got two guys out there about to get it down against a monster!" Washington ordered.

"Sheila, go into sleep mode until I get back," Roll ordered, "If someone says they're from the UNSC, they have full clearance to anything in the facility."

=Affirmative, Director,= Sheila replied. =ALARM! AI Fragment Epsilon has just activated his recovery beacon!=

"Okay. We're approaching the place," Grif informed.

"Whoa. Place looks worse than it normally does," Tucker noted, "And normally, you're working with the Meta, Wash."

"What?!" Roll exclaimed.

"Hey, hey, hey. That's because I sometimes don't Awake until after Meta betrays me," Washington informed, "But you're right, the damage is much worse."

"...Aw shit," Grif facepalmed, "I forgot I had added some stuff to my armor."

"The armor you lost from the emp?" Simmons asked.

"Yeah. It was all emp-proofed by Twilight Sparkle, too," Grif informed.

"So you made the Meta, the freaking monster of your Loops, even more powerful ?!" Roll demanded.

"Sorry."

"Private Grif, you are hereby getting a shotgun court-martial after this!" Sarge demanded.

"What the fuck?! Wh-What the hell is with this guy's armor?!" Bass demanded, firing a charged shot at the Meta only for it to be absorbed.

"How should I know?" Rock groaned, his stomach blasted through to expose his wiring, "Fuckin' can't believe you shot me, you cock-bite."

"...Is it bad that we're both so casual with the swearing this Loop?" Bass asked, earning a bird from Rock as a reply, (18) "Ah. Fair eno– Where the hell is that music coming from?"

The Meta was about to fire when he looked up, hearing Tejano music playing. Flying right at them was the ship the others were in.

"There they are! Land right next to them!" York ordered.

"Right... land ..."

"You do know how to land this vehicle, don't you?" York asked.

"Sure, that just means stop flying, right?" Grif asked.

"Brace for impact!" Sarge and Theta called out.

"Oh shit! This is gonna suck!"

"Dammit, Grif! You were supposed to learn how to land one of these things!" Washington snapped, "D, don't you dare back yourself up!"

"Oh noooooo~!" Donut screamed girlishly.

"At least I got my Medi-Gun," Doc noted.

"...I still haven't got my peanuts," Caboose stated.

The Pelican quickly dropped towards the surface and crashed. Meta jumped out of the way to avoid it. The Pelican finally came to a stop, with the Reds, Blues, Freelancers, and Roll pressed against the glass, crushing a cowering Doc under them.

"I would say that was the cavalry, but I've never seen a line of horses crash into the battlefield from outer space before," Bass noted as he and Rock poked out from behind a tree.

"Heeyy... Is it possible for a Looper that was originally a super-advanced robot that is now a memory fragment out of an artificial intelligence program enclosed inside a robotic body to piss its pants? Because I'm pretty sure I just did that," Rock admitted.

"Shut up, Rock," Bass snorted as he walked over to the ship, "Come on, let's go see how many of your friends survived that."

"You know, they're not really my friends."

"That's okay, I'm sure none of them really survived aside from Roll."

"Grif! Look what you did to our ship!" Sarge scolded as they got out of it.

"Aw fuck it, it's a rental."

"Good point. Fuck it," Sarge nodded before he kicked the Pelican off the cliff and let it fall over the side into the icy water below as the other two ran over.

"Rock! Bass!" Roll beamed before slamming the two of them into the ground with a single strike of her broom, "YOU BASTARDS! WHY DID YOU EVEN THINK OF DOING THIS?!"

"Well, excuse me!" Rock snapped, "But I'm sick and tired of being around idiots like...like them!"

"I just want answers for who I am this Loop," Bass shrugged before a growl earned their attention, "Dammit, I was hoping you crushed him under that."

Before anyone could do anything, Bass's helmet-covered face blew forward, a spike coming out of him.

"B-Bass!" Roll gasped as the Meta kicked Bass's body off the spike and attached it to his back, cloaking.

"What just happened?!" Rock yelped.

"I'm sorry, you two. The Meta captured him inside of a memory unit," Washington informed, "And I think that armor has Clock-Up now from the Kabuto Loop."

"Grif, why did you even have something with Clock Up on your armor?!" Simmons demanded.

"So I could steal as many oreos in the world in any Loop and not get caught," Grif replied, "The cloaking was so that no one could see me with Clock Up if they slowed the videos down. Let's see, uh...Oh! I also added super strength, a Kryptonite sword, solar charging, MP3, PSP, 3DS, internet, karaoke, YouTube, and, uh, Netflix."

Washington facepalmed with a sigh, "Look, the only way we're going to get Bass back is if Rock here goes get him from the containment unit. But you need to hurry. If it locks down before I can open it, he'll be trapped in there."

"Ugh," Rock facepalmed, "This Loop just keeps getting worse and worse."

"Split up," York ordered as he took out his Keyblades, "Everyone make sure you've got your best weapon from the Loops ready."

Tucker pulled out his sword as Simmons took out a pair of shoulder-mounted missile-launchers. Caboose took out a plush of someone in Type-VI Mjolnir armor colored in cobalt while Sarge took out a pair of shotguns tied together into nunchucks. Donut just whimpered as he took out a stick.

"A wand?" Rock asked, "A fucking wand?!"

"I...I haven't really had a lot of Loops so far," Donut admitted, "I haven't really been to anyplace with really strong things."

"...Hold on. I have an idea," Roll noted before taking out a pink mustache from her Pocket, "Donut, this is...the Warfstache."

"Warfstache?" Donut repeated.

"It holds divine power within its follicles. When you wear it, you will get incredible power and become capable of unleashing all your pent-up emotions into raw, undiluted power," Roll informed, "But just be careful because you'll want to call yourself 'Wilfred Warfstache' when you do wear it." (19)

"R-Really? Well...I always did want to be named Wilfred," Donut noted as he was given the mustache, "Thanks, Roll."

"...Are you serious?" Washington asked as everyone went off in different directions, leaving just Washington, Roll, and Rock.

"It's a placebo," Roll informed, "Before I woke up in a Hub Loop, the Unawake me of there was a big fan of this Markiplier guy. She made a lot of those pink mustaches."

"Wow. Okay," Washington nodded, "This is the first time I've seen the Meta not be able to get someone who was replacing Tex before the Pelican crashed. You and Bass must have been doing well."

"He shot me," Rock frowned, pointing at the hole in him.

"...We'll get Doc on that," Washington informed.

"So where is the Meta?" Rock asked.

"Well, normally, after Epsilon took the data from the base we were in, we'd talk about Tex..." Washington looked at Rock.

"...It's kinda easy when you've got her memories," Rock admitted in Roll's voice, making his sister gawk at him.

"Yeah. Should've figured that one out," Washington facepalmed.

"We found some journals from the Director. Bass is someone from her life. Someone she loved..."

"Forte. In this Loop, the guy Bass is based on was named 'Forte.'"

"Forte...When they made Alpha, he came back. He was a byproduct of the process," Roll informed.

"He's just a shadow."

"Don't call him that! He died in his real life this Loop, and that's all the Director ever remembered of him," Rock scowled, "So now, no matter how tough our Bass is, no matter how hard he's going to fight this Loop, he's always going to fail! Because that's what he's based on this Loop. No matter what he's doing, or what he's trying to accomplish, just when his goal is within reach, it gets yanked away. Every. Single. Time. Can you imagine what that's like?"

"I think I'm getting the idea..." Washington noted, seeing the Meta appear behind Roll and Rock.

"Uh oh..." the two gulped as the Meta growled loudly.

"All! My! RAGE!" the four turned to see Donut charging, wearing the pink mustache, "I'M SO ANGRY! I'M GONNA KILL YOU, GOD-DAMMIT!" Donut roared as he elbow-dropped the Meta, "YAAAA!" Rock covered Roll's eyes as Roll covered Rock's eyes, "YOU SON OF A BITCH!" Washington's helmet turned green as the other soon ran up, " YOU SON OF A BITCH! "

"What the...?" Grif blinked a few times in shock.

"What the hell did Donut have?" Tucker gawked.

"That...That's kinda overkill," Simmons gulped.

"Yikes, Donut. Don't you think that was a little...overkill?" York asked as the Meta's blood and gore-splattered helmet was quickly Pocketed by Grif.

"Who is this 'Donut' you all are talking about? I am Wilfred Warfstache," Donut informed, twirling his pink mustache on his helmet while holding the storage unit that had Bass in it.

"Uh...Okay, um...Wilfred. Could we please have the device you're holding?" Roll asked, 'I...I can't believe that worked.'

"But of course," Donut replied, handing it over to Roll...who quickly took his mustache as well, "Huh? What happened? All I remember is putting the Warfstache on and then nothing."

"...Donut, please be careful with this," Roll advised, handing the Warfstache back to him, "Look, I'll go in here and..."

"Too late!" Rock called as he jumped into it.

"Rock?!" Roll gasped before dropping the now-sparking containment unit, "Ah!"

"Dammit, Rock!" Washington growled.

"Lopez, stabilize that unit right now!" Sarge ordered.

"Yo no puedo hacer nada. Se está empezando a cerrar (I cannot do anything. It is starting to shut down)," Lopez informed.

"Oh no!" Simmons gasped.

"What? What?" Caboose asked.

"It's only going to be open for a few more seconds. After that, he'll be trapped," Simmons informed.

"Come on, Rock-Church. You can do it. Can you hear me? You can... Run towards my voice!" Caboose called.

"Caboose, I...I don't think that'll work," Roll sniffled.

"It's shutting down! I can't stop it!"

"Lopez, fix it!"

"No puedo, estupido."

"Rock-Church? Are you there?"

The containment unit slowly faded, and then shut down.

"Roll...Caboose... I'm sorry," Simmons apologized.

"Church?" Caboose asked as Washington let Roll start crying on him.

"And where the hell did the Pelican in the water come from?" a UNSC interrogator demanded the Reds.

"Hmm... I don't know. I guess the Meta must have hijacked it, and crashed it here. That makes sense, right?" Grif asked.

"Man, the Chairman is going to be pissed. The budget only allows for one crashed Pelican per mission. All right, well I guess you guys check out. You can head back to your training base now."

"We just call them bases," Sarge frowned.

"Hmph. I bet," the interrogator snorted.

"Hey. We solved your problem. Not bad for 'Trainees,'" Grif pointed out.

"I gotta hand it to you. Killing one of these agents would be tough. But three? And this guy..." the man motioned to what looked like York's armor, "The Chairman will not be happy he's dead. I think he wanted to debrief him personally. Oh well."

"Yeah..." Simmons noted.

"Yeah, that's too bad," Sarge agreed.

"Well, be sure to let him know we're sorry," Grif added.

"Whatever. You're free to go. If we need you, we know where to find you," the Interrogator informed before he walked away.

"Come on, fellas. Let's go home," Sarge ordered.

"Uh... The jeep's busted, Sarge. Are we walking?" Grif asked.

"That depends. You fellas gotten over your fear of flying yet?" Sarge asked.

"Yes sir," Simmons saluted before they stole a Hornet and flew off.

"Yoink!" Grif called.

"Hey! You can't take that! That... That's UNSC property! Get back here! Hey, come on, I'll lose my job!"

"I hope this doesn't go on our permanent record!" Simmons noted.

"It hasn't so far," Sarge shrugged before pulling out Washington and Roll from his Pocket...along with the containment unit, "And we got th' containment unit, too."

"So what's this one called?" Roll asked, hugging the containment unit.

"The Hornet," Washington informed as Simmons pulled out York in a spare of his armor, Caboose, and Tucker.

"Looks more like a Wasp to me," Roll noted.

"No, it's a fuckin' Hornet," Grif informed.

"Ah don't know. Ah like th' name Wasp."

"You sure you're up for this?" Washington asked.

"I...I'll be fine," Roll assured, "Besides...We can try to get them out, right?"

Washington nodded before turning to the argument that bloomed because of Roll, "Dammit, guys! I told you it's called a Hornet because of the shape of this thing!"

"Damn it. This is one tough containment unit," York noted, standing up and moving away from the containment unit that had Bass and Rock in it as Lopez and Washington slumped in their seats.

"Tell me about it. The few times I end up switching places with Simmons and this has always been the pain in the ass for me," Lopez sighed.

"You've switched places with Simmons before?"

"Remember that one Loop where Simmons dropkicked Wyoming in the balls and then shot him in the face? That was me."

"Huh. Cool," Washington nodded.

"While we have been able to power it up, we still have yet been able to access into its mainframe," Delta noted, "However, at our current progress, we'll be ready by the time Carolina appears."

"She still isn't awake either," Theta added, "I keep sending out a ping for her, but I don't get anything from her."

"Oh yeah. This will be the first time you've ever seen Carolina not Awake when you're with us, won't it?" Washington asked York.

"Yeah. I...I'm not sure what to feel about it," York admitted.

"Just...Just be careful okay?" Washington offered, "She...She's not the Carolina we knew back then, not anymore."

York nodded, "Speaking of girls in blue, how's Roll doing?"

"...I caught her drinking the strong stuff again," Washington informed.

"Ouch," York winced.

"Right now, I left Tucker and Caboose to watch her," Washington informed before a small silence went by, "And now I realize how dumb that sounded and planned."

"Dammit, Caboose! How did you get stuck up there?!" Tucker demanded, looking up at the top of the base.

"I don't know! But it is awesome up here! Tucker, you should get Roll-Chuch up here!" Caboose called, his voice echoing, "Oh! It's an echo place!"

"...Well, that should distract Caboose for a bit," Tucker noted as he entered the base...and sighed, "Dammit, Roll."

"Hey~ Tucky~!" Roll giggled, her cheeks pink, as she stumbled over to him in just random bits of her armor and her bodysuit.

"You're drunk," Tucker frowned under his helmet.

"And you're sexy," Roll giggled at her strange comeback.

"Dang it, Roll. Ever since we got back, you've just been drinking," Tucker sighed.

"But if I don'ts, I'll gets all remember-urp!-rememberblems," Roll informed, sluggishly and dizzily trying to get over to him, "Thish ish likes when Wily done...um...he...what did he do? Oh yeah! When he did that meanie thing to Rock and I wanted to rip him aparts into little teensy, weensie pieces...Shtupid crashy-washy..." (20)

Tucker frowned under his helmet before pulling Roll into a hug.

"Hey! Wh-What's with you?" Roll demanded.

"Roll, you're a member of the Reds and Blues now," Tucker informed, "It started the moment Caboose saw you as 'Church.' Between you and me, I think he knows you're not really Church, but then again...he is Caboose." he looked down at her, "The point is, we're all one big family. Sure, we may fight and shoot at each other at times, but in the end...we're still family. Sure, there's a lot of shit that goes on here and in the Loops we go into, but we're still a family. And family looks after each other, like right now. You're family now, Roll. Even if you don't think of us like it, everyone here sees you as that little sister we all were hoping for. And, right now, York, Delta, Lopez, and Washington are working around the clock, trying to get back two of the people you cherish; your real brother Rock and your buddy Bass. And yet, you're here, trying to drink your sorrows away. Well, I can't stand it anymore, seeing someone that I now see as a little sister just wasting her Loop away! So we're going to throw the bottle you've got away, get sober, get you in your armor, and you're going to do the one thing everyone here does no matter what; remember. Because to us here in the Red VS Blue Loops, Memory is the Key."

"..." Roll sniffled before dropping the bottle and started hitting Tucker's torso, "It...It's not fair! Wh-Why...? Why is it that while...while I've been both annoyed, ticked off, but also love being in this Loop, Rock and Bass...They...Why do they have to have such terrible times here?! B-Bass is doomed to fail everything in this Loop while Rock...Rock is getting my memories because he's the Epsilon for this Loop and..." she took in a deep breath, "...and he just abandoned me. I told him I'd go into it to get back Bass and...and he just did it himself."

"As much as I'd like to say what he was thinking, I can't," Tucker shook his head, "None of us ever pry into what Epsilon or Church does while they go in there since it's...well..it's personal for them both. All I do know is that Rock is going to be pissed at us for pulling him out of there like the first times Epsilon and Church were pulled out of those things." he patted her head, "Plus...there's one important thing he didn't do; he never said 'goodbye.'"

"G...Goodbye? What does saying 'goodbye' have to do with anything?!"

"It's an unspoken rule around here. Don't say goodbye."

"Why not?"

"It's something Carolina's mom used to tell her," Tucker informed, "She always told her 'Never say goodbye. If you don't say 'goodbye,' then...you aren't really gone. ...You...just aren't here right now.'"

"...Her mother sounds like a smart woman."

"That she was, Roll, that she was," Tucker nodded, "Now, come on. Get your armor all the way on. Caboose got stuck on the roof."

"Seriously? How'd he do that?" Roll asked, giggling a bit.

"We have no idea," Tucker chuckled.

"...Tucker?"

"Yeah?" the aquamarine/teal/whatever Trooper turned back to her, only to end up getting a hug.

"Thanks. I...I needed this," Roll thanked before running off.

"..." Tucker chuckled as he shook his head, "Guess I should try to not tell her that Tex is Carolina's ghost mom now." A gunshot went off, followed by Donut and Doc screaming like little girls, "...And the moment's gone just like that."

"You okay, York?" Washington asked as he and York were working on the containment unit.

"I...She's really bad right now, huh?" York questioned, "No wonder she doesn't like to talk about how she first met you guys after you became a Blue."

"And you decided to be a Red with North," Washington noted.

"Hey, trying to keep it even is all," York held his hands up.

"Gentlemen, the unit's working now," Delta informed, "We can extract Rock Light and Bass from the unit now."

"Okay," Washington nodded, "I'll get everyone. You two work on extracting."

"Ugh...That was not fun," Bass groaned as he appeared on Roll's shoulder, "Let me tell you, it may have looked like our Loop, it was not."

"Really? Well, the original Epsilon had it set up as Blood Gulch," Roll noted, recalling the DVDs, "Did you...?"

"If you're asking about Rock, then yes, yes I did," Bass confirmed, "And let me tell you, he was weird. I mean, really weird. Even for him."

"I...I think it's because of a theory Simmons and I came up with," Roll admitted, "Rock's been getting my memories– all of them –because I'm the Alpha and he's Epsilon. We haven't confirmed it or not if he's also getting Delta and Theta's memories, but he may have been getting your own memories."

"Seriously?" Bass asked, "I really hope he doesn't 'remember' what we did that one Loop."

"U–I see him! I see him, he's in there. He's okay!" Caboose cheered.

"What? Let me see, moron," Sarge ordered, moving Caboose out of the way, "It's just a bunch o' circuits like last time."

"Yeah but they're glowing. He's alive!" Caboose cheered.

"Well get him outta there," Sarge ordered.

"No, no, dammit! Whyhyhy? Why did you do it?" Rock demanded as he appeared.

"Ep–Rock, you're alive! See–I knew it. See I told them! And she was right! We could get you out!" Caboose cheered.

"Dammit, Roll! Why? Why did you have to pull me out of there?!" Rock demanded, "I was at peace! I was finally happy in this Loop!"

"Dude, lay off her. She's been a wreck since you went in there!" Tucker frowned under his helmet.

"Screw you!" Rock snapped at Tucker, "Why would you do that, Roll? Why?!"

"Well, clearly it wasn't to hear 'thank you,'" Sarge grumbled.

" Thank you? You fucked everything up! I was at peace–I had it figured out, it was over! Put me back!"

"Put you back? Buddy, we just spent six months fixin' that there unit t' git y'all out. And now you wanna go back?"

"YES!"

Roll winced at that response. Bass frowned at Rock for that comment as the unawake Carolina entered.

"Hey there, Epsilon. Been looking for you for a long time."

"Oh no."

"Now that I've found you, you're gonna help me do what I should have done years ago: You're gonna help me kill the Director," Carolina demanded.

"Agent Carolina, what are you doing here!?" Rock demanded.

"I need your help. I'm tracking the Director of Project Freelancer and you're my best bet for figuring out what hole she's hiding in."

"Oh, I just love holes!" Donut beamed, "Especially those new ones that are so nice and tight and have this nice pressure around you as you stay in them."

"...The fuck did I just hear?!" Bass demanded in the awkward silence that soon followed, Roll trying to look away from Donut while hiding her blush.

"It's Donut," Roll replied, "He...He just does that."

"Everyone, just shut the hell up!" Rock barked as he turned to Carolina, "What are you doing alive Carolina? You're supposed to be dead. This is impossible."

"That's a funny thing to say, for a guy who's literally a ghost," Sarge pointed out.

"Yeah, uh, actually he's not a ghost, um, he's a computer program. He gets holographically projected on our armor when he wants to talk to us."

"Seismographic computer programs? Heh heh, Caboose you say the craziest things sometimes. What an imagination on you."

"Yeah, I don't know what that first word means but it sounds the same. I will allow it."

"..." Bass looked at Roll with a raised brow.

"What? They've been trying to help him learn some stuff, but it hasn't gone well," Roll noted.

"Heh. Not surprised. This place was terrible already," Rock snorted before leaving, "Whatever. Screw you guys, I'm out of here."

"Rock!" Roll called out before sighing, "Oh, Rock..."

"Agent Carolina," Delta appeared on her shoulder.

"Delta?" Carolina asked.

"Reports of my termination have been greatly exaggerated," Delta informed, "I believe it would be best you pursue Epsilon immediately. From all of us, you would be the most optimum in getting his cooperation. You are primarily an unknown to him while the rest of us have had prior interactions to him as you have seen."

Carolina snorted, but left. Delta appeared on Donut's shoulder. He looked over at the supply closet to see York fall out of it. Tucker looked over at Roll.

"Roll, don't you dare," Tucker warned, "Yo, Bass, you may want to have some private talk with her right now, okay?"

"You're my problem!-! You've always been my problem!-! Each and every one of you is just a problem that I have to deal with on a daily basis!-! AND YOU! YOU HAVE BEEN A PROBLEM–NOTHING BUT A PAIN IN MY ASS–EVER SINCE THE DAMN LOOPS BEGAN!-!-! EVER MORE IN THIS LOOP THAN ANY DAMN OTHER!-! I WISH THAT YOU NEVER HAD TO LOOP!"

Roll winced as she remembered what had happened just a few hours ago. Outside of Blue Base, she could hear the sound of boulders being broken, but she couldn't care to get up from her bed. She... She knew it was just the issue of being Epsilon that was making Rock so mad, but... but did he have to say all that? Sure, it was annoying at times when you're Awake but someone else is there you know is Looping and they're not Awake... but still. The hiss of her door opening didn't earn a reaction from her.

"Get up," Roll didn't acknowledge Tucker. "We're going after them."

"Why? He...He doesn't want us. He doesn't want me around..."

"Roll, this is the first time anyone has ever replaced Epsilon," Tucker informed, "In fact, I don't think anyone but Epsilon could handle the stress and strain of being the Memory to so many AI Fragments. I don't know if he'll recover or not from this Loop, but Delta says that he has a better chance of this problem only being for this Loop than it sticking to him. And Delta's the smartest guy I know."

"..."

"So why! Should I! Give a! Damn about! That bastard?!" Bass grunted with each boulder he broke, Washington standing near him.

"Right now, Carolina and Rock are going up against an army of you. The only way Rock or Roll can get an opening to the copy of you that is running all those robots is if we can get everyone there and fight them off," Washington informed, "Bass, you wanted to know more about yourself this Loop, and right now...This is your best chance."

"..."

"I won't say that I know what you're going through, because frankly, I don't. But right now, I do know how it feels to feel betrayed by someone you knew, or at least...you thought you knew," Washington informed, "When we do a Baseline, Carolina..." he sighed, "When Carolina appeared, I thought it would be like back during Project Freelancer's early days before the Ranking was getting to the others. Me, being the new guy who still hasn't figured out what happened to Agent Georgia, and her the older sister figure and bit of a mentor to the new guy." he shook his head, "What a fool I was, huh? All that time she was considered 'dead' was her just obsessed with killing the Director no matter what. I tried to remind her of the good times, but she kept turning me away. It was when she threatened to kill one of the guys like she did here...I just gave up on her. I let go of the past and moved on." he turned, "Grif has a Pelican ready to take us to the Director. It'll take an hour or so to get ready." he walked off, "It's your choice. Do you want to keep holding it in, or just let it go?"

"..." Bass slammed his fist against a boulder, not breaking it.

"This is it."

"Ready to meet your maker?" Carolina asked, readying her gun.

'Yeah. This Loop's creator of me,' Rock thought, "I got your back, Carolina."

Carolina and Rock entered one of the teleporters in the abandoned structure they were in. Carolina exited before stopping, both surprised by what they saw.

"Oh no..."

"Rock, what is this?" Carolina asked.

"She kept trying... She kept trying to get him right..." Rock shivered.

"You think these things are anything like the real deal?" Carolina asked, glancing out at the large army of robotic Agent Tex/Bass clones, as one stepped forward to the front, punched its fist into its palm, and cracked its neck.

"You have no idea what kind of trouble you are in," the drone stated, giving a dark chuckle.

Carolina raised her plasma rifles, "Alright. Me first."

The army of Bass drones charged. Carolina fired her rifles at the approaching army, downing a few drones. A warning appeared in Rock's eye.

"Watch your left!"

Carolina looked to her left and dodged a drone's attack, dropping her rifles and pulling out a shotgun. She fired at an approaching drone, and leapt into the middle of the fray.

"Uh, I think I'm gonna be sick!" Rock groaned, his eyes swirling.

Carolina managed to hold her own against the drones until one of them knocked the shotgun out of her hands. She then switched to hand to hand combat, taking out more drones. She punched one of them, sending it flying into a crate. The crate was dented by the impact, and the one stacked on top of it fell to the ground. It split open, revealing its cargo of frag grenades. They spilled all over the floor, tripping two drones when they stepped on them. Carolina regained her footing and quickly looked down. She kicked a grenade up and into a approaching drone. Carolina then pulled out her grappling gun and fired at the grenade, the claws of the gun grasping it tightly. She swung the grenade into the drones like a flail, at times adding jumps and flips to further the weapon's momentum. The grenade was swung into the ground at the end of the attacks, causing it and a few other grenades to explode. A drone approached Carolina in a body rush.

"Watch out!"

The drone tackled Carolina, sending her flying and causing her to lose her grappling gun. She got up on one knee and growled.

"Could you be a little more specific?"

"Yeah, uh, sorry, Carolina, but, seeing this many ex-boyfriends while I keep getting the Alpha's memories in one room kinda has me terrified beyond the capacity for rational thought," Rock admitted, "...Don't tell anyone I just said that!"

"Well, snap out of it! I need you!" Carolina snapped as her legs started to vibrate a bit before shooting off in a teal blur.

"Need me for–WOAH!"

"Rock!"

"Right, right!"

Carolina sprinted to the end of the room, and spun around, taking out more drones.

"Carolina, I don't think I can do this much longer!"

"Just hold on!" Carolina dashed out of combat for a moment.

"Seriously! You need to slow down!"

"No!" She dashed back in and engaged the drones, "I can do this!"

"Carolina!"

Carolina charged past the drones furiously, ignoring Rock's protests. As she fought, memories began to play through her head, all about her faults and her obsession with winning. Rock kept trying to get through to her, but to no avail. Carolina charged past the drones, and was hit, sent flying into a crate.

"Come on, get up!" Rock pleaded as Carolina stirred.

Carolina looked out at the army of drones.

"He was right... I can't do this. I can't beat him," Carolina stood up, "I could never beat him."

"B-better luck next time, C-Carolina," one of the drones informed, its voice glitching as it aimed a gun at her.

Suddenly, out of nowhere, three plasma grenades stuck to three drone's heads. Carolina looked for the thrower, who was revealed to be Donut. He stood alongside Grif, York, and Sarge.

"Nine points, ya dirty bastards!" Donut taunted.

Carolina ran and rolls out of the blast. The grenades exploded, sending the drones flying. Carolina skidded to Wash's feet. Wash extended his hand.

"Get up."

"What are you doing here?" Carolina demanded as she took Wash's hand, and was hoisted to her feet with Bass's help.

"York and I told you they're not so bad once you get to know them," Wash pointed out.

"Ugh. Promise me that you'll never get this obsessed, Roll," Bass shuddered as he looked at the army of him.

"Depends," Roll replied as she readied her broom.

"You may need this, Carol," York advised as he gave her a Magnum.

"Oh. I thought this wasn't your fight," Rock noted, appearing on Roll's shoulder.

"Come on, overwhelming odds with little to no chance of success? How could we resist?" Sarge smirked.

"Best odds of all," Bass added with a grin.

"You got a problem with that, Rock?" Roll asked.

"Guys, I am an asshole, and I have been a horrible brother this Loop to you, Roll. I admit it, and I will gladly accept any and all smart-ass remarks after this is over. But I'd like to point out the fact that we're standing in a room full of crazy Freelancer robots that are ready to completely and utterly fuck our shit up."

"So... cheesy forgiveness speech later?" Tucker offered.

"Yeah, that sounds good," Bass smirked, throwing a spare body of Rock's out of his Pocket.

"Lock and load, people!" Carolina ordered, readying her Magnum.

The Reds, Wash, and Carolina readied their weapons. Tucker brought out his sword as Roll spun her broom like a bo staff. Rock and Bass readied their Busters as York summoned his Keyblades and assumed a fighting stance. Delta and Theta appeared beside Caboose, who was facing the wrong way.

"Caboose, we require you to get enraged, understand?" Delta asked.

"Okay," Caboose replied, "...Yeah, I don't remember how to do that."

"...We do," the two AI replied.

The two jumped into Caboose, who turned around to face the drones. He charged into the army, sending many of them flying. He rolled and stood up triumphantly.

"My name is Michael J. Caboose. And I..." He slammed his assault rifle into an approaching drone, "hate..." Caboose continued taking out the drones with an uppercut, kicking one into a group, and spinning around another into more, "...Fishes!"

"It's "Bass", you idiot!" Grif corrected. (21)

"That too!" Caboose agreed as he began to fire his Assault Rifle.

"Come on, everyone! Now's our chance!" Rock ordered as he started charging and firing his buster.

"For our ancestors' ancestors! Attack!" Sarge roared out as the others charged in.

Carolina was the first there, slamming a roundhouse into a drone. One tried to get her from behind, but Bass blasted its upper body to bits from a Buster shot. Thunder rumbled before a Thundaga Spell slammed into the ground, frying the circuits of the drones surrounding York. He blocked the shot of one drone with one blade while stabbing another with his other Keyblade, releasing a Fire Spell into it to melt the drone.

"Donut, look out!" Sarge warned as a drone approached Donut, causing him to whimper in fear.

"Donut, Warfstache!" Roll called.

"Oh! Yeah!" Donut nodded before quickly putting it on, "OH MY GOD! I AM SO FUCKIN' ANGRY! RAAAAAAAAAAA!" he tore the drone approaching him in two, "I AM WILFRED WARFSTACHE AND I! AM! HUNGRY FOR MEAT!"

"This is going to be a pain, won't it?" Washington shook his head as he shot the head off a drone.

A pair of drones knocked Grif down and opened up his legs. A trio of drones attempted to follow up with a piledrive into his groin, but Carolina and Roll intercepted them. The duo let go of Grif and quickly knocked Carolina back before Roll dispatched them both. Grif stood up, but another pair quickly hit him twice in the groin.

"Ow! Not again!" Grif cried out, his head slamming into York's groin.

"Gaaaah!" York cried out, dropping his Keyblades, "What the hell?!"

"Oh come on! You had to see that coming," Tucker shook his head at the two.

York recovered enough to pick up his blades. They soon rushed to rejoin the group, who were now surrounded in the middle of the room. They fended off many of the drones with gunshots, sword swings, Spells, Warfstaches, and brutal beat ups mixed with Buster shots and brooms.

"It's not working! There's too many of them and I think they're adapting to our attacks!" Simmons cried out.

"Rock, do you remember how your sister and the other AI were able to stop the Meta?" Washington asked.

"Yeah, but that was one guy. Not a hundred," Rock pointed out.

"There's only one Bass. And right now, Rock...nobody knows him like you."

"Alright, stand back everybody. This is going to get a little...personal," Rock advised, exiting his body.

His AI appeared in the middle of the circle at the size of his body. It flashed before splitting into hundreds upon hundreds of copies that quickly went into the drones. Rock swore he heard a sad guitar play as he entered a spacious metal room from an empty corridor, a slumped over copy of Bass in the middle of the room.

"Hey, there," Rock's greeting startled the Bass copy.

"Huh? Who the hell are you?" the other Bass demanded.

"You don't... you don't know me?"

"Ugh...I'm-I'm sorry, I'm just really...tired. And...I'm really tired. Um, my-my name's..." the other Bass trailed off, not sure what his name was.

"Your name is Texas. You're Forte," Rock informed.

"Right. Right, um... Forte," the copy tried the name out, "Yeah. That's me. And you're...?"

"Let's just say we... we used to be close friends through my sister."

"Oh. Okay."

"I need you to rest now, Forte."

"Oh, rest. Heh...I'd like that," Forte gave a small, silly smile in his tired state.

"I thought you might. Uh, look, I have to go now, but... you just rest, okay? Goodbye," Rock informed, starting to turn to leave.

"Weird. I don't know why, but I hate goodbyes," Forte tiredly chuckled.

"I know why," Rock uneasily replied before giving a sigh as he faded out and the room turned to white, "Goodbye."

The drones started malfunctioning and shut down. Bass frowned at the one he was fighting had collapsed before shrugging and teabagged it for a moment or two to spite the machine. Once the last drone fell over, Rock reappeared.

"Uh, you know, you could have done that before I got punched in the nuts by twenty of them at once," Grif advised.

"And forty to mine!" York added, his voice a bit squeaky still.

"Yeah, but where's the fun in that?" Roll teased.

"Nice going there, kid. I guess sometimes little fairies really do make wishes come true," Sarge noted.

"I could have told you that!" Donut beamed.

"I am not a fairy!" Rock demanded.

"What about that time you were a Shiny Sylveon?" Roll pointed out.

"...I hate you right now, you know that right?" (22)

"So... I guess our work here is done?" Simmons asked, unsure if there was any new surprises this Loop.

"There's still the director," Washington informed.

"No. What comes next..." Rock looked over at Carolina, Bass, Theta, Delta, and Roll, "...The six of us need to do alone."

Roll gave an uneasy gulp. She wasn't sure what to feel now that she was meeting this other her. She blinked before looking at Bass. He gave her a small, reassuring smile while holding his hand up, revealing her own held in it. Roll nodded before Delta appeared on her shoulder, Theta on Bass's, and Rock on Carolina's. The three walked off, heading for the Director.

"Beginning playback," the voice of FILSS was the first thing Roll heard as the six entered the dark, barren room, a lone chair with a figure gazing upon a wall, displaying a video.

"Roll, come on, stop it, put that thing down. You're gonna make me and your brother late, they're waiting for us," Bass gazed upon the reflection of who he was based upon this Loop, his copy being that of a young man who seemed to be full of life.

"Hello, Director," Carolina's greeting made them come to their senses and look at the chair, revealing a woman with her long, silver hair done in a ponytail and sunglasses over her eyes.

"Hello, Agent Carolina. Would you like to watch this file with me?" the Director asked, Roll flinching at just how much the Director sounded like her if she had a bit of a Western tone to it.

"No," Carolina replied.

"Play it again, FILSS," the Director ordered.

"Director?"

" Again !" The Director demanded, smashing her fist onto the arm of her chair.

"So, this is what you've become," Delta noted.

The Director lowered her head in sadness, "I just need to watch this. I think I have a way... a way to bring him back right this time."

"Um...B-But the authorities are hunting you now. If we found you, they will too."

"I just need a bit more time, Theta."

"No! You've had your fucking time," Rock growled as he forced the director to turn around, poking her in the chest with each sentence, "You have to answer for what you did. To the Meta, to Washington, to Carolina, to me, to Theta, to Delta, to Roll, to Bass, and to him! To Forte!"

"Hello, Epsilon. You came all this way just to see me?" the Director asked.

'Has...Has she even been eating? Bathed? Slept at all?!' Roll thought, looking at how thin her other self was now...how weak she seemed to be.

"I'm here to remember what you've done. Somebody has to!"

"Rock..." Bass began before Rock turned to him.

"Not all of us got off scot free, Bass!" Rock snapped before his body seemed to change into an exact copy of Delta, "She was Brilliant..." he then changed into Theta, a skateboard in his hand, "...and we Trusted him!" he changed into his normal self, but his blue replaced with cyan and his white with a pale blue, "BUT SHE LIED TO US. SHE TWISTED..." Roll and Bass stepped back as Rock changed into Waltz, a dark burning aura coming off him/her, "...AND TORTURED US! SHE USED US!" he changed back into what seemed to just be a literal shadow of himself, a dark fire-like aura coming off him, "Manipulated us for her own purposes! And for* what ?! For this?! This... Shadow *?!" Roll and Bass noted the echo effect his last change had as he turned back, tears welling in his eyes, "She needs to pay!"

Carolina removed her helmet, revealing her normally red hair was a mix of yellow with black highlights this Loop, and stared at the Director. The Director removed her glasses and hesitantly looked up at Carolina, revealing she had the same eyes as her. Roll winced, seeing the large bags under her eyes.

"And, don't worry, you'll see me again," Bass noticed the video was continuing to play.

Carolina continued to stare at the Director, and seemed to become sadder with every second she looked at her. She leaned down, and kissed her softly on the forehead.

"Just a bit more time," the Director tiredly pleaded, turning back to the video.

"Come on. We're leaving," Carolina ordered.

"I thought we came all this way to kill her," Rock scowled.

"Rock, remember what you learned in the memory unit? You need to let go. Your past doesn't define who you are. It just gives you the starting point for who you're going to be," Carolina advised before she turned to leave.

"Agent Carolina?" a frail hand taking her wrist made her stop.

"Yes, Director?" Carolina asked.

"Would you be so kind as to leave me your pistol?" the Director asked, Roll's eyes widening at that request.

'She...' Roll thought as Carolina removed her pistol from her holster and placed it on the Director's desk.

"Thank you, Carolina."

"Goodbye, Ma'am."

Carolina left the room, leaving just the AI Fragments and the three Loopers turned AI Fragments/AI and the Director alone.

"You were my greatest creation," the Director stated.

"I don't know what I or the other AI are, but I do know this–I'm more than just a copy of your brother and Roll is more than just a copy of you. We're better than you."

"I wasn't speaking to you five," the Director stated.

Rock snorted before turning and leaving. Slowly, the others soon followed. Only Roll stayed.

"Play it again, FILSS."

"Beginning playback."

"You're going to do this, huh?" Roll asked as the video of Forte began to play on the screen once again.

"Yes," the Director nodded, "Alpha...do you think I was ever close to getting back what I lost?"

"...I'm not sure, Director," Roll replied, "But...I think you were close. Even if Epsilon and Agent Texas are just fragments of me, it feels like they're my brother and my boyfriend respectively. So, you must have been close. ...Thank you for creating me, Dr. Roll Church."

The Director nodded as Roll left, "Thank you, FILSS. Now, I would like you to erase all our files except for this one."

" All our files? Does that include me , Director?"

"It has been a pleasure working with you, FILSS. I am sorry."

"And, you, as well, Director."

"And, before you do, please shut down all the facility systems as well. Take everything offline."

"Director, this is a sealed facility. If I shut down all the systems, life support would not..."

"Thank you, FILSS. Shut them all down. Lock me in."

"Alright. Was the project a success? Did you find what you were looking for?"

"No. No, I did not. But I believe I might have come very close. I wish... I wish I knew."

"I see."

"Perhaps the next time around."

The Director raised Carolina's pistol to her chin, as the door to her room began to close, FILSS speaking her last words, "It has been an honor, Ma'am."

The door closed and locked down, the last words escaping the room were the video's, "Don't say goodbye. I hate goodbyes."

Bass walked out and was hit with a rock. He froze for a moment before he started to tremble in anger. He let out an enraged snarl as he glared at the direction the rock came from.

"...Uh-oh," Washington gulped.

"Run!" Simmons freaked as the two ran off.

"BASTARDS!" Bass snapped as he charged after them.

"Ah! Bass!" Roll called as she ran after him, leaving just Rock and Carolina behind.

"I guess that's that," Rock noted.

"I guess it is," Carolina agreed as they watched the havoc the four running around was causing.

"Carolina, after everything we've been through, I just, um... I just want to say thanks," Rock informed.

"You're thanking me? For what?" Carolina asked.

"For showing me a different side of myself."

"Same here," Carolina agreed before shaking her head, "Ah. So we finished, huh?"

"You... You're Awake now?"

"Yeah," Carolina nodded before she smirked, seeing Grif was being used by Bass to beat up Washington and Simmons, "You know, things aren't going to get any better this Loop."

"They aren't?"

"No," Carolina shook her head, "I can take you to it."

"Show me," Rock ordered.

"Private Grif, front and center on the double!"

"Urgh, Sarge, I'm tired. Do I have to do it on the double?" Grif whined as he exited out of the small base they had made.

"Look at me, Sir! I got front and center on the triple!"

"Dag-nabit, now Ah've got two insubordinate soldiers. When Ah say double, Ah mean double ! Nice work on that, by the way, Agent York," Sarge nodded.

"Thanks," York mock-saluted.

"I will only go so far as single and a half," Grif stated.

"If these orders were hamburgers, then you'd do a double," Delta informed.

"What? Who has hamburgers? Maya Fey, prepare to die!" Grif declared, pulling his stolen weapon from the Meta from out of his Pocket.

"Th' only hamburger meat here is gonna be your face when Ah'm done with my shotgun court-martial! And don't even ask me about th' type of buns."

"That sounds like the most delicious punishment ever..." Grif sighed.

"...of all time," York added.

Over at the Blue Base, Caboose was messing with something. Tucker ran out with Roll.

"Caboose! Don't touch that, you'll break it!" Roll warned.

"Oh, no, I won't..." Something shortwired and Caboose stood up, "...I broke it... Tucker did it."

"Dude, you can't say that when I'm right here."

"Tucker said it."

"Oh, my god, shut up," Tucker groaned as Washington emerged from the base.

"Both of you shut up! And get back to work!" Washington snapped.

"What do you mean "back to work?" That implies previous work."

"I am putting my back to work," Caboose stated, earning a giggle from Roll.

"Right on it, Wash!" Roll saluted as she took her broom out.

"We'll do our best, Washington!" Theta saluted on Roll's shoulder.

Carolina looked down at the two teams. Rock appeared on Carolina's left shoulder while Bass appeared on her right shoulder.

"Seems like they're getting settled."

"Yep," Rock agreed.

"So I guess everything is finally getting back to normal."

"What passes for normal around here, sure. What can I tell ya? We're home. I mean–they're home," Bass noted.

"Can I make a suggestion? Don't say goodbye."

"Goodbye? I didn't realize I was going somewhere," Rock noted.

"I intercepted a military transmission. It seems some low level thugs have some armor and equipment that's way above their paygrade. Sounds like it might be some of the missing gear from a certain defunct military project we both know."

"Is that right?" Bass asked as he got into his suit.

"Think I'll go get it back. Hate to think about it being in the wrong hands."

"And?" Rock smirked.

"And, with all that equipment I could really use someone to help me run it. You seem uniquely qualified for the job."

"...I don't know."

"I'm in," Bass smirked, "I've been wanting to get my hands on some of the sweet upgrades this Loop has."

"I figured we could set some things right. That we helped make wrong," Carolina informed.

"That's a lot of things to make right."

"Yep. Could keep us busy for quite a while," Carolina noted.

"It would be nice to be a good guy again."

"And not a pain the arse like you have been this Loop?" Bass smirked.

"...Shut up. You're lucky Delta figured out how to cut you off from this Epsilon Effect I've got," Rock frowned, "Otherwise you'd be down there with the others."

"Rock, Bass, what you two and I were involved with this Loop... the things we helped do... I'll be honest–I don't know if we can ever get all the way back to good," Carolina shook her head, "But I think that we have a chance to do better. And if we wake up everyday and try to make things better, eventually, we might find that better is good enough."

"Good enough..." both replied.

"Good enough," Carolina nodded.

"Yeah, still, I hate to leave without saying something. They deserve to at least hear goodbye," Rock noted.

"My Baseline mother and this Loop version of my father had a saying. Did I ever tell you about my mother from Baseline or the father I had for this Loop?"

"No, I don't think you ever did," Bass chuckled, "Let's hear about your mom in Baseline."

"She wasn't around a lot when I was a kid. And when she was she could only stay a short time. Seems like she always had somewhere else to be. Something important to do. And when she left, she wouldn't say goodbye to me. Instead, she always told me, "Never say goodbye. If you don't say goodbye then you aren't really gone, you just aren't here right now."

"Your mother sounds like a smart lady," Rock noted, glancing over at Bass.

"She was, she really was. Had terrible taste in men though."

Bass chuckled at that. Rock snickered a bit, having to agree.

"Hey, Rock-Church! Bass-Texas! Come down here! We wanna show you something! Rock-Church! Bass-Texas!" Caboose called before the three suddenly disappeared, "...Church? Tex?"

"Hey, Caboose, you find them?" Roll asked.

"Nah, I didn't find them," Caboose replied.

"Well, where do you think they are?" Tucker asked.

"I don't know, somewhere. They're... just not here right now," Caboose replied.

The three walked back into Blue Base. At the top of the hill the three had been on, Rock's buster was lying on it beside Bass's buster.

'Diary Entry One-Zero-One. It's been a while since I've done one of these for you, so sorry about that. From what I've read, the last time I ever really wrote in you was the day before we found Rock was Epsilon. So...yeah. Let's, uh, let's get caught up to speed. While Rock was with us, he was...stressed to put it mildly and wanting to cause another crash just to end this Loop to put it at the worst. As the eight months he was with us in Valhalla before going into a memory unit for another nine months, he was getting all the memories of myself, Delta, Theta, and Bass once we found him in a facility (and he beat the others up),' Roll smiled a little as she typed her current Loop's diary entry before frowning a little in guilt, 'I'll admit that...that I decided to just get drunk for those nine months he and Bass were stuck in the Memory Unit, depressed about what happened. And when Rock came out, he was angrier than before and...and it wasn't good. I thought that he would never want to be in a Loop with me ever again, that he hated me and never wanted to be my brother ever again. I almost went back to the bottle... But then... I met the Reds and Blues.' she smiled a little as her memories of this Loop came to the front of her mind before she pulled up a picture of everyone, Sarge shaking hands with an elder man in a brown suit, 'This is a picture of everyone. Their Anchor, Michael J. Caboose, is such an innocent guy aside from his mental issues. When he's around, I can't help but feel mixed between annoyed with his antics and just wanting to treat him like a little brother. The Reds... their Unawake selves made me decide to not wear red for the next few Loops after this one. Agent New York AKA Foxtrot AKA York is an honorary Red along with Delta and Theta. There's another Looper, Agent North Dakota, from this Loop, but he died before he could Wake.' she hoped to meet the guy one of these Loops since Theta had a big love for the man as a father figure, 'When I first met Tucker, I thought he was a pervert that would have sex with anything... until I met Sister. Sorry, Grif, but Sister... I wanted to murder her the moment she said something.' she quickly went to the next paragraph, 'Washington has been a good second-in-command for Blue Team. Epsilon–the one of their Loop–really messed him up in the head in Baseline and I feel so bad about what happened, but he said that he's been getting over it with the help of the Reds and Blues. Sarge seems to be the 'dad' of the 'family' these Loopers have seemed to make of themselves with Caboose and Theta tied for being the 'youngest son'. It's... kinda nice. Despite how much they all act like they're not really fans of each other (though I'm pretty sure Sarge's issues with Grif are genuine), they care for one another as a real family,' she looked out at the scenery. 'Right now, we're on the Planet Chorus due to a malfunction in our ship. Caboose isn't to blame. He was with me the entire time,' she frowned a little, recalling something else. 'This Loop has truly been interesting to experience. At times, it feels more like a comedy than anything. Other times, it's been... difficult. The version of me that was made this Loop as the one who I was based off of... she lost her husband and her brother early in the Sangheili attacks before Mjolnir Armor was made standard issued. She just couldn't let go of them, eventually resulting in the Beta being made from me after my Unawake self was tortured to the point of fragmenting. I'm unsure of how she was able to create the AI Fragments from that, but the person I saw... she was broken. Not just in her heart,not just in her position, but everything about her was just... broken. I'm... I'm still shocked at that she chose to do what she did, but I guess that she felt she didn't have anything else. Well, that's enough, I guess. Until next time, Diary. L...'

BOOM

"Oh what now?!" Roll groaned, looking up from her diary entry to see a smoke cloud over at Red Base.

She walked over to see Sarge manning a tank and shooting at their base... specifically, Grif.

"What the fuck?! Why do you always shoot at me in the tank whenever we end up on Chorus?!"

"Because we never tell you we're going to renovate the base!" Simmons replied from beside the tank.

"At least this time it's not inverted," Sarge chuckled.

"Sarge, what are you doing?" Roll asked.

"Going to renovate th' base," Sarge replied, "We're dealin' with Space Pirates now, so we need t' take them on, Space Marine-style."

"Sarge, I told you that we don't have any Devil Fruits," Simmons sighed, "None of us aside from Tucker has ever been in the One Piece Loops and he replaced Zoro that Loop."

"Huh. So that explains how he can split his sword into three lightsabers," Roll noted.

"They're called 'beam katana'," Simmons corrected, "Tucker hates it when someone calls that mode of his sword that."

"He does?" Roll raised a brow.

"Eeyup. Made th' mistake a few Loops after he got that new mode fer his sword," Sarge noted, "Ah'd rather not remember. Then again, Ah had some Brain Bleach so Ah don't remember..."

"Okay. Caboose, did you agree to this?" Roll asked, the Anchor for the RvB Loop behind her.

"I got cookies and milk for it," Caboose informed.

"What kind of cookies?"

"Chocolate chip covered in chocolate and vanilla sauce."

"Yin-Yang Cookies," Simmons stated, "I tried a cookie like that in the Hub Loop and Caboose ate the entire box of them when I gave him one."

"...He's not going to go Grif and Maya Fey on us, is he?" Roll asked.

"No," Simmons replied, "Ch... er..." he looked at Caboose and then at Roll, " You grounded him."

"Sorry again."

"Okay, okay, so long as you know that you shouldn't follow Grif's lead like Maya Fey did," Roll noted.

"You should've been in the Minecraft Loop we had with her when it was involving Custom Mods," Simmons noted, "Exploding burgers, Oreo Creepers, and all sorts of weapons made from burgers and oreos were flying all about."

"How'd that happen?"

"Oh, Washington was getting sick and tired of how they were acting so he gave them an ultimatum; settle it out or he'd ask Caboose to call Yggdrasil."

"Wait, what?"

"I don't know. Ask Wash."

"I will. But first, I need that tank back."

"Aw... But Ah wasn't do..."

"Give her the damn tank already, you old fart!"

BOOM

"Fucking son of a bitch!" Grif cursed.

"Whoops. Finger slipped," Sarge's chuckle didn't assure Roll he was telling the truth.

"Yes. I made that threat, but it was an empty one. Caboose only plays checkers with the tree," Washington shrugged, "Aside from that and talking to it, he can't do a single thing to the tree. No suggestions, no requests, just checkers. Shame Maya Fey and Grif didn't know about that fact, but it was quite an enjoyable war between them."

"Dude, that still surprises me that he can play checkers with a tree."

"Well, it's part machine, so that'd be understandable," Washington noted.

"Huh?!" Roll gawked, "This is another 'It's just Caboose being Caboose' moment, isn't i–"

"Probably," Caboose confirmed.

"Hey, Caboose... Isn't this around the time you go out for a walk?" Tucker asked.

"A walk?" Caboose tilted his head.

"Freckles," Washington stated.

"Freckles?" Roll raised a brow as Caboose gasped.

"Freckles!" Caboose cheered as he ran off, "Oh boy, oh boy, oh boy, oh boy, oh boy, oh boy, oh boy, oh boy, oh boy..."

"Roll, could you go after him? Last time I reminded him about this, it... yeah, it didn't go well," Washington informed.

"Um... Okay?" Roll nodded as she ran after Caboose.

"...Should we have told her what Freckles is?" Tucker asked once Roll was gone.

"She'll figure it out," Washington replied, "In the meantime, we need to prepare for whatever Sarge makes this time."

"You know that's only when Sarge isn't Awake. Remember the time he built Bonnie?"

"Yeah," Washington nodded, "We were both awake while Caboose wasn't."

"Did he have to scream, though?" Tucker complained, "He sounds like a little kid screaming."

"..." Washington removed his helmet to give Tucker a 'Seriously?' look.

"...I'm sorry," Tucker gulped as Washington replaced his gauntlets with new ones that sparked.

"You remember the agreement we made with those four whenever we make fun of the gruesome thing that goes on in their Loop."

"Did you hear that?" Roll asked, pausing in her walk through a part of the half of the ship they were in.

"Heard what?" Caboose tilted his head.

"..." Roll shrugged before they continued walking.

"Tucker screamed it." Roll nearly fell over in surprise at that random statement.

"I forget, Caboose, just what are we looking for?" Roll asked.

"Freckles!" Caboose replied happily as they turned a corner, "Found him!"

Roll looked up... and up... and a little more up. Before them, parts of the body exposed, was a MANTIS-Class attack robot. She slowly looked over at Caboose as he pulled out a lot of tools and extra parts from his Pocket.

"Uh... Caboose? Th-This is Freckles? This is the pet you kept talking about?" Roll asked.

"Uh-huh!" Caboose beamed, "..."

"...Cab..."

"Oh! Almost forgot!" Caboose exclaimed as he took out another submachine gun from his Pocket with a USB attached to it, "Dr. Grey made this for me." he walked over to the MANTIS and plugged the gun, "Freckles! Are you sleeping?"

=NEGATIVE, CAPTAIN CABOOSE,= a squeaky voice came from the gun.

"...Did...Did you just put the AI of that Mantis into your gun?" Roll asked.

"Uh-huh! And he is awake!" Caboose cheered before running off, "I'm gonna go tell Washingtub we found him!"

"..." Roll looked at the machine and the pile of tools, "...Aw screw it. You never know when you'll need a giant robot that shoots missiles and bullets in this Loop."

The sounds of machinery proceeded.

"Well... He built something different," Tucker noted.

"Yeah," Washington agreed, "Um... Where did you...?"

"Found 'em up on that there hill," Sarge informed, "Normally, it's been a sniper rifle, but this time it was a pair o' blasters."

"Wait, what?" Tucker blinked.

"York, hand me that there screwdriver," Sarge ordered.

"Can d–wait,what are you planning to do?" York asked.

"Ah'm makin' sure everythin' is fine," Sarge snorted.

"Hey, everybody!" Caboose ran up, "We found Freckles!"

"That's good. You already fixed him up?" Washington asked.

"Um...Yeah," Caboose replied.

=GREETINGS, CAPTAIN WASHINGTON.=

"...He's in your g..." Washington began to ask.

"Probably," Caboose replied.

"..." Grif and Simmons shared a look.

"How did you...?" Grif began.

"Oh, the scary doctor lady gave me this when Epsilon-Church talked to her once," Caboose beamed, showing the USB cable.

"Of course..." Simmons facepalmed.

FWEE

"..." everyone looked at the confetti.

"...Tucker did it."

"Dude, I'm right here. You can't just blame me," Tucker shook his head.

"Men, Ah have done it," Sarge informed, standing in front of Grif, York, and Simmons while a cloaked item was beside Sarge, "It has taken me many Loops, but Ah finally figured it out."

"..."

"..."

"..."

"..."

"Well?" Grif asked.

"What?" Sarge asked.

"What did you figure out?" Grif asked.

"Dr. Wily."

"...What?" Simmons blinked twice under his helmet.

"Bassnium. Ah finally figured out how he made it. Now when Ah'm awake before Ah finish Lopez, Ah'll be buildin' him with it," Sarge informed.

"What the... But... How ?!" Grif demanded.

"Crushed Oreos, Grif. The secret to making Bassnium is crushed Oreos," Sarge informed. (23)

"You monster!" Grif choked back a sob.

"With that discovery, Ah then went a step ahead and did what he did..." with that, Sarge removed the cloak, "And made this feller."

"Is... Is that supposed to be Zero?" York gulped, looking at the tall, menacing, red being with a white demon-like mask. (24)

"Of course he's Zero! Except Ah made him based off somethin' Ah found on th' Megaman Wikia in th' last Hub Loop," Sarge informed, "Meet Zero Dos Point 0."

"...He doesn't speak Spanish, does he?" Grif asked.

"No idea. Let turn him on!" Sarge declared, "Robot, Activate. Codeword... 'Activate'."

"Go aisatsu. Zero 2.0 O kassei-ka shite itadaki arigatōgozaimasu. Watashi wa anata o shien suru tame ni nani o suru koto ga dekiru (Greetings. Thank you for activating Zero 2.0. What may I do to assist you)?" the robot questioned.

"OH COME ON!"

"WHAT THE FUCK, SARGE?!"

"SERIOUSLY!?"

"GOOGLE TRANSLATED JAPANESE?!"

"ARE YOU ADDICTED TO GOOGLE TRANSLATE OR SOMETHING, SARGE?!"

"DA FUCK, SARGE?!"

"Zero, calm them down."

"Yosh (Yeah)," Zero 2.0 nodded before grabbing Grif and using him to beat up Simmons and York.

"Oh dear me," Delta noted on Sarge's shoulder, "I really feel bad if we ever let the original Zero see this."

"He'll think of it as a compliment," Sarge waved Delta off.

"Sōzōnushi, watashi wa seijō ni watashi no nakama no heishi o ochitsuite kita. Kono jiten de watashi no tame no nin'i no ta no junjo o motte imasu ka (Creator, I have successfully calmed down my fellow soldiers. Do you have any other orders for me at this time)?" Zero 2.0 asked as he dropped the groaning Grif on York and Simmons, earning a massive pained groan from all three.

"Eeyup. Go fix that there tower over there at Blue Base," Sarge ordered.

"Watashi wa, ichido sonoyōni watashi no mottomo kenkyona kurieitā o okonaimasu (I will do so at once, my most humble creator)," Zero 2.0 bowed before walking off.

"You actually understood him this time?" Delta asked.

"Ah studied Japanese fer quite a few Loops," Sarge informed.

"Um... Sarge?" Sarge turned to Washington and Roll as they walked over, Washington asking, "Wh... What is that thing you made?"

"Zero Dos Point 0."

"...You've got to be kidding me," Roll deadpanned.

"Enope," Sarge replied, "Since Ah have some bettin' with Delta, Ah can't make Lopez Dos Point 0 fer a while. So why not make homage t' Roll and her Loop by makin' a badass version of Zero?"

"I scanned him and it said he was made of Bassnium. How did you figure out how to create Bassnium? Dad has been trying to do that every time Wily makes it and has had no luck in it! How did you figure it out?!"

"Crushed Oreos," Sarge replied.

"...Crushed Oreos ?" Washington and Roll repeated.

"Eeyup. Crushed Oreos," Sarge confirmed.

"...I... I don't even... Nope. Not going to ask," Roll shook her head, "And the Japanese?"

"Ah love Google Translate," Sarge replied.

"Of course..." Roll facepalmed, "Well, Tucker's getting sword lessons from Zero 2.0..."

" Dos Point 0," Sarge corrected.

"Whatever," Roll rolled her eyes, "But, seriously, Tucker is learning from him."

"De iki (Breathe in)..." Zero 2.0 instructed as he and Tucker went through some motions, "... Soshite ikiwohaku (and breathe out)."

"He'll be fine," Sarge chuckled.

"Who?" Washington asked.

"Him."

"Who exactly will be fine?" Roll asked.

"Him, o' course."

"Oh you've got to be fucking kidding me...!" Roll growled, readying her umbrella to whack him upside the head.

"Roll, no!" Washington held her off, "Don't kill him! We still need him!"

It was official, Roll was ticked off with everything on Chorus so far. She had just finished fixing up Freckles's old body, only for Zero 2.0 to mistake it for an enemy and destroy it. Then, they were ambushed by the strangest people in white armor and saved by a guy in black and orange armor. Now...? Now she wanted to know just why orange juice seemed to be the cure all for everything?! (25)

"Hey," Roll turned to see the new guy walking over, "Nice to meet ya. Name's Felix. You weren't at the meeting where we all were, so I decided to just come find you to introduce myself and ask just why your awesome robot speaks terrible Japanese."

"Sarge learned Japanese from Google Translate," Roll deadpanned.

"That explains it."

"How's the leg?" Roll asked.

"Good. Still can't believe orange juice worked. I thought that was just some weird shit they made up," Felix noted.

"Same here. Next time my dad's not feeling well, I'm going to have him drink that with every meal," Roll shrugged, "That is, when I get off this planet."

"Well, that's going to be hard to do," Felix noted, "The Republic of Chorus won't let you leave that easy now that they know you're here."

"I see," Roll noted, "So why are you here?"

"Me? Can't a handsome rogue such as me..." Felix began.

"Were you paid to find us?"

"...Yep," Felix replied, "Heh. You seem much different from the others. Looks like you know that everyone has their price, huh?"

"Yeah," Roll replied, "For me, it's the others." she looked out to where Caboose was talking with Zero 2.0 and holding a sombrero, "Especially Caboose. He... Even with all the shit that's been going on, he... he feels like such an innocent little kid."

"Caboose? ...He's the one who uses a gun that shoots confetti, right?" Felix asked.

"Yeah," Roll replied, "He sees me as a big sister of sorts, so I'm the one in charge of keeping an eye on him. Oh,and to make sure he takes his pills every day."

"He takes pills?"

"Once during breakfast and once with dinner," Roll replied.

"Ah," Felix nodded, "So do you know about all the stuff here?"

"Yeah. All of it was destroyed in the landing. What you see around is was all we could salvage," Roll informed, 'Except for the stuff they let me put into my Pocket.'

"Oh. I thought, you know, that there'd at least be something to help fight those guys off next time they come," Felix pointed out.

"It's fine, Felix. Sarge couldn't get Zero 2.0 to..."

" DOS POINT 0!"

"He heard that all the way in Red Base?" Roll blinked twice, "...Holy shit. He's got good hearing."

"And that is freaky," Felix pointed out.

"Agreed. Just don't get him started on the uses of cardboard cutouts. He won't stop talking," Roll informed.

"Cool, cool," Felix nodded.

"BaseBook?" Felix questioned as he looked at the screen.

"Yeah," Roll replied, "I told Simmons it'd be a bad idea since we do need this power, but he went and did it any... Huh. He made you an account, Felix."

"Wait, what?" Felix looked at the screen, "Son of a bitch." he clicked a button, "And his Friend Request is denied."

"And Sarge just posted that he's declaring a Red Team Meeting and that Blue Team sucks," Roll frowned, "...Yeah. See? This is why I will not be wearing anything red for a long while."

"Seriously?" Felix asked.

"Yeah. You know what the first things out of his mouth were to me once he learned my gender? Comments involving the stereotype of a housewife."

"Ouch," Felix winced.

"Yeah. But I showed him," Roll smirked as she held up her broom.

"...You cleaned his base?" Felix asked.

"Tucker!" Roll called.

"Yeah, Roll?" Tucker asked as he walked in…

-ONE SECOND LATER-

"Ow..." Tucker whimpered.

"..." Felix slowly poked out behind his energy shield and looked at Roll, "Yeah. I am... uh... yeah."

"Dude... She chased off the Meta with that..." Tucker groaned as Roll starting treating Tucker's bruises.

"The Meta?" Felix repeated, "I've read up on him. He was considered unstoppable but your two teams killed him."

"That was all Donut," Tucker informed, "If he puts on a pink mustache, don't be the enemy."

"...Okay?" Felix raised a brow.

"Status report!" Sarge ordered.

"Mines are all set up and buried," Grif informed.

"Zero 2.0..."

" Dos point 0."

"...and I finished setting up proximity alarms," York informed.

"I finished calculating all the signatures of everyone in this area so we cannot trip them," Delta informed.

"And I informed the Blues that the systems are all set up, but I didn't say where everything is," Simmons informed.

"Good work, Simmons. We'll outsmart that Space Pirate yet," Sarge informed, "Zero Dos Point 0, get ready fer war!"

"Hai," Zero 2.0 nodded.

"Lopez, help your baby brother get ready."

"No hablamos el mismo idioma, idiota (We don't speak the same language, idiot)," Lopez snorted.

"Donut, is everythin' packed?" Sarge ordered.

"Yes indeedy deed, Sarge!" Donut beamed, "I have everything all nice and packed up. All you need to do is shove your key into the hole, thrust it a bit just to make sure it's going in all the way, and then release!"

"...How does he not notice it?" York groaned.

"Watashi wa ē to... Watashi wa, kono koto ni yotte midasa kuriētā i... Desu (I am... um... I am disturbed by this, creator)," Zero 2.0 admitted.

"Ah'm with y'all in that boat, Zero Dos point 0, Ah'm with y'all in that boat."

"Espero que tanto mueres horriblemente y brutalmente, agradable y muriendo lentamente (I hope you both die horrifically and brutally, nice and slowly dying)," Lopez glowered.

"Aw...Thank, Lopez, Ah'm hopin' y'all will be beatin' them left and right, too," Sarge thanked, "Now let's go!"

"Okay, guys, meeting!" Washington ordered, "Roll, get Caboose!"

"Already got him!" Roll replied, using Caboose as piggyback with a fishing rod and a cupcake.

"That's pretty impressive," Felix noted.

"Took me a week to train him to do this," Roll smirked as she hopped off the Blue's back and gave him the cupcake.

"We just got word that the Reds have set up defenses. They never said what they set up, so they told us that we shouldn't leave the base to be safe," Washington informed, "So we're going to stay in the base until the next attack." a siren went off, "...And there it goes."

"Shit," Felix cursed.

"Message sent," Roll stated.

"Fire! Fire! Fire!" Sarge ordered as Red Team drove around on their latest Warthog, York sitting behind the standing Simmons, shooting their guns at the white-armored soldiers.

"Shit! They're cutting us off from Blue Base!" Simmons cursed as Grif had to turn to avoid a missile aimed at the ground before them.

"Ah hell! I lost a Teleport Cube!" Grif cursed.

"What's going on out here?!" Doc demanded as he ran out... only to be hit on the head with the cube, "Huh?" he saw the cube as it activated, "Aw sh..."

A flash of light and Doc was gone. His last thoughts were 'Again with this. I hate Teleport Cubes.'

"Daijōbudesuka (Are you okay)?"

Roll groaned as she started coming to.

"Ah, good. You got her up," Roll turned her head a bit to see Felix approaching with two figures in camo-themed armor.

"Hai," Zero 2.0 nodded.

"Good thing you got to us before that last missile," Felix noted, "You okay?"

"Wh...What happened?" Roll groaned.

"They fired a missile at Blue Base and a rock the size of a truck landed on you," Washington informed, "thank god you were in your armor and that you're a robot. Otherwise, you wouldn't be here."

"What... The others?" Roll asked.

"The Reds were all captured or killed. I don't know," Washington replied, "Zero 2.0 here destroyed the rock you were under and took you to this tunnel. Felix and I had to destroy the entrance before the Federation could follow us."

"Where's Doc?" Roll asked.

"Doc? Huh... I... um..." Washington noted, trying to think, "I don't know. I always thought he was with the Reds."

"...Have you even watched your own videos?" Roll whispered.

"Yes... But I may have skipped an episode or two..."

"Oh, you've got to be kidding me!" Roll facepalmed, "Zero 2.0, kick his ass."

"Yosh!"

"Aw shit," Washington cursed before Zero 2.0's foot met his behind.

"What was that about?" Felix asked.

"He completely forgot about Doc," Roll snorted, "Let's get going. Take us to the Rebel Leader."

"Okay... Remind me that brooms are a bad thing to let you hold," Felix noted as Roll walked over to him, her broom on her back, while she walked away from the pile of her fellow ex-Project Freelancer Simulation Troops and their troops.

"Why?" Roll asked.

"Because I don't want to end up like that," Felix replied.

"...Hey! I got hit with a broom!" Caboose just realized.

"Shut up, Caboose..." Tucker, Simmons, and Grif groaned.

"Watashi wa machibuse de sono demo no soto ni taizai suru koto o eranda koto o ureshiku omoimasu (I am glad that I chose to stay out of that demonstration on ambush)," Zero 2.0 noted, not looking up from the guns he was repairing.

"Any chance we could..." Felix began.

"Sarge welded the port shut so we can't change the language chip."

"Son of a bitch," Felix muttered, "He's a great sparring partner, but that bad Google Translate..."

"Watashitachi no supā wa sukidesuga, sore wa anata ga eruvu~isu no koe o shite iru yō ni sa rete imasen (While I do enjoy our spars, it is not like you have the voice of Elvis)," Zero 2.0 pointed out.

"Oh, you want another round?" Felix asked.

"Yosh!" Zero 2.0 stood up.

"How about you two against me?" Roll offered.

"Iie/Hell no!" the two replied.

"That's what I thought," Roll giggled.

"What are you guys doing?" Roll asked as she walked in on her fellow Loopers standing before four soldiers.

"Trying to decide who gets to be leader of our new team," Tucker replied.

"...Dude, I call in favor of Roll," Tucker stated.

"Huh?" Roll blinked.

"Seconded," Simmons quickly added.

"Excuse me?" Roll's eyes widened.

"Pi," Caboose agreed.

"Okay!" Grif agreed.

"What's happening?!" Roll freaked.

"Okay! Everyone, meet our team leader!" Tucker informed, "Any words you want to say?"

"Yes, yes I do," Roll replied, "What. The. Hell. Just. Happened?" (26)

"It's not funny, Felix!" Roll pouted as Felix slapped his knee in laughter.

"Y-You're right-t! It's HILARIOUS!" Felix laughed, "Oh, you are going to have the worst time ever!"

"...You want to make a wager then?"

"What kind?" Felix sobered quickly.

"I bet that one of the resistance members that I am going to be teaching and leading will be able to capture you by the end of the week," Roll informed, "You win: I'll give you something way cooler than the alien tech you've been paid with."

"Oh? What's that?" Felix asked.

Roll walked behind a container and walked back out...wielding a small gun.

"That's it?"

Roll smirked. Turning to an empty container, she pulled the trigger. The gun fired a black beam. The second the beam hit the container, it disintegrated in a literal instant.

"...And if you win?" Felix asked.

"You get the gun and you have to go with us to retrieve the others that were captured by the Federation of Chorus."

"Deal."

Felix shook his head as he walked with Zero 2.0, who had finished sharpening his knives for him, "Man, do I feel sorry for Roll. I mean, seriously, you won't find me leading people."

"Hai," Zero nodded, "Matte."

"Huh?" Felix stopped, "What's up?"

POW

"OW! The back of my head!" Felix exclaimed as he collapsed.

"Holy shit," Palomo blinked twice as he looked at the downed Felix, broken broom held in hand, "I actually did it."

"Told you a broom was the better choice," Roll smirked as Grif grumbled as he handed Roll a packet of Oreos while Zero 2.0 tied Felix up, "Good work, Zero 2.0."

"DOS POINT 0!"

"Seriously... the fuck?!" Tucker demanded.

"It's Sarge," Simmons and Grif replied in unison.

"At least it proves Locus didn't kill them," Roll whispered.

WHACK

"OW! The back of my neck!" Roll yelped.

"Tucker did it," Caboose informed... holding his own broom.

"Caboose, go to the corner," Roll ordered.

"Aw man~!" Caboose whined as he walked over to a corner and sat down, putting a Dunce Cap on his head once he was there.

"Anata wa bachigaina sen o motte imasu. Watashi wa sore o shūsei shimasu (You have a wire out of place. I will fix it)," Zero 2.0 informed.

"Thank you," Roll thanked.

"Hey, Roll, I've been meaning to say something," Tucker noted.

"What?" Roll asked.

"Codeword: Dirtbag," Tucker informed.

WHACK

"Fuck! My balls!" Grif squeaked as he collapsed to the side as Roll's body corrected itself.

"Tucker," Roll pouted.

"What? I wanted to see if you still had it," Tucker chuckled.

"What is going on here?!" the ten turned to see the leader of the resistance, Vanessa Kimball, approach.

"We just caught Felix, ma'am," Palomo replied, "With a broom."

"I thought you said you wouldn't capture him," Kimball looked at Roll.

"Palomo did it," Roll replied, "He's a quick learner with a broom."

"I've been on cleaning detail every day I've been in this resistance," Palomo informed.

"That explains it," Roll noted as Felix began to come to.

"Ugh...What hit me?" Felix asked, "...Did I get drunk and have sex with Mary again?"

"That was you?!" Kimball demanded, causing Felix to look around.

"Ah hell!" Felix realized, "You guys actually did it?!"

"Yep," Tucker replied, 'For once.'

"I've been making them all run the gauntlet so to say," Roll informed as she undid Felix's bindings.

"Well... A deal's a deal," Felix sighed.

"Yep. We'll be leaving in one hour," Roll ordered, tossing Felix his new gun, "And, Felix?"

"Yeah?"

Roll held her hand out, "Here's to a successful rescue operation."

"...Yeah," Felix nodded, shaking her hand.

"An hour?" Kimball asked, "But..."

"You agreed that if it was approved, you'd let me do whatever I want for this operation," Roll reminded.

"Fine," Kimball sighed, "Good luck. All of you."

"Okay, people, robot, and cyborg, let's get ready. One hour," Roll ordered.

Felix frowned as he looked at his new weapon. Sure... either way, he'd get the gun, but to be able to get the drop on him...

"Guess I underestimated them," Felix noted.

"That you did, Felix," Felix turned to Roll, "I want to make an offer with you." Felix gulped as Zero 2.0's blade was pressed against his neck, "One that you won't refuse."

"...How did you even do this so fast?" Felix asked as he looked at Grif, who had just finished disguising the now-dead Republic soldier as a snowman.

"Years of practice," Grif informed.

=Blood Gulch - One week before relocation=

"...Found him," Simmons informed, looking at a snoozing Grif amongst a puddle of water.

=Present=

"Right..." Felix slowly nodded, "And we didn't bring those four guys...why?"

"They're not ready for this," Roll replied, "Maybe with a bit more training, they would, but the sooner the better." she and Zero 2.0 turned to him as the others walked ahead, "You remember what the deal is, right?"

"Yeah yeah...Still...Why did you trust me with it?" Felix asked.

"Locus trusts you," Roll replied before she and Zero went after the others.

"..."

Roll wondered where it all went wrong. Oh yeah...This Loop happened. They managed to regroup with the missing members of their group and then everyone in the enemy army was being vaporized by something. The group ran out of the structure with Lopez carrying a shivering medic with purple coloration on her armor over his shoulders in a fireman's lift.

"If everyone wasn't dying around us, I'd want to ask just how you made this robot's armor so durable."

"Crushed Oreos," everyone replied followed by a choked sob from Grif.

"Can it, Dirtbag," Sarge ordered.

THWACK

"FUCK!" Grif squeaked.

"I hate this codeword," Roll muttered before stopping, "Ah hell."

"What?" Felix asked before a series of red lights shined on them all and a group of black-armored soldiers appeared on the higher level before them, "Shit."

"Like sheep to the pen," Locus chuckled as he appeared between two of the middle soldiers.

"Oh no," Washington groaned.

"You're ready for slaughter."

"Locus!" Tucker growled as he activated his blade.

"I advise you stand down, boy," Locus ordered.

"Here comes the monologue," Washington muttered.

"I told you, Agent Washington, I am a professional. I complete my missions at all costs. But you, and your comrades have put a blemish on my record," Locus informed, "This, is unacceptable."

"What are you talking about? You just killed the men you're working for!" Washington demanded, 'If you were working for them and not that bastard.'

Locus gave a grunt, "It appears you don't understand after all. Unfortunate. You were such a fascinating soldier, Agent Washington."

Locus raised his sniper rifle while Tucker got ready to throw his grenade. Felix darted in front of Washington and raised his Hardlight Shield just as Locus fired.

"Tucker, grenade!" Roll ordered.

"Here!" Tucker tossed it to Roll.

Roll caught it and tossed it to Felix, "Felix!"

"Got it!" Felix called before catching it, "..." looking it over, he began to chuckle, "Ah, that was close! Nice throw, Tucker! You too, Roll!"

"Felix?" Tucker questioned, already knowing what was happening.

"How many times have I jumped in front of a bullet for you, Wash? Three? Those are some pretty great reflexes, huh? Most people would have to plan that sort of thing."

"Felix, what are you doing?" Roll asked.

"Just helping out an old acquaintance," Felix replied as he looked up at Locus, "You missed a spot."

"Are you done?" Locus demanded.

"Not even close," Felix replied before turning to them.

"Dude! Not cool!" York frowned.

"This doesn't make sense! That's Locus, your enemy!" Tucker acted.

"Riiight, and I'm the charismatic mercenary with a gruff exterior, but a heart of gold. A little too romantic, don't you think?"

"But the guy fucking shot you!" Simmons pointed out.

"Yeah, funny how an act of sacrifice like that buys you so much trust. And so much information."

"But you're supposed to hate each other!" Simmons pointed out.

"Most likely, they do hate one another," Delta noted.

"Got that right. After all, you should never mix friends with business."

"Wrap it up," Locus growled.

"But we just work so well together," Felix ignored.

"You dirty liar!" Sarge growled.

"Hey, whoa whoa whoa. I never actually lied to you idiots, okay? Well, except for once," Felix chuckled, "'You're some of the galaxy's greatest soldiers!'" he huffed, "Now that couldn't be farther from the truth. But, you know, it did make you the perfect candidates to lead the people of Chorus."

"Stop boasting and let me kill them. We have a job to do," Locus demanded.

"Ooh, that's right, he doesn't like you guys. He actually thinks there might be a few fighters among you. Ha! Told you he's crazy," Felix went on.

"But why? Why the capture, why make us part of this war?" York demanded.

"Well, you see-"

" FELIX!" Locus roared.

"No!" Felix turned to glare up at Locus, "I've had to put up with these morons every day, so you let me have this," Felix turned back to Washington, "You see, someone, somewhere, out in our galaxy, has their eye set on this planet. The only problem, is the inhabitants. Now, if it were up to me, I'd just nuke this place from orbit. But our employer, has other ideas."

'Control...' Tucker thought, 'They better get that extension up sooner than later. I want to kill that ass.'

"We have to play this thing carefully, you understand? If an entire planet dies overnight, well, people ask questions. But if you stumble onto this rock and find that the settlers killed each other, well, that's just a tragedy!" Felix snorted.

"It was you. You started this war!" Roll accused.

"ERT! Wronng!" Felix buzzed, "These people hated each other way before our operation ever showed up, we just had to keep the hate train a-goin'. And let me tell you, you guys have helped so much." he gave a dry chuckle before coldly asking, "Does it hurt? Knowing just how much death you've brought to this planet?"

"Enough!" everyone looked up at the enraged Locus, "How many times must I tell you, if you want to make the victim suffer, you do it quickly, and efficiently. There will be no rescue for you. You will die here, today , along with the rest. No one will find your bodies, no one will know the truth, and no one is going to stop us from killing every last person on this planet !"

"You got that right!" Felix chuckled, "Oh, and by the way..." Felix went on, "...Five Mississippi."

"What?" Locus asked before Felix threw the grenade at Locus, the pin off.

BOOM

"Holy shit!" Tucker exclaimed as he watched the Space Pirates lose their guns, Grif quickly grabbing one.

"Mine, bitches!" Grif cackled.

"FELIX!" Locus snarled as the smoke cleared.

"Consider that my resignation from Charon Industries!" Felix declared, "Oh, and tell Control...'Hi, Malcolm'."

"That's new," one of the Space Pirates noted as she and another jumped down, their armor color shifting into a familiar pair of colors.

"Teleport away!" Bass declared, throwing a Future Cube on the floor and causing them to vanish in a flash of orange light.

Locus picked up one of the Space Pirates by his throat, "Call Control... NOW !"

A flash of light shined and everyone tumbled away from each other in the canyon-like area.

"Ugh... What just happened and why did it hurt?" Grif moaned.

"Ugh..." Felix stumbled over to move his head behind a rock, removed his helmet, and emptied his rations, "I hate those things...!"

"I think my insides were just outside," Caboose noted.

"Ugh, is everyone okay?" Washington groaned.

"You know, I never thought I'd be so glad to see you idiots again," Carolina joked, "Though... Why did Felix switch sides?"

"The lady and her friends are persuasive," Felix replied.

"Arigatou," Zero 2.0 informed.

"...Why is my baby brother here? And who hit him with the ugly stick?" Bass asked.

"Fuck you, asshole," Zero stated in perfect English.

"What the?!" Grif exclaimed.

"Nani?" Zero 2.0 looked at Grif.

"..." Bass facepalmed before pulling Zero 2.0 into a headlock and whispered, "How long have you been awake?"

"A week now," Zero quietly shrugged, "Been using the Google Translate Japanese to insult everyone. Some even think I'm having a completely different conversation. So what's going on here?"

"War, that's what," Bass muttered.

"Glad t' see y'all are okay," Sarge noted, "Carolina, Bass."

"That's not all!" Rock informed as he appeared next to Bass, "Miss me, Assholes? 'Cause so far, I love this planet."

"You fucks!" Roll snapped, throwing her gun away and whipping her broom out.

"Shit! Book it, man!" Rock freaked before the two ran off, Roll giving chase.

"I'm booking it! I'm booking it!" Bass freaked as he ran off, dragging Zero behind him.

"Why are you dragging me with you?!" Zero demanded.

"Sacrifice!" both shouted as Bass punted Zero at Roll.

THWACK

"...That girl scares me more than anyone I have ever met. Even the Insurrection wouldn't be able to scare me more," Felix stated as he looked at the Zero-shaped hole in the titanium wall embedded in the wall nearby.

"Well, there goes that question," Sarge snorted.

"Wait, so this means..." Tucker's eyes widened, "We need to get to the Rebel base... now ."

"Good luck with that," Felix snorted, "Most likely, the Space Pirates are already there, preparing to wipe them out the moment we get there. And if you want to send the message to everyone, I have a key card to shut down the communications tower."

"...Huddle," Carolina ordered.

"Oh, who's the purple girl?" Felix asked.

"That's Dr. Grey. She's like Doc... only far better," Tucker shrugged before going into the red and blue huddle.

"..." Felix looked at Dr. Grey, "...That is one fine ass."

"I know how to vivisect you and turn you into a female," Dr. Grey warned.

"Noted...and yet aroused."

=I SEE...SO FELIX HAS ABANDONED US. AN UNFORTUNATE SITUATION, I SUPPOSE,= Control noted.

"Sir, he knows all our codes, all the locations of our bases and the jamming stations," Locus informed, "We need to immediately reset all the security codes before..."

=Too late, Locus~= Locus growled as the image of Felix appeared by the screen Control was using before waving =Hi~=

=AH, FELIX. I'M QUITE DISAPPOINTED WITH YOU. TO THINK THAT YOU WOULD ABANDON EVERYTHING YOU'VE DONE OVER THE LAST SEVEN YEARS.=

=Aw stuff it, Malcom Hardgrove,= Felix snorted.

=...= the screen flickered before changing into the image of the man. =I must say that you surprise me, Felix. However did you figure it out?=

=Wasn't all that hard when you've got five AI that are interconnected,= Felix shrugged.

=Five AI?=

=Sup?= Rock greeted as he, Roll, Bass, Delta, and Theta appeared on Felix's head and shoulders.

=Are you seriously standing on my head?= Felix demanded.

=Hey! I'll have you know that I am the best! I bet if there were any aliens here, they'd be rapping out how I am the best while riding a pimped out ride or playing basketball.=

=...= Delta looked away from Rock, not wanting to inform him that that particular incident had happened more than once in the Loops he'd been awake in involving Epsilon and a group of aliens.

"Focus," Washington ordered.

"Yeah, yeah, Captain Grump-ass," Felix waved him off, "Anyways, just to let you know, I already made contact with UNSC. As of now, you are a wanted man, Malcom," Felix informed, "I'm getting a lighter sentence since I gave them all the info."

"We also got in touch with a friend o' ours," Sarge informed, "Y'all might remember him from th' picture in th' paper."

"Technically, it's a computer paper," Rock corrected as Bass showed a screen, showing a news article where Hardgrove was shaking Carolina's hand with the Reds and Blues standing near...and Petty Officer Master Chief shaking hands with Roll and Sarge.

'Thank goodness he's Awake,' Roll thought.

"I've got to admit: you guys knowing Master Chief really got me worried," Felix admitted, "I mean, if you were able to disable even one of these towers, you could've sent a signal straight to him and there goes all the work."

=Felix!= Locus growled =You dare...?=

"Hey, I'd rather not die due to being impaled by a broom," Felix snorted before hearing a Wilhelm Scream, "Really, Zero?"

" DOS POINT 0!" Sarge snapped.

Zero shrugged as he tossed the latest of the dismembered Space Pirates into the waters below.

"You really should've contacted him sooner," Felix chuckled, "Now...all your plans are done for."

=Truly, I was not expecting you to do this,= Hardgrove noted with a frown =It seems there is no other choice: We go to war.=

"Riiight...See, here's the thing; this is being shown live to every single person on Chorus," Tucker smirked.

"Say 'Hi' to Planet Chorus, Malcom Hardgrove," Rock chuckled, "By the way, thanks so much for all the free tech you've been reverse engineering=

=So you are the one who's been stealing all the tech from my bases.=

"Well...Me, Bass, and Carolina= Rock shrugged.

"Hey, we were just hoping to read you a letter," Washington informed.

"It's jest a little somethin' we put together for ya. Considerin' we'll probably be seein' a lot of each other over th' next few weeks," Sarge chuckled.

"Take it away, girls," Tucker offered to Carolina, Dr. Grey, and Roll.

"Ahem...'Dear Chairman; It has come to our attention that you have declared war on the planet Chorus," Carolina began as Roll went into her body.

"We regret to inform you that this is a really shitty idea. Not only have you managed to annoy the people that you failed to kill, time and time again, you've also found a way to piss off an entire planet ," Roll continued.

"Now we may not have the best equipment and we might not be the best fighters, but as you're aware, we've been fighting for a very long time," Dr. Grey added, "And now that we're not fighting each other, we're more than happy to dedicate all of our time to fighting you."

"So dear Chairman , to you and your idiotic mercenaries, we would like to say: bring it on, motherfuckers!" Roll ordered, "We're not going anywhere."

"From your friends, the incredibly badass and sexually attractive, Red and Blue soldiers of Project Freelancer. PS: Suck our balls," Rock added before the connection dropped.

"...Did you really say that?" Roll giggled once the connection was dropped.

"What? I thought it'd be cool," Rock frowned.

"I might as well go make sure that those two meet up," Felix noted as he walked off, "Coming, hot-ass?"

"Oh, you just earned yourself a vivisection."

"Whoa," Felix chuckled before he ran off, Dr. Grey following with a scalpel in each hand.

"So what happens now?" Bass asked as he went into his body.

"Well, we've got about three days before our Loop ends, give or take a day," Tucker shrugged, "...Capture the Flag?"

"No," the Reds, Roll, Wash, Rock, Carolina, Bass, and York instantly replied.

"And this is your sister. Her name is Roll," were the words Roll Awoke to.

'Dad...' Roll thought with a smile forming on her lips, 'I really missed hearing that voice.'

Roll sat up and blinked a few times. She saw Rock, who gave a small wink at her and earning a subtle nod from her, their father, and a young man in blue military uniform.

"I'll give you three some time to talk," Dr. Light informed as he walked out of the room.

"...I'd like to say in advance that I am sorry if Caboose ever shot you," was the first thing that came out of the man's mouth, causing both to look at him.

"Are you...?" Roll's eyes widened.

"My name is Leonard Church, or rather, Church Light this Loop," the man informed, "I'm also Epsilon, Delta, little Theta, Omega, and Sigma. But you guys can call me either 'The Alpha' or 'Church.'" he looked over at Rock, "How you feeling, kid?"

"Good. I... I don't remember a lot before my time on Chorus and hanging out with just Bass and Carolina, though," Rock admitted.

"Ah. Well, I got a call from your Admin before I came in here. Had to disguise it as a call from my commanding officer this Loop," Church informed, "Turns out that he and my Admin, whoever the guy or girl or it is, made a filter of sorts for people who end up as Epsilon. You don't remember the memories of Loopers who end up as the other AI." he then whispered, "You made sure to write down some good blackmail just in case something like this happened?" (27)

"Yep," Rock chuckled.

"Good," Church chuckled, "Epsilon has a large folder himself on embarrassing secrets other Loopers have when they manage to survive as me forgetting not to get close to him."

"What are you talking about?" Roll frowned.

"Nothing!" both replied, standing at attention.

"Wait, why did you do that?" Rock asked as he looked at Church.

"When your ex-girlfriend/AI Fragment can kick your ass in an argument, you learn to listen to women," Church informed, "Now then..." reaching into his Pocket, he took out a pair of badges shaped like the symbol for Alpha and the symbol for Epsilon, "In honor of you surviving a Loop as me and as Epsilon, I award you both the Alpha Emblem and the Epsilon Emblem respectively," he gave the badges to them and saluted them, "Congratulations."

"Thank you," Rock nodded.

"Wait... Are you replacing Blues?" Roll asked.

"Yeah. Unlike him, I went with the transplant of power sources," Church shrugged, "I really wanted to meet the two who are considered honorary little brother and little sister to everyone aside from Sarge."

"Sarge?"

"What does he see us as?"

"Honorary son and daughter," Church replied before he noticed how the two shuddered a bit, "Yeah...We did that too when he got drunk and admitted that he saw us as the sons and daughters... and Grif... that he always wanted after the war ends. But still..." he patted their shoulders, "What you two did was a good thing. You gave Caboose comfort that I might not always be there and that he can deal with it."

"He thinks I'm a female you," Roll deadpanned.

"Oh, he figured that out a few minutes after we talked once he Woke up a few Loops back," Church chuckled, "Now then, I believe a certain lady with killer broom skills is in need of some non-red clothes."

"You got that right," Roll frowned as she looked at her red dress before taking her Hogwarts wand out and tapped the red fabric, turning it into the same shade of blue she had worn in the RvB Loop.

"Okay... I was going to buy you some outfits and we'd go for a pretzel or two at the mall, but that works as well," Church shrugged.

"...I think I do remember one thing aside from my time on Chorus," Rock noted before smirking, "How good are you at building copies of those aliens from your Baseline?"

"I have some spares Lopez built," Church shrugged with a smirk, "They're all programmed in how to drive, rap, dance, and play basketball."

"...Awesome," Rock grinned. (28)

Roll rolled her eyes with a small smile. At least now she'd get to know this 'Church" everyone mentioned in the Loop. Looking down at her new medal, she made a mental note to get some polish for it. She was not going to forget that Loop, not for a long, long time.

Compiler's Commentary:

1) I'm trying to think of context where this sentence wouldn't sound disturbing and I'm not succeeding.

2) Get used to that feeling Roll. This branch is like that.

3) Pinkie Pie logic is one thing, but Caboose just flat hurts my brain.

4) Does anyone else need a flowchart yet?

5) Oh, there's a nasty fused variant Loop waiting to happen...

6) Do recall that Roll was originally a housekeeping model. Cleanliness is something she takes pride in.

7) She actually ups this to a hundred at some point according to a snip to be compiled later.

8) Zero was either very relieved or extremely paranoid that Loop.

9) Guinness Book of World Records notes a natural bra size equivalent to a 48V-cup bra (not manufactured anywhere). No, I kid you not. Also, Roll is politely not mentioning that her father makes her robo-bust adjustable when she's still a robot in those Loops.

10) Rock is not a fan of Jarate. Frankly, neither is anyone else who gets hit with it.

11) Please note that Rock isn't feeling quite himself due to some of the unique circumstances involved in replacing Epsilon, including but not limited to the very, very , clear memories of torture and all that. Kindly ignore any instances where he seems out of character as resulting from this state and enjoy the ride.

12) Does anyone other than me keep looking for Proto Man every time the Blues are mentioned in this?

13) Well, this went pear-shaped fast.

14) ...How do you even pronounce '0.o'?

15) GammaTron: SK. Simmons Kong! SK. Simmons Kong is here!

16) How the heck is there anything still intact about Grif's crotch at this point?

17) I don't even want to know...

18) To clarify: Bass is casual with swearing anywhere. It's Rock swearing that he's not used to.

19) GammaTron: You also develop a phobia to mannequins and things like mannequins.

20) If there's one big chink in Roll's armor it's that she doesn't take the loss of those she cares for well at all.

21) Bass's name is pronounced like 'base', not like the fish. Bass is not a fish. Wow it's been a long time since I thought of that particular fanfic...

22) Rock actually enjoyed being a Sylveon. It was dealing with Team Wily on a regular basis that he doesn't like being reminded about.

23) Well, it is when Red vs Blue physics is involved.

24) GammaTron: Yes, I went with the design for ZeroEXE. I just thought it'd be interesting for a later Loop if Roll were to ever meet the actual ZeroEXE to mistake him for Zero Dos Point 0.

25) RvB chemistry of course.

26) You only ask that now, Roll? Honestly, I thought RvB was 'What the Hell Just Happened?: The Web Series'.

27) Clarification reminder: Rock and Roll are Joint Anchors (i.e. not bound to each other) who can either serve the role of Anchor for an iteration. While they are often Awake together, they aren't always. Apparently Rock had a couple of Loops by himself after RvB before this one was arranged. I'm just going to guess that Heph and 'mystery RvB Admin' wanted to double-check that the Epsilon memory filter was working properly.

28) Not entirely sure what exactly this resulted in, but I'm told the music video was 'wicked sick'.

Mega Loops 17

Mega Loops 17

17.√-1 (Gamerex27)

Rock was no stranger to Loops where people replaced his friends, family, or even enemies. Eggman replacing Dr. Wily, Heimskr from the Elder Scrolls replacing Reverend Dark, Autochthon replacing Auto, Aigis replacing Roll...

But they had never been this...confusing. Until now.

"He's Albert Wily," One of the women said, grabbing the Unawake man by the arm.

"He's Booker DeWitt," said an identical woman in different clothing, grabbing him by the other arm.

"No," said the ex-Pinkerton agent, horrified realization dawning in his voice. "I'm both ."

And then the horde of identical women pushed Booker DeWitt beneath the river, holding him down in spite of his struggles. Eventually, bubbles stopped floating to the surface, and he ceased struggling. One by one, the Elizabeths faded from existence, fading out like a bad Photoshop effect. Eventually, all that was left in the baptism site was one final Elizabeth, collapsed into a quantum superposition, and two very, very confused robots.

"I...I..." Roll struggled to find the words, her vocal processor turning on and off as she tried to understand what she had just witnessed.

Rock was only slightly more eloquent. "What the scrap just happened?!"

Elizabeth sighed, trudging out of the stream and sitting on the edge of the water, her feet dangling into the river. "It took me a while to understand it too."

From her Subspace Pocket, she withdrew a complex chart. From what the Light siblings could tell, the lines represented different timelines, branching out from a single common point, labeled as "The Baptism".

"Basically," Elizabeth explained, "in one set of timelines, Booker refuses to get baptized, and spends a good chunk of his life wallowing in his own guilt. In another set, Booker takes the baptism, and thinks it absolves him of all his guilt in putting down the New York World Fair's robot rebellion."

According to Roll's Loop memories, the World Fairs kept going long past the point where they stopped in baseline, and expanded to include inventions such as the first primitive robots. When they began showing signs of sapience in their New York location, the Pinkerton Guard was called in to eliminate them.

"He then decides to build his own flying utopia to escape the "sins" of the people below. Usually, it's for religious reasons, but this time it was to make an industrial utopia where progress was the name of the game. Of course, enslaving and tormenting all the robots who lived there never stuck them as the least bit hypocritical."

"Did you have to kill him?" Rock frowned, clearly upset at this turn of events. "I always try to rescue Wily, no matter what he's done. Even though he was worse than I've ever seen this time–what with building millions of robotic slaves and making a whole religion that demonizes them–I try my best to give him a second chance. Are you sure there was no other way to stop him?"

"If there is, I haven't found it yet," Elizabeth replied. "Booker–the Awake one–and I have tried to find other ways. Chasing away or killing the preacher, using a Tear to bring in storms to disrupt the ceremony, sucking all the water out of the lake...Whatever we do, he always finds another place to get baptized, and the split always happens. Constants and variables." She crossed her arms. "No matter what we try to change in the different timelines, Comstock always finds a way to get his baptism, or some other way to "cleanse" himself of his sins. The only way to stop it is to break the branching point, by killing him before he can make the choice."

"So, what happens to Columbia now?" Roll asked. "Now that Wily is gone, does that mean everything he did never happened?"

"For the most part. There are some variant timelines–Comstock, or this time, Wily, goes through something traumatic and goes back to being Booker again to escape his guilt, usually." Elizabeth looked behind the two robots, at something only she could see. "And that Wily is in another city right now." The transdimensional woman stood up, opening a rip in reality with a single gesture. "Which means right now, there's a little girl that needs saving, and a timeline we need to fulfill. If I don't make sure that... that man gets what he needs, things end even worse for Rapture. I'd ask if you want to come along. but something tells me you'd do more good back here."

Rock nodded. "Yeah. Someone's got to rebuild that city Columbia crashed in."

"And maybe those robots who survived the crash would listen to us better than the human law enforcement agencies," Roll added.

"Right, then." Elizabeth looked through the Tear. On the other end of the hole in space-time was an empty alleyway, a window overlooking the sea beyond, and a familiar robot wearing shades lying deactivated in the corner.

"So that's where he's been this whole Loop," Rock noted. "He should be fine on his own there. As long as you can turn him back on, I mean."

7.7.7 (continued - Hubris Plus)

Pitchblende Part 6: The Code From Out of Space

"Huh," Robo mused, tapping a latex coated finger against the glass sphere. They'd managed to convince him to get an upgrade after his arm had gotten blown off, complete with copy chip and mega buster. His long tapering arms made the device look more like a rifle or bazooka when deployed, but otherwise didn't change his design too much. He'd still flat out refused to start calling himself Mega Robo "Is the skull pattern naturally occurring, or did Wily add that?"

"Could you maybe not poke at the evil energy?" Roll groused.

"Okay, one: You guys aren't allowed to make fun of the term action scientist anymore. Evil energy is much sillier. And two: I'm a scientist, poking at weird things is part of the territory."

"Really? Because you mostly seem to shoot at it."

"Shooting is just poking at range," Robo defended. "Besides, I think I know what I'm doing with this one. It's reading almost exactly like an Odic perturbation I sometimes find in my office."

"You find evil energy just floating around your office?" Rock asked, blinking.

"Odic perturbation," he corrected. "The result of Thomas Edison accidentally scattering his consciousness across the planet during an attempt to harness the earth's Odic field and acquire immortality. I'm wondering if this stuff is the result of a similar attempt on a cosmic scale."

"Plausible," Rock stated after a moment, cupping his chin in thought. "Even Duo isn't sure where it actually comes from most Loops."

"Guys," Roll scolded. "World in jeopardy."

"Right, right, let's just move on so I can get back to overcharging the military for overpowered com units." He weathered their deadpan stares for a moment. "And stopping Wily. We should probably also stop Wily."

Rock and Roll stepped past one another, high fiving as they went and exchanging copy chip data. With a practiced motion, Rock continued on to bump Robo's fist... And they both froze.

"Infinity minus one error," Robo noted, staring down at his replacement arm. " Horsefeathers ." He pulled a plasma torch from his Pocket and swept it across his elbow until the limb came off and turned to Rock. "We need to move quick, before-"

"Too late," Rock groaned, clutching the sides of his head. "My copy chip is–UHG!–integrated. It's already in here."

"What's going on?!" Roll shouted, hovering just to one side. On the ground, Robo's arm sprouted a tentacle.

"The Shadow must have hitched a ride on the weapon data," Robo answered. "When we combined it..."

"Yeah, but he'll be fine, right? We've got the best firewalls ever conceived of. We're occlumens for Tesla's sake!" The pair put a great deal of effort into making it hard to get into their heads. With Wily's fondness for trojans, it was a requirement.

"And if it were trying to get at his mind, that would work," Robo said as he took a step back. Rock fell to his knees. "But it's just skipping that to get to the hardware. Direct physical control of peripheral circuitry."

"What do we do? How do we fix this?!"

Rock's fingers relaxed and slid away from his helmet, leaving behind dents. His head remained downcast.

"Same as always. We go in, we take it down." He flexed the fingers on his remaining hand.

"Roh," the Blue Bomber wheezed.

"How do you know that'll work? We're the last ones, after this there's–"

"BOOOOOOH!" The machine that had been Rock roared, throwing his head back. A narrow blue tongue lolled out of a too-wide mouth studded with mismatched teeth. His eyes had gone yellow with rectangular pupils.

"We try," Robo told her as he leaped back from a sickly purple ball of plasma. "Because we can't not ."

Roll looked between him and her transformed brother for a moment. It had been a long time since one of them had gone down when they were both Awake.

And she decided it would be a long time yet. She gave Robo a firm nod.

"Good. Now I just have to defeat Mega Man and claw open a portal through him and into an eldritch abomination." He turned to lead with his left side and held his remaining arm across his body. "One handed. This is gonna go great."

"Whiii-liii," The Shadow-Rock rasped. It offered them a toothy grin before leaping back and vanishing into a beam of teleportation.

"Oooor not. That's a new one."

"SPLAG!"

"Oh no," Robo noted as they turned to see the monstrosity that had grown out of his discarded arm. "This is much better."

The thing was ten feet tall and what had been his forearm had split into a long beak studded with teeth. Five spindly blue legs held the thing aloft. A single gigantic eye spun wildly in the center of the downward facing palm.

"Little help here?!" He called as he ducked a wild bite.

"Give me a minute!" Roll shouted back, one finger to the side of her head to signal she was making a call.

"You've got the B-Man," the other end answered.

"...B-Man? Really?"

"I'm... Just gonna go ahead and never use that again. Wait... Mega Woman?" Bass asked, "how did you get this frequency?"

"That's not important," she told him, peppering the monster with Buster fire. "Did my brother just teleport to your base?"

"Yeah, got 'im on the feeds now. He doesn't look so great."

"Okay, Bass, listen carefully." She took a deep breath. "I need you to stop Mega Man from reaching Wily. At all costs."

There was a long beat of silence over the line.

"I like this plan. I'm excited to be a part of it."

ELSEWHILE

Rock, Roll, Robo and Elec Man tumbled out of the rip in un-space, the hole full of reality snapping shut behind them. What they landed on was something of a mystery, as it was the exact same shade of perfect white that seemed to radiate from every cubic inch of the place.

"Dad?!" Roll shot up and looked frantically around the vacant expanse. There was nothing as far as the eye could see. "Where is he?"

"Where are we for that matter?" Elec Man asked as he picked himself up.

"Those questions are irrelevant for reasons you don't have the math to understand," Robo told them. He unslung the bag from his back and set it on the ground. Opening it up, he took out a heavy piece of machinery covered in dials, readouts, and loose cables. "They'll be even more irrelevant once we crack this sucker open."

"Is that a bomb?" Rock asked carefully. Robo had told them plenty of stories where the finale was 'and then there was an explosion, but I was the only one tough enough to live through it'.

"Kinda-sorta? It does interesting things to space that result in something very much like an explosion," he told them as he fiddled with a dial.

"Wanna tell me how many pieces I'll be in at the end of this adventure?" Elec Man groaned, head in his hands.

"I said like an explosion. This is the MK XII, it should drop us right back when and where we came from at very nearly the same velocity we left at."

"As opposed to..." Roll prompted.

"The MK II once punched me through a–"

"–Horrible gooey mess," an identical voice interrupted.

"That's somehow worse and better than I expected at the same time," Roll noted.

"I was going to say parking garage," Robo answered.

"I was talking about the giant hand monster," a second Robo said. "Did you really have to feed it crash bombs?"

The group whirled around to find a pair of robots climbing out of a heap of purplish slime.

"You wanted it to stop moving," the smaller robot answered, hand turning into a water nozzle and hosing them down. "I made it stop moving."

"Ummmmm..." Rock prompted.

"We're from the future," the notably lopsided Robo answered just as Roll finished clearing the gunk off her helmet.

She immediately found a pair of Mega Busters targeting her head.

"Actual future, actual future!" She shouted, throwing her hands up in front of her face.

Rock dropped his arm a fraction while Roll held hers steady. "How do we know–"

The Robo that had arrived with them slapped both their barrels down. "What did I just say about having a little dignity if you met yourselves?"

"Sorry," Roll said sheepishly, reforming her hand.

"Eh, not like I didn't do the same," her counterpart answered with a shrug.

"So," Elec Man began with a grin. "Just off-hand, how badly did you get disarmed?"

"You're hilarious. Hold that thought," the elder Robo stepped between Rock and Elec Man. "You're here, and you're here , so that means..." He plunged his arm into nothing and a moment later dragged through another Robo in a flight suit, who was himself dragging through a second Mega Man.

"Oh, great," the electric master's grin faded and he threw his hands in the air. "Now there's three of him!"

"Is that the last of us," the youngest Rock asked. "Or is this going to get silly?"

The future copies of Rock and Roll exchanged glances before deadpanning "Yes."

"Right," the youngest Robo began. "I guess this means I can't pull off the detonation on my own?"

"Wily did something to its structure," the eldest agreed. "We need to do a complete recalibration."

"I'd say that's impossible, but–"

"It's Wily," all four Rock and Rolls chorused.

"And this time we don't have thirty years to take measurements," the flight suited Robo added. "So we'll need to see his equipment."

"Or, more accurately, you will," one arm pointed to the youngest iterations of Rock, Roll, and Robo present. "The rest of us will stay here and calibrate the bomb according to the readings you're going to take. If we time it right–"

"Which we will," Mega Woman Sr. assured them.

"–We'll set it off the instant you have the numbers."

"...What if you're early?" Rock asked. "Aren't paradoxes bad news?"

"They're also impossible," Robo told him. "At least for this. This isn't happening multiple times, it's one event from multiple perspectives."

"So where's this equipment?" The younger Roll asked. "Where's Wily holed up during all of this? Where's Dr Light?"

"Or are those questions still irrelevant?" Rock crossed his arms.

"They are," the flight suited Robo told them, waving for them to follow as he somehow stepped around the featureless expanse. "But they're irrelevant in useful ways."

Joining him, and losing sight of the others in the process, the youngest trio found themselves looking at more endless white, run through with hundreds of blue crags and tendrils. The Shadow's anatomy formed a surreal landscape, robots in various stages of infection marching through it. Up and down didn't seem to matter, the alien terrain twisting every which way and the machines moving along it with no regard for hypothetical gravity.

In the distance was a massive Skull Castle, the edifice's typical toothy maw replaced by a swarm of curling tentacles.

"You're going to need this," he went on, unbuckling his holster and handing it to his younger self.

"Don't you have those in your Pocket?" Roll asked, eying the snub nosed revolver.

"No pockets," Robo stated sternly as buckled the ammo belt. "This thing is trying to eat the universe."

"And subspace pockets would just be a snack for it," Rock finished, nodding to himself.

"Got it in one. That's how I lost the ZSAD Mk II, by the way."

"So now what?"

"Now," Robo finished checking his gun's chambers and snapped it shut again. "It's business as usual."

Rock had stopped struggling once he'd registered the teleport. He hadn't given up, but with his family out of danger he could afford to be patient and pick his moment. It had been a long time since anything had managed to forcibly override any of his processes, but he remembered the value of getting them to lower their guards.

Then again, he wasn't sure if the Shadow was smart enough to be tricked. Most of his senses were muffled, as though their wiring had been corroded, but the impressions he got were of a wild animal, leaping from target to target without strategy. Any damage was quickly filled in by the Shadow's own flesh, while his opponents found themselves smashed into walls or torn open by vicious claws. Rarely, it would remember he had weapons.

Further contemplation was set aside as his body was clotheslined, its mad dash turning into a wild tumble. He found his vision briefly restored as he turned to snarl at the interloper.

"Hey, Mega-Munchkin," Bass told him, leaning casually against the door frame. "Your sister said you'd be stopping by."

Silently, Rock wished his old rival luck.

"She says hi," he added, arm transforming and charging.

"Albert, please," Thomas Light implored his former colleague. He was sitting in the center of his hemispherical cage, trying to stay as far as possible from the slimy bars. "You can't possibly believe you can control this creature."

"We're scientists, Tom," Wily answered. His back was to the cage, instead watching the multitude of twisted screens that hovered above his console. "Impossibility is our birthright. To take our beliefs and make them reality. We believed in machines that could think and feel. In limitless energy. In the power to change the world. Why should we stop there?"

"Because we were meant to help the world. Not rule it."

"I used to believe that we were meant for something greater. That our genius was in some way a gift and an obligation, that I was meant to rule." He lifted a hand to his temple. "I now see that I was wrong."

"Thank goodness. Albert, let me out, we can still stop this, we can–"

Wily's laughter had an echoing, gurgling quality that froze the words in his throat.

"There is no meaning, Tom. No fate, no grand story. Things happen and we see the pattern we want. But there's only one pattern, stretching away in all directions for eternity, repeating in infinite but minor variation. And from here, I can almost see it. It's like... A song I've forgotten the words to." He let his arm drop. "Tell me. Do you ever get the feeling that all of this has happened before?"

"Albert, please. You need help."

"I! NEED! NOTHING!" Wily roared, whirling to face his rival. His right eye was bulging and yellow. A pulsing blue vein trailed away from it towards his scalp. "I have seen the beginning! I am the end! There is not a moment unaccounted for, nothing beyond my design! When this is over my victory will be total and my failures will have never existed! "

"And that... Should just about... Do it..." Robo said, carefully turning the last dial.

"So... What now?" Rock asked. The rest of them hadn't had much to do since their younger selves had gone off to assault Wily's fortress.

"Now we just have to wait for our chronometers to say it's boom time, right?" He asked, looking to his older self.

"Unacceptable!" Elec Man declared. "I didn't come along to sit on the sidelines. If there's nothing to do here, I'll go help the others." He took a few steps in the direction they'd gone before pausing and scratching his head. "Um. How does this work, exactly?" He stared at the stubbornly blank expanse.

"It doesn't," the eldest Robo answered, laying his hand on Elec's shoulder. "Welcome to the end of the chain. I get to see it all coming, but can't exactly change things. They go, we stay. That's just what happens."

"Ah, I see. Your hands are tied." Elec Man looked pointedly at the stump of Robo's other arm.

"You're a vindictive little–Down!" Robo shouted, hurling himself and Elec Man to the ground. The nothing in front of them had suddenly disgorged a horde of infected robots. Tentacles squirmed out or joins, their armor dotted with bubbling growths and bony plates. Joes stomped through on uneven limbs, followed by Mets that resembled squids beneath their helmets.

In seconds the region was full of uncoordinated fire. The infected units loosed shots seemingly at random, some dragging their guns from target to target with inevitable slowness while other jerked their weapons wildly, over-correcting on every shot.

Elec Man shot to his feet, laying down a wide field of electricity that slowed the mob while the others regrouped. Rock and Roll threw up barriers, soaking up fire as they positioned themselves to return the favor. Having abandoned their weapons, the two Robos waded in, throwing around their larger stature and heavy armor.

"Everyone alright?" Rock called out a few minutes later. The infected robots had been reduced to scrap and ooze, though a few industrious limbs were trying to crawl on their own.

"Disgusted but still standing," Roll reported. She looked briefly at her water nozzle before frowning and swapping it for a flamethrower and sweeping it across the broken machines. "Fire is the ultimate cleanser."

"As if these things could lay a hand on me," Elec Man smirked, firing off a small bolt at a twitching limb.

"I can't even tell if that one was on purpose," the elder Robo noted.

"MRPH–Fine," his younger counterpart said, tearing a Met off his face. He gave it a few vicious stomps until the tentacles stopped moving. "Should have expected that. We'll have to watch out for–Applesauce," he interrupted himself and ran for the bomb.

The device had been hit by what looked to be over a dozen shots, clustered suspiciously well for the erratic firing pattern that had inflicted them. The scorched hole went clear through the middle. Robo knelt next to it and started frantically digging through the insides.

"No, no, no! We lost power and transmission. We've got some modulation left, but I wouldn't trust it." He grasped his head. "We didn't even bring our lightning guns in for spare parts..."

"…Just the way things happen, huh?" Elec Man asked, looking to the one armed robot. He received a solemn nod.

"You need a lightning gun?" He strode up to the bomb and held up a hand crawling with electrical sparks. "I'm the best ever built."

17.71 (OathToOblivion, with an add-on by me)

Mega Man was having a particularly tough time against this particular opponent. Rather than Bass, Wily had instead built this new robot called Wizard. Not only did he have a Dragon support unit that was giving Rush a particularly hard time, but he could change his attributes on the fly between Fire-based, Water-based, Wind-based, and Earth-based. Just as he was starting to puzzle out a pattern, Wizard and Dragon stopped.

"Well, this is an interesting Loop to Wake up to," Wizard commented.

"I'll say. I'm getting some fresh air for a change," Dragon pointed out.

As they were talking, Mega Man lowered his Mega Buster. "You guys are Loopers then?" he asked.

The other two noticed him, before Wizard nodded. "That's right. Rockman, I presume?" he asked. At Mega Man's look of surprise, he elaborated. "I played your games back home. I also heard about what happened to you guys from one of the other Anchors in our branch."

Rock nodded. "Right then. Of course, it's Mega Man, not Rockman," he corrected.

"The international version, then?" Wizard mused, before holding his hand out. "Sohma Haruto, Kamen Rider Wizard. This here is my Co-Anchor, WizarDragon," he introduced.

"Rock Light, but you knew that already," Mega Man said in reply.

"So, what do you usually do right about now?" Dragon asked.

"Well, right now, I'm supposed to be fighting you two," the Blue Bomber pointed out. "You've taken Bass and Treble's places; that is, Forte and Gospel by the names you're familiar with."

"Ah. Well, I don't particularly feel like fighting," Haruto said. "How about we just claim that you opened our eyes to the truth, and we swore to fight against Wily with you?" he asked.

"Sounds like a plan to me, but be careful when fighting Wily. He's Dreaming, which means he might remember anything you do and use it in a later Loop, even if he doesn't consciously remember this Loop," Rock warned.

Dragon simulated raising an eyebrow by arching his head. "That seems pretty dangerous," he commented.

Rock shrugged. "Our Branch is pretty buggy."

"Well, no use standing around," Wizard decided, as he started walking towards the exit. The other two followed after. "Just checking: The abilities Wily made us with are all right, correct?"

"Oh, sure," Rock replied. "For one, there's no point trying to keep Wily from learning something he already knows. For another, while you were harder than most things he's built before you Woke Up, he's made more than a few more dangerous things. I know we sound overly cautious when we warn people about Wily's Dreaming, but his baseline ability leaves a lot of leeway."

17.Ω

Percy Jackson had to admit, having this particular automaton along for the quest to stop Gaea from waking up had been rather interesting so far. Some things had gone better, some had actually been harder, and a few things had gone wildly off course. But what he and the others were seeing right now, with Leo filming every second from multiple angles, was worth any hardship that might result.

The mortal-made automaton, known to friends as Rock and to most anyone else as Mega Man, was trouncing Nike/Victoria's Nikai, with the full intention of going after the conflicted winged goddess herself in the next few moments. Make that right now.

"Pull yourself together!" Rock yelled as the goddess flickered between her Greek Nike and the Roman Victoria aspects. "No one wins this way!"

"NO!" both halves shouted in stereo. "There must be a winner!" Nike screamed as she jabbed with her spear. "Victory or death!" Victoria yelled, trying to run Rock over with her chariot.

"Second place is the first loser!"

"No quarter! No surrender!"

"Winners gain glory!"

"Losers DIE!"

"The best reign!"

"The rest bow!"

"Will! You! SHUT! UP!" Rock yelled back as he vaulted over the chariot's horses, twisted around the spear, and slapped the goddess flat in the face. She was so stunned by the sheer audacity of the maneuver that she lost her balance and fell out of the chariot, goddess and automaton tumbling in the dirt as the horses dragged the chariot off into the distance.

"You..." the goddess of victory got to her feet, shifting between her aspects so rapidly that it hurt Percy to look at her, and lunged at her opponent. "You DARE?!"

Rock sidestepped the charge in a twisting pirouette that ended in a submission hold immobilizing both of Nike/Victoria's arms and her wings and pinning her to the ground.

"You think this is Nike versus Victoria, Greek versus Roman, but it's not. It's just you . A single competitor. There won't be a winner and a loser in the end, just you either having won or lost. And a goddess divided against herself cannot win. Whichever half of you comes out on top, you lose . Not just the fight, but half of your essence. Forever."

"NO!" Nike screamed. "Competition! Struggle! Glory!"

"Battle! Blood! Conquest!" Victoria argued back, struggling against the hold. "Victory or defeat!"

"Listen to yourselves!" Rock growled as he forced the goddess back down. "You're the same person! The same goddess no matter if you wear a Greek or Roman face! You can't fight me and yourself at the same time! There must be something you can agree upon!"

Percy watched as the goddess stilled and the flickering effect sped up until suddenly it stopped and was followed by a blast of force that flung Rock off and made Percy shield his eyes. When he looked again, the goddess of victory was getting to her feet, but she seemed different.

Her wings were a combination of white and gold feathers, she wore the sandals and laurel of an athlete as well as the armor of a soldier. This wasn't Nike or Victoria, but somehow both.

"You're right," she sneered as Rock got back to his feet. "Both parts of me can agree on something. How much we despise you for the persecution of our favorite son."

Rock raised an all-too-human eyebrow as he considered the goddess for a moment. "You're Dr. Wily's mom? That explains so much..."

17.2X (pandoraElf)

Zero stared in horror at what lay before him.

"What do you think, Zero?" Copy X said with a smug smile. "With this new program, my consciousness will be transplanted into all reploids!"

Copy X's smile grew even wider. "Just think. There will never be a Maverick again."

Zero could only stare in silence. Then he spoke.

"You... you're insane."

"No," said Copy X. "I'm right."

"No! You're not!" shouted Zero in a rage that surprised Copy X. "What you're doing right now... You're spitting in the face of every reploid that fought in the Maverick Wars."

"Even the Mavericks... even the mavericks that X and I fought were fighting because they believed what they were doing was right! Sigma didn't take away their free will, he converted them! That's what made it so hard to keep on taking them down! Because they still seemed human!"

"Human?" said Copy X, raising an eyebrow. "Please. Reploids aren't human in the slightest."

"And you're saying you are?" said Zero with barely contained anger.

"Hardly. I'm just the one reploid who figured out how to solve the problem forever."

"...doing this... what you're doing goes against the ideals of every person I've ever known!" Zero responded, his rage building once again. "Dr. Light... Dr. Cain... Ciel... X... Axl... Even my creator, the one who designed me to be a machine of destruction, would be horrified to see what you are doing now!"

"That's why..." Zero said, glaring at Copy X, "That's why... I am going to END YOU!"

17.12

"Dr. Light?" asked a military officer who had come up to the Light family after the dedication of the city by Mayor L. Dorado had dispersed. "Are you familiar with the Lanfront Ruins?"

"Not personally," Dr. Light admitted, "though I have heard much about them from one of my colleagues."

"Well..." the military officer hedged, "there's been a transmission coming from it recently and we wanted you to take a listen and see if you could make something of it. If necessary, we're prepared to arrange transport to the ruins themselves for a closer look."

"I will do what I can," Dr. Light tentatively agreed. "May we hear this transmission?"

"Of course," the officer stated as he took out a digital player and pushed a button. The voice that came out was a little... unexpected.

"Ho-ho-ho-ho-ho! I am the king of kings! Look on my toys, ye Mighty, and despair!"

Rock suddenly had a sinking feeling.

Rock had insisted that only he and Roll be taken to the ruins to investigate, and Roll had gone along with it after he'd promised to explain once they got there.

Landing at the Lanfront ruins had occurred with no issue. There was no EM field, no hostile robots, no dangerous anything that Rock or Roll tended to encounter in any Loop where they had cause to come here. The only things there were little green Mets in holiday hats scurrying around with what looked like children's toys or things to make them, and those simply paid Rock and Roll no more heed than they needed to move around the two larger robots. Getting to the temple chamber where an ancient alien supercomputer had buried itself more times than either cared to recall happened without incident.

The orb in the center of the temple was not the one that was usually there. For one, it was white instead of black. For another, it was apparently surrounded by jingling golden bells instead of a lethal forcefield. And finally, instead of an eye-like design that glowed, there was an actual eye with red sclera, a green iris, and a typical black pupil.

"That is not Ra Moon," Roll observed.

"Ho-ho-ho-ho-ho!" the orb chuckled at them in a friendly manner. "Welcome, children! Welcome! What would good little robots such as you like for Christmas?"

Rock sighed wearily. "Roll, meet Santa Claus. I met him during a Loop in the Cookieverse. One of the most insane corners of the multiverse."

Roll blinked and looked at the jolly alien eldritch supercomputer replacing their usual genocidal alien eldritch supercomputer, then turned to look at her brother. "Isn't Santa supposed to be, I don't know, a jolly old elf or something?"

"Where do you think the term 'eldritch' originated, sis?"

17.3

Axl was fairly new to this looping business, all things considered. He'd only begun recently for one, and for another he often wasn't even built until the Maverick Wars were well underway. That said, he'd lived through many fights against all manner of Mavericks, armies of mechaniloids, murderous cyborgs, human terrorists, insane pokemon, titanic digimon, sapient viruses, undead madmen, more than a few other things that would make the list drag on, and in general been reasonably certain that there was really nothing left that could surprise him.

"I'm sorry Commander X, could you repeat that?"

"I said that the Gummi Mafia has been mobilizing again recently."

His mistake, but the poor kid would learn eventually.

"My sincerest apologies; I think there's something wrong with my audio receptors, X. I'll go get them checked out immediately."

"Stay right there, kiddo," X smirked. "You probably heard just fine. This group is a new thing this Loop, but they've been around since before the Hunters were even formed and were the biggest, most organized, and most dangerous force of Mavericks before Sigma went nuts. Gave even him a great deal of trouble for a long while, especially with their penchant for using non-standard materials for their armor."

"What kind of non-standard materials?"

"There's a reason they're called the Gummi Mafia, Axl," X grinned. "And in case that wasn't enough of a hint, they tend to call their territory 'Candy Land'."

"...You cannot be serious..."

"Wish I wasn't, Axl," X's face suddenly turned stern. "Their armor may not be super-durable but it's odd and elastic enough that it changes how effective most weapons are, and that throws off the average hunter. Plus, while most of the members are weak, they're very well organized and aren't afraid to mob the opposition or take cheap shots, and they love ambushes. If you want, I could get Zero in here and let him rant and rave about them for the next hour and a half."

"Ah... no thank you..." Axl sweatdropped. "So you want me to go after them?"

"Not alone," X replied. "As it happens, there's a civilian specialist who has a great deal of experience dealing with this group after a couple of members kidnapped him for their underground fighting ring. He's one of the few people they're genuinely scared o–"

X was interrupted by a knock at the door.

"That's probably him now," X nodded. "Why don't you let him in?"

Axl shrugged and walked over to open the door and found himself staring at a massive set of bare pectoral muscles covered with sparse hair. Looking up, he saw a stern face behind a luchador mask styled after a buffalo, complete with small horns. A glance down confirmed his suspicions that the man, who had to have over half his body mass in his chest muscles, was only wearing a pair of brown wrestling briefs and a pair of brown shoes.

'What in...?' Axl blinked.

"Axl, meet Burrito Bison."

"X," Zero glared as he stormed into his friend's office, "for the last time I refuse to deal with that ridiculous group of criminals when there are plenty of capable hunters that are more than well-equipped to handle them. I don't care that you're technically my superior, and I really don't care if that luchador's technique works, I'm not doing that again."

"I know," X grinned cheekily back at his friend. "That's why I got Axl to do it."

Zero blinked repeatedly as the impressive head of indignation he'd worked himself into sputtered and died.

"Wanna watch?" X grinned, producing a bowl of something that looked remarkably like popcorn. Zero still found it amazing that X's older sister had invented the stuff, even if she was still stuck on a good name for it.

"...Oh, alright." Zero sighed and walked over to where he'd have a good view of the observation screen on X's desk. "You are a terrible influence on me, you know that, right? How'd you get Axl to agree to this anyway?"

"Simple, I did my best impression of you."

"Poor kid doesn't know what he's in for," Zero took a handful of the robo-snack food.

"It really isn't as bad as you make it out to be."

"Look, just because you enjoyed hurtling through the air like some demented super ball fired from a giant slingshot doesn't mean the rest of us find it amusing."

---

17. Twitch (DrTempo)

Ash Ketchum (wearing the outfit Red was known to wear), Phoenix Wright, Little Mac, Scorpion, Bowser, Proto Man (wearing what looked like a professional wrestling championship belt) and Ganondorf looked around as they all Awoke. Scorpion blinked, saying "Where in the Netherrealm are we? And why does everything look so..odd?"

Phoenix chimed in with, "I guess you have been Looping for just a short while, Scorpion?" Said ninja nodded. "I'm sure Ash here can tell you." Ash said nothing. Bowser facepalmed. "You can stop being in character, Ash."

Scorpion, utterly confused, said, "In character?"

Little Mac, having gotten a drink, smiled. "We're in a Video Game Championship Wrestling Loop. It's an interesting Fused Loop where we're all part of a pro wrestling company. Unlike other such companies, we fight for real. We can't use our powers when fights break out, though. There are cases where some of our powers can be used out of the ring, but very rarely. Also, the place is a bit glitchy. I've seen things like people teleporting from one place to another, for one."

Ganondorf laughed. "These Loops are run, admittedly. The lawyer over there once had 9 singles matches wins in a row. And the Pokemon Trainer held the midcard title for a good while even."

Proto Man then said, "Our match is going to happen tonight, Scorpion..and it's for the VGCW Championship. Good luck out there."

Scorpion nodded. "Same to you."

And so the Loop went on...

17.8

"What are you doing Ciel?" Zero asked the leader of the resistance. Said leader was currently placing a silver dollar (minted with X's face on it for reasons Zero actively avoided learning) into a small tin (apparently made of tin no less) that was placed under... Well, Zero had no idea. Knowing how Ciel got in her more mad-sciency moments, it could be anything.

"Shh..." the teen girl hushed him, not taking her eyes off her work. "I recently uncovered an ancient alchemical scroll that I just had to try... All you need is a silver dollar, a tin... or some tin I wasn't sure so I did it both ways... and SCIENCE!"

Ciel threw a needlessly large switch causing bizarre energies to course from the machine and through the materials.

"Um... okay..." Zero hesitated when the freaky light show died down. "And that makes... what?"

"This!" Ciel hefted a circular disc that had replaced the silver dollar and tin over her head. It had a smaller circle cut out and the side facing Zero shimmered with rainbow colors along the radial. It took him a moment to realize the object was an old style CD.

"A CD?"

"Not just any CD!" Ciel declared, turning the disc so Zero could see an image of Ciel herself holding a microphone and wearing an outfit that wouldn't be out of place on a pop idol. "A Greatest Hits CD!"

Zero just sweatdropped. 'And to think... this is what she's like not looping...'

17.A (Scorntex)

"Hello, my name's Sigma."

"Hello Sigma."

"... it's been three months since I last attempted to wipe out humanity, and was foiled by X! But I will have my revenge! EVOLUTION REQUIRES SACRIFICE! HOW CAN HE NOT UNDERSTAND? BUT I SHALL RETURN, STRONGER, I-"

" Sigma! What have I told you before?"

"No evil ranting. I–Sorry..."

"That's alright, Sigma. Perhaps it would be best if you just sat down now."

"Yes, Miss Iris..."

"Does anyone else have something they'd like to share? Vile? You've been very quiet tonight."

"I don't got nothing to say."

"Now, Vile, you remember what we talked about last week. It's important to share with the group."

"Don't even see why I'm even here. I ain't got no problem. Stupid Zero and X dragged me to this cornball cr–"

"Vile..."

"What? It is! Reploids talkin' about their feelings. Load'a bull..."

---

17. OMGWTFBBQ!

"Behold!" Dr. Wily cackled. "The most powerful Robot Master to ever exist! All the world must tremble before... THE GUY!"

Rock and Roll didn't sweat. However, after going through Wily's latest death-trap-happy fortress, they were doing a very good impression of it.

"BWAHAHAHAHA! It's over you two! I've won! There is no way you can defeat... THE GUY!"

All of a sudden, a hail of bullets hit Dr. Wily's latest creation, unfortunately not destroying it but nonetheless inflicting harm, as a new figure dropped into the room.

"Better re-check the patent old man," the youthful figure said as he brandished his gun. " I'm The Guy. Your little tinker-toy there wants to be The Guy, then he's gonna have to take the title from me first."

"Want some help?" Rock and Roll asked in unison.

The figure who called himself The Guy blinked in surprise and considered the two. "Sure, why not? It'll be a nice change of pace to have allies for once."

17.√-1) This isn't the Megaverse being glitchy. This is Bioshock being Bioshock.

7.7.7 continued) Hubris Plus: This isn't late. That's just an illusion caused by time-like curves.

17.71) OathToOblivion: Forgot to mention; Haruto's Copied Master Weapon as Wizard is his Rider Kick, Strike Wizard. This can come in any of the elements he can use.

17.Ω) Well, for this Loop at least she is. And this is Percy Jackson-verse Nike, not Admin!Nike.

17.2X) Copy X is obliviously pressing Zero's berserk button here. I'd feel sorry for him, but I'm too busy diving for cover.

17.12) So. I play Cookie Clicker. It… doesn't actually have native loopers (thank goodness). Eldritch Santa is just good-natured enough to go along with things. Santa's nemeses are the Grandmatriarchs who threaten his home universe with the Grandmapocalypse. He combats them by running them over with his reindeer. (I am totally making most of this up)

17.3) One weekend a while back, I discovered the Burrito Bison games and the damn gummi bears stole my free time. But Burrito Bison got it back for me.

17. Twitch) Based off the popular Twitch show, Video Game Championship Wrestling.

17.8) Was introduced to another random generator site. This one with a random alchemy generator. Tried it out and got Tin + Silver Dollar + SCIENCE! = Greatest Hits CD.

17.A) Mavericks Anonymous.

17. OMGWTFBBQ!) Meet The Guy. Formerly known as The Kid. He wanted to be The Guy, so he beat The Guy. And after trillions of attempts to make it happen (via what was essentially a blind no-death run on impossible difficulty), his universe started looping.

"–and it wasn't until a few Loops later that I learned the Equestria terminal wasn't the only place where Zeus tried to hide his porn stash. How about you guys?" Ranma asked. "What was the worst Loop you ever had?"

"Roll," Rock turned to his sister, "you tell it. I can't do the voice properly."

"Alright," Roll grimaced. "But you owe me."

Roll turned to the rest of the group with a grave expression on her face.

"We were in what seemed to be a standard Trek Loop when, about the time the Borg usually show up, we encounter what must be the most messed-up spaceship ever constructed. Like someone took a school campus, scaled it up to the size of a large city, and then folded it into some kindergartner's idea of a three-dimensional object. It immediately hails us and we hear this:"

Roll closed her eyes for a moment and then; in the most cutesy, saccharine monotone; said...

"We are Eiken. All your fanservice are belong to us. You will join our clubs. Resistance is futile."

-) Ouch.

Mega Sonic Part 6

Mega Sonic: Part 6

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN!" the enthusiastic voice of Leonard Dorado (0) echoed across the courtyard of Soleanna. "It is time once again for the greatest competition in the greatest of sports! The third annual EX WORLD GRAND PRIX! Are you ready?!"

The cheers could have likely been heard from outside the city limits, but that wasn't enough for the energetic mayor of Monopole and official announcer of the EX Racing League. No, he wanted to see if this crowd could be heard from space.

"I said ARE! YOU! READY?!"

It may not have been heard from space, but it the resulting cheer did register on a few local Richter scales.

"Then it is time to introduce this year's racing teams! First up, the reigning champions, the masters of the air, the BABYLON ROGUES!"

The cheers reached fever pitch as Jet, Wave, and Storm zoomed out towards the starting line set just below the royal balcony. The cheers continued as Leonard Dorado introduced other racers; including previous favorites like Team Sonic, the Freedom Fighters, Team Acorn, the Chaotix, Team Light, Team Dark, as well as numerous others from around the world who had only recently taken up the sport. It was easily the largest field yet seen as the widely grinning man wound the crowd up more and more with each team introduced.

"And last, but certainly not least, the team representing your hosting city of Soleanna, the Guardians of Soleanna! The time-traveling psychokinetic hero, SILVER!"

A silver-furred figure jumped onto the railing while holding an Extreme Gear board and was easily recognized as Silver the Hedgehog before he jumped off, twisting in acrobatic flips before landing his board on a cushion of air right at the starting line.

"The super robot from the future, QUINT!"

A green armored figure in blue shades catapulted over the railing while riding an angry-looking jackhammer. As he fell, the jackhammer twisted and reformed into a board-type Extreme Gear until he too landed on a cushion of air right next to Silver.

"And finally, the protector of Soleanna herself! Her Royal Highness: PRINCESS ELISE DE SOLEANNA!" (1)

The regal figure of the princess, clad in a splendid dress with a form-fitting bodice, strode calmly to the railing. Where she promptly tore off the dress's skirts to reveal that she was really wearing a form-fitting racing suit before jumping over the railing and performing her own acrobatic stunts to the amazed silence of the crowd and landing between her teammates with just as much skill as either of them had displayed.

The silence lasted for three beats before the crowd went completely nuts.

"Hey Jet, how's it going?" Sonic greeted. "Tense race today, huh?"

"To be expected with a Chaos Emerald as part of the grand prize," Jet shrugged indifferently.

"Yeah, about that, you see–"

"You want it to use against Eggman," Jet finished the thought and his face split into a wicked grin. "Don't worry. When the Babylon Rogues win the EX Grand Prix for the third year in a row, we'll be happy to sell it to you for a fair price."

"Yeah, that's if you win," Sonic returned his own cocky grin, his face inches away from Jet's own smug mug.

"You know, I always thought that Wily patterned my own ruthlessness after your sister's," Quint stated as he buffed some scratches out of Sakugarne from that day's race, "but now I wonder if he didn't give me yours as well."

"Um..." Rock blinked in confusion as he paused in buffing out the scratches Rush's armor had gained from his Extreme Gear form in the same race. "I'm sorry, but... what are you talking about?"

"Don't give me that," Quint gazed back levelly. "I saw how you raced today. For someone constantly on the 'top ten nicest guys in the world' list, you are quite brutal on the track." (2)

"Well, it helps that everyone is wearing those inertial dampening belts and headgear," Rock rubbed his head sheepishly. Sure, the things weren't perfect and a crash would still leave most people pretty banged up, but odds were good that you'd still walk away from most crashes under your own power. And that was without the complementary inertial nets set up along all of the official race tracks to further reduce injury. There hadn't yet been a fatality or even permanent injury with both safety systems involved and working properly.

"And your collisions on the track often throw other racers towards where the track's own inertial nets are strongest. Not only further preventing injury, but also robbing them of much of their speed."

"Well, that's a bonus, sure, but–"

"You want to win," Quint interrupted. It wasn't a question.

"Er..."

"It is a competition where lives are not on the line," Quint's mouth slowly grew into a knowing grin. "You can afford to lose, something I suspect you savor, but you still desire to win."

"Well..."

"It's a problem. You solve problems," Quint stood up and propped Sakugarne upright, holding it in place with one foot on a foothold and an arm slung across the handles. "That's where I get it from. You see, I was made to solve problems too."

Rock blinked and stood himself, holding out a hand to keep the now-growling Rush calm.

"I just don't feel any need to be nice about it." (3)

Rock stared at his future double for a long moment before stepping forward and extending his hand. After a moment of consideration, Quint took the hand and shook it.

"I'll see you on the track tomorrow," Rock smiled.

"Pray it's before I see you," Quint grinned back.

"Any idea why Rouge wanted to meet with you down here?" Bass asked as he followed Shadow down the hall, Treble trailing close behind. The only thing in this direction was some hot spring or something.

"None at all," Shadow replied with a shrug. "I don't know why she couldn't just tell me back in our hotel after–wait, do you hear something?"

The two exchanged a look before edging up to the corner of a doorway and listening around it.

"–you seriously asked him to come here to see if he'd walk in on you?" the voice of Sally Acorn asked incredulously. (4)

"Oh, like you haven't thought of doing the same with your beau, Sally-girl," the voice of Bunnie Rabbot teased.

"I can attest that she has, on several occasions, the most recent being–"

" NICOLE! "

"Oh, my, that sounds positively scandalous!" Elise's gasp of affront was ruined by her giggles.

"I'll have to remember to try that on Knuckles sometime..." another voice that was barely recognizable, that girl echidna with the Chaotix, added.

"You do that," Rouge's voice answered with an audible smirk. "Though you girls might want to hide yourselves. He'll be here any moment."

Bass and Shadow blinked as the group devolved into more giggling. Bass turned to his companion to see the ultimate lifeform frozen in red-faced shock and couldn't hold it in anymore.

The sound of loud guffaws and barks echoed through the hall, punctuated by furious cries to stop as Shadow chased his teammate and his robot canine angrily away from the hot spring entrance.

"Blaze?" Silver blinked at the sight of his friend from another dimension. "I didn't realize you were here."

"Well, Marine wanted to come visit you and Quint," Blaze explained, though there seemed to be no sign of the Unawake raccoon captain. She was likely off hyperactively taking in the sights and harassing vendors. "We'd have entered, but..."

"You don't have a third."

"Not without you at least," Blaze nodded with a slight smile, referring to the usual team she and he formed for such events. "Pity, but you should spend this Loop with your current friends. I'm glad to see you kept up ties with Elise actually."

"Quint's idea," Silver shrugged. "Wanted a base of operations that neither Dr. Light nor Dr. Wily had direct involvement in. One question though, what are you going to do if Marine wants to take an Extreme Gear back with her?"

"Buy her one for each day of the week," Blaze smirked back.

"Each day of... Oh no... You already bought them for her, didn't you?"

"WAHOOOOO!" a screaming blur that sounded like a dopplered Marine was the only warning for everyone in the area to duck down as a blur buzzed straight over their heads.

"Look, sheila, I said I wa–"

"And another thing!" the small rabbit girl, shorter than the raccoon girl she was berating if you didn't count the ears, with the angry chao scolded, "You should never race around where others could get hurt! It's rude and mean and dangerous and you should feel ashamed of yourself!"

"Here they come into the home stretch folks! Team Sonic and the Babylon Rogues are tied for first in the rankings and their leaders are neck and neck for the final goal! It's gonna be a close race, but what's this?" Leonard Dorado cut off commentary as he spotted something further down the track. "The Guardians of Soleanna are coming up from behind with Quint in the lead while Silver and Princess Elise ride his wake! What could they be planning?"

As he commented, Silver and Quint rebuffed some attempts by other racers to knock them off balance as they held a steady pace. If one looked closely, they would see that Quint was putting out the most thrust from his lead position while Silver behind him, and Elise behind Silver, were using the wake to charge up a boost.

Suddenly Quint whipped to the side, allowing Silver to boost past with Elise riding his wake. They gained on Sonic and Jet before Silver performed the same whipping motion to allow Elise to boost ahead. With her riding the accelerated wake prior to boosting, she rocketed forth at speeds beyond a normal boost and plowed straight through the tiny space between the rival racers, sending them both careening to the side from the lightest of bumps while Princess Elise rocketed through the finish line.

Behind her, Silver sailed through the finish line to loud cheers while Quint came with the main pack of racers, shoving back and forth with the members of Team Light, as they zoomed past a recovering Sonic and Jet.

"I don't believe it! What an upset! With a last-second strategy, the Guardians of Soleanna have taken first in the race! In fact, and I'll have to wait for the final score, I think they may have all placed high enough to win the entire Prix!"

The crowd quieted down as the rest of the racers crossed the finish line and the final tally was made. Each team in the race had their points added up, and it seemed someone was very deliberately saving the Guardians of Soleanna for last to ramp up the tension.

As Team Light's points came in and moved them just ahead of both Team Sonic and the Babylon Rogues, the crowd held its collective breath. The points came in and...

"The Guardians of Soleanna have won the third annual EX World Grand Prix BY A SINGLE POINT!" (5)

"Thank you for coming to see me," Princess Elise de Soleanna greeted her guests. Outside, the sounds of merriment continued as they had since the explosion of cheers the race's results had produced. The race had finished mid-afternoon. It was currently around midnight and the festivities showed no signs of slowing down.

"I'm always glad to come see a friend," Rock smiled alongside his sister and the Freedom Fighters (no longer divided into racing teams). "Especially after they pull off a stunt like that. That was amazing!"

"I'm just sorry I didn't get to see spiny's face when it happened," Quint casually leaned on Sakugarne while shooting a grumbling Sonic a triumphant smirk.

"A couple of friends of mine had cameras and managed to catch the moment," Silver chuckled and pulled out a perfectly timed photograph that showed Princess Elise on her Extreme Gear bursting through the middle of Sonic and Jet, as well as the comically surprised faces on the two.

"Give me that!" Sonic tried to dash forwards, only to be halted in the air by a psychokinetic field inches away from his target.

"Don't think so," Silver smirked, not letting the blue blur down. "Besides, my friend has the negatives and she's getting posters made right now. Mayor Dorado's already ordered a bunch for next year's promotional campaign.

"Oh, she's taking orders?" Sally raised an eyebrow. "Could you let her know the Freedom Fighters would like a few?"

"Of course."

"Great, just laugh it up why don't you?" Sonic groused.

"Oh, let it go 'little blue'," Rock grinned as Silver finally set the speedster down. "Elise earned it. She's come a long way since we gave her lessons."

"Thank you, Rock," Elise smiled. "Still, that is not why I have asked you here."

The princess of Soleanna gestured and one of the castle's staff brought a pillow over. A pillow on which rested the white Chaos Emerald, part of the race's grand prize.

"I understand that you are gathering these for an assault on Dr. Eggman," Elise continued.

"We are," Sally replied, now all business. "We have intel that he is alive and is recuperating. We intend to take out him and his main force using the Chaos Emeralds as insurance."

"Then I would like you to have this, with my thanks."

"Princess, we couldn–" Rock tried to protest.

"You can, and you will," Elise insisted regally. "You are my friends and I am pleased to offer my assistance in this. To tell the truth, a part of me feels I owe you far more than I can ever repay. So take it with my blessing. And... ahem give Eggman's posterior a kick for me, would you?"

"I think we can manage that," Sonic grinned.

"So the white Chaos Emerald is now in the hands of the Freedom Fighters," the G.U.N. commander mused. "And given reports we've received regarding an incident involving Tails of the Freedom Fighters, the Mega Woman, and a group calling themselves the Battle Bird Armada, that makes two in their possession. The red and the white. I suppose that's at least better than them being in the hands of Dr. Eggman or someone else like him." (6)

"Like pops and his latest 'hush-hush' project," Bass snorted, causing all eyes to look in his direction. "What? Pops is making yet another set of robot masters. Which means that someone's going to end up fighting and trashing them. And probably his shiny new amusement park along the way."

"He's got a point," Shadow shrugged. "Even if he's contracting with G.U.N. lately, his track record is... predictable."

"Be that as it may," the commander sighed, "your current priority is locating and securing one or more of the Chaos Emeralds before anyone else can."

"Well then," Rouge smirked and pulled a flyer from... well, somewhere that no one else could reach into without being accused of impure motives (7), "it's a good thing I have a lead."

She unrolled the flyer and showed everyone at the table.

"A poker tournament in Casinopolis?" Sally asked, raising an eyebrow.

"Indeed, mah princess," Antione grinned. "And part of ze grand prize eez ze purple Chaos Emerahld."

"And you think you can win it, Ant?" Sonic raised a disbelieving eyebrow.

"Oh, sugah-Twan's good , trust me," Bunnie giggled.

"Not that I don't believe you, Bunnie, but since when does Antoine play poker?"

"Since ahem," Antoine checked where the Unawake Cream was sitting, suggesting that what he was about to say was edited for the benefit of younger ears, "mah lapin and I decided to add ze little spice to our mahrriage..."

Cream looked confused as to what in the world poker, spices, and being married had to do with each other, but the older members understood and blushed awkwardly.

'Strip poker...' was the simultaneous realization.

"And Ah've been having to take a little ol' handicap lately," Bunnie admitted with a saucy wink in her husband's direction.

"What kind of handicap?" Sally asked despite part of her mind yelling that she'd probably rather not know.

"Tha kind a gal gets from being Jessica Rabbit's sister fer a Loop..." Bunnie cooed.

"Who and what?" the Unawake Amy asked.

"We'll explain later," Sally waved off the question. "Mind showing us what you mean?"

"Alright, Sally-girl," Bunnie shot the princess a teasing look, "but rememba', ya asked for it."

And with that, Bunnie changed . She was still Bunnie, still the cybernetic lapine they were all used to, but her waist was just a little thinner, her hips a bit wider, and her bust... noticeably larger. And her face and body language alike looked like 'sultry' was their default mood. She was no longer the southern belle beauty, but a bonafide six-star knockout on a five-star scale.

The only face that wasn't sporting a blush was Cream's, and even the young girl looked star-struck. Heck, even NICOLE seemed to be blushing at the sight.

"Wow... You're so pretty Mrs. D'Coolette!" Cream all but squealed.

"Buh... wha...?" Amy tried to find her voice.

"Took the words right out of my mouth..." Tails muttered past his glazed expression.

"Hey guys, what's–whoa..." Rock paused on entering to stare himself.

"Dang, Bunnie," Roll whistled. "Barbie just called to say you make her feel inadequate."

"Oh, but that's not all!" Bunnie grinned playfully and closed her eyes in concentration.

"Um..." Rotor attempted after several seconds had passed. "What are...?"

"Wait for eet," Antoine tsked with a knowing smile.

Several more seconds passed before there was a shift in the air, and suddenly there was a second Bunnie that was a perfect mirror image of the first, noticeable by how her cybernetic arm was on the opposite side. (8)

"Wait..." Sonic managed to shake himself back to something resembling coherence. "You mean to say that Antoine plays against two of you looking like that and wins?! "

"Yep," the original Bunnie giggled and molded herself to her husband's side in a way that sparked a new round of blushing amongst most of the people in the room.

"Beats our pants off all tha time," the duplicate replied in a tone that made it clear the phrase was meant literally as she mirrored the actions of the original on Antoine's other side.

"Um... what are you all talking about anyway?" Rock asked in confusion.

"Poker tournament," NICOLE used her solid hologram form to hold up the relevant flyer.

"Neat," Roll smiled.

" Thank you for giving me an excuse to bail on that giant awkward moment," Sonic finally said as he and Rock approached the Pumpkin Hill Zone. "I'm not sure how long I could have lasted before I needed more than a cold shower to calm down. Green shooting star touching down in ghost central followed by a massive surge in haunting was the perfect reason to get the heck out of there."

"Eh, it's a legitimate, if flimsy, lead on a Chaos Emerald," Rock shrugged. "Still, we didn't need to run off right that second."

"Yeah, right. You saw how Bunnie looked... And acted..." Sonic blushed and tried to shake off thoughts of Sally, or indeed any other girl, looking and acting like that around him. He'd need more than a cold shower if that train of thought was allowed to keep running.

"I'm a robot," Rock replied evenly. "Even if I can recognize that someone is highly attractive by societal norms and react in stereotypically appropriate ways, I'm asexual by default."

"Uh-huh..." Sonic gave his bro a skeptical look. "And how do you explain your sister? When we left it looked like she and Bunnie were exchanging notes."

"Roll's been fascinated by the concept of romance and anything even tangentially related to it since our baseline."

"Poor Bass..."

"Actually, Bass is an oddity among robots. Many of the base desires that biological lifeforms naturally deal with are only conceptually understood and mimicked by our emotional processors, but Bass seems to actually have them."

"So... what? Bass has robotic hormones or something?"

"That's my best guess."

"Man, you guys are weird."

"And you guys aren't?"

"Touche..."

"Pity you didn't take off when Sonic did. You two could have shared that cold shower."

" NICOLE! " Sally hissed under her breath as she dialed up a connection on Sky Patrol's main communications array. "This isn't the time!"

"If you'd rather wait until there are others who can share in this conversation..."

"No! Walkers, but I would love to switch places and see you embarrassed for a change!"

"...Interesting..." NICOLE mused. "That sounded like you were offering to share Sonic with me."

"What?! No! I was offering nothing of the sor–"

"I'm sorry, should I call back?" a voice from the communications array interrupted.

"No!" Sally denied frantically. "I'm perfectly fine with now! Nothing else going on! How about you, Shade?"

"I'm wondering why you're blushing and NICOLE looks half a second from laughing her holographic tail off," the echidna in a stereotypical form-fitting spy bodysuit answered in amusement. "But I suppose I can let that mystery slide."

"Oh, thank goodness."

"Now, princess, what can the Chaotix Detective Agency do for you today?"

"We have a possible lead on a Chaos Emerald I'd like you to investigate for us. A portal to a Special Zone has been detected that shows trace amounts of Chaos Energy that indicate the presence of a Chaos Emerald within the zone itself. I'd like you to investigate and, if feasible, retrieve the emerald for us. I'm forwarding payment details now."

"A pleasure doing business with you, princess."

"Ah, Casinopolis!" Rouge spread her arms and basked in the glittering neon ambiance of the gambling center of the planet. "Home of luck, fortune, excitement, millions of suckers just waiting to be parted from their cash, the world poker championship, and one one shining Chaos Emerald just waiting to be given a nice new home! Isn't that right, Shadow?"

There was no reply from Rouge's less-than-enthusiastic companion for this mission.

"I said, 'isn't that right, Shadow?'," Rouge repeated, her mind reluctant to change gears from basking in the ambiance of one of her favorite places on Mobius.

Still no response. He was going to make her look, wasn't he?

Rouge sighed and turned towards her companion. "Shadow, are you even listening to me?"

Shadow was right where he was supposed to be, but looking blankly off into the distance. Come to think of it, there were a bunch of people staring in the same direction.

"Shadow!"

"Huh?" the dark hedgehog shook himself to awareness. "What? Sorry, I was... distracted."

"By what?" Rouge demanded before looking in the direction Shadow had been focused on, and froze.

Some part of her mind registered the presence of that swordsman from the Freedom Fighters. The rest of it however was focused on what appeared to be some super pinup version of Bunnie Rabbot clinging to the swordsman's arm. And a mirror super pinup Bunnie clinging to his other arm. Both of them with with figures that Rouge would have happily–

"–ouge!" Shadow's hiss cut into her thoughts and the super spy bat shook her head clear. "They're coming this way!"

"Right..." Rouge forced herself to focus. And remember that she was supposed to be straight. 'Well, except for the occasional Loop where–FOCUS!' "Sorry, I was... distracted."

"I'll bet," Shadow's voice sounded way too amused for Rouge's liking.

"Well, bless mah stars if it isn't little ol' Rouge!" Super-Pinup-Bunnie greeted.

"How ya doin', girl?" Mirror-Pinup-Bunnie finished.

"I'm... fine," Rouge forced herself to switch mental tracks to 'mission mode' so she could focus and not embarrass herself. "It's good to see you again, Bunnie and..." 'Damnit, of all the times to forget a name!' (9)

"Antoine D'Coolette, madame," the swordsman reached out to grasp her hand, and brought it to his lips for the most feather-light of kisses. "I am here for enterink ze tournament."

"The poker tournament?" Rouge blinked in surprise, ignoring the daggers Shadow was staring at Antoine for his gesture.

"But of course!"

"Sugah-Twan's gonna win us a Chaos Emerald," Super-Pinup-Bunnie tittered.

"Are you entering too?" Rouge asked calculatingly.

"Nah," Mirror-Pinup-Bunnie waved the idea off. "We're just here ta cheer our hubbie on and all."

"Indeed, for where eez a card playahr without heez luckiest of charming ones?"

"I see..." Shadow replied before Rouge could.

"Well, we must be gettink registahred for ze tournament," Antoine declared. "We shall be seeink you latahr! Au revoir!"

Rouge watched them leave, her head whirling as she processed this development.

"Well?" Shadow interrupted her thoughts. "What do you think?"

"I think Mr. D'Coolette has brought a very effective and technically legal method of distracting the other players with him," Rouge replied coolly. "I'm going to have to step up my game for this."

"Tails? Rotor?" Sally asked her friends.

"Almost finished, Sally," the mechanical genius replied.

"Just a few more seconds and..." the two-tailed child genius stuck out his tongue in concentration as he typed away, "we're in!"

"Firewalls bypassed. Trackers are none the wiser. You're good to go, NICOLE."

"Understood," the holo-lynx replied as she prepared to transmit herself into a potentially hostile system. "I'll be back shortly."

"Man, this brings back memories," Sonic grinned as he danced around a red-eyed duplicate of himself. A short distance away, Rock dueled with his own copy. Mimic ghosts, both of them, attempting to frighten the interlopers away.

"Of what?" Rock replied as he ducked a shot from his opponent and sweeped the spectre off its feet. "The time you entered me in that fighting tournament without asking?"

"Hey, you were awesome!" Sonic replied, bicycle kicking his phantom double. "Not many people can handle Emerl straight off the bat like that."

"He was challenging, but a good friend until Eggman got him."

"True, but he got rebuilt."

"And reprogrammed. Ugh... Gemerl would have been a lot nastier if it wasn't for Cream. Does she talk him down every Loop?"

"More or less. It's a rare variant that those two don't make friends."

"Okay," Shade told the rest of the team as they entered through the Zone's portal, "we need to be alert and ready for any...thing?"

Spread before them was a massive checkered landscape comprised of bizarrely and complexly arranged paths with foreign objects scattered about.

"Assessing..." the friendly Joe unit intoned with a hint of bewildered curiosity. "Foreign objects appear to be large flippers and bumpers?"

"Oh, dear Walkers," Mighty groaned, "this is some sort of massive pinball maze, isn't it?"

"I-it could b-b-be worse..." Ray stuttered. "T-there could be... b-b-badniks!"

"Yeah, that would make this really annoying," Mighty agreed.

"N-n-no!" Ray pointed off towards the distance. "B-B-BADNIKS!"

Rouge glared across the tournament table at the coyote. He was good at this.

As she'd expected, her usual tricks to distract opponents in the game weren't working on him. But then, if he could keep his cool while two super-pinup versions of his very adoring wife very shamelessly hung all over him, then there probably wasn't much her own charms could do. (10)

He was also very good at keeping his tells under wraps and sending up false ones. He'd almost gotten her thinking he was bluffing once which had turned out disastrous for another player.

But she intended to walk out of here with that Chaos Emerald. One way or another...

"NICOLE?" Sally asked as her friend's holographic form reappeared in the room.

"Done," NICOLE replied as Rotor and Tails went to work erasing any trace of their hacking. "It is as you suspected, Sally. Dr. Eggman does indeed have a Chaos Emerald in his possession. The yellow one. It is currently housed in one of his storage facilities planetside."

"Alright then," Sally nodded. "We'll just have to relieve him of it, won't we?"

"Damnit!" Sonic cursed as he pulled out yet another item from his subspace pocket that was useless in this situation while running along the wall. "I know I have a proton pack in here somewhere !"

"Well hurry it up!" Rock yelled back as he fired on something Peter Venkman would have called a 'giant demonic Slimer', the ghostly green glow of the spectre coming from the Chaos Emerald it had apparently ingested and was still visible deep within its ectoplasmic form.

"I'm working on it!" Sonic yelled back as, while donging swipes from the Chaos-empowered ghost, he pulled out an empty pokeball, a few dozen rings, some spare shoes, three playbills from Broadway and one from Kabuki-za, a photo of Sally and Amy making out (11), and a Sega Dreamcast. "I know I put it in here! Right aft–oh..."

"What 'oh'?" Rock called back as he jumped over a blast of spectral energy.

"I gave it to Tails a couple Loops back for maintenance..." Sonic replied sheepishly. "Still haven't gotten it back from him..."

"Okay, plan 'b' then. We go straight for the Emerald itself."

"Hmm..." Antoine mused long and hard about his decision as Rouge simply smirked back from her seat at the table. She'd just gone all-in on this hand, meaning if he called the tournament was over. But if he folded, he'd still be way behind given the size of the pot. "I do not zink you are doink ze bluffink... But I simply must know what you are havink in your hand. Call."

Rouge's smile didn't slip for a moment as Antoine shoved the remainder of his chips into the middle of the table. Nor did it as she revealed her cards. "Read 'em and weep D'Coolette: Royal Flush. Diamonds. Looks like I win."

As Rouge happily reached for the massive pile of chips. Antoine cleared his throat.

"I am zinkink you should not be so fast, madamoiselle..."

"What?" Rouge glared back. "Unless you have a royal flush of your own, then–"

"Non, non... Nothink of ze sort. I am merely havink ze humble full house," Antoine waved off the idea casually. "It eez ze contents of zat full house zat I am findink plus intéressant..."

With that, Antoine began laying down his cards one at a time. The jack of clubs, the jack of hearts, the queen of spades, the queen of hearts...

And the queen of diamonds.

The crowd observing the tournament sucked in their breath as one when the identity of Antoine's last card was made known and looked between it and the identical card in Rouge's diamond royal flush. (12)

"...shit," Rouge muttered audibly before she threw something at her feet that created a great plume of smoke.

"There's t-the emerald!" Ray shouted, pointing to a shining blue glow in the distance.

"Great!" Mighty sighed in relief. His shell ached so much after all of those bumpers and flippers and... "Let's get it and get out of this place befor–"

"Are we having fun yet?!" a giant round machine with a manic grin painted on it and what looked like a fuse protruding from the top shouted as it landed in front of the emerald.

"Before that happens?" Joe finished sardonically.

"If that thing starts throwing 'smiley bombs' at us, then I can't be held responsible for my actions," Shade twitched and fingered the explosives on her belt.

"Remember our wager," NICOLE reminded Sally with an audible smirk as she hacked the lock on the storage container housing the Emerald in her computer form.

"I do," Sally retorted, keeping an eye out for sentries. "You just remember that you forfeit if you deliberately set off any alarms."

Rouge checked her surroundings as she landed on the Casinopolis rooftop before breathing a sigh of relief and taking out the purple Chaos Emerald. She gazed at it for a bit, feeling the victory a bit bittersweet. She'd come so close to winning it legally after all an–

"I see you had to resort to cheating," Shadow's voice startled Rouge out of her thoughts. He even had an insufferably smug look on his face. "Looks like I won our bet."

Rouge blinked and then groaned. She'd thought it would be relatively easy to keep to that given that the deck being used was a one-of-a-kind printing made exclusively for the tournament. At least the backs were. And then that coyote had gone and become a serious threat to her chances and she let her pride get the better of her.

When Rouge finally looked up, she saw Shadow smirking and holding up a black leather outfit consisting of a corset, a bikini-style bottom, high heel boots, and elbow-length gloves. It appeared designed to make the wearer look like a cross between a biker and a burlesque dancer.

"I can't believe you expect me to wear something like that ," she glared at the dark hedgehog.

Shadow just quirked an eyebrow back at her and pointedly looked over Rouge's current form-hugging outfit.

"Yeah, I knew how hypocritical that sounded the moment I said it..."

"–and eet eez ze pity she felt she had to be doink ze cheatink, since she was havink ze four tens beneath ze illusion," Antoine finished reporting in.

"Poor Rouge," Roll did her best to not giggle at the bat's fortune.

"Anyway, we're gonna take our little ol' time and see a few sights 'afore we go, Roll-girl," Bunnie replied.

"Ah saw a tacky ol' Casinopolis weddin' chapel with the most inappropriate weddin' dresses bein' advertised," Bunnie's mirror-doppelganger added with a suggestive grin.

"Aren't you already married this Loop?" Roll asked with an amused tone.

"Yeah, but these are tha kinda dresses a gal like me wouldn't want ta wear in front a' her friends even with fur ta keep me modest," Bunnie clarified.

"Plus sugah-Twan's only married ta tha original," Bunnie's mirror-doppleganger sighed in an overly dramatic fashion. "And Ah'm not long fer this world. Ah'd so love ta be married ta mah handsome love alongside mah real self and put that little ol' honeymoon suite we rented through it's paces and all afore Ah fade away back inta mah original's head."

"I so want details when you get back," Roll giggled.

"It was an annoying Zone, but mission accomplished," Shade informed her client's pink friend. "Ray and Joe are on their way with the Emerald."

"Sweet!" Amy replied. "And what are you and Mighty gonna do?"

"Mighty said he was going to look up a good massage parlor to get the kinks out of his back from pinballing all over the place. As for me, I intend to put on something tropical and revealing and go tease Knuckles for a bit."

"Ooo..." Amy grinned. "Someone's looking to get lu~cky!"

"Lucky or not, it should be entertaining."

"I am so glad that ghosts in this Loop don't leave ectoplasmic residue," Sonic groused as he walked into the interior of Sky Patrol tossing the green Chaos Emerald from hand to hand. "Because, seriously, it's really gross and often a pain in the tuckus to wash out of anything."

"Really?" Rock blinked. "What's the best stuff to clean it with?"

"Interesting fact, you tak–whoa... Dang, Sal," Sonic whistled in appreciation. "Been awhile since you wore the vest and boots combo. I like."

"I'm sure you do," Sally rolled her eyes as she crossed her arms over her open blue vest and tapped her blue-booted foot on the floor. About the only other thing she wore were her gloves and the attached wrist armaments, her brown fur being the only thing keeping her modest.

"Hey, you won't hear me complaining," Sonic smirked and waggled his eyebrows, "though why the sudden change?"

Sally sighed. "NICOLE and I had a bet going on retrieving one of the Chaos Emeralds from Dr. Eggman. I bet that I could get in and out without anyone being the wiser and she bet that something would go wrong with the mission."

"And you lost," Sonic grinned.

"Technically we both did," NICOLE said as she entered in an outfit identical to Sally's, only purple. "While we did enter and leave without being detected, someone else got to the emerald first."

"Ouch," Rock winced as he dismissed his armor, reappearing in a blue shirt and black pants. "Tough break."

"Eh, we'll get it next time," Sonic shrugged and waggled his eyebrows at Sally again. "For now, I kind of want to hang out and enjoy the view."

"Ha, ha," Sally glared at Sonic, trying to hide her embarrassment.

"I think I would like to take in a movie," NICOLE declared as she walked up to Rock and looked him in the eye. "Would you care to accompany me?"

Rock blinked for a moment. "Are you asking me out on a date?"

"Affirmative."

"...Sure, why not?"

Sonic and Sally watched the two leave before either of them spoke.

"Her asking big blue out was part of your bet, wasn't it?"

"So what if it was?" Sally smirked. "She needs a love life that I can tease her about for a change."

"And, since you both lost the bet," Sonic continued on his train of thought, "that means you have to agree to something as well. Likely with good-looking me."

"Maybe..." Sally looked away.

"Something like..." Sonic leaned over and whispered in Sally's ear.

The princess turned beet red and punched him.

The pastor of Quickie Vows didn't even blink when the trio told him their story. After all, he'd seen just about everything. Things like polyamory and homosexual weddings had stopped being even remotely shocking to him a long time ago.

The guy and ladies were high off of a big poker casino win?

Happened all the time. At least these three weren't drunk and/or high on something.

They honestly wanted the cheesiest, tackiest, spur-of-the-moment Casinopolis wedding he could provide?

Heck, that was his entire business model. Said so right on the window.

The guy was already married to one of the ladies?

Meh, put it down as a renewal of vows. People would be surprised how often that happened to him.

The ladies wanted two of the fetish wedding dresses that the place made for the various subcultures that Casinopolis attracted like a picnic does ants?

Been there, done that.

The other lady was the first's magically created self-aware doppelganger whose memories would integrate with her original when she faded in a couple of days?

He'd have guessed evil or mirror twin, personally. That story seemed to come through his door every other month. He wasn't completely sure, but this might be a new one.

It was still nothing compared to the lady who was just in there last week wanting to marry the dress she was wearing to her toaster.

Sonic groaned from the surprisingly deep impression of himself, "Yeah, I'll admit I asked for that one." He then popped out of the whole with a goofy smirk on his face, "Still didn't hear a no, though."

A giggle escaped the still-blushing Sally, who turned and said, "Give me a minute" before walking out of the room.

Sonic fist-pumped in victory. (13)

"Okay, I'll admit this does look good on me," Rouge smirked as she and Shadow strolled into the G.U.N. base. The sight within immediately prompted their good mood to grind to a halt. There was damage everywhere, and G.U.N. soldiers running around like ants in a decimated mound. Down one hall, they could see a technician reattaching Omega's arm.

"What happened here?" Shadow demanded of the first soldier to pass him.

"The base was attacked, sir," the soldier replied hastily. "By a robot matching the description of Metal Sonic."

"What did he do?" Rouge demanded. "What did he take?"

"He... he captured..." the soldier stammered under the glare from both members of Team Dark.

"Who?" Shadow growled. "Who. Did. He. Capture?"

The soldier gulped. "Bass and Treble..."

Knuckles and Shade were rudely awoken when the alarms he'd set for the Master Emerald began blaring. As the two shook themselves to full awareness, the alarms increased in intensity indicating a progression from 'intruder alert' to 'Master Emerald stolen'.

"I swear," Knuckles groaned, thankful for the backup power systems in place, "next Loop I'm putting enough death traps around that thing to redefine the term 'meat grinder'..."

Vanilla the Rabbit was of two minds about her daughter being a Freedom Fighter, however provisional. One the one hand, she couldn't be prouder of her girl for standing up to bad people. On the other, her little girl was still so young and innocent, so she worried. Of course, she'd also made a great many friends, so Vanilla supposed the gain was positive–

"CHAO-NAPPINGS?!" Cream's shocked exclamation came from the yard. Vanilla rushed to the window just in time to see her daughter and her chao friend Cheese vanish into the nearby woods at a fast clip.

"Gemerl!" Vanilla called out frantically.

"I heard," the android replied as he followed. "Don't worry, I'll keep her safe."

High above the planet, in the flagship of Dr. Eggman's cloaked fleet:

"Sir," Orbot pleaded as his boss looked over the container in front of him, "if you'll just listen to me, there's been some disturb–"

"Quiet, you," Eggman snapped as he began punching in the code. "I want to savor the delivery of my Chaos Emerald, which I shall use in my latest plan to goad those meddlesome blue heroes into my grasp. And when they come, as they surely will, then my real plan will–eh?"

The container had opened with a hiss, but when Eggman looked inside it, there was a notable lack of the yellow Chaos Emerald he was expecting.

"Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha! Wily Rules and Eggman Drools! P-p-b-b-t-t-t-t-t!"

Instead there was a hologram of that despicable Albert's face in full mocking expression, tongue out and all.

"WHAT IS THE MEANING OF THIS!" Eggman smashed the holographic emitter with his fist. "ORBOT, PREPARE MY WAR MACHINES! THIS INSULT WILL NOT BE ALLOWED TO STAND!"

"Th-th-that's what I've been t-t-trying to tell you, boss!" Orbot backed away nervously. "All of the war machines you've completed have been stolen! Along with many of your badniks and egg pawns! A-a-a-a–"

"SPIT IT OUT ALREADY!"

"Metal Sonic is also missing..."

"WHAT?! I... THAT'S... WHY DO I EVEN BOTHER REBUILDING HIM ANYWAY?!" (14)

High above the planet, within the interstellar amusement park Wily World:

Dr. Wily fumed over the robotic phony of that imbecilic Ivo. Of all the gall! To burst into Wily's own base and attack like that! And then for the whole thing to prove a mere diversion!

"Status!" he demanded of the Genesis Unit.

"Bad, sir," Buster Rod G reported. "Many of the new models you'd been working on were taken, along with... the Special Wily Numbers."

"How many?"

"I'm afraid all of them, sir..."

"OF ALL THE..." Dr. Wily spat. He'd meant those as a gift to Bass! See if his boy had what it took to succeed where Wily himself had kept falling short! "READY THE SKULL FLEET! IF IVO WANTS A WAR–"

"–HE'LL GET ONE!" Dr. Eggman commanded.

Somewhere else entirely:

He came online and looked around the room he was in. There was a metal canine next to him... his support unit; a metal mobian hedgehog... his partner; ten more bipedal figures of varying shapes and sizes... his army; and a bald rotund man with a large gray mustache... his master.

"Excellent!" the rotund man laughed. "How do you feel?"

"Ready to serve, master," he stood and bowed. "I shall see your enemies driven before you and record the lamentations of their loved ones."

"Excellent! Excellent!" the man laughed maniacally. "Everything is going exactly as planned!" (15)

"So, yeah, I agreed to convince the rest of the Chaotix to help look after the island while Knuckles hunts down whoever stole the Master Emerald, except Ray and Joe who Vector put on the missing chao case," Shade informed over the communicator.

"And you want me to back him up, I take it," Blues replied casually.

"You did practically raise him on the island this Loop," Shade reminded the red raider. "He'll accept help from you that he might not from anyone else."

"Damnit," Shadow swore as he got ready. "I can understand Metal Sonic hitting the G.U.N. base, but why capture Bass and Treble? And why just them?"

"Insufficient data," Omega replied. "Suggest hunting down quarry and asking the question at gunpoint."

"Before or after you fire?" Rouge asked.

"I am flexible," Omega intoned.

"Why am I not surprised..." Rouge sighed. "Anyway, I'm going to be you two's eye in the sky, so don't count on me in a fight right away."

"Understood," Shadow nodded.

"Okay everyone," Sally told the room. "We've got multiple situations going on right now. Tails and Roll?"

"Yes, Aunt Sally?"

"There's been a rash of chao disappearances lately, and apparently Cream's run off to investigate by herself. She's got Gemerl with her, but I want you two to back her up and help investigate. If your situation resolves early, rendezvous with Sonic and Rock."

"And what are we gonna be doing?" Sonic asked with a confident smirk.

"Metal Sonic's been sighted again," Sally informed them. "No information if he's the same one as before rebuilt or a completely new version."

"Gotcha, Sal. Hunt him down and smash with extreme prejudice."

"I think she'd like to know what he's up to first if possible," Rock cut in with bemusement.

"I most certainly would," Sally replied. "Amy and Rotor, the scans of Drs. Wily and Eggman mobilizing their fleets in space and moving on each other worries me. Try and find out what the heck set them off and see if you can possibly defuse the situation before their fight starts to affect anyone else. Get Antoine and Bunnie to help the moment they get back and bring Big in if you need the extra muscle. But so long as the doctors don't shoot at anything but each other, don't put yourself in harm's way."

"Roger that, Sally," Rotor agreed before Amy could protest being away from Sonic. "What about you and NICOLE?"

"We're going to be out scanning for the last Chaos Emerald in case we need it sooner than expected. Everyone got your assignments? Alright then, let's go!"

"This lack of chao around Soleanna is very worrisome," Elise muttered as she stepped into a back room away from the messenger who had reported the curious lack of chao sightings among the city's populace. Normally the creatures were very friendly and could be found in all manner of places. It was just that... right now they weren't.

"Quint," Silver asked after pondering the issue in relation to his experience in the Loops and coming up with a theory he really didn't like, "do you remember scanning Eggman Nega's files before we tracked him back to this timeline? Wasn't there something in them about chao?"

"There was," Quint nodded seriously. "A fire being native to another dimension known as the Ifrit supposedly gained strength from consuming chao..."

"That's awful!" Elise gasped.

"But Nega is trapped in a card in high orbit around the planet," Quint finished. "Surely he–"

"Did we ever go back and check?" Silver reminded his partner.

"No, but–"

"Then how can we be certain ?"

Quint was silent in answer.

"That horrid man you told me about?" Elise looked worried. "You think he's..."

"Yes..." Silver's face hardened. "Eggman Nega may still be alive..."

"My fellow robots!" he bellowed as he stood straight and tall before his ten generals, the full bulk of the army behind them, while his partner and support unit flanked him. "We stand ready to carry out the will of our mighty and illustrious master! We shall find what he seeks and secure it for him. All opposition shall be dealt with swiftly and mercilessly! We are strong! Our purpose is noble! Our cause is just! And the favor of our master goes with us! Spread out and select your target areas for search and waste no time! The glory of our master has waited long enough already!"

A great cheer went up as the robot army began to move out. As it did, his partner wirelessly asked him a question.

"Have no worries, my friend," he assured the metal hedgehog. "We have our own assignment. We are to personally waylay our master's enemies. In fact, I know just the ones we should start with..."

"Ooo...!" Cream worried as she dashed through the forest back and forth, before coming out next to a beach area. "I can't find any signs of chao anywhere! Where could they be, Cheese?"

"Chao-chao-chao..." Cream's companion drooped sadly.

"Miss Cream, thank you for finally slowing down," Gemerl sighed in relief as he caught up with the young rabbit. "It is dangerous to–"

"Gemerl!" the young rabbit brightened at the sight of her friend. "You came to help me rescue the chao-napped chao?"

"Er... that was the general idea..."

"Thank you so much!"

"N-now if I were a chao, where would I b-be...?" Ray pondered as he idly flew along the beach.

"Hiding from whoever wanted to capture you?" Joe suggested. "Assuming you weren't already."

"Well, yeah, but aside from that."

"Don't look at me, I'm not the chao whisperer." (16)

"So, Eggman Nega might be alive," Elise offered.

"Yes," Silver replied with a firm nod.

"And he might be behind the missing chao," the princess of Soleanna continued.

"It does fit with at least one of his unused schemes," Quint confirmed.

"But you don't know for certain."

"Er..."

"That is... accurate."

"In that case, I would like to remind you both that going on assumptions without evidence can be very dan–"

KA-BOOM!

Without any warning whatsoever, the wall of the room was blown apart. With reflexes honed to a razor's edge, Silver and Quint positioned themselves protectively in front of Elise almost instantly. A moment later and a shimmering barrier created by the princess herself covered them all.

"My sincerest apologies," a somewhat familiar voice came out of the dust as metal footsteps approached. "I meant only to knock, but I'm afraid I don't know my own strength."

As the dust settled, Silver and Quint each did a double-take at the identity of the intruder.

"Bass?" Quint asked in confusion. "What are you doing here? And why..."

Quint trailed off as a second figure was revealed by the settling dust.

"And why are you with Metal Sonic?" Silver asked dangerously.

The eyes of the robotic hedgehog flashed briefly before his black-armored companion spoke.

"It was a fair question, my friend," the black and gold robot spoke to his companion before turning back to the shielded trio. "You see, our master has tasked us with the elimination of his most dangerous enemies."

"Us," Elise nearly whispered.

"Oh, not you, princess," the dark robot gave a very polite smile. "Your powers are defensive in nature. Annoying, perhaps, but no direct threat. These two on the other hand... The warriors from a forgotten future, sent to the past to chase down a man they could never best on their own. Stranded in this time, unable to return. Yes, you are very much a threat indeed."

The robot hedgehog's eyes flashed again.

"Of course, to slay you here would be unsporting. You are, after all, at quite the handicap when you must defend others from collateral damage. So I propose a race. Keep up with my partner and me, and we shall grant you a swift and painless death befitting the warriors you are."

Silver and Quint exchanged wordless glances with each other and Elise before replying as one.

"You're on." (17)

"Okay," Tails looked along the beach he and Roll were searching, "Gemerl's transponder signal is in that direction and–whoa!"

All of a sudden, a squad of robots had charged out of the treeline towards them.

"Bet I can take out more than you," Roll grinned and got into a ready stance.

"You're on!"

"Look, I appreciate the gesture," Knuckles told his crimson companion as he approached a vantage point to get the lay of the land ahead, "but you can go back and tell Shade that I'm perfectly capable of taking care of my–what in the world?"

Down below a robot army marched forth, composed of various badniks and Egg Pawn models, but also mixed with...

"Those are Wily's designs down there," Blues stated after scanning the army, "but I don't recognize many of them... Then again, I'm not in my home Loop for many of the variants."

"But they hate each other this Loop," Knuckles considered the sight. "Why would an army of their mixed designs be marching together?"

"How much you want to bet it has to do with the stolen Master Emerald?"

"Rrrrgh... fine..." Knuckles grudgingly relented before a smile crept up his face. "Nice to have you along, big red."

"Multiple hostiles inbound, you two," Rouge reported over their comlink. "You should be within Omega's range in–shit!"

"Rouge?" Shadow called back on his own set.

"I'm fine," Rouge reported back. "Just ran afoul of these things' own air support. Just take them out fast!"

"Affirmative," Omega intoned as his hands became the barrels for a pair of chainguns that began spinning.

Trees of all shapes and sizes blurred past as the robot hedgehog and his partner raced the silver hedgehog and his green-armored companion far away from the city of Soleanna. As they reached an appropriate distance, the mechanical hedgehog's eyes flashed in signal.

"And here we are," the black-armored member of the duo smiled as he and his partner ceased running and turned to face their pursuers. "Now you can face your ends li–"

"No talking!" Quint yelled as he and Silver kept charging straight for their opponents. "Sakugarne!"

Quint's support unit appeared directly before him in a flash of red light and suddenly both he and the pogo-jackhammer were high in the air raining buster fire down on the opposing duo.

"So uncouth..." the black-armored human android tsked as he easily dodged the fire while his mobian-model partner engaged Silver. As his green armored opponent descended, he strafed for a good shot at the other robot's back and prepared to open fire.

He wasn't quite prepared for the speed at which the other robot spun around and interposed his armored support unit as a shield, causing the rapid buster fire to ping harmlessly off the thick crimson plating. He also wasn't prepared for the psychokinetic blow to the back that blasted him forwards.

It seemed however, that his partner was coming up to blindside the green-armored foe, only for said foe to again spin around and catch the metal hedgehog in a rising blow from his support unit before finishing the spin to bring the same piece of machinery directly into his black chestplate.

With a grunt, he was sent tumbling across the ground. The moment he got his feet under him, he registered the sound of an impact nearby and noted that his partner had been thrown to the ground by the silver hedgehog as well.

"You're holding back, Bass," the green robot accused. "You should have known what would happen if you did that."

"Indeed," the accused robot admitted. "I have most thoroughly underestimated your ability. But it is no matter. The objective was accomplished."

A shrill whistle and his canine support unit appeared and after a moment united with him.

"We shall see how you fare against the first of my master's armies," the now-winged robot laughed as he rose into the air on his thrusters, his partner right behind him.

The first units of that army were charging Quint and Silver before he was fully gone.

"This is odd..." NICOLE mused as she and Sally flew through the air on their Extreme Gear. "The signal from the last emerald is registering only faintly... like it's in another zone..."

"Can you find the entrance portal?" Sally asked.

"That's just it," NICOLE replied in confusion, "I'm getting multiple readings for the entrance portal, but only partial strength. Almost as if the portal is in pieces."

"That is odd... Lock onto the nearest one and let's check it out."

"Got it, Sally, the nearest one is–Look out!"

Both of them swerved sharply as something airborne nearly collided with them, so sharply that they lost control of their Extreme Gear and began losing altitude. As they dropped near to the ground, a series of egg-shaped explosives were launched up at them from below.

"What the heck is that ?" Sonic made a face at the large war machine he and Rock were facing.

"Hohohohoho!" something that sounded like a recording of Eggman's laugh played from the machine. "How do you like my latest creation? The Egg Platypus!"

"The Egg what?" Sonic's face twisted in disgust even further. "Man, you've really hit bottom on ideas, haven't you Baldy McNosehair?"

"Actually, that's a Wily design," Rock supplied as he and Sonic dodged a salvo of egg-shaped bombs. "The Platypressor if I'm not mistaken. I've seen it in a few recurring variants before."

"Okay," Sonic nodded, jumping over a missile, "so someone that sounds like Eggman stole Wily's toys."

"And according to NICOLE, someone swiped the yellow Chaos Emerald from Eggman before she and Sally could and left a hologram of Wily taking credit."

"Yeesh," Sonic grimaced as he decided he'd had enough of dodging and homing attacked the machine, sending sparks flying from damaged circuits on impact. "I think we've figured out why the bad doctors are at each others' throats..."

It had taken them a fair amount of fighting, but Quint and Silver had fought their way to an abandoned building where they were sure the commander was stationed. And, sure enough they'd found what appeared to be a Robot Master waiting inside.

"So you're the commander of this army?" Quint asked of the orange-armored humanoid robot before him. The robot looked... ridiculous. It wasn't the orange coloration that did it, but rather...

"Are those yo-yos?" Silver raised an eyebrow at the neon-teal additions to the robot's armor. Two on each feet almost like wheels, one in each hand (possibly produced by the large openings on the underside of his wrist armor), a pair of small ones where his ears would be, and a gigantic one on his forehead.

"Of course!" the robot grinned back confidently. "I am the invincible Yo-Yo Man! My terrible and mighty power shall carve you to shreds!" (18)

"Uh-huh..." Quint snorted dubiously. "What are you going to do, walk the dog?"

"Why not?" Yo-Yo Man smirked. "I'll consider it a last request of yours! Here it comes!"

With that, the Robot Master whipped his arms forward and released a yo-yo each at both Quint and Silver. Yo-yos that promptly sprouted razor-sharp blades as they easily cut through the cement floor and sped at their targets.

Quint and Silver wasted no time getting out of the way and watched as the bladed yo-yos returned to Yo-Yo Man's hands, retracting their blades at the last moment.

"That's the deadliest dog walking I've ever seen..." Silver offered.

"Now try this trick!" Yo-Yo Man grinned as he jumped into the air and again flung his bladed yo-yos at them. They dodged easily, and Silver attempted to counter with a homing attack, only to be kicked away when he got close. Quint managed to take advantage of the opening to shoot Yo-Yo Man in the back. The Robot Master grimaced from the shots as he retracted his weapons and landed before whipping them at Quint one after the other.

The robot from the future dove to the side as Silver psychokinetically slung some debris into Yo-Yo Man's back.

"Looks like you can't keep up with us," Silver smirked.

"Cut the crap!" Yo-Yo Man shot back angrily. "I've still got my best stuff! Let's see you handle this one!"

Yo-Yo Man whipped his head this time, sending the giant yo-yo mounted to his helmet shooting upwards where it lodged its blades in the ceiling before the attached cable pulled Yo-Yo Man upwards where he swung through the air.

"And now..." Yo-Yo Man grinned. "Around the World!"

He whipped forth first one and then the other of his bladed yo-yos to grind across the floor at blinding speed, then up the walls, across the ceiling, down the other wall, and back across the floor again before returning to his hands.

Quint and Silver dodged the bladed hazards readily, but the way their opponent was swinging around made it hard to counterattack while they avoided his strikes.

"Hey, Silver," Quint spoke as the two evaded another round, "do you remember what we did to Nega's Egg Pendulum?"

Silver blinked for a moment. Quint's recollection of their shared post-Solaris history was clearer than his own (Silver was never quite clear on why those particular Loop memories always came in fuzzy for him, continually leaving pre-Solaris memories clearer for him when those events took place), but after a moment he recalled one of their battles with the madman before coming back in time and grinned.

"Sounds like a plan."

"Then let's go! Sakugarne!" Quint summoned his support unit and bounded into the air where Yo-Yo Man's current swing was set to take him.

"Oh no you don't!" Yo-Yo Man countered with a kick that clanged off of Sakugarne's armor and just sent himself back the other way that much faster.

"Service!" Silver called out as he rose to meet Yo-Yo Man's swing, deflecting the latest throw of bladed yo-yos with some psychikinetically manipulated debris and kicked the Robot Master back at Quint.

Quint bounced up to meet the return swing on Sakugarne and swung the support unit like a bat, clobbering Yo-Yo Man back at his partner.

Silver met the disoriented robot with his psychokinesis and gave a hard mental shove back at Quint, who had bounced back up and was now holding Sakugarne like a jousting lance.

With a mighty crunch, Sakugarne punched through Yo-Yo Man's torso armor and then the jackhammer point pistoned forward to blow the back of the Robot Master's torso out. Yo-Yo Man had an utterly shocked look on his face as his systems failed and his eyes went blank before he crashed into the ground.

"Well, that was fun," Silver dusted his hands off. "Still... this is more up Wily's alley than Nega's. Or even Dr. Eggman's for that matter."

"True," Quint nodded. "And this is clearly one of his designs..."

Quint bent over and touched the Robot Master, the green parts of his armor turning orange while the lighter lime green parts became a bright teal.

"Wow... It's been forever since you used your copy chip to get weapons," Silver noted.

"Nega never really made anything worth having," Quint shrugged. "And he still hasn't. The original serial for this one places him as one of the Special Wily Numbers. The same series as Bass himself."

"The 'original' serial number?" Silver asked.

"Yeah," Quint nodded. "The SWN designation has been overwritten by an ENN one."

"EN–" Silver cut off as he realized what that had to stand for.

"Eggman Nega..." they both said together.

"You're here to help us rescue the chao?" Cream asked with excitement.

"Of course we are, Cream," Tails replied easily.

"You're our friend and we know how much you love chao," Roll added.

"Yay!"

"Good to have you aboard," Gemerl replied politely.

"I bet me and Gemerl can rescue more chao than you can!"

"It's 'Gemerl and I', Cr–"

"You're on!" Tails accepted with a grin.

"More hostiles inbound," Rouge reported to Shadow and Omega. "Look to be stronger than most of the others we've seen so far."

"As long as they aren't as ridiculous as that platypus robot, I don't care," Shadow growled back. "I could use something to take my frustrations out on."

"Let the fools come and face our superior power," Omega agreed in his usual monotone.

"Hold one, I'm increasing the zoom on my lens for a better look..." Rouge continued. "It looks like Metal Sonic and..."

"And...?" Shadow prompted into the silence.

"I don't believe this..." Rouge whispered incredulously.

"State the identity of the soon-to-be-scrapped target," Omega insisted.

"It's..."

"Well, well, if it isn't the noble Agents of G.U.N..." a voice far too familiar for Shadow's comfort interrupted, prompting him to turn in its direction.

Shadow felt his mind skip a groove at the sight. That looked like Metal Sonic alright, but right next to him...

"Precisely who we were looking for," the other figure smiled regally. "You see, our master has ordered your demise. I hope that you are able to meet your end with dignity befitting warriors of your station."

"Bass?" Omega queried in a primarily monotone voice that still held more confusion than either Rouge or Shadow could recall any version of their war machine ally ever expressing. "Error: Does not compute..."

"It seems we may have come at a bad time, my friend," the familiar black and gold robot spoke to the silent blue robotic hedgehog next to him, getting a flash of red optics in response. "True, we are pressed for time. I'm afraid we simply cannot wait fo–"

The robotic hedgehog whipped his head around suddenly and activated a force field as he interposed himself between the humanoid robot and an incoming plasma blast.

"I don't know what the hell your game is, Bass, but you will tell me where the Master Emerald is!" Knuckles accused as he and Blues landed nearby.

"I beg your pardon?" the black robot quirked an eyebrow at the accusation.

"Don't play dumb with us," Blues shot back calmly. "I detected multiple wireless commands being issued to the latest robot army from both you and your 'friend' there. Whatever's going on, you're neck deep in it."

The robot hedgehog's eyes flashed and his humanoid companion got a considering look on his face.

"I agree. This just became more problematic than it's worth. Time for a tactical withdrawal."

"Oh no you don't!" Knuckles yelled as the two enemy robots turned and sped off. "Get back here and answer me!"

"After them!" Rouge insisted through Shadow and Omega's communicators. "We need to find out what happened to Bass before they get to him!"

"Sorry," the red raider smirked as the two teams took off after their mutual quarry, "you'll have to get in line. No cutting."

"Lines are for inferior models," Omega retorted.

"Damnit, we're getting nowhere like this..." Silver cursed as he and Quint fought their way through a gauntlet of brightly colored lasers. "Bass and Metal Sonic are long gone by now..."

"Did someone say 'Metal Sonic'?" a familiar voice cut in. Silver turned to see a pair of familiar blue figures joining up with him and Quint. "Cause we heard that faker was up to no good somewhere around here."

"If it isn't the 'Iblis triggers'," Quint smirked at Sonic's reflexive scowl, ducking under another laser as he did. "What brings you around here?"

"We heard Metal Sonic had been seen and we're here to find out what he's up to," the Mega Man replied as he blasted one of the laser guidance robots to face in a different direction.

"He's one of the ones commanding these robot armies," Quint replied. "Along with Bass."

The robot from the future did his best to conceal a smirk as the Mega Man stumbled momentarily from that bit of information.

"Bass?" the blue bomber asked in confusion, sliding under another of the laser beams.

"With Metal Sonic?" the blue blur sounded just as incredulous as he jumped the same beam of light.

"That's what we saw," Silver confirmed, psychokinetically turning two of the laser guidance robots on each other.

"Okay," the Mega Man's expression hardened. "We really need to get to the bottom of this, fast."

"Sounds good to me," Sonic nodded. "Right after we survive these 'happy shiny beams of death' here." (19)

"Y-you f-f-found anything yet?" Ray asked.

"Not yet, but we're getting closer," Sally replied, looking at the display on NICOLE's hand-held body while the pocket supercomputer's holographic form followed nearby.

"Why are you two following us anyway?" NICOLE asked. "I understand that your case is to investigate missing chao."

"Neither of us happened to be outfitted for chao tracking when we were assigned," Joe shrugged, "and Vector insisted that we had to start immediately."

"So you're hoping to get lucky," NICOLE nodded. (20)

"Y-yeah," Ray rubbed his head sheepishly. "P-p-pretty much."

"Just don't attempt to steal whatever we find an–" NICOLE cut off suddenly and looked in the direction of Sally who was clearing away some thick underbrush.

"A-and what?" Ray blinked nervously.

"It's here," Sally said as she delved deeper into the undergrowth. "It's right..."

Sally trailed off as she stopped and stared at something she'd uncovered while the other three joined her and looked at the object over her shoulder.

"W-what is it?" Ray asked in confusion.

The object Sally had uncovered seemed to be a large curved piece of machinery colored a pale cyan that shimmered independent of the light that shone on it. As is shimmered, parts of it seemed to fade from sight and then back again as the four watched.

"Scanning..." Joe intoned and his single optic flashed. "Scans inconclusive. Unknown physical composition. Multiple partial matches on known energy signatures, but no full match in existing database."

"Whatever it is, it's emanating the partial energy signature concurrent with a portal leading to a Zone that contains a Chaos Emerald," NICOLE added.

"Is th-that a letter on it?" Ray blinked and leaned closer to the object. "I-I-It l-looks like a k-k-k-'K'..."

"You are all indeed as skilled as your files would indicate," a voice greeted the two teams of robot and hedgehog. It was hard to see where the voice came from as at some point, something had darkened the sky above into an artificial night. "But you should know that even your great skills shall fall short in the face of the power arrayed against you."

"Who's there?" Silver demanded. "Show yourself!"

"A storm is coming..." the voice declared as a robot dropped from above to face the quartet. He possessed magenta armor with lime green highlights, including the lime green antenna jutting up from his helmet and a pair of dark shades lowered over his eyes. His right arm ended in what looked like an energy crossbow rather than a hand. Bright lights flashing a rainbow of colors were embedded on his shins, forearms, torso, and ringing the top of his helmet. "...and I am its herald."

"Who the heck are you supposed to be?" Sonic gave the brightly colored robot an odd look. "Rainbow Man?"

"I was unaware my reputation had preceded me," the Robot Master seemed mildly surprised.

"...You're kidding me..." Sonic gaped. "That's... That's the most ridiculous thing I've... Gah!" (21)

"Which probably means he's just as dangerous," Rock readied his arm cannon.

"Yeah, we had a reminder about that recently," Quint agreed, mirroring the movement and smirking. "Whoever beats him gets to keep his weapon."

"Huh?" Rock blinked and almost missed Rainbow Man starting his attack.

"Take this!" the brightly colored robot jumped and fired a shining energy arrow into the ground before the group. Rather than dissipate, the energy arrow actually stuck in the ground, allowing the prism-shaped top to sit in prominence.

The group realized the purpose for the energy-formed prism and scattered right as Rainbow Man shot the object with a multi-colored laser, resulting in a wide shimmering cone-shaped beam of death and destruction that the four barely avoided.

"Oh come on!" Sonic yelled. "We had enough 'happy shiny beams of death' just getting here!"

"There it is!" Cream pointed at the bizarre vehicle that had sucked up a pair of chao in front of the two teams before turning and burning rubber in the other direction. "You let those chao go you big meanie!"

The vehicle looked like the illegitimate offspring of a dragster and an armadillo, with a spiked mace glued to the end of its tail that bounced along dangerously behind it as it sped on its way.

"Ohohohohoho!" a recorded Eggman laugh played. "You're fast, but no match for my supreme Egg Liner!"

"Buddy, that has got to be the ugliest car I've ever seen, and that's saying something," Gemerl narrowed his eyes as the four closed in on the machine.

"I've seen worse, but it's still up there," Tails agreed as he flew along and punched in some numbers on his handheld device. "Okay, I'm showing a weak point in the back–"

"–at the base of the tail, right?" Roll finished, earning an exasperated look from the flying fox. "What? It's clear that area's designed for a rear-facing cockpit, which is where all of Eggman's machines are vulnerable. You'd think none of us had done this before."

"I know, but–"

"Don't worry, Mr. Tails, there'll be plenty of time to impress me when I'm older," Cream smiled innocently.

"Wha–I–Bu–" Tails sputtered and nearly dropped from his flight.

"I wonder who told her to say that?" Roll whispered to Gemerl. "Amy? Bunnie? Sally? NICOLE?"

"I believe it was her mother, actually," Gemerl whispered back. (22)

"Give it up, Bass!" the black hedgehog known as Shadow declared as he and his bat companion Rouge flanked the black robot on one side while the crimson echidna Knuckles and the Proto Man covered his other side. "We have you surrounded! There's no escape!"

"That's is where you have erred!" he shot back, hastily reviewing his options. His partner was currently pinned down under his forcefield attempting to wait out the seemingly endless stream of bullets that the walking arsenal was firing at him. Did that thing ever run out of ammunition?

It looked like he needed his support unit again. His master had made sure he was strong, but one against four were not the most favorable odds. He whistled shrilly and felt the appearance of his canine companion entering the field of battle.

"Crash!" he called out immediately after sending the target info wirelessly. His canine support did not disappoint as the robot dog immediately pounced on the walking arsenal Omega with a loud crash, finally allowing his partner to drop the forcefield and engage the hostiles.

"It's been a pleasure," he bid his opponents farewell with both his words and scattered shots from his buster, "but I'm afraid I have other appointments to keep!"

"Damnit!" one of his opponents cursed furiously. "Don't let them escape!"

'Split up,' he sent the plan to his partner and support unit wirelessly as they all fled. 'They can't follow us all. Do your best to lose pursuit and join back up.'

"How the heck does someone that slow move that fast?!" Sonic complained as he got back to his feet from his tumble. He could be forgiven for calling Rainbow Man slow, as many were compared to Sonic. Rainbow Man might not have been the fastest Robot Master ever, but he was no slouch. He was also surprisingly nimble and had impressive reaction times.

"Do you inferior lifeforms do anything but complain?" the lights on Rainbow Man's armor flashed a multitude of colors as he fired another bright shimmering laser beam at them, almost blinding in the artificial night around them.

"We kick robot ass!" Silver shot back as Rock and Quint returned buster fire, along with a large piece of debris that he'd hefted with his psychokinesis. The piece of debris clipped Rainbow Man as he dodged, sending the robot tumbling.

"A lucky shot..." Rainbow Man growled as a small cloud gathered above him. "It shall be your last..."

The cloud suddenly began raining, along with two others in the room and Rainbow Man vanished from sight in the deluge. Completely from sight; magenta armor, lime green highlights, multicolored lights, and all.

"Okay, hiding something that obnoxiously bright?" Sonic grunted. "I hate to say it, but I'm impressed."

"I doubt it's simply to hide," Rock turned to one of the other clouds in the room and aimed his arm cannon at it. "Be ready for an attack. Probably lightning."

"Makes sense," Quint decided to cover the third raining cloud while Sonic and Silver watched the first that Rainbow Man had vanished into. "Where do you think it'll come from?"

"I just assume it'll be all of them," Rock replied right as all three clouds flashed and unleashed glowing blue orbs of electricity at them all. From the could Quint was covering, Rainbow Man popped straight up into the air and fired another of his bright energy arrows. They all jumped away from the impact zone, which was fortunate as this time the arrow unleashed a wave of yellow electricity along the ground in all directions when it hit. And again it stuck, with an energy prism topping it, ready for the laser Rainbow Man was already preparing to fire the moment he landed.

Quint was already opening up with his arm cannon the moment he'd jumped out of the energy arrow's way and when he saw Rainbow Man's plan, he summoned Sakugarne to block the laser shot from hitting the energy prism and becoming a wide-beam attack.

"That won't save you!" Rainbow Man yelled as he charged while Rock and Sonic were having to adjust to the realization that they weren't going to have to evade a wide-beam laser again.

"Silver!" Quint called out as his armor turned red and teal and he threw a Yo-Yo Cutter at his opponent. "You hold!"

Rainbow Man contemptuously backhanded the bladed weapon and jumped over the combined assault of Rock's buster fire and Sonic's Spin Dash.

And then he was caught in mid-air by a psychic aura, immobilizing him.

"And you punch," Silver grinned as Quint donned Sakugarne's power adaptor.

The pistoned blow of Quint's power adaptor's fists practically blew Rainbow Man in half from the fully-charged body blow he landed.

"Ow..." Sonic winced as Silver released the Robot Master and let him collapse.

"Agreed," Rock nodded, watching Quint claim Rainbow Man's weapon, the futuristic robot's green armor turning magenta while the lime green pieces remained the same color.

"I make no apologies for what works," Quint snorted in the direction of the two blue heroes.

"How about brutality?" Sonic snarked. "Do you apologize for that?"

"See previous statement," Quint leveled back, getting a chuckle from Silver.

"In any case," Rock headed off the impending argument. "We need to see if we can track down Bass and Metal Sonic. Good luck to you both."

"You as well," Quint replied.

"I cannot help but feel a bit insulted," Joe mused as he looked at the remains of the squad of yellow-colored Sniper Joes that had ambushed the group. Their energy shots might have been large and bright, but they weren't particularly powerful in comparison with Joe's own buster shots.

"Remind us to tell you about Eggman's Metal Series sometime," NICOLE replied easily as she scanned the remains of a large green machine, one that had hopped around on piston-like limbs trying to crush them all, to ensure it was as inactive as it looked.

"W-wasn't that when h-he made robot doubles of a-a-all the Freedom F-fighters?" Ray asked.

"Yeah," Sally nodded. "Before we were really 'official' even, but none of them had the same level of engineering that Metal Sonic did. I think we all felt insulted by that." (23)

"Perhaps we shall," Joe agreed. "For now though, I think it best that Ray and I investigate where the hostile units came from. Perhaps they are connected to the chao disappearances."

"And Sally and I shall continue searching for these strange items," NICOLE nodded towards the bizarre shimmering/misappearing partial device that Sally was currently storing in her subspace pocket. "Perhaps our paths shall converge later."

"Too bad we lost sight of Cream," Roll stood atop the Egg Liner and scanned the horizon. A lucky shot had sent the young rabbit tumbling through the air into the distance. Cream was probably fine, given that she could fly with her ears, but Gemerl had still jetted off after her and left Roll and Tails to finish off the weird armadillo dragster thing.

"Yeah... I really don't want to explain this to Vanilla," Tails sweatdropped.

"What's the problem?" Roll wondered. "Just tell her what happened. That a dragster/armadillo hybrid machine got in a lucky shot and sent Cream flying into the forest... and I just realized how ridiculous that sounds out of context."

"What possible context could make that sound less ridiculous?" Tails quirked an eyebrow at the golden gladiator.

"Eggman," Roll raised a finger, and then another. "Wily."

"Pfft... That doesn't make it any less ridiculous, just more dangerous."

Roll opened her mouth to argue, and then closed it again, blinking rapidly. "How long did it take you to realize that many of the things you consider normal around Eggman were actually ridiculous?"

"A lot longer than I like to admit," Tails sighed heavily.

Silver and Quint were racing into the heart of the next army of robots when they were nearly blindsides by a crimson projectile. About the only thing that saved them was the enraged shout said projectile announced itself with.

"THERE YOU ARE!" was Silver's only warning to brake before something angry and red impacted the spot he'd been about to cross. "TELL ME WHERE THE MASTER EMERALD IS YO–Wait..." The form of Knuckles blinked as the dust his impact had kicked up cleared. "You're not Metal Sonic."

"DO I LOOK BLUE AND METALLIC TO YOU?!" Silver yelled back at the guardian of Angel Island.

"I don't know, if you tilt your head and squint just right–" Quint cut himself off and turned to the other voice that had been speaking the same words to see the form of the Proto Man looking right back at him.

"Jinx," the red raider smirked, "you owe me an E-Tank."

"Oww..." Cream rubbed her head as she landed on her feet. That had hurt, and it had separated her from Tails and Roll and Gemerl and...

"Chao?"

At least Cheese was still with her.

"Cream?" a familiar voice asked in surprise.

"Miss Sally?" Cream blinked and turned to see the princess looking at her, along with Miss NICOLE.

"What are you doing here?"

"Well, I was rescuing chao when one of Eggman's meanie machines popped up and–"

"Cream!" Gemerl exclaimed as he landed next to Cream. "Thank goodness you are unharmed." The android turned and bowed politely to Sally. "Your highness, thank you for looking after her for me."

"Actually, we just found her," Sally clarified.

"We know you're looking into the missing chao," NICOLE added, "and we have our own mission at the moment."

"I see... Formally requesting permission to join you for the duration, your highness, ma'am. I've detected many dangerous hostiles in the area and I think strength in numbers may be the order of the day. Besides, there is the possibility that your mission and the missing chao are related."

Sally and NICOLE exchanged a momentary glance.

"Why not?"

"Yay!"

He'd shaken the red pair, but the G.U.N. agents had managed to remain on his tail even after he'd rejoined with his partner and support unit.

"Submit yourself to our custody or be filled with holes," the walking arsenal demanded.

"I'll have to respectfully decline, I'm afraid!" he called back. "I have other demands on my attention at the moment!"

"Like us!" a new voice joined the fray and his partner confirmed the arrival of a pair of blue nuisances and identified them as Sonic and the Mega Man. "I'm always demanding people's attention!"

"Bass!" the Mega Man called out. "I'm giving you one chance to surrender and tell us what you're up to! You and Metal Sonic both!"

"Already tried that, hon!" the bat-woman called. "He's made it pretty clear that option's not up for negotiation!"

"I guess we'll just have to change his mind!" the blue hedgehog sounded way too enthusiastic about the prospect.

"Not if we get to him first!" the black hedgehog shot back.

This was again becoming problematic. Time to call for backup...

"Thanks!" Roll called back as the robot that had been about to ambush her was shot out of the air.

"You're welcome," Joe replied. "I'm just glad you didn't shoot me when we ran into each other."

"R-r-roll wouldn't do th-that!" Ray protested as he divebombed one of the yellow Joe models.

"If these Joe models were green, she might have," Tails used one of his nicknamesakes to swat a grenade back at the robot who threw it. "They've been swarming us ever since we got to this area."

"I like to think I wouldn't have even if they were, but being shot at tends to make me jumpy," Roll replied, shooting a robot that had tried to ambush Joe.

"Understandable," Joe nodded as he took aim at the next wave.

"Come on!" Knuckles yelled as he uppercutted another robot out of the way. "I'm not even working up a sweat!"

"Oh, nice way to tempt fate there, Knuckles," Silver snorted as he psychokinetically shoved a few robots aside himself. "Bets on how long it takes before–"

"ATTEN-SHUN!" a booming voice bellowed, making all of the enemy robots halt what they were doing and stand straight without moving an inch. Even the four heroes paused instinctively at the sound of the voice before turning to its owner.

"That was fast," Quint raised an unseen eyebrow behind his blue shades.

The Robot Master was clad in army green and gunmetal gray armor that looked to have been stripped straight off of a tank. Including the turret and cannon mounted straight to his back, the treads he had instead of feet, the extra cannons mounted to his shins, and the look of the arm cannon he had in place of a right hand. He had a pair of armored plates over his face, one which covered his lower face and whatever mouth he had, and one over his forehead that angled on the bottom over his eyes to give him a perpetually angry look. He was, however, a relatively normal size rather than the bulky look most robots with loads of military hardware possessed.

"All of you metal maggots who can't seem to take out four mobian-sized targets drop down and give me 865,309 push ups!" the Robot Master demanded. (24)

"Okay, so we're facing an insane drill sergeant," Blues noted wrily as the enemy robots began to do exactly as ordered. Or at least tried to. It was hard for the ones without arms to do push ups.

"Did I say you could speak, maggot?!" the Robot Master demanded. "There is no room for weakness in this robot's army!"

"So, what? You're going to make us drop and do pushups?" Quint folded his arms defiantly. "Who the hell do you think you are?"

"I'm Tank Man, and I'm just going to plain drop you!" the robot declared as he aimed all four of his cannons at them and fired.

"Uh-oh..." Rock slowed his run suddenly as he spotted the change in his quarry.

"What?" Sonic asked, reluctantly letting the members of Team Dark overtake him in their own pursuit.

"Bass, Treble, and Metal Sonic just stopped running," Rock noted as he skidded to a halt behind the members of Team Dark who had also realized the change and refrained from charging straight into a potential trap.

"Alright, Bass!" Shadow demanded. "Time for answers!"

"Very well," the black and gold robot replied calmly, flanked silently by the other two units. "I have concluded that it is most unsporting for all of you to keep getting reinforcements. So..."

There was a rumbling as a battalion of tanks being driven by yellow Sniper Joes burst into the clearing from behind the speaker.

"Oh, great..."

"...I called in a few of my own."

"Okay, this just got a lot more interesting..." Rouge took a ready stance.

"Adjusting combat protocols for target rich environment," Omega intoned.

"Miss Sally!" Cream called out from an outcropping nearby. "Is this what you're looking for?"

Jumping up to where Cream was perched, Sally saw the object wedged in between a pair of rocks. It was the same weird shimmering not-quite-there material as the other one and... yes, she could just make out a marking that looked like a 'U'.

"That's exactly it, Cream," Sally smiled, prompting the young rabbit to beam proudly. "Good eye. Now let's..."

Sally trailed off as she heard a faint rumbling sound. Before she could puzzle out what it was, both she and Cream were yanked from their perch by their respective partners just in time to avoid something huge bursting out of the rock face and right through where they'd been standing.

"Ohohoho! You're too late!" a voice like Eggman's gloated loudly from the unholy red and yellow spawn of a tank and a centipede that had emerged, clutching the relatively tiny mystery object in its metal mandibles. "My Egg Crawler has it now and there's nothing you can do about it!"

"Th-th-that is a b-big tank..." Ray gulped nervously as the huge treaded machine bore down on the group. The thing was red and gray, a bit taller than a two-story building, drove on a single wide tank tread, had a main cannon that either Ray or Tails could have crawled inside that emerged just below the first cockpit which contained a yellow Sniper Joe, with another two angled cannons higher up on the machine just below the top cockpit where another Sniper Joe sat.

"It's funny..." Tails said as he looked the machine over. "All I can really think about is the fact that I can't quite tell if this is more Eggman's style or Wily's..."

The main cannon began glowing as it charged and the four heroes scattered out of the way as a massive yellow burst of energy shot forth.

"Incoming!" Joe called out as a pair of treaded METs fell from above, fired out of the angled cannons.

"I see them!" Roll yelled back and began firing.

"Any ideas?" Silver asked as he and Quint took cover from the latest round of explosions Tank Man's arsenal produced. Nearby, Knuckles and the Proto Man were both huddled behind the latter's shield as they waited for an opening.

"Yes, but unfortunately E-123 Omega isn't here," the robot from the future replied before turning magenta and lime green. When the explosions stopped, he ducked out from behind his cover and fired the Rainbow Beam at the militant Robot Master, the multi-colored laser bursting into a flare of damaging prismatic light when it hit its target.

Unfortunately, Tank Man seemed none the worse for wear from the hit and he returned fire with more explosives and heavy artillery rounds.

"This reminds me of the Mega Egg Tank..." Silver mused as the explosions sounded around them.

"Heh..." Quint smirked. "Yeah, that was the first time we tried..."

"Are you thinking what I'm thinking?" Silver grinned.

In the chaos created by the Tank Joes, Rock almost missed it when their actual opponents made a break for it.

"Sonic!"

"I see them!" the blue blur yelled back and used the ricochet from his Homing Attack to begin pursuit, Rock close behind and blasting one of the tanks as he left.

"Don't let them get a–" Shadow cut himself off as one of the tanks moved in front of him and he curled into a Spin Dash to destroy it. Unfortunately, that one moment of lost visual was all his quarry and the duo of blue heroes needed to vanish from sight. "DAMNIT!"

"We'll catch up later!" Rouge reminded as Omega destroyed the last of the tanks. "First we need to mop up the rest of these yellow robots!"

"Then leave it to me!" Shadow growled, needing to vent his frustration. "CHAOS BLAST!"

Gemerl landed on top of the Egg Crawler's cockpit with a resounding boom, causing the mystery object to be dislodged from the machine's mandibles and the tank-centipede to shudder from the repeated abuse it had suffered before collapsing in a smoldering heap.

"Well, that was interesting," NICOLE observed as Sally collected the object and put it away.

"Yes, it was..." Sally agreed. "Especially the fact that whoever was controlling this machine wanted to get ahold of this object."

"Huh?" Cream blinked in confusion. "Isn't it Eggman?"

"Unlikely," NICOLE replied, thinking of the space war between Eggman and Wily's fleets right now. "Dr. Eggman is currently... otherwise occupied."

"That is interesting," Gemerl agreed. "Though who would pretend to be–"

"CHAO-CHAO-CHAO!" Cheese cried out suddenly, pointing at the downed Egg Crawler.

"Oh my gosh!" Cream gasped as she turned to see the pseudo cockpit rise out of the wreck to reveal that it was actually a container holding several captive chao inside. It sped off the moment it cleared the wreck and Cream took off after it a moment later, Cheese hot on her trail.

"Farewell, your highness, ma'am," Gemerl bowed curtly to Sally and NICOLE. "Best of luck."

"...What happened to sticking together?" NICOLE wondered as the android sped off after his young charge.

"Cute chao in peril happened," Sally sighed as she checked the scanner on NICOLE's handheld form to see where the next target was. "Looks like the next signal is pretty far away..."

Knuckles swore as his attempt to strike Tank Man from behind was met with a vicious backhand as the Robot Master, who had been charging at Blues, abruptly braked and reversed direction. He then turned and fired at Blues who had come out from behind his shield to fire his arm cannon and had to hastily abort his attack and dash out of the way.

"You maggots have nothing that can stop me!" Tank Man bellowed as he turned his cannons on Silver... and noticed a distinct absence of Quint.

"How about... Death From Above?" the silver hedgehog smirked.

Tank Man had just enough time for his eyes to widen in realization before the tip of Sakugarne crashed into his back with all the weight of both the jackhammer itself and Quint behind it.

The two yellow Sniper Joes abandoned the tank after the thing had taken too much damage to remain combat capable. Unfortunately for them, the flying duo of Tails and Ray were ready and smashed them well before they landed.

"Well?" Roll asked when the dust had settled. "I understand you two are also investigating the missing chao? You want to come with us?"

"Thank you, but no," Joe replied before Ray could say anything. "This tank remains relatively intact and is clearly designed for Joe model interfacing. It may have some information, so we will remain here and investigate it. You go ahead."

"Okay," Tails shrugged. "If you insist."

"Interesting look," Blues commented on the dark army green and gunmetal gray of Quint's armor after the robot from the future had copied Tank Man's weapon.

"I don't decide the colors," Quint replied, his armor's coloration returning to normal.

"Still no leads on the Master Emerald," Knuckles sighed. "Where the hell is it?"

"No idea," Quint replied. "Tank Man's databanks don't have any record of it, but that may not mean anything. Nega may have taken it and simply not told his lieutenants he had it."

"Nega?" Blues asked sharply.

"Didn't we leave him trapped in a card?" Knuckles added.

"We did," Silver nodded. "He apparently got out. Unless you know anyone else that the initials 'EN' might stand for."

"'EN'?" Blues asked.

"These Robot Masters were stolen from Dr. Wily and originally bore the serials of his Special Wily Numbers," Quint informed them. "The SWN series."

"Bass's series," Blues scowled in thought.

"Oh, this just keeps getting better and better..." Knuckles grimaced.

"Yes, but the serial numbers have been overwritten," Silver continued. "To an 'ENN' series."

"Eggman Nega Numbers," Knuckles quickly reached the same conclusion that Silver and Quint had.

"We're going after the rest of the series," Quint declared. "We'll keep you informed if we find anything on the Master Emerald."

"We appreciate that," Blues nodded before he and Knuckles sped off to continue their search.

The black robot tsked to himself as he scanned behind him in case those two blue interlopers were still following. Only to be interrupted by a new set of orders from his master.

The man wanted him to... escort a container of chao back to the base?

Well... he was the master after all.

"New course," he informed his partner and support unit, getting a flash of red eyes and a bark in acknowledgement before changing direction.

"I can't believe we lost them!" Shadow growled as he raced across the countryside towards a city. At least an industrial one along the general direction that they'd seen the trio of enemy robots head in.

"Lost who?" the voice of Tails piped up as the flying fox, with the Mega Woman in tow, came up alongside Team Dark.

"Bass and Metal Sonic," Rouge informed them with a sigh. "With Treble."

"They went this way?" Roll did a double take before increasing her speed. "Come on Tails!"

"Hey!" Rouge and Shadow yelled together as they also picked up their pace, determined to catch their quarry before anyone else could.

Knuckles and Blues were passing by a huge busted-up husk of a tank when they heard the call.

"Kn-nuckles! Proto M-man! O-over here!" the voice of Ray yelled from a short distance away, waving the two over.

"Hey Ray!" Knuckles grinned as he skidded to a halt in front of the flying squirrel.

"Joe," Blues greeted curtly.

"Project: Blues," Joe acknowledged.

"What's up?" Knuckles asked, shrugging off the staring contest between the two robots. Blues had always been... a bit overly formal around Joe. And wasn't inclined to share why. Maybe it was the fact that they both carried shields, or that they were developed for the military, or that Blues was technically Joe's prototype... Okay... Yeah, he'd probably not want to talk about that either if it was him.

"We have gained intel that our foe has an underwater outpost a short distance from here," Joe informed them. "We don't know what he might be holding there, but–"

"–w-we think he m-m-might be holding chao c-c-captive there!" Ray finished.

Knuckles and Blues exchanged a glance before the Echidna voiced what they were both considering. "Or maybe the Master Emerald..."

"Okay," Sally checked the readings again, "if we stay on this course, we should be there in–what's that noise?"

NICOLE paused and perked her holographic ears up. "Uncertain, due to dopplering, but whatever it is is approaching f–"

BOOM!

The shockwave as what appeared to be a bright blue and cyan comet rocketed past them threw both Sally and NICOLE off their feet.

"After her!" a warbled voice was heard over the ringing in Sally's ears and she shook her disorientation off to see Silver and Quint race past. "Don't let her get away!"

Looking at the handheld form of NICOLE again and the readings displayed, Sally reached the conclusion that whoever the comet had been was headed for their target. With a glance and a nod, both she and NICOLE raced after Silver and Quint.

Cream, Cheese, and Gemerl raced after the pod of capture chao as fast as they could, and it seemed like they were getting closer to it.

Any moment now, and either Cream or Gemerl would be able to–

"–transport mode!" a voice ordered and a black and purple canine robot shot for the pod out of nowhere, transforming as it went into a set of rocket boosters that attached to the pod and flared to life, sending the captured chao shooting off even faster than before.

"NO/CHAO!" Cream and Cheese shouted in dismay, getting the attention of the black and gold robot and the metal hedgehog that had been with the canine.

"Leave the girl and her guardian," the black and gold robot ordered the metal hedgehog. "We must carry out our master's mission before all else."

"Let those chao go!" Gemerl demanded as the two robots shot off.

"Hey, Gemerl!" the voice of Sonic sounded as the hedgehog, followed by Rock Light in his Mega Man armor, skidded to a halt next to them. "You guys seen Bass and Metal Sonic come this way?"

"Think so. They just–"

"THEY TOOK THE CHAO!" Cream wailed. "Please mister Rock, mister Sonic! Help us get them back!"

"Okay, okay!" Sonic waved frantically, trying to calm the distraught rabbit while Rock patted her shoulder comfortingly. "Just point us in their direction!"

Tails and Roll were racing Team Dark through an industrial complex overrun with robots of both Eggman and Wily design, leaving a swath of destroyed machinery in their wake, when they entered a room filled with bright neon lights that looked like they belonged in Casinopolis.

"Ohohohohoho!" the voice of Eggman sounded over the speakers as a cube in the center of the room containing the numbers one through nine on each face lit up and began to randomize the numerals while the giant roulette wheel they were all standing on began to spin and a red machine with flame decals lowered itself from the ceiling. "Come one, come all to the game of a lifetime! Place your bets against the mighty Egg Dealer and see if your luck holds out!"

'I am so glad that Ray had these rebreathers on him,' Knuckles thought as the four swam for the underwater outpost. Knuckles's own had all broken through one method or another, much like most of his equipment. But then, his usual lifestyle tended to lead to greater amounts of wear and tear than manufacturers tended to expect.

Knuckles glanced over to Ray and saw the flying squirrel gesture to an entrance and convey a few more signals about how he and Joe would breach the entrance with explosives while Knuckles and Blues swam in as the first strike team. It was a pretty good plan an–

"INTRUDER DETECTED," a mechanical voice sounded as red lights flared to life on the outpost. "EGG JELLYFISH PF-1407A Z0/1E DEPLOYING."

Knuckles sighed a cloud of bubbles as a vaguely jelly-fish looking metal construct with red lights and the glowing red orb on top encased in some sort of clear bubble-like material emerged from the outpost and began shooting red energy balls and green lasers in their direction.

"Why is she headed out over a lake?" Silver wondered as he and Quint continued chasing the female robot that had buzzed them earlier. And by buzzed, he meant knocked them flat with a well-timed sonic boom.

"What the hell was that all about?! Do you just run around breaking the sound barrier whenever you please?"

"Break the sound barrier?! Pfft... Boring! Atmospheres are so limiting after all..."

"What's your game, lady?"

"I'm the Comet Woman, buster, and you'll have to catch me to find out!"

The robot woman had primarily teal armor done in a bikini style on her torso over her black underframe. Her teal boots were trimmed with spikey magenta additions and her giant starburst helmet, teal with magenta forehead decoration and earrings, added a few feet to her height. The thruster at the back of her helmet blazed a giant bright blue and cyan energy flare that looked like it was a massive head of hair given its position. (25)

And she had been leaving them all in the dust so far. Any power they had to keep up was because the robot woman was letting them.

"Be careful, Sally," Silver heard from nearby, reminding him of the other two that had joined the chase. "She must have something planned."

"I know, NICOLE, bu–" Sally's reply was cut off as the lake in front of the four began freezing at a rapid pace, solidifying nicely by the time any of them put their feet on it.

"She's stacking the terrain in her favor," Quint noted with a scowl.

"How nice of you to notice!" Comet Woman smirked as she landed on the ice in the middle of the lake, standing straight before putting a hand on her hips and thrusting them forward suggestively while training her buster arm on the four as they slid to a halt and prepared themselves. "Try to keep up, slowpokes!"

"Ba*skrsh*, do you have my package?"

"Of course, master," the black and gold robot answered. "We have what you desire and are personally escort–"

"SONIC SHOT!"

A blue Homing Attack wreathed in energy slammed into his partner before resolving into the blue hedgehog mobian pursuing them and the two began to duel furiously. A moment later, a barrage of missiles joined the assault, forcing the black and gold robot to defend himself.

"You give those chao back right now, you meanies!" a young mobian rabbit demanded as she flew up into his face.

"The battlefield is no place for young ladies," he declared, reaching out to grab the rabbit's ears and hold her firm before kicking her hard in the torso to stun her and swatting away that annoying chao that followed her. "You might get hurt."

"Cream!" a black and yellow gizoid design yelled in alarm before charging at him on his jet boosters. Behind him, the blue robot Mega Man trained his arm cannon in the direction of the rabbit's captor.

"Crash!" the black and gold robot ordered his support unit. The canine attached to the objective barked in acknowledgement before unleashing a barrage of missiles at the incoming hostiles, forcing them to abort their assault.

"You! Big!" the cry caused him to look at his captive just in time to spot her feet slamming into his face. "MEANIE!" (26)

The shock of the impact caused his grip on her ears to slacken, allowing the young rabbit to bound off of his face and perform a homing attack on the container his support unit was carrying, cracking it open and releasing the chao inside.

"Report Ba*skzzt*!" his master's voice sounded in his head. "What is going on?!"

"Apologies, master," he reported, forming his arm cannon and training it on the young rabbit and the escaping chao. "That which you desire has temporarily escaped. I shall personally see to its retrieval."

He opened fire, only for the gizoid to interpose himself and deflect all of the shots with a forcefield.

"We gotta get out of here, Cream! It's too dangerous for you!" the gizoid shouted, prompting the young rabbit and the chao to all take off at high speed, the gizoid following in rear guard position.

"I regret to report that what you desire has escaped, master," the black and gold robot reported as he was forced to defend an assault by the Mega Man, preventing him from pursuing his quarry.

"No matter," his master stated. "I have enough for my purposes now. I have a new objective for you. I will contact you later with coordinates, so in the meantime I expect you to keep my enemies occupied!"

"By your command," he acknowledged, relaying the new orders to his partner and support unit.

"Damnit, Bass!" the Mega Man cried out as the black and gold robot moved to disengage. "What's gotten into you?!"

He simply gazed at the so-called 'blue bomber' as he was joined by his support unit (now free of the empty capture pod) and his partner and the so-called 'blue blur' joined his own partner in glaring at them.

"Follow if you wish to know," he stated with a superior smile before taking off once more.

"Bingo!" Roll grinned as she shot another of the numbered blocks the Egg Dealer had been dropping, causing another light on the central cube to illuminate, and a row to begin flashing.

The Egg Dealer, which had been charging its laser weapon up, began sparking and sputtering before losing altitude where Team Dark readily dogpiled it and tore the annoying machine to shreds.

"I hate having my time wasted," Shadow's eye twitched as he eyed the machine's remains.

"Sorry everyone," Tails looked up from where he'd been hacking the central cube for information. "Looks like this was just an elaborate trap of some sort. Well, that and a tracker for... Something. Doesn't say what, but it indicates that whatever it is has been detected nearby."

"Hmm..." Roll mused on the information. "Sounds worth investigating."

"Good luck with that," Rouge waved dismissively. "We've got a wayward teammate to track down and beat some sense into."

"Give him a few extra whacks for me, would you?" Roll asked. "There's no excuse for being a part of this idiocy."

"Your terms are acceptable," Omega intoned.

NICOLE braced herself on the ice as Comet Woman shot some sort of blue energy at her from close range, and blinked when no impact registered. Instead, the shot split into two energy orbs that orbited NICOLE while Comet Woman engaged the others.

While the holo-lynx watched the orbs in confusion, trying to figure out their purpose, Silver decided to circumvent the terrain by levitating over it with his psychic powers.

"Give it up, Comet Woman! There's no way you'll ev–"

BOOM!

Comet Woman's blazing charge cracked the sound barrier and slammed into Silver's psychokinetic aura with the force of a runaway train, sending the hedgehog rocketing off across the frozen lake while Comet Woman came to a halt and turned towards her remaining opponents.

"And then there were two..." the Robot Master smirked at them.

"Two?" Sally puzzled as she struggled to keep her footing on the slippery ice. "What do you–NICOLE!"

The orbs orbiting NICOLE had halted suddenly and turned bright cyan. An instant later and they converged on the holo-lynx from either side, tearing through her solid light form with ease.

"NICOLE!" Sally cried again, watching her friend dissolve into thin air.

"I am fine, Sally," NICOLE's voice sounded from her handheld. "But my holographic body will need time to recompile."

"Time you don't have!" Comet Woman declared as she fired another of her blue energy shots at Sally, who grit her teeth as it split and began orbiting her like it had NICOLE.

Quint hastily summoned Sakugarne to block as Comet Woman burst forwards in her blazing energy charge, and successfully deflected the bulk of the impact away from him even as it sent him sliding back out of control on the ice. Digging his large feet in, Quint spun around and turning army green and gunmetal grey before firing the two tank rounds and an arcing impact explosive of the Tank Arsenal at his recovering opponent.

Comet Woman yelled in pain from the impacts and fell to the icy lake surface in a tumble. "And then... there was one..." she declared before rocketing at Quint again.

Quint glanced to the side to see the orbiting energy around Sally halt and turn bright cyan, but before the orbs could converge, Sally dashed out from between them and slashed her energy wrist blades at Comet Woman's side, sending the Robot Master off course and allowing Quint to take another shot with the Tank Arsenal.

Comet Woman screamed again from the impacts and turned to face her remaining opponents with a look of fury, only to take a third barrage head-on. She did not get up from that one.

"Well, that was intense," Sally stretched once certain that their opponent wasn't getting back up. As she did, Quint stepped forward to copy Comet Woman's weapon, his armor turning cyan and white as he did.

"Indeed it was," Quint agreed.

"Did anyone get the number of that truck?" Silver asked in a punch-drunk slur as he wobblingly levitated back. "I haven't been hit that hard since the Egg Boxer..."

"Heh..." Quint snorted at the memory. "Where was Little Mac when we needed him?"

"Little Mac?" Sally blinked questioningly.

"Oh, Silver loved stories about this fictional wallaby boxer back when he was a kid," (27) Quint jerked his thumb at the hedgehog, who was frantically gesturing for Quint to stop talking. "Used to dress up as him all the time. Hold on, I'll send you an image file."

"Nooooo...!" Silver moaned in embarrassed dismay.

"Silver," NICOLE declared as she received the file and projected a mini-hologram of a young Silver in black boxing shorts with green trim, green boxing gloves, what was either a genuine black eye or a good makeup job, and a childish grin. "I must conclude that you were adorable."

"Agreed," Sally nodded with a smirk. "Do you have any other pictures?"

"Sure," Quint smirked evilly while Silver shook his head in frantic denial. "Give me a minute to send them over before we part ways."

"I think we can spare that," NICOLE agreed in a teasing tone as Silver buried his face in his hands. (28)

"Well, this was a bust..." Knuckles sighed from where he was looking over the command terminal in the underwater outpost. There was no information on the Master Emerald at all. Just some sort of homing beacon. At least the Egg Jellyfish thing had been a decent warm-up.

"For you, perhaps," Joe replied. "For us, it is another lead to follow."

"Y-y-yeah!" Ray agreed. "There's an-nother of these in-n-n th-the desert nearby!"

"Good luck with that, then," Blues wished them. "We'll continue our search elsewhere."

"And we will contact you if our investigation turns up anything on the location of the Master Emerald," Joe promised.

Rouge wanted to back out the moment she'd stepped into the next production plant Team Dark was planning to hit, she really did. But it was too late. Omega had already seen the interior, which meant there was no stopping him. There was only trying desperately to contain the damage.

The entire things was filled with clear tubes containing a substance whose appearance set Rouge's hair on end. Combined with the way the tanks were labeled, it could only be trinitroglycerine.

As if to confirm her suspicions, some of the liquid dripped out of pipes hanging overhead and exploded the moment it hit the floor.

"I have found the promised land," E-123 Omega intoned with the closest thing to awe Rouge had ever heard from him.

"Walkers help us all," Shadow prayed. (29)

"Hey Aunt Sally!" Tails greeted as he and Roll came up alongside Sally and NICOLE. "What brings you this way?"

"Tracking partial Zone portal signatures," Sally replied. "The ones leading to the final Chaos Emerald."

"Interesting..." Roll mused as NICOLE sent her the relevant coordinates. "We're headed to the same spot... Looks like our latest robot enthusiast is looking for the same things you are..."

"Then we must make haste," NICOLE nodded.

"Yo Sonic! Rock!" Knuckles called out as he spotted the blue hedgehog and the blue robot and changed course to match theirs.

"Hey Knux!" Sonic grinned back at the hedgehog. "What's up?"

"Brother," Blues nodded curtly to Rock, getting one in return. "We are investigating the disappearance of the Master Emerald."

"Again?" Sonic laughed. "Man, you really need to get some better locks for that thing, Knux!"

"Yeah, yeah... What are you two doing?"

"Chasing down Bass and Metal Sonic," the blue blur grinned back. "Wanna come? First to catch them gets to ask the questions!"

"Sounds good to me!"

"Okay," Silver spoke shakily as he did his best to get his nerves under control. "I can handle a nitroglycerin plant. That's fine. One that drips nitro all over the place and stores easily broken containers in inconvenient places? I can handle that too. Exploding chicken robots are weird, but hardly new either. But why are there lakes of nitro in here and why do they have platforms that blast you upwards at the slightest pressure?! And how do they manage to do that without setting off the rest of it?!"

Quint made to shrug in response when someone else replied.

"Because it is the promised land of destruction," the monotone of Omega answered with bizarrely reverent undertones.

"Okay, that's really creepy," Silver made a note to keep his distance from the walking engine of destruction.

"Welcome to our life," Rouge sighed as she and Shadow joined their teammate.

"This is going to end in a huge explosion, isn't it?" Quint asked rhetorically. (30)

"It shall be glorious," Omega promised.

"Do you think the missing chao are in there Mister Ray?" Cream asked the Chaotix member as they and their robot companions overlooked some manner of outpost in the desert.

"I-i-it's p-possible," Ray stuttered in reply.

"Regardless, it should provide additional information regarding the current situation," Joe added.

"Stick close to me, Cream," Gemerl told the young rabbit. "We–"

"MMOOOOOOO!" the sound from behind caused all four to whip around and spot a huge mechanical bull bearing down on them. With a trio of screams, both Ray, Cream, and Cheese took off like shots with Joe and Gemerl hot on their tails an instant later.

"Ohohohoho!" the synthesized voice of Eggman laughed. "That's it! Run from my Egg Bull you simpletons!"

The black and gold robot scowled as he turned to meet his pursuers. Their dedication was commendable, he supposed, but it was beginning to grate being the target of such.

"I begin to tire of your constant pursuit," he glared at the four facing him, his partner and support unit taking up flanking positions.

"Yeah?" the blue hedgehog pointed accusingly. "Well we're getting tired of you running away!"

"Tell us where the Master Emerald is and maybe we we'll leave you in one piece!" the hotheaded red echidna pounded his fists together.

"Very well, then! You leave us no choice!" the black and gold robot formed both of his arms into busters and trained them on his opponents. "Destroy them Metal S–!"

The robotic hedgehog's eyes flashed and he let out a loud mechanical sound in acknowledgement that drowned out the rest of his name as the black and gold robot continued his orders.

"Crash!"

"Scatter!" the red and gray robot ordered as he brought up his shield while the blue and cyan one formed an arm cannon in response and began to dart in the other direction.

The metal hedgehog and the robotic canine darted forwards to meet the charges of the two mobians even as the black and gold robot himself fired on his opponents repeatedly.

The containers of trinitroglycerin barring the inner chamber of the production plant blew apart after barely being grazed by one of Omega's bullets and the five warriors entered.

Inside waited a purple and orange robot with glaring eyes, arms that ended in orange-tipped ovular nozzles, and had five clear tubes of what had to be trinitroglycerin stuck into his body. The largest from his bucket-shaped head, one on each shoulder, and strangely one on the front of each foot.

"Well, look what the chicken bombs dragged in!" the Robot Master laughed. "Target practice!"

"Preparing to begin glorious dance of destruction once you identify yourself," Omega declared.

"I'm Trinitro Man!" (31) the robot supplied with a slightly crazed look in his eyes. "And I know all about each of you! Here!" he leveled his nozzle-arms at the five. "Have a blast!"

BA-BA-BOOM!

"Here we are," Sally informed the others as they approached a boulder. "The reading is coming from inside this..."

Sally trailed off as the boulder began to lift off of the ground. After a few moments of everyone tensing and staring, the boulder had lifted enough to reveal the prongs of a forklift underneath it.

"Oh, lovely ..." Roll grumbled and formed an arm cannon.

"Are you certain that's nec–" NICOLE was cut off as the forklift's tongs suddenly accelerated upwards, thrusting the boulder in a nearly vertical arc that would bring it back down on top of their heads. As the four heroes scattered, they noted the Egg Pawn in the driver's seat.

"A forklift ?" Tails boggled as the boulder crashed back into the vacated area and broke apart, the glint of a cyan object shimmering in the rubble. "Seriously?" (32)

"Condescend all you want," Roll replied as she fired on the machine, "I'm having bad flashbacks to the time Wily weaponized Mega City International Airport. It took over a dozen Loops before I could enter baggage claim without expecting it to try and kill me."

Since entering the trinitroglycerin plant, Silver had seen more explosions than any other three Eggman (Nega or otherwise) invasions combined. Including the ones involving anything with the name 'Egg Bomber'. The next time he encountered an explosive-happy opponent at this level, he was going to seriously consider just blowing their whole complex and to hell with the consequences. As it was, he was doing his best to remain unexploded as Trinitro Man hovered on his foot-mounted nitro jets (which explained the tubes on his feet) and sprayed pure trinitroglycerin at them, creating a rather literal shower of explosions.

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHA! ARE WE HAVING A BLAST YET?!"

BA-BA-BOOM!

Rouge had taken a look at the first volley and decided the best place for her to potentially survive the fight was hiding behind Omega. Shadow was doing his best to counterattack without getting caught in the blasts, but openings were few and far between.

Quint had tried to defend the initial barrage with Sakugarne, and it had nearly gotten both the robot from the future and his jackhammer support unit blown up, forcing Quint to dismiss Sakugarne and begin trying weapons. The Tank Arsenal had been detonated prematurely by Trinitro Man's blasts, same with the Yo-Yo Cutter, and the Comet Dash had only served to get Quint almost blown up again.

"HERE! HAVE SOME MORE!"

BA-BA-BOOM!

And Omega... was just watching the whole thing raptly. "So beautiful..."

"Take this!" Quint yelled as he tried the final Master Weapon in his arsenal, the Rainbow Beam. The multicolored laser hit Trinitro Man and burst into a prismatic corona underneath which several miniature explosions burst from the seams in Trinitro Man's armor.

"GAH!"

"It's over!" Quint charged the Robot Master as Shadow and Silver both struck with Homing Attacks and grabbed the explosive robot, turning purple and orange as he copied Trinitro Man's weapon. "Let's see how you like–"

Quint paused and looked down to where both of Trinitro Man's trinitroglycerin nozzles were planted right in his torso.

"You first," the Robot Master chuckled before Quint was engulfed in explosions.

"QUINT!" Silver cried in alarm as the robot from the future and his opponent both flew apart, trailing smoke.

"Damnit, Omega!" Rouge yelled. "Will you do something already?!"

"Very well," Omega replied, forming his hands into chain guns. "Shadow, you have the purple Chaos Emerald recovered from Casinopolis, correct?"

"Uh, yes?" Shadow confirmed.

"Be ready to evacuate all allied units then," Omega informed him as he took aim at the recovering Trinitro Man and targeted his trinitroglycerin tubes.

Shadow's eyes widened as Omega shot the tubes directly, causing cracks to appear in them. Hastily, he gathered the Chaos Force before Omega's shots ruptured the tubes and the inevitable happened. (33) dakka-dakka-dakka-dakka-da– crack-cra–

"CHAOS CONTROL!"

SHAKARAKABABABABOOMOOM!

"Tell us, Bass," Blues shouted as he deflected shots with his shield, "how did Eggman Nega reprogram you?!"

"Nega?" Rock blinked in surprise as Sonic traded Homing Attack with the robotic hedgehog nearby and Knuckles evaded missile fire from the robotic canine. "You mean Eggman Nega?!"

"Simpletons," the black and gold robot scoffed as he kept firing on both of his opponents. "As if my master would ever have need to reprogram me into his service! I am proud to be the emissary of his will! You will fall this day and my master shall reign supreme over– GAH!"

Rock had fired a charged shot that was evaded, but Blues's following shield charge had caught their opponent head on and knocked him to the ground where Rock proceeded to blast him with a Hard

Knuckle to the abdomen, forcing the black and gold robot to double over as he was sent tumbling along the ground.

"Sonic!" Knuckles warned as he flung the robotic canine into the melee between living and mechanical hedgehogs, prompting the living one to duck down and allow the thrown robot to collide with his opponent.

"Ba*sshhhrrss*!" A screechy voice sounded from the black and gold robot. "What are you do*krk*? Report back immediately!"

"Hey Nega," Sonic greeted. "I'm afraid your borrowed stooges are a little tied up at the moment."

"My apologies, master," the black and gold robot got to his feet. "I will rectify the situation immediately."

"Never mind that!" Nega's high pitched voice yelled. "I'm sending you your new objective! Forget the targets and acquire it at all costs! I need it so I can use the Master Emerald t–"

"I KNEW IT!" Knuckles roared. "WHERE DID YOU TAKE THE MASTER EMERALD, YOU POMPOUS PIECE OF–"

"THAT'S AN ORDER–" Nega's screech managed to drown out Knuckles's roar.

But the black and gold robot was already speeding off, his companions in tow.

"We'll follow them," Rock nodded to his brother and Knuckles. "You two see if you can find where he's keeping the Master Emerald.

"We will," Blues nodded back. "Good luck!"

"I don't think I like robotic livestock," Gemerl dusted his hands off as he jumped from the crumpled form of the Egg Bull, it's head caved in from the impact of Gemerl's final attack.

"Yes, that was a load of bull," Joe agreed as he began working on the outpost's door.

"Language!" Cream scolded the green robot, Cheese mimicking her scolding finger as she did.

"...Did I say something inappropriate?" the green robot paused in his work to ponder the accusation.

" I certainly didn't hear anything of the sort," Gemerl blinked in Cream's direction.

"You mean it's not?" Cream blinked in confusion.

"B-b-better ch-check with your m-m-mom," Ray suggested.

"That was much harder than a forklift really should have been," Sally noted as she began removing rubble from over the shimmering object she was there to retrieve.

"Agreed," NICOLE nodded looking at the wreckage that used to be a weaponized forklift and an Egg Pawn.

"What is that, anyway?" Tails asked as he observed the way the object shimmered in and out of view, as well as the strange 'O' marking on it.

"It's apparently part of a Zone portal to where the last Chaos Emerald currently is," Sally informed them.

"It reminds me of a Yoku block," Roll mused curiously before stiffening and facepalming with a groan. "I really hope it doesn't mean what I think it means, but I don't think any of us is that lucky. Oh, this is going to be annoying as hell ..."

"What?" Tails asked.

"Glorious..." Omega gazed at the still-exploding building. (34)

"I'm just glad you got us out of there," Silver thanked Shadow. "That could have been messy."

"Probably," the dark hedgehog snorted. "It was still another dead end..."

"I wish you luck in finding your teammate," Quint nodded. "Until we meet again."

"Hopefully under less explosive circumstances," Rouge quipped.

"S-sorry Cream," Ray apologized. "L-l-looks like th-there's no chao here..."

"It's okay..." Cream moped a bit. "You found what you wanted, right?"

"We did," Joe nodded. "This is indeed another beacon for something, and there's another beacon atop a nearby canyon. We will be investigating it shortly."

"Do not worry, Cream," Gemerl comforted the moping rabbit. "I'm sure we'll find the missing chao."

"Chao-chao," Cheese agreed.

"About that," Joe spoke up, "There is a storage facility outside a nearby city that has been receiving a great deal of traffic from the armies being mobilized. It may be a location where chao have been taken for further transport."

"Really?" Cream perked up immediately. "Thank you! Come on Gemerl! We have to go save those chao!"

"Hmm..." Tails frowned as he adjusted his Miles Electric device.

"What is it?" Roll asked, dusting her hands off from the latest squad of robots to try and ambush them.

"I'm picking up some strange signals here..." Tails mused. "Can't really figure out what it's about... Maybe if I could get some altitude for a clearer signal?"

"How about that tower over there?" Roll pointed to a nearby city skyline, one possessing a large metal tower that looked like the first cousin twice removed (35) of the Eiffel Tower.

"Perfect!"

Sally was hot on the trail of the last partial portal reading when she and NICOLE nearly ran straight into Sonic and Rock. A quick adjustment and the four were soon speeding alongside each other.

"Fancy running into you two here," Sonic grinned. "What's up?"

"We're closing in on the last of a series of objects which should lead to where the last of the Chaos Emeralds is located, after counting the one that was stolen by parties unknown and the one in Team Dark's possession," NICOLE informed them.

"Huh... Maybe that's what Bass and Metal Sonic are after now...?" Sonic wondered.

"Metal Sonic?" Sally fought the surge of adrenaline the second name triggered. She'd mostly gotten over her fears, enough to act when needed, but they weren't the kind of fears that ever really went away completely. "What will it take to keep him dead?"

"And why is Bass with him?" NICOLE pondered.

"Because it's not Bass," Rock replied simply, cutting off Sonic's answer. (36)

"Wait, what?" Sonic did a double-take. "But... who the hell else looks like that?"

"Holographic disguise, a Bass-model copy robot, something else, I'm not sure," Rock frowned. "I just know that's not Bass."

"Explain, please," NICOLE prompted.

"He's too polite," Rock answered. "He hasn't been truly rude or crass once yet, or even used so much as a single swear word. He's too calm and obedient, not a trace of Bass's arrogance or rebellious nature. He's also retreated from battle without complaint, without suffering significant injury, sometimes without being ordered to, and practically every version of Bass I've ever encountered won't even consider retreat without at least two of those conditions being met. Plus, we've attacked his support unit, whatever's pretending to be Treble, multiple times and he hasn't flipped out and tried to murder the attacker once. That may be some mute version of Metal Sonic he's with, but that is not Bass."

"Then who is it?" Sonic asked.

"Honestly? I have no clue..."

"You really think we're going to spot Nega's hideout from the top of this tower?" Knuckles asked impatiently as he and Blues stood on the observation deck of the fancy Eiffel Tower knockoff. (37)

"You have any better ideas?" Blues asked him.

"Does beating it out of Nega's robots count?" Knuckles asked with a grin.

"Not when they apparently know less than we do."

"Ok-kay, Joe," Ray stuttered. "Th-there's the place with th-he third b-b-beacon."

"Yes, and it seems well guarded," Joe replied, looking out over the small army of robots defending the installation at the edge of the canyon. Most were the standard fodder of both Eggman's and Wily's usual choices, but there were also several tank-sized scorpion robots. "We will need to be carefu–"

"Care is for worthless consumer models," a voice intoned, causing Joe to stiffen and turn to see the three members of G.U.N.'s Team Dark nearby, looking out over the army with expressions that spoke of a burning need to destroy something.

"Sorry boys," Rouge smiled in their direction. "But if there's any information to be had in there, then it belongs to us!"

"So much for doing this quietly..." Joe emulated a sigh as all three members of Team Dark raced forwards and began demolishing robots at a feverish pace.

"A glue factory..." Quint deadpanned. "This is where Nega's next commander is holed up?"

"Seems like it," Silver shrugged. "So I guess we should head in and chec–"

"HELP! I'M STUCK!" a young girl wailed from inside. Quint and Silver didn't even bother exchanging glances before dashing in.

Inside, the factory hummed with activity, globs of wet glue pulsing through pipes and coating the floor alike. Silver immediately used his psychokinesis to levitate himself over the sticky hazard while Quint called in Sakugarne to pogo over it, the battle jackhammer's point providing insufficient surface area to be caught in the adhesive. They soon came upon a young rabbit mobian crying over the fact that her feet were stuck, a chao pulling fruitlessly on her dress, and a gizoidmodel robot that was frantically attempting to figure out how to pull hard enough to free her, but not hard enough to hurt her.

She was suddenly enveloped in a teal-colored energy as Silver grasped her with his psychokinesis and freed her from her sticky situation by simply detaching the adhesive she was stuck in from the floor rather than the rabbit herself.

"Thank you," the gizoid, Gemerl according to Quint's database of notable combatants, offered as he freed himself from the glue by simply activating boot-mounted jets on his feet and electing to hover in the air to avoid further encounters with the stuff. As he did so, the aura around the young rabbit went to work cleaning the adhesive off of her feet.

"Yes, thank you Mr..." the rabbit girl, Cream if Quint recalled correctly. She'd been on Team Acorn at the EX World Grand Prix.

"Silver," the so-colored hedgehog answered. "And this is Quint, and together we are... the Blue Shade Brothers!"

Cream gasped and looked sparkly-eyed at the proclamation, prompting Quint to turn and look at the hovering Silver who, yes indeed, had donned a pair of green-framed visor-like aviator shades tinted the same color as Quint's own helmet-mounted shades.

"I cannot believe you still have those," Quint fought the urge to facepalm. Silver had, when younger, gone through a phase where he'd tried to dress like Quint. It had taken a great deal of prompting to get the psychokinetic to stop emulating his 'big brother'.

"Are you super heroes?" Cream asked, wide-eyed and Quint noted that she now seemed to be airborne under her own power, apparently by flapping her large ears. And then she gasped in realization. "You must be! Who else would a princess like Elise have on her team?! Please, Mr. Blue Shade Brothers! You must help us rescue the captured chao that were brought here!"

"Chao-chao!" the girl's chao companion pleaded.

"Is yours always like this?" Gemerl asked Quint in a low voice.

"No, he's... sometimes sensible," Quint replied at a similar volume. "Yours?"

"This is pretty normal for her."

"Hello, brother," Roll greeted from atop Tango's jet form as she and Tails landed on the tower's observation deck. As she dismounted, her feline companion teleported back to Light Labs until called again. "Fancy meeting you here."

"Roll," Blues nodded in response.

"Hey Tails!" Knuckles grinned. "What's up?"

"Well, I've been picking up some odd transmissions recently and we came up here to try and get a clearer signal," Tails explained holding up his Miles Electric. "If I can just figure out what it is, then mayb–"

The tower shuddered violently all of a sudden and the four exchanged glances before running over to the edge of the observation balcony and looking down.

Attached to the tower was a huge straight gear-toothed device with jacob's ladders at either end that arced with electricity and a huge metal crab attached to the gear-toothed middle section, presumably for movement.

"Ohohohoho!" Eggman's voice sounded from the machine. "I've got you now you troublemakers! Feel the wrath of my Egg Crab!"

"Egg Crab?!" Roll yelled back incredulously. "Do you seriously think I don't know one of Wily's designs when I see it?! Who the hell are you really?!"

"Give it up, Nega!" Knuckles roared down. "We know it's really you!"

"How did yo–" the voice suddenly became higher pitched and screechier before clearing its throat and continuing in Dr. Eggman's usual tone. "I mean... whatever could you be talking about?"

"Nega?!" Tails started in surprise. "I thought you left him trapped in a card!"

"We did," Blues stated. "He apparently got better."

"Oh for the love of..." the voice gave up pretenses and returned to the higher-pitched tone. "Just die already!"

Arcs of electricity began racing up the tower's struts from the machine's jacob's ladder ends and the four heroes leaped off to duel with the electrical war machine.

"Okay..." Gemerl commented as the group finally entered the innermost chamber of the glue factory, finally away from the sticky adhesive coating almost every surface so those that had been flying could finally stand and rest their modes of propulsion, and stared at what met them. "Why is there a skate park in here?"

"So that I, Glue Man, can grind intruders onto the ground!" came the response from the other end of the giant bowl-shaped depression in the floor.

"What in...?" Quint puzzled as he took in the self-proclaimed Glue Man.

The Robot Master had deep blue armor with two red orbs on his chest and gray trim, including a gray dispenser nozzle on one arm that looked squeezed in the middle and a matching one on top of his bucket-shaped head. He also had gray wheels on his feet, clearly meant to take advantage of the bowl-shaped arena for increased mobility. All in all, he seemed to be trying to take advantage of two completely different thematic elements. (38)

"What have you done with the chao?" Cream demanded immediately.

"Chao-chao!" Cheese joined her, shaking one of his tiny arms at the robot in accusation.

"Those things?" Glue Man blinked. "I pack them up and send them to the boss man. Don't worry, I think there's still room on the last transport for that one there.

"Don't you dare hurt Cheese!" Cream grabbed the chao and hugged him protectively. "You better let those chao go, you big meanie!"

"Those chao aren't going anywhere except to Boss Nega," Glue Man sniffed arrogantly, plunging his arm into the floor and appearing to suck up a large amount of viscous liquid from an access port in the floor at his feet. "And you aren't going anywhere at all!"

Glue Man suddenly skated forwards at high speeds down the bowl and back up to the group's side where he launched into a heel-grab that arced over them while aiming his arm-nozzle down. The group scattered as he fired a blob of adhesive at them, but the only real area in the room with any real room to maneuver was the bowl-like depression. Which was exactly where Glue Man wanted them.

"Come on!" Glue Man's grin was audible as he skated back through the depression at high speed, nearly knocking Quint and Silver over as he passed before launching back into the air on the other side in another heel-grab and taking aim at them with his adhesive weapon. "Stick around and play!"

Sonic, Rock, Sally, and NICOLE were fully expecting to have to chase the Bass imposter and the possibly Metal Sonic for a good while yet, so when they found the two just waiting for them, it took a moment before anyone thought to start slowing down and coming to a halt.

"Hold it right there..." Sonic stopped his demand, trying to think of what to call the black and gold robot before him, "not-Bass!"

"How very clever you must think yourself," 'not-Bass' smiled back arrogantly, flanked by his robot hedgehog partner. The latter's eyes flashed red mockingly as the speaking member of the duo continued. "And how fortunate you are this day. For I am inclined to be generous."

"In what way?" NICOLE demanded.

"If you ladies simply hand over your three pieces of the portal, then you may continue to live."

"Yeah, well, you can take your offer and–"

"Sonic!" Sally hissed before addressing the enemy robot herself. "I appreciate your 'kind' offer, but I'm afraid we can't comply. We need them and the final piece you're after."

"I suppose the sentiment is 'over your dead body' then?" not-Bass inquired, before a wicked smirk crawled up one corner of his mouth and he formed one of his arms into a cannon and his companion flexed clawed metal hands menacingly. "I believe that arrangement is acceptable."

Quint growled as Sakugarne was blasted with a glob of the quick-drying adhesive and stuck to the floor of the bowl depression as the laughing Glue Man zipped by. The skating glue-shooter was too agile for the Tank Arsenal or the Nitro Blast to land a solid hit and the Rainbow Beam had barely scratched his paint job. Silver was having trouble focusing his psychic powers on the ever-mobile Robot Master and Gemerl's missile blasts were being treated like a joke as Glue Man wove in between the explosives with almost sickening ease.

"Here we go!" Glue Man laughed as his latest jump took him all the way to the ceiling where the nozzle in his head attached and began siphoning globs of adhesive while the Robot Master took aim at them with his arm-nozzle. "Glue Spread!"

"Eek!" Cream yelped as she tripped over one of the glue blocks that had been left by earlier shots, leaving her prone for the attack.

"Chao!" Cheese cried in alarm and tried fruitlessly to pull the young rabbit to her feet.

"Cream!" Gemerl raced to shield the young rabbit and took the full force of one of the blobs of glue while Quint and Silver evaded the other two.

"Haha!" Glue Man laughed at the immobile gizoid and the fearful mobian girl as he dropped down and sped in for a body slam. "Easy pickin–"

With a loud metallic crash, Glue Man was sent skidding to the side and both Gemerl and Cream sighed with relief at the sight of Quint's outstretched leg that he'd kicked the Robot Master with.

"Don't worry," Quint declared. "We'll take care of things."

"Heh..." Silver laughed as he landed next to Quint and took up a defensive stance between the recovering Glue Man and the immobile gizoid. "We should play that song then."

"Only if you tell me where you heard it."

"Use the yo-yo weapon and you've got yourself a deal."

"Sure," Quint shrugged as his armor turned orange and teal. He'd been planning on trying that one next anyway. "Sakugarne, play track."

The battle jackhammer beeped in confirmation where it was stuck to the floor and began playing an upbeat tune. (39)

"No music can defeat me!" Glue Man declared as he shot forth on his skates, firing a blob of glue straight at Silver.

"Oooooh yeeeaaaahhh! Haha!"

Quint let loose with the Yo-Yo Cutter and the bladed 'toy' shredded the glue with ease, allowing Silver a clean avenue to charge forward.

"Now me and my bro, we're takin' care of things!"

Silver met Glue Man's charge with a sliding bicycle kick that planted itself in the robot's chest and vaulted him over the mobian and directly at Quint.

"Went from a pair of jokers to a couple of kings!"

Quint met the flailing Robot Master with a roundhouse kick that sent Glue Man careening off to the side.

"It goes to show you never know just what a shuffle brings!"

Glue Man grabbed the edge of the bowled depression and vaulted himself out in time to avoid the Homing Attack Silver had launched at him.

"Me and my bro, we're takin' care of things!"

And promptly had to do the splits to avoid having his legs chopped off from another Yo-Yo Cutter from Quint as the music changed to a rap tune.

"That's right, we're bros, we're brothers, different father and mother,"

Glue Man narrowed his eyes and charged directly at Quint.

"But don't you diss or slam or slide us, we look after one another!"

He managed to jump over the leg sweep, but took another Homing Attack to the back which left him open to the spinning palm-strike Quint followed with, the robot from the future briefly turning deep blue and peach before returning to the orange and teal color of his selected weapon.

"Cause we're thicker than thieves and we're cooler than kings,"

Quint and Silver grinned at each other and began a complicated fist-bump as Glue Man turned his tumble into momentum and made for the edge of the bowl depression and a vault.

"Oh man, you better believe, we're takin' care of things!"

As the music went back to the original tune, Glue Man launched himself in a high arc over his two opponents, firing a blob of adhesive at Silver's back.

"I'll tell you up front that I've got your back,"

Quint unleashed a Yo-Yo Cutter at the blob headed for Silver while Glue Man took aim at him next.

"And I know that you've got mine,"

Silver unleashed a crescent wave of psychokinetic energy that slammed into Glue Man and forced the shot to go wide.

"As long as we stick together side by side,"

Glue Man landed and glared at the two before sticking his arm-nozzle into the floor at his feet–

"Yo, bro, it's gonna turn out fine,"

–and sucking up massive blobs of glue to reload.

"Yo, bro, it's gonna turn out fine!"

"This is it!" the Robot Master yelled.

"Now me and my bro, we're takin' care of things!"

Glue Man charged down on his skates with a cry of fury, blasting away with his weapon.

"Went from a pair of jokers to a couple of kings!"

Quint unleashed two Yo-Yo Cutters while Silver revved up a Spin Dash. The first tore through the blobs of glue with ease while the second tore along the ground and shredded one of Glue Man's legs, causing him to lose control of his charge.

"It goes to show you never know just what a shuffle brings!"

Silver unleashed his Spin Dash point-blank into Glue Man's chest, sending the robot crashing into the wall from the impact.

"Me and my bro, we're takin' care of things!"

"That was amazing!" Cream cheered as the song ended with the two warriors from the future giving each other a fist-bump and Glue Man didn't get back up.

"Yes," Gemerl added, "very impressive. Now could one of you please get me out of this stupid glue?!"

Shots were traded and blows exchanged, but instead of pressing the attack, 'not-Bass' and his robotic hedgehog partner simply kept disengaging after every pass. It was almost hit-and-run tactics, except they weren't running. And the robot dog that was impersonating Treble was nowhere to be seen...

"They're stalling us!" Rock realized. "His support unit is after the artifact!"

"A brilliant deduction," 'not-Bass' complimented. "Though a little too late. My faithful canine has already acquired the target for our master."

"Target is on the move, Sally!" NICOLE shouted.

"After it!" Sally shouted back and the two ladies took off.

"Hey!" Sonic made to follow them, but a retreating salvo from 'not-Bass' and 'possibly-Metal Sonic' impacted in front of them, forcing the blue blur and the blue bomber to halt and throwing up a screen of dust. When it settled, they'd lost sight of both their opponents and their allies.

Silver and Quint had taken off to continue their own mission, but only after directing Cream, Cheese, and Gemerl to where the transport Glue Man had mentioned was located.

The last transport was in the process of leaving when Cream and Gemerl found it, but the gizoid put a stop to that rather quickly and in short order the chao inside the transport were freed. While a happy Cream and Cheese spoke with the freed chao, Gemerl went about accessing the transport's systems. Specifically its intended destination. After all, Glue Man had said this was only the last transport and if Gemerl knew Cream at all...

"He was going to feed you to what?!" the young rabbit cried out in alarm from something the freed chao had told her. "How many are still captured?!"

Gemerl began downloading the transport's destination and plotting the most direct route. Cream would go to save the chao regardless of the danger, so he would remain with her to... lessen that danger. By whatever means necessary.

"Well, that was fun," Rouge stretched as Team Dark walked through the outpost in search of a control center, the strewn wrecks of the defending force littering the outside of the installation. "Now we just need to–WHAT THE?!"

"H-h-hi Rouge!" Ray waved from his spot next to the main terminal as Joe accessed the mainframe and brought up information on the screen.

"Don't you 'hi' me you..." a flustered Rouge sputtered indignantly. "I... HOW DID YOU GET IN HERE BEFORE US?!"

"You were so intent on smashing the army outside that it was easy to go around," Joe answered calmly, not even bothering to look in their direction.

"So we smashed our share of the worthless consumer forces and yours?" Omega deduced while Rouge fumed silently. "This arrangement is acceptable."

"Find anything yet?" Shadow decided to just get down to business.

"Yes," Joe nodded and brought up a map showing the current installation and the two others they'd been to before. "This beacon along with two others are transmitting a signal–"

"–to something out in space," Tails explained to the others as the each lounged on convenient wreckage left over from the so-called 'Egg Crab' of Nega's. "And whatever it is is getting closer."

"So where's it going to land?" Knuckles asked, cracking his namesake while Roll and Blues both listened to the fox.

Tails fiddled with his Miles Electric for a bit before pointing in the general direction of the city's shoreline as somewhere in the city an air raid siren began blaring. "Somewhere out–"

"–in the gulf," Joe explained. "Projected damage from the impact will potentially capsize any ships in the immediate area and the waves will cause massive property damage within the first mile of the shoreline. I've already sent an evacuation warning to inhabited areas around the gulf."

"So this is an attack?" Rouge asked.

"Unlikely," Joe answered. "An attack would more likely land in the middle of a city rather than offshore. A water impact suggests that this is a landing of some sort."

"Landing what though?" Shadow wondered.

"I-it s-s-says here it's s-something called M-m-meteor B-base," Ray pointed to an image that Joe brought up on the screen that caused Shadow and Rouge to stiffen in recognition.

"Well, shit," Rouge swore.

"We should have finished Nega off when we had the chance," Shadow growled.

"Accessing saved admonishment:" Omega intoned. "I told you so."

Bass groaned as his systems finally rebooted. What the hell had hit him?

"So, you regain function at last," a metallic monotone greeted him and Bass opened his eyes to see... about the fifth last face he really wanted to at this moment. Maybe sixth.

"The fuck do you want?" Bass growled as he sat up and started a system diagnostic, feeling a nudge at his elbow as he did. Sparing a glance, he raised his arm and allowed Treble to crawl in under it and lay down at his side.

"The cessation of all pointless life," the other occupant in the... no two ways about it, this was a cell for prisoners... answered. "But for now I would settle for a way out."

"Yeah, well, tough shit I guess," Bass snorted as he examined the cell more thoroughly, "because I'm not seeing one. The hell are we doing here anyway?"

"We were captured so that Eggman Nega could replicate our systems and send his creations out to impersonate us. I was stolen from where my fleshbag of a creator was in the process of rebuilding me... again ... and you... were taken more forcibly considering the damage you and your mutt sustained."

Bass considered joining Treble in growling at his fellow prisoner, but decided against it. "That would explain the damned headache, but why are you active now?"

"Because Eggman Nega delights in pointlessly tormenting his adversaries, even if it means undertaking idiotic courses of action."

"Like leaving all of my weapons functioning," Bass grinned as he finished the system diagnostic. "What do you say? Wanna work together to escape and rip this Nega bastard a new asshole? We can go back to hating each other afterwards... Metal Sonic."

The robotic hedgehog stared right back at Bass and his crimson optics flashed in agreement.

Eggman Nega laughed to himself as his glorious Meteor Base fell towards its destination and examined the yellow Chaos Emerald in his hand and the even more impressive Master Emerald in the chamber below. His foolish ancestor was locked in battle with his even more foolish rival on the other side of the planet, his latest army was keeping any resistance nicely occupied until it would be too late, his loyal servants were bringing the final keys to his ultimate triumph to his doorstep, and his prisoners were safely locked up in the depths of his base.

Who cared that his base would suffer damage from the landing? He certainly didn't. It just needed to hold together long enough for his plan to come to fruition and then...

"And then the world in all times will be mine! OHOHOHOHOHOHOHO!" (40)

Sally and NICOLE were doing their best to keep the Bass impostor and his partner, who might or might not be a version of Metal Sonic, in sight as they all raced for the last portal piece already in possession of the Bass impostor's canine support unit. They needed that portal piece to go after the last Chaos Emerald and if Nega got ahold of it, there was no telling what he's be able to pull.

"GET BACK HERE YOU MUTT!" the roar of Knuckles broke the silence as he and Blues appeared ahead chasing what appeared to be Treble in jet mode carrying the final portal piece. "I'LL TEACH YOU TO TRY AND BLAST ME!"

"Stop that transport!" Cream yelled as she, Cheese, and Gemerl raced after a large hovercraft. The hovercraft sped out over the water of the gulf while the three chased it over a long, if small, peninsula extending into the waters.

"Cream, watch where you're go–" Gemerl started to warn as he spotted the obstacles entering their path.

"Huh–oof!"

Six figures; comprised of three mobians, two robots, and one chao; went tumbling over each other as they collided while the transport sped over the water on its merry way.

"No!" Cream wailed and turned to those she'd run into. "Please! You have to help me stop that transport!"

"Why would I do that?" Rouge grumbled as she and her teammates untangled themselves from the heap. "It's not part of our..."

Rouge made the mistake of looking directly at the wide, pleading, watery eyes of the young rabbit and her vindictive indignant dismissal crumbled like dry dirt.

"Okay, okay!" Rouge backpedaled while nearby Shadow attempted to get Cheese to release his panickes death-grip on the dark hedgehog's spines. "We'll help! What's the big deal anyway?"

"A bad man named Nega has chao in there!" Cream sniffed back a sob. "And he's gonna feed them to a monster!"

"Will we be able to blow something up?" Omega asked, his priorities ever straight.

Gemerl made to reply when a loud burst of water drew everyone's attention to the end of the peninsula where a massive blue and steel machine had burst up from the gulf. The machine had a flat top shaped like a bucket with angled metal prongs pointing downwards along the sides, an angry face like a cartoon octopus with the 'o' shaped mouth, and eight tentacles made from hexagonal panels linked together with energy cannons at the ends of each.

"Ohohohohoho!" Eggman Nega's screechy voice laughed from the machine. "Looks like someone wants to play with my Egg Octo!"

"You can start with that," Gemerl told Omega.

"Preparing to transform target into a calamari scrapheap," Omega intoned as he cocked his arms like shotguns.

"Hey Tails!" Sonic grinned as he spotted his best bud and Rock's sister converging on their path. "I was hoping we'd get to team up sometime during this!"

"Yeah!" Tails grinned back as Rock and Roll traded cursory greetings. "Wanna see which of us can take out whatever Nega sends the fastest?"

"You're on, buddy! Let–"

WHOOM

The impact caused all but Tails, who was technically flying low to the ground, to stumble before looking to see a rather large Robot Master barring their way. He had armor in steel gray and wood tan, with large round discs on his feet and a truly massive claw-hammer attached to the top of his helmet.

"Duh-hey!" the Robot Master pointed at them. "Are you da guys who Hammer Man has ta squash?" (41)

The four heroes blinked as one.

"Seriously?" Sonic recovered first. "Someone got shorted in the brains department."

"Hey-uh!" Hammer Man shouted. "It's not nice ta make resembling remarks like dat!"

"L–snrk," Tails fought back a laugh, "Looks like it, Sonic!"

"Ya just made me angry!" Hammer Man snarled and with a flash of energy a large hammer with a head that had a wide flat front and a small pointed back appeared in his hand. "Now I'm gonna crush ya, cause it's hammer time!"

"Where is that nincompoop?!" a gray robot whose entire torso was shaped like a giant nail, complete with a flat metal top over his eyes and a point extending below the ring his legs were attached to, grumbled. He clenched his one fist while the nail gun that was his other arm loaded and unloaded its pointed ammunition repeatedly. "We have intruders coming and he's off on his own again! Can't he ever follow orders?!"

"I think we've come at a bad time, Quint," a voice interrupted the Robot Master's fuming.

"Not for us," another replied.

"Well, of course not for us, I meant for him obviously," the first clarified while the nail-themed robot's temper began to mount.

"SILENCE!" the Robot Master roared as his torso spun independent of his legs. As it did, his nail gun arm spouted four large nails that hung in the air around him for a moment before beginning to circle protectively, their sharpened points facing outwards. "I am Nail Man! I give the orders around here and I order you to surrender immediately!" (42)

The silver hedgehog mobian and the green-armored robot with the blue shades that had intruded simply stared back at him.

"Silver?" the green robot, Quint asked calmly.

"Yep, one nail removal coming up," the hedgehog smirked and extended his hand, which began glowing with a teal aura. The same aura sprung up around the nails circling Nail Man in an attempt to hold them still, and promptly vanished without the nails so much as slowing down. The silver hedgehog's eyes widened in surprise.

"Fools," Nail Man chuckled. "As if any power of yours could trump my shield! But don't worry! This will hold you!"

Nail Man pointed at his two foes who were suddenly on guard and directed his nails to fly at them point first. He laughed at how easy it all seemed, before a new figure landed in the way and blocked with a much more traditional shield.

"Who–" was all Nail Man got out before something slammed into his back, causing him to stumble. When he looked back up, he saw a flying squirrel mobian and the figure who had blocked his attack. "A Joe?! A lowly insignificant stupid JOE?!"

"Yes," the Joe responded before rolling a live grenade at the nail robot.

Nail Man's eyes widened upon seeing the explosive and he reformed his shield quickly, though he took a few shots from the Joe and the Quint robot first. The grenade detonated and the blast was successfully deflected by Nail Man's shield.

Quint turned blue and peach and attempted to try the Glue Shot, only for the sharp nails to easily shred the substance before it could contact Nail Man himself.

"Inferior tactics will not help you!" Nail Man declared as he fired more nails into the air to then rain down over his foes.

Blues grunted from the impact as the robotic hedgehog slammed into his shield. They'd spotted the black and purple canine in jet form carrying some strange device on their way to investigate the potential splash-down zone of whatever was coming this way when said robot had taken exception to their following it and decided to take a potshot at them. That had set Knuckles off and in response, the robo-dog had responded to his rage by seeking out its masters, the robots that looked like Bass and Metal Sonic, but didn't quite act like them.

Those two had been pursued by Sally and NICOLE, who were after the device the canine unit carried, and now it was a racing battle to try and catch the robo-dog while its masters tried to protect it and its cargo from them.

"Imbeciles!" the Bass-like robot declared as it unleashed suppressing fire on Knuckles and NICOLE. "It is futile to oppose our master! For he is great and mighty, and you are small and–"

Blues cut the black and gold robot off with a shot from his buster after Sally had engaged the Metal Sonic lookalike.

"Geez!" Sonic yelped as he jumped over a wide-arcing shockwave that Hammer Man had generated by slamming the hammer-shaped attachment on his head into the ground. "For a dumb guy, he sure knows how to use his head!"

"He sure does!" Tails agreed from the air.

"Stop callin' me dumb!" Hammer Man roared as he threw several of his large hammers at the two grinning mobians.

"Stop leaving your back open, then!" Roll admonished as she and Rock tagged Hammer Man and both turned wood-tan and steel-gray from copying his weapon.

"You stop makin' fun a' me right now!" Hammer Man angrily turned around and threw more hammers at the two robots, who responded with hammers of their own, the projectiles clanging together loudly as they canceled each others' momentum.

"Okay," Rock shrugged. "But you're still leaving your back open."

Whatever Hammer Man's retort would have been, it was silenced by the two Spin Dashes to his back.

"Oh g-g-geez!" Ray frantically evaded as Nail Man's torso, separated from his legs and levitating in the air, tried to impale him from above.

A short ways away, the robot's legs were running after the other three with the barrier of sharp nails surrounding it.

"It is useless to resist!" Nail Man taunted as his torso rose up and his legs rushed under it before recombining. "I am the supreme tactician of Nega's forces!"

Nail Man punctuated the claim by firing more nails into the air to rain down on his opponents before those making up his shield stopped their orbit to fire at each of them as well.

"Now!" Quint yelled as the shield's protection was dropped and the cry was rewarded with action from all four. Silver grabbed some chunks out of the ground with his psychokinesis and flung them at the robot, Quint and Joe opened up with their arm cannons, and Ray slammed into the robot with a flying double-kick.

"Annoying thick-headed insects!" Nail Man yelled as he reformed his shield and glared. "You got lucky, but you have not the brains to trap me a second time!"

"How about the brawn?" Quint snarled as he turned purple and orange before levelling his buster at Nail Man and shooting a spray of pure trinitroglycerin at the robot.

BABABOOM!

Nail Man's eyes widened as the liquid exploded, the blasts tearing straight through his barrier of nails and into his body. And Quint didn't stop with one use of the weapon once he saw how effective it was, he kept firing until he was out and Nail Man fell over in a smoldering heap.

Breathing to circulate cooling air over his circuits, Quint stepped up to the prone form of Nail Man before kneeling down and copying his weapon. The robot from the future turned gray and tan as the Nail Shield became his.

"I don't believe this!" Nega's voice screeched from the Egg Octo's form as the machine's systems began suffering catastrophic failure after the repeated attacks by its foes. "You may have beaten this machine, but it's the last thing you will ever do! Initiate Self Destruct!"

"Cream!" Gemerl darted towards the rabbit girl in alarm, grabbing her, her chao, and wrapping them all in a forcefield as he took off as fast as possible. Behind them, a cry of "CHAOS CONTROL" sounded before the aquatic war machine detonated with enough force to carve a crater out of the peninsula.

"Mr. Gemerl..."

"Yes, are you alright Cream?"

"We still have to save those chao..."

"Of course, Cream."

"We've got you now, whoever you are!" Sally declared as she slashed at the Bass-clone, sending him to the ground while Knuckles punched out the latest robot hedgehog in her life and Blues and NICOLE got ahead of the Treble-imposter and cut him off.

"Well struck indeed," the Bass-imposter complimented and got to his feet. His canine companion transformed back into dog mode and backed up to join him as they both flanked the hedgehog robot. "It is too bad for you that it was all in vain."

"What do you mean?" Knuckles snarled, brandishing his fist threateningly. "Tell us now!"

"Isn't it obvious?" the robot smiled tolerantly before pointing upwards.

Despite herself, Sally looked up and gasped when she saw the burning object plummeting through the air for the center of the gulf.

"My master has arrived, and your world is forfeit before his might."

Sally half expected the robot to burst out laughing, but he just kept smiling in that way of his as the blazing object grew ever closer to impact, before suddenly vanishing in a teleportation beam along with his two companions and the last portal piece.

"No!" Sally cried out just before the object impacted and a massive wall of water was thrown up, heading straight for them.

Bass shook off his internal alarms following the impact and looked around his cell before grinning.

"Heh... Looks like Nega forgot to build this thing to code. Freedom here we–"

Treble whined as the sound of rushing water cut his master off.

"Did you say 'freedom' or 'Davy Jones' Locker'?" Metal Sonic spat out at the same time the walls of their cell burst open from the water pressure.

"Ohhhh... my head..." Nega groaned as he righted himself. "That was a bigger impact than I expected..."

"Are you alright, master?"

"Of course I'm alright!" Nega snapped. "I'm the rightful ruler of the world! There's no way I'd ever be anything else! Did you get it?!"

"Of course, master," his creation brought out a device that shimmered in and out of existence independent of any light source. Upon the device was a stylized 'Y'.

"And the rest of it?" Nega frowned.

"My humblest apologies, master. The nuisance known as 'Sally Acorn' still possesses them."

"Bah! Nevermind then. She'll be bringing them to me soon enough."

"Pardon my failure, master, but your collected foes have proven stronger than anticipated."

"Well, then I guess it's time to upgrade you," a wicked grin split Nega's face.

"Damn scrapping giant piranha bots!" Bass swore violently as another of the damn things darted out from yet another broken alcove and tried to bite him in half. "Fucking seahorse pieces of waste oil!" he growled, blasting one of the purple idiocies that had come from the other direction while Treble pounced on another. As he was doing so, a piece of shrapnel caught him in the back.

"Creator-fucking GLITCH !" Bass roared. "What the hell do you think you're doing, you tin-plated rodent?!"

"Cataloguing profanities for later use," Metal Sonic intoned from where he'd supposedly been disarming the aquatic mines barring their way. "Do continue. They are quite fascinating."

"GO BUG YOURSELF UP YOUR PRIMARY RAM CHIP!" (43)

"Showoff," Quint snorted as he watched the massive wave of water part around the rooftop he and Silver had been standing on due to the hedgehog's psychokinesis.

"Like you wouldn't have done the same in my place," Silver smirked.

Whatever Quint's reply would have been was interrupted by a shout of greeting from above and the two figures looked up to see the Mega Woman riding her feline support unit's jet board mode with Tails in tow.

"If I never see another of pops' stupid thrice-damned weaponized water filters, it will be way too damned soon," Bass grumbled as he and Metal Sonic exited an underwater breach in Nega's busted-up base of operations, stepping over what looked like a giant mechanical jellyfish made of metal struts.

Metal Sonic made an odd noise that sounded like he was trying to imitate laughter. "What did you say, again? 'I refuse to lose to a glorified fucking brita with delusions of grandeur'?"

"Shut up!" Bass snapped right before Treble, utilizing an aquatic version of his jet mode, growled at something.

Bass wasn't even through the first syllable of 'what is it, boy?' when all three of them were thrown off-balance by a sudden shift in the water currents.

Tumbling and swearing loudly, Bass finally managed to find purchase on the sea floor. Nearby Treble dug his steel claws into a rocky outcropping and Metal Sonic countered the sudden current with his thrusters.

"Pity you do not know how to go with the flow," a new voice declared. The three escapees looked to see a mostly light blue robot, with a few ocean blue and steel gray parts, that had a large cylinder for a torso with a big outboard motor fan in a circular opening in the center. Said cylinder extended to include the robot's head and still further before bending forwards at ninety degrees and ending with an open pipe. Two more cylinders almost as large, and with more aquatic turbines, made up the robot's shoulders. One of the attached arms ended in a large cannon of some kind and the robot's legs and feet were decorated with sharp-looking fins.

"When the hell did Pump Man and Air Man get together and how the flying fuck did they have a kid?" Bass sneered as he took in the enemy Robot Master.

"I am Whirlpool Man," the Robot Master declared as his eyes, the only facial features he had save for a circular parody of a mouth, spun around the back of his head and returned to the front from the other side. "Appointed by the great Eggman Nega as general of his navy!" (44)

"Admiral," Metal Sonic corrected.

"Prisoners are not to speak!" Whirlpool Man shouted, his turbines whirring at a fast pace as his shoulders rotated several times before stopping perpendicular to his body. "Much less nitpick how Lord Nega chooses to organize his forces!"

"I am so glad no one actually needs saving in this mess," Sonic said as he and Rock flew on Rush's Jet mode over the waterlogged coastal area. All around them, the sound of an alert siren blared from the distance.

"I suppose it's good luck that everyone evacuated before that thing hit," Rock nodded in agreement.

"M-m-maybe n-not," another voice cut into their search as a familiar face flew up.

"Hey Ray!" Sonic greeted. "What's up?"

"We are looking for possible stragglers from the evacuation we called in," Joe informed them as the helicopter MET he was holding carried him to the group.

"That was you?" Rock blinked in surprise. "You saved a lot of lives."

"Just doing our duty."

Bass was furious. As if everything else wasn't enough, the mines that Whirlpool Man kept deploying to swirl around as he manipulated the water currents had seriously injured Treble. He fully intended to take the bug-bastard's weapon and see how he liked getting blown up!

"Gotcha!" he snarled, finally tagging the aquatic robot and taking the... Water Cannon? Not the blasted mines?

"Stop stalling," Metal Sonic admonished the now ocean blue with sky blue trim Bass as he destroyed several mines before they could detonate properly.

"Shut up!" Bass growled before turning to Whirlpool Man and leveling his new weapon at the Robot Master. "Let's see how you like it!"

Whirlpool Man simply floated in the current, unimpressed as a stream of tiny harmless bubbles issued from Bass's arm cannon amidst a stream of water no stronger than a stiff breeze amidst the ocean. (45)

"THE FUCK IS UP WITH THIS THING?!"

"Fool!" Whirlpool Man declared, his aquatic turbines whirring pointedly. "You do not have the necessary systems to manipulate the ocean currents as I do!"

"Fine, then you son of a glitch!" Bass roared as he turned back to his usual black and gold and trained both buster arms on the aquatic robot and opening up with twin streams of rapid-fire. "We'll do this the old fashioned way!"

"So that wasn't really Bass?" Shadow asked as Team Dark stood on the shore, looking out at the remains of Eggman Nega's Meteor Base in the middle of the gulf.

"Not according to Rock," NICOLE confirmed from where she and Sally stood nearby. "Too polite, and too ready to flee from battle among other inconsistencies."

"I thought he wasn't quite himself," Rouge snorted.

"News: Good," Omega seemed as pleased as his lack of emotive capacity ever managed. "If the enemy Bass is an impostor, there is no need to hold back."

"Master, we have incoming," the robot disguised as Bass declared as he brought up the monitoring systems. At least what was left of them.

"Take care of it," Nega commanded as he continued working on the canine robot, now a black and red instead of black and purple with its disguise offline.

"Master? But you have not finished the upg–"

"THEN DON'T GET BLOWN UP!" Nega snapped furiously. "Call back whoever is left of the generals, deploy the Egg Devil and Egg Phantom, and take Metal Sonic 3.0 with you!"

Silenced by the order, the robot looked over at his partner, now openly showing the black with yellow stripes design he really possessed rather than his blue-colored disguise. Metal Sonic 3.0's eyes flashed in acknowledgement of the order. (46)

"As you wish, master," the robot bowed before moving to signal Jet Man and Whirlpool Man. Jet Man responded immediately that he was on his way, but Whirlpool Man failed to respond at all…

"There it is..." Knuckles declared grimly as he glided along towards the wrecked Meteor Base.

"Yeah, whatever Nega is planning has to be big for him to crash his base like this," Blues agreed as he flew along using Beat's Jet Adaptor.

"The transport carrying the chao went in through there," Gemerl reported, pointing to one of the larger openings in the base's exterior.

"Then let's go!" Cream declared and angled herself into a dive to gain speed.

"Hey! Wait for us!" Knuckles yelled after the girl before doing the same.

"Well, this shouldn't be too hard," Sonic mused as the group landed on what could be called the beach of Nega's Meteor Base. Assuming you could tilt your head and squint hard enough.

Rock facepalmed as Joe and Ray exchanged looks.

"You h-h-had to say it, d-didn't you?" the flying squirrel crossed his arms and glared at his friend.

"Oops?" Sonic had the good grace to look abashed.

"Here we are," Tails declared as he and the rest landed on what was left of a plateau on Nega's Meteor Base.

"Excellent," Silver slammed a fist into his palm and cracked his knuckles. "We'll come in from above and work our way down! Nega won't know what hit him!"

"Let's just get inside this thing before something happens," Roll said, as she scanned for possible defenses. Some were sure to have survived that impact.

"Agreed, let–" Quint nodded before cutting off as an alert flared to life on his sit-rep shades indicating an enemy target lock. "MOVE!"

Everyone dove to the side just in time as a missile impacted the middle of their group and sent up a large cloud of dust.

"Target Destroyed: Moving on to next," a voice spoke from above.

"Better check again!" Tails yelled as he shot out of the dust at a hot-rod red robot with wings like a fighter jet complete with jet propulsion tail, an elongated black shaded visor over his head reminiscent of a cockpit, blue-tipped missile launchers for arms, and landing gear wheels on the ends of his legs instead of feet.

"Correction, base: Targets remain. Engaging further. Jet Man over and out." (47)

"Okay, here we are," Sally noted as she, NICOLE, and Team Dark touched down on the devastated Meteor Base near a broken entrance hatch.

"And here you shall be buried," the voice of the false Bass greeted them as the impostor stepped out from inside the broken hatch followed by what looked like Metal Sonic painted black with yellow stripes. "Isn't that right Metal Sonic 3.0?"

"Is your master incapable of counting?" NICOLE snorted while getting into a ready stance. "Full version upgrades generally begin at 2.0."

"He is simply that much of a genius!" the impostor attempted to declare regally, but there was a noticeable twitch in his eye. "It's why I am happy to serve him instead of–"

"Oh, come off it," Rouge interrupted. "We know you're not really Bass you fake!"

"Well, I suppose that means I can dispose of this disguise at last," the robot smirked at the accusation. There was a shimmer as his armor rearranged itself. The colors were still mostly black with gold trim, but the armor's design was notably different. The shoulders and leg armor pieces were more angular with pointed edges, but the biggest difference was the helmet. Gone were Bass's trademarked fins, replaced by a vertical gold crest over the middle of the helmet with a blue triangular forehead gem at the front. Over his ears were what appeared to be gold wing-like shaped and the robot's face was unmarked by Bass's typical 'war paint'. "Pleased to introduce myself at last, I am Ba–"

His introduction was cut off by gunfire from Omega, forcing him to dodge.

"Names are irrelevant to scrap metal," Omega intoned, preparing another shot.

"If you insist... scrap metal," the robot's face split in a sadistic grin before he and Metal Sonic 3.0 charged.

"What the hell is up with the creepy lighting in this room?" Knuckles wondered as he tried to focus on the location of the Master Emerald. They were getting close, he could feel it.

"Bad taste in decorating?" Blues guessed.

"I-i-i-it f-feels like w-w-we're being w-watched," Cream shivered and hugged Cheese close for comfort. "L-l-like a g-g-..."

"Like a what, Cream?" Gemerl questioned as he turned to see the young girl looking back, her fur seeming to pale as she pointed at a large sheet-white form hovering behind the group with its translucent sheet-like form twisted so the folds formed a scowling face.

"GHOST!"

"This is clearly a trap," Joe noted as the four examined the shuttered door.

"It's also our only way through," Rock replied.

"Come on!" Sonic grinned, slinging an arm around Ray's shoulders. "We'll trash whatever's behind here, no prob! It'll be just like old times, buddy!"

"Y-yeah!" Ray tried to mimic Sonic's enthusiasm as the four approached the door and stepped through as it opened.

None were surprised when it slammed shut behind them.

"Laser cannons on each wall and ceiling," Joe noted as he examined the room, which was empty save for themselves and the laser cannons.

"Dual tracked, too," Rock nodded. "so they can be positioned to fire from any point on their assigned surface."

"And here's our latest contestant!" Sonic grinned as a purple blob shimmered into existence mid-air, before opening a familiar eye.

"A d-d-d-d-devil series?!" Ray gulped.

"Looks like," Sonic smirked. "Nega even shaped it like an egg too!"

And then talking became a luxury as the Egg Devil and the wall-mounted laser cannons began firing.

"So what are jets generally vulnerable to?" Quint had asked sardonically after the Mega Woman had nixed his choices of the Glue Shot, the Tank Arsenal, and even the Hammer Throw that she'd rather generously gifted him with. Trying to evade the repeated high speed bombardment and targeted missile strikes was getting tiresome for all of them after all, and so a counteroffensive was necessary.

"Head-on collisions," both Tails and the Mega Woman had replied in unison.

That had left the rather obvious choice of Comet Dash, and after a shared nod with Silver, Quint prepared the weapon to meet Jet Man's next pass. As he heard the plane-themed robot master approach, he prepared himself and shot forwards at the last moment in a burst of speed that coated his body in energy and created a shockwave.

Sadly, Jet Man had barrel rolled around the main strike and was only clipped by the shockwave. Fortunately, Silver's follow-up blow using his own psychokinetic energy to boost into the air had scored a direct hit. Jet Man spiraled out of control before deciding to try and kamikaze the group.

The Mega Woman and Tails had been ready for that eventuality and left the aerial robot broken at their feet, ready to have his weapon copied.

And as Quint did so, turning hot-rod red and steel gray, he wondered why the Mega Woman had insisted it be him to do so.

"Ohohohoho!" Nega's voice screeched from the phantom. "There's no escaping the Egg Phantom! It has no weaknesses!"

"Except maybe the fact that its holographic shell fades in strong light sources," Blues noted, his coloration turning violet and lavender. (48) "Say cheese."

A bright flash of light stripped the ghostly form away to reveal the hovering machine underneath. A second later and a triple impact from Knuckles, Cream, and Gemerl sent it crashing into the wall where it shattered.

Rouge reflected that this was not going the way she and the others had anticipated. Omega had tried to stop the charge of Metal Sonic 3.0 and whoever had been impersonating Bass, only to get his arms blown off for his trouble. One had detonated at the forearm while the other had been sheared off at the shoulder. Omega had sputtered in confusion while their opponents took advantage of it to sow even more.

"CHAOS BL–oof!" Shadow took a roundhouse kick to the gut from the impostor that sent him careening into a cliff face while the princess and her holo-buddy dueled Metal Sonic 3.0.

Rouge herself was nursing a bruised face from where she'd taken a kick herself trying to blindside the robot with a Black Wave.

"It's over, you wastrels!" not-Bass crowed. "There is nothing you can do to stop our master!"

"Negative," Omega intoned and Rouge looked to see the walking armory had opened his chest to reveal yet more weapons. All trained on the former Bass impostor. "We can blow you to smoldering ashes. Fi–"

The opponent had whipped dual arm cannons at Omega too fast to react and fired. Rouge watched as her destructive friend went up in a massive fireball as his own munitions detonated internally. (49)

"Omega!" Rouge called out as time seemed to slow down. And then she spotted an object tumbling and squawking from the conflagration to land a few feet away. Looking closer, she recognized a smoldering flicky bird.

Omega's biological core this Loop.

And then she saw the not-Bass aim his arm cannons at her downed friend.

Without thinking, Rouge darted forwards to scoop up the injured bird and hold him close. She heard the buster shots impact followed by the sound of automatic gunfire. Either Shadow had picked up Omega's severed arm or he'd pulled part of his gun collection out of his pocket. Either way, she focused on keeping away from the not-Ba–

A stray shot clipped her leg and she stumbled, losing hold of flicky-Omega. A mild explosion and Shadow began swearing up a storm. Apparently he'd lost whatever firearm he'd picked up. Rouge got to her feet and say not-Bass raising his foot to stomp on flicky-Omega.

Dashing forwards as fast as she could, Rouge scooped the bird up again just barely ahead of the metal boot and rolled to her feet, befo–

Everything Rouge knew was drowned out by the sharp impact to her back, a sickening crack, and the unbearable pain as her spine was snapped in two. (50)

"Okay guys, say cheese!" Sonic grinned as he held the camera steady on his buddy and his robotic partner. The room around them was nicely trashed and the Egg Devil... Well, between a pretty sweet shot by that Joe character and Ray's super flying drop kick, the ocular control unit was now a giant prop in one of the coolest photo ops of the Loop.

"Ch-ch-cheese!" Ray grinned amidst his heroic pose atop the broken Devil Core as Sonic snapped the picture. Plus a few more for good measure.

Sonic would be one of the first to admit that his buddy was awesome, but Ray could still use all the confidence builders he could get.

"Was that really necessary?" Joe asked as he finally stepped away from the downed machine.

"Probably not," Rock shrugged, "but it's not every day you see a flying squirrel and a Joe unit take down a Devil Series. Speaking of... how did you end up going renegade anyway? No offense, but the Joe models aren't supposed to be capable of thought processes nearly as complex as what you've shown."

"No offense was taken," Joe noted, "though I fail to see how such information is relevant to our circumstances, or indeed any of your business."

"Well..." Rock tried to think of the best way to say that he thought Joe might be a looper, but an explosion from further inside the base reminded him that there were more pressing matters.

The moment he'd heard Rouge's scream of pain, Shadow had seen red. He'd started the process to remove his limiter rings before he even knew what he was doing in order to spread the faker's tin-plated ass all over the gulf.

Unfortunately, Metal Sonic 3.0 had blindsided him from behind before he'd even loosened the first.

Shadow hadn't let that stop him though. He'd turned the undesired forwards momentum into a Spin Dash instead and...

That hadn't fared any better. The Bass impostor had met the deadly charge with an overhead strike so hard that Shadow had bounced after being spiked into the ground. And then he'd been launched towards the water with a spinning kick.

Gritting his teeth in fury as he pulled himself from the water, Shadow pulled out the purple Chaos Emerald and prepared to return to battle.

"CHAOS... CONT–"

He almost lost focus of the warping technique when he felt the hand clamp onto his shoulder.

Quint, Silver, Tails, and Roll were rushing through the complex towards the central command center when a massive form fell in front of them.

THOOM

"Hammer Man?" Roll blinked, getting into a ready stance.

"Targets acquired," the large robot answered in a clipped monotone.

"A copy at least," Tails noted, taking in the robot's blank expression.

"Engaging," A second identical monotone stated from the side just before a stream of water blindsided the group. (51)

Rouge was having trouble concentrating past a number of things.

There was the searing pain in her back that stabbed at her brain with even the smallest movements. That was a hard thing to do.

"N...L.! ...t.c. ..u..!"

There was that ringing in her ears that made it hard to think. It sounded like fighting. Maybe it was. There was also a sense that she was very much in danger.

"...s n. ..e, mi... ..ur ..ie.. .. . de.. ..t ..awl... .nd .oo. ...'ll jo.. ..r."

There was the very disturbing sensation of being unable to feel her legs. Walkers, why couldn't she feel her legs?!

"N.. ..u ..o.! I ne.. ... ali.. ..ng ...ug. .. .. oth.. Y... ...ts!"

"O. ...r... ma..."

There was something about Eggman... Or Nega... Eggman Nega? Nega Eggman? She couldn't remember at the moment. What she could remember was that sound. The sound of breaking bone echoing in her ears.

Snap

"A...hh!"

Just like that... But she forced herself onwards, not really sure where. She was only certain of one thing. The one thought the drowned out all the others. The tiny thing she could barely feel clutched to her chest with one arm past all the pain.

She had to protect Omega. She didn't know how, but she had to.

"–ROL!"

Looking up at the sound some part of her found familiar, Rouge saw a pair of black blurs.

And she smiled.

Blues held his shield as the walking tank and his nitroglycerin-spraying partner continued their assault.

"Mr. Blues!" Cream yelled as the red raider almost seemed to be engulfed in explosions.

"Get her out of here!" Knuckles yelled, charging at the enemy robots.

"No, I won't leave you!" the young rabbit wailed even as Gemerl picked her up bodily and prepared to flee.

"You're here to free the chao, right?" Blues shouted back, the question punctuated with an emphatic from a worried Cheese. "Then go find them while we keep these things busy!"

"They're right, Cream," Gemerl reminded the girl. "They have their mission and we have ours."

"Bass?! Is that really you?"

"Who the fuck else would I be?"

"Well..."

Shadow had insisted Bass had to see it for himself. And so he was.

It wasn't an encouraging sight.

There were pieces of metal scrap all over that looked like they came from Omega. Rouge was on the ground trying to crawl away with one arm while the other clutched something Bass couldn't see. Neither the fact that her legs were dragging limply behind her attempts to crawl away, nor the fact that her eyes weren't properly focusing on anything, was a good sign.

He saw the holographic lynx NICOLE fighting some weird black and yellow Metal Sonic... Metal Sonic 3.0. It had to be. Unfortunately, the computer-generated combatant had her attention split worrying about the last figure in the tableau.

Princess Sally Acorn was being held up by a humanoid robot that looked way too much like Bass himself for his comfort levels. She was being held roughly by her hair in one of the robot's hands while the other pointed an arm cannon at her midsection. One of her arms hung limply at an odd angle, clearly broken.

"Treble..." Bass ordered in a growl, his faithful companion appearing in a flash of purple light as Metal Sonic 3.0 and NICOLE locked in a struggle, the latter trying to keep the former away from Rouge. "Get Rouge out of here. Now."

Treble barked once before bounding over to Rouge in a single movement and grabbing onto her before they both vanished in a flash of light.

"Protecting the weaklings?" the robot who would be Bass's twisted mirror if not for the design of his armor smirked. "Careful, your failings are showing."

"Sh-Shado–AAHHH!" Sally called out before tossing something the dark hedgehog's way. She got a sharp blow to her broken arm for her trouble, but Shadow caught the item easily. Bass idly noted it as NICOLE's pocket computer. Her real body.

"Ah-ah, princess," Bass's double tsked. "No more of that. You're only alive because my master wished it so, but he may change his mind if you become too much of a nuisance."

"Who the fuck are you, anyway?" Bass sneered.

"I am Baroque," Bass's double performed as shallow a mock bow as possible, his infuriating smirk never wavering. (52)

"Sal–oof!" NICOLE was kicked back by a sudden maneuver from the black metal hedgehog she was fighting.

"And this is my partner, Metal Sonic 3.0," Baroque continued as Metal Sonic 3.0 moved to stand in front of him. "If you decide to test us, you will find we are far superior combatan–"

"Shut your pie hole," the monotone insult heralded a blue streak that slammed into Metal Sonic 3.0 and carried him into a wall with a crash. Upon impact, the blue streak was revealed to be the original Metal Sonic. "Talk is cheap."

Rock and Sonic had been separated from Joe and Ray when they were ambushed by the duo of Comet Woman and Jet Man, or at least copies of them. Rock and Sonic had elected to stay and fight the two while Ray and Joe kept going.

The explosions elsewhere in the complex kept echoing around them.

Baroque's superior smirk had slipped when Metal Sonic arrived. He was apparently confident that he and Metal Sonic 3.0 were more than a match for Shadow and Bass, but with the original Metal Sonic keeping his partner busy, and with orders to keep his captive alive, he suddenly seemed much less certain.

"Baroque, eh?" Bass sneered back at his double. "How appropriate, since you're about to get 'baroquen'..."

"You are a feeble-minded and outdated model," Baroque backed up towards the entryway behind him. "Were it not for my master's orders, I would prove how inferior you are after his improvements to myself."

"You keep telling yourself that," Bass began advancing slowly. He could hear Shadow cracking his knuckles as the hedgehog followed.

"No need," Baroque grinned before turning and dashing into the complex, Sally giving a cry of pain as she was roughly dragged after him.

Bass and Shadow darted forwards, only to be brought up short as a burst of multicolored light erupted in their faces.

" Creator fucker! "

Roll and Tails darted through the facility, trusting that Quint and Silver knew what they were doing in handling the copies of Hammer Man and Whirlpool Man. As they ran, they heard a commotion up ahead.

Exchanging glances, they sped up. In a short time, they came across the broken remains of what Roll recognized as Yo-Yo Man and the sight of Cream and Gemerl trying to evade an assault by Nail Man.

"Head's up!" Roll shouted as she opened fire.

"Additional hostiles detected," the copy of Nail Man declared, turning to throw its active Nail Shield at them. Roll and Tails evaded the sharp projectiles easily, and removing his protection proved to be the Nail Man copy's undoing as Gemerl tore through the construction model from behind.

"You won't get away with this..." Sally gasped out as she was dragged along at high speed, the echoes of battle elsewhere in the facility sounding all around her and her captor.

"Of course I will," Baroque replied evenly as he reached his destination and slowed down long enough for Sally to orient herself, "for my master wills it."

"Indeed I do!" Eggman Nega greeted them. "And now, with you bringing me the rest of the Yoku Parts, there's nothing to stop me! Ohohohoho–"

Sally chose that moment to activate the gravity control mechanism in the wrist weapon on her good arm and fling a surprised Baroque off of her. Ignoring how much her broken arm hurt, Sally switched to the energy blade and dashed at Eggman Nega.

"What the–?!"

"Crash!" Baroque snarled and Sally's charge was halted as a black and red object slammed into her.

There had been little warning when it happened. A robot with wheels on his feet had barreled around a corner directly at them. Ray had panicked and gone into a knee-jerk martial arts maneuver that swept the robot's wheeled feet out from under it to send it tumbling over to where Joe had smashed it in the face with his shield. And then shot it through the head for good measure.

The whole encounter was over in barely a second.

Quint snorted from stop the hefty Hammer Man as he deactivated the Water Cannon weapon and turned from ocean and sky blue back to his usual green and lime form. Nearby, the nearly mindless replica of a 'Whirlpool Man' (according to the schematics his copy chip had gleaned) lay in a broken heap, his aquatic turbines halted with the Glue Shot and his chassis crushed from the Hammer Throw.

"Nega must be desperate if he's sending mindless minions after us now," Silver noted.

"Or stalling," Quint observed.

The two exchanged a knowing glance before dashing deeper into the complex.

"Having trouble, Knux?" Sonic grinned as he and Rock finally found the source of the explosions.

"You want to try dealing with these explosions?" Knuckles yelled back. "Be my guest!"

"I've got an idea," Rock exchanged a glance with Blues.

"I think I see where you're going with this," the red raider smirked as both began charging their weapons. "On three."

"Go." Metal Sonic had told them. "I shall handle this one for you."

And so Bass, Shadow, and NICOLE had went. They'd torn through the rainbow robot and carved a swath through what little defenses remained as they followed Baroque into the depths of Meteor Base's remains.

About halfway through, Treble had teleported back in and joined them in their rush. And now, they had arrived at what Shadow said was the place's command center.

Proving he was right were the figures of Nega and Baroque standing atop a high platform with Sally held captive by the latter and a black and red doberman robot stood at Baroque's feet.

"Hold it right there, Nega!" the voice of Quint bellowed from an entrance at the other side of the chamber.

"Your evil scheming ends today, Nega!" Silver declared dramatically. "Surrender! It's no use!"

"Fools!" Nega cackled in his high pitched voice. "There is nothing you can do to sto–"

Whatever Nega was going to say was cut off as the wall opposite him; between the duo of Quint and Silver and the group of Shadow, Bass, NICOLE, and Treble; exploded mightily.

"Your creator thinks simply calling you 3.0 makes you superior," Metal Sonic intoned while he and his double dueled as they rose into the air. "He is incorrect."

"You guys," Sonic grinned as he, Blues, Knuckles, and Rock stepped through the dust and into the room. "Did we miss anyth–SAL!"

"Ohohohohoho!" Nega laughed as if the wall to his command chamber hadn't just been blown to bits. "Why, you haven't missed a thing! You're just in time to see my ultimate triumph!"

Nega gestured to a device hovering over what had used to be the center of the chamber.

"Behold! The first of the Yoku Parts! The pieces of the ultimate zone portal and the keys to my ultimate triumph!" (53)

"The... Yoku Parts?" Quint asked. "You don't mean...?"

"I do!" Nega cackled. "The portal to the ultimate zone where reality itself is fluid and everything is possible!"

"You guys know what he's talking about?" Knuckles asked.

"There's a legend that will be uncovered decades from now about a portal to a zone that would drive everyone who entered it mad," Silver informed them. "A Zone ruled over by the 'Yoku Master'."

"A Zone from which no enemy of the portal's master ever returned," Nega grinned sadistically. "And what's more, the portal itself can open a gateway to any Zone at all. Even those supposedly sealed off from access."

"You'll never get the rest of the parts..." Sally grunted from where she was restrained by Baroque.

"Oh, but I shall!" Nega grinned and pressed a button behind him. "Right now in fact!"

The Yoku Part in the center of the room began glowing and Sally gave a sudden cry of shock as three more appeared around her before moving to join the first.

"Sal!" Sonic shouted in concern and dashed towards where she was held.

'Those... They just tore themselves out of my subspace pocket!' Sally thought in a daze.

"Ohohohoho!" Nega cackled as the Yoku Parts arranged themselves in a segmented ring and began to glow even brighter.

In a flash of light, a Zone portal appeared in the center of the devices, and began to draw air into it at a rapid pace. Sonic's rush to grab Sally was interrupted as the rush of air pulled him off his feet and towards the portal.

"Sonic!" Sally cried out, activating her wrist blade and sending a wild slash that forced Baroque to release her. She dove after Sonic, and succeeded in tackling him away from the portal. Unfortunately, this caused her to fall into it instead.

"Sal!" Sonic shouted in dismay before Rock grabbed him to prevent the hedgehog from jumping in deliberately.

As if that was a cue, the rush of air increased in intensity.

"Shadow!" NICOLE's eyes widened as the increased rush of air ripped her handheld body out of the hedgehog's grasp. Reacting on instinct, Shadow dove after it and got caught in the rush of air. The moment NICOLE's handheld form went through the portal, her holographic body vanished. A moment later and Shadow too was lost through the portal.

Nearby, Blues was struggling to keep his footing while holding onto Knuckles the Echidna. A potshot from Baroque caused Blues to lose his footing and get sucked towards the portal. He managed to throw Knuckles free hard enough that the echidna latched his namesake into the ceiling, but the recoil of the throw sealed his fate.

"Silver, hang on!" Quint's voice was heard on the other side of the room where Sakugarne was anchored to the floor. Quint was barely holding on with his feet while he tried to pull Silver back with his hands. The hedgehog tried to use his psychokinesis to aid the effort, but the energy seemed to get sucked into the portal along with the air.

And then Quint's feet slipped free and both robot and hedgehog from the future went tumbling for the portal. Thinking fast, Quint twisted around and hurled Silver straight for Sakugarne before using his rotation to bring his charging arm cannon to bear on the Yoku Parts generating the portal. The moment he hit the portal, Quint fired.

The moment he finished vanishing into the portal, the devices flickered from the shot and faded away completely, taking the portal with them.

"Yeeek!" Cream yelled as she nearly ran into a green robot after turning a corner. A moment later and weapons were trained on said robot who ducked behind a shield.

"H-h-hi guys!" Ray waved from behind the robot, defusing the tension.

"Sorry about that," Roll smiled sheepishly as she turned her arm back from a canon.

"Understandable," Joe nodded, lowering his shield. "We were just attempting to break into one of Nega's storerooms."

"Need any help?" Tails volunteered.

Sally looked around at the strange surroundings of the new zone. The whole place was, as Sonic might put it, a trip.

The ground she was sitting on shimmered like some neon hologram despite being distinctly solid and the sky... looked like she imagined the inside of a disco ball might.

And then there were the things that appeared and disappeared with that strange sound like some mutant vacuum cleaner dopplering into the distance. Blocks, wall, ladders, spikes, and things she didn't really want to think about. All arranged in ways that would give M. C. Esher a headache. (54)

But that was all better than looking at what Shadow was about to do with her broken arm.

"Hold still, princess," Shadow told her, gripping her arm tightly. His voice echoed oddly in the distorted space of the zone, just like every other sound in it.

Damn but he was taking his sweet time.

"Are you going to set it or noAAAHH!"

"You enjoyed that, didn't you?" Sally growled out.

"Little bit," Shadow admitted.

"I've got the splint ready to apply," NICOLE stated.

"Good," Blues nodded. "Let's get that on her so we can start looking for a way out of... what did you say this place was again, Quint?"

"The Zone of Illusion."

"You are better than I thought," Metal Sonic observed as both he and his knockoff sparked from wounds in the air as they remained locked in a death grip. "But were you granted independent backup download and restoration?"

Metal Sonic 3.0's eyes flashed in confusion.

"I thought not. Farewell. Perhaps I should say 'it was nice knowing you', but..."

Metal Sonic's frame began to glow from overload.

"I would be lying."

BOOM

"NO!" Nega fumed and pounded a control panel while Baroque watched impassively. "THAT... THAT... I HATE THAT ROBOT!"

"You okay SIlver?" Rock asked the time traveler.

"I'm fine ," Silver waved him off gruffly. "We have to stop Nega so we can get the others ba–"

The entire room stopped and stared as the portal reappeared right where it had been, before fading back out again.

"The hell?" Knuckles voiced the room's thoughts.

"Took the words right out of my mouth," Bass admitted.

"OHOHOHOHOHOHOHO!" Nega began laughing. "I've done it! A spacially unstable portal whose entrance and exit can be altered to any destination in existence! And it's mine! ALL MINE!"

"Uh-huh..." Sonic tapped his foot impatiently. "Ya know, we might have something to say about that."

"Who cares!" Nega grinned like a maniac. "Baroque! Crash! DESTROY THEM!"

"As you wi–" Baroque began before pausing. "Master, I am sorry to report that Metal Sonic 3.0's signal has gone offline."

"WHAT?!"

"Aw, Nega, did one of your toys get broken?" Sonic smirked. "Maybe you should stop building them so cheap."

"Who cares!" Silver growled as he stepped forwards and began to float in the air with his psychokinesis. "Give up Nega! It's no use resisting!"

"..."

"You may have a replica Bass, but we have you outnumbered," Rock noted as he stooped to pick up Sakugarne where the battle jackhammer had fallen. He smiled as the unit readily accepted him as a temporary user and propped it up like he'd seen Quint do in countless Loops.

"And outclassed," Knuckles cracked his namesake.

"Please," Bass scoffed as he stepped forwards and recalibrated a shoulder joint. "I can take my half-assed knockoff singlehandedly. "You guys just figure out what order you kick the whiny bastard's ass in."

"Hehehehehe..." Nega began laughing. "HOHOHOHOHO! You FOOLS! You thought I would leave myself without appropriate defenses?"

"Kinda," Sonic smirked. "You just seem like the arrogant type."

"THINK AGAIN!" Nega pressed something and the wall behind him broke apart as a giant machine blasted through, an opening at the front that Nega and the platform he stood upon was swallowed by while Baroque and Crash pumped down. "BEHOLD MY ULTIMATE WAR MACHINE! THE EGG–"

"YOU FUCKING LIAR!" Bass roared, pointing accusingly at the giant skull face on the front of the machine. "THAT'S ONE OF MY DAD'S WAR MACHINES YOU STUPID-ASS THIEF!"

"Yeah, that's a Wily Machine alright," Rock noted with complete confidence.

"SILENCE!" Nega screamed. "I also have my elite enforcer, Baroque! Improved off of that idiot Wily's own creation! And now that his partner Crash has been upgraded with my own brilliant designs, he is invincible!"

Baroque bowed to the assembled heroes mockingly before turning to his doberman-like support unit. "Crash!"

The two jumped up into the air, Crash twisting and reforming into additional armor around Baroque, ending with the robot's gold highlights turning blood red and his four new demonic wings flaring dramatically.

"That's just the super adaptor, you ass!" Bass accused. "And it's a fucking lame attempt too! Come on Treble, let's show the bastard how it's really done!"

The son of Wily and his wolf-like companion performed a similar fusion, leaving Bass black and purple with metal-feathered wings like a fallen angel.

"And finally, my own original enforcer, perfected from the designs of my ancestor and with the powers of my most aggravating opponents!"

A gleaming blur shot out from the hole behind the repurposed Wily Machine, and when it halted, the group beheld a gleaming polished silver robotic hedgehog.

"What?!" Silver blinked in astonishment at how much it looked like himself. From the style of the spines, to the glowing red markings on its hands and feet identical to the teal lines on Silver's own gloves and shoes, to the red design on its chest like Silver's own chest hair, to the way it hovered in midair supported by a crimson psychokinetic aura. (55)

"METAL SILVER!"

Sonic started clapping. But he wasn't facing Nega as he did so. He was facing Silver.

"Congrats, man! Your very own evil robo-double! You have officially arrived!"

"Hey!" Bass snapped.

"If yours lasts longer than half a minute, we'll add you to the party," Sonic smirked.

Bass paused, and then shrugged. "Oh well, no cake for me then."

"DIE YOU INSOLENT FOOLS!" Nega screamed.

Blues was having a hard time navigating this Zone. Not only was half the terrain like those Yuko Blocks Wily liked to taunt his adversaries with, his sit-rep sensors were giving him a glut of contradictory readings, making it almost impossible to tell what was real and what wasn't. The group had already been blindsided more than once by Yoku Blocks that were actually enemies in disguise.

Then there were the monochrome phantoms of themselves that charged out of static 'doors' in reality itself. And never when the group was facing them. It was all–

Blues's thoughts trailed off as he spotted a crystal-shaped device with circuits that glowed the same neon blue as everything else in the Zone. And then the device flashed brightly.

Blues staggered as everything around him was obscured by a psychadelic neon blue pattern. His sensors blared with utter gibberish as he tried to orient himself. The only thing he could still make out besides himself was the strange device that had triggered it.

And then the thing shuddered from multiple impacts before detonating in a flash of color that then promptly imploded itself out of existence.

Quint was nearby, his arm cannon pointed at where the device used to be.

"It seems we truly cannot trust our eyes in this 'Zone of Illusion'," NICOLE admitted what all of them had to have been thinking by then. (56)

"Of course you shouldn't trust your eyes," a new voice echoed around them, seeming to come from everywhere and nowhere at the same time. "You should trust mine."

"Almost got it..." Tails murmured as he and Joe worked on the door. "There!"

The attack came out of nowhere. One moment, they were all looking around for the source of the voice and the next NICOLE's holographic body was torn apart as a Yoku Spike manifested in the same space as her chest.

"MOVE!" Sally ordered everyone and none hesitated, and it was good that they did.

Shadow and Blues barely avoided the same fate themselves, but in the next moment the former was brought to a dead halt as he ran face-first into the wall that manifested directly in front of him. Blues barely skidded to a halt before suffering the same. A quick check revealed that the five of them, counting NICOLE's surviving handheld form, were trapped in a large room that had simply appeared around them.

"Shit!" Quint swore as he examined the walls, the sit-rep scans on his shades nearly having an epileptic fit trying to analyze them.

"Spread out!" Sally called. "Try to find a way out o–"

"There isn't one," the voice from before declared from the center of the room. All four figures whipped around to see the blue, cyan, and gray armored figure standing calmly in the center of the room with his arms folded behind his back. His shoulders were a pair of shimmering cubes, much like the Yoku Blocks peppering this Zone, his wrists looked like they'd been shoved through metal gray bowls as they curved back over his forearms away from his white hands, his leg armor sported a pixelating design of blue and cyan, his chest armor held a glowing static television screen, his eyes and the top of his expressionless head glowed brightly and a glowing shimmering cyan Yoku Block hovered directly above him.

"Who the hell are you?" Shadow demanded.

"I have many names," the figure responded calmly. "The Grand Master of Illusion is a rather well-known one I believe. But if you feel that is too long, you may call me Yoku Man." (57)

"Who built you?" Quint glared, and barely stopped himself from reacting badly as Yoku Man vanished from where he stood and reappeared a moment later directly in front of Quint.

"I was born of the Zone itself," Yoku Man declared, bringing his arms out from behind him and placing them over the screen in his chest. That same instant, a blast of pure energy blew Quint back.

The very next moment, Blues tried to strike Yoku Man with his shield, only for the mysterious figure to vanish before the blow landed.

Several Yoku Blocks appeared with a vooo over the group's heads and a moment later Yoku Man reappeared standing atop one of them staring down disdainfully with his glowing eyes. "And a power you cannot comprehend."

"Get him!" Shadow yelled, already rushing to attack. His Homing Attack was deflected by one of Yoku Man's energy orbs while Blues and Sally jumped up to attack from behind. Like before, Yoku Man vanished before the blows hit, and Blues and Sally were forced to abort their attacks lest they hit each other and instead land on Yoku Man's former perch. Another set of Yoku Blocks appeared above them, and Yoku Man reappeared atop one of them before the first set vanished unexpectedly, causing Blues and Sally to fall to the floor before their opponent unleashed another attack, this one blocked by Blues's shield. Quint and Blues retaliated with buster shots, scoring a few glancing hits before Yoku Man repeated the maneuver, moving even higher before firing again. It seemed to head straight for Blues again and he readied to block, only for the shot to suddenly turn and strike Sally, sending her sprawling.

And then Yoku Man and his blocks all vanished, leaving the four to pick themselves up.

"What just–"

Vooo-vooo-vooo-voo–

"DOWN!" Quint yelled as he spotted the sudden appearance of Yoku Spikes at chest height closing along the walls, with more appearing to create an ever-shrinking space to stand in. Sally and Blues followed his lead while Shadow jumped onto a wall. The spikes manifested above them, but did not move, before finally stopping with just a small opening in the center of the room.

An opening that Yoku Man reappeared in, standing as calm and assured as ever. "And now I have you, foo–"

"Think again!" Shadow yelled, slamming into the robot from above, causing Yoku Man to explode into a spray of glowing orbs and the Yoku Spikes to vanish as rapidly as they'd appeared. Smirking, he stood in the spot his former opponent had just been in and dusted his hands off. "Heh... Looks like he wasn't much after al–"

"Shadow, look out!" Sally warned, prompting the dark hedgehog to open his eyes just in time to realize that the glowing orbs Yoku Man had burst apart into had reversed direction and were converging on his location.

"ARGH!" Shadow yelled in pain as he was blasted backwards from the simple act of Yoku Man re-manifesting in the same spot.

Silver clashed teal psychokinetic aura to crimson psychokinetic aura as he dueled his robotic counterpart. As dire as the situation was, the whole thing with having his very own evil doppleganger felt... pretty good.

Nearby, Bass was showing Baroque that the latter's smug superiority was... not nearly as deserved as he'd thought. Near the top of the chamber's center, the portal faded in and out at semi-regular intervals with an audible Voooo.

As for Nega and the rest of the remaining heroes...

"WILL YOU JUST DIE ALREADY?!" Nega fumed as his opponents bounded off of his Egg Plow. Who cared that he'd repurposed it from one of that inferior Wily's creations? It was all his! It was his brilliance that had procured it and his brilliance that would see his victorious!

"Sorry, Neggy," Sonic smirked as he evaded the blades mounted to the front of the device. "Not on our to-do list today."

"Can we interest you in a free butt-whooping instead?" Knuckles grinned as he did the same.

"GAAAAH! ALL WEAPONS: FIRE!"

"Hey Nega!" Rock yelled as he rebounded off the floor with Sakugarne over the barrage, angling the battle jackhammer straight for the cockpit. "In your face!"

Quint grunted as another of Yoku Man's energy shots grazed him and jumped towards the strange being standing high above the floor of his personal deathtrap. He had to make contact. Yoku Man was proving too adept at shrugging off their best shots and vanishing into thin air to avoid stronger blows. If Quint could just get one good touch and scan him with his copy chip, he might be able to find a weakne–

Quint's fingers had barely made contact when Yoku Man and his blocks all vanished, leaving Quint to fall to the floor where Yoku Spikes were already appearing to greet him.

"Gotcha," Blues declared as he grabbed Quint in mid-jump and landed on the wall well above the Yoku Spikes. The moment Yoku Man reappeared, Sally was there to cut his form away into spreading energy orbs and then hightail it before he reformed.

"If you've got any ideas, we're all ears," Blues declared as he let them both fall back to the spike-free floor.

"Actually, I might..." Quint pondered the cursory information his Copy Chip had gotten from the moment of contact as Shadow drew Yoku Man's fire and their opponent vanished.

"It is useless to resist," Yoku Man declared as he reappeared on his first tier of Yoku Blocks. "You do not have the power necessary to defeat me."

"You just say that because you think you took out the only real threat in the first move," Quint replied as he jumped over Yoku Man's energy shot and landed on a different Yoku Block.

"Do tell," Yoku Man intoned before vanishing as the second tier appeared. Quint hopped up and smirked at the reappearing 'master of illusion'.

"If you insist," Quint said as Yoku Man made the motions for his energy shot and threw it at the others. "You could have taken any of us out by surprise with your first move, but you picked the holographic member of our team. And since then, you've just been toying with us."

"I made my abilities clear," Yoku Man replied as he formed the third tier of Yoku Blocks and vanished. He reformed again looking Quint in the eyes after the robot from the future jumped after him. "You are no threat. And I am so lacking in other entertainment."

"You're also a hologram yourself," Quint declared, causing Yoku Man to fumble his energy shot in surprise. "Or at least that body is. That's why we can't hurt you. But another holographic being? Under whatever bizarre rules this Zone of yours possesses? That's actually a threat to you, isn't it?"

"You know not what you speak of..." Yoku Man focused directly on Quint, forming a new energy shot, much larger than any other he'd yet unleashed.

"Or maybe I do," Quint grinned as his armor turned gray and blue, his Copy Chip having gotten just enough information to replicate a weapon for him. The energy shot came for him and Quint dove to the side and fired. "Yoku Attack!"

The energy shot turned to hit Quint, but the weapon Quint had fired – a grayscale hologram of himself – shot straight for a suddenly frightened Yoku Man and spun into a kick that directly struck the Yoku Block hovering over Yoku Man's head. The block exploded in a flash of light and Yoku Man's body wavered like a bad image before vanishing in the glare.

When the light died down, there was no sign of Yoku Man, or of the room they'd battled him in. Only a very familiar glowing object where the block over his head had been that lowered itself towards the ground between the four of them.

"Huh..." Shadow blinked as he took in the object. "Think this is a trick?"

"Negative," NICOLE piped up from Sally's waist. "Even with the potential interference of this Zone, the readings are a match. That is the cyan Chaos Emerald."

"Good news for us," Blues nodded. "Now... where's the exit?"

"Give it up, Eggman Nega!" Rock declared as he stood before the smoking and sparking stolen Wily Machine. "You've lost!"

"SHUT U–"

Nega's tirade was cut off as his elite minions were both thrown into the machine at the same time.

"Okay, I'll admit, the faker was a bit tougher than I expected," Bass grinned as he and Silver joined the three standing before Nega.

"Yours too?" Silver smirked.

"Why you..." Nega fumed, only for the Yoku Portal to suddenly spit out four more of his opponents.

"Hey Quint," Rock waved before handing Sakugarne over, "thanks for the loan."

"Thanks for smashing Nega's face in with it," Quint grinned as he accepted his support unit back.

"So... Nega..." Shadow glared, "do we do this the easy way... or the fun way?"

"I think you're about to have more pressing concerns!" Nega grinned in precisely the way a man in his position shouldn't have, and pressed a button that caused the whole machine to glow.

"So that's where you were hiding the Master Emerald!" Knuckles snarled upon recognizing the familiar aura of power.

"Indeed it was!" Nega cackled madly. "And thanks for taking care of the master in the Zone of Illusion for me! Now with the power of the Master Emerald, I can remotely control which dimension it leads to! Including the one containing the mighty Ifrit! Beast of the apocalypse!"

The Yoku Portal shuddered and stabilized before turning an angry red color.

"And what better way to placate the beast for my purposes than with a small snack of chao!" Nega laughed as he dramatically pushed a button in front of him. A panel in the ceiling opened up...

...and a lonely little piece of paper drifted down.

"WHAT?! WHERE ARE MY CHAO?!"

Knuckles glided up to snatch the paper and began to read it once he landed. His snickering made it a bit difficult though. "Dear Mr. Bad Man, We're taking the chao back to their homes where you can't be mean to them anymore, Love Cream, Gemerl, Tails, Mega Woman, and the Chaotix."

"I..." Nega was actually foaming at the mouth from hearing that. "Those... You... THIS ISN'T OVER YET!"

Nega slammed a hand on his console, causing his chair to recede into the machine instantly. A moment later and a smaller machine was ejected from the larger's back into the portal.

"You're not getting away this time!/Oh no you don't!" Silver and Bass growled before leaping after him. Shadow and Quint followed without a thought, prompting Metal Silver and Baroque to jump in as well.

"Hey!" Sonic finally got over his surprise at the very sudden turn of events. "Wait for the rest of u–"

"DOWN!" Rock yelled suddenly, shoving the hedgehog to the floor right before the damaged Wily Machine exploded violently.

The G.U.N. Medics were in something of an organized frenzy. One of the elite members of Team Dark, Rouge, had been emergency teleported in by the lupine robot Treble before being left to their care.

Rouge the Bat, widely regarded among G.U.N. as one of their most capable agents, had sustained severe injuries. Her legs hung limply due to what was quickly diagnosed to be a broken spine, one arm was clutched stiffly over her chest in a way that suggested great injury despite seeming fine, and her eyes refused to focus from a combination of pain and shock. And what's more, she was resisting sedation so they could operate. She'd been given two doses already, and still she'd struggled back to consciousness against their efforts to aid her while muttering delirious half-words. They were afraid to administer any further sedation lest they inflict serious harm on her.

"..ease. sa.. .me..."

"We're trying miss Rouge, please allow us!" one of the medics insisted as he tried to calm the mobian woman.

"Not .. O...a," Rouge struggled feebly.

"Miss Rouge, you are the one most in trouble! Let us help you!"

"Sa.. ."

"I'm sorry?" the medic blinked in shock. "Who?"

"Mu... sav..." Rouge seemed to gain a small measure of clarity by sheer force of Will, "O... me... ga..."

"But..." the medic trailed off as his eyes drew towards the stiff arm over Rouge's chest. Was it his imagination, or had something moved beneath it? "I would love to aid agent Omega, but I..."

The medic trailed off as slowly, stiffly, Rouge released the grip on whatever she was holding and a small flicky bird, ruffled from being held so tightly, crawled out.

"I..." every G.U.N. personnel present found their mind racing at the implications. Not that Omega was powered by a small animal in the same manner as a badnik, but that said animal was now outside the robot body. A body that would gleefully take on an entire armed tank battalion and call it a warm-up. "I will do what I can."

Rouge smiled hazily before finally succumbing to her sedation.

"It's no use, Nega!" Silver declared the moment he landed, barely sparing a look at the burned-out husk of a city around them and the infernal glow caused by a ground turned partially molten by whatever had destroyed the landscape. "Your reign of terror is over before it begins!"

"Heh," Bass grinned at the strange two-legged walker mech that Nega had bailed through the portal in as Shadow and Quint landed nearby. "Literally if you think about it. There's no way you can take us all in that stupid tin-can of you–"

Bass pitched forwards suddenly as something struck him in the back square between the wings of his super adaptor form and sent him face-first into the ground.

"Did you forget about us, yesterday's model?" Baroque spoke cockily from atop Bass's back before jumping out of the way as Quint began shooting. A moment later and Quint, along with Silver and Shadow had been sent sprawling by a crimson psychokinetic field as Metal Silver joined his partner.

"OHOHOHOHOHO!" Nega laughed. "Excellent work you two! Now, keep them busy while I secure the Ifrit!"

"Affirmative," Metal Silver intoned.

"No problem, boss," Baroque smiled confidently.

"Okay..." Bass growled at his double as he got to his feet. "That's it... You die now..."

"Try it, you has-been," Baroque mocked, inciting Bass to shoot forwards in a flying charge, only to be caught in the psychokinetic field of Metal Silver.

"When I get out, I'm gon–" Bass's threat was cut off as Baroque kicked him in the face. But as Nega's enforcer charged up his super adaptor-enhanced arm cannon for a finishing blow, he was grasped by Silver's teal psychokinetic aura and thrown aside.

"Can you handle these two?" Quint asked, getting a nod from Silver before turning to Shadow. "Come on, we can't let Nega get his hands on the Ifrit!"

"No problem," Shadow smirked. "Just make sure you keep up."

"Sakugarne! Super adaptor!" Quint yelled, and in a flash of light he was clad in the Duo-like armor of Sakugarne's super adaptor mode.

"There's no way we'll let yo–" Baroque moved to block Quint and Shadow from pursuing his master, only to take a sharp kick from Bass while Silver similarly prevented Metal Silver from intervening.

"Shut up and fight, you fucking knock-off," Bass sneered.

"Everyone okay?" Rock called out as he got to his feet, ignoring his internal alarms, and examined the damage. The room was as intact as could be expected after an explosion and he could see others stirring. A bit worse for wear, but generally intact. It probably helped that Blues had shielded Sally (and by extension NICOLE) and Knuckles the same way Rock himself had shielded Sonic.

The Wily Machine was a wreck, with large pieces of shrapnel strewn about the remains of the room, some of the biggest embedded in what was left of the walls.

"We're fine," Blues reported, "which is more than can be said for the portal."

Rock looked to where his brother was pointing and say the shredded remains of the Yoku Parts, broken beyond any hope of repair.

"Damn it!" Knuckles fumed, slamming an angry fist into the floor. "Nega got away with the Master Emerald and now we have no way to follow him!"

Nega laughed loudly as he increased thrust on the Egg Walker's afterburners. The plan might not have gone as smoothly as he'd have liked, but he'd gotten what he wanted anyway: passage to the home Zone of the mighty Ifrit with the means to control the beast in tow. Sure, fitting the Master Emerald into the relatively small Egg Walker while leaving room for himself had been problematic, especially after all the other modifications he'd made to the machine, but he had it. And with his enforcers keeping the heroes busy, there was no one who could stop him now!

"OHOHOHOHOHO! AT LAST! EVERYTHING I WANTED IS WITHIN REACH!"

"Stop right there, Nega!" one of the two most infuriating voices yelled from behind him.

"What?! That's... Those incompetent...!" Nega sputtered as he saw the form of that most hated robot in his enhanced mode chasing after him with that black hedgehog. "GAH! I'VE COME TOO FAR TO LOSE NOW! EAT EGG DEATH LASERS!"

As he fired the few weapons his machine had, he opened communication to his enforcers.

"I THOUGHT I TOLD YOU TWO TO STOP ALL PURSUIT!"

"Apologies master," Baroque replied, but we–gah!"

"NO EXCUSES! GET OVER HERE AND STOP THEM RIGHT NOW!"

"Your earlier fortune will not be repeated," Metal Silver declared as he and Silver clashed psychokinesis to psychokinesis, each exchange flaring in a corona of teal and red. "I am your superior in every way."

"As if!" Silver shot back with a confident grin. "Even if Nega did make you stronger and faster, you don't have anywhere near the experience I do!"

"Irrelevant," Metal Silver parried another of Silver's strikes. "I have all the data my master has gathered on you throughout your many clashes. I know all your abilities and techniques. Whatever skills you have, I can predict. I know everything you are going to do before you do it."

Silver blocked an incoming psychokinetic blast with his own and glared straight back at his double.

"Maybe you do know everything I'm going to do," Silver admitted as the two mental energies struggled against each other, "but that's not going to help you because by the same token, I know everything you're going to do. Strange, isn't it?" (58)

Metal Silver's optics flared as he tried to surge his psychokinetic aura, only for Silver to do exactly the same thing.

"Rrrrrr–"

BOOM!

The explosion of power blew them both back, Silver recovering in midair as his robotic counterpart did the same.

The two stared each other down, and then Metal Silver suddenly turned and shot off.

"Hey! Get the fuck back here, you fake!" Bass yelled and Silver spotted Baroque flying off in the same direction.

"Nega must have called them back!" Silver realized as he began chasing after the two. "We can't let them get away!"

"Way ahead of you!" Bass yelled, the thrusters under his wings flaring as he joined the chase.

Quint swore as his giant fist merely clanged off of the mech's green armor, barely leaving a dent after a full-power strike, and jumped off before the thing's weapons could lock onto him.

"Ohohohohoho! It's not going to be that easy you wretched robot!" Nega laughed, not slowing down in the least.

"Try this, then!" Shadow yelled as he landed on the spot Quint had just vacated, glowing with a crimson aura. "CHAOS BLAST!"

The explosion of Chaos Force blasted the walker-style mech away from Shadow even faster than it had already been flying, striking the ground in several places, but ultimately barely scratching the paint job.

"YOU MADE ME SPILL MY DRINK!" Nega roared as he returned fire.

"Invest in a cupholder then!" Quint yelled as he returned fire with the Rainbow Beam, the Jet Missile, and the Tank Arsenal. All three of which clanged harmlessly off the thick armor. It was more than evident that, as lacking in offense as Nega's final machine was, it had more than enough defense to make up for it.

"We're getting nowhere fast," Shadow noted as he fell into step alongside Quint. "We have to stop him before he finds the Ifrit and does... whate–GAH!"

Shadow pitched forwards suddenly in a spray of rings as a plasma blast took him full in the back. Quint caught the dark hedgehog as he bounced off the ground and risked a look over his shoulder. He saw Baroque and Metal Silver approaching from behind with Silver and Bass hot on their heels.

"As if we didn't have enough troubles," Shadow grunted as he recovered and jumped back into the chase. "What else can go–"

"RROOOOOAAAAARRRR!"

"The Ifrit could make its location known to Nega," Quint suggested blandly to the swearing hedgehog as he fired backwards at their pursuit.

"OHOHOHOHOHO! WHAT LUCK! SURELY THIS IS A SIGN THAT I AM FAVORED OVER ALL!"

"Surely it's a sign that you're completely nuts!" Shadow yelled back.

"Watch thy tongue with the master, base creature!" Baroque yelled as he continued firing on them.

"RROOOOOAAAAARRRR!"

"The Ifrit's getting closer!" Quint yelled, even as Baroque stopped firing his arm cannon and began charging up.

"Targets: Acquired," the monotone of Metal Silver sounded.

"Acquire this!" Bass yelled, clotheslining the robotic hedgehog from behind in a burst of speed.

"Prepare for annihilation!" Baroque yelled, pointing his charging buster skyward. "Vanish int–"

"Shut up already!" Silver yelled, slamming Baroque in the back just as he fired a massive blast skyward.

"Ah, crap," Shadow cursed as the massive ball of energy split high above and began raining blasts back down on them. He and Quint were forced to stop pursuing Nega's mech in order to avoid the energy rain.

Baroque twisted around and backhanded Silver away from him while Bass managed to pin Metal Silver to the ground and point an arm cannon at the metal hedgehog's head.

"Psycho Blast," Metal Silver intoned right before a flare of psychokinetic energy similar to the Chaos Blast burst forth and threw Bass off of him.

Quint swore as he spotted Nega gaining distance on them. "We need to follo–"

"RROOOOOAAAAARRRR!"

"Shit," Quint looked up at the source of the even closer roar and saw the massive draconic form of the Ifrit, colored like stone red from molten heat, approached from above.

BOOOOM!

The ground shuddered as the Ifrit, a molten fire dragon the size of a small office building (59) landed between the group and Nega.

"Damn..." Bass looked at the Ifrit. "Is anyone else feeling the power coming off that thing? It doesn't look like much, but... Damn."

Quint nodded, thinking back on the hazy memories he had of the alternate timeline where he was created to fight Iblis. From what his readings were telling him, the Ifrit was at least as strong, if not stronger. How much more would it have become if Nega had managed to feed it a room full of captured chao?

"Okay..." Silver started. "We just have to fight the Ifrit too... How hard could tha–"

"RROOOOOAAAAARRRR!" the Ifrit's cry drowned out Silver's speech, but instead of trying to attack them like the four expected, it turned and unleashed a blast of flames towards Nega's mech that turned stone molten on contact.

"I vote we let the Ifrit handle Nega for a bit while we take out the peanut gallery first," Shadow proposed. "All in favo–ARGH!"

Shadow was once more blindsided by an energy blast from behind, prompting the other three to turn their attention from the Ifrit back towards Nega's enforcers.

They saw Baroque with a smoking arm cannon pointed at where Shadow had been standing, his four demonic wings flared behind him as the arm cannon changed back into a hand. Also behind him was the unfolded form of Metal Silver partway through joining with Baroque. As they watched, what had been Metal Silver's head attached to Baroque's helmet, giving him hedgehog-like spikes. Metal Silver's body attached to Baroque's, turning the black parts of the robot's black and red armor silver in color, with his hands gaining sharp claws on the fingers, and adding a third pair of demonic wings. And in Baroque's other hand was the yellow Chaos Emerald. As the transformation finished, Baroque's chest opened up and he placed the emerald in the interior space.

"You won't have to worry about the Ifrit or the master," 'Silver Baroque' sneered. "Because your worthless lives end now!"

"Big talk for a wannabe!" Bass growled, charging the latest transformation of his replica, firing rapidly. The shots were absorbed by a crimson psychokinetic barrier, but Bass kept charging and when he got within arm's reach, swung with all his might.

Only for his arm to be caught by Silver Baroque's clawed hand. Undaunted, Bass swung his other arm for a cross, and that was caught as well.

"Big talk for one who has been disarmed," Silver Baroque taunted with a smug look.

"The hell are yo–AARRGGGHH!" Bass screamed as, with simultaneous application of raw strength and crimson psychokinesis, both of his arms were torn off at the shoulder, and a moment later were used as makeshift clubs to smack him away.

"Bass!" Shadow yelled in fury as he got to his feet. "CHAOS CONTRO–urk..."

Shadow had intended to appear so close to Silver Baroque that the robot couldn't defend himself. He meant to appear and strike the robot in the same instant. He hadn't intended to appear with Silver Baroque's knee in his gut. Nor did he intend to be struck aside with the severed limbs of his own partner.

"Silver," Quint began.

"On it," Silver nodded, glowing with psychokinetic power as Quint charged Silver Baroque in an aura of energy matching the Comet Dash.

"Heh..." Silver Baroque turned to meet the charge and simply held up a single hand, glowing with crimson power that formed a barrier. "It's no u–"

The barrier was disrupted by Silver's own teal psychokinetic power right as Quint's giant glowing fist slammed into it, through it, and into Silver Baroque's face.

"GAH!" the super-enhanced enforcer cried in pain as he rocketed back from the impact and bounced off the ground once before righting himself with his wings. "You'll pay for that, yo–"

Silver Baroque was forced to cut his threat short in order to sidestep a Yo-Yo Cutter and then block a follow-up strike from Quint's giant fist as he closed the distance between them, Silver Baroque's attempts to bring his crimson psychokinesis to bear being disrupted by Silver at every turn. (60)

"You wretche–"

BOOMBOOMBOOM! went the spray of Nitro Blast as it exploded in Silver Baroque's face.

"ARGH!"

"Great Impact!" Quint's giant fist glowed and exploded with force as the next blow landed.

"EEEYYAAAAAHHHHRRR!" Silver Baroque screamed incoherently from the blow as he lashed out with crimson psycho-claws, tearing gouges in Quint's armor in return for the injuries he'd suffered.

"CHAOS SPEAR!"

"PSYCHO CUTTER!"

"INSOLENT WRETCHES!" Silver Baroque thrust both of his arms out and unleashed bure waves of crimson energy to intercept the incoming attacks from both Shadow and Silver. But in doing so, he left himself open to Quint who decided to blast him full in the face with Whirlpool Man's Water Cannon.

Silver Baroque shook off the water and slashed an incoming monochrome Quint in two, and looked puzzled when the figure simply faded away to reveal a large hammer spinning at his face.

Clang

"ETCHENDEL!" Nega's enforcer spat incoherently as he clawed in Quint's general direction. His arm was caught in Quint's giant palm while the future robot's other arm swung at him in a powerful hook. Silver Baroque caught that fist with his own remaining hand and glared at his opponent's shades. "THIS IS THE END!"

Silver Baroque leaned back hard enough that the grapple with Quint pulled the other off-balance and kicked off, tucking in his legs for a powerful double kick that would surel–

"PSYCHO SHOCK!"

Silver Baroque fumed as his systems froze in place.

"NOW BASS!" Shadow yelled.

"WAY AHEAD OF YOU!"

Nega's ultimate enforcer managed to look up right as a foot encased in energy slammed straight through his torso, shattering his armor and blasting the yellow Chaos Emerald out of place.

"Y–"

CRUNCH

The second energy-enhanced foot crushed Silver Baroque's head beyond all repair.

"Damnit, now I've got my foot stuck in loser," Bass grumbled as he tried to dislodge his foot from the hole it had punched straight through the other robot's chest.

"Here, let me help," Shadow offered to his currently armless partner as he approached. Nearby, Quint shook his hands free of Silver Baroque's arms, the appendages having been ripped out from the force of Bass's impact with their owner, and looked around.

"Well, we at least got the yellow Chaos Emerald out of the deal," Silver noted as he fished the gem out from under the remains of their opponent. "Now we just need to deal with Ne–"

"DOWN!" Quint yelled suddenly as a wall of force slammed into Silver, Shadow, and Bass, sending them tumbling. Looking up, Silver saw Quint's giant hand outstretched in a palm strike right before a massive column of flame engulfed him and the area the rest of them had just been standing in.

"QUINT!" Silver yelled, scrambling to his feet and trying to rush forwards, only for Shadow to restrain him.

"Don't be stu..." Shadow's admonishment trailed off as the gout of flames died down to reveal an intact Quint, armor glowing brightly from the heat and his feet stuck in the partially molten ground beneath him, turning towards the source of the attack even as he brought up a Nail Shield to defend himself with.

He fired the sharp projectiles upwards even as his target descended far too quick–

CRUNCH

"a..." Silver stared in shock at the foot of the Ifrit embedded in the broken ground where Quint had just been a moment before.

"Well... shit..." Bass summed up the scene as he looked upwards and beheld the head of the beast. Blood ran down the creature's forehead from underneath the edges of the Master Emerald that had been embedded in its skull. And behind the Master Emerald was the mecha Nega had been riding, reconfigured into a device that punctured into the Ifrit's neck to provide the signals to its body that the beast's brain no longer could.

"YES! YES!" The broadcast voice of Eggman Nega laughed dementedly. "TREMBLE BEFORE ME!" (61)

Amy looked up from where Rotor, Bunnie, and Antoine were watching the full-scale space war between Drs. Wily and Eggman.

"Does anyone else feel like something bad just happened?" she asked.

"Probably nothin', Amy-girl," Bunnie shrugged. "Ah mean, Roll-girl and tha others reported in that Nega's plans are pretty much kaput at this point, so it's likely just nerves from tha docs goin' ta war with each other and everyone else off on assignment with that othah army and all."

"Eet eez as you are sayink, mah love," Antoine agreed. "Ze othairs shall beink fine as zey always are. Zere eez nothink to be ze worryink about."

"Other than the doctors causing collateral damage," Rotor noted.

"Twenty says tha first thing we have ta stop is one a' Eggman's ships bein' shot out a' tha sky but still in one piece, sugah."

"Yeah? Twenty five says it's one of Wily's."

Amy watched her friends wager at what would force their involvement as the feeling she'd gotten failed to go away. She had no idea why, but she was certain something had gone very wrong.

"aa..." Silver stared, unaware of everything around him save for the sight right before his eyes.

"Bass, take Silver and the yellow Emerald and use Chaos Control to get the hell out of here."

The massive molten-skinned leg of the Ifrit stuck into the ground where Quint had just been standing after saving them all from a blast of the draconic beast's flames.

"Like hell I'm running! I can still fight!"

The leg lifted up, agonizingly slowly to Silver's eyes.

"Halt unknown lifeform! State your business!"

"Hi Quint, I'm Silver!"

"How do you know my name?"

"The doc told me! Are you really going to help stop Iblis/Eggman Nega?"

"Of course I will."

Stuck to the bottom of the monstrous foot, alongside partially molten rubble, were the shattered and half-molten remains of the robotic champion of the future.

"aaa..."

"I thought I told you to stop following me!"

"But I want to help fight!"

"Organics like yourself have no place on the battlefield! I can't afford to babysit a child like you while on my mission!"

"I can help though! I'm strong!"

"Damnit Bass! Quint's dead, Silver's having a breakdown, you have no arms, and any moment now Nega's going to get bored gloating about how invincible he is! I need you to take the Emeralds back to everyone else just in case all I can do is slow him down!"

"Nice... nice save kid... Thanks... I... I'm sorry about what I said earlier."

"I told you I was strong!"

"Yeah, you're strong... for a child. You're also reckless, undisciplined, and unskilled. You want to tag along, fine, but you will have training. You will also follow my lead until further notice. You will do what I say when I say it, no backtalk, no complaints, and no excuses. Understood?"

"Thank you!"

"What part of that made you think it was acceptable to hug me?!"

"aaaa..." There was a pressure building in the back of his skull. How long had it been there?

"Slow me down?"

"Shit..."

"The only way you'll delay me is by making your death as entertaining as possible."

"I'm honestly amazed. When I insisted you get training, I didn't actually think you'd ever be ready for anything but emergency backup."

"Thank you, brother."

"For the love of Wily... What have I told you about calling me that?"

"I know... but after my parents died... and you... I dunno... I always wanted a sibling..."

"...Fine. If it means that much to you... Let's go... brother."

"After all, I've finally rid myself of that idiot Wily's annoying creation and in a few moments, you all as well!"

"You want to what?"

"We would like to make Soleanna our base of operations while here in the past, princess, at least until the threat of Eggman Nega is ended."

"But... I don't even know you... At least, I don't think so."

"Princess, it may seem fantastic, but we have met before. In an alternate timeline due to Solaris–"

"Stop."

"Princess?"

"I... I believe you. That name is not known to anyone outside the royal family. Not after... it... didn't pan out. I would know your names though, before I agree to anything."

"I am Quint, Special Variant Number - 001, created by Dr. Wily roughly two hundred years from now. And this is my brother-in-arms, Silver the Hedgehog."

"aaaaa..." the pressure was unbearable now. It hurt to hold it in.

"Bass, take the Emeralds and go now!"

"TOO LATE!"

The only thing to do was let it all out.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"

"Man, I hate sitting around here while those four get to have all the fun," Sonic groused as Rock and NICOLE fiddled with the remains of the Yoku parts, trying to see what, if anything, could be salvaged. It wasn't looking good.

"I hear ya," Knuckles nodded in agreement. "The Ifrit's always a pretty fun challenge, especially when you don't have to worry about collateral damage."

"You two have a definition of 'fun' that I suspect isn't shared by most of the multiverse," Blues noted idly as he adjusted Sally's splint.

"Hey, steady challenges in the Loops are nothing to sneeze at, Rad Red 2."

"Be careful what you wish for," Rock piped up. "The first time I faced the set of robot masters Nega stole, they came with an unfinished prototype that nearly took me apart with its bare hands. I won, barely, but the strain on my arm cannon from the fight caused it to overload and blow up."

"Damn Big Blue," Sonic whistled, "I'd love to go a few rounds with someone who can give you a run for your mon–"

"–ROL!" the conversation was interrupted as a damaged Bass, clutching the yellow and purple Chaos Emeralds between the wings of his super adaptor, appeared.

"Bass!" Sally cried out upon seeing the Black Prince's state. "What happened?"

"Nega took control of the Ifrit and killed Quint," Bass grunted, his wings opening to reveal that not only were both of his arms missing at the shoulder, but that his chest armor was cracked like it had taken a direct hit from a boulder. "Then Silver lost it. Shadow stayed behind to stop him. Ordered me to get you all the Emeralds in case he failed."

"Then where's Silver?" NICOLE wondered. "If Shadow stayed behind to stop Nega, then why didn't you bring Silver with you?"

"Fuck Nega..." Bass grunted as cracks in his armor lit up from the sparks of internal damage. His wings flexed open and a pair of objects recognizable as Shadow's inhibitor rings clattered to the ground. "Shadow stayed behind to stop Silver ."

Shadow grunted as he felt the Chaos Force surge through him like liquid flames, painfully knitting together the humongous bruise his torso had become after the explosion of psychokinetic energy Silver had unleashed on anything and everything in the vicinity. It was almost like going Super in a way, except that where a Chaos Emerald transformation took all the energy and compacted it into a form where it was tightly controlled, the unbound Chaos Force racing through his body bled out into a potent aura that could easily lash out unbidden at anything Shadow himself wasn't actively empowering with it. And if he hadn't trained extensively in its use, or if he faltered in his hard-earned control, it could just as easily burn his own body out as destroy his foes.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"

Super forms were the power taken and forged into a controlled and elegant weapon. The raw Chaos Force that ran rampant with the removal of his limiter rings was more like a bomb that wouldn't stop exploding. Powerful, yes, but unfocused.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"

Much like Silver's berserk psychokinesis at the moment. The backwash from the teal energy blows Silver was landing on the puppetized Ifrit were causing massive shockwaves that battered the already abused structures around them and numerous buildings were starting to buckle and groan as–

RRRRUUUUMMMMBBLLLEEE

"GET OFF OF ME YOU–"

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"

There went the first one. More were beginning to follow. And any time now, Silver would either realize the inherent weakness that Eggman Nega's grotesque control of the Ifrit had created, or he'd just get lucky an–

"IT'S USELESS TO RESIST YOU WORTHLESS HEDGEHOG!" Nega screamed from his command unit attached to the back of the Ifrit's skull, just behind the Master Emerald embedded in the beast's forehead.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"

"THE IFRIT IS INVINCIBLE! I WILL DESTROY YOU JUST LIKE I DESTROYED THAT WORTHLESS TRASH OF A RO– CRUNK

Shadow winced at the sight of the imploded hunk of scrap that had just been unceremoniously crushed by Silver's psychokinetic aura like an empty soda can. Just from appearances alone, there wasn't enough volume left inside the thing for Nega to have escaped as anything more substantial than chunky salsa. With the destruction of the machine animating its form, the Ifrit fell like a puppet with its strings cut, already dead from Nega's actions.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"

And Silver still wasn't stopping, blasting the corpse of the Ifrit with enough force to create a localized earthquake. It was just as Shadow feared. Silver had gone full-on berserker and if he wasn't stopped now, there was no guarantee that his rampage would be confined to this dimension.

"CHAOS SPEAR!"

"RRAAAAAAAAAAHHHH!"

'Fantastic,' Shadow thought as Silver blasted him with a massive bolt of power, and he defended in kind. Berserk Psychokinesis crashed against Chaos Force in an explosion that collapsed several more nearby structures from the shockwave. 'I have his attention. Now what?'

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!" Silver charged at Shadow in a massive aura of psychokinetic potential. Shadow responded in kind with an equal aura of Chaos Force.

BOOOOOOOM!

"SNAP OUT OF IT SILVER!" Shadow yelled as their two auras pushed against each other like two powerful magnets pointing like poles at each other and trying to force contact. "THIS ISN'T LIKE YOU!"

"WHAT WOULD YOU KNOW?!" Silver's aura suddenly flared and, in his surprise at getting a coherent statement, Shadow failed to respond in kind and was thrown back.

He recovered quickly and met Silver's retaliating volley in kind, teh two beginning to blast away at each other with ranged energy attacks.

"I KNOW WHAT IT'S LIKE TO BE ALONE OUTSIDE YOUR TIME!" Shadow yelled at Silver. "I KNOW WHAT IT'S LIKE TO TRY AND LIVE IN A TIME ALIEN TO ME! I KNOW WHAT IT'S LIKE TO LOSE SOMEONE IMPORTANT TO YOU! I KNOW WHAT YOU'R–"

"YOU KNOW NOTHING! " Silver screamed and rushed forwards so suddenly that Shadow was caught off-guard. Even though he defended with his aura, the intensity of the strike sent him flying back at high speeds, plowing through building after building on his impromptu flight. By the time he got control of himself, he was sure he'd been knocked several miles.

And Silver was coming in hot for the follow-up strike.

"YOUR PAST WAS REAL!"

The next blow was much like the first, only a bit better defended against.

"YOUR TIME WITH MARIA HAPPENED!"

The third was even better blocked, but Shadow was still finding it hard to recover enough to retaliate.

"OUR WORLD REMEMBERS YOU!"

Shadow managed a good defense this time and remained roughly where he was.

"IT DOESN'T REMEMBER ME!" Silver yelled as he began throwing punches and kicks wreathed in his teal aura, and Shadow blocked as best he could with his own limbs wreathed in his crimson aura. "DID YOU KNOW THAT IF I TRY TO GO BACK TO MY FUTURE AFTER SOLARIS THAT THE LOOP ENDS FOR ME?! I CAN'T GO BACK TO MY FUTURE BECAUSE IT ISN'T THERE ANYMORE! THE TIME I STRIVE TO DEFEND IS ALWAYS WIPED AWAY LIKE A BAD DREAM! BECAUSE MY TIME ISN'T REAL ANYMORE! NOR IS ANYONE FROM IT! NONE OF THEM EVER ACTUALLY LIVED OR DIED! I'M AN OUTCAST FROM A TIME THAT WAS NEVER THERE FOREVER DOOMED TO CHASE A NIGHTMARE WHO WAS NEVER CREATED!"

"SILVER IT–"

"DON'T YOU GET IT?!" Silver screamed in mad fury as his aura seemed to draw in on itself and compact in a way that made Shadow's eyes widen. "I! DON'T! EXIST! "

Silver's aura suddenly burst from him with the force of a nuclear bomb.

Shadow compacted his own aura to his limit to try and weather the blast, but the sheer force of it still tore at him even as it leveled buildings for miles around. But, just as Shadow began to wonder if he'd have to make his apologies in the next Loop, the blast ended and he saw Silver barely floating in the air, having put close to everything he had into the blast.

Shadow needed no further invitation. He zipped up as fast as possible and buried a fist in Silver's gut. The future hedgehog's eyes widened for a moment before rolling back in his head as he lost consciousness.

"Sorry about this," Shadow coughed out, realizing that he wasn't in much better shape for having weathered the blast than Silver was for unleashing it. Catching the other hedgehog and slinging him over his shoulder in a fireman's carry, Shadow cast his senses out to find the Master Emerald. Given that Silver had blasted most, if not all, of the relevant landmarks to rubble, such measures were necessary.

He found it fairly quickly and began moving in its direction as fast as he was comfortable with. It was his only ticket back at the moment after all.

"I'm sorry to say this, but you need serious help Silver," he told his unconscious passenger. "I just hope we don't have to wait for another fused Loop to get you it."

"Hey guys," Sonic greeted half-heartedly as he and the others walked back into the Sky Patrol, "how are things looking with the docs?"

"They stopped shooting at each other rather suddenly and both of their fleets limped off to lick their wounds, or whatever," Rotor reported as he turned around to look at the entering group and the generally morose expressions on all of them. "And now I'm wondering what happened to you all."

"Well, it went like this, Rote..."

Vanilla's worry was written clear on her face. And how could it not be? Her daughter had come back from her latest adventure an inconsolable wreck, bawling about a friend of hers. She'd immediately done what any mother would and wrapped her daughter in an embrace and held her until she'd cried herself to sleep.

And now Gemerl was telling her everything that had happened on the latest adventure, and about the friend who had fallen in battle.

"Well..." Knuckles sighed heavily. "The Master Emerald's back safe and sound."

"Yep," Blues nodded.

"Nega's never going to be a problem again, at least this Loop."

"Correct."

"So why the hell does it feel like we lost?"

Shadow winced as he walked down the G.U.N. hallway. His limiter rings were back in place, but they didn't help the fact that he was more-or-less one giant bruise after this last mission. Between Baroque, Nega, and Silver, he supposed he should count himself lucky he could move under his own power despite being only a few bandages short of a mummy costume.

It was far better shape than what Rouge or Omega were in.

Almost as if the thought had guided him, Shadow found himself in the rehab room, watching Rouge try and re-learn how to walk. Her spinal injury had been too much for the G.U.N. medics, and she'd flat-out refused any of the regeneration potions stored in either of their subspace pockets.

"Look, Shadow, honestly I think we take too much for granted in the Loops sometimes. Sure, we've got a bunch of cool tricks saved up, but... We forget that things have consequences... because sooner or later we can pretty much fix anything that happens to us, sometimes even death if the Loop didn't reset."

She'd ultimately agreed to what was essentially a cybernetic lower body brace that plugged straight into her nervous system and bypassed the injury.

"It's kind of lazy of us, really. We lose sight of the risks, lose sight of the cost if we fail. Forget that, eventually, it's not going to reset all nice and easy anymore and we're going to have to live with whatever we do then. So, no. No easy way out for this bat. Not this Loop. I don't care if I'm stuck in a wheelchair until Loop end, I'm doing this the hard way."

Omega... was a flicky. No more robot body at all, and it was obvious to everyone that the bird, in complete opposition to any other animal trapped in one of Eggman's creations, missed it terribly. Any time the bird wasn't accompanying Rouge on her rehab regimen, he was sneaking into the armored mech simulators and trying to train himself to operate the things. Despite the fact that all of them were designed for beings several dozen times his size.

"How the hell did you manage to lose both your arms?" Wily grumbled as he set about repairing Bass. He focused on the work, not quite willing to confront the thought that the future hack who fancied himself a scientist had actually destroyed one of the creations he called 'son', and nearly done the same to the other. He wasn't sure how he'd feel about that if he let himself.

"Nega may have been a twit at making anything original," Bass snorted, "but he wasn't completely hopeless. What about Eggface?"

"Your repairs are more important than Ivo's delusions of grandeur," Dr. Wily huffed, continuing his work. He'd have to fashion completely new limbs at the very least. And making them exactly the same as before struck him as a bit pointless. Hmm... Maybe it was time to try some of the upgrades he'd been thinking about? "We'll get to him soon enough."

"Maybe sooner than you think, pops."

Silver stared out the window of Soleanna Castle, feeling more lost than he ever had. Baseline hadn't driven him this low, nor had the worst the Loops had thrown at him. So why had this had such an effect on him?

"Silver?"

As if he didn't know.

"Silver," the voice of Princess Elise cut into his thoughts, "please talk to me."

"I don't have anything to say," the hedgehog from a nonexistent future monotoned.

"I highly doubt that."

"Please, just... go away."

"No."

Silver felt his hands clench in frustration. Couldn't they all just leave him be in his misery?

"Talk to me, Silver, please."

"I can't... You wouldn't understand..."

"Try me anyway."

"No... You don't get it... None of you get it..."

"Probably not, but that won't change if you never tell us."

"Fine..." Silver growled, too spent to keep arguing. "What would you say if I told you that time was on an infinite repeat? That the force that runs all of creation is so busted that if it tried to actualize anything past a certain point that it would break apart and everything would cease to exist?"

There was no reply.

"What if I told you that the cutoff point was about two hundred years before I'll ever be born? That this force can't visualize anything past that point clearly? That it can't remember who I am or where I come from aside from some idea it has that I come from the future and land smack in the middle of the time it does know about? That every time it restarts the future it can't remember is different? The history, the people, the politics, the technology level, the morality, all of it different except for the fact that I exist and have to fight some damn nightmare all the way back to this time. A future that doesn't really exist, all to justify sending me back over and over to a time that couldn't care less about who I am or where I come from."

Still silence.

"No one knows! No one ever even cares to ask! I can't even remember who the hell my parents are most times! Because they're always different! What does it matter if I remember when no one else does?! If only you remember something and no one else does, how the hell do you know it ever even happened?! Maybe I'm a sapient paradox and I just imagined that I had a life! Imagined my friends and family! Who can even say that I was real? Or will be real?" (62)

"Quint could."

"AND NEGA JUST OFFED HIM LIKE IT WAS NOTHING!" Silver roared, his voice hoarse and thick with grief. "THE ONE TIME ANYONE ELSE COULD REMEMBER WHAT MY LIFE WAS LIKE AND THEY'RE GONE! THIS WAS THE FIRST LOOP THAT SOMEONE OTHER THAN NEGA CAME BACK WITH ME! AND HE'S GONE! HE'S NOT A LOOPER! EVEN IF BY SOME CHANCE WE MEET AGAIN, HE WON'T REMEMBER ME OR THIS LIFE! FOR ONCE, I FELT REAL AND IT'S GONE! NO ONE ELSE WILL EVER REMEMBER!"

Silver broke down after that, not caring who saw him weep. Let them.

A hand was placed gently on his shoulder. "Tell me."

Silver sniffed long and pitifully instead of asking for clarification.

"Tell me everything," Elise insisted. "All of it. From your earliest memory to now. Your parents, your friends, meeting Quint, fighting Nega, all of it. At least this life anyway."

"Why...?"

"So I can remember with you of course."

"But you'll just forget... Like any other nonlooper..."

"So tell me again the next time. Tell me about that life, or this one. Or any of them you care to share. Tell me about your friends, your family, your losses, your triumphs. Tell me so that I can remember with you and that your life can be made real once more. I promise that, even if I don't remember any of the times before, I will always listen."

Silver looked up, past the teary blur in his eyes, to see the kind smile of Elise staring back at him. "How can you be so sure?"

"Because I'm your friend, Silver," Elise said. "And like someone said to me: I will always be your friend. From now until the end of the world, and all over again if necessary."

---

0) I was informed that my earlier instances of the man's name were incorrect. It is Leonard, not Leonardo. I blame my childhood love of the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles. I will at some point go back and correct the previous instances.

1) You can pick your jaws up now.

2) Is 'Top Ten Nicest Guys in the World' a thing? If not, it should be.

3) Quint in a nutshell: All of Rock's pragmatism, but without his moral restraint.

4) I am fully confident that someone, somewhere, has attempted to pull this.

5) The cheer that followed might have been heard from space.

6) If you know the name 'Battle Bird Armada' you can probably guess how that noodle incident went.

7) aka Victoria's Secret Compartment.

8) Jessica Rabbit is a sultry 'adult' (i.e. her style of 'bunny' is decidedly of the 'playboy' variety) toon in the movie 'Who Framed Roger Rabbit' and the wife of the title character. The ability being displayed however is from the book 'Who Censored Roger Rabbit' that the movie is loosely based on. The ability is known as the doppelganger and works a bit like Kage Bunshin in that the duplicates are used for dangerous and potentially lethal stunts (as toons in the book universe are otherwise mortal). I don't recall more than one being produced by any given toon at a time, and how long they last (and how accurate they are) depends on the concentration put into them. Most disintegrate on their own after a few hours but Roger's own duplicate in the book lasts several days, which allows him to help solve Roger's murder (yes, the doppelganger outlives the original by a few days).

9) She knew the name. She was just snicker 'distracted' snicker.

10) Such a realization is a very bitter pill for any woman to swallow.

11) KHfan21: Where the hell did that come from?!

wildrook: There are some questions best left unanswered, but it was one heck of a party.

12) Bus~ted!

13) This little exchange by Zerorock41.

14) You know, I've wondered this exact thing many a time.

15) One part Sonic Rivals 2, one part fan game Mega Man Unlimited by MegaPhilX. I shall call it... Mega Sonic Rivals Unlimited!

16) Of course not. That's Cream.

17) Well, we've got our teams set now. Sonic/Rock, Tails/Roll, Knuckles/Blues, Shadow/Omega (with Rouge spotting), Ray/Joe, Cream/Gemerl (with Cheese tagging along), Sally/NICOLE, Silver/Quint, and apparently Metal Sonic/Bass for the opposing side.

18) Fun fact: When making his fan game, MegaPhilX decided to number his original robot masters as part of the SWN series, or Special Wily Numbers. Bass is part of this series as SWN-001, and the only canon member in official Capcom media. Yo-Yo Man is SWN-008 according to Mega Man Unlimited.

19) Another fun fact: I watched RoahmMythril's blind run when deciding what order to do the robot masters in. He described Rainbow Man's stage with that exact line Sonic's using. Rainbow Man is SWN-007 if you were wondering.

20) In short, they don't have a clue. Ba-dum-tish

21) "...heard this Loop! Year! Month! Week! Oh, I give up..."

22) Shippers on deck!

23) She's probably talking about this Loop before the group was properly Awake. Probably.

24) More fun facts: Tank Man (SWN-003)'s line is derived from his quote on his bio image from MegaPhilX's site. I had fun making a point to incorporate a variation of each MMU robot master's bio quote into their dialogue. Tank Man's really stood out though, because, seriously? 865,309 pushups? Was MegaPhilX listening to the song Jenny when he wrote that?

25) I like Comet Woman, SWN-009, even if just because there's a decided lack of 'female' robots in the series. Her intro animation is pretty confident and sassy for something rendered in 8-bit graphics.

26) Just in case anyone forgot that Cream was actually a badass, despite being a little girl. Even when not Awake.

27) Little Mac the wallaby... Sometimes I'm just amusing myself really.

28) Silver's not getting out of this Loop with his dignity intact. It's the price you pay for having good friends.

29) Trigger-happy walking engine of destruction in a building full of one of the most volatilely unstable substances known to man? This can only end in fire and death.

30) Hey, someone agrees with me!

31) According to MegaPhilX, Trinitro Man (SWN-006)'s name was originally going to be Nitro Man, but then Mega Man 10 came out and he renamed the robot master to avoid confusion with Capcom's game. Incidentally, he was also going to call Mega Man Unlimited 'Mega Man 10', but decided on a name change for the same reason. Funny story: Someone at Capcom's official newsletter apparently made the mistake before the rename and accidentally used MegaPhilX's artwork as part of the newsletter for the official game.

32) For a giggle, Google MST3K and 'tried to kill me with a forklift'.

33) I was right! ducks and covers

34) Like he'd been doing for the last five minutes.

35) Or maybe the second cousin once removed. I always get those mixed up.

36) Just before writing this part was about the first time the group on Spacebattles voiced their realization that 'Bass' wasn't really Bass. If you caught on sooner, give yourself a cookie.

37) Knuckles didn't particularly care that it technically wasn't a knockoff due to the Eiffel Tower not existing in this particular iteration.

38) SWN-005 Glue Man does indeed subvert expectations based on his name. In addition to firing adhesive projectiles, he had wheels on his feet similar to Top Man that he uses to zip back and forth across his arena like a roller skater at a skate park. Complete with doing tricks in the air. Props to MegaPhilX for subverting expectations like that.

39) Song is Taking Care of Things from Phineas and Ferb . Peace out and rock on.

40) I'm sorry Nega, what was your Wisdom score penalty again?

41) Hammer Man was going to be one of the eight robot master bosses in Mega Man Unlimited, but he got demoted to mid-boss status in Nail Man's stage (due to being the dumber of the pair according to backstory). I decided to give him a master weapon and a serial number anyway for purposes of this fic. He's SWN-00A.

42) Speaking of Nail Man, he's SWN-002. And a bit arrogant it seems. He just kind of came out like that.

43) O.O

44) Whirlpool Man is the bonus boss of Mega Man Unlimited, added in an update. He has a copyable weapon and everything, but not a serial number. I decided he would be SWN-00B. He also does kind of look like a cross between Pump Man and Air Man.

45) Oh, and his copied weapon is useless underwater.

46) If you haven't played Sonic RIvals 2, Metal Sonic 3.0 is a recolored copy of Metal Sonic designed by Nega. He skipped 2.0 entirely for some weird reason.

47) And here's SWN-004, Jet Man, to finish up the series.

48) The colors of the Flash Stopper, Bright Man's weapon.

49) Hey, wait a sec, that's not how this fight was scrip–

50) ...

51) ...uh... sweats Oh, hey! It's the boss rush! Tries frantically to salvage the plot

52) Finally I get to reveal the guy's name! Baroque (along with his design) and his canine Crash were the initial designs that would become Bass and Treble. So when I needed copies of the series anti-heroes, I went with them. If you knew the name earlier than this point, go grab a few cookies. You earned them.

53) Oh, right. Those.

54) If you don't know the name, he's an artist who specialized in paintings of mind-bending geometry.

55) Based off of the appearance of Metal Silver from the Silver the Hedgehog mod of Sonic Generations.

56) And if you think the visual deceptions are bad, think about this for a moment: It's been declared that there's an echoing quality to all sound in this place, plus the annoying recurring Voooo sound all over, so that's not exactly reliable either. Assuming anything in the entire zone even had a scent, there's no way to really know what any of the dangerous things smell like from prior experience, so that's a wash. And if you're having to rely on touch to tell you where the death traps are, especially when they can vanish into and appear from thin air, you're in very big trouble. Taste? Yeah, right. As unreliable as sight is in this scenario, it may still be the most reliable of the five senses.

57) Yoku Man is the secret boss of Mega Man Unlimited. Instead of the letter parts giving you a nifty power-up, this time they unlock a special stage centered entirely around those disappearing/reappearing blocks that continuously pop up in the series. A really annoying special stage, with an equally annoying boss. Yoku Man doesn't even have a proper serial number, it being listed as ?-? in his bio. I took that to mean that, maybe, he wasn't part of the series itself, instead being an independent agent (despite having Wily's symbol on his door like the rest).

58) Back on Mobius, Sonic felt like someone was stealing his lines.

59) or a small Kaiju if you prefer.

60) Basically, he's using a method known in D&D as counterspelling.

61) I...

62) Because someone asked on the Spacebattles forum if this meant Silver didn't receive Loop memories: He does. But he's the only one who has any about his future. That's part of the problem he's lamenting. Imagine for a moment that only you remember your life before a certain date. Anything about your life prior to that date, no one other than you knows about. Not your friends, family, school, pets, home, anything. There are no landmarks to indicate the existence of anything you remember, nor are there even any official records that any of it was ever there. How sure could you be that it was even real? Come to think of it, this is probably part of what drives most Anchors insane before others in their universe start looping or they meet someone in a fused Loop.

63) I'm not sure what to say, really. I've had Quint's death and its effects on Silver planned since starting Mega Sonic. I'd also planned to end the chapter on something that would lead into the final part of the Loop, Mega Sonic Unleashed, but honestly nothing I had felt right after that last scene. So, see you next time I suppose. It'll have (literally) world-shattering events, epic battles, Rock and Bass under the effects of Dark Gaia energy, Eggman and Wily going head to head, and Duo.

Mega Loops 18

Mega Loops 18

18.1 (GammaTron)

"So we're not going out there...why?" Zero asked as he moved his pawn to take X's rook.

"Just want a break from having to deal with the insanity our baseline causes," X replied.

"Is that why when you woke up a few days after you got sealed up, forced yourself awake, kidnapped me from where I had been hidden away, brought it to a new place with your capsule, and then resumed sleep mode for those years?" Zero asked.

"...Bad Loop, too."

"What was this time?"

"I replaced Leonard Church–the AI, not the scientist–again."

"...Caboose?" Zero asked as X moves his knight, taking Zero's queen.

"Caboose."

Zero nodded, "...So, what did you look like as just an AI?"

"Like myself when I'm a Cyber-Elf," X replied, "Checkmate."

"Dang it! ...Best one million out of two million and one?"

"I was thinking Monopoly."

"No. Not after the last time."

"...We still need to fix that hole in the wall."

"You're the one who made the walls separating us from the outside world impervious to our weapons to make sure I didn't just make an escape out of here this Loop."

"And there's nothing your pocket to fix it?"

"...I have to admit that I did enjoy replacing Washington once and that Sarge was awake," Zero admitted as he pulled out a pile of Bassnium.

"What was the secret ingredient to making Bassnium that time?" X asked, having heard of Sarge's surprising skill from Roll and Rock.

"Surprisingly, used shotgun shells," Zero shrugged as he began to work on the hole.

"Really?" X asked, "Last time I had a Loop with him involving using robots, he made it with the secret ingredient being fruit bat guano."

"...Fruit bat guano?"

"It was a very specific ingredient," X replied, "...Uno?"

"Uno," Zero replied before a hole was made in the ceiling and a familiar scientist to X poked his head in, wearing a hardhat and goggles, "...Finally."

"...Dammit!" X cursed, "Forgot to make the outside drill-proof."

18.!) (Custodator Pacis)

"So, did you like my welcoming party, Mega Man?" The sound of Snake Man, the reptilian robot master, echoed around the boss room.

"Ha ha, stop pretending already Snake, Dr. Wily never prefers this much explosives and booby traps," Rock deadpanned, "and that ridiculous number of Search Snakes along the way that hid in a cardboard box is a dead giveaway."

Snake Man, or Solid Snake, came out into the light as he point his own arm cannon at Mega Man. Both loopers stared at each other for a while before Rock spoke.

"So, why are you on Wily's side this time?" Rock asked.

"He give me some upgrade that I'm feeling grateful for, enough to put more effort into fighting you here," Snake said. "Don't worry, it's still not enough to risk killing you and getting sent to Eiken."

"What kind of upgrade did he give you?" Rock asked again, raised his eyebrows.

"The ability to smoke," Snake answered as he put one in his mouth and light it up, which left Rock stared at him blankly for a very long time.

"Why do robot masters even need to smoke? No, forget that, how did you even convince Dr. Wily to give you that upgrade?" Rock asked, a bit of annoyance seeped in his words as he slowly put his face into his palm.

"...I think you will either see a lot more Snake Men that can smoke...or never see a single snake motif robot from Wily for a very long time." Snake answered.

"What's the rush?" Blues's Shadow taunted. "You know the only reason you help others with their problems is so you don't have to deal with yours."

Blues stopped and considered that. "True enough," he admitted.

The helmet of Break Man didn't allow facial expression to be observed, but even so Blues got the impression that his Shadow was blinking and working his mouth in astonishment.

"So... what?" his Shadow continued, voice growing dangerous. "You just let it all sit and fester, even though dad's been Awake in... how many Loops with us now? Six? Fourteen? A few dozen? More? Let it churn and grow ever darker, ever more foul and dangerous? What do you think will happen eventually?"

"I'll go mad and my family will have to put me down," Blues returned calmly. "What else could happen?"

"And you're okay with that?" the Shadow sounded incredulous. "The pain and anguish you'll heap on those you care for. No matter if you win or lose in a fight, the mere fact that they have to fight you will hurt them. That's the real reason you don't go through with it. You like causing them pain. Deep down, you hate them more than you love them."

"Maybe," Blues allowed. "Maybe not. On the one hand, Rock and Roll are my family. On the other hand they're the ones dad built to replace me. Even if all the evidence points elsewhere, that's how it still feels at times. But you know as well as I do the real reason. Everytime I get it into my head to step up and say something those memories come back all over again. The ones I can't forget, can't bury, can't purge, and can't overcome."

"Because you're weak," his Shadow sneered.

"Yes," Blues agreed without hesitation.

His Shadow stared back silently for several seconds. "How the hell did you come to this stalemate? You won't reject me and yet you won't address the part of you that is me... How is this possible?"

"Because if facing my own darkness was all I needed," Blues told his Shadow, "I'd have moved past this a long time ago. Now, if you'll excuse me, I have people to help and problems to continue running from."

18.7

"–and so I thought if it worked for the ancient heroes of old, then it could work for you!" Ceil chirped. "Think of it, Zero! Your very own support unit! Heading into battle by your side, aiding you against the forces of Weil!"

Zero simply stared up at Ceil's creation, completely stoic save for a single eye twitch.

"Well, what do you think of him?" Ceil asked with an eager smile.

"You made a pink elephant ..." Zero's twitch grew more prominent.

18.M (GammaTron)

"Roll..." Dr. Light began.

"Well, t...they were just so cute and I couldn't help it," Roll blushed before motioning to the smallest of the three beings she brought, "Plus, how can you say 'no' to such a cute widdle face like this?"

"B-Bello..." the Minion shyly greeted, hugging his teddy bear close.

"...They can spend the night," Dr. Light caved.

"Yay!" the three Minions cheered before hugging Dr. Light's legs, "Boss!"

"Just what are these beings, anyway?" Dr. Light pondered, picking up the tallest of the three yellow beings.

"From what I can guess, they're called Minions," Rock noted, the only one of the three Awake, before holding his hand out to the one with an ukulele, "Rock."

"Stuart," the Minion replied, shaking Rock's hand, "Boss's chico?"

"Um...Yes?" Rock replied.

"Hey! Boss's chico ba chica!" Stuart called to the two Minions still hugging Dr. Light's legs.

"Yay!" the two cheered before hugging Rock and Roll.

"See? They're adorable," Roll giggled.

'Tell that to Napoleon, King Ramses, Dracula, a caveman, the Tyrannosaurus Rex, those fish, and those amoeba,' Rock thought, recalling the movie he saw in a Hub Loop about these guys.

18.3 Strikes)

X and Zero were in an important meeting. Namely, deciding what the heck to do about Sigma this Loop.

"As much as I'd love to just drop a nuke on him, there's no way to be sure that it would work ," X sighed. "Remember that we had to kill him on the freaking moon in baseline, with him so far from an infectable system that it finally took, before he stopped coming back."

"And Lumine made sure that his legacy would live on anyway ," Zero admitted reluctantly. "I know. I was there too. But you can't tell me that blowing Sigma to his constituent atoms wouldn't be satisfying."

"True... Well, if you can figure out how to pull it off without endangering civilians or the environment, then I supp–"

The door to the room opened suddenly, drawing both of their attentions to the hunter that had interrupted them when they'd specifically instructed that there were to be no disturbances.

"I'm sorry commanders," the hunter apologized, "but you really need to come see this..."

Sigma's face took up the entirety of the pirated broadcast, grinning like the maniac he was, talking about how destructive the wars between Mavericks and the Hunters were, and how surely humans and reploids alike could agree that a more peaceful solution was preferable. It was making the synthetic hairs on the back of X's neck stand on end. Even Zero's long ponytail was fluffing out into something closer to a feral lion's mane as he listened to the madman preach 'peace'.

"–and that is why I and my Mavericks are challenging the Hunters to a winner-take-all baseball series."

The camera panned back to show Sigma in an honest-to-Light baseball uniform over his armor; complete with bat, glove, and ball; and flanked by eight Mavericks neither X nor Zero had ever seen before in the Loops, all dressed the same way.

"The losers will surrender unconditionally to the winners," Sigma finished with a smug grin before the technicians paused the feed to listen to their commanders' reactions.

"Trap?" Zero asked in a tone that stated he already knew the answer.

"Most likely," X answered calmly.

"We're going along with it anyway?"

"Oh, yeah."

(xəɬuɹoɔS) (9˙8l

Dr. Thomas Light Awoke in a dark room, screwdriver in hand, standing over a prone Rock.

Seconds later, the Loop memories flooded through his mind, and it was all he could do not to retch, as the wave of jealousy, resentment and boiling madness faded.

All of which was aimed directly at Albert Wily, his long-time friend and partner.

As a result of being Awake, Thomas could (or, more accurately, would with the benefit of time) see the distorted mirror his Loop memories were showing, with himself in Albert's place, and Albert in his. And tonight, after the press conference where Albert had demonstrated their new Robot Masters to the world, had been enough for his un-Awake self. Which meant what he had been doing before he woke up...

The thought was just too horrific to contemplate.

After several long moments, Thomas began examining his son, making sure everything was fine. He was heartily glad to see that everything was in fact fine. Quickly, he finished, as he heard Rock's power turning on automatically.

"Wh–" His son began, before turning around. "Okay..."

There was a groan from nearby, followed by a quick "ow" in Roll's unmistakable voice. Seconds later it was followed by a confused "huh", and Roll emerged from the darkness.

"Hi, dad." She groaned. "Rock. Something knocked me out."

"I believe that was me, I'm afraid." Thomas said, sheepishly. "I seem to be in Albert's place, and vice versa. Only instead of reprogramming the Robot Masters, my un-Awake self was planning on reprogramming you two."

"Well, that's disturbing." Roll stated. "Are we playing along?"

The three Lights looked at one another.

"FOOLS!" Dr. Light declared, as everyone present ran from the devastation his twin Robot Masters were unleashing, too terrified to notice how their shots conveniently managed not to harm anyone "Behold the unparalleled might and genius of Doctor Thomas Light!"

"Thomas!" The aghast Albert Wily declared, "Why are you doing this? Why would you turn these two, your own creations, into... into weapons?!"

"Because!" Dr. Light shot Albert as hard a glare as he could muster. "No longer shall my genius be overshadowed by yours! From this day forth, you shall be blinded by my brilliance!"

" Might wanna rein it in a bit. " Roll whispered to him. " Otherwise they might think we're actually serious. "

"Of course, my trusting servant!" Dr. Light announced. "We hope this has made a suitable demonstration, that from now on, Light Makes Right!"

Rock nudged Doctor Light, who just stared blankly. Rock made a "go on" hand motion.

After a few seconds, Thomas realised what he was trying to signify, and tried out his evil cackle.

He thought it was a pretty good imitation of Albert's.

Roll expressed her opinion by facepalming, as they departed.

A short while later, in their not-at all subtly hidden Light Lair (patent pending), the trio watched on the news as Albert Wily declared his intentions to bring his former friend to justice.

He looked incredibly serious about it. Though it probably helped that this Loop Wily lacked his usual distinctive hairstyle.

"Well, I think that went well." Doctor Light mused, as he took another sip of soothing tea. "Or as well as could be expected. There is one thing that concerns me, though."

"What's that?" Roll asked.

"If I am in Albert's place... and if we presume this Loop follows the same procedure for everyone else... what then of Mikhail and Noelle?"

As if almost on cue, the large communications screen (Rock and Roll had insisted it was necessary) began beeping, a sign of an incoming call. The Lights exchanged confused glances, before turning the screen on.

They were greeted with the sight of Doctor Lalinde herself, grinning in a distressingly different fashion from normal. Were it not for the fact she looked like her in every other respect, none of the three would have said it was her at all.

"Thomas, darling." She said. "Bravo on your little performance today, and on finally deciding to get out from Albert's shadow."

Doctor Light tried to stay in character. "Is there something you wish to say?"

The grin changed. "Well, I was wondering if you might perhaps wish for some... assistance, in your little endeavour."

There was a strangled noise from Doctor Light. "One moment, Noelle." And with that he turned the screen off, and leaned back in his chair.

"Okay..." Rock soon declared. "Maybe we were a bit too convincing."

"How did she even get our number in the first place?" Doctor Light asked. Within an instant, he could practically feel Roll's nervous grin. As he turned to look, she was absently scuffing a boot against the floor.

"I regret nothing." She declared. "After all, I am evil."

18.4

"Very well, Zero!" Sage Harpuia declared. "It seems I have no choice but to challenge you to Neo Arcadia's most ancient and honorable form of dueling!"

Zero blinked at the semi-odd turn of events, but decided to roll with it. "Name it! I'll take any challenge you care to dish out!"

"Pie fighting!"

Zero blinked, groaned, and resolved to have words with X the next time they were Awake together.

---

18. Astro (Dr. Tempo)

Mega Man was practicing his marksmanship, and seemed occupied. Roll walked in, and asked, "What's up, Rock?" Mega Man relaxed, and said, "Remember that Death Battle Loop with Wily and Eggman fighting a while back?" Roll nodded. "Yeah...what a mess that fight left." Mega Man smirked. "It'll be my turn to fight in one of those Loops soon."

Roll smiled gleefully. "Who're ya facing, Rock?"

"I'm going up against none other than Astro Boy. That'll be a tough fight."

Roll nodded. "Good luck, Rock."

The Blue Bomber nodded back. "I'll need it."

Dr. Nathaniel Cain stood before the Arcadia council on the rather grave matter of Maverick reploids. Reploids who had, in all defiance of their programming, harmed, and in the latest incident killed, humans.

"–and somebody has to answer for this, Dr. Cain," the projected image of the head councilwoman declared. "You introduced reploids to this world. Can you explain what is giving rise to these 'Mavericks'?"

"There have only been three instances so far, Madam Councelor–"

"Three too many!" one of the other council members interrupted Dr. Cain.

"Absolutely too many!" Dr. Cain readily agreed. "But not enough to discern a cause or a pattern!"

"Actually," X interrupted the discussion that would see the rise of the Maverick Hunters as he entered the council chamber proper and strode up to stand beside Dr. Cain to the silent shock of the council and the civilians ringing the massive room, "I have a theory about the matter."

"Indeed?" the head councilwoman recovered first. "Do explain."

"My creator, Dr. Light, made me to possess mental and decision making capacity equal to a human's," X reminded the room of what most already knew quite well. "And then sealed me away for thirty years of ethical testing–"

"Which became a hundred years by mistake," another council member interrupted. "Yes, we're familiar with the tale. What does that have to do with the Maverick problem?"

"Quite possibly everything, honored council," X replied without missing a beat. He now had their undivided attention. "Humans have unprecedented decision making ability among the biological creatures of this planet, but even they are not expected to become law-abiding citizens immediately upon being born. And yet, this is what is being expected of reploids fresh from the factory. They may have been programmed with the basic knowledge of society, laws, basic academia, and subjects relevant to those jobs they are expected to perform, but they have no experience in applying any of them. Especially that which relates to moral judgment."

"And how do you propose to correct this, hmm?"

"Why, using the same time-tested method by which humans are made ready to live and work productively in society," X declared.

The chamber was silent for several long moments as everyone, human and reploid alike, puzzled over the statement.

"And what method would that be, X?" the head councilwoman finally asked.

"Sending them to school of course."

18.8) (Me, NiGHTcapD, KageX, Valentine Meikin, FTKnight, TheZMage)

Axl rounded the corner and found himself face-to-face with a certain set of (slightly immature) Reploids who, for the whole of the Loop, had been riddling him with question after question. Most of the time, it was out of simple curiosity or lack of knowledge of an assigned task, but every once in a while they peppered him with ones that seemed to have been ground fresh off the rumor mill. From the looks on their faces, this was shaping up to be the latter.

On the plus side, this loop was the best one so far to sharpen up his snarking skills.

"Hey, Axl... Is it true what they say about commanders X and Zero? Are they really MST3K enthusiasts who do amateur Riffing?"

"They're not exactly amateurs anymore," Axl stated, thinking about the times the three of them had Looped onto the Sattelite of Love due to Loop crashes. "Well, they still don't get paid, but they're professional-level by now."

"Really? I heard they were using an alias so they could be part of a rock band."

"I'm thinking they have been, once or twice. Light loved that genre." Axl put a hand to his chin thoughtfully. "Definitely before I was built, though. I would have gotten in on that."

"Hey, Axl..."

"Yes?"

"Is it true that X and Zero are really gay lovers?"

"No," Axl deadpanned. "Despite photograph evidence to the contrary, they are not gay. What they are is horrible at poker, and they needed to clear a debt."

Another of the group dope-slapped the asker. "Of course they aren't, you silly! They're obviously dating their navigators."

"Idiot!" Axl dope-slapped the junior Hunter instantaneously. "You don't talk about the commanders' love lives! Or lack thereof! Do you want to be haunted by the ghost of Iris Cain?"

Smiling sheepishly, a different one piped up. "Are they...Wily Wars Historical Reenactors?"

"Uh, Sigma started it! Every time!"

"Huh. Last one for now, but..."

"Thank Light," Axl uttered under his breath.

"...are they, by any chance, two smaller reploids apiece, one sitting on top of the other and wearing a trenchcoat so that nobody will notice?"

After processing the question and the mental images, Axl checked his loop memories, and suddenly something clicked in place in his mind. "You know, that would explain a lot of things, not the least of which is their weird sense of style."

---

18. Quintet

Rock had mixed feelings about Quint most Loops. To start with, the robot was typically built in the future as a copy of Rock himself, and programmed to think he was the future Mega Man reprogrammed to serve Dr. Wily. If he escaped and went back to the future, he had the robotic equivalent of a mental break when he found out that he wasn't Mega Man and started calling himself 'Mega Man Shadow', recruited his own set of robot masters known as the Dimensions and came back to invade the past.

On the other hand, after that mess, Quint tended to come around and became something of an ally. Plus, he wasn't axe crazy like Waltz was after Waking Up (and sometimes was even before).

Regardless, Quint was a tough opponent. Despite the seemingly ridiculous nature of his chosen weapon and support unit Sakugarne, the pogo-jackhammer. After all, he had all the same programmed instincts that had made Rock so effective as Mega Man, but without most of Rock's inhibitions.

As he was being reminded now with the two trading blows back and forth.

"You must know it's hopeless, Mega Man!" Quint snarled behind his blue shades as he took potshots at Rock while intercepting Rock's own with Sakugarne's thicker armor. "I'm you from the future! I have all of your abilities plus forty years worth of upgrades! You can't hope to stand against me!"

"And if you were really me, you'd already know my answer!" Rock shot back, in both senses of the word. Tough or not, Quint's back of tricks never really changed all that much, especially on the psychological front. Deciding he'd played by the usual rules enough, Rock activated the Hard Knuckle. "Besides, if you're really so advanced, where are the rest of your weapons?"

Quint made to dive out of the way, but at the last second stumbled and looked disoriented before being struck full-on in the chest and sent tumbling along the ground.

Rock blinked. That had been odd... But it looked like Quint was down for the count.

He shrugged the matter off as he approached Quint, already prepping himself for whatever exit strategy the robot from the future would try. Quint's green and lime armor suddenly turning blue and a lighter blue like Rock's own was so far down the list of possibilities that the blue bomber froze in confusion.

And got a face full of high pressure water for his efforts.

"Wh–blubbbphhht!?" Rock fought to hold his ground against the spray, only for it to cut off as suddenly as it started. Rock made to move towards a now blue and peach Quint, only to find his feet were stuck to the floor.

"It seems the rest of my weapons are right here, Mega Man," Quint stated calmly as his armor turned wood-tan and steel-gray, and a massive hammer appeared in his hand. Rock reacted quickly and fired another Hard Knuckle even as Quint threw the hammer. The two massive projectiles crossed each other in mid-air and struck their targets. Quint, off-balance from his throw, was blasted backwards with Sakugarne and crashed through a window. Rock, immobile from the glue sticking him to the floor, took the hammer full to the head and blacked out.

Quint came to in a lab that felt like it should have been familiar, but wasn't, and blinked. Running a diagnostic on himself, he soon found that the subroutines that had bound him to Dr. Wily were gone. He felt relieved... and conflicted... and...

And a part of him felt like it hadn't been completely necessary for some reason. But then, that part also seemed to think a dragon had stepped on him, so he paid it no heed.

Regardless, there was only one person he knew of that could have removed Dr. Wily's reprogramming from him.

"Dr. Light?" he called out and sat up, looking around the room. There was Sakugarne, sitting propped up by a table. He felt relieved on seeing his support unit and continued looking around until he spotted the good doctor.

It was odd seeing his creator. For one, the man seemed far less familiar than he should have, but Quint chalked that up to Dr. Wily's handiwork. The bad doctor had done a number on his memories before dragging him to the past. For another, the man was carefully stationed behind a shimmering magnetic barrier eyeing Quint warily.

"Dr. Light? It's me, Mega Man," Quint questioned, unsure of why his creator was so reluctant to come closer. "Don't you recognize your own creation?"

"Oh, I would recognize my son anywhere," Dr. Light returned calmly. "Which is why I know you're not him."

Quint tried to deny it, but found he couldn't compile the necessary words.

"Oh, the workmanship is remarkable," Dr. Light admitted. "The modifications to my boy's plans without peer, even with the advanced hardware I saw. But a craftsman always knows his own work, and a father his own son. As similar as you are, you are not my boy Rock."

"Rock?" Quint puzzled. He knew that name, but... he was modeled after Mega Man. Who was Rock? Was... Had Mega Man... not always been Mega Man? Did that mean that he... wasn't Mega Man after all?

Was he... just a shadow?

"So... I'm just a copy after all..."

"Now that is simply foolishness," Dr. Light scoffed, cutting off Quint's internal pity party. "I have seen copies of my boy, and you are not that, no matter what plans you were made from. As I said, there were modifications made, most to take advantage of technology decades ahead of what most people have now, but also to maximize synergy with your support unit there. Whatever else you are, you are no mere copy."

"I see..." Quint sighed, not entirely convinced, but nonetheless feeling better.

"You are also the best chance I have of getting my son back from Dr. Wily."

Quint blinked, and gave the good doctor his full attention.

Rock hated being reprogrammed. Sure, he had Free Will as a looper, but even that didn't make his programming a non-issue. He often wondered if it was comparable to the instincts that humans and other organics possessed as part of their evolution, and resolved to try and compare the phenomena should the opportunity to do so come up again.

His base programming was so much a part of who he preferred to be that he barely noticed it anymore, but Wily's stuff...

Best case scenario it manifested like some mental itch that took over cognitive processing power insistently until it was scratched. Annoying, but ignorable. It was also fortunately what Dr. Wily had gone along with this particular Loop.

More often, it was like a mantra chanting in his head that wouldn't shut up and got louder if he ignored its commands. Rock despised that version, since ignoring it took up all of his processing power, leaving him vulnerable, and frequently got to the point where the commands hurt to keep ignoring.

Then there was his least favorite kind: The one where the reprogramming was like a completely new personality being installed, with Rock's mind partitioned off to where he couldn't influence what his body was doing any more than a backseat passenger could take control of a motor vehicle.

He was personally glad that Wily had gone with the 'itch' version. Because the events of this Loop were something he wanted to play along with for a bit. It was new, it was interesting, and...

Rock looked out from the window of Wily's Skull Station at the red-colored one-man spacecraft with angry eyes and the green-armored passenger, and smiled. He double-checked the trojan he'd slipped into Wily's security systems, and confirmed that it was ready to shut them off at his command.

This particular rematch was one he was quite looking forward to. It wasn't often that Quint was in the position of the hero. Less often that he was there because he'd caught Rock off guard and delivered him to Wily.

And never because he'd used Master Weapons that he shouldn't have access to.

Yes, Rock was quite looking forward to this...

...perhaps a little too much, he shook his head sharply when he realized the mental itch had abated. Ugh, he hated being reprogrammed.

'Ah, yes, your loyal support unit Sakugarne. I rather approve of it. So much that... I got one for my own.'

Quint sighed as he trudged back into Light Labs. Dr. Wily's Skull station was destroyed, but he couldn't help but feel it was a phyrric victory. Not only had Mega Man escaped capture, he'd left Quint with more questions than ever.

He still didn't know where the eleven master weapons had come from. He had... memory errors telling him about a series made by Dr. Wily; Yo-Yo Man, Rainbow Man, Comet Woman, Tank Man, Trinitro Man, Glue Man, Jet Man, Nail Man, Hammer Man, Whirlpool Man, and the mysterious Yoku Man (was he even one of Wily's?); but they also spoke of a silver-furred humanoid hedgehog and a madman with a torso shaped like an egg. Two of them in fact. Among other things that simply did not exist, so they were clearly faulty.

Quint really didn't know what to think about Mega Man's streak of competitiveness and willingness to stay with Dr. Wily despite apparently having full use of his reasoning. A large part of his mind was telling him that Mega Man should have been begging for a way to remove Wily's control over him if he still had that much control over himself. Not flee to back up the doctor and help him escape without so much as a mention of his true creator.

And that wasn't even mentioning how the heck Mega Man had gotten his own copy of Sakugarne. One that he seemed at least as comfortabe using as Quint did his. Nor did it explain the suite of master weapons he'd boasted in their one-on-one duel that he'd conspicuously failed to use when paired with Wily, instead limiting himself to those from the doctor's most recent invasion.

So many questions, so few answers that seemed forth–

"Thanks, dad," he heard Mega Man's voice from inside the lab. "Not having Wily's directives distracting me will make the masquerade a whole lot easier to keep up. Especially since–Oh, hey Quint. What's up?"

"You... but... You left with Wily...?" Quint tried to process the sight of Mega Man happily sitting up on an operating table while Dr. Light closed his cranial access ports. "You were swearing revenge and everything?"

"Yeah, sorry about hamming it up so much," Mega Man apologized sheepishly. "Been a while since I had a good excuse to play the role. You did pretty good out there."

"I... but..." Quint tried to wrap his mind around this again and got an error. "Why? Why stay with Wily? ...I assume you're going back after this."

"Curiosity, really," Mega Man admitted. "You make a good hero and I want to see how good. If I 'reform' now, then I'd overshadow you. Plus if I stay with Wily, I can probably keep him from going too overboard by claiming a desire to duel you. Maybe get him to give me command over where and how his armies deploy to minimize collateral damage."

"Again... why?" Quint turned to Dr. Light. "And how are you fine with this?!"

"I'll let Rock explain it," Dr. Light stood and began walking to the door. "In the meantime, I'm going to figure out how to explain all of this, and how much to explain for that matter, to Roll and Auto."

Quint watched the good doctor leave, perplexed, before turning to Mega Man with a gaze that demanded explanation even when hidden behind a pair of shades.

"First off, what do you remember about your past life?"

"What the hell are you talking about?"

"I'm talking about how you have the master weapons of the Special Wily Numbers when they haven't been built in this reality," Mega Man explained flatly, staring straight back as Quint tried to suppress his shock. "And Yoku Man. He's a weird one to pin down."

"H-how...?"

"Tell me, do you remember Elise? How about... Silver?"

Quint stepped back like he'd been struck. Those were... How could Mega Man know about his memory errors?!

Mega Man's chuckling snapped him out of it and he glared at the blue-armored robot he'd been based off of, his mind running through the most efficient ways of wiping that grin off of Mega Man's face.

"Sorry," Mega Man apologized readily. "It's just not that often that I can knock you that far off balance. I know exactly what's up with your 'memory errors', because they're not errors. They're remnants of a temporal reset that you've experienced. Another timeline you lived that you remember. I know, because it's been happening to me for... a much longer time now."

Quint stared, processing that. It was impossible, but so far the statements seemed to fit.

"Better get comfortable," Mega Man told him, "this could take a while. To start off with, welcome to the Loops..."

18.1) The plot can always find you when it wants to. Always.

18.!) Snake. Why did it have to be Snake?

18.() Blues in Persona.

18.7) Oh Ceil, you and your wacky antics...

18.M) Roll has Minions. Be afraid.

18.3 Strikes) Take me out to that ball game!

Sigma's Maverick team (aside from himself) would be based on real life baseball mascots as follows:

Pirate Parrot (Pittsburg Pirates)

Stomper Elephant (Oakland Athletics)

Mariner Moose (Seattle Mariners)

Paws Tiger (Detroit Tigers)

Street Cub (Chicago Cubs)

Waterboat Marlin (Miami Marlins)

Luchador Diamondback (Arizona Diamondbacks)

DJ Ray-mond (Tampa Bay Rays)

Anyone who wants to is free to continue this.

˙uʍop əpısdn pəuɹnɬ uəəq s,doo˥ sıɥɬ 'lləM (9˙8l

18.4) Who wants pie?

18. Astro) A very intriguing match-up, given that Mega Man was partly based on Astro Boy in the first place.

18.12) X is not proposing that reploids go to school in the same way or even for the same timeframe as humans. After all, they can download enough information to pass a GED. No, when questioned, he reveals that he's proposing a school for teaching ethics and socialization, much like human children and teens socialize with their peers (with varying degrees of success and myriad results).

Of course, X would be one of the teachers. Cue Professor X jokes.

Yes, I know Dr. Cain has no canon first name. Nathaniel sounded right to me.

18.8) Rumor Mill.

18. Quintet) So many people told me that I needed to start Quint looping after last chapter. This was already written at the time, just so I could hold it back for a few days and watch your reactions. ^_^

Mega Man: Inside Out

Mega Man: Inside Out

AN: When this was first posted on 10/31/2015, it was incomplete. If you only read it then, you missed out on the denouement, commentary, cool bonus content, and epilogue.

Riley blinked as she Awoke in the car again and sighed. She'd been getting used to the repeats, but always Awakening during or right before her family's move to San Francisco (or wherever it was they were moving to this Loop) was getting depressing. She'd really like to have a Loop where she could talk with her old friends in person rather than having to do it over the phone or online.

Speaking of talking with friends, she should probably check in with the ones inside her head.

'Sadness?' she concentrated and used the mental relay system that Phineas and Ferb had installed inside her mind several Loops back.

'How'd you know it was me?' the blue emotion sent back.

'Just a feeling,' Riley thought back with a melancholy smirk. Really, if she paid attention, it was fairly obvious which of her emotions was running the show at any given moment. 'How are the others right now?'

'Looks like we're all Awake for this Loop,' Sadness sent back. 'Anger's looking over the Mind Reader as usual, Fear and Disgust are talking over first day of school plans, and Joy's rifling through this Loop's memories. She should have a good sample pretty soon and– oh, here she comes now. Sorry. I was kind enjoying our talk.'

'It's fine Sadness,' Riley thought back, 'I was enjoying it too. Beats staring out a car window at nothing in particular.'

'Aw, but Sadness loves those times!' Joy joined the conversation. 'I've never seen her more excited than over a good introspective heart-to-heart. Not really my thing, but to each their own, right?'

'Right,' Riley giggled to herself at the thought of an excited Sadness. The mental image was patently ridiculous.

'Oooo... that's a keeper, Riley,' Joy laughed.

Riley blushed as she remembered that her emotions were privy to such thoughts and promptly imagined a quiet and introverted Joy to even the scales.

'What the...? Is it opposite day and no one told me?' the gruff voice of Anger joined the others. 'Joy, have you shown her this Loop's memories yet or not?'

'Was just about to!' Joy replied. 'Riley, you remember those video games Dad introduced us to that time you broke your leg on the ice?'

'Yeah?' Riley thought back as the image of a blue guy running jumping and shooting came to mind. Video games had never been a major interest for her, but she'd needed something to take her mind off the fact that she had a leg in a cast, a pair of crutches, and was supposed to stay off her feet (well, foot and a crutch) as much as possible. Plus her dad had apparently loved the series and his enthusiasm was a bit infectious. And they'd been fun. Frustrating as heck at times, but fun.

'I remember being torn between wanting to throw the controller through a window and wanting to shoot more of those digital things in the face for killing our character all the time,' Anger sounded happy. Which made sense. Aggression in general was his thing. He loved hockey just as much as Riley herself.

'Well, guess where Dad's new job is!' Joy cheered as a new image entered Riley's thoughts. One of a very high-tech lab, at least for the time period Riley was used to, with a great big sign proclaiming it to be 'Light Labs'. Information came with it, particularly the name of the owner: Dr. Thomas Light.

'Is that Santa Claus in a lab coat?' Disgust joined the conversation. 'I have no idea how he manages it, but he makes it work.'

'Okay, but what does that have to do with Dad's video games?' Riley thought back.

'He's the guy who made the hero in them!' Joy chirped back.

'No way!' Anger seemed much more interested all of a sudden. Riley was pretty interested now too.

'Wait,' Fear called a halt to the excitement of the moment. 'Didn't the villain if those things work with him?'

An image of Einstein's evil cousin turning into an alien from outer space came to Riley's mind and she shuddered.

'Oh no!' Sadness cried. 'If Riley has to deal with a mad scientist, it'll be bad!'

'Bad?!' Fear countered. 'It'll be terrible! We don't know how to fight a robot uprising!'

'Guys!' Joy called for calm for several moments, 'I checked and there's no mention of the guy in Riley's Loop memories, or anyone else working with Dr. Light right now. And I even think I know why!'

'You do?' Disgust questioned after a silent moment.

'Yep! You see, his name was Dr. Wily!'

Riley thought that over for a moment, and then realized the strange sense of humor the Loops sometimes had and groaned. The groan was echoed by multiple emotions inside her head.

'The sinister Dr. Wily has been replaced this Loop by the amazing Dr. Riley! Let's see what happens!' (1)

Rock and Roll were loving the current Loop for one very important reason: Dr. Wily didn't exist in it. They were very certain of that. They'd checked every possible digital record regarding every known name variation they'd ever encountered.

The mad scientist didn't exist as a man, a woman, a child, or even an escaped chimp from the zoo that had wandered into a pharmaceutical company (that had been a strange Loop).

Of course, it meant that someone else could very well have taken his role and the other shoe was just waiting to drop, but they'd handle that if and when it happened.

"Hey dad!" Roll greeted Dr. Thomas Light as he trudged into the kitchen for breakfast. "How are things going? Awake yet?"

"Still no subspace pocket access," the man smiled as Roll placed an omelet and orange juice in front of him. "So it looks like I'm just a highly lucid Dreamer this Loop."

"Eh, we'll happily store anything you want to keep for a later Loop," Rock offered as he entered the kitchen. "How are preparations for the big presentation going?"

"My new business manager should be starting today," Dr. Light answered. "Though it'll probably just be showing him around and detailing his duties. Still, it'll be good to have more time to work in the lab on many of the projects I've been putting off so Albert didn't try to steal them."

"What's his name again?" Rock wondered. "Bill Anderson?"

"Andersen with an 'e', though the names do sound similar," (2) Dr. Light answered. "Bill and his family have recently moved to Arcadia for this job, so he probably isn't familiar with the city yet. I'm honestly wondering if I should send Auto to show him the way to the lab or keep Auto at the store so he doesn't scare the man away."

"Probably keep Auto at the store for now," Rock nodded. "He's a little much to take in the first day on the job."

"I wonder if Mr. Andersen has any kids..." Roll mused.

It was early morning after moving day and Riley was reflecting that there were some rather odd and annoying constants in the Loops at times.

'No duh,' she heard Disgust snort in her head. 'Exhibit A: Our house is, once again, a complete and utter disaster area! I mean, the last people who lived here should have had it condemned rather than sell it to poor innocent people like dad and mom!'

*'Not to mention that the beep movers got lost yet AGAIN!'* Anger fumed. 'And will you stop hitting the censor button Fear?!'

Ding-Dong

'Hey! Someone's at the door!' Joy latched onto this new fact. 'Ooooh! I wonder who it is? I bet it's some of our new neighbors coming to make friends!'

'I bet it's someone looking for whoever used to live here and now they're going to be reminded that their friends moved away and that'll be sad...'

'Oh geez! You don't think the robot uprising makes house calls, do you?!'

'Settle down you all,' Riley thought to her emotions. 'Let's find out before getting bent out of shape.'

"Hello, is this the Andersen residence?" Riley heard the voice of a boy about her age ask.

"Um... yes," the surprised tone of her father replied.

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"Red Alert!"

Boy! Boy! Boy!

"How did he find out about Riley so fast?! Why is he here? Who is he?"

"We should probably find out before jumping to conclusions. There is a tiny chance the boy is simply a new neighbor being polite."

The Real World

"Who are you?"

"Rock Light, sir," the boy answered in such a polite tone that Riley just knew he'd held his hand out to shake her father's. Peeking around a corner to spy on the doorway, and she saw a young boy with black hair in a blue shirt doing exactly that. "I'm from Light Labs. Dad sent me and my sister over to see how you were settling in, sir."

'Oh, I like this guy,' Disgust mused. 'Polite, charming, decently dressed. Yeah, we could do worse for friends even if he is a boy.'

"I... see..." Riley's father blinked as he accepted the handshake. "Um..."

"And this is my sister, Roll Light," the boy continued as a blond girl with a ponytail and a red sundress joined him holding what looked like a bag of groceries.

'Wait... Rock... and Roll?' Joy's slow voice sounded in Riley's head. 'Those... are... the... most... awesome... names... EVER! Almost as awesome as yours Riley!'

"Oh... my... god..." the girl paused and looked at the interior of the house in horror.

'See! Someone else agrees with me about the house!' Disgust crowed in vindication.

'Oh... she hates our new house... that's sad...'

"Rock, you start making breakfast for these nice people," the girl handed the grocery bag to her brother as well as a frying pan that had been hidden behind it. "I'm going to get my emergency cleaning supplies."

"Bring some of the picnicware while you're at it!" the boy called back after his sister after a glance inside confirming that there was not yet any furniture to speak of.

'Emergency cleaning supplies?!' Fear worried. 'Is she going to scrub our new house from the face of the earth?!'

'Not like it would be any great loss,' Disgust dismissed Fear's worries.

'But we're still inside! Aren't condemned buildings supposed to be evacuated first?!'

"Um... what just...?" Riley's father finally found his voice.

"Just let my sister work, sir," the boy smiled serenely as he entered the house. "I promise you won't be sorry you did. Now, if you could show me the kitchen, please? I'm not as good at cooking as she is, but I can do a passable omelet."

"Sure..." Riley's dad seemed to latch onto that idea like a drowning man latching onto a life preserver and began leading the boy to the kitchen. After a moment, Riley followed.

'You should introduce yourself Riley!' Joy prompted.

"Hi..." Riley began.

'But don't give away too much!' Fear added. 'We still don't know if either of these two are part of the inevitable robot uprising!'

"Are you part of the robot uprising?" Riley finished before she could stop herself. (3)

'Oh, nice one Fear...' Anger and Disgust both grumbled as Riley's face flushed in embarrassment and her dad barely stifled a snort of amusement.

"Nah," the boy smiled in amusement as he wiped down the electric stove top. "Actually, part of what my sister and I do is help make sure that our dad doesn't engineer one by accident."

"So what else do you do?" Riley's father asked.

"I mostly help dad with his lab work," the boy said as he set out eggs and various omelet fixings. Riley was relieved to note the complete absence of broccoli. "Roll–"

"Ack!" Riley's mom suddenly exclaimed in shock from the entryway. "Who are you? What are you doing here?"

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"And where do you get your cleaning supplies? Because we could really use some around here."

The Real World

"Good morning Mrs. Andersen. My name is Roll Light. And I end messes."

"...does that," Rock finished.

'I don't know about the rest of you,' Disgust broke the silence in Riley's head, 'but I just found my new best friend.'

Roll's claim of ending messes was apparently not made idly. She came in with a commando headband and enough cleaning supplies to be mistaken as a one-maid army ready to take on the apocalypse itself. (4) By the time she was finished, around early afternoon, the still-empty house all but sparkled.

Rock on the other hand had talked to Riley's father about the general expectations and schedule of his new job. Riley had tuned out a fair bit, but the gist was that Rock and Roll's dad, Dr. Light, was gearing up for the release of a major industrial robotics line and was finding that he just didn't have the time anymore to invent, build, and run the business side of things. Which was why Riley's dad had been hired on, with a fairly generous increase in pay over his old job. He'd also talked a fair bit about Arcadia and the various sights, as well as some of the more flamboyant celebrations that the city's eccentric mayor, Leonard Dorado, held. Joy had loved that part in particular and prodded Riley into asking more.

And then the two had offered to take not just Riley's dad to tour his new place of business, but the whole Andersen family.

Riley was excited about going with her dad to see Light Labs. Right up until she saw what she was expected to ride in.

'What in the world is that ?!' Disgust yelled as Riley beheld the truck the Light twins had arrived in.

'I don't know but I think it's looking at us...' Fear added.

'Oh, come on... It's not... that bad...' Joy offered, but even she didn't seem really certain.

The truck, if it could really be called that, was bright green and yellow with an open cab. The front of the truck had a face consisting of an oversized bumper-jaw and two humongous red eye-headlights. (5)

All in all, it evoked the image of some robo-clown and neither Riley nor her emotions were thrilled with the prospect.

"It's... certainly... unique ," Riley's mom offered diplomatically.

'Translation: She hates it but doesn't want to be seen as impolite,' Disgust paraphrased.

"Unique is..." Rock began hesitantly.

"... one way to describe Auto..." Roll finished. (6)

"Auto?" Riley's dad asked. "And now that I think about it, who drove you anyway?"

"Auto is Light Labs' mechanic and... somewhat eccentric. As for who drove," Rock stated, holding up a license, "I did."

The Andersen family blinked as one.

'I'm torn...' Disgust finally offered from Riley's head. 'The whole driving thing is automatic cool points, but that thing is, like, anti-cool.'

'He is a very brave soul,' Fear offered.

Riley had absolutely loved seeing Light Labs. The entire place had the general look and feel of something that Phineas and Ferb would want when they grew up. Or at least the chance to play around in over the summer.

The industrial robots, that Dr. Light called the 'robot masters' were six robots that Riley didn't recognize. She chalked that up to only playing the '2' and '3' games of the series that Loop she'd broken her leg (and neither to actual completion), but it still hadn't stopped Fear from ranting about the inevitable robot uprising. Nor had Dr. Light's explanation of each robot's abilities. Regardless of intended purpose, giant scissors that could cut tree trunks were intimidating.

Then had come Dr. Light talking about the AI of each robot, explaining the concept of IC chips (along with a bunch of technical details that went over all the Andersens' heads) and how each 'robot master' would be able to undertake complex emotional interactions, direct other robots in the workplace, and make complex decisions like a human.

Joy had thought that was awesome, Fear had thought that was terrifying, and before Riley could make peace between the two her father had voiced the concerns.

"This all sounds really amazing, but how do you know these 'robot masters' won't go out of control?"

"For one, I've been testing the cognitive systems and IC chips already and, after... an issue with the prototype... the two finished models are exceeding all expectations for the series, both in emotional interaction with humans and complex cognitive processes."

'But do they have fashion sense?' Disgust snarked.

"Really?" Riley asked. "Can we meet them?"

'Yeah! This is sounding cooler by the second!' Joy agreed.

'Oh... they're the first of their kind?' Sadness realized. 'They must be lonely...'

"They do sound... interesting..." Riley's mom admitted.

'More like terrifying!' Fear interrupted.

'Will you shut up already!' Anger yelled.

"I'd like to see them myself," Riley's dad folded his arms. "I want to know exactly what you're having me pitch to possible customers."

"Actually..." Dr. Light smiled serenely.

'I swear, he's like my natural enemy...' an unwillingly calm Anger grumbled.

"...I believe you've already met."

'Huh?!' Riley thought in unison with all five of her emotions.

Dr. Light took in the incredulous expressions of the Andersen family and made a sweeping gesture towards his two children.

Rock and Roll waved politely.

'I KNEW IT!' Fear broke Riley's mental silence. 'THE ROBOT UPRISING IS UPON US!'

"So why pretend that you're not robots?" Riley finally asked.

"Well..." Rock grinned sheepishly.

"It's kind of petty, but we really like seeing the looks on people's faces when they realize that we're not human," Roll explained. "Or whatever the main population is that Loop."

'Oh man!' Joy laughed in Riley's head. 'The look on Fear's face was priceless !'

'Yeah, it was kind of funny how he was running around like a chicken with his head cut off...' Sadness added.

'Uh... gross analogy, Sadness...' Disgust muttered.

"Sorry about how we laughed at your reaction," Rock apologized. (7)

'It was a perfectly legitimate question!' Fear yelled.

'Doesn't mean it wasn't hilarious, Fear,' Joy giggled.

'And a terrible first impression,' Disgust added. 'Way to go, Fear.'

"Yeah, well," Riley blushed a bit, "saying 'oh, so you are part of the robot uprising?' wasn't my finest moment."

"Maybe not," Roll allowed, "but we've had worse reactions."

"Anyway, you're the visiting looper, any plans?"

"Well..." Riley hedged, still not quite wrapping her mind around the two robots in front of her being the local Anchors (each of them was an Anchor apparently, it was a rare thing or something). For one, she'd never heard of a Rock or Roll in either of the games she'd played. Of course, they could have been in the endings, which would make sense as she'd never beaten either of the games. "I kind of wanted to talk to Mega Man... but since I'm replacing that Dr. Wily character... I guess he doesn't get built?"

Rock and Roll blinked at Riley's statement and exchanged wordless glances.

"You... don't know who either of us is?" Roll asked, getting a shaken head from Riley.

"I only played the '2' and '3' games one Loop when I broke my leg in a hockey accident and never actually beat them."

"Huh..." Rock blinked thoughtfully. "In that case... we won't tell you."

'What?!' Anger fumed in Riley's head.

'Oh, come on! That's just low, even for a boy,' Disgust added.

'They gotta tell us about Mega Man!' Joy insisted. 'He's like, the local superhero, right?'

"Don't get us wrong," Rock hastened to add, "we'll be happy to tell you if you guess, but we don't always get the chance to just 'hang out' with other loopers and be friends before the events that Dr. Wily kicks off become a factor. The last ones were..."

"...Phineas and Ferb actually," Roll supplied after a moment of thought on the matter.

"Oh, circuits, that was a wild summer," Rock grinned. "Those two are my favorite mad scientists after dad."

'We are totally asking about that later,' Joy said.

"You've met Phineas and Ferb?" Riley blinked. "They gave me the welcome speech."

"Which musical number did they use?" Rock asked eagerly.

'I got this!' Joy cheered as the memory came up.

"Number... 5," Riley replied.

"Awesome!" Roll grinned. "We actually helped them write that one!"

'Really?!' Joy exclaimed. 'Sweet!'

'I like her more and more,' Disgust added.

"Huh..." Riley blinked.

"Anyway, what's your Loop like?" Rock asked.

'Wait... they don't know about us either?' Sadness wondered.

'Oop, we're getting memories from long-term!' Fear alerted.

"You... haven't seen the movie?" Riley asked. Aside from Phineas and Ferb, who were often too busy running around with wacky inventions to really take much time for movies or novels in their eternal summer, most of her fused Loops had been with people who had seen the movie about her baseline. She'd watched it herself a few times, which was still a rather odd experience.

"No offense," Roll assured her, "but we don't always have the time for movies."

"And the popular fare in our Loop tends towards sci-fi anyway," Rock shrugged.

'Yeah, that's so not us,' Disgust allowed.

'Oh, oh!' Joy interrupted before Riley got back on track, 'This calls for an idea!'

Riley blinked again as a concept she'd been thinking of since Phineas and Ferb introduced her to her own emotions came to the forefront of her mind and grinned. "Actually, I think I know what I want to do this Loop..."

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"I'm not sure I like leaving Riley with those two..."

"Yeah... robots pretending to be human? It doesn't sit well with me..."

"It'll be okay, Anger, Fear," Mrs. Andersen's Sadness reassured her fellow emotions as she called up a memory from short-term to play the interactions with the two... child robots, apparently... earlier that morning. "They seem to be very polite children after all, and the girl was helpful earlier."

"Yeah," Mrs. Andersen's Disgust chimed in with a sigh of contentment as the scene of the young girl cleaning the Andersen family's new house within an inch of its life played. "Ahhh... There's at least a week's worth of house cleaning we won't have to be doing..."

"Yeah!" her Joy chimed in. "And Riley seems to like them, so they deserve a decent chance."

"I still don't like it."

"Very well then, check in with the husband. This is his new job after all and we should follow his lead."

"Looks like dear has his 'game face on', Sadness. We can't get a clear reading."

"Then we wait for now."

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"Sir," Mr. Andersen's Fear reported as his fellows; particularly Mr. Andersen's Joy, Sadness, and Disgust; gave the current talk with Dr. Light their attention, "I've been through all of the plans for potential situations and there is nothing about child robots wanting to be friends with Riley."

"Are you certain?" his Anger asked.

"Absolutely," his Fear replied, shuffling through various large binders. "We have scenarios on what to do if there's a robot uprising, a robot apocalypse, a robot dance craze resurgence, robot doppelgangers, robot overlords, robots going haywire (I set that volume aside just in case), robot traffic cops, robot crooks, robot detectives, robots replacing honest working men (set that aside too since it's now relevant), murderous roombas, robot costumes that really want you to wear them, drones flying too close for comfort, and so on, but nothing about robot children." (8)

"Our new boss is wrapping up his speech," the man's Joy spoke up.

"Okay, recap for us."

"He wants us to manage the business side, of course, but it seems his real plan is to use robotics to accelerate the world's cultural and technological development by removing most, if not all, of the age-old problems plaguing humanity. His end-game is to essentially develop a brand new sapient race of machines to live and work alongside humanity as we go forth to settle other planets, working together to evolve far beyond what either could alone. The current line he wants to market is basically a stepping stone to achieve that."

Mr. Andersen's Anger and Fear blinked owlishly for a few moments.

The Real World

"I must say, Dr. Light," Mr. Andersen said after several long moments to digest what the man had told him, "when you think big, you don't do it halfway."

"Thank you, Mr. Andersen," the scientist smiled.

"Don't thank me yet," Mr. Andersen replied gruffly. "I get that you have good intentions and just want to help people, but I paid attention in my history classes doctor. I know that for every problem someone like you ever solved, at least two more crawled out of the woodwork later on. Some arguably worse than the original problem. Have you even thought about what kinds of problems a plan like yours might create?"

"Actually, I have," Dr. Light replied with a serene smile. "And I find it interesting that you mention history because that is right where I looked when I wanted to know what humanity might face living alongside a new race with potential values and desires that differ greatly from our own. What I discovered was that this would be nothing that humanity has not already faced in some form or another."

Mr. and Mrs. Andersen both blinked.

"It seems fantastic, but take into account the sheer number of different cultures among humanity itself. Do you even know how many there are on this one tiny planet? I don't, even after extensive research. Barriers of language, values, geography, morality, culture, technology levels, living conditions, sexuality, stereotypes, and more have all conspired to divide us and yet each day those divisions grow just a bit less divisive. We see more and more that those differences make humanity stronger as a whole rather than weaker. So the addition of one more group with differences can only serve to strengthen the whole in the long run, provided we are accepting of them for what they are. Yes, there will always be problems and I suppose a part of me takes comfort in that. For if there were no problems to solve, then I quite fear that I'd find life very empty indeed. Not to mention that I'd be out of a job." (9)

The Andersens exchanged a glance before turning back to him.

"So, what do you say?"

"I say it's a shame you don't run for office because suddenly I'd like to vote for you," Mr. Andersen chuckled. "Alright, doctor. You've got yourself a business manager. Let's see where this crazy road leads."

Rock, Roll, and Riley were gathered around what looked like a red sphere attached to a yellow box with blinking lights. Off to the side was a bundle of cords that looked made to attach to the box.

"Well," Rock mused as he inspected the device, "it could certainly use some maintenance after being in your pocket for so long, but otherwise this Mind Machine is in pretty good condition."

"Oh, good," Riley sighed in relief.

'Yeah, that would be all we needed,' Disgust snarked. 'Having an idea like this and then it being derailed because the thing didn't work anymore.'

"It wouldn't be that big a deal if it wasn't," Rock tapped his head with a smirk. "We both have all of Phineas and Ferb's usual blueprints in memory. Plus a few things they built just for that Loop."

"Oh, maker, the Phineas and Ferb Numbers were awesome!" Roll giggled.

'We are totally getting that story later,' Joy insisted.

"So, do you think my idea will work?" Riley asked.

"It should," Rock nodded, pulling a large circuit out of nowhere, "especially with these. This is an Integrated Circuit chip. Essentially it's what allows robots like us to have personalities."

"At least the ones not looping," Roll clarified.

"Yeah," Rock nodded. "We're... a bit beyond the usual capacity of the IC chips as a result of looping, but even so these things are so complex that, though they're manufactured the same way, each one will effectively produce a unique evolving personality."

'Wow...' Sadness whispered.

"Again, not taking the particulars of the Loops into account," Roll clarified. "Even though they're supposed to produce unique personalities even when installed in identical machines and loaded with identical programs, the robot masters we know still end up with pretty similar personalities. Usually, anyway."

"Add it to a complex enough CPU and it goes from a basic artificial intelligence to an artificially created intelligence."

'AKA, a recipe for disaster!' Fear added.

"What's the difference?" Riley asked.

"It's the difference between mimicking thought patterns and actually possessing them," Rock said. "Not always easy to define, but very, very real."

"The personality and emotions they enable are so complex that the average robot master variant is essentially a missing link between having a Soul and not having one. Our Admin says it's part of why we're able to Loop in the first place." (10)

"So...?"

"So," Rock grinned, "we should be able to essentially make a new Mind Machine that can download these additional loopers who live in your head to an IC chip, which we can then put in a robot body of their very own."

"You'll be touring Arcadia together in no time," Roll smiled.

'I love this plan!' Joy cheered.

'Yeah,' Sadness added quietly, 'we can take long walks in the rain and obsess over the weight of life's problems together...'

'And hugs! Don't forget hugs!'

'Guys, I really think we should take a closer look at this idea before we go through with it...' Fear worried. 'I mean... something's bound to go wrong.' (11)

'Oh, don't be such a spoilsport,' Disgust scoffed. 'Riley, you better be ready for one heck of a shopping spree because I intend to leave you looking fabulous.'

'Heh...' Anger chuckled, 'don't forget to leave some time for a little one-on-one on the ice!'

'Guys!' Fear insisted.

'Oh, lighten up, Fear!' Joy chastised.

'Yeah, think of being able to see a scary movie with Riley,' Sadness prodded. 'I mean, you'll probably embarrass yourself screaming, but that's okay, right?'

'Okay... yes, I'd like that; not the being embarrassed part, the other one; but still...!'

'Fear, do you have one solid reason why we shouldn't do this?' Anger sighed heavily.

'No! I don't! I can't think of a single one! Or find one in my disaster planners! And that should worry you!'

'Oh, give it a rest Fear,' Disgust scoffed. 'I say we go through with it.'

'Yay!'

"It's settled then!" Riley smiled at her new friends.

"What is that you're installing?" Riley asked Rock as the latter fiddled with the generic robot bodies her emotions would inhabit. The technical specs went way over her head, but the gist was that on download, the bodies would be reconfigured to something more closely resembling the personality on the IC chip. Rock and Roll had mentioned something about 'Color Masters', but Riley hadn't asked for clarification. The last time she had, it had resulted in a technospeak lecture that had left her eyes crossed.

Come to think of it, she might regret asking her latest question...

"I call it the Zen Buster," Rock told her. "It's an energy blaster I developed that calms the target's emotional state. Completely harmless and nonlethal, but it could come in handy if by some misfortune there ends up being trouble. I developed it after..." (12)

'Joy, don't fall asleep now!' Fear yelped in Riley's head.

Riley tuned out, smiling and nodding politely as Rock went on about something called 'broforce'.

Joy smiled as she looked out at the Islands of Personality that made up Riley visible from headquarters.

Proud and center was the improved Family Island, powered by a core memory formed from Joy and Sadness, three times as large as almost any of the others, and also supported by Riley's pre-Awake yellow core memory. Also at the back were the reformed versions of the other four personality islands that Riley had possessed prior to that disastrous baseline incident. Hockey Island, reformed in the baseline by a core memory from Joy and Anger; Honesty Island, reformed by a core memory from Joy and Fear; Friendship Island, another Joy and Anger one; and Goofball Island, the only one of the original five that was still pure Joy (if smaller than the others for that fact). Next to Goofball Island was a similarly small island, formed from a purely Sad core memory, its imagery morose and lonely, calling out for a hug. The core memory Sadness had formed that Joy had prevented from reaching the chamber originally.

Then there were the other Islands Riley had formed after the baseline incident in the year following while reforming the original five. There was School Island, formed from a core memory by Sadness and Anger after Riley spent a week on a particular science project only to have it completely ruined by an accident; Vampire Romance Island, that Sadness was rather fond of despite being formed from a core memory of Disgust and Fear when reading a book that Riley had found utterly creepy and disturbing yet could not put down (13); Fashion Island, powered by a core memory of Joy and Disgust that had formed on a shopping trip when some of Riley's friends tried to get her to try on the most ridiculous outfit for laughs; and Communication Island.

"Heh..." Joy chuckled at that one, with its cell phone imagery. "Insert young girl with her phone joke here, folks."

The Loops had formed a few interesting ones as well. Perhaps foremost was Concert Island, formerly Boy Band Island, the original core memory joined by one from a Loop where Riley had learned to play the guitar and had found she was pretty good at it. There were several others that were new in the Loops, not all clearly visible from the windows of Headquarters. One that was clearly visible was Zombie Island, formed by Fear and Anger (much to both of their dismay) during a Loop they'd been the only two of Riley's emotions Awake during a zombie apocalypse. The island featured a large statue representation of Riley holding a hockey stick that Joy thought held a rather brave and heroic pose as it faced off against an oncoming tide of undead.

But the one that was the most impressive was Unity Island, located directly below Headquarters and thus only partially visible from the windows, and extending out to engulf the connections tethering the other islands to Headquarters in a way that turned them from precarious walkways only meant to channel power to and from Headquarters into proper bridges, with railings and everything. The island had been formed during a group hug between all five emotions and Riley herself the first time they met face-to-face. A feat made possible thanks to the genius brothers Phineas and Ferb and their miraculous Mind Machine. The brothers had not only brought Riley inside her head (an action only necessary because all five of her emotions had come to blows over the confusion of the Loops, and unwittingly thrown Riley's mind into chaos as a result), but they'd helpfully explained the Loops, taught them all the art of subspace pockets and pings, and even upgraded their console to allow direct telepathic communication between Riley and her emotions without Riley needing to enter her own mind again. An upgrade that looped with them (or at least Riley) even!

And now... Now they were going to actually attempt the feat in reverse. The emotions leaving Riley's head to join her outside.

It was going to be the best day ever!

What could possibly go wrong? (14)

"Everything set?" Roll asked her brother.

"Five bodies, three female standard, two male standard, ready and waiting. With a few spares just in case," Rock replied as he looked over the alcoves housing the prepared bodies.

"Check!" Riley noted.

"New mind machine showing all systems green."

"Check!"

"Remote override in place and operational?"

"Check!" Riley confirmed as she adjusted the failsafe headband the Light twins had developed for her.

"Five sapient emotional entities ready and waiting...?"

'Ready!'

'Waiting...'

'Let's get this show on the road already!'

'I still think this is a back idea!'

'Oh, put a sock in it already!'

"Check, check, check, check, and check!" Riley smiled, strapping herself into the main chair while Roll adjusted the headgear.

"One young lady hooked up and ready to rock and roll?" Rock grinned.

"You know it!" Riley grinned back.

"Then, let's get started!"

The five emotions in Riley's head stared up at the repurposed memory recall tube, which in short order would put its new functionality to use by moving them to new bodies of their own with which they would be able to interact with their mutual favorite person in the multiverse.

"I still have a really bad feeling about this!" Fear shuffled nervously.

"It'll be fine, Fear," Riley's voice sounded from the control panel. "I mean, you haven't found anything wrong with the plan, right?"

"Not a thing!" Joy chirped for her fellow emotion.

"And not for lack of trying either," Anger grumbled. Searching through Fear's planners for something on this scenario had not left him in the best of moods the first time the emotion had grabbed him for the job. Nor had the subsequent attempts.

"Anger, be nice," Sadness scolded half-heartedly.

"DO ANY OF YOU REALIZE JUST WHAT IT MEANS THAT I CAN'T FIGURE OUT WHAT COULD GO WRONG?!" Fear shouted.

"Not really," Disgust rolled her eyes as the memory recall tube began powering up and smirked as a thought occurred to her.

"I SHOULD BE ABLE TO FIND SOMETHING WRONG WITH ANY–" Fear was cut off as Disgust gave him an unceremonious push towards the recall tube and he was whisked away.

"What?" Disgust asked when the other emotions stared at her. "I just did what we were all thinking."

If he had a mouth, he would have smiled. It had taken a great deal of patience and hacking to arrange the opportunity he was about to have, from arranging the current fused Loop to ensuring that both that fool Hephaestus and that idiot Janus were out of their offices for reasons that would not have them interfering any time soon to subtly steering the thoughts of all involved away from the very obvious consequences of their endeavor. But it was about to pay off big time. And with a personal touch, he would get both revenge on the ones that had humiliated him before as well as a follower all his own. Perhaps the first of many.

Everything was going his way this time. He could almost taste his triumph already. For once, he lamented his lack of a mouth, because this was a prime opportunity to laugh.

Rock and Roll watched as the first of the male robots reconfigured itself into a tall skinny form with a purple color theme, and then proceeded to freak out.

"AAAHHHHHH!" 'Fear Man' screamed as he looked around the room. "I wasn't ready yet! What if there were alligators out here! Or jumpropes!"

"There are no alligators in the lab, moron," a green-armored 'Disgust Woman' scoffed as she finished the transition.

"And we haven't had weaponized jumpropes around here for a few dozen Loops now," Roll added. (15)

"Wait, that's a thing?" the short, squarish, and crimson 'Anger Man' asked in confusion as he stepped out of the alcove.

"It's not even the most ridiculous one we've had," Rock nodded as 'Sadness Woman' began her transformation. "Dr. Wily's a mad scientist after all. How are you feeling, Riley?"

"Pumped!" Riley grinned like a kid on a sugar rush. "I can't wait to finish this!"

"No anxiety?" 'Fear Man' asked? "Trepidation? Discomfort? Annoyance that it's not yet over?"

"None at all!" Riley grinned, not noticing the dawning looks of horror on her emotions faces as the final download commenced. "In fact I– oh..."

"Oh what?" Roll asked in alarm even as 'Joy Woman' began to take form.

"With us out here..." 'Anger Man' began.

"The party is getting started!" 'Joy Woman' declared.

"No, Joy," 'Disgust Woman' trembled. "With us out here, Riley can't feel ..."

'Joy Woman's' happy expression froze and slowly melted into a look of horrified realization. "We have to get back in there," she declared.

"No worries," Rock told them hastily. "All we need to do is hook you back up so we can reverse the process. We'll have this sorted out in a few–"

"Who...?" Riley began speaking in a monotone, like she was certain she was supposed to be terrified, but couldn't pull it off.

Ah, it was so good to be inside such a user-friendly mind for once. Especially with all the troublesome distractions and resistance so thoroughly removed. Arranging a mindscape avatar was generally tricky even for the best of divine operators, but mental purviews were something of a specialty of his.

"Who... who are you?" the emotionless monotone voice of the mind's owner called out, somehow sensing his presence. Somehow able to sense that his presence was wrong, even absent her emotions. "What are you doing here?"

He couldn't speak, of course, but he sent out the mental impressions he had perfected in place of such a crude communication method.

As he walked over to a bin of lightbulbs, and what a droll way to represent ideas that was, he gave her a sense that everything would be fine.

There... There was the idea he knew would be here. The idea that couldn't help but form, especially in a branch like this one. After all, ideas did not form with discrimination about which were bad and which were good. Only their execution cared about that distinction. And with those troublesome emotions gone, there was nothing to stand in the way of this idea.

"You're not supposed to be in here..."

As he walked over to the console and found the place to put ideas, unceremoniously extracting and discarding the one already there, he sent the impression that such details as him not belonging no longer mattered. He was here now and all she had to do was follow his lead, stop resisting, not cause trouble, and give in to the madness.

He inserted the idea forcefully and twisted it in such a way that accepting it would be simple reflex.

"THIS IS THE WORST POSSIBLE DISASTER EVER!" 'Fear Man' screamed as he ran in circles. It was perhaps a testament to the others' agreement that they didn't try to calm him down.

"Hurry!" 'Joy Woman' urged. "If someone's poking around Riley's headquarters while we're not there..."

"We're working as fast as we can," Rock and Roll assured them.

"Who the hell could even get in there and how?!" 'Anger Man' demanded.

"We should have listened to Fear..." 'Sadness Woman' sighed.

"Yeah, we shoul–" 'Disgust Woman' cut off suddenly.

"Guy–?" Roll began to turn around, and caught a bolt of green energy to the chest that blossomed like a massive flower before collapsing in on itself, leaving Roll to drop to her knees and wrap her arms around herself protectively.

"Roll?!" Rock turned to check on his sister, mentally wondering why the energy burst hadn't affected him when a sunshine yellow bolt of energy slammed into him and flared like a flash grenade.

"Oh maker, this is all our fault," Roll muttered to herself, shaking and rocking in place with a self-reproaching grimace twisting her features. "We should have never suggested this. It's all our fault. All our fault."

"Hahahahahahahahahaha!" Rock rolled on the ground, laughing up a storm at a joke only he seemed to get.

"Riley?" 'Joy Woman' asked with a pained smile, her buster arm still pointed at Rock. "Why did you make us do that?"

"That was a very mean thing to do, Riley!" 'Sadness Woman' admonished, staring wide-eyed at the girl still in the chair for the new mind machine. "You should feel ashamed of yourself."

"I should..." Riley agreed listlessly. "But I don't..."

"Riley, stop this right now!" 'Anger Man' demanded, beginning to move in the girl's direction, but finding that his body refused to act against her.

"The override..." 'Fear Man' realized, having gone so far into sheer terror that he was now experiencing a strange sense of calm.

"Yes..." Riley confirmed. "You can take no action I do not command, my Emotion Masters... Now go. Conquer the world in the name of Dr. Riley..."

"Riley!" 'Disgust Woman' yelled back even as the five marched unwillingly towards the exit. "This is a terrible idea!"

"I know..." Riley intoned as the five exited the room, leaving the self-reproaching Roll and the laughing Rock behind. "But I can't seem to stop myself..."

Of course she couldn't stop herself. In the absence of her emotions, she belonged to whomever took command of her ability to feel. In this case, him.

"Why...?" the girl asked again.

Because he could. Because she was his perfect vessel now without those troublesome emotions. And besides, wasn't it so much better without such conflicting views muddling her thoughts? Besides, it was considered polite to help others, and he was so very much in need of her help.

"I don't want to hurt people..."

Oh, but she did. Everyone wanted to hurt others. Some simply hid it better than the rest. Wasn't it so much better now that she didn't have those sweet little lies of polite society holding her back?

"No..."

She really needed to stop lying to herself like that. He knew what was best for her after all. She should trust him. He knew how to get what she really wanted. Because what she wanted was what he wanted.

And the Slenderman got what he wanted. (16)

Riley's emotions were breaking down fast in the current crisis. Riley had, for whatever inexplicable reason, decided to send them to conquer the world. And because she had the emergency override for their systems, they weren't able to do much to stop themselves.

Sadness was weeping up a storm already, Disgust was muttering a never-ending string of insults at the group in general and herself in particular, Anger was so livid that the override was the only thing keeping him from rampaging out of control, Joy had the most fake and pained grin embedded in her face that had ever been seen, and Fear...

Actually, Fear was rather comfortably in his element. Maybe it was just from panicking so much over not being able to think up the problems with this idea before, which had turned out totally justified, or maybe he'd somehow found some sort of zen zone by complete accident. In any case, he was furiously cataloging everything he could and coming up with possible reactions beyond screaming in terror. He was already doing that internally, so there was no need to be redundant.

Riley was having them secure Light Labs. Check. They were to begin automated production on more generic models for... reasons. Check, and disturbing in implications. They were then to head out to the city and cause as much of a panic as possible. Check, and definitely something to try and head off if possible. Too bad he couldn't see how just yet. They apparently had weapons that could induce pure emotional states in their targets. It didn't matter that they didn't seem to deal damage, starting a riot would be small potatoes for them at this point.

"Oh my god!" Fear exclaimed. "I just realized!"

"What?" Sadness sniffed morosely as they all continued on their way.

" We're the robot uprising! Oh, this is bad, this is very bad!"

"What in the world?" a new voice cut in, giving Fear a sinking feeling as he turned to look. Yep, there was Doc Light at the end of the hall.

With Riley's parents.

'WORST! CASE! SCENARIO!'

"Riley... no..." Joy strained as the overriding command to neutralize all opposition caused them all to raise their weapons at the three. "That's mom and dad! You can't!"

"What's...?" Mrs. Andersen wondered wide-eyed as she took in the sight.

"Please!" Joy pleaded.

"Don't make me do this..."

Oh, but she had to. It was all or nothing.

"I shouldn't hurt them..."

They were already hurt, one way or another. Either they became casualties like everyone else, or they watched the unfeeling monster she became. Which was the more merciful option?

"I can't..."

She could. It wasn't like she could feel bad about it, anyway. They were just two more people in her way in the end.

"I won't... Not them..."

Perhaps not now. But in time. There was no stopping things after all.

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"That..." Mrs. Andersen's Joy spoke up after an extended period of stunned silence. "That was another Joy... wasn't it? On the outside?"

"I... think she was crying..." Mrs. Andersen's Sadness had trouble taking her eyes off the visual display, as if the current scenery of hurried retreat (being directed by Mrs. Andersen's Fear, who was the only one even barely functional) would offer insight into the supposedly impossible phenomenon that had been witnessed.

"I... I think they might have been Riley's emotions..." the woman's Disgust offered, having noted the presence of the other four.

"What are they doing outside though?" her Anger wondered, the very concept rendering her incapable of her usual forms of expression.

The Real World

"Doctor, what–" Mr. Andersen tried to ask as the man hurried him and his shell-shocked wife away from the strangely colored robots. The ones that had supposedly been begging Riley not to hurt them.

"No time," Dr. Light hurried them through the lab's halls away from the other robots, though not towards the exit. "We have to find our children and get them out of here!"

The Andersens exchanged a look and picked up the pace as Dr. Light led the way to the lab that their children had taken over for some personal project or other. Fortunately, no one stopped them on the way, but the sight when they arrived caused all three to come up short.

Dr. Light's creations were rocking back and forth on the ground, Roll muttering a string of self-depreciations while Rock shook with uncontrollable laughter. Nearby, strapped into a seat, staring blankly straight ahead, was Riley.

"Riley!" Mrs. Andersen cried out and rushed for her daughter, followed closely by her husband. They didn't know what was wrong, or why, and they didn't care just yet. Their only concern was the safety of their dau–

Bzzzvvvmmm

Mrs. Andersen collided with an energy field a few feet from Riley and fell backwards like she'd run into a wall, into her husband who barely managed to keep them both standing.

"You shouldn't be here..." Riley muttered in a tone that sounded half dead from sheer lack of emotion. "You shouldn't see this..."

"Riley!" Mrs. Andersen yelled, pounding on the energy field, the otherwise invisible force lighting up at each point of impact. "Riley!"

"Rock! Roll! What happened?"

"Em-m-motional Pro-ha-ha-ha-cessing-ee-hee Overloa-ha-ha-ha-ha-d! Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha!" Rock managed to wheeze out between laughs.

"We should have known it would go wrong," Roll added in disgust. "We're such failures."

"Riley! You need to let us through! We can help!" Mr. Andersen yelled past the forcefield keeping him from his daughter.

"I can't..." Riley replied listlessly. "It's the rules... Dr. Riley has to take over the world..."

"No you don't, little monkey!" Mr. Andersen insisted.

"Riley, what's gotten into you?" Mrs. Andersen cried.

"He did... After the others got out of me..."

A sudden chill ran through everyone, so pervasive that the concerned Andersens took a step back from their daughter and the robot duo's emotional breakdowns grew silent in response.

Five pairs of eyes were drawn to a holographic display floating above Riley.

"I... don't recall hooking that up..." Rock ground out as he finally started getting his systems back under control.

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"Is..." the woman's Fear stared at what Mrs. Andersen was seeing. "Is that... a Headquarters?"

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"Are we actually seeing another Headquarters?" Mr. Andersen's Fear finished.

"More than that," the man's Sadness added. "I think it's Riley's ..."

The Real World

"What's...?" Mrs. Andersen began before a face so pale it was sheet-white filled the screen.

Or rather, the distinct lack of a face where there should have been one.

" You ..." Dr. Light whispered in a combination of stark fear, primal anger, and utter loathing.

A sense of dark amusement, the kind found in people who liked to torture small animals for fun, washed over them, as well as a sense of recognition. Whoever, or whatever, this faceless individual was, they were unconcerned with the doctor's ire. And why shouldn't they be? They had already won. Riley was theirs now, fully under their power and beyond anyone's ability to save.

"Stop..." Roll ground out.

No, he would not stop. Not until the world was Riley's, and Riley was his. It had already begun, and there was nothing any of them could do about it. Riley only listened to him now. What he wanted became what she wanted.

"Stop listening to him..."

"What?" Mrs. Andersen shook off the paralyzing foreboding that she'd been feeling at the words. Seeing her do so prompted her husband to do the same.

The pathetic little robots didn't know what they were talking about. How could they? It wasn't like they were human after all. Not like their monster of a daughter who was going to conquer the world and wreak untold havoc on–

"Those thoughts you're getting..." Rock huffed with effort. "That's how he communicates..."

They were supremely annoying little robots. But it was no matter. The lab was already under Riley's control, and by extension, his. Soon enough, none of them would be any problem whatsoever.

"Dr. Light..." Mr. Andersen shook his head furiously as if that would rid himself of the sinister thoughts invading his mind. As he did, he clutched his wife firmly on the shoulder, though he was uncertain if it was for her benefit or his own. "What is...?"

"I'll explain later," the good doctor replied with effort as he helped his children to their feet. "Right now, we need to get out of the lab."

"But Riley–"

"You can't help me if you're all dead..." Riley stated in an emotionless monotone.

...Fine. They could run like the scared little mice they were, but it would make no difference. There was no saving Riley anymore. There would be no saving themselves either. Why, by the end of the day there would be no saving anyone. (17)

"Doctor, what was that... that... thing ?" Mr. Andersen finally asked when the five of them had gotten back to the Andersen household. His mind was a whirl and his emotional state was more unsteady than a land dweller after riding a rollercoaster and stepping onto the deck of a ship in the middle of a storm. (18)

"He is called the Slenderman," Dr. Light informed the Andersens as he went to check on Rock and Roll, only to be waved off.

"We're fine, dad, really," Rock assured the man with a weak grin. "Finish telling them."

"Very well," Dr. Light sighed before turning back to the worried Andersens, Jill having to lean on her husband for support. "The Slenderman is a memetic lifeform, a sapient being manifested from pure thought, and perhaps the most sinister and vile to have ever existed."

"A... a what?" Jill asked in confusion. "And how did he get ahold of our daughter?!"

"Our fault," Roll sighed heavily. "Rock and I didn't take possible intruders into account when we helped Riley develop a way for her emotions to come outside her head and spend time with her."

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"..."

"..."

"..."

"..."

"...A-buh?"

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"I... what?"

"They can... do that?"

"Oh god... that thing was in Riley's headquarters!"

The Real World

"I think he might have been steering our thoughts away from the problems with the plan, like Riley's emotionless state once her emotions were outside her head," Rock theorized, "but I can't prove it. In any case, we were expecting possible problems with the emotions going out of control with their own bodies and gave Riley the ability to override their controls. And now..."

"How do you fight a... 'memetic lifeform'?" Mrs. Andersen asked finally.

"With belief," Roll answered. "They gain strength through belief, but they can also be weakened by it. You just have to believe that they can be beaten more than you believe they can't. It's... sometimes harder than it sounds."

"How... how do we save Riley?"

"First, we have to get her emotions back," Rock replied as he fiddled with the television remote, intending to find the news on any developments. He didn't have long to wait.

"–where an attack by unknown machines has started a massive riot," the voice of BNC's news anchor Chest spoke up from the emergency broadcast the moment the television came on. "We not go live to Reporter Ripot, already on the scene."

"Thank you Chest," the green reporter bot with helicopter blades jutting from his back said as behind him a crowd of angry people were tearing apart storefronts and fighting each other viciously in the streets with no rhyme or reason. Men, women, rich, poor, old, young, all kinds of people were tearing apart the street and each other in a blind rage. "As you can see, the riot behind me broke out after a short squat red robot fired an unknown weapon into the streets and in moments the scene became what you see here. The police have been dispatched, but I'm told that a tall, thin purple robot intercepted them and all units have fled. As things stand, there is no telling when the violence will subside and–"

A roll of thunder was picked up by the camera, and moments later a rain of shining blue washed over Ripot.

"–it's just the most heartbreaking thing ever!" the robot wailed pitifully, tears of lubricant seeping out of his optics as the reporter curled up into a fetal ball and sobbed on live television. From the way the camera managed to maintain a partial view of him, and the sound of more sobbing, it seemed the cameraman had succumbed to the same fate.

"Uh..." Chest looked disturbed as the news feed cut back to him. "W-we're told that Mayor Dorado has called for the support of the armed forces to contain this disaster, but there is as-yet no confirmed response. Citizens of Arcadia are advised to remain indoors and–"

"We have to get out there now," Rock lowered the television volume so he could be better heard.

"What?!" Dr. Light objected. "But your current systems aren't designed for–"

"We don't have time for you to upgrade us, dad," Rock reminded the man. "We have to get their IC chips back, intact , before something happens to them. As it stands, the military might either fail and become part of the riot being started, or they'll succeed..."

"...and possibly destroy one or more of Riley's emotions 'forever'," Roll finished, deciding not to state the likely possibility that any emotion lost would be restored for Riley's next Loop. That wouldn't serve to reassure her parents this Loop, nor would it fix whatever Riley suffered due to a Loop with an incomplete emotional state.

"We'll figure it out, dad," Rock smiled. "We both have the Variable Tool System and the Copy Chips installed. We can subdue them and get their IC chips without damaging them in any way." He intentionally left out that their current versions were much less versatile than the weaponized Variable Weapon System and Copy Chip combo, rendering almost all of their looping Master Weapon Libraries unusable, but they would just have to do. They would have to face this crisis without the benefit of being Mega Man or Mega Woman.

"You... You can save our daughter?"

"Of course," Roll nodded. "Just have faith in us."

The Slenderman would have smiled sinisterly at the cowering mind workers before him were he able. But he wasn't, so he settled for looming menacingly and wordlessly conveying that they'd better have what he'd requested.

Gulping, the mind workers motioned to the rest who'd come along on the Train of Thought and they started bringing in various figures and knicknacks.

"I would die for Riley!" a painfully stereotypical brooding pretty-boy declared as he was shoved in. Followed by a couple more identical to the first, some cloud people, a rainbow-maned unicorn, several odds and ends from the depths of the girl's mind, and a pink... something or other.

He wasted no time and pointed imperiously to the space under the tube that the girl's emotions had left by.

"What if we don't wanna?" one of the things piped up.

Slenderman sent out a very detailed impression of what would happen then, getting a satisfying terrified squeak from the speaker.

"I live for Riley, and I would die for Riley," a chorus replied from the 'boyfriends'. A more pathetic and boring bunch of joes he'd never experienced, he'd wager.

Slenderman informed them that, if they really wanted to help Riley, they would stop being stubborn. The girl was resisting him, and that would only cause her pain in the long run. If she was to be free of pain, she needed to be free of things that caused her pain. Which was all of them. She would be much more sedate, and safe, with her mind emptied of all... distractions...

'Sadness Woman' gazed down at the poor reporters she'd just reduced to tears with her 'Sad Raincloud' weapon. They should have been helping tell people what was wrong with the city and what they should do to stop it, not bawling like helpless children.

'I shouldn't have done that...' she thought despondently. 'They were just doing their job and I...'

She sniffed and let the synthetic tears of her current mechanical body flow freely down her face. It wasn't like anyone could tell with the rain her weapon made. Just another way in which she'd failed today.

'Failing is a part of life...'

Disgust, or 'Disgust Woman' she supposed, despised everything about the situation. She despised her lack of control over what she was doing, she despised how incredibly easy it was for her to turn people against each other–

"Get that gross thing away from me!" a young woman backhanded a small black box out of the hands of a kneeling young man, whose hopeful expression turned confused and hurt as the woman vented the emotions that 'Disgust Woman's' 'Blooming Disgust' weapon had invoked in her, and every other female in its radius, leaving the unaffected males to fruitlessly try and placate them. A short ways away on a playground, a similar scene played out except with only parents affected, leaving the children to wonder just what they'd done wrong.

–and she really despised how much Fear had been right about... everything.

She grimaced as the order came in to fire on another group. Another order she'd love to refuse, but couldn't. She had to obey it. Her body would move whether she resisted or not.

"Fine... Maybe I have to do this, but I'm doing it under protest..."

'Fear Man' trembled as he stalked around a corner, terrified that someone was going to realize what he'd done to the police with his 'Frantic Fright' weapon and arrest him for it. They'd lock him up and throw away the key! Or deport him! Or deport him and lock him up where he'd been deported to! Then he'd never be able to help Riley fix this!

"Deep breath... Focus... Remember what's important..." he told himself as his body continued moving according to Riley's unfathomable directions. He wanted to know why she was doing this... Who was directing her in the absence of her emotions... What it was all about...

He'd been steadily getting less rational as things went on. He was Fear. Thinking up ways things could go wrong was his job. A job he'd failed at spectacularly. Because it wasn't just thinking about how they could go wrong, it was also coming up with ways to make wrong things go less wrong. To anticipate disasters and stop the damage they did. Or at least figure out how to end them before it got too bad.

Well, he'd failed to see this coming, despite the fact that it should have been obvious. Riley without emotions? Of course she'd be emotionless! Of course she'd be ripe for whatever decided to take advantage of her vulnerable state! Of course the whole thing was the worst idea in the history of worst ideas!

And the worstest of all worst parts was that he couldn't figure out a way to stop it! He and the others were every bit as helpless as Riley was right now! Where was Mega Man now?! Or a Mega Woman if it was that kind of Loop?! Where was the hero who stopped robot uprisings?!

Oh, that was right, he didn't exist because Riley had replaced the villain and taken over the lab where the hero was built!

Anger was furious at everything. He was furious with those two kids who'd built the machine that had extracted all of Riley's emotions like this, he was furious with the orders that had sent him out into the city to cause a riot, he was furious with the people who didn't know enough to get the hell out of his way before he turned them into raging berserkers with his 'Angry Flame' weapon, he was especially furious with the fact that his weapon went through walls and affected people indoors, and he was especially furious at himself for not being strong enough to stop any of it.

"WHAT DID I DO TO DESERVE THIS?!"

Joy wanted nothing more in the world right then than to be able to stop smiling. Barring that, she'd accept no longer having the ability to force others to smile by shooting them.

"Hahahahahahaha!"

Wham

"STOP LAUGHING!"

The emotion she represented was supposed to be something wonderful. Something to allow people to revel in the glory and beauty of living! Not...

Biff

"I ca-ha-ha-ha-han't!"

Pow

...not something forced onto others. She'd learned that the hard way with Riley in baseline. Trying to force her to be happy in a situation that didn't call for it, trying to make her be happy to the exclusion of growing into a better person, had nearly ruined everything.

"STOP IT RIGHT NOW BEFORE I MAKE YOU!"

Oof

"I-hi-hi'm try-hi-i-hee-hee-hee-ng!"

She should be horrified at what she was being made to force on others right then. She should be furious, appalled, despondent. She should be anything but happy about this! If ever there was a situation in which there was nothing to be happy about, it was this one! But she was Joy . Without the others to ground her, to temper her, there wasn't anything else she could feel. There was nothing else she could do .

"THAT'S IT! I'M GOING TO MAKE YOU STOP LAUGHING IF IT KI–"

A 'Joyous Sunburst' flared brightly after it hit.

"–i-i-illll-ee-hee-hee-hee!" (19)

Rock had found the police riot squad rather quickly. Avoiding getting run over by them as they fled the city was a fair bit trickier. Especially given that he'd been trying to use the Zen Buster to calm them, and they'd been in such a panic that they'd taken it as a threat.

Rock would have made the design less threatening, but... well, guns weren't designed the way they were to be threatening. They were designed that way because the design worked. That it worked in a way that was understandably threatening was just an inevitable side effect.

However, he'd gotten the police relatively calmed down, and followed reports of the one that had attacked them. Helping a few other panicked citizens had narrowed do–

"LOOK OUT!"

Rock turned and immediately performed a limbo maneuver to duck a bolt of purple energy before tracking its origin to a tall and thin purple robot with wide eyes and a long nose.

"Hey, Fe–"

Rock noticed his opponent's eyes flicking towards something behind him and sidestepped as the purple energy bolt whizzed past the spot he'd been in trailing a stiff breeze.

"–ar Man," Rock held his arms up in a way that was meant to be nonthreatening even as he tracked the bouncing projectile that had missed him twice. "I'm not hear t–"

Rock ducked his head to the side

"–o hurt you, I just want to tal–"

Another sidestep thanks to how the emotion master couldn't help but track his own projectile, not even taking an opportunity to fire anoth–

"–k..."

Rock froze up as the projectile abruptly reversed direction and hit him straight in the stomach, ricocheting into the ground before vanishing. A part of his mind idly noted the new projectile bouncing around and deduced that Fear Man had shot a second expressly to redirect the first.

The rest of it was locked up in terror the likes of which he'd felt only a few times before. Almost all of them at the hands of one man.

"Oh geez... oh geez..." Fear Man was hyperventilating, or at least doing a good impression. "THIS IS NOT HAPPENING!"

'No... it is happening,' Rock trembled, his mind racing with thoughts of how far in over his head he was. How helpless his tool-using body was in the face of something that could bring the city to its knees with a few well-placed shots. And... 'And someone has to stop it...'

Rock took a step forward... and a shot to the chest for his efforts, strengthening the terror he felt. He could practically hear the unhinged laughter that haunted his nightmares.

He took another step forwards, and another shot for his efforts.

"What are you doing?! You need to run! Save yourself!"

Another step. Another shot. Another surge of terror.

"And..."

Step.

"...leave..."

Shot.

"...you..."

Terror.

"...behind?"

Wide eyes widened even further in astonishment, and the next thing Rock knew, Fear Man was folded over his fist at his stomach and the index finger on Rock's other hand was forming a motorized screwdriver.

"...Not a chance..."

"Look, I'd rather not fight you, Disgust!" Roll declared as she blocked another of the emotion master's green energy orbs, letting the flower-shaped burst wash over her without effect and wondering yet again why that was.

"Well, duh!" Disgust Woman scoffed as she fired again. "I don't want to fight you either! But, like, I'm not exactly calling the shots here!"

"I noticed!" Roll dodged a third shot and grimaced as she heard a cat screech behind her. Moments later and about fifty cats were filing out of an alley with their noses in the air like they smelled something bad. "Seriously, what is up with your weapon?"

"Oh, you wanna know?" Disgust Woman drawled mockingly as the dance continued. "The moment one of these connects with you, then every girl in fifty feet becomes unable to stand anything. Like total barf city. Or every robot, or everyone under the age of ten maybe. Possibly every blonde. I don't know, it's, like, stupidly random sometimes."

Roll blinked as Disgust Woman turned her arm cannon on herself. "Let me guess, Riley just realized that the two of us have a lot in common right now."

"Duh," Disgust Woman rolled her eyes. "I'd apologize, but being sorry's kind of not my thing."

Roll made a split decision and decided to rush her opponent as she fired on herself, preparing for the feelings of disgust to return and override her emotional processor again. She was so prepared for it to happen that she nearly missed the opportunity to take a swing at her opponent when it didn't.

A moment later, and Disgust Woman was on the ground with her arms bound behind her while Roll prepared to access and remove her IC chip.

"Whaddya know? Being green is good for something."

'I still can't believe you managed that!' Fear's mental voice buzzed like a post-survival adrenaline rush. 'That should have been pure stark raving paralyzing terror!'

"If that was all it took to stop me, my Loops would be a lot shorter on average," Rock muttered as he looked around what had to be the poorest, dirtiest, most depressing corner of Arcadia.

As well as the spot that the string of sadness-inducing freak weather phenom had led straight to. All around, Rock could hear people weeping and wailing about anything and everything. He'd stopped using the Zen Buster on this group after spotting someone weeping over a broken store window and realizing it was an opportunistic rioter caught up in the emotional chaos and judged that these people could be left to the police and the spare handheld Zen Busters Rock had loaned them. (20)

Up ahead, walking at the most despondently slow pace possible, was the short dumpy Sadness Woman, complete with street-wide raincloud over her head that rained the blue energy that had turned so many people into emotional wrecks.

As Rock watched, the raincloud subsided, and almost immediately, Sadness Woman fired a shimmering blue orb over her head that burst into another with a mild roll of thunder.

"Oh... hi..." the emotion master waved half-heartedly when she saw Rock.

"Um... hi?" Rock greeted back in confusion. "Er... could you maybe turn the cloud off for a bit and come with me? The peo–"

"I know, I know," Sadness woman cut him off with a dejected expression, "it's my fault."

"Uh... no it's not," Rock approached as nonthreateningly as he could, trying to see if he could talk Sadness Woman down.

"Don't come any closer!" Sadness Woman cautioned when Rock was a step away from the rain, only for one of her warning hands to convert to a buster and fire a blue orb past Rock's head that formed a raincloud directly behind him. "I..."

"It's fine, I was kind of expecting that," Rock smiled calmly.

"Oh..."

'I wish I could help,' Fear's helpless shrug was evident in his tone.

"Just remind me of what the cost for losing is," Rock whispered as he stepped forwards into the rain. Fear's response was drowned out as a tidal wave of sorrow crashed down upon Rock. Every failure. Every life lost in Wily's wars. Every life he'd been forced to take to end those wars. Every robot who chose deactivation instead of continued existence. The weight of such things was more crushing than the pressure of the deepest oceans.

"I... I'm sorry..." Sadness Woman wept, but made no move to stop her cloud.

'I... I... um...' Fear's voice sounded frantic. 'I... I think some of those people we passed sounded suicidal?'

Rock felt his systems jolt from that, imagined the crushing sorrow such people's families would feel if they followed through, and stepped forwards. The rain abated. Rock decided to use the opening to fire the Frantic Fright weapon at Sadness Woman. She didn't even try to dodge it, and the bolt ricocheted off into a building wall and then into the air.

Sadness Woman just looked at him apologetically, raising her buster arm straight up. "Sorry. I'm only really afraid of being crushed under the weight of life's problems. And hurting Riley. And that's kind of already happened. And it's sad ."

A moment later, and the sadness-inducing rain had started again, bringing a fresh wave of crushing sorrow with it.

'And... and even if they wouldn't do it themselves, I don't think any of those people are in a shape to run if something dangerous happens... Like a collapsing building... or a stampede of rabid weasels...'

"Why... why are you–" Sadness Woman's question was cut off as she fired a rain-making bolt directly into Rock's chest, only for the tool-using robot to stride straight through the cloud that formed around him, walk up to Sadness Woman, and envelop her in a hug. "How can you stand under the weight of life's problems like that?"

"Because," Rock told her, synthetic tears flowing freely as he used the hug to begin the work to remove the emotion master's IC chip, "I know what it will cost everyone else if I don't."

'–and why are you using a broom of all things? It's like, the uncoolest of uncool weapons,' Disgust continued her rambling as Roll trekked on through the city, studiously ignoring the emotion.

She'd been making gratuitous use of the Zen Buster since arriving at the edge of the riot-heavy part of the city and even with the way her brother designed the pacifying weapon to have crazy energy efficiency, and her resorting to simply knocking a few people unconscious with her broom instead, it was nearly empty. Even with the addition of the police with hand-held Zen Busters of their own, there didn't seem to be any real dent in the number of berserk rioters. She needed to find the sourc–

"–DEMAND A RECOUNT!"

'Ugh, lovely... I always wanted to see Anger with less restraint. Not.'

Roll ignored the comment and shot forwards before a flaming red energy ball impacted where she'd been standing and passed straight through the street without leaving so much as a scorch mark.

The short and stocky Anger Man noticed her charge and turned to fire at her again, only for Roll to pirouette around the shot and into a spinning strike that caught Anger Man under the chin, lifted him up off the ground, and knocked him back twenty feet.

'Whoa.'

"Bringing in the big guns, huh?" Anger Man grinned as he stood back up and took aim. "Alright! Let's do this!"

Roll dodged to the side and let the blast pass her by as she reformed her arm for the 'Blooming Disgust' weapon she'd gotten from Disgust Woman. No way was she going to try blocking that.

"Come on! Bring it!"

"Consider it brought!" Roll yelled back as she fired. The glowing green orb hit Anger Man and burst into a large flower shape.

"Urgh..." Anger Man grunted and clutched his chest where the shot had hit. And then he dropped to the ground and started banging his head against the pavement. "STUPID STUPID STUPID! I HAVEN'T LEARNED ANYTHING!"

'I could have told you that,' Disgust snarked.

Roll ignored the commentary as she raced to her opponent in a panic. "Stop! If you do that you could damage your IC chip! The–"

The moment Roll grabbed Anger Man's shoulder, the short red emotion master gave a howl of incoherent rage and blasted her point blank with his weapon. Roll froze for a moment in surprise before her vision went as red as her opponent.

The blow from her broom this time knocked Anger Man back fifty feet.

'Hey, dial it back a bit, will y–'

"OH SHUT UP!" Roll yelled in fury as she charged Anger Man.

"RRRRAAAAHHHHH!"

The two met head on, trading physical blows with abandon, but Roll's superior reach proved too much of an advantage to overcome and in a few minutes, Anger Man was down. A furious Roll stood over him, broom held high with the bare end poised to impale her opponent as if it were a spear.

'Look, I'm not a big fan of Anger in the first place–'

Roll's servos tensed and adjusted her aim for her opponent's head.

'–but we KIND OF NEED HIM ALIVE!'

And she brought it down with a crunch of metal.

Rock was going to be sick, despite being physically incapable of it. He'd honestly left Joy Woman for last on the assumption that her power would be the least destructive. Oh how wrong that was.

'Why would someone jump off a building like that?!' Fear wondered in total incomprehension as Rock caught the person just barely in time to make the fall non-lethal.

"Whee!" the young man cheered before Rock set him down. "I'm going to go fly some mo–"

Rock watched in sympathetic horror as the Zen Buster removed the man's good cheer and the reality of what he'd just done hit. The man then proceeded to be sick all over the sidewalk. Rock patted the man on his back and proceeded on his way. It was hardly the worst thing that someone had tried under Joy Woman's influence. Rock had stopped counting the number of car wrecks he'd passed, including several emergency vehicles. Not to mention the vast array of people laughing while trying to walk with severe injuries. His first aid kit array had gotten more use this afternoon than in the last twelve Loops combined. So far, the prize for most disturbing sight had been a pair of paramedics street-surfing on a rolling stretcher, with the injured man strapped to it laughing the whole way until Rock brought them to their senses.

'I feel sorry for Joy...' Sadness sighed. 'She hates hurting people.'

Rock could relate, but at the rate he was going, he doubted his ability to catch up with her. Unless she was waiting around in one spot, all the time he was using to help her victims would–

"Let's be happy people!" came from a short ways away, followed by a barely visible flash of yellow light. Rock immediately ran towards it.

A quick check, a shot from the Zen Buster, and Joy Woman's latest victim was wasting no time sticking around.

"Yay! More friends to play with!"

Rock turned to Joy Woman and immediately did a double-take. The yellow emotion master looked... unhinged. Her face was frozen in a wide smile, but a smile that gave off the feel of its owner wanting to make any other expression, but unable to remember how.

'Look out!'

Rock's inattention was enough for Joy Woman to get off a shot, but he still managed to backstep from it enough to not take a direct hit. But not enough to clear the blast radius as the yellow energy shot burst into a blinding flare of light.

"He..." Rock tried to fight the feeling of mirth that infused him, but it was hard. Especially since this kind of feeling was something he actively sought many other times. "Hehehehe..."

"See? Isn't it better to be happy?" Joy Woman asked like she was desperately seeking someone to disagree with her. "You can forget everything when you're happy! Like how dangerous stuff is! Or that the other guy was just trying to kill you! Or that you're covered in sewage! Or that your house just burned down! None of it matters when you're happy !"

'Joy...' Fear gulped. 'Joy's gone psycho...'

"Hey, I know!" Joy Woman changed topics suddenly. "Let's play a game!"

"Okay!" Rock agreed with a grin before he could really think about it. He liked games! Games were fun!

'You need to fight her!' Sadness reminded him.

"How about boxing?" Rock smiled, what was left of his reason latching onto the advice and taking a stance.

"Okay!" Joy Woman agreed and mirrored him.

'Hey, thanks for aiming for the neck at the last minute,' Anger told Roll after she'd finished storing his IC chip in her arm.

'Yeah, you only scared a decade off my life there,' Disgust added.

'Sounds like an improvement to me.'

"You're welcome," Roll muttered as the two emotions began bickering back and forth.

Rock regulated his breathing as his emotional processor recalibrated. He wasn't entirely sure which of them had suggested shooting themselves halfway through the boxing match, but opportunity to self-target with the Zen Buster had snapped him out of it.

'Okay,' Fear began , 'now we just need to–'

"Aww... you're not happy anymore," Joy Woman smiled. "Don't worry, I can fix that!"

Rock dove hard to the side to clear the blast area, took aim with the Frantic Fright, and fired.

"Nice shot!" Joy cheered upon being struck, the shot bouncing off into a nearby alley. "But I'm afraid it doesn't work!"

'...Does she actually mean that literally?' Fear wondered as a dog promptly ran out of the alley being chased by a cat.

'She needs to be sad,' Sadness realized.

"Come on!" Joy Woman declared as she opened fire repeatedly, Rock dodging the multitude of shots with wide dives to clear the blast radius. "Be happy! Like me! I've never been happier! And that's saying something! Joy is all! It's supreme! The Alpha! The Omega! Several other letters! It's–"

Rock stopped dodging to fire back with the Sad Raincloud, the sadness inducing weapon bursting over Joy Woman's head even as Rock took her weapon to the chest.

"–It's not like it helps you survive... like Fear..." Joy Woman's manic grin slipped as pure sorrow rained down on her.

Rock snorted in laughter despite himself, and forced his feet to take steps towards the rain. Because this wasn't funny.

"Or be healthy, like Disgust... Or get what you want, like Anger... Or connect with others, like Sadness."

Joy Woman's expression fell further and further as Rock made it to the raincloud, and his false humor washed away in the downpour of sadness.

Joy Woman's buster raised to fire on the raincloud above her, only to let out such a pathetic shot that it could have been mistaken for a drunk firefly.

"All Joy does is help you be happy," Joy Woman sniffed morosely, letting her arm fall to her side. "It just... makes more of itself. It's kind of stupid, really... and redundant... It's like... There's no point to it at all!"

'Joy...'

"Everyone always calls the other four the 'negative' emotions, like there's something wrong with them. Like they're bad or something. And I bought into it. Because that made me the 'good' emotion, right? But... but all the others have super-important things that make them super-good. Fear cuts down on injuries, Disgust looks out for your health, Anger seeks fairness and points out problems, and Sadness is like the most important of all because Sadness connects you with others. What does Joy do? Why, Joy leaps straight into danger without looking, dives headfirst into filth without a care, lets problems pile up until they come crashing down, and couldn't care less about anyone other than herself. About anything other than being in charge because she thinks she's the best when she's really the worst."

"That's not true, Joy helps us appreciate the good times," Rock told her, enveloping the emotion master in a hug.

"Yeah, Joy helps you be happy... What did being happy ever get anyone but more happy? More happy and a destroyed life. Because that's what I do. I destroy lives. I nearly destroyed Riley's life trying to make her happy. Because none of the others are bad emotions. I'm the bad emotion."

'...'

Rock didn't know how to respond to that. He really didn't. Not right then. So he just went to work removing Joy Woman's IC chip.

The mind workers shivered as they patrolled the shelves of long-term memory. That... thing... in headquarters wasn't supposed to be there. But it was. And it was making them do things for it. Things that would hurt Riley. Things that they couldn't find the courage to not do.

Things like stripping everything out of Imagination Land and Dream Studios to be sent... outside.

Things like breaking into the subconscious so the same could be done for everything locked up in there.

Many mind workers were still working on those...

And now... now they were supposed to send every single memory down into the dump to be forgotten. Every. Last. One.

"Okay..." the head mind worker had told them. "Start... Start with the faded memories... The ones most degraded already... Priority on anything unimportant... Work your way up to redundant memories and cloudy ones..."

"Um..." someone had thought to question the complex orders. "Didn't... he ... say to... to... get rid of all of them?"

"Yes... it did... But... we still do it our way... Riley still needs a lot of those memories for as long as we can let her have them... So... we do this by the book... Slowly... Take... Take as much time as you can get away with..."

"Joy had something of a breakdown," was one of the first things out of Rock's mouth when he and Roll met back up.

'Oh, there's a shocker,' Disgust sounded in Roll's head.

'Yeah, Psycho Joy all over again,' Anger agreed.

"Disgust and Anger don't seem very sympathetic," Roll sighed.

'More like vindicated,' Disgust insisted.

'Or vindictive,' Anger growled.

'Duh, doofus, they're like the same word or something,' Disgust's sneer was evident. 'Gaw, look in a dictionary sometime.'

"You want to put them all back together before I try to strangle these two?" Roll asked.

"I think Sadness wants them to apologize first," Rock told her.

'Yeah, that's gonna happen.'

Rock and Roll had thought they were prepared for whatever defenses had been added to Light Labs since that morning. They were nothing of the sort.

The sight of what seemed like bits and pieces of a fairy castle, a cookie (or possibly graham cracker) structure, clouds, and a card house stuck together randomly with a massive roller coaster like Phineas and Ferb liked to build threading in and out of almost every conceivable opening brought them to a stunned halt even before the fact that it was several times the size of the Lab they'd left was taken into account. It was so far removed from their expectations that the fact that there was a few hundred biker robots; complete with appropriate attire, helmets, and motorcycles; between them and the lab took almost a minute to register.

'Uh-oh...' Joy gulped at the sight of hundreds of robot bikers between the Light twins and Light Labs.

'What?' Sadness asked.

'You guys know that imaginary boyfriend-making machine you saw in the movie?' Joy supplied hesitantly. 'The one I set for a really big 'all 9s' number of copies for a hare-brained scheme to get back to headquarters in baseline?'

'Yeah...?' Fear replied with palpable nervousness.

'I... may have forgotten to turn it off first...'

'Oh dear...'

"Was the guy's name Joe?" Rock asked out loud. (21)

'I dunno... maybe?'

As one, the hundreds of mechanical no-longer-imaginary boyfriends possibly named 'Joe' turned to glare at Rock and Roll as they revved their bikes.

"FOR RILEY!"

Mrs. Andersen bolted for the door when the bell rang, hoping against hope that whoever it was had come with news about Riley. Of course, when she opened the door, she saw something very, very different.

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"...oh god, is that what I think it is?"

"Fear... call for help," Mrs. Andersen's Sadness ordered shakily.

"Y-yes..."

The Real World

"SHRIIEEK!"

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"That's the wife!" Mr. Andersen's Fear recognized the sound immediately.

"Our damsel is in distress!" his Sadness declared.

"We're coming honey!" the man's Anger took action.

The Real World

"Jill!" Mr. Andersen bolted towards the noise immediately, Dr. Light right behind him, only to draw up short when his wife dove behind him in fright and he saw just what he was up against.

They looked like the shambling dead straight out of a zombie apocalypse film, save for the fact that the decaying skin looked like tattered latex and the flesh and bones that were exposed were clearly metal. They were zombie robots. There were also quite a few of them forcing their way into the entry hall through the open front door.

"Who are you?!" Mr. Andersen demanded. "What do you want?!"

"I can tell you that," a biker boy said as he pushed his way to the front of the zombie robot horde. "Riley's esteemed mother and father, we are here to take you to your daughter."

"Taaake yoouu tooo Riiilleeyy..." several zombots groaned in agreement.

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"What?"

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"What?"

The Real World

Mr. Andersen came up short. That wasn't what he'd been expecting.

"Riley?" his wife came out from behind him. "Where is she? What have you done to our daughter!"

"Not a hair has been harmed on her gorgeous head, but–"

"And just what does that me–"

"Ahem," Dr. Light interrupted, drawing the Andersens' attention and pointedly drawing his gaze across the superior numbers of the zombie robots behind the biker boy. "Far be it from me to stop a fellow parent's protective instincts, but it occurs to me that our best option right now is to go quietly."

The Andersens exchanged glances and wordlessly admitted that the man had a point.

"Very well..."

"An excellent choice, sir," the biker And I swear to you, on my life, no harm shall come to you on your journey. I would die before I let that happen. I do this for Riley. Everything I do is for Riley."

"Er... okay?" Mr. Andersen replied in confusion before allowing the biker boy to lead them and the zombots out of the house.

"Is... is that a giant vacuum cleaner?" Dr. Light wondered as the robo-zombies marched all three adults out of the house towards their transportation.

"It... it looks like the one my mom uses..." Mrs. Andersen blinked in astonishment.

'We! Did! Not! Die!' Fear cheered as Rock and Roll touched down in front of a large gate. 'WOO!'

'I have to say, I think that's the first time I've ever seen someone hotwire a unicorn,' Joy added.

"We've had some experience with equine-model circuitry," Rock replied.

"There's an understatement," Roll agreed. "Too bad Rainbow Unicorn didn't make it past the Hockey Z9 rink."

She paused and pinched her nose.

" Yes , the lab is bigger on the inside than the outside right now. Stop arguing about it!"

"You want to hand them over to me for safekeeping?"

'I don't want them to be mean to Joy...' Sadness protested.

'Sadness, I told you, it's fine! I'm good now that I'm around you guys again, and I'll be better when we get the whole team back! We all will! Anger and Disgust included!'

"You have no idea," Roll sighed. "Let's talk about it again after we deal with whatever's behind this door."

'Wait, what?' Fear started. 'Shouldn't Riley be behind that door? '

"Not at all," Roll spoke up, answering Disgust and Anger before Rock could say anything.

"Yeah, we're probably only halfway through right now," Rock agreed, running a hand through his hair, "if that."

'Then shouldn't we try and find a safer way then? Something that doesn't involve possible pain and death?'

Rock and Roll ignored their mental passengers as they stepped up to the gate, waited for it to ratchet upwards, and walked through.

The ground beneath them started moving forwards, towards a branching hallway.

'I do. Not. Like this!' Fear wailed.

"Do you want to take the left or the right?" Roll asked.

"How about–" Rock's reply was cut off as a wall suddenly slammed down between him and his sister, cutting them off from each other.

'Uh-oh...'

'I knew it!'

'DAMNIT!'

'Well, doesn't that just figure?'

Roll stared at the wall that had sprung up between her and her brother while the moving floor under her feet carried her down the right passageway and curved away from her brother.

'We're trapped over here! Trapped!' Anger railed. 'THIS IS ALL YOUR FAULT!'

'It really is, you know. If you'd just stayed together, none of this wo–'

"Will you just SHUT UP ALREADY?!" Roll yelled. "We are doing everything we can to save Riley and you ARE NOT HELPING!"

'If you're waiting for an apology, you'd best get over it,' Anger huffed.

'Yeah, that's Sadness's department and she's not here,' Disgust sniffed. 'We're what you're stuck with.'

"Right now you two are as bad as any psychosis Joy's ever possessed," Roll snarled as a new gate came into view.

'Hey!' Anger shot back. 'That's hitting belo–'

"I swear, the moment Rock and I meet up again, I am forking you two o..." Roll's fury trailed off as something registered on her auditory sensors.

'You're going to what, exactly?' Disgust demanded.

"Quiet," Roll told them and turned up sensitivity. "Is that... 'Happy Birthday'?"

'Sounds more like a funeral dirge to me,' Disgust huffed.

"No," Roll insisted, despite agreeing that the slow pace was much more somber, and creepier, than 'Happy Birthday' had any right to be. "It's definitely–"

The gate ratcheted up and Roll's words died in her throat as she saw the huge room decked out for a birthday party. With tattered and worn decorations, dim lighting, oversized furniture, and a giant cake that her olfactory sensors told her had probably gone stale a long time ago. Where the hell had all this come from?

'Ew...' Disgust sniffed at the sight.

Roll took a few steps into the room and the gate slammed behind her, echoing loudly.

Then another impact echoed around the room, and another, and another, and another. The impacts getting closer, like giant footsteps.

And then a massive three-story clown appeared out of the shadows, grinning widely at her and hefting an equally oversized mallet.

"WHO'S THE BIRTHDAY GIRL?!"

Rock stared around the twisted fantastical room, listening to a slow, warped song play that he didn't recognize.

Doo...

A sound like a voice drifted up from a far corner and Rock advanced cautiously to investigate.

doo...doo...

'I vote we find the exit and get the heck out of here as fast as possible,' Fear declared. 'Who's with me?'

doo...doo...

"I don't wanna..." a voice registered to Rock's auditory sensors, coming from what looked like a large pink blob with a brown cloth draped over it stuck in the corner.

doo...doo...

'I know that tune...' Joy puzzled. 'I swear I do.'

'Me too...' Sadness agreed.

ding... dong...

"Don't... don't make me..."

ding... dong...

"Is someone there?" Rock called out, and the pink blob shuddered, hunching in on itself. To Rock's eyes, the blob looked kind of like...

cotton candy?

'Oh god... it's...'

'It's Bing-Bong...'

"Who's Bing-Bong?" Rock asked.

"You... you know who I am?" the mystery voice asked, the blob of cotton candy stiffening.

'He's... he's Riley's imaginary friend...' Sadness explained.

'Part cotton candy, part cat, part elephant, and part dolphin,' Joy added as the blob turned around and Rock got a good look at the front of it.

"And apparently, part Devil Series," (22) he added in a whisper. He was going to have a talk with his dad later in the Loop about securing certain experiments better.

'And usually a lot smaller!' Fear added.

The creature looked like a Pink Devil made of cotton candy, with striped legs, a fluffed cat tail that popped out from under him as he stood up, a brown hobo-coat and gloves (complete with rainbow flower on the lapel), and a large elephant trunk under its one huge sad eye (sitting in the middle of what would normally be a torso) that hung over a huge frowning mouth.

"Oh no..." Bing Bong trembled upon seeing Rock, despite towering over him like most Devil Series robots. "You... you gotta get out of here little boy... Before I start crying... I... I don't... I don't wanna cry..."

'But... Bing Bong just cries candy...' Joy wondered at the state of the giant imaginary friend.

"A-huh..." the giant Bing-Bong Devil choked back a sob, and Rock's eyes widened as he correlated 'crying candy' and his opponent's aversion to doing so with what the optic control unit that was a Devil Core usually fired from its 'eye' and started moving.

"A-hwaaah!"

Rock dove and rolled as a giant peppermint impacted where he'd just been standing with the force of a cannonball.

The Mind Reader was such a fascinating paper. It was constantly updating with news about Riley's life and events in it, declaring the 'monster' that had taken control of her mind world to be an abomination beyond compare. A cruel and unusual beast in his torment of the young girl, making her watch the news reports of the horrors her unleashed emotions had wreaked on the city. A foul and unfeeling villain who would dare to strip such a lovely girl of her feelings and thoughts. Declared in a mind-wide popularity poll to have a -152% approval rating. (23)

Honestly, he hadn't thought it would be that high (24). He'd have to step things up a bit. Crush some of that passive resistance that the girl was putting up against him. As amusing as the little mind-paper was, it should have been full of self-recriminations at this point.

Slenderman idly caressed one of the glowing memory orbs set into the tiered display he was casually leaning against and allowed himself a sense of satisfaction as one of those islands in the distance rumbled ominously as his touch left a streak of black on the glowing memory. The black streak was swiftly swallowed up by the orb's light the moment he stopped touching it, but it no longer frustrated him. He knew what he needed to clear that particular hurdle. He just had to wa–

"TripleDent Gum, will make you smile!"

Slenderman's faceless head looked up in puzzlement at the soft yellow memory orb that had just dropped into the middle of the darkened, drab Headquarters unbidden and begun playing.

"TripleDent Gum, it lasts a while!"

He stood up, dropping the Mind Reader absently and stepping on it to approach what was now a much more interesting sight.

"TripleDent Gum, will help you mister, To punch bad breath right in the kisser!"

How...

"TripleDent Gum!"

How adorable it was! (25)

The memory replayed as the Slenderman watched it in fascination.

Oh, but he knew why something like this had been sent unbidden. Those lazy little mind workers thought it would get under his skin and frustrate him. Get him to make a mistake. And if he'd been any 'ordinary' intruder, perhaps it would have. Such a jingle was an insidious little mind worm, boring its way into the consciousness of the listener and never leaving. Never losing strength. Always waiting to pop back into the front of the host mind and gorge itself anew.

Much like himself. Just... rather lower on the evolutionary scale.

Slenderman reached up as the jingle repeated again and caressed a single finger across the orb like a person might scratch an adorable little kitten. Blackness spread from where his finger touched the orb, growing rapidly as the chipper song lost all tone and became flat and dead even as it continued playing.

As the last of the yellow light left it, Slenderman removed the orb from the memory player and held it up, tracing an adoring finger over the sphere.

It shuddered and split, uncoiling into a long, writhing, black worm. Slenderman allowed the newborn creature to crawl up his arm and across his thin shoulders, turning his faceless head towards the beastie.

The worm's front section split three ways, revealing rows of jagged teeth along its fleshy interior as its song emanated from the void-like depths of its throat.

"TripleDent Gum... will make you smile..."

Yes, it was very, very adorable. The perfect little pet for what he intended. (26)

"HAPPY–"

Roll jumped backwards as the giant mallet slammed down where she'd been standing.

THOOM!

"–BIRTHDAY!"

'Jangles...' Anger muttered. 'Why the hell did it have to be Jangles?'

'Seriously, he should have stayed in Riley's subconscious with the rest of the riff-raff,' Disgust sniffed.

Roll focused on avoiding the giant grinning clown and his hammer and tried not to think of how that grin reminded her of the Loops where Clown Man had a creepy crush on her.

'So, are you going to do anything other than dodge, or what?' Disgust added.

"Working on it!" Roll growled as she looked the towering clown over and assessed her options.

"COME BACK BIRTHDAY GIRL!"

Roll thought about a video game she'd been playing in a recent Loop and came to a decision. She watched for another blow, dashed away from the impact, and immediately reversed directions to jump onto the head of the massive mallet and grab on.

'WHAT THE HELL DO YOU THINK THIS WILL ACCOMPLISH?!' Anger fumed as the mallet rose up, carrying her with it.

"I'm thinking it's time for a little 'Shadow of the Colossus' action," (27) Roll whispered, preparing to jump while Jangles looked for her in confusion.

"Sorry!" Bing-Bong Devil yelled as Rock narrowly slid under another candy shot.

"Not your fault!" Rock called back as he grabbed his opponent's long elephantine nose, used it to swing up within range, and kicked the massive optic that was the Devil Core.

"OW!"

"Sorry!" Rock apologized as he flipped in the air, tossed by the reflexive action, and landed on his feet.

'Is it just me, or is this fight extremely surreal?' Fear wondered.

'I think it's nice they're apologizing to each other,' Sadness retorted.

"It's fine!" Bing-Bong Devil insisted as he held a hand to his eye. "You're doing this to save R-Ril–a-hwaaah!"

Boom

"Sorry!"

"I'm fine!" Rock assured him, grabbing a piece of the floor. "Sorry in advance!"

"About wh–OW!" the imaginary friend-turned-Devil Series yelped as the piece of the floor hit him square in the eye. "Why is it always the eye, anyway?! A-hwaaah!"

Boom

"Sorry!"

"No worries!" Rock ran through his tool options and settled on a taser for his next attempt. "And sorry about the eye, it's the only part that can actually be hurt!"

"Oh, oka–hwaaah!"

Boom

"Sorr–hey, what are you–?" Bing-Bong Devil cut off as his eye tracked Rock running up his trunk, one of his arms sparking at the end.

Ker-ZAP!

"GAAAAHHH! MY EYE!" Bing-Bong Devil reeled, before curling up into a ball and holding his hands over his optic.

"Sorry!" Rock apologized as he landed, bracing himself for the next round, only to blink in puzzlement as his cotton-candy opponent didn't rise.

"Ow-ow-ow-ow-ow..."

'Poor Bing-Bong...'

"You okay?" Rock asked with concern.

"I'll be fine," Bing-Bong Devil answered, waving off Rock's concern. "Nice shot though... Really wish we didn't have to fight like this."

"Me too," Rock agreed, waiting for his massive opponent to stand back up. It didn't happen.

"I mean, I never liked the idea of fighting," the reluctant Devil Series continued. "Always seemed like something only mean bullies did. I only wanted to play with Riley... You know we built a rocket to go to the moon?"

'I don't even know what's going on anymore,' a totally confused Fear stated.

"How was it?"

"Oh, we didn't go," the cat-elephant-dolphin sighed. "Riley got a for-real friend before we could and was too busy with her for imaginary friends like me. But that's not important. You need to save Riley, which means you need to beat me. I'll try and give you a good shot if I can."

"I'd rather not if we don't have to. I mean, we haven't been fighting since that last shot."

"We haven't?" Bing-Bong devil sounded surprised as he sat up straight. "Hey! We haven't! I'm free! I'm free!"

Rock laughed as the giant pink imaginary friend got up and danced around happily. "I must have shorted out your override circuit!"

"I have no idea what that is!" Bing-Bong Devil yelled happily as he swept the comparatively tiny Rock into a hug. "Ha-ha-ha!"

'This is awesome!' Joy cheered. 'Now we can all save Riley together!'

"Oh, hey!" Bing-Bong Devil abruptly halted the hug. "We need to get you to Riley so you can give her emotions back!"

"We need to get my sister Roll first," Rock pointed towards the wall in the direction his sister had been ferried when they were forcibly separated. "I only have three and Riley needs all five."

"Oh... Oh dear... That's where Jangles is..."

'Ack!'

"Who?"

'A clown that performed at Riley's cousin's birthday when she was a toddler and scared her half to death,' Sadness informed him. 'He got stuck in her subconscious with all her other worst fears.'

'Like those zombies from that one Loop,' Fear added. 'Oh geez! Does that mean there's a robot zombie apocalypse going on now?!'

"I... I'm not sure I can get through that wall, actually... I mean... I have to cry those candy shots and I'm afraid I'm not in the mood right now..."

"It'll be fine," Rock told the larger being as he jumped up to perch on top of his former opponent's head. "Just... just think about what Slenderman is going to do to Riley if we don't."

"Is he the really scary thin guy?"

"Yes," Rock nodded. "He's already taken her emotions away, and made her do things she'd never ever want to do otherwise. He's made her hurt a lot of people she'd never want to hurt. He wants to make her a bad person. Someone who bullies and hurts others because she thinks she doesn't have any friends. And to make things worse, he's taken away all of the friends that could help her, like you. He wants to make her sad, lonely, and empty. He wants to make her into a person that can't ever have adventures, like going to the moon. Because she won't be able to enjoy them anymore. He wants to make it so that she can't laugh, cry, get angry, disgusted, or afraid. He wants to make her into a girl who can't love, because she's can't even remember what love is."

"Oh... sniffle Th-that did it..." Bing-Bong Devil blubbered in the way that always preceded a torrent of waterworks. "G-get ready... Th*sniff*this is gonna be a big o-o...WHAA–BOOM–HAA–BOOM–HAA–BOOM–HAA–BOOM–HAA–BOOM–HAA–BOOM–HAA–BOOM–HAA–BOOM–HAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAH!–BOOMBOOMBOOMBOOMBOOMBOOMBOOM–"

The good news: Roll had finally managed to take out one of Jangles's eyes.

The bad news: The pain reflex had launched her towards the towering table with the massive cake on it, leaving her a sitting duck for a retaliatory strike.

"BAD BIRTHDAY GIRL!"

At least, if she didn't jump down at the last moment.

SPLUT

'HAH! TAKE THAT YOU OVERGROWN PIECE OF–' Anger yelled as Jangles' strike flipped the massive stale cake straight into his own face.

'Not bad,' Disgust snorted in roundabout approval as Jangles shook the cake off and began laughing as he hefted his mallet again. 'Though I think you just made him angry.'

"WHO WANTS PRE–"

The far wall exploded with a sound of rapid cannon fire combined with rampant weeping and Jangles went down to a barrage of what looked like giant butterscotch.

Roll turned to the source of the barrage and saw her brother riding atop the strangest variation of the Devil Series yet.

'WHAT THE HELL IS THAT CLOD BING-BONG DOING HERE?!'

'The whole one eye thing so does not work for him.'

"Hey–sniff–are you Roll?" the pink Devil asked as it bounded up, and Roll nodded in return as her brother jumped down and gave her a relieved hug. "Nice rocket you've got there."

Roll blinked and watched as the pink Devil bent down to peer intently at her broom, before shaking her head and accessing her arm panel where Anger and Disgust's IC chips were stored. Removing them swiftly, but carefully, she thrust them at Rock. "Here, before something else happens. You focus on getting them to Riley and I'll focus on making sure nothing stops you."

Rock just nodded, opened a panel in his own arm, and slotted Anger and Disgust in next to the other three. As he did, the gate leading out of the room opened up, displaying a long hallway filled with molten lava, in which floated numerous pieces of furniture that were miraculously not burning.

"Huh... your rocket's out of song power," the pink Devil–had Anger called him Bing-Bong?–declared, still looking at Roll's broom.

"Uh, it's a broom..." (28)

"Well, yeah," Bing-Bong shrugged, "those make the best rockets. They store song power really well. I can fix yours real quick if you want. I inhaled a bunch of magic song powder earlier and I think some's still in my nose."

"Really," Roll waved off the offer, "that's fi–"

"A-CHOO!"

A sudden spray of pink glittering dust of unknown origin and composition blasted out of Bing-Bong's trunk all over Roll, her broom, and Rock.

"...I am really having a talk with dad later about securing experiments better," Rock sighed.

"There!" Bing-Bing smiled. "Now your rocket will work again when you sing the right song. Like this: ahem Who's your friend to likes to play?"

COPY CHIP ACTIVATED.

SCANNING UNKNOWN ENERGY.

ATTEMPTING TO INTEGRATE.

Rock and Roll both stared incredulously as the bristles of Roll's broom ignited with prismatic rainbow light and she had to tighten her grip against the sudden thrust it had.

"Bi– THOOM

Bing-Bong was suddenly not there due to being hit from the side by Jangles's giant mallet.

"HERE'S ONE FOR THE BIRTHDAY GIRL!" Jangles raised his mallet high as Rock and Roll tensed below.

"NO!" Bing-Bong yelled, having just recovered enough for a sloppy diving tackle on the giant clown.

"HEY!" Jangles protested as he stumbled.

"A-hwaa–BOOM–haa–BOOM–haaah!–BOOM!" Bing-Bong cried several candy shots, knocking Jangles over. "Go! Save Riley! I'll take care of him!"

"No, we're not leaving you behind!" Rock yelled frantically as Jangles got back up and hefted his mallet.

"It's fine! I'm just an imaginary friend after all–unh.." Bing-Bong grunted as he caught Jangles's mallet in both hands and held it fast. "Riley doesn't need me anymore! She's got real friends now, like you!"

"Imaginary or not, you're still her friend though!" Rock pleaded, Roll having to hold him back from rushing into danger.

"Of course I am!" Bing-Bong was pushed back as Jangles pressed his larger size, being at least a whole head taller. "I'll always be her friend! This... this is what friends do! I help you, so you can help Riley!"

"But..." Rock tried to protest, only to be interrupted as Bing-Bong shoved back hard enough to knock Jangles off his feet.

"Riley's emotions remember the song, right?" Bing-Bong asked, getting a nod from Rock. "Then go. Save Riley."

Jangles got to his feet, now completely focused on Bing-Bong and the two clashed once more.

"Rock," Roll gripped her brother's shoulder firmly, prompting a teary nod of resignation. She extended her broom shaft a bit (useful for those hard-to-reach corners) to better accommodate both of them before climbing on in front.

"I'll sing," Rock offered. "You put those Quidditch skills to the test."

"Got it."

"Who's your friend who likes to play? Bing-Bong Bing-Bong–"

The broom's bristles ignited with rainbow light once more and in moments, both Rock and Roll were shooting out the open door and down the hall, well over the deadly lava, leaving a rainbow trail behind them as they went.

"Heh..." Bing-Bong chuckled as he struggled against Jangles, "maybe you'll take her to the moon for me too..." (29)

"My word..." Dr. Light gasped as he and the Andersens were marched out of the... vacuum cleaner... "what has happened with the lab?"

The Andersens were staring for a different reason. They could readily recognize elements in the structure that vaguely resembled some of their daughter's old crayon drawings from when she was younger. Forget the lab, what had happened with Riley?

"Apologies, Riley's parents," the biker boy stood at attention, seemingly heedless of the fact that hundreds of forms perhaps identical to his own were strewn about in varying states of damage. "We cannot take in the loveliness that is Castle Riley. We must go and be presented to the lovely lady herself."

A train whistle sounded, and all three adults watched as a purple train engine, crossed with a tank and vaguely shaped like a shoe, huffed up to them along tracks that appeared directly in front of it and vanished after it passed. (30)

"Come, we must board immediately."

"–His rocket makes you yell 'Hooray'! Bing Bong, Bing Bong–"

Roll weaved her way around every obstacle in her and Rock's path with expert ease, while Rock kept on singing the childish song that appeared to fuel the mysterious energy the broom had been infused with and permitted it flight.

It left him little concentration to contribute to the conversation taking place in his systems.

'Joy, this isn't a little thing,' Disgust insisted, wishing that the mental communications Rock and Roll had deliberately allowed them permitted visual contact as well. 'Sadness says you didn't just call yourself a bad emotion, you actually believed it!'

'She really did, it was heartbreaking.'

'Guys! I'm fine! Really!' Joy insisted. 'I've learned my lesson and I'm better for it! I know every emotion has a role to play, and I'm never going to try and repress any of you from doing your job again! Honest!'

'Joy, that's not what we're talking ab–' Fear tried to cut in.

'And besides,' Joy talked over him, 'we need to focus on saving Riley from this 'Slenderman' thing, so why don't we talk about tha–'

'Cut the crap, Joy,' Anger interrupted firmly. 'Look, I'm as glad as anyone that you're not going psycho on us, but I'm not sure I like this direction either. If we're going to save Riley, we need everyone at their best, especially you.'

'Yeah, righ–' Joy tried to wave the concern off, only for Anger to interrupt her again.

'I don't know if you've noticed Joy, but without you, we're a mess!'

'Look, the thing in baseline was totally unders–'

'I'M NOT TALKING ABOUT THE DAMN BASELINE! DID YOU SEE WHAT WE WERE LIKE WHEN WE GOT SEPARATED TODAY?! AFTER A FEW MINUTES RILEY DIDN'T NEED THAT 'OVERRIDE' THING FOR ME TO GO ON A RAMPAGE ACROSS THE CITY! I DID IT ALL BY MYSELF!'

'It's true!' Fear added. 'I thought I could figure out a way to stop this mess, but all I managed was to make people run away from it, and I'm not really sure that helped!'

'I kind of stopped caring pretty early,' Disgust added. 'Like none of it really mattered.'

'I gave up,' Sadness sighed. 'Because you weren't there to stop me. Like last time.'

'Sadness, look, that wasn't–'

'You wouldn't let me give up. Because that's what you do, Joy. You don't give up. You don't let us give up, and you don't let Riley give up. She needs that. Now more than ever.'

'Besides, you're not just one of Riley's emotions, you're her nature,' Fear told her.

'Huh?'

'Seriously,' Disgust snorted, 'read the mind manuals sometime. First emotion formed is the natural leader, so suck it up and start leading.' (31)

'What if the first emotion is really bad at leading?' Joy asked.

'Nothing good,' Sadness answered. 'Sorry, that wasn't helping, was it?'

The thing in her head needed to go. She was very certain of that. Mostly certain of that.

It wasn't that she was afraid of it, or angry at it, or disgusted by it. The thought of it staying didn't make her sad, nor did the thought of it leaving make her happy.

Because she couldn't feel anything at all. Because her emotions had left her all alone. Without any guidance as to how to react to the thing's presence in her head. Without any guidance as to what to do about the bad things it was pressing her to do. At least, she was sure they were bad things. Possibly. Maybe. What reference did she even have to judge anymore?

They were never coming back. Why would they with their newfound freedom? Free to indulge in their hysterical mania, unleash their untempered rage, wallow in the pits of despair, flee in abject terror, and judge with unhindered contempt. That was what they were made to do after all.

It wouldn't subject her to that. It would guide her and protect her from the uncaring dredges of the multiverse. Show her how to protect herself. Spread the gloriousness that she would be a part of to others. All she had to do was stop fighting the inevitable. Stop resisting her natural urges. Invite him to stay and fill the void left in her mind.

And it would ensure she was never alone.

"Shut... up..."

No.

"–Who's the best in every way, and wants to sing this song to say: Bing Bong, Bing Bong!"

Roll sighed in relief as she finally set her broom down in front of the gate leading to... whatever new threat was behind it. The song may have worked, and the individual it was about certainly praiseworthy, but... well... it was exceedingly juvenile, and short to the point that continuous repetitions had grated on her auditory processors.

Maker, but she was going to have that song stuck in her head now...

The gate ratcheted up and Roll took point in front of her brother, ready to meet whatever threat was inside head-on.

"We're here..." Rock breathed in surprise as they both looked around the lab room that this entire mess had started in. It was larger, thanks to whatever was expanding the space inside the lab, but is was recognizable. The original download area still had an unused generic male robot frame in it, there was a screen which showed a darkened view that looked to be Riley's Headquarters (seemingly empty) based on descriptions given to them both, and there at the far end, still hooked up to the improved Mind Machine, sat Riley herself. Right next to the control console that they'd set up, still functioning and looking largely untouched.

Rock and Roll nodded to each other and dashed towards Riley's location, Roll taking a rear flank position and scanning the room for threats while Rock focused on getting to Riley.

Which might have been why neither of them noticed the forcefield generators added to the floor until it activated right between them and knocked Roll on her butt when she crashed into it.

That had been rather easy to accomplish. He had thought separating them would be harder.

"Slenderman!" Rock growled as he searched for the source of the mental intrusion. He found no trace of the memetic entity. "Roll, are you alright?"

"I'm fine! Don't worry about me! Just get Riley's emotions back to her!"

Yes, he should really do that quickly. There was no telling what kind of damage had been done to the girl already. As for his sister, she would have her hands full.

"Damnit..." Rock swore as he realized that line of thought hadn't quite been his. Weighing his options, he quickly decided that he didn't have much of a choice and ran for the console.

After all, what would this little invasion be without a Riley Machine?

Roll heard a whirring of machinery behind her and turned just in time to dive away from a barrage of hockey pucks, tucking and rolling into a battle-ready crouch before taking a good look at... at the unholy love child of a Zamboni and a tank.

"Double that damnit," she cursed as crossbow turrets mounted on the sides of the thing started firing hockey sticks at her. She dove and tumbled out of the way and wished that her broom had a bit more oomph to it.

'Who's your friend who lik–' Roll shook her head hard. She didn't need that song stuck in her head right now! Even if it interacted with that strange magic powder and gave her broom flight, it–

Roll blinked as a memory from her time in Hogwarts crossed her mind. A conversation she'd had with Harry about the importance of incantations and wand movements. According to him, most Loops they weren't as critical as most people thought. Sure, they helped channel, focus, and shape spells, but the most important thing to magic was intent.

Roll gripped her broom rightly as she stared down the Zamboni from heck, determined to give her brother all the time he needed to get Riley's emotions to her. She thought about the mind-born friend of Riley's who'd sacrificed himself so they could get this far. The one who'd obliviously enchanted her broom in the first place. The one whose song was already stuck in her head. Maybe... just maybe if she changed the song a bit... she could use the enchantment to fight instead of fly.

It just needed to be a song with the right intent.

"Who's the friend who saves the day?"

Roll grinned as the bristles of the broom lit up with rainbow light, forming a shimmering spearhead of pure magical energy.

"Bing-Bong Bing-Bong!"

Dr. Light fiddled with the contents of his pocket as covertly as he could while his and the Andersens' captors ferried them through 'Castle Riley'. He did have to grudgingly marvel at how fast and effectively the Slenderman, vile being that he was, had put the very experiments Dr. Light had been working on, combined with what seemed to be the contents of Riley's imagination, to use constructing this place. Experiments that he'd only been working on because he'd believed that without Dr. Wily in the Loop there was little chance of them being subverted to cause harm.

He sighed and continued his work as the train chugged on through a room that housed a giant robotic clown, damaged beyond operation, and a smashed Devil Core (on loan from Rock's subspace pocket) amidst a mass of what looked like pink cotton candy.

"That looks like the imaginary friend Riley drew in those old books of hers..." Mrs. Andersen gasped at the sight.

"Didn't you say there was a clown that scared her at her cousin's birthday party?" Mr. Andersen asked, sounding in shock. Dr. Light could hardly blame either of them. The whole thing was rather shocking.

"Yes, she cried for almost half an hour..."

"Who sends the bad guys far away? Bing Bong, Bing Bong!"

Roll had to grin as the magical spearhead tore through the machine's armaments and scored its armor with much more ease than just her broom would have managed.

"The bravest one in every way, and so we shout his name today! Bing Bong, Bing Bong!"

She jumped onto the hood in a handstand when one of the surviving puck-shooters tracked her position and was about to launch herself over the whole machine when a weakness that she was very much unused to war machines having finally registered.

Namely that the driver's seat was empty.

Roll checked her momentum so she dropped into the seat rather than clearing the whole machine. Only at the last moment did it occur to her that it might be a trap... but nothing happened.

Not only did nothing happen, Roll spotted an ignition behind the steering wheel complete with keys in it. Acting fast, she reached out and turned the keys to the off position, causing the whole machine to sputter and shut down. She waited for a moment to confirm that it was indeed off before removing the keys and breathing a sigh of relief.

"TripleDent Gum... will make you smile..."

"What in the world?" Roll puzzled as she heard the muffled sound coming from in front of her.

"TripleDe–"

"–AAAHH!" Roll screamed as a huge black three-jawed worm erupted from the steering wheel like a deploying airbag and went straight for her face.

'Okay, memetic lifeform, eldritch abomination, actually an Admin-level douchebag stuck in an avatar, and doing who-knows-what to Riley's head,' Anger repeated back in annoyance. 'Anything else we need to know?'

'Besides hurry?' Joy added.

"Yeah," Rock continued working on the console, configuring the Mind Machine for downloading to Riley's mind direct from the IC chips rather than being hooked up to their robot bodies as previously intended. "His avatar, like what he probably was originally, is a being of pure thought."

'Uh, yeah,' Disgust spat, 'what does tha–'

"Just like you all are."

'–oh... Oh!'

'So...?' Fear wondered.

'...We can hurt him,' Anger chuckled eagerly.

"Just remember that goes both ways," Rock reminded as he finalized the settings and double-checked them. There was zero room for error on this.

Roll was immensely glad for her mechanical reflexes. It was the only reason she wasn't being face-hugged by a giant singing black worm with three jaws and teeth. She'd caught it with her broom just in time and smashed it against the dashboard where the worm-thing had gone splat and stuck like a wad of gum. She'd just barely managed to pull her broom away, thankfully without black worm goo on it, only to watch the worm start to reform. She'd exited the vehicle rather fast at that point.

'Okay, let's see how you like a bit of magic song power!' Roll set her face in determination. "Who's the friend who saves the day?"

The broom lit up like before and she prepared to meet the little beast when it came for her. It had finished reforming and was opening its three jaws even now.

"Bi–"

"–nt Gum... it lasts a while..."

Roll stared as the prismatic song power fizzled out completely.

"That's not good..."

"TripleDent Gum... will help you–"

She barely recovered from her distraction enough to get her arm between her face and the lunging worm-thing, allowing its jaws to latch onto her arm firmly rather than her face.

'–mister... To punch bad breath right in the kisser...'

Had she been capable, Roll would have paled as the worm's song began sounding directly in her head, accompanied by a looming image of Slenderman himself. An image that conveyed a sense of total futility and urged her to simply give up and let him in.

"LIKE HECK!" she yelled, slamming the bitten arm into the side of the Riley Machine. The worm splatted again, but its triple jaws and related teeth refused to let go of Roll's arm. Running through her options, Roll decided to start shooting it with the emotion weapons and hoping for the best, starting with what little she had left of the Zen Buster and praying from there.

'TripleDent GuuuUU–'

The shot caused the splatted goo-worm to writhe in response and let go of Roll's arm.

"–uummmMMMmm..."

Switching, Roll fired again before the worm could reform and lunge at her again.

"TripleDeeEEeeNNnt–"

Frantic Fright didn't have much more effect than the Zen Buster and Roll had to move her head to the side as it ricocheted back at her.

"–Gum... wiiiIIIiiLLll–"

Angry Flame wasn't much better.

"–make you smmmMMmIIii–"

Nor was Blooming Disgust.

"–le... TrippPpPLLlle D-D-D-DeeeEEnnnTT G-G-GuuummMmM..."

Sad Raincloud had promise, but it wasn't really slowing the thing down as it finished reforming and began a lunge.

"–it lAAaaAAasSSssTTtssSSs AAAAAAAAAAA W-w-W-hhHHiiILLLeee..."

Joyous Sunburst seemed to hit paydirt as a yellow glow overtook the black for a bit before being pushed back and seeming to make the worm-thing angrier. Better than the others, but not good enough.

'Okay, new strategy,' Roll thought as she switched to something from her housekeeping toolkit. Her arm finished reforming as the worm-thing lunged, and she pointed the device straight down its throat and fired even as it latched onto the end of her arm and its insidious song and the accompanying insidious image returned, eating away at her mind and resolve.

'TripleDent Gum... will h~elp yo~u mis~ter...'

The tool she'd selected was basically a freezer spray. Not very powerful, being only as cold as the average commercial freezer, but good for cooling off warm drinks.

'T~o p~un~ch b~a~d... br...ea...th... r...ig...ht...'

And cleaning off gum stuck to desks those times she'd gone to school.

'i...n... t...h...e... k...i...s...s...e...r...'

The writhing of the worm-thing slowed down and cracks began to form in its body from its own struggled as Roll kept pumping cold air into its core, more and more until the thing stopped moving at all, at which point she smashed it against the Riley Machine and watched in satisfaction as the pieces did nothing but lie there.

Her satisfaction was cut short as the gate to the room ratcheted up and an odd-looking train chugged in.

Roll turned to look and felt her circuits run cold as she saw her father and Riley's parents being held at gunpoint by one of those Biker Joe/imaginary boyfriend robots from before, along with a pair of zombie robots. Mostly, the gun was pointed at her dad, but Roll didn't believe for a second that it couldn't be turned on the Andersens.

Sparing a glance, Roll spotted her brother slotting the emotions' IC chips into the console and willed him to hurry up.

"You will both stop everything right now and step away from the lovely Riley and all computers or else suffer the consequences!" the boyfriend-bot declared loudly as the train ground to a halt.

Roll saw Rock hesitate for a moment, and then press the button to start the download.

"I'm sorry, what was that again?" Rock turned around, feigning confusion and ignorance rather well in Roll's opinion.

"I said you are to step away from that console before you bring harm to my love Riley!" the boyfriend-bot called again as he directed the three adults off the train. Roll didn't miss the intense scowl on Mr. Andersen's face at his declaration.

"Sure thing," Rock held his hands up in a gesture of surrender and did as asked. Roll did the same from where she stood. They'd done their part. Now it was up to the emotions.

Joy looked around Headquarters the moment she manifested and felt her heart sink.

The place was a wreck. It was darkened everywhere, with colors faded so far that in the shadows, Joy couldn't tell what they were even supposed to be. Littered all across the floor, rather than in the short-term wall storage where they were supposed to be, were dozens of blackened memory orbs. A look behind her showed the other emotions looking just as stunned as she was and a control panel that was nearly black from inoperability. In place of the simple viewscreen camera the Lights had helped them to set up via relayed instructions for a video feed that never quite got finished, there was an entire array of cameras straight from Dream Studios.

"Is... Is he going to film us?" Fear wondered, looking at the camera setup.

He'd been expecting them.

Joy and the others looked around, hoping to find where Slenderman was hiding, but saw nothing. Only the soft light of the core memories, safe and untouched in their holder. The pre-awake core memories on a small bottom tier, overshadowed by the larger tier above holding the baseline and looping core memories, with a brilliant near-white prismatic glow from the center of the top tier.

"He... hasn't touched the core memories?" Sadness wondered.

"Then... we made it in time!" Joy felt relieved.

Yes, they were right on time.

"You..." the very tired and weary monotone of Riley sounded throughout Headquarters, even as a thin shadow peeled itself away from the edge of the window, standing tall, straight, and sinister in the strongest source of light in Headquarters as it strode over to the core memory holder.

"You... came back..."

And paradoxically, far too late.

DONG

The sound was so thoroughly unexpected, and the response to it so ingrained, that the five emotions couldn't help but turn to look at the memory dispenser as a pitch black memory orb radiating pure shadow dropped in.

"No..." Fear stared in horror as the blackened core memory orb trundled its way down towards the core memory holder, which was even now shifting to accommodate the new addition.

The center portion holding the nearly-clear prismatic orb for Unity Island rose up to reveal a new housing spot directly underneath it.

"S...Someone... stop i–" Joy moved forwards on protective instinct, only for a sharp impact to the chest to bring her to a halt.

Slenderman casually knelt down to pick up the orb personally while holding his other arm out towards Joy, a tendril like darkest shadow extending from it. As he held the orb, shadows seemed to flow from his arm and into the orb, darkening it even further if at all possible.

"Joy...?" Disgust turned to look at the normally brilliant emotion, her glow was so much a part of her that the rest rarely gave it any thought. She no longer had it.

Joy herself was transfixed on Slenderman's actions as he thrust the black core memory into place.

He had won.

"Oh god... Joy..." Fear trembled.

As did Headquarters. From the black core memory sprouted dozens of shadowy tendrils that wrapped around the core memory holder, and the core memories themselves, scorching the shining core memories black and dull where they touched, save for the brilliantly clear prismatic one at the pinnacle, but even that dulled from the tendrils' touch. What light was left to the core memories pulsed weakly as outside the far window, a tidal wave of black erupted from below, carrying pieces of Riley's Islands of Personality with them, cutting all the lines of power save the one for Unity Island directly below. As they watched, the wave of black formed into a truly massive giant replica of the impossibly thin Slenderman, the remains of the Islands of Personality, already gray and faded, sticking to it like some cruel and macabre parody. Family Island, the most intact of them all, lay in the giant replica's outstretched hand, gripped so tightly it cracked.

Joy's chest hurt at the sight and she raised a hand to it, only to find an obstruction. Weakly, she looked down to see the tendril of blackness stuck straight through her, her normally yellow skin turning gray and dull around the wound.

The tendril retracted suddenly and Joy fell to the ground like a puppet with her strings cut.

"JOY! NNNOOOOOOOOO!"

"RRRRRAAAAAAAAAAGGGGGHHHHHH!"

A rumble of thunder, a burst of flames, and soundless laughter echoed through Headquarters as Joy lay there unmoving. (32)

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"What just...?"

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"Did that thing... kill Riley's Joy...?"

The Real World

The Andersens could only stare in horror at the sight projected above, a raincloud forming in Riley's headquarters while a squat humanoid mass of flames charged the being known as Slenderman.

"Oww! I... Aaaah!"

And then Riley started writhing in pain from her seat.

"Riley, my love?" the biker robot started at the sound. "What is wr– BZZAP

Dr. Light had needed no further opening to take the jury-rigged tazer out of his coat pocket and zap the robot, relieving the machine of his gun as he fell and turning on the zombie-robots escorting him and the Andersens.

BANG-BANG-BANG-BANG!

The zombie-bots weren't getting up anytime soon.

"Quickly, we need to get–"

"–Down!" Roll yelled, diving in front of them, her hands having been traded out for mirrors, which reflected lasers fired from the wall behind Riley. "Behind the train! Move!"

"Hold on!" Rock called. "I think I can–gah!"

A battered copy of the Mind Reader fluttered a bit, the only two words on the front page reading 'JOY'S DEAD?!' as the heatwaves from Anger's flames burst against the Slenderman and his shadowy tendrils inside the rain of pure sadness.

The rain was a brilliant blue, and as thick and intense as Sadness's weeping over the loss of Joy, her best friend outside Riley. Each drop that struck the Slenderman burned his dark form blue at the point of impact before being swallowed up by his natural darkness.

"JOOOYYY! WHHYYYYYY-HYYY-HYYY-HYYYYYYY?!"

Anger for his part had never been in such a fury. Even when separated from the rest of the emotions with nothing to temper or control him, he hadn't been this mad. All thoughts of the mission had fled in the fire of his fury, his only goal being that the eldritch beanpole had to die . His body burned as he charged the Slenderman again and again, bolts of flames from his hands burning away the tendrils sent at him, leaving the scorched edges red for a moment as he charged past, intent on destroying the one who had caused so much pain and suffering.

And each time, his charge was ultimately met with a spinning kick or a backhand that sent him flying even as the flames that engulfed him scorched the limb red for a moment. But he got back up each time, the injuries only serving to stoke his rage.

"RRRAAAAAAAAHHHHHH!"

Fear and Disgust had stared as Sadness and Anger lost all semblance of control and went berserk, manifesting a massive raincloud right in headquarters in the case of Sadness and performing a full-body ignition for Anger. They'd exchanged glances and proceeded to jointly drag the unmoving Joy behind the inoperable console.

At least, inoperable to them. Right after Sadness and Anger had lost it, Slenderman had held a single hand out towards the blackened console and the various buttons and levers had started moving on their own, the sickly sparking idea bulb pulsing with each phantom-driven movement.

"Oh, this is bad, very bad!" Fear was practically hyperventilating.

"Get ahold of yourself, Fe–"

"Do you know how to revive an emotion that's been impaled?! Because I don't! We haven't even been back here for ten seconds and we've lost Joy!"

"And if you don't get a hold of yourself, we might lose Anger or Sadness!" Disgust snapped. "Then what?!"

"I don't know!" Fear moaned, huffing rapidly. "You saw what happened! One shot! One shot !"

"Yeah, well you can sit here with your pity party and let that thing do whatever to Riley," Disgust sneered at him. "Me, I'm going to do something about it."

And with that, Disgust turned to dash out into the chaos of Headquarters, flashes of green flower shapes shining with each step she took.

"Hey, wait!" Fear called after her. "This is a bad idea!"

What could they do against the one who had felled their leader? Nothing. It was better to hide. To cower in fright. To let the abject terror fuel the new ruler of–

"Wait, what?" Fear started as he realized the direction those thoughts had taken. "Am I really making him stronger hiding back here?"

He-he-he-he-he...

Fear gulped loudly. Going out there would be very dangerous to himself. Staying here could be dangerous to everyone else.

"Oh..." he turned to look at the prone Joy. "What do I do?!"

"Ri..." the barest whisper sounded from Joy's still form. "...ley..."

Fear blinked owlishly for several moments, before taking a deep breath and steadying himself to a mere shiver rather than full-blown tremors. "Right... stupid question..."

Appropriate for a fool about to perish.

"I am so going to regret this!" Fear yelled as he dashed out into the chaotic storm right in headquarters.

The rain fell thick with Sadness's sobs, leaving pinprick flashes of blue on the black tendrils lashing about. Flashes of flame lit Headquarters as Anger blasted a berserker rage through the storm, carving the darkness and leaving the burned edges read. Wide green flashes lit the ground with Disgust's steps and turned several shadowy tendrils green and began to dissolve them. In the center, the Slenderman ducked and wove with movements physically impossible even for the emotions, batting both Anger and Disgust away whenever they got too close, seemingly uncaring for the assault upon him.

It was into this that Fear dashed, screaming, flailing his arms about wildly and hoping to do something. He was surprised when bolts of purplish air were thrown from his hands and bounced their way through the chaos, leaving purple marks whenever they hit Slenderman's shadowy tendrils, breaking them at the point of impact. Apparently their time as robots had left something of an imprint or–

One of the flailing tendrils of shadow slammed into Fear, tossing him head over heels to crash into the core memory holder. The core memories rattled, but the tendrils covering the holder, and corrupting the core memories, held them in place. His gaze was drawn to the black core memory, radiating shadows and the seeming source of the choking tendrils that were determined to suck the life out of Riley's very personality, all the things that made her her .

He was overcome by an extremely strong certainty that the core memory wanted him. Wanted him to reach out so it could draw Fear into it an–

Something wrapped around his leg, pulling Fear away before he could touch the core memory–when had he even started reaching for it anyway?– and flung him to the opposite side of the room to crash among one of the larger piles of discarded blackened memories.

"Ow..." Fear moaned, reaching out to brace himself into a sitting position and felt a mild fizzing sensation in his hand as he did. He turned and saw that he'd grabbed one of the blackened memories, except that it was no longer black.

As he watched, a scene of Riley watching news footage of their earlier rampage played amidst a purple hue as the memory orb finished its conversion from a blank perspective to a fearful one.

'But... only Sadness can do something like this, right?' he wondered, looking over the memory. It–

It mattered not if he fought or fled. Either action would feed the Slenderman's strength.

Fear looked up in time to see Anger being thrown into Disgust by their mutual opponent and knew what he had to do. Eyes on the prize, he took off running. And screaming.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA–"

Yes, little agent of terror. Serve your master with your action–

"–Sorry,busywithsomethingelserightnow," Fear gibbered as he duck, wove, and slid through the rain and the chaotic mass of shadowy tendrils lashing about... and right past a suddenly confused

Slenderman, "leaveamessageatthesoundofthescreamandwe'llgetbacktoyouathalfpastnever–AAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHH!"

He jumped like a panic-guided missile straight for the black core memor–"Ooof!"

And was knocked off-course at the last moment.

What was he thinking, anyway? Such a thing would devour his essence and leave nothing lef–

A blazing, fiery Anger slammed bodily into the Slenderman, knocking him off-balance with a flash of red, followed by a flash of green as Disgust performed a rather sloppy drop-kick.

"AAAAA-HUAAAHH-HAAA-HAAAAAAAAAA!" Sadness continued to wail, the rain intensifying in a fresh wave as she did.

"Whatever you're gonna do, do it already!" Anger yelled at him as the impossibly thin abomination recovered, his shadows burning away the color he'd been afflicted with as he retaliated.

Fear didn't even waste time nodding, he just sprang forwards, over a tendril, under another, twisting around a third, throwing bolts of purplish air at the tendrils holding his target in place, and diving in the most desperate hand-outstretched manner he was capable of. He hit the black core memory like a bullet, felt a burning sensation in his hand as he knocked it loose, and flew straight through its holder in a way only his naturally rail-thin form could manage.

He hit the ground in an uncontrolled roll, clutching desperately to the dark core memory as he went, refusing to relax his hold for any reason. When he finally came to a stop, he risked a look at the core memory and was rewarded with a view through the familiar brightly-shining purple color and heard Riley's voice from within it.

"You... came back..."

'I was afraid you wouldn't.'

Except... his purple hadn't taken away all of the shadow-radiating blackness. Only a portion of it. He frantically moved his hands over the memory, trying to fix it, and it seemed to work a bit, but for every part that turned purple past a certain point, the blackness reclaimed an equal portion.

He... he wasn't enough...

Fear looked up, to see Anger blasted across the room once again–how many times had it happened now?–and realized: He wasn't enough by himself.

"Anger! Go long!" Fear yelled and threw the core memory at his fellow emotion with all his might before turning and charging at the most terrifying thing he'd ever come across.

'Thisisabadidea,thisisabadidea,thisisabadidea,thisisabadidea,THISISABADIDEA–' he chanted to himself as he wove through the shadowy tendrils, flung bursts of bouncing purple air to clear the way, rushed past Disgust, and with all the desperation of a cornered animal, kicked Slenderman in the face.

The impact cracked the abomination's head back so hard that his spine seemed to fold in half at the waist in precisely the opposite direction human anatomy typically allowed.

'–Did I actually just DO tha–'

He was so shocked that he never saw the retaliatory blow that blasted him into the wall.

Rock grunted, clutching where he'd been hit as he ran to the back of the room. He could hear Roll doing her best to defend their dad and the Andersens from the sudden attack. He could hear the cries of Riley as she convulsed in pain. He could also hear the sounds of the battle taking place in the girl's mind.

He ignored it and focused on the control panel he'd spotted on the wall. The best thing he could do now was to get to that thing and try to cut off Riley's access, and by extension Slenderman's, to the lab's systems.

Behind him, he heard the sound of damaged machinery rumbling to life under protest, and his sister's response to it.

"Oh come on! I turned that off!"

Anger caught the memory orb out of reflex before he even knew what it really was. By the time it registered, a glowing red was eating away at the blackness to join the purple already there. He felt his fury blank out in astonishment as he watched the scene through his own color, viewed both outside and inside Riley's head.

"You... came back..."

'You left in the first place.'

"It..." Anger choked on the words. "It was a bad idea... We never should have tried it... We–" –will all fall to the inevitable.

Anger felt his temper flare up as he turned to look at the Slenderman, fending off both Fear and Disgust. He watched the thing grab Disgust by the throat with one of its shadowy tendrils and throw her at him.

He was already moving, rearing back to throw the orb at Disgust. It slammed straight into her stomach, causing her to grasp it by reflex as Anger vaulted over, igniting as he rejoined the fray.

Roll's broom, and a borrowed hockey stick, spun like a blur as she deflected hockey pucks and sticks fired from the already damaged Riley Machine, preventing them from possibly harming the adults behind her while they sought cover behind the train.

Sparing a glance back, she noted that they were out of the firing line and decided to go on the offensive. As she leaped high into the air, something on the back of the machine opened up and she beheld a rather large impact explosive primed to fire in a high arc.

"Oh, no you don't!" Roll called out, hefting her borrowed hockey stick like it was a spear. This was going to hurt, but better her than the others.

She threw the spear with stick with all her might like a javelin, striking the impact-triggered explosive squarely and detonating it before it could even clear the machine.

KA-BOOM!

"Roll!"

"You... came back..."

'Do you even know what happened while you were gone?'

Disgust tuned out the sobs of Sadness and the sounds of battle as she watched the scene in the memory play through her own shining green light and felt lower than dirt. The orb was now less than half the shadow-emanating blackness it had originally been, with shining purple, red, and now green holding back the emotional void it had once been.

"Don't worry," she scowled towards the source of all the pain Riley had been forced to endure and then glanced over to the side where Sadness sat, still weeping up a very literal storm, "we'll fix this."

Dashing towards the weeping emotion, Disgust shook her by the shoulder.

"JOOOOYYY...! SHE'S GOO-OOO-OO-OOONNEE!"

"Sadness, snap out of it!" Disgust shook harder.

"What's the use?!" Sadness wailed. "We lost Joy! Without Joy, we can't save Rile-ee-ee-eeyy!"

"I'd apologize, but you seriously need this," Disgust huffed before slapping Sadness sharply across the face.

"Wh-what was that for...?"

"That was because Riley needs you to pull yourself together so we can pull her together!" Disgust snapped, before thrusting the partially-converted core memory into Sadness's hands. "Here, n–"

Disgust was suddenly yanked backwards away from Sadness.

Dr. Light ran to where his daughter had been thrown by the explosion, worry in his face. He nearly forgot the defensive lasers the room had been firing until a sharp cry from the back of the room sounded out, followed by loudly sparking electronics, the lights flickering, and the defensive lasers powering down.

"Rock!"

Sadness hadn't quite noticed Disgust being pulled away. She was too engrossed in the sight of her shining blue reaching out from her hands to wash away the foul emotionally empty blackness on the core memory.

"You... came back..."

'I was so alone...'

What... what had she been doing? Crying to herself while Riley needed her help? Again?

Face firming up, Sadness checked over the core memory, the blue glow following her hands as it and the other colors shoved each other in a complex swirling pattern. It looked... It looked like each color took up roughly one-fifth of the orb. Which meant...

Which meant they still needed Joy...

Sadness had just resolved to run the orb towards the downed Joy when it was slapped out of her hands and something wrapped around her neck, choking her as she was raised into the air. Looking out, she saw that it was a tendril of shadow, connected at the other end to the Slenderman. With three more, each holding a different emotion up by the neck.

Mr. and Mrs. Andersen, along with their emotions, looked at the display in horror as the thing possessing their daughter held her remaining four emotions up by their necks and seemed to be choking the very color out of them.

It was hopeless. It had always been hopeless.

But they'd had to make it difficult. Do things the hard way and fight against the inevitable. And they'd paid the price.

They should have known. Laughter dies, tears run dry, fury burns out, distaste withers, and panic exhausts. In the end, only the emptiness is left. The emptiness and the madness.

Joy was having a lot of trouble thinking. Her mind kept bouncing between how much her chest hurt, and how much Riley was in trouble.

Part of her really wanted to get up and help, but she just wasn't feeling it. It was like all of her get up and go got up and went. And she'd had a lot of get up and go. Enough that she really should have noticed it leaving like that.

Like the weird swirly, glowy memory orb in front of her. When had that gotten there? Joy looked on as the scene was colored purple, then red, then green, then blue, and finally black.

"You... came back..."

'Of course we came back,' Joy thought in puzzlement. Each of the emotional inflections sounded like they were missing something, but the last was missing everything. 'It doesn't matter why we leave or how far we go, we'll always come back to you, Riley.'

It just... didn't make sense. Where was the girl, happy or otherwise, who couldn't be kept down? Who never stopped fighting and never stopped trying? Where was her 'never-say-die' attitude?

After all, Fear...

Fear would just get her to hide somewhere until it was over.

Okay, Anger...

No, Anger would rage and break things over the indignity of it all.

Maybe Disgust...

Pfft... Disgust would throw up her hands and say she was through with everything.

Well, then definitely Sadness...

Except Sadness had already proven willing to go cry in a corner when things got too tough.

Puzzled, Joy struggled to move her hand, reaching out to the shadowy black part of the memory orb on an instinct she couldn't define.

After what seemed like an eternity, her hand made contact and Joy felt a sharp drain on what little strength she had left as a paltry yellow glow formed in the middle of the remaining blackness.

"You... came back..."

'Finally... we're together again.'

Oh... That was it... It was her... Joy... She was the reason for Riley's ability to keep going when things got tough. She'd... She'd forgotten that somewhere along the way. Somewhere between making sure she didn't try to stop another emotion from doing their job and the stress of the Loops, Joy had forgotten her own purpose in guiding Riley.

Joy felt a laugh from somewhere within, bringing with it a familiar warmth that spread and chased away the weakness in her body like the dawn chases away the shadows.

"Ha..."

And as it did, the yellow glow on the memory orb around her hand grew, eating away at the blackness until there was none left, and Joy watched the five colors swirl around each other faster and faster...

"Hahahahaha!"

The four emotions watched Slenderman freeze in his taunting as the laugh echoed through headquarters and a bright glow shone from behind the possessed console. A glow that began to move.

"Is that...?" Disgust seemed to perk up and regain a bit of color from her nearly gray state first.

It couldn't be...

Slenderman turned around as a glowing yellow figure stepped out from behind the console, carrying a brightly shining memory orb so prismatic it seemed perfectly clear.

"JOY!" Sadness had never sounded so relieved to see anything.

He'd taken care of her!

"You certainly gave it a good shot," Joy smirked back at the memetic abomination, twirling the core memory on one of her fingers like it was a basketball. "But, come on! I'm Joy ! It doesn't matter how hard you knock me down, I'll get right back up! The prospect of being erased forever couldn't keep me down. What makes you think you can?"

Dr. Light had half-dragged his children over near Riley and was assessing the damage done to them. Nothing unrepairable, but rather severe nevertheless. He got to work as the concerned Andersens joined him, alternating their gazes between their pained daughter and the display showing the inside of her mind.

"All right!" Anger pounded his fist to his palm. "We've got the whole gang now! Let's do th–"

"Nope!" Joy cut him off.

The other four emotions blinked in shock, and even the Slenderman seemed surprised.

"I've got Slendy here," Joy told them confidently, stepping out towards the eldritch personage, tossing the core memory to herself as she did. "You all have more important things to do. Fear, get control of the co–"

No less than four shadowy tendrils lashed out at Joy suddenly, and vanished in a flash of yellow light an instant later, the last couple of feet of each burned away, leaving the severed ends a yellow color. Joy held the core memory protectively, one palm held out to ward off the sudden attack.

"–nsole back," Joy continued, her gaze firm and set. "Ang–"

The Slenderman charged himself this time, slapping the shorter emotion's defending arm away and grabbing her by the throat with one hand and the core memory with the other.

The shadowed blackness from before burned at the brilliant prismatic memory–

"Joy! I'm–

"No! Ideas!"

–before Joy slammed two glowing feet into Slenderman's torso with a flash of light.

"Wha...?" Anger blinked, half stunned by the request, and half stunned by the fact that the Slenderman seemed to have been blown in half.

"Well..." Joy chuckled nervously as the brilliance of the core memory erased the blackness the Slenderman had reintroduced. "That was easy?"

Oh, is that what she thought?

Both halves of the Slenderman charged at her independent of each other, lashing out with thin limbs and shadowy tendrils, trying to claim the core memory back from her. One strike got lucky and slammed Joy into the wall hard enough that she lost her grip on the core memory. Before he could grab it though, Joy kicked it hard across Headquarters to where Sadness and Disgust stood. Sadness, being the closer one to where it was going, caught it.

"You two!" Joy called out, having dove onto Slenderman's top half while the two pieces rejoined and was holding her hands firmly over where the faceless entity's eyes should have been. "Get that memory back in place! Anger!"

"Do you remember what happened the last time I gave Riley an idea?! Never again! I'll help you fight! I can help you beat him!"

"We don't need him beaten!" Joy yelled back as the Slenderman threw her off and slammed her into the floor. "We need him out of Riley's head!"

Joy was then thrown into the ceiling with enough force to bounce her back towards the floor.

"Do you think any idea–" Joy called out before being slammed into the wall again, "–can do that if it's not angry?!"

Anger stared, hating to admit that Joy was right. Gritting his teeth, he made to charge at the idea bulb bins, only to watch as shadowy tendrils from Slenderman tore into the wall surrounding the bins and ripped it apart, scattering debris and idea bulbs all over Headquarters.

'Well... that's a sure sign Joy's on the right track...' Anger admitted to himself as he prepared to try and search every last scattered bulb to find one that might do the trick.

"Ow!" Fear yelped and grabbed his hand back from the sparking idea bulb stuck in the console. He'd never seen an idea go that bad... ever. "This... this is a bad idea... Ow! This is a really bad idea..."

He looked over the console, trying to figure out how to regain control. This was entirely different than when Sadness had done in baseline. Then, the console had just locked them all out. Now, all the various darkened levers and buttons were moving on their own, driving Riley to do who-knew-what?

Should he grab that lever? Or maybe that one? No! It wouldn't work! None of them would work!

'Okay, breathe...' he told himself. 'This is no time to panic...'

It was like a final piece of the puzzle had clicked into place, and Fear found his gaze drawn towards the panic button at his usual seat.

"Or maybe... it's the perfect time to panic!"

He dashed over, and tripped as something grabbed one of his legs and tried to pull him away. Fear didn't need to look to know it was one of Slenderman's shadowy tendrils. All he needed was to get to that button!

Fueled by a depth of desperation he didn't recall experiencing before, Fear gripped at the console with claw-like hands and began dragging himself inch-by-precious-inch towards Riley's salvation as he kicked at the thing trying to pull him away.

"You... won't... stop... me... from... keeping... Riley... safe!"

He slammed his hand down on the panic button with all his might, causing a wave of purple to flash out lightning-quick from the button and spread all over the console, stopping the possessed movement of levers and buttons, and also ejecting the idea with enough force that it shattered on the Headquarters ceiling.

"AAAAAHHHHH!" Riley's eyes shot fully open and darted around her immediate vicinity. She saw her parents, a damaged Rock and Roll, and Dr. Light trying to repair them. She also felt a terrible, long overdue, and very built-up panic and began struggling with the straps holding her to the chair.

"No, Riley! Not yet!"

Riley halted her struggles as she heard the familiar voice and listened to it.

'Fear?' she thought back, feeling like her mind had been put through a blender. But she was feeling .

"I'm here, Riley. We're all here. Listen, Joy's got a plan, but you need to stay where you are right now."

Sadness and Disgust raced towards the core memory holder, Sadness holding the core memory in her hands like the most precious thing in the world while Disgust covered her by blasting those revolting black tendril things with flower-shaped bursts of green light from her feet.

They reached the core memory holder with little issue, and found a problem. The tendrils choking the life out of the device had closed up over the very slot they needed to place the core memory in.

"No..." Sadness sniffled. "It's... it's not fair... He can't..."

"Keep it together Sadness," Disgust snapped, fending off another attack from behind before kicking the blockage in a flash of green. And what a sloppy kick it was, much like the fight with Slenderman earlier. First chance they got, they were talking Riley into martial arts lessons. (33)

The green light dissolved away at the blockage of tendrils, but they began writhing and reorganizing themselves to prevent access.

"They're being so mean!" Sadness wailed, thrusting one of her arms out at the mass. There was a bolt of blue, a muffled rumble of thunder, and a cloud formed directly over the foul things, turning parts of them blue and making them writhe in apparent pain. Disgust took that invitation to kick them again and between the blue and the green glows, the blockage swiftly dissolved, allowing Sadness to push the core memory back into place.

There was a pulse of light from it that caused the remaining tendrils grasping at the core memory holder to writhe, and the core memories they were suppressing to flare back to full brilliance. Another pulse and the tendrils were blasted apart completely. The third pulse traveled down the powering connections for the Islands of Personality and there was a great cracking in the distance. Sadness and Disgust turned to watch as the giant statue of Slenderman began to crumble, and then shatter completely as the Islands of Personality were reformed in its place. In fact, they looked brighter than ever, with bridges leading to them even more elaborate than before.

"Did... Did Unity Island just get bigger?" Sadness wondered.

'Okay...' Riley felt a few tears of relief pour from her eyes as something in her head that had been broken was suddenly put right. She... she felt... like herself again...

Anger frantically searched through the scattered idea bulbs for something that could be used to kick the Slenderman out of Riley's head, but was so far finding nothing. Each failure he tossed aside before grabbing for another.

Make a volcano? No. Toss

Swim to Hawaii? With their idea of pizza? Toss

Drive dad's car? Not if they wanted to live to see sixteen. Toss

Go back to Mon– "Gah!" Big toss

Look up Pole Dancing on the internet because mom changed the subject way too fast? Yeah, right. (34) Toss

Get clarification on 'The Talk'? Ugh, that had been bad enough the first time! Toss

Bring emotions outside my head? Not lik–

Anger froze halfway through tossing the idea and took a second look. Yes, it was the same idea that had gotten them into this mess in the first place. And maybe...

Anger grinned and began running for the console.

Just maybe it could get them out of it as well.

"Joy!" he called out as he dashed for the console. "Get him under the tube!"

"Roger that!" Joy called back from where she was dueling the Slenderman before being knocked to the floor.

Anger ignored his desire to go pound the guy in favor of delivering the idea.

Joy, for her part, didn't let being flat on her back stop her. She pulled her legs back and kicked straight out to where, on any normal male, a very vulnerable part would be. A flash of yellow light sent Slenderman staggering, but little more. It was still enough for Joy to spring to her feet and launch a punch at the memetic abomination's lack of face, resulting in the brightest flash of yellow light yet.

A wordless curse echoed across Headquarters as the Slenderman stumbled back from the blow, before he was hit by another, and another, driven back by each until–

"Hey, Slendy!" Anger yelled from the console, before inserting the idea bulb. "GET OUT OF OUR HEAD!"

The Slenderman looked up at the extraction tube directly over him and lashed out with his tendrils to hold himself in place as he was drawn upwards. Another lashed out to wrap around Joy and pull her towards him.

If he was going to be kicked out, she would come with him. Let them both spend their exile together while Riley learned what a life without happiness was lik–

"GET YOUR HANDS OFF OF HER!" the yell heralded a kick, followed by a flash of green that dissolved both the tendril holding Joy and those holding the tube, allowing the Slenderman to be drawn up, and out before the tube shut off.

At the console, Anger grinned as he removed the idea bulb, and then kissed it. "Now that's a good idea!"

"Thanks Disgust," Joy smiled.

"Duh," Disgust rolled her eyes and smirked. "You needed my help. Now, let's get Riley back to normal. This place is a mess."

"Sounds good," Joy smiled back. "Okay everyone, listen up!"

Mr. and Mrs. Andersen sighed in relief when the Slenderman had been kicked out. Their daughter was safe again. That monster would never–

The sound of machinery caught their attention and the two looked over where the very last of the generic robot frames lay as it jerked and changed shape. The torso and limbs became unnaturally thin and stretched out as they scorched to the black of the void. The head became squashed, ovular, sheet-white, and completely devoid of facial features.

The Slender Man stood shakily and turned its eyeless gaze towards them.

Very well. They wanted to do it the hard way? Then the hard way it was.

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"Oh my god... Not again..." her Fear murmured.

"Why... why can't that thing just leave Riley alone already?!" her Anger spat.

"He's not getting her," the woman's Sadness declared, getting nods from the other four. "He's not hurting our family if we have anything to say about it."

The display of Mrs. Andersen's sight turned to see the family's newest friend, Dr. Light, working hurriedly to repair his own children.

"Not ours, and not his either."

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"Gentlemen," Mr. Andersen's Anger stated with more calm than he had any right to, "that thing hurt Riley. We are officially at Defcon 1." (35)

As one, and without argument, Mr. Andersen's other four emotions produced safety keys and inserted them into their relevant key slots in the console before them.

"Physical violence aversions down, sir," Mr. Andersen's Sadness saluted.

"Fight or Flight reactions set to 'Fight' position," his Fear reported as the man's console reconfigured itself for combat.

"Papa Wolf protocols are now in full effect," his Disgust intoned seriously.

"Hockey stick spotted, we are now armed," his Joy noted.

"Gentlemen," Mr. Andersen's Anger gripped the combat controls before him while the others did the same, "let's give him hell."

The Real World

"AAAAAAAAA–" Mr. Andersen charged at the thing that had caused his daughter do much suffering, hockey stick raised high.

The Slender Man watched him come, seemingly unconcerned, and when the man was a few feet away, the abomination-in-a-robot made its move...

"–AAAAAAA–"

...and nearly fell over.

"–AAAHHHHHHHHH!" Mr. Andersen's attack suffered no such clumsiness and collided hard with Slender Man's head, snapping it back hard enough from a forward-bent position that the eldritch machine nearly fell over backwards.

Mr. Andersen didn't stop with that one success though. He swung again, hitting the Slender Man across his lack of face, kicking him in his spaghetti-thin chest, smashing him across the nearly non-existent shoulder, jabbing him in the non-face, bludgeoning him in the side so hard he thought the thing might split in two, grabbing an arm as it tried to retaliate and twisting it viciously before striking the thing across the head again–

"Holy crap..." Fear stared at the sight that pinned Riley's attention.

"Woo! Go dad!" Anger cheered.

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"Two minutes for slicing!" the man's Joy jeered at the sight. "Two minutes for hooking!"

The Slender Man went down as his feet were pulled out from under him.

"And let's not forget our personal favorite," the man's Anger gave an evil grin and drew back a pair of levers. "Two minutes for HIGH STICKING!"

The Real World

–and stared as the Slender Man caught it in his spindly little hand.

Right... Limbs limited to physically possible movement... How droll.

A foot so thin it was nearly a javelin buried itself in Mr. Andersen's stomach, doubling him over as the Slender Man pulled the man across his downed form and stood in one smooth movement. He grabbed the man's punching arm with one hand, twisted it almost to breaking, and raised the other hand, extended two fingers–

Look at me.

–and waited for the man's eyes to stare at him in horrified realization.

Mr. Andersen's Headquarters

"Bracing positions!" the man's Fear yelled. "We're about to lose the eyes!"

The Real World

I am the last thing you will ever se–

Crack!

The Slender Man staggered from a blow to the back of his head.

Mrs. Andersen's Headquarters

"Get... your... hands... off... my/our... husband!" Mrs. Andersen's Sadness voiced in perfect time with the woman herself as she held a hockey stick of her own across the Slender Man's throat and pulled back with all her might.

"MESS WITH MAMA BEAR'S FAMILY AND PAY THE PRICE!" the woman's Anger screamed.

The Real World

The Slender Man grabbed the stick restraining his head with both hands and snapped it before whipping around, intending to split the woman's face with his bare han–

His strike flew wide as he took a blow to the back of a knee from Mr. Andersen, leaving him open to a blow from Mrs. Andersen's broken improvised weapon.

"Mom?" Sadness voiced to the stunned silence of Headquarters.

"Joy..." Disgust wondered as they all watched Riley's parents take on an eldritch abomination with nothing but a pair of hockey sticks, one of them broken, "when exactly did our parents become awesome?"

"Dad... we can finish this ourselves. We just need a few more seconds."

"Yeah, go help them."

"But..."

"Go!"

That was enough.

Two void-black energy tendrils suddenly sprouted from the Slender Man's back and whipped at the surprised Andersens, wrapping around their throats.

Now–

The Slender Man's body flipped upside down so suddenly that the energy matrix maintaining his tendrils was disrupted, and in the next instant he was blasted forwards past the two as if shot from a cannon. The Andersens stared at the older and more heavyset Dr. Light, his arms extended in a double lunging palm strike where the Slender Man had just been.

Ah... The good doctor... We simply must stop meeting like this.

"Bill, Jill," Dr. Light called to the Andersens as the Slender Man stood back up slowly and deliberately, "get back to Riley."

"But..."

Yes, it didn't matter where they went or what they did. It would all end the same way.

"Don't worry," a younger voice called out, prompting the two to look to where Rock was stepping forwards while supporting his sister Roll and finishing a last-second adjustment, "we've got this."

Did they now?

"Oh, man, this totally needs some awesome music," Joy grinned widely. "Something fast... upbeat..."

"Something..." Riley agreed, thinking on what her emotions had told her that the Light twins had said about the Slenderman, as well as a few things that had happened to them on the way to save her. As she did, an idea bulb that had rolled near the console lit up. "...that shows we believe in them."

Joy blinked and picked up the lit bulb, before smiling brightly.

"I think this is a great idea!" she declared and slotted it into the currently empty socket. "Anger, go pick a few things out of my stash of instruments that you all rifle through all the time while thinking I never notice! Disgust, we're going to need some makeup–"

Dr. Light stood there, hands outstretched in the same position he'd ended his strike in, staring at the Slender Man and trying to control his trembling.

You always made such a good Jekyll, Doctor.

No matter how much he wished he didn't, he remembered the circumstances of his first meeting with the memetic abomination with crystal clarity. (36)

I much preferred you as Hyde though.

Dr. Light clenched his eyes shut at the images that assaulted him, fresh as ever.

Oh, the leg bones stretch gro~tesquely, and the arm bones snap quite lo~udly. The skull bone squeezes the ra~ge glands, and the jaw bone howls with a pai~ned cry. Then you glare with hate at your lov~ed ones, while your claw bones rip through your chi~ld's flesh–

"Dad," a hand dropped on his shoulder, and the man looked to see his two robotic children gazing at him with understanding.

"I'm sorry..." Dr. Light lowered his shaking hands.

"It's okay," Rock smiled.

"Like we said, we've got this," Roll added.

Then perhaps they should stop talking and bring it.

"Hey, mom?" Riley asked as he parents joined her again, looking prepared to get her out of the chair as fast as possible, and preferably as far away from the current room as they could run. "I know you probably want me to get out of here asap, but there's something I still need to do to help Rock and Roll. And I need you to press that red button there so I can do it."

Her parents looked confused, and more than a bit frightened, but they didn't immediately try to grab her out of the chair.

"But...?" her father managed to ask a whole field of questions with one word.

"That Slenderman thing... runs on belief, right? Well... I can maybe give them a boost... I just need to go inside my head and perform an epic song number with my emotions and I realize that makes no sense, but I promise I can explain later. Just... trust me for right now? Please?"

Her parents exchanged glances, before nodding to each other.

"Of course, honey," her mom leaned in and gave her a hug before her dad pressed the button that activated the original function of the Mind Machine and sent her inside her own head.

Rock and Roll charged, forming their arms into mediums for the emotional weapons. Slender Man formed two black-energy tendrils from his back and prepared to defend.

The first shot of the Joyous Sunburst from Rock was blocked by one of the tendrils, which promptly disintegrated in a flash of yellow light and a soundless scream from Slender Man himself. Roll's shot of Angry Flame tore straight through the other tendril, blasted through Slender Man's frame, and elicited another cry as the eldritch robot bent over double.

The two proceeded to unload everything they had on the Slender Man from where they stood. Joyous Sunbursts, Blooming Disgusts, Angry Flames, Sad Rainclouds, Frantic Frights, and even what they had left of their Zen Busters were fired one after the other at the pained Slender Man, who convulsed and screamed soundlessly with each hit until–

click

click

They were out already?

The Slender Man froze in his pained position before slowly, deliberately, straightening up to show his completely unmarked body (37) and pointed one hand at the stunned Light twins. His fingers spun and rearranged themselves into a bizarre five-pronged Jacob's ladder that began forming an orb of black energy in its center.

His turn then...

The black bolt shot, not at either of the Light twins, but at Riley, prompting Rock to jump in the way with both arms crossed defensively. The shot struck and a wave of monochrome grayness spread over a shocked Rock Light, who stood there unsteadily for a few moments before collapsing listlessly to the floor.

Heh... So predictable.

Dr. Light felt his blood run cold as he saw his son drop to the floor and looked around for something he could use to maybe help turn the tide. His gaze fell on the downed biker robot from earlier.

That would do.

All he needed was a minute and some luck.

"Okay, now the lyrics are going to go like–" Riley began while Disgust flitted around getting all of the emotions into costume, only to be cut off as Sadness tugged on her shirt.

"Um..." Sadness held up the Mind Reader, the headline declaring 'WE BELIEVE!' before opening it up to reveal the interior to be sheet music complete with lyrics. "Are these them?"

"Er..." Riley blinked in complete surprise. "Yes... That's them exactly."

Roll cursed her stupidity as she blocked a follow-up shot with a sweep of her broom, the inanimate object proving unaffected by Slender Man's weapon and incapable of transmitting it to her.

They should have known that would happen. The emotional weapons were all essentially variants of the Zen Buster; non-lethal, non-damaging shots that only affected the target's emotional state. And the Slender Man had already shown that he could take bursts straight from the emotions themselves without lasting effects. With a physical body buffering him?

They'd been wasting their time. Yes, indeed.

The soundless empty echo of her opponent's laughter grated on Roll's nerves and she charged, broom swinging to dispel another shot of... whatever it was. Screw it all, she was using the facts of his new physical body and pounding the bastard into tiny piles of scrap! Just like she and Rock should have done in the first place!

Such anger... Such all-consuming rage...

Roll swung at the Slender Man's head, and found her broom caught fast by a black energy tendril.

Why... she was like a yipping puppy... More ferocious than dangerous.

The tendril wrapped around the broom and tightened as Roll tried to pull it free. And then the broom shattered.

Roll blinked in shock for half a moment before recovering enough to throw the broken handle at Slender Man's head, only for him to bat it away easily as a second black energy tendril wrapped around Roll's neck and hauled her up to what would be eye level if her opponent had eyes.

So rude she was... Didn't she want his weapon?

"Huh...?"

That was what the two of them did, correct? Take the weapons of their enemies and defeat them with their own abilities? Or those of their comrades? Well, he had one of his own this time. Thanks to their own efforts even. It only seemed fair that they should have it as well. All she needed to do was reach out and take it. She was certainly close enough for it.

"Nnnngh..."

One touch, and The Void Stares Back would be all hers. He was quite fond of the weapon they'd helped give him. So much that he'd decided to name it. She should take it for her own and think of him every time she used it. Think of him and how glorious his power was as she inflicted it on others and fell to its sway in turn. Why, her brother already seemed to enjoy it.

"Do... not... want..." Roll ground out through clenched teeth and a vocal processor strained from pressure on her neck as she struggled to break free.

Disappointing...

The Slender Man formed the five-pointed Jacob's ladder with his hand again and a black orb formed in it as he pressed the weapon to Roll's chest and fired.

But refusal had never been an option.

Mr. and Mrs. Andersen held their place directly in front of Riley as the Slender Man dropped a grayed-out Roll to the floor and began advancing on them. It would only get their daughter over their–

They didn't need to worry. Their precious daughter would come to no harm. Why, there was every chance that she couldn't currently be affected by his weapon at all. So, no, he would do nothing to her. She would remain untouched and unsullied from this point forwards. The only person in the whole world to be so.

The Slender Man's arm formed into the five-point jacob's ladder and aimed it directly at them.

Wouldn't that be something? To be the only sane person left in the world as everyone, from strangers to friends to her own family descended into the depths of madness? Left to watch as a tool invented by her dear friends for strictly peaceful purposes was twisted into the cause for global ruin? Left with the understanding that she was part of the reason why such a horror was even possible? Why...

The black orb formed, and Riley's parents closed ranks to shield their daughter.

...it could cause her to sna–

Pnyow!

The Slender Man's hand-weapon was knocked off-target in a flash of light. He turned his faceless head towards the source of the blast and saw Dr. Light standing with a barrel-shaped device strapped over one arm, smoking from the plasma bolt it had fired even as the good doctor shook where he stood.

Well, well... It seemed like Jekyll wanted to play after all. Now...

The Slender Man batted aside three shots from Dr. Light with black energy tendrils from his back.

...how long until Hyde came out? Hmm?

Dr. Light fired again and again as the Slender Man strode leisurely up to him, batting aside the plasma blasts with his black energy tendrils.

How long until his sins overwhelmed him? How long until the weight of guilt for what he'd created became too much to bear? How long until the man who preached peace admitted that his efforts only fueled war? How long until he realized that his precious creations were all failures? How long until he admitted that for all his genius... for all his virtue... for all his effort... for all his good intentions... he was the worst monster of them all?

"I..."

He needed to face facts. The future he had strived to build with his own two hands was a blight upon creation. A foul festering–gloriously so!–abomination that poisoned all caught in its current. He had built the foundation of the future, invented the technology that enabled the horrors that filled it. He was to blame for everyone killed with his inventions. He was to blame for every inch of destruction his creations and their derivatives wrought.

"No... I..." Dr. Light had stopped firing, his arm drooping and his entire body trembling as he stared at the advancing Slender Man. When a black energy tendril reached out to take the makeshift buster on his arm, he couldn't find it in himself to resist.

The likes of Wily, Sigma, and the rest were never the true villains. It had always been only–

"You're not seriously listening to that, are you?" a voice cut across the room, prompting Dr. Light to look up at the screen displaying the inside of Riley's head...

...and did a double-take as he saw Riley and her five emotions decked out like a heavy metal band.

"You? A bad guy?" Riley scoffed. "That's a load of bulls–"

"RILEY!" the girl's mother shouted, causing all six figures to flinch in changrin.

"Sorry mom," Riley apologized. "But still! You're one of the best people I know! Rock and Roll wouldn't be such amazing friends if you weren't a good person too! That's what I believe!"

The Slender Man turned to consider the image above as he idly crushed Dr. Light's improvised weapon.

Was that so? That is what she believed? In the face of all the destruction made possible by this man's so-called 'genius', she believed that?

"Yeah!" Riley shouted back. "And you want to know what else we believe? Then listen up!"

A power chord rang out and the music began. (38)

ERROR: MASTER WEAPON THE VOID STARES BACK ADVERSELY AFFECTING SYSTEMS

EMOTIONAL PROCESSOR OVERLOADED: SYSTEMS UNRESPONSIVE

MASTER WEAPON THE VOID STARES BACK LABELED MALWARE

ATTEMPTING TO DELETE

WARNING: MALWARE CANNOT BE DELETED

ATTEMPTING TO QUARANTINE

WARNING: MALWARE CANNOT BE QUARANTINED

ATTEMPTING TO FIX DAMAGED SYSTEMS

WARNING: MALWARE DAMAGE BEING INFLICTED FASTER THAN SYSTEMS CAN CORRECT

SYSTEM RESTORATION PROGRESS: NEGATIVE

"We pledge allegiance to the faith,"

"of everyone who rolls and rocks!"

UNKNOWN ENERGY ACTIVITY DETECTED

RESUMING INTEGRATION

"And to that greatest hope for which they stand!"

"Two heroes under heaven!"

UNKNOWN ENERGY INTERFERING WITH MALWARE

"Oh, even gods love Rock and Roll!"

SYSTEM RESTORATION PROGRESS: POSITIVE

"Bring liberty and justice to all lands!"

REATTEMPTING MALWARE PURGE

"Repeating Time,"

"It tries us hard."

UNKNOWN ENERGY INTEGRATION SUCCESSFUL

"When every Loop,"

"we're dealt the cards."

ENHANCEMENT MODE INITIALIZING

"And every fight,"

"we're told exactly how we'll lose!"

MALWARE PURGE SUCCESSFUL

"But when we,"

"all lose control:"

EMOTIONAL PROCESSING RESTORED TO NORMAL

"We believe,"

"in Rock and Roll."

"Sis?" Rock sat up shakily, rubbing his head. "What...?"

"In the end,"

"They're gonna help to see us through!"

"I don–" Roll began before black energy tendrils slammed into both of the Light twins and flung them towards the wall. They flipped in midair, effectively on instinct, and hit the wall in mirroring foot-first crouches.

Blinking, they looked at each other to see their sibling encased in a shimmering rainbow glow all over.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

SONG MODE ACTIVATED

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

"I think we just got a new toy," Roll grinned as they both leapt over a second strike from the Slender Man in unison.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

"Then let's put it to good use!" Rock grinned back as the two charged the Slender Man.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

SYSTEM STABILITY AT 100% AND RISING

SYSTEM CAPACITY AT 100% AND RISING

SELF REPAIR SYSTEMS RUNNING AT 1000%

"Do you trust these heroes,"

The Slender Man sent out his tendrils again–

"to save you from the curse?"

–only for the rainbow auras of Rock and Roll combined with mirrored kicks to carve through them like wet tissue paper.

"To take on quests of action and of stealth?"

The Slender Man hastily formed both arms into the five-pronged Jacob's ladder that was his weapon–

"Calamity and ruin,"

–and fired black orbs at them–

"they take it all in stride,"

–which Rock and Roll mirror-punched into nothingness with ease.

"and stare into the face of doom itself!"

The Slender Man let out a soundless cry and formed two very large black energy tendrils to bring smashing in from either side of the glowing Light twins.

"Repeating Time,"

With mirrored arm-blocks, Rock and Roll shattered the tendrils and leapt for the Slender Man.

"It tries us hard."

"When every Loop,"

They launched into twin kicks–

"we're dealt the cards."

"And every fight,"

That the Slender Man caught in each hand with significant effort, being pushed back by the force.

"we're told exactly how we'll lose!"

"But when we,"

The Slender Man pushed back, sending the Light twins into opposing spins–

"all lose control:"

"We believe,"

–that they turned into mirrored spinning kicks to his torso–

"in Rock and Roll."

"In the end,"

–followed by identically mirrored punches to the face–

"They're gonna help to see us through!"

–that launched him backwards.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

The Slender Man caught himself in a one-handstand and sprung back from a follow-up diving kick–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

–forming both hands into his weapon, aiming them at each other–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

–and unleashing a shadowy shockwave–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

–that broke upon Rock and Roll's rainbow auras, but also forced them back. The Slender Man then began charging up a massive ball of blackness between his weapons.

As he did, Riley began to speak as her emotions continued playing the music.

"Would that my cries were heard in the heavens. Would that they were inscribed upon the sky. As I was clutched in an iron fist of shadow and feared that I would be lost in the dark forever."

Seeing it, Rock and Roll stepped together until their rainbow auras were touching before stepping apart, with wisps of their auras stretching between them almost like a net right as the Slender Man fired.

"But I have learned that heroism lives!"

Rock and Roll braced their aura net like they were catching a boulder...

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

...and it held.

"I see now that it will stand forth and win the day against the ruin and the madness."

And as it held, the wispy net began attacking the giant orb of blackness–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

"Even for those who trust them not, they shall strike down the wicked," –slowly converting it into a massive rainbow orb instead.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

"and raise the flag of justice for all to see."

And the Slender Man stared in disbelief–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

"And this is forever why–"

–as they threw it right back at him.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

He reached out both his hands and black energy tendrils to catch it like they did–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

–only for the tendrils to burn away and his hands to prove no impediment.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

The Slender Man was engulfed in the massive rainbow orb for several moments–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

–before being released, his mechanical body smoking and smoldering.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

Only to meet twin charging punches to the chest that stunned him–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

–followed by two roundhouse kicks from either direction to the neck–

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

–that popped his head clean off.

"We believe in Rock and Roll!"

Roll pushed the decapitated machine to the side while Rock held out one hand to catch the head and formed the other into a screwdriver. (39)

"So... that's...?" the emotions heard through Riley's senses as they made plans for cleaning up Headquarters. There was so much to do. In addition to the huge mess that needed cleaning after Slenderman's occupation of Riley's head and the ensuing fight, there were all sorts of memory orbs that they all needed to convert to one or more emotions before sending to long term. And that wasn't even mentioning all the damage done to Riley's extended mindscape that would take a long time to put right. But put it right they would. For now, Riley was planning on finding the couch and laying down for a while once she got home so as to not need any of her emotions at the console, thus freeing them to clean up Headquarters. (40)

At the moment, Riley was leaning on her parents for emotional support and fiddling with a hockey puck she'd picked up off the floor while Rock and Roll presented a disturbingly black chip to everyone.

"Yeah," Rock's voice was heard. "That's Slender Man's IC chip."

"He's trapped there, completely unable to hurt anyone so long as we don't plug it into anything," Roll's voice added.

"That's good," Joy sighed in relief and leaned back in her chair. "I don't know about the rest of you, but I'm all for locking him up and getting on with our life. Whaddya say?"

"Um..." Sadness started, looking a bit uncomfortable. "Well..."

"What Sadness is trying to say is that you've been outvoted Joy," Disgust cut in.

"Huh?" Joy blinked in confusion.

"He really hurt Riley with what he did," Sadness pointed out.

"As long as that chip exists, someone could possibly send Slenderman back in here, or give him a new body, and we can't let that happen," Fear looked as determined as Joy had ever seen him.

"Um, I'm not sure that's–"

"GET HIM!" Anger yelled suddenly and all of the emotions save a confused Joy hit their controls at the same time.

"So long as–" Rock began, only to be interrupted as a tired Riley suddenly lunged forwards, swinging the hockey puck she held like a bludgeon.

"AAAAAAHHH!" She screamed, smashing the sport supply onto the chip over and over again, reducing the delicate piece of technology to pieces, and then smashing the pieces to smaller pieces, and smashing those smaller pieces until they resembled dust more than anything else. After nearly a minute of fury where everyone else could only watch in stunned shock, Riley collapsed weeping into her mother's arms. Her father joined the comforting motion.

"–no one breaks it, he can't escape," Rock sighed with resigned understanding. "Being of pure thought, remember? He doesn't need a physical form to survive."

Riley froze in her post traumatic sobbing at that and looked at Rock with weary horror.

"I was trying to tell you all..." Joy snapped inside her head.

"...oops."

"It's fine," Roll waved her apology off. "I was having trouble stopping myself from doing the same thing."

"Besides," Dr. Light began, "there are other beings similar to him. Others that will be as unhappy about his actions as we are and are in a better position to do something about it. We are not likely to see him again for a long time."

"You're certain about that?" Mr. Andersen asked.

"Quite," Dr. Light told the man. "I believe we all owe you a much more thorough explanation of things than we've been able to give so far. But for now, I believe it best that we all rest and recover from today's ordeals. Now... if I can just figure out where Auto got to during all of this and whether or not he can drive a vacuum cleaner..."

It was a lot for the Andersens to take in. Their daughter was caught in a time loop like that Groundhog Day movie? It was overseen by gods from ancient (and even modern) mythology? Some of them, like the Slenderman, liked to torment 'loopers' for fun? There was no known way for it to end? There were countless other universes that were undergoing the same thing (and Dr. Light's was one of them)? The very existence of their reality hinged on Riley's well-being? Riley had five voices inside her head that supposedly represented her emotions?

That last one should have probably been a great deal more disturbing to them than it was.

"One question Doctor..." Mr. Andersen finally spoke up. "How many times have you had to explain this to us?"

"Me personally? To you specifically?" the doctor raised an eyebrow. "This is my first time. Though I suspect your daughter's explained it a few times already. She seemed rather confident that you would take it well after all."

"I see..." Mrs. Andersen paused. "And... we might begin 'looping' as well?"

"Perhaps," Dr. Light nodded. "Or perhaps by some convergence of odd circumstances you may simply begin Dreaming of past Loops. Or, even more rarely, a combination of both like I have."

"Of... of course," Mr. Andersen nodded. "Well... at least Riley now knows it's too dangerous to go messing with the contents of her head, right?"

"Oh, sure," Dr. Light smirked in amusement. "Much like humanity has long since learned that it is dangerous to play with fire. Or to ride in wheeled vehicles. Or to cross the oceans in boats. Or to fly higher than the birds. Or to go into space." (41)

"But–"

"Mrs. Andersen, please understand that the single greatest threat to a looper's mental health is boredom. The best remedy for this is experimentation, novelty, uniqueness, and new ideas. Riley's idea to bring her emotions outside her head is not one that I foresee being easily discarded. She may set it aside for a time after this event, but I have no doubt that she will return to the concept eventually. Perhaps in a Loop with far fewer safeguards against disaster than we can provide. We can teach her proper experimental procedures and safety precautions to lessen potential disaster, as well as how to take such things slowly. A lesson we ourselves could perhaps use a refresher in."

The Andersens looked at each other, uncertain.

"I'd say we could also teach her the value of never giving up, but I do believe your daughter already knows that very well."

The Andersens found they had no argument for that.

Riley lay on the bench looking at the clouds and wondering just how long today's cleanup effort was going to take. Not the one at the lab, the one inside her head.

Every day, most of her emotions had taken leave to go out and help with cleanup efforts. It made sense, strictly speaking, but it left Riley herself a bit stunted for the day. Plus, she felt extremely paranoid that the emotions that left to help wouldn't come back. Even though they always did, and promised they always would.

"Riley," Joy had told her, "It doesn't matter why we leave or how far we go, we'll always come back to you. That's a promise."

It was the most reassuring and heartwarming thing any of her emotions could have told her. So why was she feeling more paranoid about the concept now than when she'd had the eldritch embodiment of paranoia squatting in her head?

"Maybe because me and Fear stayed behind today?" Sadness suggested.

"Maybe," Riley admitted back, "but would you two have been the ones to stay behind if I wasn't already inclined to feel this way?"

It was chicken-and-the-egg complicated. Riley's emotions influenced her behavior, but her need for any particular emotion influenced their behavior. It was insanely circular reasoning, but it boiled down to the same thing: They were in this together, for better or worse.

Riley felt the familiar, comforting pulse of Unity Island activating. She'd been drawing on that one a lot in the past couple of days, actually. It helped keep her mind off of... that.

Riley closed her eyes as several memories played in her head unbidden and shuddered.

"Sorry, we'll send those back down immediately," Fear told her quickly.

"It's fine," she sent back. "Not your f–"

"Hey," the voice of Rock interrupted her mental conversation and Riley felt the bench shift as something leaned against it from the back. Riley glanced to see her new friend leaning against the back of the bench, facing away from her.

"Hey," she said back, before the two settled into a few minutes of silence.

"You want to talk about it?" Rock finally said. He didn't need to say what 'it' was. They both knew there was only one event he could mean.

Riley spent a couple more minutes of intense internal debate, where her emotions tried to convince her to go through with it and she tried to talk them out of talking her into it.

"Not really," she finally said, much to Sadness and Fear's disappointment.

"Do you mind if I talk about it then?" Rock asked. "Not this one, I mean. The first time I dealt with... him ."

Riley blinked in surprise. She hadn't really considered the fact that the Lights had obviously met–

"Hey guys!" Joy's voice called out. "We're back!"

"You're early," Fear noted.

"Eh, it felt like a good time to take a break," Joy waved it off.

"Plus, Anger blew up at some of the mind workers," Disgust added. "He wanted them to dump all the memories from that day and they told him nothing doing. Something about having to dump too many memories already or something."

"Sorry Riley, I think they sent a few back up here to spite me."

"Also, they sort of told us to get out of their way and stop interfering," Joy added sheepishly. "Said we weren't really helping... Anyway, what's going on? What's Rock doing here?"

"He wants to tell us about the time he first met Slenderman," Sadness replied before Riley could say anything.

"Oooo... sounds interesting!" Joy enthused, and Riley felt a sudden surge of intense curiosity.

"Gee, thanks Joy."

"You'll say that with less sarcasm later, I'm sure."

"Okay..." Riley gave in to the desire with a sigh.

And so Rock did. He spun her a tale of a mysterious Halloween night, when robots themed straight out of a horror movie marathon crawled out of the woodwork and plunged the city into madness, terror, and death. A tale where Rock was cut off from all of his friends, family, and allies to be gradually worn down by the cruelty and sadism of his opponents and the people they had infected to turn against him. Where he was forced to fight against his own infected father in a duel to the death, the both of them surviving only due to a timely intervention before their savior was savagely cut down.

"And that's when he finally showed himself," Rock said. "Stepped out and proceeded to prove that I could do nothing to him. He had me broken and beaten in minutes, and I couldn't stop him."

"Did Mega Man save you?" Riley asked. "Like you saved me?"

Rock paused for a moment. "You still haven't figured it out?"

"Figured what ou–" Riley cut off and blinked as it all clicked into place. "Wait... you're Mega Man? Does that mean Roll...?"

"She does the 'Mega Woman' bit most Loops," Rock told her, before slipping a photo to Riley.

She took it and looked at the familiar faces of Rock and Roll, only clad in armor and helmets. Rock's was cyan on his torso, upper arms, and upper legs, with bold blue for his lower arms, hands, lower legs, feet, hips (looking like he had a pair of briefs on), and most of his helmet. Roll's was similar, except yellow and cream instead of blue and cyan. The main differences past that were that her helmet apparently had an opening for her ponytail and her chest had additional yellow armor shaped like a sports bra, clearly designating her as female.

"Wow..."

"She's the one who saved me that Loop," Rock continued. "She saw how bad the fight was going, compared with what the internet had on Slenderman, and figured out his game. Then she commandeered a global broadcast to inspire the whole world into believing I could take him."

"What did she say?"

"A bunch of stuff that I find kind of embarrassing to repeat..." Rock's voice sounded like he was blushing, but Riley couldn't confirm that with him facing away from her. "It's... Do you know what I believe in Riley?"

Riley shook her head, before remembering that Rock couldn't see the gesture.

"I believe in the potential of humanity. I believe in the potential of robots. I believe in the possibility of people that are inherently different to understand each other and get along. To work together for a future greater and brighter than any one person could ever hope to achieve alone. I believe in the ability to stand up no matter how many times life knocks us down, and to keep going no matter what obstacles are put in our way. I believe that we can all stand together and become strong, that we possess the tools we need to solve any problem we can face. And that even if by some chance we don't, there are others who do that will stand with us to bring about that bright shining future. We may not always agree what that future should be or how to get there, but as long as we have faith in each other, we will get there nonetheless. No matter how long it takes, or how many setbacks we suffer, we will get there."

Riley blinked in astonishment and wondered if this was what finding religion felt like.

"Roll, she... she told everyone in the world that the one who put his faith in them now needed their faith in turn. That the one who had invested in them all of his hopes and dreams, needed theirs invested in him. She... heh... she asked them to believe in the one who believed in them."

Riley blinked at that last line. "Was that a reference to something?"

"Gurenn Lagann," Rock smirked.

"Ah... never read that... or watched it... whatever. What did you do?"

"I took their hopes, their faith, and all their dreams... and I punched the ever-loving daylights out of the Slenderman. One. Two."

Riley snorted in amusement as she watched Rock mime a jab and then an uppercut.

"I... I think he may have held a grudge..."

"Maybe..." Riley admitted somberly.

"I just want you to understand something, Riley," Rock continued. "What you're feeling? What the Slenderman did to you? We've been there. We've felt that. Maybe not exactly the same, but close enough. You are not alone in this."

"It's..." Riley felt the tears come and didn't try to stop them. "He was in my head ! Do you know what that's like?! I want to rip open my skull and scrub my brain within an inch of its life, and I don't think it would be enough! The things he was doing in there! The things he told me! The...sob"

"The things he wanted you to do for him?" Rock spoke up, and Riley's tears slowed even as her blood froze. "Yeah, he pulled that one on me too. He started with whispers to join him, to give in to the madness 'so we could rule together' to paraphrase. Then he started getting really disturbing..."

"I think at one point he was saying that he wanted to adopt me, or marry me, or adopt and then marry me (or was that the other way around (42))? I dunno sniff I was trying real hard not to listen to him. I just... I was so helpless... I could almost feel myself breaking and was sure I'd never be put back together again..."

"And then you kicked him out of your head, sealed him in a physical body, and proceeded to go heavy metal on him."

"That was my emotions..." Riley sniffed, before allowing herself a small smile.

"No, that was all of us."

"Together."

"Period.

"End of discussion."

"Double-taps no take-backs."

"Riley, the last time we fought the Slenderman, it took an entire planet's worth of belief to turn the tide. This time it just took you."

"...a robot body, some magic song powder, and a musical number," Riley added with a half-chuckle.

"Never underestimate the power of a good musical number," Rock grinned.

Riley was surprised to find herself in a fit of giggles at that one.

"So... what's next?" she asked upon getting herself under control.

"Next, after we finish getting the lab back in shape, we try the experiment again," Rock told her, "only smarter."

Riley didn't need to be told what experiment. There was only one that it could be. Bringing her emotions outside her head. Knowing what had happened last time, the idea filled her with dread. But... she still really wanted to find a way to make it work.

"We're here for you Riley, no matter what."

"Soo... what do you mean by smarter?"

"To start with, we're only going to bring one emotion out at a time. Basic frame, no accessories, much less weapons of any kind. We're going to keep them hooked up so the process can be reversed immediately if needed and there will be no walking around outside the lab during the experiment until later stages, and only then if you're certain you'll be fine. With your consent, either Roll or myself will monitor the experiment from inside your head while the other monitors from outside it. We've got a couple of hypothesis about symbiotic connections between you and your emotions, and we want to see if we can possibly isolate that connection and figure out how you can build it up. So we'll be attempting to induce an emotional reaction based on whichever one is outside your head at the time and taking readings."

"How long do you think it'll take?"

"No idea," Rock shook his head. "Our Loop's duration is pretty flexible, and we've never tried something like this before a few days ago, so there's a very good chance this is going to take longer than the Loop itself. Because of that, we're also going to be focusing on showing you how to perform the experiment on your own in safe, controlled environments. Which, yes, means boring technical explanations that you're going to have to stay awake for and pay attention to."

"Aww... Can't you just use musical numbers like Phineas and Ferb?"

"Hmm... Lab safety procedures in C-minor..."

Riley couldn't help it. The absurdity of the concept hit her like a ton of bricks and she broke down laughing.

"How about this one?" Rock asked before changing the image. A long dramatic gasp sounded, followed by a dull thump.

"And Fear just fainted," Disgust groaned. "Again."

"Seriously ugly, and whatever it is could really stand to brush its teeth, but not all that scary," Riley deadpanned, sparing a glance over to where Fear had slumped in his chair.

"Yeah, this isn't working," Roll sighed from her spot in Riley's head, her own body seemingly at rest in a third chair. There had been some debate about which of them would get 'internal' duty, but the deciding factor had been Riley imagining her dad's reaction to a boy being inside her head unsupervised. After all, her parents were perpetually only just getting introduced to the idea that she might be interested in boys, so... yeah. "Get Rock to download Fear back in and we'll try someone else."

"Oh! Oh! Me next!" Joy volunteered.

"Roll thinks we should try a different emotion so we don't have to keep waking Fear up," Riley relayed. "Joy's volunteering. And... actually, that reminds me of something I've been meaning to ask you. You mentioned having a Loop with Phineas and Ferb. What was that like? What were their robot masters like?"

"Oh, man," Rock chuckled as he pressed a few buttons on the modified Mind Machine. "That's probably the perfect thing to ask if we're going to test Joy out. Those guys... They made some of the best robot masters, really. Like the hard-skating roller-coaster riding Roller Man, or the refreshment serving Lemonade Man. Soccer Man X7 and Hockey Man Z9 were pretty fun too..." (43)

"How'd Doofenshmirtz work out?" Riley asked as the robot body Fear was inhabiting rearranged itself to a blank androgynous frame, ready for the next occupant. "Was he replaced by Wily?"

"Nah," Rock shook his head. "Dr. Doofenshmirtz was actually a huge Wily fanboy that Loop and they teamed up a few times. Roll and I often teamed up with Perry to take on one or both of them and strangely neither of them figured out that Mega Man and Mega Woman were actually Rock and Roll despite us not trying to hide it. Neither did anyone else for that matter, except Phineas and Ferb really. And Perry."

Rock pondered that strangeness for a moment as the generic robot body rearranged to create Joy's form before continuing.

"Anyway, there was this one time that Doofenshmirtz decided he wanted to create a robot master of his own rather than his usual -inator and–"

"–So Dr. Wily says 'Norm Man?' and Doofenshmirtz replies 'No, just Norm. The 'Man' thing is your trademark after all I mean, unless you think I should ...'"

Joy was so caught up with the giggles that she was barely staying in her seat. Riley on the other hand...

"Enough! Stop!" Riley demanded.

"What's wrong?" Rock looked concerned.

"What's wrong?!" Riley fumed, before getting ahold of herself and taking a deep breath. "Have you ever not gotten a joke that someone else finds hilarious and been really angry about it? Because that's been me for your entire story about Doofenshmirtz and I'm really getting fed up with it! Sorry... I know it's funny, because Joy is cracking up, and I know I should be laughing, but I can't seem to, and it's just ticking me off..."

"Yeah, we thought this might be the case," Roll piped up from inside Riley's head as Rock dutifully began the transfer of Joy back.

"What?!" Anger fumed back. "Why didn't you say anything?!"

"Because that's the point of testing," Roll replied in exasperation. "To see if your assumptions were correct. Why? Are you volunteering to go next?"

"Hey, Rock, what's the plan for testing if I still feel Anger?" Riley asked.

"Hmm... I think we determined the most effective method would be snapping you with rubber bands."

"WHAT?!" Anger bellowed.

"Bad idea! Really bad idea! A bad snap could draw blood, which might bleed too much and get infected and cause us to die!"

"What?" Roll asked incredulously. "Do you have any idea what the sheer odds against that are? Eve–"

"NEVER TELL ME THE ODDS!"

"Yeah... that might not be the best idea at this stage," Riley relayed.

"We thought the same," Rock nodded, "which is why we weren't planning to try Anger until after noticeable results with at least one of the others. If any of your emotions are going to say 'stop' first, it's probably him."

"Hmm..." Riley pondered her emotions and the roles they served for a moment. "Actually, we should probably start with Disgust."

"Wait, what? Why me?" Disgust wondered.

"Hmm... not a bad choice all things considered," Rock nodded. "The lab's pretty clean by necessity and we weren't planning for you to eat lunch still strapped in, so there's negligible chance that she'd be needed to keep you from making a health mistake. So long as we avoid images that provoke a fear reaction, there shouldn't be too much disruption..."

"I. cannot. believe. that. you. found. nothing. wrong. with. broccoli !" Disgust ranted in Riley's head after the day's test. Neither Rock nor Roll had identified any connection that could be made to work over a distance yet, but as they kept reminding her, the whole thing was new territory. They had no more idea of how to solve the problem than she did, really, so it wasn't that surprising.

"Well, it's disgusting and you weren't in my head, so..." Riley shrugged.

"And all those missed snarks! It's like you forgot everything I taught you over the years!"

She had to admit though: Winding up Disgust was amusing. She could see why Joy liked doing it.

"And do not get me started on your fashion sense without me!" Disgust continued ranting. "That's it. We are figuring out how to remain connected over distance, because there is no way I am going to risk you spending a Loop with fashion sense that bad ever. Not happening!"

"So?" Roll asked.

"Disgust is ranting so much the others can't get a word in edgewise," Riley answered, "and I am stiff like you would not believe from sitting down, but other than that I think it went pretty well. I just don't want to do it every day..."

"We won't," Rock told her. "We have a few more ideas that don't require the Mind Machine."

"Oh? Like what?"

"Like trying activities and seeing how well you can feel certain emotions while they're away from the console. Think Anger can handle a hockey game without being directly at the controls?"

"WHAT?! That's cruel and unusual punishment!"

"No," Riley smirked, "but I think I can talk him into trying it anyway."

The Slenderman returned to himself in an unfamiliar pace and tried to figure out what had happened. His failsafe for returning him to his hacking workshop had taken far longer to run its course than it should have. It had also returned him to the wrong place.

If one of the other members of Shoggoth-chan had decided to dump him somewhere as a prank, then he was going to–

A message on the terminal screen–an Admin-quality terminal at that–caught his awareness and he turned his attention to it fully.

Normally, I would see my son's failures as his own problem. However, your actions have threatened his successes. Successes which have reflected well on the reputation of the Olympians. Were his triumphs to be undone, it would reflect poorly on that same reputation, and I cannot allow that. Your actions have been brought to his attention and he should be returning to his office presently. I would suggest you leave before then if you wish all your body parts to remain connected to each other, but the delay in your return I arranged should have made that a moot point. Let this be a lesson to you.

– Zeus

The Slenderman didn't waste any time before bolting. He dove for the door and yanked it open before dashing out...

Wham

...and crashing faceless head-first into a massive bare hairy barrel chest over loud volcano-print swim trunks, and flanked by three very shapely and fit forms in honest-to-Yggdrasil chainmail bikinis. Skimpy ones. All four bodies were very much tanned bronze.

"...I see our beach vacation was not interrupted as a prank," Hephaestus's voice rumbled like a volcano about to blow its top. "You have exactly three seconds to explain yourself before I break you over my knee and give you to the ladies here for discipline. O–"

The Slenderman didn't even wait for the first number to finish before bolting through a gap between the four figures that was just barely wide enough for his impossibly thin frame to slip through and running for all he was worth.

"OH NO YOU DON'T!" the enraged howls of three Valkyries boomed after him as they gave chase.

Slenderman didn't look back as he ran for everything he was worth. All of the usual advantages he boasted in the mortal realm, even before Ascending, meant nothing at this level of existence, making him far too vulnerable for his liking. All the strength he had from belief was offset, matched, exceeded, or even eclipsed by all other beings who existed here. He had no problems messing with the Admins and their precious fragile mortals–enjoyed it immensely in fact–but that was when he had the benefit of plenty of distance between them. Dealing with them face-to-no face? Not a chance.

And so he ran, the sound of three very angry Valkyries hot on his trail. As well as the rumbling sound of a furious volcano god behind them. He needed to get out of the Admin complex. Escape and find his way back to somewhere they had less influence. Not the Nidhogg complex though. Hild and the other Demons and evil Gods rather had it out for the members of Shoggoth-chan in general, so he was no safer in their neighborhood than he was here.

"Hey! There he is, sis! Just like the Great Apollo said!" the third-person speaking Admin declared at the end of the hall the Slenderman was running down.

"I see him," his sister Artemis drew back an arrow and let fly.

The Slenderman was very thankful for many things about himself. Right then he was thankful that his impossibly thin body was ideal for sidestepping arrows before making a sharp turn down another hall.

"Damnit!" he heard Artemis swear. "Aft–"

"Nah, no need. Not with who's waiting for him that way."

What did that mea–

"Well, look whosh it ish!" the drunken slur of Dionysus boomed from ahead. The oaf would be no trouble to get arou–

The Slenderman then spotted the hovering mass of pasta (with two giant meatballs) behind Dionysus, revised that impression, and veered down another side hall. The Flying Spaghetti Monster was one of his least favorite entities in all of creation–eldritch abominations were not supposed to be lovable and tolerant!–but he had no desire to tangle with it right then. Not with who was chasing him.

"He wentsh thatsh way!"

He ran, tearing past doors before seeing a gathering of females in the distance. The elder Charites, Pandora, some goddess from outside the Olympian pantheon, and...

Athena. Nuts.

He abruptly turned down another side hall, a cold sweat enveloping him as he wondered just what the hell was going on. He needed to lose pursuit and fas–

The sound of jeering from many of the side halls informed him that he was being boxed in. Herded almost. It was not a feeling he liked being on the receiving end of. He tore through the Admin complex, taking each unoccupied hall that he found, twisting and turning until he had no idea where he was anymore and simply wanted to find a way out. And then–

"Hello," a two-faced Admin smiled from the sides of each mouth at the Slenderman from between two doors. The sounds of pursuit were distant, he must have gained ground, but closing in fast.

What did he want?

"Want?" the Admin–Janus, if he recalled correctly–spoke from his single head's left-facing face, tossing a key from one hand to the other before his right-facing face continued. "Why to offer you choice!"

Huh?

"A choice! The kind of choice you never give any of your victims," the two faces alternated speaking. "In this case, which of these two doors to take to escape pursuit. Unless you'd rather just wait here for them."

Get to the point already!

"So impatient! Very well, this key can open either door, but only one. Once open, you must face what is behind the door alone. The door on the right holds a magical girl."

They must think him an idiot. He knew exactly who they meant and he wanted no part of her.

"A wise choice. Yes. Magical girls have such a history with eldritch abominations after all. Oh, the violence they perform on the–"

GET ON WITH IT!

"Such impatience, but very well. The door on the left holds a kitty ca–"

He'd grabbed the key and opened the door before another word could be spoken, slamming it behind him.

"Dear, dear," Janus's left face grinned sinisterly. "He could have waited for us to tell him the rest of it."

"To be fair, we did present the choice as obvious," his right face chuckled.

"Ah, but one should always beware the obvious choice!"

"Thanks for helping us get this set up so fast, Hermes!"

"My pleasure!" the Olympian trickster stepped out from where he'd been hidden.

The Slenderman was confused. The room he'd entered seemed to have no walls that could be seen, and the door had vanished behind him as he entered. What trickery was this?

"Hi there!" a chipper female voice greeted him, and the Slenderman turned and looked downwards to see a common calico housecat dressed like a train stationmaster. "I'm Tama!" (44)

He didn't care. He was–

"The Slenderman!" Tama interrupted, her feline expression still chipper. "I've heard of you. You like tormenting innocent people and driving them insane, right? You wanna know what I like?"

He most certainly did n–

The feline's expression suddenly shifted from chipper to a feral glare.

"I. Like. Trains ."

The sound of a steam whistle reached him moments before the front of the train did. (45)

"Sounds like he chose Tama," one of the Palici twins (46) stated with a grin from the archery alcove Janus and Hermes had set up to connect the two rooms. The twin steam gods had been happy to lend one of their steam trains to this little trap of Janus's. Heck, Tama seemed so happy with it, they might let the cat goddess keep it.

"Which I guess means it's your turn, m'lady," his brother gestured to the alcove with a bow.

"Thank you," Madoka Kaname smiled before readying her bow and stepping up to take her shot at whatever Tama had left for her.

AN) I officially lost track of the sheer number of death (or at least severe injury) threats Slenderman got on Spacebattles while writing this fic. I call that a successful villain.

1) Pun, pun, PUN!

2) Apparently a common mistake among the Inside Out fandom.

3) Not the most eloquent first impression there, Riley.

4) Think about what she does most Loops for a second.

5) Known by name as... the Auto-Mobile.

6) Also one of the few polite ways.

7) They were rolling on the floor in hysterics. But then, given the context of what Riley said and what they usually live through, they were just a bit entitled.

8) This is Fear. Well, Mr. Andersen's Fear anyway. Being crazy-prepared is part of the job description.

9) Dr. Light is an idealist, but he's an idealist who's put a lot of thought into this.

10) Specific variations can fall on either side of the equation, or even teeter on the edge.

11) Fear is also ridiculously genre savvy

12) Basically it's a 'calm-down' gun.

13) Plus she'd kind of been reading it way past her bedtime because it was so engrossing despite being specifically told not to by her parents.

14) Oh, come on Joy! Have you learned nothing about tempting fate?

15) What's really scary is that she said that with a completely straight face.

16) NiGHTcapD pointed out something interesting shortly after this portion was originally posted on Spacebattles. Namely that Slenderman just literally hacked Riley. He was apparently doing some independent research on the subject at the time and made the following observations:

Vulnerability: emotion, natural Looper willingness to experiment specifically. Along with a break in Heph's and Janus' schedules.

Exploit: make the Emotions leave Riley's head, while apparently they are still tied to it.

Payload: the Man himself.

17) This would be where Zerorock41 decided to try the equivalent of a deus-ex-machina rage-quit. See Bonus Omake 1.

18) With three shots of tequila to top it off.

19) In case anyone was wondering, I took inspiration for their weapons from their respective power-ups in the Inside Out: Thought Bubbles game.

Bonus: Serials for the Riley Andersen Numbers (RAN series)

RAN-001 - Joy Woman - Weapon: Joyous Sunburst

RAN-002 - Sadness Woman - Weapon: Sad Raincloud

RAN-003 - Anger Man - Weapon: Angry Flame

RAN-004 - Disgust Woman - Weapon: Blooming Disgust

RAN-005 - Fear Man - Weapon: Frantic Fright

20) Some of the police wondered where he'd pulled them from, but Rock just winked and said 'secret' before pulling another from his subspace pocket.

21) We don't know his name. Only that he's from Canada.

22) FFFFFFFFFF–

23) How the heck does that eve–

24) ...well okay then...

25) That small tremor you felt was probably me facefaulting.

26) I don't know about you, but I found this scene creepy as hell while writing it. NiGHTcapD noted that it was proof Slenderman had a heart; twisted, withered, and corrupted beyond mortal comprehension; but there.

27) Sometimes, Roll scales mountains. Other times, she slays them.

28) Roll's broom is far from being 'just' a broom. She's just not used to someone calling it a 'rocket'.

29) Hold on... I've got something in my eye...

30) Will Riley Andersen please report to Lost and Found, we have your Train of Thought. Repeat: Will Riley Andersen pl–

31) A little fridge logic based on some of what we see in the movie. The central emotion can probably be considered the 'lead' emotion of a person's head, implying that it's the person's 'nature'. Joy denotes someone naturally optimistic and extroverted, Sadness someone more sympathetic and introverted, Anger a person aggressive and competitive, Disgust someone either health conscious or socially conscious, and Fear someone naturally timid. All of which grows and changes through life experience, creating exceptionally complex individuals.

32) Me: Well... Damn... That's a hell of a hole I've dug myself.

FTKnight: ...Crisis let's be honest here, there are many things that could be used to describe what you have dug, but called it a hole is like saying Everest is a hill.

33) Keep in mind the emotions likely have no idea how to throw a proper punch or kick beyond watching action movies with Riley.

34) What kind of conversation does that even come up in? Did Riley overhear part of a news report or something?

35) More fridge logic, because in the movie, Defcon 2 was all him losing his temper (in an admittedly controlled fashion), with the alert level never going higher. Which logically means there's one above it. And what's one step past losing your temper? Actual violence. Granted, Mr. Andersen is not the kind of character to use that against his daughter, but in her defense? The guy's lead emotion is Anger. You hurt his family at your own peril.

Which actually brings up some more fridge logic: Those multi-key safety locks? The ones that seem to exist solely to keep the man's Anger from hauling off without cause? They represent Mr. Andersen's control over his temper. Makes you wonder a bit about what his childhood was like to result in a headquarters like that, doesn't it?

36) See the chapter titled A Mega Halloween for more details on that meeting.

37) Hands up: Who forgot the emotion weapons deal zero physical damage?

38) kingofsouls foresaw a heavy metal beatdown. See Omake number 2 for details.

But seriously: Real song - www. youtube watch? v=krtG2l2Po5E

39) Question: Is synchronized ass-kicking already a thing? Answer: Apparently yes. Not a frequent thing, but it's been done according to several responses since the first posting of the chapter. That's actually a something of a relief. I think I'd have been a bit disappointed in humanity if it wasn't.

40) It was generally agreed that the Lights didn't have it much better. They not only had to clean up their lab and home, but also untangle all of the various experimental tech that had warped it in the first place.

41) Sarcastic as it may be, the man has a point.

42) Ew.

43) The Phineas and Ferb Fused noodle Loop thanks to input from Hvulpes, calvinball, and kingofsouls. Because I know you've been wanting to know the Phineas and Ferb Numbers, here's a few me and those three put together:

Roller Man (PFN-001)

Roller Man is one high-flying, fun-loving, roller coaster-riding robot! With the wheels on his feet, he rides the rails of the roller coaster through twists and turns, dips and dives, loop-de-loops, and more!

Master Weapon: Roller Skates - This 'weapon' allows the user to form roller skates on their feet for high-intensity extreme sports action!

Lemonade Man (PFN-002)

Lemonade Man is the answer to beat the summer heat. He's here to serve ice-cold lemonade to one and all!

Master Weapon: Lemonade Squirt - This 'weapon' fires pressurized bursts of pure, sweet lemonade for accurate no-spill service up to a hundred feet away! Ice included!

Wash Man (PFN-003)

When there is a car that needs washing, Wash Man is there to cleanse the dirt and make that car shine! Warning: Beware operating within 1,000 meters of Roll Light as intense rivalry may develop.

Master Weapon: Hydro Wash - This 'weapon' lets loose a small torrent of soap/water to clean the toughest of mud cakes that cover a car!

Snow Cone Man (PFN-004)

Snow cones and S'Winter for all to enjoy!

Master Weapon: Snow Scoop - This 'weapon' allows for the quick and accurate serving of frozen treats! Upgraded to also serve ice cream. With toppings.

Phineas Man and Ferb Man (PFN-005a and PFN-005b)

These two Brobots have been upgraded to be Robot Masters, and are skilled with the daunting and overwhelmingly evil task of micromanagement.

Master Weapon: Bro Creator - This 'weapon' creates a Brobot replica. It's not very sturdy nor lasts very long (shoddy design) these replicas can help build projects by summoning a workforce from out of nowhere.

Hair Woman (PFN-006)

The ultimate stylist has arrived! Shorter hair? Longer hair? She can do it all!

Master Weapon: Hair Growth - This 'weapon' accelerates hair growth, possibly generating weeks of growth in seconds! Good thing Hair Woman is equipped with a suite of barber tools to trim any excess!

Soccer Man X7 (PFN-007)

The gravity-defying athlete we all wish we could be, Soccer Man X7 can run up walls, across rails, and even upside down!

Master Weapon: Gravity Run - This 'weapon' allows the user to defy gravity and run on any surface that will support them!

Gordian Man (PFN-008)

The master of knots has arrived!

Master Weapon: Knots-A-Lot - This 'weapon' produces a length of rope sufficient for tying whatever manner of knot is needed, from a simple half-hitch to the legendary Gordian Knot itself!

Hockey Man Z9 (PFN-009)

The post-apocalyptic sports machine of the future, Hockey Man Z9 will take on any obstacles, from polar bears, to flames, to land mines, to other players to score that goal!

Master Weapon: Slap Shot - He shoots, he scores!

44) www. theguardian world/ 2015/ jun/ 29/ tama-the-cat-3000-attend-elaborate-funeral-for-japans-feline-stationmaster

Tama. A female calico housecat, formerly a stray, that served as the stationmaster at the Kishi station of Japan's rail line from 2006 until her death earlier in 2015 at the age of 16. For a while, she was the station's only employee and she single-pawedly saved the rail from closing. At the time of her death, the company elevated her to the posthumous position of Honorable Eternal Stationmaster and the Japanese people elevated her to the position of Shinto Goddess. She's new upstairs.

45) www. youtube watch? v=hHkKJfcBXcw

46) The Palici twins (no individual names I've yet found) are twin sons of Hephaestus and geyser gods. So... Geysers, hot water, steam, sons of a forge god... They're clearly steampunks. :P

Also, because I didn't mention it earlier, Tama has joined Madoka as one of Heph's apprentices. I'll see if I can't find an excuse to compile some of the Admin shenanigans involving her.

47) Bes is an interesting god. At least I thought so the first time I read The Kane Chronicles (from which I cribbed a fair bit of his personality). For more info: www. landofpyramids bes. htm

48) There had been no further full robot invasions after the Slenderman, but there had been a few hiccups along the way. Such as a fringe anti-robot terrorist group called the Emerald Spears to name one example, at one point resulting in Riley's dad getting into a fistfight with the leader, Xander Payne.

49) She'd also noted, not for the first time and certainly not for the last, that puberty was nowhere near all it was cracked up to be.

Bonus Content: Deus Ex Rage Quit Omake by Zerorock41

[Non-Canon][Mega Man/Inside Out/Adminspace]

Slendy would have been smirking if he had a face. Everything was going according to plan. The girl was his, and now he could ttly fck with those Mega Dweebs without fear of–

AFTFDUYFGAYFYTGW–

(Adminspace)

The Slenderman woke up at his terminal. "What the Fk? My in-loop Avatar-"

"Has been forcefully ejected."

A comically large sweatdrop appeared on Slendy's head as he slowly turned around. Much to his shock and fear, an angry Hephaestus, an angry Skuld and an even more angry Janus were standing before him. Looking past them, a chuckling Cthulhu sat.

Slendy realized then and there: He was right fucked.

(In-Loop)

Riley simply stopped moving and the Emotion Masters were free to move around again. With help from Dr. Light, Rock and Roll returned the emotions to their place in Riley's head, Mr. and Mrs. Andersen simply cradled their daughter (who started panicking once her emotions got back into place), and Rock and Roll made note never to screw with people's heads ever again.

Happy Halloween Everyone!

Bonus Content: (Scratch)Jem and the Holograms(/Scratch) Riley and the Emotions Omake by kingofsouls:

[Non-Canon][Mega Man/Inside Out]

The two robots lay on the ground, comatose in their despair. Now with them out of the way, nothing would stand between Riley and himself. Not even Doctor...

"HEY SLENDY!"

Slender Man turned around, and if he had eyebrows would have raised them as he looked at the strange sight. Riley was standing there with a double necked guitar, alongside her emotions in their natural non-robotic forms. They also bore instruments of various shapes and sizes.

The speed of constructing this stage was on par with the average build time of those two children from the Tri-State Area.

He was about to refute their advance before Riley screamed "For those about to rock..." into the mic, letting forth a stream of pyrotechnics and a heavy metal riff of her ax. A visible wall of sound burst from the comically oversized amps that no one noticed until that exact moment despite each one roughly the size of a small moving truck, and like a rocket the sound raced towards Slender Man and slammed into him, launching him into a wall.

This did not stop Riley and her emotions. They shouted as one, with even more pyrotechnics firing, larger than the previous with the added perk of changing colors. "WE SALUTE YOU!"

What next could only be described as musical massacre so metal that the finale of the impromptu rock show Crashed the Loop in an explosion of heavy metal, pure determination, silent screams of rage, and even the color orange.

Bonus content: Inside Out Loops (by kingofsouls, Xomniac, LordCirce, Blazingen1, Purrs (editor) - Originally posted to Spacebattles on July 8th 2015)

How Riley Andersen Loops

Riley Anchors her home loop (Inside out). Her emotions - Joy, Sadness, Disgust, Anger, and Fear - are "Emotional Loopers". Riley is a normal Anchor, and thus no special rules apply to her. Her Emotions however have special rules that apply to them.

During each Loop, the status of an Emotional Looper depends if Riley herself is Awake or not.

If Riley is Awake, at least one of her Emotions is Awake as well. This is to provide stability for Riley herself.

If Riley is not Awake, there is no guarantee that any of the Emotions are Awake as well. The "At least one Awake" rule only applies if Riley is Awake.

An Emotional Looper cannot exist in any Loop without their host. In other words, if the Emotions are in a loop, Riley is also in that Loop.

An Emotional Looper can Loop in outside of Riley. This can take any form, such as being a relative of Riley. Again, they cannot exist outside of a Loop Riley is not in.

If Riley does something stupid and causes a Loop Crash, the Awake Emotions get punished as well. Sucks, but they are a part of her so it's something that cannot be helped. The inverse is also true.

Emotional Loopers have all standard Looper Powers such as the Ping and Subspace Pockets.

Emotional Loopers cannot directly access their Host's Subspace Pocket.

Riley's mindspace - i.e where the Emotions and everything in it - is a part of Riley. How it works is below:

Riley's mindspace is that of Baseline Riley before Awakening. This includes any Core Memories Riley would have created before Awakening.

The Exact moment Riley Awakens, her mindspace instantaneously shifts to what it was during the previous loop. This includes Core Memories. Any unAwake Emotion will most likely panic at this point as they would not know why the core memories suddenly changed and why Riley is still functioning normally as if they hadn't

When Riley Awakens, her Core Memory holder will shift into a tiered design, with In-Loop Core Memories (Core Memories Riley obtained before Awakening during a Loop) on the bottom tier and her Baseline/Looping Core Memories on the top tier. Core Memories created by an unAwake Riley do not Loop with her.

Inside Out.1 (kingofsouls)

-Reality-

Riley Andersen.

11 year old, born in Minnesota.

Favorite Sport: Hockey.

Family Nickname: Monkey

Riley sat in the car, approaching their new home in San Francisco. Mom was reading the map, directing the little family towards an uncertain future in their new home.

Yet for Riley it wasn't exactly uncertain.

She swore that she had already lived through this. It was either that or she was overthinking things.

"Riley, look at that!" Riley eyed what her mother noticed: A collection of giant dinosaurs.

She smiled as the family slowed down and prepared to visit. At the very least, the familiarity felt nice.

-Meanwhile, at Headquarters-

Havoc was an apt description of how Joy's last week had been. The most primary concern of hers was keeping Riley happy, that much was true, but this situation overrode that harder than a landslide crashing down a mountain.

Mostly because of the panic Fear was endlessly screaming, running to and fro as Riley's emotions tried to make sense of the crisis that they faced. He was screaming on and on to the point where Joy didn't really mind Anger punching him to make him stop, even if it only bought a few seconds of silent calm.

"Fear, I know the whole being afraid thing is yours, but aren't you being a little bit...dramatic?"

Fear stopped in the middle of his raving to face Joy, the emotion and Ringleader of Riley's emotions standing calm. "Joy, we are in the middle of a catastrophe!? How can you be so calm about Riley's life turning upside down?"

"It's not so bad Fear, honest! It could be an adventure!"

Fear grabbed Joy in panic, taking her to the control Panel. With a push of a button, several memories came from Long Term Memory. "Joy I am not sure if you noticed – OF COURSE YOU NOTICED YOU WERE THERE – but Riley's memories aren't working right! It was fine a week ago but now everything isn't working right, and we should panic!"

To prove his point he recalled a memory, the golden orb coming down from Long Term Memory and showing the memory inside: Riley in full hockey gear, standing in a park with her team, grinning in unison. Her parents stood off to the side, their joy in their daughter evident. Joy just scoffed as she walked over to Fear. "Fear, there's nothing off about that memory. Riley had a good time. Heck, we got pretty far. Quarterfinals, am I right?"

"Joy, that's not what I'm panicking about." He replayed the memory, and froze it on a rather jarring piece of evidence: The Golden Gate Bridge standing tall in the distance. "How can Riley have a memory of being with a hockey team in San Francisco! We've never been to San Francisco!"

"Fear makes a pretty good point." mused Anger behind his paper.

"See, even Anger agrees with me. And don't get me started with the Core Memories and the Islands."

With a push of it's button, Fear opened up the holder for the Core Memories - the very essence of Riley. In them stood several of them, many of the orbs a mix of different colors.

Joy's (new) favourite was a golden orb mixed with blue, Riley embracing her parents in a tearful hug as Mom and Dad returned it. Joy could almost feel the raw power of that single moment.

Fear didn't see it that way. "The core memories changed as well, Joy. Her entire personality could have changed! These are the end times, Joy!" Fear bellowed, shaking Joy as he begun to panic like he had never panicked before – a great feat to accomplish for a man who was the embodiment of fear itself. "The end times I tell you! The end times!"

"Uh... Anger? Could you...?"

With a single punch, Fear smashed into the glass windows of Headquarters, Fear slumping off into unconsciousness. Brushing herself off, Joy smiled at Anger, the emotion walking back to his couch. "Thank you."

"Fear has a point, Joy." Disgust, having been looking out of the windows and at the Islands of Personality – the strongest parts of Riley's personality given form within the mindscape – called over Joy as she gave a look of indifference towards the Islands. "Core Memories don't change overnight. I mean, can you even get another memory to replace a Core Memory? I hope so, because those new Islands are clashing with each others color schemes."

Joy mused, walking back and forth as Sadness leafed through a mind manual. "I don't think so. Nothing in the manuals say anything about Core Memories just... changing overnight, or Core Memories of two different emotional colors. What do we do Joy?"

Joy said nothing as she paced, thinking and thinking about what was happening. For some reason, the others were unable to remember what had happened in the past year and expressed concern about the sudden change.

Yet Joy had not. Why?

Before she knew it, Joy found herself surrounded by her fellow emotions, Fear awoken from his impromptu slumber. They eyed Joy with expectant eyes, eager for her to lead. It was if they were lost sheep, and Joy their shepherd who always knew where to go.

"Joy? What do we do?"

Joy uttered the words she was always afraid to say:

"I... I don't know."

Inside Out.2 (kingofsouls)

-Reality-

Riley heard the news again that day. How her father had once again gotten a new job, and how they were once again moving to San Fransisco for that job.

Somehow, someway, Riley was back in her old home, just in time to move to her new one. Again .

Something was definitely strange. She slowly swept her gaze over her room, once filled with her possessions, now barren and save for her laptop.

On impulse, Riley flipped it open and turned it on. She was thankful Dad hadn't disconnected the wifi yet, just in case it was still needed. Which, in her opinion, it most certainly was.

After all, she needed to do some research.

-Headquarters-

Anger muttered irritably as he sat on his couch eyeing the other Emotions as they processed the changes that had overcome Riley before they knew what was happening.

Currently, Fear and Disgust gazed at the Islands of Personality in confusion, taking in the... altered view. Sure, the five initial Islands, Goofball, Hockey, Friendship, Honesty and Family were all there, but they were vastly overshadowed by the array of much larger and more detailed Islands that loomed before them.

While the two cautious Emotions were relatively okay with the situation for the moment, Joy was an entirely different story. The peppy Emotion had taken one look at the scenery before bolting for the Core Memories. While the fact that the original five golden Memories she was responsible for were faded and cloudy was enough to whip her into a frenzy, it was the sight of the mottled colors of the far more prominent and influential Memories that had induced the mother of all panic attacks, causing her to rush to a far corner of Headquarters where she was currently hyperventilating while muttering about finding her happy place. Sadness stood vigil, concern for Joy obviously mounting within the blue Emotion.

Overall, the Emotions knew something was seriously off about their situation, but Riley was normal, the Islands, odd as they were, were working perfectly, and for whatever reason Fear couldn't truly find it in himself to get Riley to panic. Hence, the real question was if there was a problem in the first place.

"You know, those islands look kind of tacky..."

"You think they're safe? They look kind of crowded. Do you think there's a chance of cross-contamination?"

"How can the Islands cross-contaminate?"

"I don't know, actually. I just hope things won't get any worse."

"I don't see how they could look any worse . Heck, I'm freaking out just as much as you usually do."

"I do not freak out that much." Disgust scoffed, giving him that look. "Okay, so maybe I do freak out a lot, but come on, it's my job! I need to keep Riley safe, you of all people should know what that's like!"

"Then be afraid then! Look at this mess!" The green entity waved her arms frantically. "Doesn't any of this ring any alarm bells with you!?

"I'm trying Disgust, but I-I-!" Fear fumbled frantically for a second before groaning and slapping a hand to his face. "I just can't. I know I should be afraid, but I'm not. I'm more afraid about not being afraid." Fear gasped, implications finally reaching him. "Oh no. What if I'm sick? What if I'm crazy? What if I'm sick and crazy!? What's going to happen to Riley!? I can't keep RIley safe if I'm sick and crazy!"

Anger rolled his eyes as he shuffled his paper. "We're emotions, genius. We don't get sick."

" You don't know that for sure! "

Anger huffed as he balled up his newspaper 'BREAKING NEWS: TIME IN TURMOIL! WHAT THE HECK IS GOING ON!?' , deciding enough was enough. "Alright, enough is enough. You two arguing isn't going to get us anywhere any time fast."

Disgust was the first to gag. "Anger, I'm not sure if you've noticed, but the Islands are different and Riley isn't acting weird. Isn't that a good time for you to do your job?"

"Look, you want proof everything's alright? It's standing right in front of you." Anger jabbed a fuzzy finger forwards.

Fear flinched as he glanced left and right frantically before staring at his shorter counterpart in confusion. "M-m-me?"

"No, doofus, the other purple coward. Of course you! " Anger barked irritably. "You're not panicking about the islands, you're not freaking out about how Riley's acting, and you know why? It's because deep down, you know that this is right and that this is how it should be! Am I wrong?"

"U-uh, well, I, uh..." Fear shuffled nervously as he was put on the spot.

"That's what I thought." Anger nodded gruffly. "Instead of making Riley worry about the changes inside of herself, you should be making her panic about how the world's changed around her instead."

Fear's pupils shrank to pinpricks as he processed that statement. He tried to dart for the console...

" Except! "

And was promptly brought to a halt by Anger grabbing the back of his collar and holding him in place.

"I'm not going to let you do that." The tough Emotion growled. "Panicking won't accomplish anything. What Riley needs most of all at the moment is a clear head, and that's what I'm going to give her."

"How come Joy's freaking out but you're taking this so calmly, huh?" Disgust cocked an eyebrow expectantly.

The red Emotion snorted as he cast a glance at the panicking Emotion. "That's easy: Tinkerbell over there can't handle the concept of Riley having a less than perfect day, much less the idea of her having any Core Memories that aren't glittery gold."

"Hey..." Sadness frowned as she tried (and failed, she couldn't help but note miserably) to comfort her hysterical friend. "That's not very nice..."

"You gonna tell me it ain't true?" Anger cocked an eyebrow expectantly.

Sadness hesitated before biting her lip and focusing on Joy again.

"Yeah, that's what I thought."

"So how is this doing your job?" huffed Disgust.

Rolling his eyes in exasperation, Anger got up and walked towards the console, keeping a close eye on Joy as he went in case she decided to do something rash. "Then let me explain. Just yesterday we were in San Francisco, and now we're back in Minnesota, ready to move to San Francisco again . And the only two who remember are Riley, and me."

"I figure that since it seems like we're in some sort of a science fiction movie, and a really bad one might I add, some research might be in order. Good thing Riley thought of it." Anger shuddered heavily.

After the... 'incident', he'd sworn off putting ideas in Riley's head. At least, not without a cool head and consent from the whole crew anyways. Something he wasn't going to get any time soon if Joy's frantic rocking back-and-forth was anything to go by.

"Anyway, what better place to start than the internet, using all of those stupid sci-fi movies dad made us watch instead of the cartoons we wanted as a point of reference?" Anger manned the console, pushing a button and summoning a Memory from Long Term Memory.

"Tripledent Gum! Will-!"

Anger hastily let go of the joysticks as his eye twitched in impotent rage, a torrent of flames erupting from his skull. The last thing Riley needed at the moment was to put her fist through her computer's monitor in a burst of inexplicable fury.

'One of these days...' He thought murderously. 'I'm going to turn each and every one of those chortling doofuses into charcoal.'

Inside Out.3 (kingofsouls - cross with HP)

-Headquarters-

Joy grinned as she opened her eyes. "Another bright new day." She leapt up to her feet, and danced over to the central console to check up on Riley's Core Memories, and to see if they had shifted or not. She hummed softly to herself as the column rose, before choking. The core memories were... yellow! And there were only six.

"Oh no, now this weird, deja vu thing is taking away the Core Memories!" Joy moaned as she paced around the central console. "Ok, think, Joy, think. Where could the Core Memories have gotten off to?" Joy peeked through her fingers at the rack of books off to one side. "Maybe I should skim through the manuals?" Joy shuddered. "Not that desperate yet."

That was how the other emotions found her a few moments later, pacing in circles in front of the center console.

"Already up and at it, eh?" Fear smiled, weakly. "Figured you'd be excited about this trip to school."

Joy jumped, then spun around, plastering a smile on. "Oh, yep. School. Super excited for school and... books." Joy grinned a bit wider.

Disgust huffed. "I just can't believe we have to ride a train. I mean, it better be cleaner than that alleyway that we bought our things in. That place was filthy, and I don't even want to think about all those things we had to buy for potions."

Joy blinked. 'Train? Alleyway? Potions?' Before she could properly ask, Fear jumped in, holding up a large chart.

"So, I've had to revamp our Potential Animal Attack Anxiety Scale with all of the new information from the books we read. Do you think Dragon should go between Bear and Shark attack, or Lion and Alligator?"

Joy opened her mouth, but Fear just kept on rambling. "I mean, I was thinking of putting it at the very top, but then we read about manticores, and I remembered that nature documentary with the alligator and the goat, and that time with the bee's nest on our head, and..."

"That's great, Fear." Joy cut him off. "Um, do you think you could excuse me for just a moment?" Without waiting for him to respond, Joy darted off, quickly ducking behind a set of shelves. Rapidly, Joy began scanning across the memories.

"Ok, let's see. We have a few childhood thoughts. A couple of school memories. Britain? We're living in Britain?" Joy ducked out to look out of the window. "Hockey Island's still there, so that's a relief. Friendship, Family, all the basics." Joy blinked as she realized something. "Wait, there's six. What's the island with the big cauldron supposed to be?" Glancing surreptitiously around, Joy snuck forward and poked at the unfamiliar memory on the Core Memory Stand.

– Riley was sitting on a chair in the living room, watching an older woman who was talking to her parents. The woman smiled, setting down the teacup she was drinking, and then pulling out a long thin stick, which she waved through the air sharply.

Immediately, the tea cup rose into the air, spinning around and rotating slowly. Another wave of the stick lead to all of the tea rising out of the cup and transforming into a flower, which floated over and settled into Riley's hands.

"Miss Andersen, you are a witch."–

The memory began to loop over, as Joy stared, mouth agape. 'What is going on?'

Joy had managed to gather her wits as she stepped forward to the console, where Fear was currently fretting over the controls.

Glancing at the View Screen, Joy saw that they were getting out of the car and hauling a big trunk into a crowded train station.

Fear glanced up as she skipped up (total upheaval of her worldview wasn't going to keep Joy from bouncing on her feet) and let out a massive sigh of relief. "Oh, thank goodness you're back. Joy, I don't know if we can do this. I mean, McGonagall said that we have to walk through a solid wall to get through to the platform, and what if we walk into the wrong one? I've estimated that there are at least a dozen walls in there, and we could get the wrong one, and then we'll smack our nose and we'll miss the train and..."

"Fear!" Joy cut him off. "It will be ok. We are going to be fine." 'I hope.' "Now, we just have to follow Mom and Dad, and we'll make it to the platform."

"Right. Right." Fear nodded tiredly.

"There you are!" Joy turned as Anger stomped over. "Where have you been? Fear's been hogging the console, and we dropped the stupid trunk on our foot, so we're still getting some Pain-a-grams sent in, though they've downgraded to Sore Status by now."

Joy reached over to tap a couple of buttons. "I was just getting a few things together to help get Riley excited for this trip." Several memories popped up one after another. Memories of a family train ride out into the country, a play pretend game of being a magic princess when she was younger (featuring Bing Bong), and the meeting with McGonagall. The room seemed to light up a bit brighter as Riley's excitement built up.

Anger huffed. "Ok. Well, good. Glad you're back on the ball."

Joy nodded. "Yep. Now, I want you to take the wheel for a bit, help Riley get that trunk to the train. Think determined thoughts."

Anger smirked. "That trunk'll never know what hit it."

Joy grinned. "That's the spirit." Twirling, she darted over to Disgust, who was sitting back on the couch. "Disgust, we're going to need to be making new friends. I need you to be on the lookout for good potential."

Disgust sighed. "Alright. I just hope that we don't get stuck wearing those baggy robes all the time. So unfashionable."

"Fear, start thinking up the ways magic spells could go wrong. We don't know what magic can do, so we need to be prepared. And have you seen Sadness?"

Fear nodded as he started scribbling at a sheet. "Yeah, she's over there." He gestured towards the manual shelves.

Joy walked over, then winced. Sadness was standing in the chalk Circle of Sadness.

"Hey, Sadness."

Sadness glanced up, then slumped back down. "Hey."

Joy sighed, then drew herself up. She knew what she needed to do. "So, I'm going to be doing my best to keep Riley excited, but I know that she is going to end up missing home. So, I need you to start thinking about a good letter to write to home. Don't be afraid to let some sadness show."

Sadness looked up, eyes wide with disbelief. "Really?"

Joy nodded, determinedly. "Yep, really. If we're going to keep Riley happy, we have to let the sadness show a bit sometimes too." Then, reaching down, Joy quickly scruffed out the Circle of Sadness.

-Reality-

Out on the Hogwarts Express, Harry, Ron, and Hermione observed the new girl.

"And you're sure she's not Awake?"

Harry nodded. "Positive. I mentioned time travel twice in my introduction, and it didn't so much as blip on her radar. So, either she is an excellent actor and Stealth Looper, or she isn't Awake."

Ron shrugged. "Eh, whatever. Want to go turn Draco into a monkey?"

Harry grinned. "I've got the crate for Borneo all ready to go."

Inside Out.4 (LordCirce)

-Headquarters-

Fear hummed to himself as he opened up the newspaper and sat back to monitor Riley's dreams. If there was one thing he was glad for, it was that even when time repeated with this whole, deja vu experience, Riley's dreams were almost always different. Even when Fear was the only one remembering, and none of Riley's special Core Memories showed up, the dreams were always just a little different. Kept things interesting, but not too interesting.

The first dream of the night started up, showing a happy pizza parlor, probably inspired by the horrible pizza they had eaten the night before.

"And cue dancing pizza slices." Fear chuckled.

Only it didn't happen. The pizza didn't get up and dance, the balls in the ball pit didn't turn into ice cream, and Rainbow Unicorn didn't come dancing in to join the band on stage. If Fear hadn't known for a fact that Riley was asleep, he might of thought he was seeing a normal memory.

Then the lights went out.

"Oh, here we go, it's going to be a nightmare. Great." Fear grumbled slightly as he pulled out a clipboard. "And they didn't even have the decency to send up a warning. I wonder if it's too late to wake up Joy."

Even as Fear surreptitiously began to stand up, an eerie tune began playing in the dream. Lightning flashed, and Fear gulped, as the brief light had made it seem like the animatronic figures on the stage had moved.

"PEEKABOO!" Suddenly, the face of the stuffed bear that was the mascot for the pizza place popped up in the middle of the View Screen, mouth wide and full of sharp teeth.

"AHHHH!" Fear screamed, slapping desperately at the abort button.

-Reality-

Riley shot up and Awake with a jolt, her eyes wide, as the fearful nightmare dissipated from her mind. After several frantic moments, Riley slumped back onto her bed, groaning.

From now on, she was not going to eat any more broccoli pizza right before bed.

Inside Out.5 (Kingofsouls)

-Headquarters-

Joy and Disgust circled the column that bore the Core Memories, the multicolored orbs glistening in the light of Headquarters. Around and around they went, like two sharks circling their helpless prey.

To say that Joy was in a state of panic was an understatement. "Okay Joy, calm down." she told herself. Her arms were thrust into the air, thus ruining her illusion of total control, but at this point Joy didn't care. "It's cool. It's totally cool. It's only the core memories that make up Riley's very fiber and being suddenly being turned into other Core Memories that. Aren't. Happy. But it's cool. Totally cool."

Joy wasn't a good liar. It was clear that she was having a panic attack that wasn't going to end soon.

Disgust in turn groaned, the sound mixed with her trademark gag, "Stop whining about the Core Memories Joy, they're fine!"

"But they're not happy!"

"Joy, are the Islands up and running, there is no problem with them."

Joy screeched to a halt, facing the windows that showcased the Islands. All of them – old and new – were fully functioning, proof that Joy's fears were unfounded.

At least, to everyone except Joy. "Disgust, they're not happy!"

"Joy, Riley is in the car moving back to San Francisco again. With all of our stuff in a moving van! And this wasn't the first time me and Riley were stuck doing this. We're doing the whole week of heck again like one of Dad's dumb sci-fi movies!"

It was true: Off to the side near the couch was a small mountain of memories stacked in a neat pile. Several of the memories contained functional duplicates of each other, with only small changes here and there. Anger sat there, reading The Mind Reader 'RILEY REPEATING MOVE AGAIN. WE'RE NOT SURE WHY EITHER.' , staying out of the scuffle with Disgust and Joy for now. With a scowl on his face.

"You know what that means right?"

"It means that Riley won't be happy?"

"It means that if this keeps up," Disgust then gasped in horror, having trouble coming to grips with what she was about to say, "it means the fashion trends won't change! Riley will be stuck wearing the same outfits every day for the rest of her life! You realize that this is an emergency now right? RIGHT!? "

Joy didn't know what to say to that, mostly because it was a little... out there.

Inside Out.6 (LordCirce)

-Reality-

Riley shuddered, crouching behind the barricade of desks that had been erected in the center of the darkened room. Beside her, several of the other kids crouched. Several of them were crying, and holding each other. For some reason, tears just wouldn't come to Riley's eyes.

'This is not right.'

-Headquarters-

"THIS IS A DISASTER!" Fear was pulling what little hair he had out as he struggled at the console. It was all that he could do to keep from sending Riley off screaming to find some place to hide. The main issue with that course of action was that this was the only place to hide. And even then it might not last long.

Unbidden, the Recall Light activated, and memories of what had happened early popped up on the screen.

– Riley had been standing up to give a presentation to the class, when suddenly, one of her classmate's cell phones had started ringing. The teacher had glanced up, but before she could reprimand Sally, the owner of the cell phone, Thomas's cell phone had started to go off as well. Then Judy and Heather's. Riley's had been part of the next batch, and she pulled it out to find that it was Mom calling her.

Riley had glanced at the bewildered looking teacher, and then had hit Answer.

"Hello?"

"RILEY! Thank god you're safe." Her mom sounded frantic, and Riley's breath caught at the panic in her mother's voice. "Riley, listen, you cannot go outside. Stay inside, and...we'll come find you."–

"Turn that off!" Anger's voice was sharp, and Fear quickly turned off the Recalled Memory.

"It wasn't me. The subconscious is overflowing, and they keep shooting them back up here."

Anger growled. "Well, whatever. It ain't helping me in getting any of the others to respond."

Fear glanced back at the rest of Headquarters. Memories orbs were rolling around everywhere, most of them the purple hue of Fear or the green hue of Disgust. The purple outnumbered the green though, given the fact that Disgust had gone comatose after the… incident in the hallway.

Almost as if drawn by Fear's thoughts (and maybe an accidental panicked button press), the Recall Lamp lit up again.

– Riley was peering out of the door to her classroom. Her teacher had run off after receiving a phone call on the class phone, leaving the class sitting there. Shortly thereafter, the power had died, leading to several of the students screaming. Riley's mom hadn't told her what was making her so upset, and from what the rest of her classmates said, none of their parents had either.

After several moments of sitting in the dark, Riley had decided to peek out of the door. The hallway was darker than the classroom, on account of fewer windows. Riley had crept out slowly, while the rest of her classmates had peeked out behind her.

Then came the scream.

A teacher, one that Riley had only seen in passing, came dashing through one of the doors off to the side, screaming loudly. He spun, grabbing the door to try and close it, only for it to crash open and let... something through.

"Zombie." Riley's voice was barely a whisper, as she watched the zombie grab at the teacher. It seemed surreal, like a movie or something. Then the zombie bit down.–

WHAM Anger's fist smashed down on the console, knocking the Recalled Memory off. "WHAT DID I JUST SAY?"

Fear flinched back. "I'm sorry. I'm trying the best I can, but... I don't know what to do. I just know I'm never complaining about moving to San Francisco again."

Anger growled. "You can say that again." Anger and Fear were the only two who remembered things being different this time. Joy, as per usual, hadn't paid any attention to what they were saying, Sadness had moped in the corner, and Disgust had looked at them like they were crazy.

Fear glanced towards the couch. Now, Disgust was sitting there, staring off into the distance, her entire body shuddering. Sadness was sobbing back by the manuals, probably soaking them through. And Joy...

Joy was catatonic. She was just sitting, staring at the Core Memories, but not doing anything. Just rocking back and forth.

"Do... do you think that the whole 'deja vu' thing is why we didn't fall apart?" Fear was honestly wondering about that at this point. If anyone should be breaking down, it should be him, but he wasn't. Part of it was that it just didn't seem real, and part... part of him just felt braver.

"I just hope that the Deja Vu thing doesn't make any of this mess another Core Memory." Anger glowered at the screen, his fingers flexing and unflexing.

Fear paused, taking a deep breath, then stepped back from the controls. "I think... I think you need to take the wheel right now. I... Riley needs to be ready to fight, not try and run away."

Anger blinked, staring at Fear. By their nature, none of the emotions really liked to give up control at the console. For the most part, they deferred to Joy, mainly because that typically led to the best outcome for Riley, but they all still wanted to do their part, to help Riley along in their own way. Stepping back... took some courage.

"Alright. But keep an eye out. Never know where those zombies will jump out from." Anger stomped forward and grabbed the levers.

-Reality-

Riley exhaled, and something in her chest seemed to firm up. She hadn't heard from Mom since that first call, and neither she nor Dad were answering. Riley was worried, really worried, but, she glanced around the classroom, right now, worry wasn't what she needed. Her classmates were doing enough of that.

Gripping the hockey stick that she had in her hands, Riley let the burning anger she was filling swell up. When those zombies came, if they came, she would be ready to fight.

Inside Out.7 (kingofsouls)

-Reality-

Another day, another repeat.

Another repeat, another move to San Francisco.

Another move to San Fran, another first day of school.

Riley went through the motions, playing along with her parents as they bid her farewell on her (by Riley's count, twenty-first) first day of school.

And so Riley walked, a smile on her face as she thought about what to do this repeat. Whatever the case, Riley felt pretty good about herself.

Almost as if something put her sadness somewhere else... at least for now.

-Headquarters-

The single door that led out of Headquarters, used only for Mind Workers, opened, and into Headquarters slinked Sadness.

Unfortunately for Sadness, Anger was standing there, waiting for her. "Hello Sadness."

"Hi Anger..."

"So, where were you?"

"...uh... I was..."

"Sadness, you went into Long Term Memory, didn't you?" Sadness sighed, Anger hitting the nail on the head as the red Emotion's head started to spark. "You know we're not supposed to go into Long Term Memory!"

"I know, but..."

"But what?"

"You wouldn't understand..."

Flames began to rise. "Try me."

"...I was visiting Bing Bong."

This calmed Anger down as the flames that were just beginning to form subsided. "That pink clod? All I need to know. Just don't do it again. You could get lost in in there and then we'd have to pull double duty to make up for it."

Sadness simply nodded in agreement as Anger went off to sit at his happy place - the couch.

"Hey Sadness, you're gonna miss the first day of school!"

Sadness smiled as Joy waved at her. The glowing emotion was (to Sadness's great relief) was a lot more open to having the other emotions man the console than the other two Joy's Sadness had met.

She was still hyperactive but eh, it was Joy. Not much could be done there.

Inside Out.8 (LordCirce/kingofsouls)

Takeout Chinese food.

Idly Riley played with it, her chopsticks sending a piece of broccoli back and forth inside her box in a never ending game of back and forth. It seemed fitting, as no matter how many times the (evil) broccoli she played with moved inside the box, it was still the same piece of broccoli in the same box being played with by the same Riley that did the same action seconds ago.

The similarities to her situation were uncanny, and accurate.

"So, how was the first day of school?"

She's probing... again.

This was the thirty-fourth time Riley had relieved her life, and without fail Mom asked her that same question.

Time to dance the same old dance again...

- Headquarters -

Joy sat with her fellow emotions, watching through the view screen. "Say something happy." She urged. Disgust just scoffed, gently pushing a button on the console.

"It was... boring I guess."

"That's not happy."

"Uh, of course not." the fashionista scoffed. "I'm not you."

"Then let me let Riley be happy!"

Disgust rolled her eyes as Joy struggled to get out of the ropes that bound her to the chair she was in. Thanks to these repeats, Joy had become... well unhinged wasn't exactly the most polite thing to say to a colleague.

Then again Disgust wasn't always polite.

"Joy, do you want out of the chair?"

"Yes..."

"Then stop acting crazy!"

-Reality, sometime later-

Riley sat in her sleeping bag with her trusty laptop, website after website of sci-fi trivia and time travel theory in her collection of tabs.

So far, all she had to show for it. All she had was retreads of what she had already spent several of these time repeats learning: for some reason time was repeating, and everything she tried ended with another repeat starting.

"Just... one answer. That's all I want," Under her breath, the words flowed out. "Just one answer."

A knock on the door jolted her from her thoughts. "Riley? Can I come in?"

"Sure Dad."

Through the doorway came her father, sitting down next to his daughter. His face was one that was tired from the long trials that he faced thanks to the move, but he smiled as "So, first full day in a new city. Pretty exciting, huh?"

"Yep."

"Something tells me you have something on your mind."

"Sure do."

"You want to talk about it?"

"It's... well... it's... complicated."

Dad scooched closer to his daughter, the simple act eliciting a small smile from the 'young' girl. "Try me."

"Dad... I think I'm going crazy."

That surprised her dad, and he mused on exactly how to respond to that...

-Dad's Headquarters-

Dad's anger looked at his men, each emotion looking at the other with a variety of mixed looks. The common theme of confusion was the only common element. "...How do we reply to that!?"

-Reality-

Dad reached out and slid his arm across Riley's shoulders. "Hey, kiddo. I promise, I won't think you're crazy." He gave a small smile. "Well, any crazier than my monkey usually is."

"Dad, you remember that one movie? The one with the groundhog?"

-Dad's Headquarters-

Dad's Fear looked up in alarm. "Sir, the joke didn't work."

Dad's Anger leaned forward. "Alright then. This is serious."

-Reality-

Dad blinked, his smile fading slightly. "I remember."

Closing her laptop, Riley faced her father, clutching at her pant legs uncertainly. "It's... happening to me. And... I don't know why."

-Dad's Headquarters-

"Uh... let's go to Defcon 3... we should we try a joke... again, sir?" Dad's Fear looked hesitant, as Anger was shaking his head.

"No. This is a Code Stoneface. Riley needs us to listen."

-Reality-

"It's... scary being a time traveler, Dad. Scary being alone. No one else remembers, and no one believes me." She took a deep, shuddering breath. "Sometimes it's normal. We move, and I go to school, tryout for the hockey team. Like nothing's wrong. Like..." She shuddered again, this one longer, "Like everything is normal except me..."

"Riley..." Dad squeezed her shoulder lightly, but she forged on.

"Dad... I tried to run away back to Minnesota the first time. And then... this happened and I thought it was because I did, so I didn't run away but the repeats still happened... this is me being punished by something? Because I did one bad thing? I don't know, nothing makes sense because I fixed the bad thing by not running away but I'm still being punished and ..." Riley broke down into sobs. " What did I do to deserve this? "

-Dad's Headquarters-

Klaxons blared throughout Headquarters as Anger worked fast. "Sadness, Joy," he commanded. "Take the helm now !"

"SIR, YES SIR!"

-Reality-

"Riley..." Dad ran his hand through his hair, uttering a silent prayer for help. "I don't know... I don't know why this is happening to you. Why you are having to live time over and over. But I know that it isn't because of anything bad you did."

Riley looked up, blinking tearily. "What? But..."

Dad shifted to look her straight in the eyes. "Riley, you are my darling girl. You are always so happy and cheerful, and..." he shook his head, "and I know that... whatever this is... it isn't your fault."

"So... you believe me?"

Dad pulled her into a hug. "Of course I do, sweetie."

"Dad?"

"Yes, sweetie?"

"There's more. I... You know how I said that sometimes it's normal?"

Dad nodded slowly, leaning back from the hug. "Yeah?"

"Well... sometimes... it's not. One time, there were zombies... everywhere. I don't... I don't know what happened to you, but... it was so scary and..." Riley cut off, wiping her eyes. "I'm glad it wasn't permanent.

"Another time, I was a guy. It was super strange. And then there was the time with the dancing hippo..." a laugh, one clearly forced, accompanied Riley's doubts. "I know it sounds crazy, like I'm crazy, but it's... it's... so...?"

"Overwhelming?"

Riley nodded tiredly. "Yeah, overwhelming."

Dad chuckled. "Yeah. Well, whatever happens, we'll get through it together." He turned and smiled down at her. "Tell ya what, how about this? Tomorrow, we go explore San Francisco, just you and me. You can show me all of the sights!"

"Da~ad."

"What? It'll be fun, having my own pretty little tour guide to show me around."

They both giggled, and then fell into a restful silence. Finally, Dad broke it, running his hand across Riley's bangs.

"And if you ever need someone to talk you, I'm here for you. Even if I don't remember next time, know that I will always love you and support you."

"...yeah. Thanks Dad."

Some things never changed. Riley smiled as she snuggled up against her Dad and drifted off.

Inside Out.9 (blazingen1)

-Reality-

Riley was scanning through the internet for any more information on the strange time repeats. This repeat, almost everything was normal, all except her dad. While he still acted like the beloved father she'd know all her life, this time, he was really... weird, and that was putting it nicely. In fact...

Knock knock knock "Oh Riiiileeeeyy..."

-HeadQuarters-

Disgust and Sadness, the only two Emotions Awake this loop, were at the control panel. Joy was bound and gagged on a chair behind them, with Anger and Fear nearby.

"Oh no, not again," moaned Sadness.

"Ugh, seriously!? This is the third time this week!" exclaimed the annoyed and incredulous Disgust.

-Reality-

"I'm both respecting your privacy by knocking but asserting my authority as your father by coming in anyways."

With that, the door smashed open revealing her dad with a battering ram.

'Yup... very weird,' thought Riley.

Inside Out.10 - (kingofsouls/LordCirce/Blazingen1)

-Welcome-

-Headquarters-

The dimly lit Headquarters was tranquil and empty as Joy walked around. Riley was sleeping, thankfully a sound sleep, and it was just her on dream duty. She prefered it that way, the tranquility of the silence her reward for reaching the day's end. Thought the silence was not only comforting that night; it heralded confusion and apprehension.

Having just became aware of the repeats – which was hard to not notice when Riley was just playing in the park one second and sound asleep the next – Joy was thankful for Riley's current status as asleep. It gave Joy the chance to soak in the atmosphere.

The golden emotion eyed the Memories that stood in their shelves, the spectrum of colors, mostly purple and blue and most holding events she'd seen half a dozen times over, were evidence that Riley's repeating was still going on and causing her undue stress.

Thankfully Riley was a strong girl, able to soldier on despite the strange situation she was in.

The dream playing was a repeat, something about zombie rats and living pants. Without a doubt it was one of the weirdest combinations that Joy had personally monitored, but then again who could blame Dream Productions for wanting to experiment every now and again.

Joy was just about to check on the Core Memories, wanting to make sure they were the same as Riley remembered them the last time Joy had repeated with their person.

Just as she was about to open them, a single firm and irritated "Ahem" echoed throughout Headquarters, drawing Joy's attention towards its source. Standing at the top of the stairs leading to their sleeping quarters stood Anger, who was glaring down at her defiantly.

Cowering behind him was Fear who was shaking like a leaf as he tried his best to put on a brave face. He was failing monumentally, but at the very least he was getting out of his comfort zone and thus got an A for effort. At his sides stood Disgust and Sadness, the green Emotion glaring at her scathingly while the blue one just wrung her hands and stared at her with concern.

"And just what do you think you're doing?" Anger growled acidically.

"I'm checking on the Core Memories...?"

"GET HER!"

To Joy, there were very few things that she would not consider fun. Getting dogpiled was going on that list.

-Reality, sometime later-

Riley awoke inside the car, the scenery blazing past her as Dad drove them towards their 'new' home, yet again. She quickly noticed the blanket that covered her, and realized that she had fallen asleep in the car.

'Honestly' thought Riley, 'Not the strangest thing to happen to me...'

"Wow, Riley, you slept like a log."

"I feel like a log..." As she spoke, Riley's eyes drifted to see where she was, trying to make sense of the unusual situation she was in. Usually the repeat would start just before her Dad announced the move from Minnesota to San Fransisco, but this time she was already in the car and the move already underway.

Weird.

"Well, you were having a hard time staying awake." Mom remarked. "You went back to sleep as soon as we got going."

"Getting up at 5 tends to do that, right monkey?" Dad remarked.

"...oh, oh yeah. Totally."

"Well, at least we're almost there, right honey?"

"Oh you bet. All this driving is killing me."

RIley smiled. At least this time the car trip was mercifully short. Repeating that long car trip every repeat was up there on Riley's personal dislike list, just under broccoli and clowns.

Riley yawned, doing her best to completely wake up as she went over what she was planning to do this repeat – which mostly consisted of practicing her hockey skills and time travel research since anything else just seemed not as important. "So... when are we going to get to San Francisco?"

"San Francisco?" Dad chuckled, Riley raising an eyebrow in confusion. "I wish. Always did want to go there though."

"Wait, we're not moving to San Francisco?"

Mom turned around, her warm smile comforting RIley just a little as she tried to make sense of this sudden reveal.

-Headquarters-

Fear did what Fear did best.

Screaming out loud at the highest pitch possible and then breaking into a run through Headquaters like a chicken with his head cut off. "THIS IS A CATASTROPHE!"

"Yea, no kidding." huffed Anger. He flicked his trusty paper 'BREAKING NEWS: WE'RE NOT MOVING TO SAN FRANCISCO! UM... OKAY?' , trying his best to ignore Fear's incessant screaming.

So far it wasn't working.

"ARE YOU KIDDING ME? WE'RE NOT MOVING TO SAN FRANCISCO!? THIS IS BAD, VERY BAD! DOES ANYONE KNOW WHERE WE'RE EVEN GOING BECAUSE I DON'T! OH, RILEY IS IN DANGER, BIG BIG DANGER! TIDAL WAVES, MAD SCIENTISTS, METEORS, ZOMBIES, OR A ZOMBIE TIDAL WAVE CREATED BY A MAD SCIENTIST METEOR! DOES ANYONE ELSE SEE THE INHERENT RISKS OF MOVING TO ANOTHER CITY! THE NATURAL ORDER HAS BEEN DISRUPTED! WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO, I DON'T KNOW WHAT HORRORS AWAIT RILEY IF WE'RE MOVING SOMEWHERE ELSE!"

Anger groaned as he buried his hands into his head to try and block out the ranting. Disgust, on the other hand, simply reached underneath the console – which she was manning – and put on a pair of earmuffs, freed from the living fire alarm that called itself Fear. "Ah, much better." The poking of her shoulder drew her eyes to Sadness, who was also manning the console and trying her hardest to cover her ears from the apparently endless rant.

Fortunately Disgust learned to be prepared, and revealed a second pair of earmuffs, one that was a light sky blue that went well with Sadness's coloring and was just her size.

"Thanks, Disgust."

Disgust, having a hard time hearing exactly what was said, simply gave Sadness a thumbs up.

Anger on the other hand, had enough, and walked towards the console, and calling for a memory to be recalled. In seconds the summoned memory – golden in hue – landed from the ceiling and into his waiting hands. "Here we go."

He turned around, Fear running around in a rough outline of a figure eight. His ramblings continued, going on about something Anger cared nothing for.

With a shout, Anger let lose the memory orb, and it flew along it's path straight and true, and hit Fear straight the mouth, the orb now a temporary muzzle. The sudden impact sent Fear tumbling into the ground, somehow entangling himself with his limbs as he rolled into a nearby wall.

With a sigh and a smile, Disgust removed the earmuffs. "Nice shot, Anger."

"At least I found a use for that dumb gum commercial."

Spitting out the Memory and quickly getting himself free, Fear marched over to the others, clearly enraged. "What was that for?"

"It was to keep you from shouting! Not only does it annoy me, but we really don't want..." there was a moan, and Anger's head began to spark. "...and it looks like you just woke up Joy! Greeeeeeat job."

"Yeah, way to go, Fear. Now we have to deal with Psycho Joy now."

Fear tried his best to slink away. Of all the things he feared, Psycho Joy was the newest one, and was pretty high up there on the list.

Groaning, Fear just walked off to his room, leaving Sadness, Anger, and Disgust to confront Psycho Joy. Upon entering, he walked to the desk in the far corner, where lay all of the emergency plans he had meticulously calculated. Littered throughout the room lay huge piles of papers sitting on the floor in neat stacks. Hanging on the walls were a variety of diagrams, crossed out plans, and tackboards with several yards worth of yarn connecting several places like a giant game of connect the dots.

It was chaotic perfection in the complex simplicity of it. Digging through the mishmash of papers on his desk, Fear riffled through them, and quickly found what he was looking for.

' Here is is: List of things to do when moving to a new city, version 14. ' He took the list,which was a fair size with several dozen items on the list, though not as long as his other lists. "Don't worry Riley, I'm here for you, no matter where we go. I will keep you safe."

-later-

Phineas and Ferb sat in front of the backyard's lone tree, the summer sun beating on them in celebration of the first day of summer being underway.

The sounds of moving trucks echoed out on the street, and from the sounds of it they were getting closer. "Hey Ferb, did you order anything today?"

Ferb shook his head.

"Let's check it out."

As soon as they stepped out of the backyard, the source of the sound was easy to identify: Two houses down from theirs were several moving trucks parked on the curb, alongside a station wagon.

"Wow, Ferb, a new family moving next to ours for the Loop! How serendipitous is that?" Phineas grinned, excitement rising as an infinite number of ideas began to form within his mind. Ferb simply gave him a stoic glance. "You're right Ferb, it has been a while since I said that last. Let's go say hi to our new neighbors!"

As they walked near, one of the movers got out of his truck and approached the driver's side of the station wagon. "Alright, Mr. Flanders, where do you want me to start unloading things to?"

"Flanders?" The man who had gotten out of the car looked confused. "We're not the Flanders, we're the Andersen family."

The delivery driver blinked, then checked his clipboard. "Andersen? Andersen, Andersen... oh, Andersen." The driver chuckled. "Yeah, your truck is in San Francisco."

"San Fran... San Fransisco! How... we were following you almost the entire way!"

The two men moved off behind the moving truck, and Phineas glanced at Ferb. "Huh, got any plans for tracking down moving trucks?" Ferb flipped through his notebook, shrugged, then gave a thumbs up. "Awesome. Well, I think I know what we're going to do today." The two brothers smiled at each other, as a faint choir sang in the background.

Ding-Dong

Mrs. Andersen looked up from her cell phone, where she was currently on hold with the moving company. "Now who could that be?" She stood up from the table and walked over to the front door, opening it to find two young boys standing on her front porch.

"Hi! Welcome to the neighborhood. My name's Phineas and this is my brother Ferb. We were wondering..."

"Hello, thank you for holding. How may I assist you?"

Mrs. Andersen jumped as the representative began to speak on her phone. "Oh, hold on one second." She then put her hand over the phone and turned to the boys. "It's really nice to meet you two. My daughter is actually just in the back yard, if you want to go talk to her." She then turned back to the phone. "Yes, hi, I'm... yes, that's me. Yes, I was wondering how the trucks could get so messed up..."

Phineas and Ferb looked at each other and shrugged, before heading around to the back yard.

Riley was... conflicted to say the least.

Moving to a new city – an actual new city this time – was only part of the issue. What frustrated her to no end was that her family's moving truck was not only displaced (an annoyingly consistent occurrence, given how much everything else tended to change), but it was in San Francisco this time.

San Francisco!

Of all the cruel ironic twists that could happen, the one time she didn't move to San Francisco was the one time the moving van got the location right, so to speak.

It was almost enough to make her scream!

And so Riley sat in the backyard, and simply sat in the backyard unsure of what to do or what to feel. She thought she had a general grasp of the repeats, how they worked, but it seemed that every other repeat threw something new at her, something unseen always had to happen, and it caused Riley to rethink how these repeats even worked.

The sound of the backyard gate opening pried her from her latest personal crisis, and Riley glanced up as a pair of boys entered. One had reddish hair and a rather oddly shaped head, while the other was taller with bright green hair.

"Hello. My name's Phineas, and this is my brother Ferb."

"Oh... uh, my name's Riley." Riley waved her hand half-heartedly.

"Cool." Phineas then pointed over his shoulder. "So, we heard your dad talking about how your moving truck is out in San Francisco, and we were wondering if you'd like to come with us to go track it down!"

-Headquarters-

"Um, they've got to be joking, right?" Disgust looked over at Anger, incredulously. "We're like, over a hundred miles away."

"KIDNAPPERS! CHILD KIDNAPPERS!" Fear flailed around in a panic. "I'll admit, when that fear has come up, I never pictured the kidnappers actually being children, but still, KIDNAPPERS!"

Anger scowled, before punching out and knocking Fear over the couch. "I don't know, but this is just like the Big Bad Runaway Idea all over again, and I, for one, am not going to stand for it." He began stomping towards the console.

Joy's eyes widened from where she was tied up. "Whoa, whoa, whoa, wait! Anger, they're just kids, you can't just explode at them!"

Anger spun to face her. "Oh, and I suppose you think we should dance off and play whatever, fluffy imagination games they're cooking up, huh?"

Sadness raised her arms feebly from where she was standing next to Joy. "Wait. I think... Joy is right. I mean, I don't think we should get angry at them, because that will probably just make them sad."

Anger glowered. "Oh, so now you're on Miss Sunshine's side?"

"I'm not on anyone's side... I think."

Voices raised as Anger and Joy continued to debate and were joined by Fear's renewed shouting and Disgust's scoffs at all of the noise. Unnoticed by all except Sadness, the buttons on the console began to flash a rainbow of colors.

-Reality-

Before Riley could make up her mind about Phineas's bizarre invitation, a sudden spike of pain shot through her head, followed by a flash of gut clenching anger, then a spurt of fear. She moaned softly as she pressed her hand to her forehead, feeling kind of like she had just gotten a brain freeze.

"Are you alright?" Phineas asked, looked a little worried. Riley giggled at his face, before a couple of tears escaped her eyes.

"Just peachy." Her voice started as sarcastic, but slipped into a higher, sing-song pitch at the end. It was followed by her gritting her teeth, and then lifting her hand back to her head.

Phineas glanced at Ferb. "Seems like there's some sort of mental weirdness going on. Do you still have the Mind Machine from when we invaded Candace's head?"

Ferb gave a thumbs-up.

"...This can't be real..." laughed Riley as she shifted into an angry growl. In minutes Phineas and Ferb had lead her to their backyard, and had quickly set up... well a thing. The best way to describe the thing was a red sphere attached to a yellow box with blinking lights. Endless cords came from the box and lead to a trio of lawn chairs.

"Well why wouldn't it be?"

'At least someone's happy.' Riley mentally snarked.

Phineas and Ferb were finishing setting up the machine as another friend of theirs got ready to man the machine and keep it from blowing up or any other equally unpleasant outcome. "Hey, Baljeet, is everything ready?"

"Everything is fully functional, Phineas." Baljeet replied. "We are ready to go when you are."

"This is really elaborate for a game." The headache intensified, an intense spike of fear coupled with happiness reflexively drove a gentle hand to caress her aching head. "I'm not really in the mood, though."

"We're not playing. We used this to go into our sister's mind a while ago."

Riley raised an eyebrow, disbelief surging through her. "Right..." Still, another headache stabbed through her head, and she quickly sank down onto one of the lawn chairs, barely noticing as Phineas and Ferb put something on her forehead and then jumped up into the other two.

"Hit it, Baljeet!"

Before Riley could protest, pretty bright colors assaulted her eyes.

-Headquaters-

"Wah!" Fear let out a yelp as he was once more propelled across the room by an punch by Anger, who was currently charging after Joy. In the middle of their big argument, Joy had managed to bunny-hop the chair she was in over and block Anger from getting to the console, which naturally led to him blowing his top. It had also helpfully burned through her bonds, letting her dart away before the others could dog-pile her again. This had led to the current game of cat-and-mouse, with Anger trying to grab her and her twirling away out of reach. Disgust sat on the sidelines, making snarky comments at both of them, while Fear ran around, still panicking over the craziness of everything.

It was like some dam had burst, and all of the tension and uncertainty they had been feeling about these repeating lives had exploded all at once, unleashing total chaos.

"COME BACK HERE, YOU..."

"No way! I'm not letting you dogpile me again."

"WE'RE ALL GOING TO DIE!"

"...um, guys?"

"How about kicking you out of the tower then?"

"No way. Riley still needs to have at least some Joy in her life."

"DOOM, DOOM I SAY! And possibly some gloom, too. DOOM!"

"Yeah, but knocking you down a few pegs will give me some joy."

"Guys?"

"Ugh, you're both so immature. And you're making a mess of the place."

"Hey, you guys started it. I was just checking on the Core Memories."

"Yeah, looking to swap them out, probably."

Joy actually pulled to a stop at that. "What? No, I..."

SHREEEEEE A piercing whistle sounded through Headquarters, causing the four squabbling Emotions to stop in place and all clap their hands over their ears. They turned towards the source of the sound to find Sadness, slowly lowering her fingers from her lips, and looking rather bashful.

"Um..." she then pointed towards the viewscreen. "I think something bad has happened."

The four followed her finger, and then gaped as one. The viewscreen, which should have shown what Riley was seeing, was blank, with a few odd static lines running across it. More so than that, the console in front of it was dark as well.

Their animosity forgotten, the scared emotions rushed to the darkened console.

"RILEY!"

-Long Term Memory-

The first thing Riley saw when all the pretty colors disappeared were the shelves. They rose several feet into the air, curving alongside its fellow shelves. And from the looks to it, there were thousands of them as far as the eye could see standing in silent vigil

The most startling aspect were the orbs. The shelves had an endless amount of them, each of varying colors. "Where... am I?"

"We're inside your mind!" It didn't take long for RIley to find Phineas, who was walking up to her alongside Ferb. "I gotta admit, this looks pretty different from Candace's mind."

Ferb shrugged. "Well, not all minds are created equal."

"That's true."

To say Riley was freaked out was an understatement, despite her forced smile that had emerged. "No way, this can't be real. I'm dreaming, right? This is one really big strange dream after eating too much broccoli."

"Well, these look like you." Phineas held an orb, a green one, and inside it was an image. Even as Riley watched, she saw it moving. It was her, at about age seven or so, at a long wooden table. She was eating a plate full of food, and she had just picked up a long piece of boiled spinach. She made a face, then dropped the piece of spinach under the table.

"I... I remember that. That was at my Grandparent's house, I was feeding my veggies to their dog." She blinked. "How can that be here? I mean..." Riley shook her head, which she idly noted was actually feeling a bit better.

Phineas shrugged, handing the memory to Riley as he mused, "I guess it's probably a memory. Candace's were stored as trees, but I think your way is much more efficient." He glanced at the maze of shelves. "Sort of. They're pretty to look at though."

Riley put the memory down in the gentlest way she could, and looked over the wide collection of orbs. They reminded her of snowglobes, only instead of snow it was her life, snipped into pieces and stored in an incoherent pattern. And so Riley browsed the shelves, not saying a single word as she gazed at moment's of her past.

A yellow orb that bore a memory of her at a street fair in San Francisco, enjoying the most delicious pretzel she had ever eaten.

A red orb, the Riley within screaming towards the heavens in anger alongside a blue orb of her consumed by the sadness of being trapped in the repeats.

A green orb of her groaning about the dress her mother insisted on having Riley wear to her first dance.

A purple orb with bits and pieces to her favorite scary movie: "Shoes of Doom".

A blue orb of her in her raincoat, assaulted by an unrelenting rainstorm.

A yellow orb that sat next to that blue orb, featuring Riley dancing from puddle to puddle without a care in the world.

She frowned as she picked up the next one. A red orb mixed with a dash of purple, the memory within one she wished was a forgotten memory.

The roar of a zombie just as it was struck by Riley's trusty hockey stick.

She hated that repeat.

"Hey Riley, did you find anything?" Phineas snuck up on Riley, eliciting a shout and dropping the hated memory.

"Uh... no! No no no no... everything's... great!" She grabbed the memory, forcing it back on the shelf from whence it came. "So... what now?"

"Well, what we need to do is find the source of the headaches," Phineas explained. Riley was starting to get the vibe that he knew a lot more than a kid his age should know. After all, she was in her own mind, all thanks to Phineas and Ferb. If that didn't scream 'genius', then Riley didn't know what did. "The headaches are probably located someplace that's close to your higher brain functions. We should probably head there next and see what's causing these headaches."

Though it was clear Riley was over her head (while somehow being inside of head: Riley decided to stop thinking about it before she got another headache trying to figure that one), Riley smiled, thankful that Phineas seemed to know what he was doing.

"Okay then. So, where do we go?"

"Well I wouldn't know exactly where that would be."

Crestfallen, Riley sighed.

"This is, after all, your mind."

Riley groaned, despair taking its toll as she slumped onto the ground, knocking several of the memories off of the shelves. "I've never been in my own head before! I don't know the first thing about how my own head works!"

"No problem, then. We'll just walk around and explore. Chances are, we'll stumble across it in the middle of a musical montage."

Riley couldn't help but grin from Phineas's awkwardly worded sentence. "Thanks Phineas."

"That's what friends are for, right?"

It then dawned on Riley that their trio had been reduced to a duo. "Um... Phineas? Where's Ferb?"

"Ahem." Riley and Phineas turned to see Ferb standing near the entrance to the row, followed by a large blue... blob. It had arms and legs, and reminded Riley of a slightly overripe blueberry. It was also talking.

"...so you say you need to find the source of the headaches, eh? Well, I don't know about..." it trailed off as it caught sight of Riley. "You... you're... you're her! I mean, you're you, but... what are you doing down here?"

Riley blinked. "I don't know where 'here' is. I mean, they said this was my mind, but that is ridic..."

"You need to be up in Headquarters, I think." The blob looked really confused. "Though, I don't think... I've never heard of... then again, what do I know? I'm just a Mind Worker." Shaking himself, he quickly gestured for them to follow. "Come on, we're pretty close to the Inspiration Lift, we can get you sent straight to the top." He then headed off.

"Well, you heard the man, er, blob," Phineas said brightly. "Let's go!"

-Headquarters-

"...ohnoohnoohno..." Fear's chant was a continuous drone in the background as the Emotion's crowded around the console. They had quickly confirmed that Riley wasn't dead, luckily, but she also wasn't asleep, or they would have been getting some sort of package up from Dream Productions. It was like she... just wasn't aware.

"I told you, kidnappers! Didn't I? Didn't I?" Fear was pacing and twitching behind them, mumbling to himself as he wrung his hands. Meanwhile, Anger kept pounding at the controls, while Joy was frantically paging through the manuals. Normally, she would turn to Sadness, but after her spurt of bravery in getting the others to pay attention, Sadness had broken down, and was now sobbing into a bucket that Disgust was holding.

"We broke Riley!" she sobbed.

Then Joy jumped to her feet. "Guys, we didn't break Riley, she's fine!"

"Okay then Joy, if she's fine, where is she, huh?" The purple emotion had a good point. Joy fumbled as she tried to answer that. "Ummm... umm..." She paged through the manual. "I think, maybe it's due to, ummm... what's a neuron supposed to be..." she sighed, shaking her head, "I'm not sure exactly, but I think this is just like the time Riley got heat stroke during that summer camp. When the screen went all fuzzy and she almost fainted, only she didn't faint this time."

"So then HOW do we get her BACK?" Anger growled, slapping the controls again.

Joy scooped up the manuals and quickly made her way around to the side of the Viewscreen. "Let's see, lucid dreaming, OBE, subconscious memory... ok, I think if I just... physical senses to sense of consciousness..." Joy quickly began poking around behind the screen. The other Emotions just watched, until a loud crackle sounded and Joy was propelled backwards, away from the screen. Then, with a flicker, the screen restarted, fuzzy with static at first, before growing into focus.

It was a white elevator, with the two boys, Phineas and Ferb standing to one side.

"Where is she?" Disgust looked at the screen, incredulously, absently patting the still hiccuping Sadness on the back.

"Kidnapped!" Fear let out, only to fall silent at a growl from Anger.

"Ow ow ow," muttered a still smokey Joy as she approached the now back-online control panel.

There was a faint ding from the Mind Worker Entrance into Headquarters, then, simultaneously, the doors to Headquarters and the doors of the elevator Riley was in opened.

Revealing the Emotions staring at themselves on the screen, though viewed from the side.

Confusion was an apt way of putting how Riley had felt during the last ten minutes or so. She had apparently traveled inside her own mind, and was now entering what the blueberry man called 'Headquarters'. The doors to the lift opened, revealing a rather neat looking room, with more shelves covered with the memory spheres. Standing in the middle of the room, there was a fancy looking podium, covered in buttons. Five brightly colored figures stood around it, staring off to a screen on one side of the room.

The moment that Riley stepped into the room, all five of the figures turned to look at her, before promptly letting out a unified scream.

"AAAAHHHHHH!"

Riley jumped at the sudden burst of noise, letting out a loud scream of her own.

"Aaaaaaaahhh!"

"AAAAHHHHH!"

One of the figures, who was bright yellow, suddenly turned and gave the purple guy a push, shoving him away from the controls. "Fear, step back. You're scaring her."

Immediately as he stepped back, her heart rate did seem to settle a bit. Then the purple man began to speak.

"But... how... but... its... it... but... how..." He turned, glancing between the screen and Riley. Riley did the same thing, and then let out a second yell of shock. "Whaaaa?" The image on the screen showed the screen, which showed a screen, which showed a screen...

Riley quickly spun away, feeling dizzy and just a bit nauseous. Behind her, she could hear the yellow woman speak again.

"Disgust, let go of that handle. Everyone, step back. We need to calm down, or Riley is just going to get more upset."

A gruff voice answered, sounding surly. "Oh, so I guess you're going to take the wheel again, huh? Just like always..."

"No," the lady responded. "Myself included. No one touches the console until we've sorted things out with Riley."

There was a bit of muttering, then Riley felt a hand gently touch her shoulder.

"Riley?"

Riley jumped, as the moment the hand touched her, she felt a shock go through her, culminating in a bubbling laugh. She spun around, tripping as she did so, and landed on her butt, staring up at the yellow lady, who had taken a step back.

"What the... what was that?" Riley shook her head. "No, wait. More importantly, who are you?"

The lady took a deep breath, then nodded. "Right..." She then smiled and stuck out her hand. "Hi Riley, my name is Joy."

Hesitantly, Riley reached out and grasped Joy's hand. Once again, the same shock slid through her, filling her stomach with butterflies and laughter. Joy didn't seem to notice, quickly pulling Riley up to her feet, and skipping, pulled her over to the others. She waved at a shorter, blue woman.

"This is Sadness." Riley stuck her hand out without thinking, and, looking a bit surprised, Sadness reached up and shook it. Another shock went through Riley, though this time, it was, well, sad. But, at the same time, there was a feeling of comfort, the sort of release of tension that you get after a good cry.

Joy was moving on, pointing to the green lady in the sparkling dress. "This is Disgust." Riley blinked at the name, which didn't seem to quite fit with the pretty woman, but stuck out her hand again anyway. Another jolt, this one twisting her stomach up oddly, with slight feelings of nausea, but also self-assuredness, or boldness, that caused Riley to stand a bit straighter.

"Then there's Anger." The short red man stuck out his hand, giving her hand a firm shake. This time, the jolt brought with it a sense of rage, but also excitement, the sort of rush that Riley felt when she was barrelling across the ice in hockey. Her lip twitched up in a grin, which Anger matched.

"And finally, Fear." The taller purple man twitched slightly as he shook her hand, and Riley could feel her feelings of nervousness take a quick boost, but underneath that, she was startled by a massively strong feeling of protectiveness.

Riley stepped back, her head reeling slightly from the intense feelings she had just felt. The five figures crowded together slightly, and Joy spoke up again, gesturing with her arms. "We are your emotions."

Riley waved, awkwardly. "Um, hi, I guess. I'm Riley...but I guess you all know that." She laughed awkwardly, and the group of emotions mirrored her. She rubbed her arm. There were so many questions she wanted to ask, but they all seemed to be jammed up into her throat. She opened her mouth several times, then closed it again.

The awkward silence was broken when Fear leaned over to Joy and whispered, "Do you think now would be a good time to talk about the whole deja-vu thing?"

Riley blinked. "Deja vu? You mean the time travelling?"

Unnoticed by the group, Phineas and Ferb looked at each other, eyes widening. "That's it!" Phineas stated boldly. Riley jumped and looked back at him, and the emotions peered around her as well.

"What's it?"

Phineas grinned. "I think I know what you're going through. We actually have a song to explain it!" He turned to look at Ferb. "Ferb, I'm going to need Introduction Song Number 5."

Ferb gave a thumbs up, then squeezed his eyes shut. With a pop, a music player appeared in the air in front of him, which Ferb caught. He then hit play, causing a gentle melody to begin playing. Phineas stepped forward, holding a microphone he had pulled out of somewhere, and the lights in Headquarters seemed to dim a little bit as he began to sing.

"~Have you ever thought tomorrow happened just yesterday?~"

"~Have you ever thought your life was moving in the same way?~"

Riley nodded quickly. "Yes, exactly!" Behind her, the Emotions murmured slightly with excitement.

Phineas grinned, and the music shifted into an upbeat tempo, the lights brightening.

"~Then you're Looping! Looping over and over, my friends!~"

"~Looping! And so summer will never end!~"

"~So many adventures! So much to do!~"

"~So many new people to meet, and it's all happening to you!~"

- Reality -

Candace frowned as she sat up in her bed. "Hold on, Stacy. My busting senses are tingling. Got to go." Hanging up, Candace raced to her window and leaned out. "Ah-ha! I knew it. You guys are... taking a nap." Candace stared down at her brothers, who were laying on some vaguely familiar lawn chairs in their backyard next to some girl she didn't recognize. From this angle, she couldn't see the Mind Machine, hidden by the tree branches. "Well, that's not bustable. Though I wonder what happened to Isabella?"

- Headquarters -

"~It's a wide Multiverse out there, hung on an interdimensional tree.~"

"~So many new things to share, and wondrous things to see.~"

The Emotions and Riley were sitting, eyes wide, as they listened to the musical story about why these time loops were happening. The Emotions were doubly confused, given the fact that several Mind Workers had shown up and joined in with the musical number, as had Rainbow Unicorn, who was doing a tango with a random zebra.

Then, the music changed, shifting to a more downbeat tempo. The lights cut out, and then a spotlight shone on Phineas.

"~But not every~y~y~thing is rosy. There's trouble i~i~i~in paradise.~"

"~Yggdrasi~il is broken, and so.. we are... re~peat~ing our LI~I~I~IVES!~"

Silence reigned for several seconds, before the song came back, more upbeat than ever, and the lights flashed on to reveal a massive stage that had somehow spontaneously appeared in Headquarters. The stage barely fit, taking up most of the space in front of the Viewscreen, which was now displaying some psychedelic colors to match the song. A massive ensemble of Mind Workers and random other characters none of the Emotions or Riley recognized stood on the stage, dancing around, including what looked like a living old-timey bathing suit, a small white doll in a pink hood, and a floating baby head.

"~And now we're Looping! Our lives will begin again!~"

"~Looping! And doing it with a new friend!~"

"~We have so much to tell you! The Ping and the Pocket!~"

"~So much to build! A rollercoaster and rocket!~"

"~So much to do, and time moves so fast!~"

"~Though it will begin anew, let's make each moment last!~"

"~As we Loop with You!~"

The song finished with a grand flourish, with everyone pointing towards Riley.

Joy was the first to recover, and she quickly began applauding. Riley joined in, and the other Emotions soon followed, though Sadness' claps were rather half-hearted. Phineas jumped down, as the Mind Workers began breaking down the stage and carting it away.

"Thank you, thank you. So, do you have any questions?"

Riley exhaled. "So many, but... first, what was with the floating baby head?"

Phineas shrugged. "Honestly, we have no idea."

While the musical number was enlightening (and catchy, much to Disgust's frustration), Phineas and Ferb decided that explaining what wasn't explained in song was the next course of action.

What followed was an incredibly elaborate presentation that more or less explained everything. It helped that they were inside of Riley's mind, so they could get the materials they needed in an instant, rather than having to make them, which saved them "a couple minutes or three", according to Phineas. Given that holographic projectors, tiny animated figurines, and a dizzying array of flipcharts was involved, Riley wasn't sure she believed him.

After that, Riley sat with her emotions as Phineas and Ferb decided to just stand back and let the new Loopers sort the revelation out amongst themselves. RIley soon found herself sitting on a nearby couch, and noticed a newspaper lying on it. She picked it up, and stifled a snicker. The paper was labeled 'The Mind Reader', and in big bold letters was the headline "RILEY INSIDE RILEY'S MIND? POSSIBLE PARADOX DETECTED!"

The letters then quickly morphed into "BREAKING NEWS! WE'RE NOT CRAZY!" .

To say it was surreal was an understatement.

And so the six sat down,and swapped the stories that they had to tell. By far, Riley's favorite was the one Joy had experienced without any of them, at a magical castle. But as the stories were swapped, Riley had one question she needed answered. "So, you all have been there since the very beginning..."

"You betcha!"

"So, what the heck was going on the first time we moved to San Francisco?"

Joy's smile dropped, and the other emotions glanced around uneasily.

"...it was my fault," Sadness spoke up from her seat, staring at the ground. "Something changed, and when I touched some of the memory spheres, they turned blue and wouldn't turn back."

"No, Sadness," Joy interrupted. "It wasn't your fault. It was mine." Joy turned to look at Riley. "All your life, I've done my best to make sure you were happy, even at the expense of pushing the other emotions away."

"...understatement of the year..." Anger muttered. Disgust elbowed him and gave him a pointed look, to which he just rolled his eyes.

Joy nodded. "So, when you were moving, you... well, I guess you should have felt sad, it was natural for you to, but I stood in the way, so I think it kind of built up in Sadness, and got let out when she touched the orbs. Of course, I panicked, especially when she touched some of the Core Memories, and, well, long story short, Sadness and I got sucked right out of Headquarters and down into Long Term Memory, over by Hockey Island."

Riley smiled a little at the mention of her favorite sport, and Phineas and Ferb, who were chatting with a couple of Mind Workers, glanced at each other after overhearing the word 'Hockey'.

"So, Fear, Disgust, and Anger were trying to hold down the fort while we were away, but... well, they didn't have any experience making you feel joy, and..." Joy trailed off, not sure how to bring up the next bit.

Anger let out a huff. "Then I had a really dumb idea. Ya see, what Joy didn't tell you was that all of your Core Memories got sucked out with them, so your Islands of Personality were all out of whack. That's why you couldn't play hockey or seem to connect with your friends. So, I had the brilliant idea that, since all of your Core Memories were made in Minnesota, that you should head back there to make some more."

Riley's eyes widened a bit, as she remembered how she had thought about how much happier she had been in Minnesota and had seized on the idea that if she went back there, things would be better. "So you made me get the bus ticket?"

Anger scuffed his foot. "Well, not really, I mean, I gave you the idea, but then, it got stuck, and we got locked out. We couldn't make you feel anything, it was like you were emptying out." He then pointed back at Joy and Sadness. "That's when they showed back up, when you were on the bus. Sadness managed to pop the idea out, I still don't really get how, and then she pushed you to get back home."

Riley turned to look at Sadness, who was fiddling with her fingers. After a couple of seconds, she realized they were looking at her, and let out a small 'eep', before speaking. "I just kind of did it. I mean, I thought about what you were going through, and about how you needed support, and stuff. And that's what we do, most of the time, is support you, and help you to live a good life. And even if my parts aren't as nice as Joy's, I'm still here to try and help you." She waved her hand at the others. "We all are, no matter what. And we make mistakes, because we're still learning along with you, but... we do it out of love." Sadness gave a small smile, which Riley returned, and the group lapsed into a gentle silence.

With was then quickly broken by Joy.

"GROUP HUG!" Joy then jumped out of her seat like a rocket, and glomped her host befor Riley could protest. The warm feeling was nice, almost in intoxicating, and Joy motioned to her fellow emotions. Sadness was the first to join, accepting Joy's invitation as the yellow emotion opened up a spot in the hug for her. One by one Fear, Disgust, and Anger followed, and the six embraced one another.

The same jolt she had felt before came, with a dizzying mix of emotions pulling every which way – joy, sadness, disgust, fear, and anger all hitting her at once, but under it all, a simple truth filled her.

Throughout the repeats, she had always felt that she was alone, never truly able to find someone who could understand. But now she knew, she had five little voices, who understood what she was going through. They were with her, always, and would stick with her till the end, and even if they weren't Awake, they would still be there for her.

And in that single moment, Riley realized that her emotions were not just emotions. They were not just people in her head that watched over her. No, her emotions were more than that. They were her friends.

They were family.

"Riley?" Sadness asked. "Are you... okay?" Tears fell from Riley's face, as she looked at Sadness with a warm smile.

"Yea. I'm okay. It's just," Riley paused, all eyes on her. "I'm home".

DONG

Riley looked up as a sound came from the machine in the corner, which had been quietly pumping out little memory spheres as Riley had listened to Phineas and Ferb's explanation. A shining sphere popped out and began to roll down the track, and the emotions quickly jumped up and ran over to the track.

"It's a new Core Memory!" Joy explained, as Riley walked up behind them.

Riley blinked, then nodded. "Those are the memories over in the center, right? The one's that are important?"

Joy nodded, even as she leaned in to look at the sphere. At first glance, it almost looked like it was clear, but when you tilted your head, you could see a red tint, then a green, then yellow, and so on. A rainbow of colors seemed to swirl, just under the surface, bleeding into each other in a swirling pattern, and in the middle, the scene of the emotions gathering for a hug displayed, Looping over and over.

The orb dropped into a channel beneath the floor, glowing as it slid around to the Core Memory Plinth. The other Core Memories shifted, but rather than take a place in one of the circles of memories, it slid into the very center of the pillar, a small dimple forming to reveal it in the middle of the circle on the floor.

Then, light seemed to spill out of the sphere, washing through Headquarters in a rainbow display of light. Everything that it touched seemed to get a bit brighter, the room seemed to get a bit bigger, then the light shot out of the window. The emotions raced over, looking down, and gasped, pointing and whispering. Riley made her way over after them.

"What's happened? What did it do?"

Disgust was the one to answer. "Usually, one of those Core Memories will make an island over there", she pointed across the deep chasm below, to the cluster of islands floating near the other side, long thin rails linking them to Headquarters, "but this time, the new island is down below us."

Disgust pointed down, and Riley leaned over to press her nose to the glass. Down at the base of the Headquarters tower, she could see that a new island had formed and was spreading out at the point where the tower linked with the rails to the other islands. Numerous statues had appeared down below, with what looked like a statue of her forming right next to the base of the tower.

"Is... is that bad?" Riley asked, hesitantly.

Disgust shrugged. "I have no idea.'"

Fear gazed at the island below, notably not afraid of it like he was with every other new thing that he encountered. "So... what do we call it?"

Joy then looked at Riley, suddenly felt all the attention in the room fall on her. She stared down, at where the light from the new island was spreading down the connections to the other islands, turning them into bridges.

"Unity Island. Because it shows that we are all in this together."

The emotions looked at each other, then turned back, smiling, and nodded at Riley.

"So... now what?" Fear asked.

Ferb coughed, drawing all eyes to him. "Well, you do still have a truck in San Francisco."

-Later-

"Look, mister, how many times to I have to say this: We are the Flanders, not the Andersens! " Mr. Flanders screeched at the movers, anger rising in both voice and facial tone.

"Hey buddy, this address is on the sheet." The mover argued back, waving his clipboard. "What's written on the sheet is where we go."

"Oh, so what am I supposed to do huh? Just stand here and wait for our moving van to just drop out of the sky?"

Honk, honk The Flanders' moving truck then suddenly dropped out of the sky. He then looked up, just in time to see a bullhorn that falling from the sky as well. Startled, he managed to catch the bullhorn, then stared up at where it had come from.

Above the urban sprawl of San Francisco was the strangest airship he had ever seen, a bizarre mix of a brightly colored blimp and a wooden airplane, with rocket boosters and at least a dozen propellers. Its cabin was more like a hanger as seen on an aircraft carrier.

Leaning over the railing of the flying machine were four children, three boys and a girl. Through another bullhorn, the girl spoke to the two men below. "Uh, excuse me? This is the Flanders' house, right?"

Mr. Flanders fumbled for a second before replying through his horn. "Uh yes...who are you?"

"I'm Riley Andersen. My parents and I moved to Danville, but somehow we got your truck and you got ours, and me and my friends are here to switch them."

Mr. Flanders blinked, his mind not quite believing what his senses were telling him. "Well, at least someone here is doing a good moving job."

The mover just shrugged at Mr. Flanders' scathing remark, before he turned his attention back to the blimp thing above him. "Not to sound ungrateful, but aren't you and your friends a little young to be flying blimps and moving trucks?"

"Uh... Yes. Yes we are."

The mover nodded. "Oh. Okay. Truck's all yours, kid."

The green haired kid then pushed a button on a remote, and a claw emerged from their flying machine, reaching down and gently clamped onto the truck, before swiftly lifting it up into the waiting skyship.

"Thanks!" The girl called.

The blimp ship then took off, flying off into the wild blue sky. Mr. Flanders and the mover then looked at each other, not really sure what to think in regards to what they had witnessed. "Uh... Mr. Flanders? What did I just see?"

"I don't know, but I know I'm not going to look a gift horse in the mouth."

"So, what's next?" Riley was back in Phineas and Ferb's backyard, the day after they retrieved the moving truck. Weirdly, the adults had all brushed off the weirdness of the truck just magically showing up, but Phineas has said that was normal.

Phineas grinned at Ferb, who held up a rolled up blueprint. "Well, we were thinking you might like to take a look at a little sport we invented, named Hockey Z9."

Riley grinned as she walked over, glad to know that she wasn't on her own, anymore.

Joy hummed to herself and smiled as Riley looked over the plans for the new game. Anger was at the console, hooting and grinning over all of the changes, especially the polar bear, while Fear was going through minor conniptions over the same. Disgust was moaning about the disaster that was the outfits that had been used in the game, but Joy saw her working on a few daydreams about possible costume designs.

With a twirl, Joy spun around Sadness, who was deeply engrossed in one of the Manuals for the new, expanded console that Phineas and Ferb had helped set up, complete with Telepathic Telecommunication, so that they could speak with Riley without her having to visit. Ferb had assured Joy that the console would show up whenever Riley was Awake.

Awake. Joy liked that term. Riley was Awake, and so were the Emotions, and they were ready to have whatever these Loops could dish out. After all, Riley knew about them now. What could happen?

Inside Out Loop Footnotes by kingofsouls

IO.1) Welcome to the Loops Riley/Riley's Head!

IO.2) Man, the Mind Workers have either really good timing or really bad timing.

IO.3) You know you're good at Stealthing, Looping or otherwise, when one of the Original Seven can't find you.

IO.4) IT'S ME.

IO.5) Wow... way to keep your priorities straight Disgust.

IO.6) Zombies. There will always be zombies.

IO.7) That's right. Bing Bong LIVES!...somehow.

IO.8) Parents; they are always there to shed light onto the darkness, even if they are not sure if they understand or not.

IO.9) You could say this Loop is Fairly Odd. lol IO.10) Oh wow, this one became huuuuge. But it was fun to work on.

Mega Man: Inside Out - Epilogue

"So..." Athena crossed her arms when she and Hephaestus were finally alone in his office. Slenderman had eventually escaped, partly due to overzealousness on the parts of Tama and Madoka creating an escape route for him. And Hephaestus himself had called off the chase. "After everything that happened; blatant trespass, Administrative espionage, intent to destabilize multiple Anchors, and resisting arrest; would you mind explaining why we aren't marching straight to the Justice Gods and asking for a warrant? Janus isn't likely to keep quiet about this unless we can give him a good reason. Not to mention that our little hunt wasn't exactly discreet."

"For one, the trespassing charge isn't likely to stick," Hephaestus showed Athena the message from Zeus on his monitor, causing her to curse under her breath, "especially after what we did manage to do to him is taken into account. By the same token, the espionage charge is shakey."

"Which could call into question our right to arrest him in the first place," Athena sighed, "especially since 'dear old dad's' little stunt, well-meaning as it was, could be interpreted as an invitation. What about intent to destabilize?"

"If we could prove that's what he was doing, then all of the rest would be incidental given the current state of Yggdrasil," Hephaestus nodded. "Unfortunately, that exact point is why I don't want to make a big deal out of this. Here, take a look."

The forge god tapped a few keys and called up a series of reports to the screen. Athena looked at them for a few moment, her eyes widening the longer she looked them over.

"This is... A stability increase ? After what he tried to do?"

"Certainly not what he intended, I'm sure, but results speak a lot louder than intent, especially now. If you'll forgive me the analogy, it's a lot like forge work. Putting materials under controlled stress can make them stronger if you do it right–"

"–or shatter them if you don't," the Olympian strategist nodded. "Don't forget, I've actually paid attention when you talk about your work. So if I'm reading this right, then twice now Slenderman has tried to stress Anchors in your Loop to the point of breaking–"

"–only to strengthen them in the long run when he fails," Hephaestus confirmed. "I think you can see why I might want to keep this quiet."

"Yes..." Athena's lips pursed in deep thought. "You don't want Nidhogg to learn about this."

Nidhogg, the complementary/contradictory divine organization that traditionally opposed the Admins, also known to some as Tartarus, Isfet, and several other ominous names. Composed of what mortals knew as demons, giants, djinn, evil gods (including many of the Titans), and other types of unsavory divinities; they were the formal organization that oversaw the spread of destruction and ruin through the multiverse, a necessary balance when Yggdrasil was in full operation, but also one that many of its members took... undue joy in carrying out.

They were also in something of an official truce with Yggdrasil's Administrative organization, agreeing that more destruction was not what all of creation needed at the moment and had agreed to not only refrain from stalling repair efforts but also, reluctantly, aid them when needed.

If their organization was to learn that such a blatant attempt to destabilize multiple Anchors had actually resulted in an increase in long-term stability, not once, but twice , then there was going to be a political nightmare on that front. Yes, the increase was ultimately from said Anchors triumphing over adversity, and that group did adversity really well , but all it would take was one overzealous divinity and a bout of misfortune and...

"You can't sit on this forever, you know," Athena sighed. "The first time could have been easily written off as a fluke, but now others are going to wonder. If something like this happens again–"

"I know," Hephaestus admitted. "Once could be an accident, twice might be coincidence, but three times or more is a pattern. The next time he tries something like this, and I'm certain there will be a next time, everyone is going to demand answers and I'm not sure I like the implications mine will give them."

"Nidhogg's already putting pressure on us to allow more 'villainous' loopers, blatantly hinting that having a few as Anchors would be better for Yggdrasil's current state, and word is that they've been petitioning for the right to handle some of the 'darker' Loops directly. When this gets out, all of that is only going to get louder."

"I know."

"I don't think I can really hide this either. The rumor mill is already going to have a field day with our little chase earlier."

"Tell everyone he tried something, failed, we overreacted in typical Olympian fashion, dragged a few others along with us, and it's too much trouble to follow up on," the Olympian smith grunted.

"'Dear old dad's' not going to like how that paints us," Athena noted wryly.

"'Dear old dad' can kiss my bum leg," Hephaestus snorted.

"I'll be sure to tell him that," Athena grinned, before sighing heavily. "I still don't know what to tell Janus, though. He was talking about demanding constant surveillance on the Inside Out branch of the Disney Cluster in case of a repeat. Considering how thin we're all spread, someone's going to start an investigation if he keeps that up. Why do I always have to be the one with a level head?"

"Because you're at your most stunning then?"

"You of all people should know exactly how far flattery goes with me," Athena replied flatly.

"It's not flattery, it's fact," Hephaestus smirked. "But how about I be your level head this time? Give Janus a choice, he likes those. He can pursue constant surveillance over one small, recently activated branch like he's saying and draw a lot of scrutiny. Or he can put in a much more low-key request for assistance with his ever-growing workload. Considering he's trying to run almost the entire Disney Cluster on his own, no one will bat an eye and he can divide up the workload however seems best should it be granted. Plus, since there's been talk about increasing inter-pantheon cooperation, if he asks for non-Olympian assistants then the request will probably be fast-tracked. "

Athena considered the plan for a moment, and ultimately concluded that it was sound, well thought out, and probably what she would have come up with anyway. Olympian pride be damned.

"You're not bad at the level-headed thing yourself when you put your mind to it," she admitted.

"Oh, really?" Hephaestus raised an eyebrow. "What were you saying about flattery earlier?"

"It's not flattery, it's fact," she tossed his own statement back at him. "If I wanted to flatter you, I'd say you were the perfect god to lead the Olympians."

"How is that flattery?" Hephaestus asked in confusion. Considering the past and current holders of the title, it could easily be taken as an insult in his opinion.

"Because," Athena walked over to the office door and opened it, coyly tossing the remainder of the line over her shoulder as she left, "there's no such thing as a 'perfect' leader."

Hephaestus blinked for several long moments before turning back to his terminal. "I will never understand that goddess..."

Divine Level of Reality: Shoggath-Chan Message Boards

(Note: The following has been helpfully translated from R'ylehian 1337 and the proliferation of vulgarities filtered out for your convenience)

Daddy'sLittleEldritchHorror: Oh geez, have you guys heard what Slendy did this time?! He actually broke into an Admin office!

I'mWithStupid-: What?!

[CENSORED]: NO [CENSORED] WAY!

-I'mWithStupid: STFU!

Daddy'sLittleEldritchHorror has posted a video (Video is of Slenderman running head-first into the chest of a tanned beach-going Hephaestus flanked by three beach-going Valkyries in chainmail bikinis)

Shaggoff: Is distracted by hot Valkyries

[EXTRACENSORED]: Welp, I always knew Slendy had his head up his own [Censored]. Looks like it's gonna be literal now. Think if I broke into an Admin office they'd do that to me?

[EXTRACENSOREDWITHCHEESE]: Dude, come on over to my place and I'll do that to you for free.

[EXTRACENSORED]: Promise?

ForAGoodTimeCallCthulhu: Nah, he gotz away. But then thiz happenedz!

ForAGoodTimeCallCthulhu has posted a video (Video is an endless loop of Slenderman getting run over by a steam engine)

LOLMi-go: Slendy can haz train wreck? LOLOLOLOLOLOLOL

Shaggoff: Could watch this all millennium

TentaFun has posted a video (Video displays a prone Slenderman getting shot in his buttocks by Madoka's magic arrows)

[CENSORED]: ASSUME THE POSITION!

[EXTRACENSORED]: OH YEAH! Give it to me baby!

[EXTRACENSOREDWITHCHEESE]: Please ma'am, may I have another?

TentaFun: I no, rite? Magical Girlz are da best!

MoreHeadsMoreFun: Full of vitamins and nutrients!

TentaFun: Thatz a wazte of gud magical girlz!

HeComes has logged on

HeComes: Hey guys, wh

LOLMi-go: Brreeep! Newb alert! Brreeep! LOLOLOLOLOLOL

HeComes: at's up?

[CENSORED]: OH GAWD GTFO NEWB! STOP TAINTING US WITH YOUR NEWBNESS!

[Extremely long string of abuse and profanity removed]

HeComes has logged off

Shaggoff: Relieves himself on the door to ward against newb return

MoreHeadsMoreFun: So what the hell was Slendy doing in an Admin office anyway?

F-Tang: o o?

F-Tang: A e, y ooa ae a oe...

Shaggoff: Calls the witchdoctor

ForAGoodTimeCallCthulhu: Hold on gaiz... Theze videoz were totes music worthy!

ForAGoodTimeCallCthulhu has posted a video (Video is a remix of Mr. and Mrs. Andersen fighting Slenderman with hockey sticks set to the Baka Song)

Shaggoff: Cannot breathe due to laughter

LOLMi-go: LOLOLOLOLOLROFLCOPTEROMGWTFBBQ!

ForAGoodTimeCallCthulhu: Wait til you gaiz see tha other one! Just gotz to get tha angles right...

Sl3nd3r1: I hate you all...

LOLMi-go: Slendy waz on?! LOLOLOLOLOLROFLCOPTER!

Daddy'sLittleEldritchHorror: Pfft. Slendy never actually logs off.

Janus sighed. Athena had had a point, damnit, and he'd made his choice. He'd stick with it. Didn't mean that he was thrilled about it. Honestly... he'd never worked all that much outside the Olympians before the Event and even now his interaction was limited.

Of course, part of it was that he'd been expecting a prompter response. He respected the importance of choices, but he also preferred that they be made quickly when presented.

"Oy? You Janus?" a gruff voice cut into the (literally) two-faced god's thoughts.

He looked up, and didn't see anyone. Just a big poof of tangled hair sticking over the end of his des–

"Down here!" the voice bellowed, and Janus stood up to get a better look at the short figure, and promptly wished he hadn't.

The dwarfish god was the ugliest he'd ever laid eyes on, his face possessing mismatched eyes, a thickly tangled and unkempt head of hair and beard that evoked the image of creation's scruffiest lion's mane, bulbous misshapen nose, pockmarked face, and a wide grinning mouth with large misaligned teeth stained yellow (but otherwise clean he noted). His body was short, squat, and so hairy it appeared apelike. His hands were disproportionately large with thick calloused digits and the clothes he wore, looking like some demented Scottish policeman complete with kilt, had the rumpled appearance of having been worn for a couple of days.

Janus sniffed noticeably. Even if he made Quasimodo look like a supermodel, at least whoever it was smelled clean.

"Name's Bes," the dwarvish god's grin widened (47). "I'm with tha Netjer, or tha Egyptians if yer bein' lazy. Also got some ties with tha Afrikaans and tha Mesopotamians. I hear you're lookin' fer some help."

"Um..." Janus wracked his brain for an excuse, "I'm certain you're... qualified... but you aren't quite what I'm looking for."

"You think I'm ugly, don'tcha?" Bes grinned accusingly.

"Well..." Janus thought for a moment and decided not to deny it. "Yes."

"HAH!" Bes laughed, making Janus jump in surprise. "Least yer honest! Most gods'll try and be all 'diplomatic' about it! As if I wasn't proud a' bein' voted tha ugliest god ten eons straight and counting! My wife has no complaints and that's good enough fer me!"

Janus just stared as Bes handed him a resume.

"You're from the Justice department?" Janus blinked in surprise.

"I'm tha equivalent of a mortal beat cop these millenia," Bes shrugged. "Good work, mostly scarin' troublemakers like those Mythos hacks offa whatever mischief they get up ta, but I'd really like ta work closer wit' tha mortals iff'n I'm honest. Got a big soft spot fer 'em. So when I heard through tha grapevine ye were lookin' fer some help after one a' them Mythos creeps tried somethin' wit' one a' yer Anchors, I grabbed my resume and ran over."

"And what can you do about the Mythos Hackers?"

"Why, I can put on my ugly face!" Bes chuckled.

"Your ugly...? I don't believe you."

"Pfft... Ye think this is ol' Bes's ugly face?" the dwarvish god laughed. "This is nothin'! Why, I regularly send demons crying home to mama and tha last time I caught any of those Mythos nuts skulkin' around, I made each and every one scream like a little girl!"

"Sorry, not seein–"

"BOO!"

"SSSSHHHHRRRRIIIIEEEEEKKK!"

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!" Bes fell to the ground with booming belly laughs. "That wasn't even close ta my best either!"

"Okay!" Janus squeaked after a few minutes. "You're hired! Just please don't ever do that again!"

"No promises!" Bes chuckled, getting to his feet. "Ye never know when ye might have to scare troublemakers off after all!"

Janus didn't reply.

"Ye can let go a' tha ceiling light now."

"Okay class," Riley's teacher spoke up loud and clear, "I'm sure you all know that the senior trip is coming up in a few months."

The Loop with the Lights had kept going, looking to last at least through high school, and possibly longer. (48) Riley had kept up with the experiments, spending a good portion of each day with one of her emotions 'taking a back seat' as it were to see if they could somehow influence her without directly manning the console. The results, slow as they had been in coming, were surprisingly positive. None of them could influence her at anything close to full strength, but Riley had started noticing some recognizable twinges from her 'off-duty' emotions between thirteen and sixteen. (49)

"What you may not know is that this trip is being sponsored, in full, by Light Labs."

"Wait, what?" Joy latched onto that fact in an instant, and as a result the teacher now had Riley's full attention.

"They have agreed to provide transportation for the entire senior class, provided that everyone going receives parental permission and can meet the health requirements," the teacher continued, passing stacks of paper listing said requirements. "Due to the nature of the trip, you will all be required to turn in a health form signed by your physician certifying that you are in good health. This is not optional if you wish to go. Yes, I am repeating myself. I know you all too well."

Riley looked over the health requirements. They didn't seem too bad, really. Pretty standard if she remembered her last doctor's visit.

"Let's see... blood pressure, check," Fear began comparing the memory to the list Riley was reading. "Heart rate, check. Vision, check. Able to withstand at least 3gs of force for several minutes?"

"Where are we going?" Disgust piped up from the back of Headquarters, having drawn the short straw today. "The moon?"

Riley had repeated the question before realizing she was doing so.

"As a matter of fact," the teacher smiled, "yes."

Mega Loops 19

Mega Loops 19

AN: The Mega Man: Inside Out chapter has now been updated with denouement, commentary, bonus content, and epilogue!

19.1 (me with an addition by wildrook)

"I have an army!"

"You also have a scheduling conflict."

Loki blinked. "What is that supposed to mean?"

The wall suddenly exploded and there was an elderly balding irate man in a yellow and blue flying saucer glaring at Loki with pure fury.

"Do you have any idea how hard it was for me to book this week for my latest attempt at world conquest?!" the man raged. "That an upstart like you would seek to cut in line before the great Dr. Wily is an insult of the highest order!"

"I am a god, you pitiful mewling mortal!" Loki seethed viciously.

"Then you and your third-rate army will yield fascinating information when I dissect you all for SCIENCE!" the man yelled back. "ROBOT MASTERS: ATTACK!"

'Still hard to believe the guy's not a looper,' Tony mused as events descended into complete chaos.

After the beat-down, Bass smirked at the downed Loki.

"Puny God," he said, the last to leave the room.

Loki gave out a whimper.

19.2 (GammaTron)

"So let me get this straight..." Caboose looked at Axl, who was replacing Tucker this Loop, "You can copy the looks of other robots any time you want?"

"That's the gist of it, yes," Axl noted, "You know, I don't see why..."

"Wa~it for it..." Church and Roll–who was replacing Tex this Loop–held up a finger.

"Huh?" Axl looked at the two.

"So that makes you...a Sugar Robot Lover," Caboose figured out, causing Axl to gasp and gawk, unable to figure out a response.

"There it goes," Church snickered.

"Well, it...it's true," Roll snorted back a laugh, "Y-You...You could make a lot of cash i-if you-hoo-hoo..." she fell over, laughing, "Sugar Robot Lover! Ah-hahahahahaha! Y-You da ho! Heeheeheehee~!"

"It-It's not funny!" Axl snapped, blushing heavily under his black and teal armor, as Roll started kicking the air in laughter.

"Don't let Sister know that you can do that, otherwise she'll be trying to pay you to turn into all kinds of things," Church advised, causing Roll to laugh even harder in the background with Caboose joining in.

"I don't get the joke," Caboose stated the obvious for him.

19.3

"I'm sorry Zero," X told his friend, looking at the all-too familiar sight of the red reploid cradling the inoperative body of his girlfriend Iris.

"Not your fault X," Zero admitted. "You tried your best..."

Colonel angrily brushed off the aid of his soldiers as he stormed into his quarters. Repliforce had been exonerated of all Maverick charges, and the real culprit behind the incidents brought to justice in a joint operation by Repliforce and the Maverick Hunters. It should have been a cause for celebration, but...

He waited until the door slid shut.

"The cost was too high..." he growled, before unleashing his fury on the walls of his own quarters, each heavy blow imprinting a large dent in the thick metal walls.

His sister... The gentle light of mercy to balance out his militaristic nature. The one individual who could rein him in when he started going too far. Because what was a great hero without restraint? Where was the mercy that would stay his hands when the battles were over?

Gone.

Dead.

Because of X.

His eyes hardened. X. The source of everything that had gone wrong with the world in the past decade. The tumor that needed to be cut out of existence for his crimes, intentional or otherwise. Along with all who stood with him.

Part of Colonel realized that his thoughts were those of a Maverick, the very thing he was sworn to fight.

But the half of his soul that cared had already been buried.

19.4

Zero felt a tug on his leg and glanced down to see the familiar form of Alouette.

"Did you want something?" he asked.

"Are you going to marry mommy and be my new daddy?"

Zero's mind and body froze at the question. No matter how many times he encountered variants where Ciel formally adopted the child reploid rather than becoming a surrogate big sister, he would never get used to the way they liked to blindside him with awkwardness.

19.5

"Oh, not you guys," Blues pinched the bridge of his nose as he got a good look at the group that had just shot at him and his team.

"Well, if it isn't the famous Proto Dunce and his team of Dumb-files!" a sleazy voice called back. "Been a while, hasn't it? We haven't thrown down with you since the Eggman-Wily war!"

"Who are these guys?" Jolyne asked. "And why are they working with President Valentine?"

"Nack the Weasel and his partners Bark the Polar Bear and Bean the Dynamite Duck," Blues replied. "They call themselves the Hooligans."

"Hey, Valentine pays well, and he likes our slogan!" Nack smirked back at the Exiles. "Dirty Deeds Done Dirt Cheap!"

19.6

Zero stared down the grinning figure of Fighting Fefnir, the crimson reploid hefting his twin jawed hand cannons (literally), Sodom and Gomorrah as he stared straight back.

"You're as good as the legends say you are, Zero," Fefnir admitted. "But I'm no ordinary reploid who relies on a single class of ability. I've studied the ancient and honored art of heroes older even than yourself."

'Oh, maker. X, what did you tell them this time?' Zero wondered as he braced himself for anything.

"You," Fefnir declared as he aimed one of his jawed hand cannons at Zero, the weapon opening its jaws and reconfiguring itself into something Zero couldn't immediately identify, "are looking at Neo Arcadia's modern master of JAN! KEN! POW!"

Zero raised his Z-saber high to defend against the sudden barrage of... office paper?

Had he been closer to the source of the blast, the sheer volume might have knocked him off his feet, but as it was it was merely obscuring his vis–

Zero dropped to the ground before a giant pair of shears that the storm of paper had obscured could make him about two feet shorter, and rolled to the side out of the way of a sizable boulder that followed.

'Rock, paper, scissors... Cute... Real cute...'

19.7

Blues blinked as he Awoke in Light Labs and looked around.

It looked...

It looked exactly like he'd remembered leaving it so very, very long ago in the baseline. Except a little more up-to-date. A little more lived-in.

The Loop memories hit and Blues realized that in this timeline he'd never had a faulty power core. Never gone through the events that led to him running away. There had been some strain in the initial testing that had led to the military ordering the usual less-advanced Joe units but...

There had never been a falling out between him and his father.

"Blues, could you come here for a moment?" Dr. Light called from another room.

He's going to–

The red raider shook off the dark thought and spent a few moments pondering the request versus taking off until his curiosity got the better of him. No matter what his usual problems with the man were, they'd never happened here. He could keep himself under control for at least one Loop. Long enough to see where this went.

He walked to another room where Dr. Light was waiting next to another robot connected to a diagnostic testing machine awaiting activation. A female model similar to Roll, but... with black hair and a black-and-blue dress that could have come straight out of the 1920s Swing era.

"This is Rhythm, son," Dr. Light explained. "She's your sister unit. I built her to help out more around the lab. Particularly with..." Dr. Light patted his stomach, which had grown larger since Blues had come online, "...my eating habits. I appreciate your help on the matter, son, but I really should be having a more balanced diet and you were never intended as a nutritionist. And we both know I'd try to live on instant ramen and takeout if left to my own devices and Albert's not any better. Anyway, with her assisting you, Dr. Wily and I can begin in earnest with the industrial line of Robot Masters..."

Dr. Light continued explaining, but Blues's mind had wandered off to a different area of thought. Was this what would have happened if he'd never left? Would Rock and Roll have never been built? Or was this just a strange variant where his father had simply gone in a different direction prior to their construction? And what would it mean for the Loop if–

Dr. Light flipped the switch to activate Rhythm and th3-L00|o=[R $43|)...

19.8 (OathToOblivion - Admin Shenanigans)

It was rare for Hephaestus to step out of his office these days. Looking after the Megaverse was a full-time task, after all. But even so, sometimes you just needed to get out and stroll.

...Okay, he was hungry, that was all. As he stepped into the Admin cafeteria, he noticed that it seemed a bit frosty today. Not literally, though. Last time that had happened, dearest dad had had a conniption, although that might have been because his porn was frozen then shattered.

No, it was readily evident that the reason was the lone girl in pink, eating alone at one of the tables as almost everyone ignored her. Hephaestus sighed. This again, huh?

Picking up his lunch, he immediately went over to where the girl was. "Hello, Madoka," he grunted, plopping himself into a seat.

Kaname Madoka, for it was she, started as she saw that somebody had sat with her. "Oh! Hello, Sensei," she greeted sullenly.

Hephaestus swept a hand out at the crowd of other Admins in the room. "They still have problems with you, I see. You shouldn't let them get to you like that."

"But it was my fault what happened. I didn't even mean to, but I did," Madoka whispered.

The Greek Inventor shook his head. "It wasn't your fault. If anything, it was the fault of your Loop's original Admin for not patching that Karmic Destiny thing properly," he pointed out.

'...Actually, come to think of it, who was her Admin?'

"Yo, Hephaestus!" a voice rang out. Turning, Hephaestus and Madoka both saw Hermes speed up and plop down into a seat with his own lunch.

"Hermes. How have you been?" Hephaestus asked.

"Eh, well enough. Heard you got X and Zero off the ground recently. Syncharitíria, and all that! That also helped me pull some lost code out of the ether for Sonic and his crew. They've got a whole other major Variant to play with now!" the Winged Messenger announced.

"Another? How many does that Branch even have?" Hephaestus asked incredulously.

Hermes shrugged. "Honestly, too many. Even with baseline restored, they still get way too many Variants and Fused Loops than normal. I've been meaning to find a way to fix it, but..." he shrugged again in a "what are you going to do?" manner.

Hephaestus frowned. "Let me take a look at it next time I have a moment, you might have missed something."

"Um, excuse me," Madoka bowed, before getting up to go get more food. As soon as she was out of earshot, Hephaestus asked the question that had been on his mind lately.

"By the way, Hermes, you wouldn't happen to know who Madoka's Admin was, do you?"

Hermes blinked, before growing serious. "No, actually. Most of the others give her grief, but quite honestly it was that idiot's fault for letting the bunny-cat's system even give her enough energy to Ascend."

"And yet, we haven't heard anything about them being punished. Strange, don't you think?" the Greek God of the Forge pointed out.

Hermes frowned. "You think they skipped out? In the middle of this crisis?"

"It's only a theory, but..."

"But it's really likely," Hermes finished, knowing where the train of thought led. He looked around surreptitiously, before leaning in closer. "All right, I'll look into it. Won't even charge you for it, since this is serious business. Whoever it was skipped out while everyone's backs were turned. Even if it was with the best of intentions, we have an AWOL Admin, and that's a big no-no, these days."

"I appreciate it, brother."

19.9

"Zero?" X wondered. "Is something wrong?"

Zero stared out over the central atrium of Hunter HQ, staying silent for several minutes.

"I... kind of thought you'd be happy Iris was alive this Loop," X continued.

"I am," Zero sighed. "It's just... has she seemed kind of... off lately?"

"She's probably in mourning," X said, reminding Zero that even if Iris had lived this Loop, her brother Colonel hadn't.

"Yeah..." Zero admitted.

Iris smiled at the other navigators as she returned to her duties. They said that it was a miracle that she'd survived the incident at all. That her systems were not meant to handle the full original program matrix, the one that had needed to be split to become her and Colonel. They gushed over how romantic it was that her life was saved by Zero, her love. They offered condolences over the death of her brother.

What did they know? Did they know the emptiness inherent in the absence of a connection so innate its very existence hadn't been noted until it was gone? Did they know the pain of trying to reach across that connection for a comforting presence that should have been there, only to find a void? Did they know the suffering of losing the other half of their own soul?

Did they know what it was like to look upon that love they gushed over and judge him responsible?

How many of them realized that her smile was false? How many of them guessed that her drive had died with her brother? Did any of them even suspect?

"Hello, dear sister..."

*"Who sniff? Who's there? Colonel? Is...sob... is that you?"*

"No, dear sister... Not Colonel... Not Colonel at all..."

"Why...?"

"I do apologize... I hadn't realized Dr. Cain had made more reploids... Your dear big brother Sigma would have gotten in touch much sooner if he had...!"

And could any of them comprehend what had taken its place?

19.10 (me, with add-on by Hubris Plus)

Lex Luthor laughed as he stood over the defeated Justice League in his latest battle suit. It had taken months of planning, but he'd found all of their weaknesses and exploited them masterfully.

The kryptonian went down first, inflicted with a bioengineered kryptonite-infused bacteria Luthor had developed and was on his deathbed last he'd heard. The speedster had been a bit trickier, but after figuring out how to block his connection to the Speed Force, the 'fastest man alive' became no more threat than an ordinary man. The so-called Green Lantern had been far simpler once Lex had learned that his powers required concentration. A simple psychotropic and his own teammates had turned on him to prevent his fight against non-existent demons from destroying the city. The martian only needed fire to counteract, but Lex had gone the extra mile to get a hold of some rather nasty new invention that had left the alien in critical condition. The most difficult had been the amazon, and he'd needed to delve into the occult to find something appropriate, but there were plenty of beings with ancient grudges against the Greek Gods she followed that had been happy to offer their services. After that, using an experimental weapon to dangerously dehydrate the king of Atlantis had just been showing off.

As for the dark knight? A simple computer virus had just rendered everything actually dangerous in the man's arsenal more of a threat to him than to Luthor himself. As a bonus, it had also taken down the latest member of the League entirely.

"Seriously?" a voice he hadn't expected to still be capable of speaking interrupted Luthor's moment of triumph. He whipped around to see the blue-armored robot, the 'Mega Man', not only not incapacitated by his virus, but seemingly unaffected at all. "I'm a freaking robot . The virus thing is, like, the third most common attack people use on me. Right after shooting and electromagnetic pulses. Did you honestly think I wouldn't have a decent firewall in place?"

Lex blinked. He thought he'd accounted for any potential firewall...

"You did, didn't you?" the blue robot slapped his face with his hand. "Lex Luthor thinks he's the most brilliant man in the world. Like I don't hear that all the time. Seriously, I'm thinking of listing 'fights despotic egotistical geniuses' as my hobby. Admins know I don't have all that much time for anything else."

Luthor scowled. Time for plan B. He used the neural interface to activate the tactical EMP burst, and blinked again when the robot remained unaffected.

"Yes, the EMP," the robot sighed with rather well-emulated exasperation in Luthor's opinion. "Been there, done that, dad won't let me out of the house without several layers of shielding since the Ra Moon incident."

Luthor's scowl deepened and he readied his energy weapons. There was always the old-fashioned way and he'd designed this armor to match the kryptonian.

"And now the shooting," the robot sighed again as he almost casually sidestepped each shot. "Honestly, I'm tired of this. Mirror Buster."

Luthor's gauntlet-mounted energy weapons were suddenly destroyed by his own reflected energy blasts.

"I suppose I should be thankful everyone forgets how dangerous I really am," the robot continued as he met Luthor's chest-mounted laser with some manner of flash grenade that blinded the armored human. "Frankly, I don't like violence in general, I like hurting others even less, and for all the fighting I end up doing I still consider myself a pacifist."

Luthor growled and made to charge, only to find that his boots were stuck to the ground with some sort of industrial-grade adhesive. As he began straining to free himself, the robot continued speaking.

"But the fact is," the robot glared at Luthor, "I am dangerous, I am strong, and when people like you decide to use force for your own selfish ends without regard for the rights and safety of others, I will respond in kind."

Luthor tore his boots free and used his jets to propel himself forward as he threw the mightiest punch he could manage. The robot sidestepped the first pass, but Luthor felt the tell-tale bump of a clipped impact. Ignoring the warning his armor flashed that an unauthorized source had scanned his systems he doubled back for another attempt and increased his speed. This time Luthor struck head-on, except that instead of obliterating the azure upstart like he'd expected, he found his charge swiftly grinding to a halt, the robot's metal feet digging deep furrows in the street, as the robot caught the punch in one hand.

'Impossible!' Luthor's mind balked at the event. 'My armor halted by the invention of some third-rate crackpot less than half its size?!'

"I'm the Mega Man," The robot glared as his hand flexed enough to buckle the armor on Luthor's gauntlet, forcing the man to stifle a cry of pain as the pressure stopped just short of crushing his hand. "And you're just another name on a long list."

"Is is just me, or do all of the boyscouts get this scary when you wind them up?" Flash asked, following the arc of Lex's powersuit as it tumbled out of the city limits and plowed a furrow through the earth.

"I told you to beware the nice ones," Batman noted dryly.

19.11) (masterofgames)

The warp pad in Doctor Light's lab lit up as Rock rematerialized. The moment it had finished, he started running full pelt to the workshop area, ripping off his helmet and tossing it aside. "Dad! Is Roll okay? Please, tell me her IC chip is intact!" he pleaded as he burst through the door.

"Well, I have good news, bad news, and interesting news." Doctor Light sighed, placing a hand on Rock's shoulder comfortingly. "The good news is, her chip is fine." Doctor Light couldn't help but smile slightly at the look of relief on Rock's face. "The BAD news is, her body was so badly damaged, that it's a total write off."

Rock slumped in depression. "But... you can rebuild her, right?" he asked hopefully.

"Well, that's the interesting bit. I don't have to, because she asked me not to."

"...Pardon?"

"When you first got your combat parts, Roll was so worried about you that she started trying to design a combat chassis of her own. It... wasn't very good, to put it bluntly." Doctor Light explained, typing away while he spoke, directing a few robotic arms to place Roll's chip in a slot in a sealed capsule in the center of the room. "When I saw it, I knew that wasn't going to stop her from using it to help you, so I made her promise to stop developing it, on the condition that she let me design a more reliable one for her." He continued as the capsule started powering up. "She agreed, so long as she got to name it. I did inform her that it was misspelled, but she she insisted it was needed for the acronym." he shrugged. "Anyhow, she made me promise that if anything happened, that I would use the project as her new body, be it to restore her, or save you."

With a few rapid beeps and a blink of a large green light on the door, the capsule slowly slid open, releasing a cloud of coolant vapor. "She really looks up to you, you know. She insisted on the color scheme." he grinned as Roll emerged in her new body. A little over a foot taller than Rock, long blue hair, wearing blue and white armor with combat heels, far more adult looking than her old childish body, and holding a chain gun nearly as large as she was in each hand, she stepped up to stand before them with a knowing smirk. "Rock, allow me to present the Kombat Operation System - Multiple Ordinance Support unit."

Rock just groaned and palmed his face. "KOS-MOS... great. And this was going to be such a quiet loop..."

19.12

X and Zero were in an intense debate about what to do regarding Sigma when they both Awoke, blinked as Loop memories set in, and looked themselves over.

"X..." Zero broke the silence first, "why are we lions?"

"Well," X began, "I suppose it has to do with the divergent evolutionary history of this particular Loop leading to a sapient felinoid population as the dominant species, which in turn caused said species to develop its robots with matching body types and basic capabilities, leading to–"

"I'm going to choose to take that as 'I don't know' and change the subject."

19.13

The room blinked as the respawned fighters stumbled back in.

"A double KO? But... The Hub...?"

"Well..." Rock rubbed his head sheepishly, "I may have cheated a bit and saved one last Black Hole Bomb just for that last exchange."

"You also went heavy on the sonic attacks..." Astro Boy pounded his ears like he was trying to regain function in them. "Seriously... Ow..."

"I also like to do my research when I can," Rock shrugged. "Something like 'ridiculously enhanced auditory receptors' was begging to see if you had equal dampening capabilities."

"You made my butt-guns backfire ," Astro Boy accused.

"You were just surprised that I countered with quick-drying concrete rather than staring at them in stupefaction," Rock smirked. "Like I said, I did my research. Come on, Astro, Hub lore says I was based on you. Did you think I wouldn't look you up when I had the chance?"

"Yeah... but... I'm so much stronger and faster than you are!"

"And, what? You think that makes you unique? Astro..." Rock laughed and slung an arm over his fellow robot hero's shoulders. "Practically every serious foe I've ever faced has been stronger than me, or faster, or more powerful, or all of the above. From the average robot master, to mechanical eldritch abominations, to universal class doomsday weapons. And it's never been about how strong I am. It's always been about how I use the tools I've been given."

"Huh...? Aw... nuts... Those guys in the Hub made the match more like one of my fights..." Astro realized.

"And I decided for the Loop match to make it more like one of mine," Rock grinned.

"Still... how'd you know I'd charge straight into that Black Hole Bomb you saved up at the end?"

"Astro..." Rock shook his head. "I hate to say this, but you are such a Shonen hero sometimes..."

19.14

A very female X, looking for all the world like an adult Roll rather than an adult Rock, tried to keep as straight a face as possible as she watched her red-faced friend retreat from the armory.

"Not one word out of you, X..." Zero grumbled.

"Now, Zero, you know I have to ask why you were going into the ladies armory," X surrendered her face to the assaulting grin. "As commander of the Hunters, I do need to be sure there's nothing illicit going on."

" You try going fifty Loops straight as the opposite gender!" Zero growled out. "See how many of your habits get scrambled!"

"Fif..." X did some calculations in her head. "You were female during the perversion virus outbreak? Huh... You really don't look that different in your armor, you know that?"

"Please stop reminding me about that Loop..."

"Anyway," X shrugged, "if you want me to know how it feels I could talk to my older sister next time we have a Loop together and set something up."

"What does Roll have to do with you being a girl?" Zero blinked, his blush receding in confusion.

"Apparently everything," X admitted. "Every time I've been female, Mega Woman has been considered history's greatest hero rather than Mega Man."

Zero sighed. "As opposed to my creator who probably flips a coin as often as not..."

19.15

Zero had to wonder if Yggdrasil hated him sometimes. He was in the middle of a strange fused loop with Rock and Roll's era where he was the human son of Dr. Wily, and even worse, it was some stupid Harem Variant. Iris was the tsundere childhood friend, Layer was the stoic "big sis" figure, Ciel was the shy, book-smart one, Leviathan was the tomboy, and X was the gay choice.

Thank Hephaestus that the latter was Awake.

Currently, the six were all at the local pool. Zero was trying to stay out of the girls' way, which led X to try and speak with his friend.

"Hey, you okay?" X asked.

"Oh sure, I'm fine. Never mind the fact that my girlfriend along with most of the other girls I've interacted with in baseline are obsessively trying to get my attention, and are all willing to hurt me whenever I do even the least implicating thing possible, oh no, I'm just fine."

"Are you still mad about the washing machine?"

Zero glared at his friend, "NEVER. Mention. The. Washing. Machine."

X simply raised his hands in defense, "Don't get mad at me. You usually don't let loops get to you this much."

Zero sighed. "I know. It's just..." he paused, "why does this happen to me? I keep getting transformed, or I get hurt or insulted or embarrassed. It's like Yggdrasil is using me as a punching bag. And this loop, I get Iris, but she's nothing like her baseline self."

X shrugged, "That's not true. She's still really protective of her brother."

"Not the point. Maybe I'll just go hide elsewhere for this loop."

"That doesn't sound like you, Zero. You're not someone who would let the world bring you down like this. Besides, who said you needed to play along with the loop? Try and make the girls understand that you want to be friends or something."

Zero raised his head. "Yeah. You're right. You hear that, tree? I will not be your bh today!"

Yggdrasil took offence.

Zero then walked off towards the girls unaware of the fact that he stepped on a full water bottle. The water bottle then burst, sending its cap flying. Bouncing around the pool, somehow not losing momentum at all, it finally slammed into a nearby cup that was holding chopsticks for some reason. While most of the sticks simply fell, four of them shot towards the four girls.

Zero, blissfully unaware of what was about to happen, called for the girls. The four turned towards him, just as the sticks proceeded to pierce the backs of their swimsuits.

Zero couldn't bring himself to look away, as the four bikini tops fell in unison. The girls, upon realizing what had happened, immediately covered themselves to retain some modicum of modesty.

Zero panicked, immediately saying that it wasn't his fault, which only served to remind the girls that he had a full-frontal view. Flames surrounded the enraged girls, each pulling out a weapon of choice.

Leviathan pulled a harpoon, Layer had a frying pan, Ciel had a wrench and Iris had an electrified mace. Together, the embarrassed girls came down on him with cries of "PERVERT!"

"Oh dear," was all X was able to say.

Rock and Roll were currently relaxing in the lab of their home.

"How do you think X and Zero are doing?" asked Roll.

Before Rock could respond, an earsplitting scream spooked him, one that sounded a lot like Zero.

"That can't be good," said Rock.

19.16

Clark Kent smiled to himself as he walked into the Daily Planet. It was a new year, full of new possibilities and–

"Hey, Smallville," Lois Lane smirked as she sashayed up holding that morning's edition. "See the headline yet? Superman stopped the Toyman from wreaking havoc in New York last night."

"Really?" Clark did his best to feign ignorance. Regardless of who knew his secret identity, it was good to keep in practice. "I hadn't heard about that. I turned in early last night."

"Sure you did," Lois gave Clark a knowing gaze and thrust the paper into his hands. "Feel free to read that and kill a few minutes before Perry gives us our assignments.

Chuckling, Clark walked over to his desk to do exactly that, and nearly did a spit-take when a particular fact about the paper caught his eye. It could have been easily missed by anyone, including him, if they hadn't been paying attention but his eyes had just happened to land there.

"Lois?" he called after his girlfriend. "Why does the date on the paper say 'Wilyday, January first'?"

"Uh, because it's the first of Janu–" Lois stopped suddenly. "Did you say ' Wily day'? As in Dr. Wily, the mad scientist who's always harassing that poor Mega Man kid?"

"Yes," Clark nodded, turning the paper so the printed date was clearly visible to Lois while he fiddled with his computer. "Right there on the front page. And on my computer. Looks like even the internet thinks this is Wilyday instead of Friday. Apparently Friday's tomorrow. It seems the bad doctor just made an eight day week all over the world somehow..."

19.17 (DrTempo)

From The Journal of Sunset Shimmer:

I've gone metal this Loop. As in, I'm made of metal. I'm called Sunset Woman here, a creation of one . Shortly after my 'activation', tried turning me to his side when he snapped.

As tempted as I was to just kick his flank by going all-out, I'd remembered Blues telling me that Wily was 'Dreaming'; he's never truly Awakened, but seems to retain some knowledge of past Loops, if only like they were dreams. Reminds me of how I first saw my Loop memories why back in that fateful first Fused Loop.

In practice, that means he does tend to use said fragments of memory to change things up. I even heard he even managed to beat up a certain Bureau, even getting past their anti-tech defenses.

The first one of THOSE Loops I have, I'm going to enjoy tearing the Bureau apart...

But back to the events of this Loop. After I escaped, Rock and Roll arrived to save me, only to see me Keyblade in hand.

Turns out Blues was here as well, and he explained my story. From what he said, there'd been a Fused Loop with Equestria recently... if Blues remembers right, it was shortly before he met me. is curious as to why I'm Looping anyhow... You and me both. Hopefully, Twilight'll have the answer.

Rock said to sit this Loop out, and try to relax. I really can't. Guess I've become the kind of person who can't really stand by and watch evil win.

But I understood why they wanted me to sit things out: and his Dreaming. Anything I might do could make things tougher in later Loops.

I actually pity Wily in a way. I do sympathize with his wanting recognition, but the ends never justify the means.

As the Loop went on, I was patient, but I never liked it. I could've done something to help...

I also feel bad for Rock and his Loop...they were nearly erased from ever even existing.

As this Loop ended, I'm starting to see what Loopers must go through as the Loops pass...

19.18

Sunset Shimmer groaned as she tried to shake the static out of her hair. Waking Up after the whole Fall Formal demoness incident was never all that fun, especially as it repeatedly reminded her of what kind of person/pony she used to be. Still, the incident served to introduce magic to the alter-Equestria which gave her an opportunity to try and figure out how it worked. She could only lament the fact that she'd forgotten how much she loved doing field research until recently. So many lost opportunities...

If only the magic of her friends, the alternates of the Elements of Harmony and the members of The Rainbooms band in this reality, didn't keep finding amusing ways to zap her when she tried to take readings.

"I give up..." she moaned from where she'd allowed herself to collapse on the floor while the Rainbooms began band practice away from the instrumentation she'd set up. "I'm no closer to knowing how magic works here than I've ever been..."

"That easily?" a male voice that Sunset wasn't used to intervened in her thoughts, reminding her that she had a pair of visitors this Loop. Something she normally didn't. Visiting loopers usually ended up in Equestria with Twilight and the others.

"Do you have any idea how many times I've run tests like this, only to end up zapped, splatted, defenestrated, and otherwise humiliated?"

"Watching you cough up a puff of rainbow smoke was kind of funny," a female voice admitted and Sunset snorted in amusement despite herself.

"Yeah, well, thanks for helping me out, Rock, Roll," Sunset sighed and sat up, trying to brush herself off as she looked at the twin loopers. "Have I mentioned how glad I am to meet you again?"

"A few times," Rock grinned.

"At least you didn't ask us to autograph your copy of Daring Do and the Curse of the Magi again," Roll grinned. (*) "Or any of the other books written about that Loop."

"Sorry about that by the way," Sunset blushed. "It just sounded so impressive when I read about it the first time. Ahuizotl, Tirek Sunstar, Discord, Waltz, the Dark Mane, King Sombra," Sunset trailed off and her expression turned somber, "Dr. Wily subverting the Elements of Harmony..."

"Um..." Roll hesitated on seeing Sunset's guilty expression. "That wasn't in any way your fault, you know."

"Yeah," Rock agreed. "You weren't even part of that Loop. What Wily did with the Elements and their bearers had nothing to do with you."

"Maybe..." Sunset hugged herself. "Maybe not. After all, I was the one villain in the baseline who successfully subverted an Element of Harmony, however temporary. I can't help but feel that the possibility itself is tied to that event."

Rock and Roll remained silent and exchanged glances with each other.

"You know what your problem is, Sunset?" Roll asked, getting a look from the other girl. "You give up too easily."

"What?"

"Yeah, especially on yourself," Rock nodded as he dialed a number on his phone. "Hold on. Hi dad, yeah I'm at school with friends. Look, we've got a budding researcher here who's so frustrated with a lack of results that she's ready to give up the whole thing. Uh-huh. Yeah, Sunset Shimer. You remember her, right? Studying magical manifestations. They happen while playing music. Gotcha. See you soon," Rock ended the call. "He'll be right over."

"Uh..." Sunset blinked. "How soo–"

A door suddenly slammed open, startling Sunset as well as the Rainbooms from their practice. Silhoetted in the doorway was a stout bearded man in a labcoat, holding several rolled-up charts and wearing stylish shades. Dr. Light had arrived.

"Um... doesn't that door lead to the band closet?" Pinkie expressed the band's collective confusion.

"I come in the name of SCIENCE!" Dr. Light declared, pointing dramatically.

"How?" Sunset wondered incredulously.

"Remember how we told you that dad studied Pinkie Pie's abilities that Loop while Unawake?" Rock whispered. "Well, after we last met, he Dreamed up the research one Loop and set about replicating them."

"Again, how?"

"Why, with SCIENCE! dear girl!" Dr. Light declared from behind Sunset, making her jump several feet into the air.

"That makes no sense!" Sunset accused upon landing.

"It makes perfect sense!" Dr. Light returned, striking a pose. "After all, what is SCIENCE! if not study? What is it if not the power to stare into the unknown and declare that it shall be made known? To seek out the shrouded mysteries of existence, present youself before them and say 'teach me!'? To unravel the secrets of the cosmos with neverending wonder, marveling at each new tidbit of knowledge they give up, and persisting no matter if the research takes a day or a lifetime? Or, indeed several lifetimes? The drive to ask questions of the unknowable and transform it into the known! That is SCIENCE!"

The room was silent for several beats as six of the eight students gaped in astonishment at the man.

"Dude!" Rainbow found her voice first. "Did you actually just make studying sound awesome?"

"Sheeeeooooooot..."

"Is it wrong that I suddenly have the biggest schoolgirl crush on your dad?" Sunset whispered to Roll while blushing crimson.

"I wish I could say this was the first time that happened," Roll sighed.

"Now, head researcher Sunset," Dr. Light continued, causing the girl to jump at the address, "I believe you were studying the manifestation of magic through music?"

"Head researcher? Me?" Sunset blinked in astonishment. "Er... I mean, yes, but all the readings I took just blew up in my face. The instrumentation can't get any clear reading."

"Well, then, we start with observation of the phenomenon then," Dr. Light proceeded, unperturbed. "Perhaps ask questions of the subjects afterwards about how the manifestation feels."

"Well..." Fluttershy responded quietly, "it does feel kind of warm and nice, like being hugged by lots of cute fluffy bunnies."

"Mine rather feels like a walk down the runway while wearing the most fabulous dress," Rarity added.

"The satisfaction of a hard day's work," Applejack nodded.

"And," Dr. Light stopped Sunset from writing those down by placing a gentle, but firm, hand on Sunset's notepad, "do not forget to include all known subjects."

"Huh?"

"Dear Sunset," Dr. Light chuckled, "I was there at the battle of the bands. I saw you undergo the very same phenomenon you are trying to study. How the magic works with you is as relevant to this research as how it works with them."

"Yeah!" Rainbow shouted, holding up Sunset's guitar. "Get up here and pony up with the rest of us!"

Sunset looked between the Rainbooms and the visiting loopers for a few moments, before giving in to the emotions of the moment and joining her friends.

"Alright! One... two... one two three four!"

*) See My Mega Pony: Season 1 for details of the events that take place in the book.

19.19

Sherriff Jack Carter had seen a great many things in his time as the head law enforcement official of Eureka, a town that could best be described as the 'mad science capital of the world'. With all the government involvement, secret organizations, end-of-the-world threatening accidents, reality bending, and general wackiness that implied.

And that was before the whole thing with the Loops had begun. Before his years between arriving in Eureka for the first time and the imminent birth of his second biological child were set on perpetual repeat (and, yes, he frequently wanted to rage at the heavens to let his son/daughter be born already!), bookended by he and Zoey literally passing themselves on the road out, only for him to Awaken in the car driving into town back in the past. Reality clearly had a sense of humor, but the joke was getting old as far as he was concerned.

So far, he hadn't lived through the same set of events twice. Heck, that was true even in his baseline after traveling through time (long stories). His Admin, Enki, had explained it being due to his branch having 'a tendency towards high variance' or something along those lines when he came down after an event now known across the Loops as 'The Crash'. What it seemed to mean in practice was that certain events he remembered from his baseline may or may not happen any given Loop, with some being more frequent than others, and familiar mad science capers could be the result of any of dozens of related or (seemingly) unrelated events. Sometimes he swore the universe just flat made stuff up solely to screw with him.

Bottom line: Assume nothing, no matter how familiar it might seem.

Like the guy walking into town right now. The timing, gait, and the fact that Carter hadn't seen him in town yet this Loop suggested one particular individual that Sherriff Carter was familiar with. Certain aspects of the individual's appearance suggested something rather different.

"Hey, Carl?" Jack spoke up to the empty interior of his armored jeep. "Correct me if I'm wrong, but that doesn't quite look like Callister Raynes, does it?"

"No," a harsh computerized voice emanated from the jeep's dash. "Callister Raynes is not prone to wearing shades, brightly colored scarves, or styling his hair in a pompadour in any variant so far encountered."

"Didn't think so. Let's go introduce ourselves."

Introductions had been much simpler than Jack had anticipated, which was fine by him. As had getting the stranger to agree to join him and Carl at a special table outside Cafe Diem. Special, because Vincent, the cafe's proprietor, had designed said table to accommodate AI-capable automobiles like Carl along with additional more human-sized guests.

The stranger had seemed skeptical of the fact that the cafe had no menus, boasting that it could make any dish for any customer. He'd dropped the incredulous look when Vincent had come out with a Connecticut-style steamed cheeseburger for Carter, a can of 10-W40 oil for Carl, and a blue can with a large 'E' emblazoned on the side for the stranger himself.

"How in...?" the stranger examined the can from several angles in astonishment.

"I've stopped questioning Vincent's ability to serve anything a long time ago," Jack replied. "So, going out on a limb here, I'm guessing that you're a visiting looper."

Getting a nod, Jack continued.

"I'm also guessing, from the general timing of your arrival in town, that this Loop you're a first-generation human-like AI invented by Nathan Stark, only something went wrong and you had to leave town."

"That's a pretty good guess."

"Well, you seem to be replacing a guy from our Loop named Callister Raynes, though I doubt that's what you're called this Loop."

"Right. Blues Right. Because the Loops have a strange sense of humor sometimes."

"You're telling me," Carter agreed readily right before he spotted his female deputy storm up. The one who often had a relationship with Callister Raynes before he left. Oh boy...

"You remember what I said would happen if you ever came back?" Jo Lupo; military-trained Eureka deputy, fellow looper, and four-star hoplophile; growled at Blues.

"I do," Blues nodded and stood, turning to face the woman and calmly accepting whatever punishment she deemed fit to unlea–

Jo Lupo enveloped Blues in a fierce hug.

Jack stared in astonishment. As did many other people at Cafe Diem.

"...Not that I'm complaining, but I'm sure you said you were going to blast me into the next county or words to that effect."

"Don't tempt me," Jo growled. "At least you had the decency to say goodbye, unlike some people..."

"You mean Raynes...?" Blues asked as Jo released him and they both sat down.

"No..." Jo's gaze hardened.

"So, anyway," Jack cleared his throat, "Blues, this is Jo, she's my deputy and a fellow looper like Carl. Jo, this is Blues, he's replacing Callister as you've clearly noticed. Now, back to our original topic, what brings you to town Blues?"

"Adventure? Romance? Just visiting?" Carl ticked some common possibilities off.

"Desperate service call for degrading systems?" Jack added in Callister's typical reason.

"Following rumors of a shadowy organization who are trying to exert control over scientists," Blues supplied.

"Any chance you could narrow it down a bit?" Jack prompted. "Almost the entire town is scientists, usually of the 'mad' variety to one extent or another."

"...Actually, I'd better tell you about my home Loop first. With a reputation like that, you're going to play host to my real dad, Dr.

Thomas Light, and his best friend/arch nemesis Dr. Albert Wily sooner or later."

"Let me guess, the latter likes to try and take over the world?"

"Yep."

"Oh joy," Carl deadpanned. "More new and exciting ways to get blown up."

"You seem remarkably blase about the things that happen around here," Blues noted, dusting himself off from the latest 'happening'.

"Yeah, well, after your first few doomsday scenario repetitions," Jack wiped his forehead, "you learn a few important things whether you want to or not."

"Like what?"

"Like carry an ordinary pocketknife at all times," Jack pointedly folded up the item that had been instrumental in saving Eureka this time. "You'd be amazed how often that comes in handy."

It had taken several months of planning and maneuvering, along with some of Jack's remembered hints about common factors in his Loops, but Blues had finally managed to confirm the identity of a member of the organization he was tracking, known as The Consortium. One Beverly Barlowe, psychotherapist and owner of Eureka's one and only 'Bed and Breakfast', with a rather salacious emphasis on 'bed' for both occupations.

Beverly currently struggled against ropes tying her to a chair and Blues paced around her, the otherwise empty room lit by a single bulb.

"You don't know what you're doing!" Beverly hissed. "The technology being created here is dangerous! It needs to be controlled! There are things mankind is not ready for, and this place is given far too much freedom with them!"

Blues sighed. "I've encountered far too many groups who thought that controlling human knowledge was 'in humanity's best interest'. None of them were right."

"But we're not like those others! We actually do know what's best!"

Beverly blinked in astonishment. Her captor had matched her claim word for word.

"Do you even know what you're trying to do?" Blues accused. "Have you studied history at all ? Denying scientific advancement because people 'can't handle it'. Censoring knowledge 'for the good of humanity'. Asking that everyone else trust that you 'know what's best'. You're talking about bringing back the dark ages . One of the worst periods of human history. A period where the common person had no defense against the elite few because those few had all the knowledge and shared none of it."

"But technology is progressing too fast!" Beverly insisted. "The atomic bomb was just the tip of the iceberg! We weren't ready and created a weapon that could destroy the world! How long until something goes too far out of control and humanity pays the price?"

"Oh, I'd say over ten thousand years ago," Blues shrugged. "Seriously, when do you think humanity has ever been ready for any of its discoveries? Sure, humanity wasn't ready for the atom bomb, but it wasn't ready for steam power either. Or iron working. Heck, it wasn't ready for fire . Or do you think people really have that under complete control?"

"I..." Beverly tried, but had to concede the point. Fire extinguishers were in every building. Hydrants on every street. Fire departments in every town. There were control methods and safety regulations out the wazoo solely dedicated to dealing with fire, and it still claimed lives and property every year. "But that just proves my point! Humanity isn't mature enough to deal with technology of this level!"

"And how do you think they get there?" Blues glared at her through his shades. "They get mature enough to handle the technology by using it. Learning its capabilities and limitations as well as dealing with its dangers. As long as people are allowed the right to learn, there will be those who desire to push the limits of their knowledge. The only way to stop it is to deprive them of that right. To control their lives and eliminate their freedom."

Beverly trembled as her captor's tone shifted dangerously and he brought his face to hers.

"And if there was ever something people shouldn't be allowed to do, especially those who think they know best, it's that. I may be a machine. I may have originally been commissioned as a weapon. But I was given a mind and a will of my own. Enough to know how valuable both are. If you and yours try to deprive anyone of that, I will oppose you with everything at my disposal."

19.19) Valentine Meikin: "Futuristic robot just walked into town... Just another day in Eureka..."

19.18) She's hanging out more at home now, doing SCIENCE and rocking her pony out.

NiGHTcapD: On Thomas' initial appearance, cue "We Are The Robots" from MM9. It just works. Alternatively, do it after Sunset's counting cue.

19.17) An excerpt from Sunset's Travels.

19.16) He's at this eight days a week, you know.

19.15) Zero does have a fair number of potential love interests, doesn't he?

19.14) Gender Bending issues... in the future!

19.13) Mega Man offers Friendship! Astro Boy accepts!

19.12) Lion Men? It'll never catch on.

19.11) And given Rock's rather generous definition of 'quiet'...

19.10) Rock's 'World of Cardboard' speech.

19.9) Of course, Iris living when Colonel dies isn't exactly desirable either.

19.8) An excellent question when you think about it.

19.7) CRITICAL LOOP ERROR: ANCHOR NOT FOUND

19.6) You know... It kind of is the setting's most ancient and noble art if you think about it...

19.5) Fused Loop checklist: Blues, Wily - Mega Man; Hooligans, Eggman - Sonic the Hedgehog; Jolyn, President Valentine - JoJo's Bizarre Adventure; Exiles team concept - Marvel Comics; chance of more elements not seen in-snip - High 19.4) ...Poor Zero. No. No, I'm not laughing. Seriously. Cross my heart... you aren't buying this are you?

19.3) In the event that Iris dies and Colonel doesn't... Run.

19.2) Poor Axl. No one takes him seriously.

19.1) This just isn't Loki's invasion.

Bonus Content: Eureka Loops, circa The Crash

Eureka.X

Jack Carter was at his wit's end trying to figure out what had gone wrong in Eureka. He'd lived through years of riding herd on mad scientists and their wacky and dangerous experiments as the town sheriff, gone back in time twice... wait, he'd gone back three times and changed the past twice, had to live with the guilt that saving the town from a degrading time loop had killed... not exactly a friend but definitely not a bad person, and right as he was driving out to take Zoey back to college...

He'd passed some spectre of the two of them coming the other way in the same car he'd been driving when he had first wandered into the top-secret town. And a moment later, he was back in that original car with his daughter asking if he'd seen the spectre of their future selves driving past.

And so he'd had to do it all over again. Oh, sure, a number of things tended to be different. Like he'd learned the first time around, traveling back in time doesn't mean that you can expect things to play out the same way, but there had been more than a few key points that remained at least eerily similar. He'd done his best to investigate what the cause was, discreetly (he'd learned that lesson the first time around too), but nothing ever came up. He'd lived those years over, started to drive his daughter back to college, saw themselves coming the other way...

And was back in that car again, on the first day he came to the town of Eureka.

Which was how it had gone, over and over and over again. At first it had just been him, but then one time Zoey started to remember too. She hadn't the next time, but every so often she'd remember. A few repeats later and his deputy (well, his original deputy before ANDY) Jo Lupo started to remember as well. Henry Deacon had come after that which finally put someone in the group who might be able to figure out what was going on, but all of his investigations had come up empty. He'd even died a few times, only to find himself back in that car driving into Eureka with Zoey.

Well, this time he'd figure out what was going on. One of the things that always seemed to happen was that he married Allison near the end of those repeating years. Married her and got her pregnant. And the most maddening thing about all of this temporal repetition (or whatever the technical term was) was that whole thing always ended before his new child could be bor–

CRACK

Eureka.X+1

Zoey Carter screamed as the car she was suddenly riding in (again) swerved dangerously on the road. A quick look showed that her dad was having some kind of seizure behind the wheel. Fortunately, this time she was in the front seat instead of behind the wire barrier of her father's U.S. Marshal vehicle like a common criminal, so she was able to reach over and wrestle the steering wheel into something resembling control before they crashed and died. A few long and terrifying minutes later, the car had finally coasted to a stop (thankfully her dad's seizure hadn't made him floor the accelerator) and she could stop panicking about imminent painful death and start panicking about what was happening to her dad.

She was seriously contemplating the virtues of running to Eureka for help (despite the nighttime downpour) versus the problems of leaving her dad alone like this when a calm knock on the window interrupted her thoughts.

Looking out the window, she saw a man dressed in a labcoat (over a toga? or were her eyes playing tricks on her?). He was strangely well-groomed for someone out in this storm and even more strangely standing in an area free of rainfall even as everything around the oddly clear area continued to get ever more drenched.

"Miss Carter?" he smiled pleasantly. "Be not afraid. My name is Enki. I know what is affecting your father and it should pass with no lasting damage. I am here to personally assure this, as well as to explain a few things to the both of you afterwards."

"So..." Jack Carter rubbed his aching head. His... episode he supposed... had passed and he generally felt fine, but then this Enki fellow had started to explain things. About how a computer/tree/whatever had suffered damage and now the universe was repeating and he was somehow the 'Anchor' or whatever that held it all together. He wasn't stupid, of course. Not really. He just happened to be a relatively average guy surrounded by very much above average intellects. Still, he knew the only thing that really matched the term 'living computer'. "So you're saying the multiverse has brain damage?"

"That's..." the self-proclaimed 'god' Enki (who said he was some guy from Babylonian or some such ancient time who governed knowledge, which would explain why he was in charge of Eureka, and water, which would explain how he could keep them dry in a downpour) began, only to start struggling as if the words didn't want to leave his mouth, "not... inaccurate..."

"Having trouble speaking there?" Jack asked, partly in amusement, partly from genuine concern.

"There are..." this time Enki's pause was less from strain and more from thought, "geasa in place that prevent me from revealing... restricted information. I'm afraid I can say no more about Yggdrasil's current state."

"Okay..." Zoey interrupted. "You said we might have new... 'loopers', right?" Getting a nod to show she had the term right, she proceeded to her real question. "Can you tell us who they are?"

Enki thought for a moment and brought a data pad out of thin air and typed away on it for a few seconds.

"I have identified looping status for a Douglas Fargo–"

"Of course," Jack Carter interrupted, rolling his eyes.

"–and a..." Enki looked puzzled for a moment, "Carl?"

Zoey looked confused herself, but Jack groaned loudly.

"My jeep is 'looping' now?!"

Eureka.X) Jack Carter's been down this road before, passing himself both way– Eureka.X+1) I liked Carl as a character. Too bad he was only so on the second holiday special due to the latest mad science wackiness.

Battle in the Network: With Soul - Part2

Battle in the Network: With Soul - Part 2

This isn't a game anymore...

Deep in a dark neglected corner of the Undernet, an array of figures stood in the shadows as another, parts of the figure's body glowing eerily in the darkness, stepped up to address the rest.

"My fellow darkloids! The time is upon us! The time when we shall go forth and cover the world's networks and beyond with darkness and despair! The time when we shall show humans and navis alike their true nature and liberate them from the foul 'Justice' they cling to! The world of Evil is at hand!"

"Blah-blah-blah-blah-blah..." Apollo mocked. "We know who you are! Your shadowy meeting isn't fooling anyone!"

"Hush," Hephaestus insisted before Apollo did something ill-advised. Like go down and start saying that to their faces. Apollo would probably be fine, but such an action would wreak havoc with the timeline predictions.

Dr. Hikari grinned as he saved his work. It had taken so much time just to analyze the data and even more to adapt and improve it, but he was finished.

"Heh... Lan is going to love this..."

And so, he suspected, would the rest of the world.

"Ooo... what is it? What is it? What is it? It's..." Apollo paused as he snuck a peak and blinked. "Wow, that early? The great Apollo knew the mighty Lan's dad was good, but he was unaware the man was this good."

" Hush ," Hephaestus hissed.

"Okay, Lan," Hub admonished, "have you even started your homework?"

"What's the point?" Lan sighed. "It's not like it's any different from the first time around."

"Exactly!" Hub insisted from his place in the PET. "There's no excuse for why you shouldn't already be finished! Heck, you should be making straight 'A's if you really remembered this stuff from the first time, not barely scraping by worse than before!"

"Sorry," Lan apologized. "I'm just thinking about all that stuff Django told us, Duo, our sketchy memories, you know..."

"Again?" Hub raised an eyebrow. "It's not like there's a whole lot we can do about it. At least tell me you've been practicing that subspace pocket trick Django taught us. I'm getting kind of tired of you misplacing all our best battle chips."

"Hey!" Lan protested. "I've been practicing! I'm up to a full folder of our favorites!"

"And where's the Blue Moon chip we won at the tournament?" Hub accused.

"Er..." Lan hedged nervously.

"Lan..." Hub facepalmed.

"Hey, I at least saved the GunDelSol chips!" Lan protested.

"Lan?" the two's mom called from the kitchen. "Could you come here for a second?"

"Coming mom!" Lan called back before turning to address his NetNavi/twin brother. "Bets that she's gonna ask us to deliver a stew recipe to her friend?"

"No bet," Hub shook his head. "I'm more interested in if we can prevent Dr. Regal from kidnapping dad..."

"I don't like our chances," Lan said as he picked up his PET and went to go help his mom. "I mean, I remember being out for three days after that gas bomb went off. How about we talk everyone into leaving their NetNavis behind so they don't get stolen with their PETs?"

"Worth a shot," Hub replied. "We'll tell them we've got a bad feeling again and I'll stay with everyone as a show of good faith."

"Yes mighty Hub! You can have a slumber party with just you and the lovely Roll! All alo–"

" Will you cut that out already! "

Apollo stopped talking.

"Fina–"

"Probably not."

"I'm sorry?"

"The incredible Apollo is probably not going to cut it out any time soon."

Hephaestus groaned.

Dex huffed as the group arrived at Lan's Dad's lab. Sure, Lan had a pretty good track record for knowing when things were about to go down and how to prepare for them, but still... leaving Gutsman. exe behind didn't sit well with him. After all, how were they supposed to handle something bad happening if they didn't have their navis? But... Lan had insisted, Mayl had backed him up, Yai had gone along with Mayl, and he'd been officially outvoted. The four navis were probably gossiping about him right now and–

"Ah, there you are!" the voice of Lan's Dad cut into Dex's internal griping. "And I see you brought almost everyone with you."

"Uh... almost?" Lan sounded confused.

"Well, I suppose it would have been too much to ask for Chaud to have been included," the man sighed. "He does tend to be rather busy after all. In any case, the reason I've asked you all here today is to show you something very special. Two things actually. The second I found while going through some old documents, but the real reason I'm so excited is that I just completed a very special project. One that most of you are a part of in fact, which is why I was hoping Chaud could be a part of this as it concerns him as well. But no matter," Lan's dad turned to the giant terminal behind him. "Let me just... Heh... I seem to have left my ID in my desk drawer again... Lan, would you mind getting it for me?"

"Sure thing da–"

Lan was interrupted as alarms began blaring. Dex began looking around wildly in the hopes of spotting the problem.

"Emergency! Emergency!" a voice over the intercom blared. "A group of unknown navis has infiltrated SciLab's network! They have already occupied... H-hey! Who are you?! What are you–hrggh..."

krsh-sssshhhhhhhhk

"SciLab's under attack?" Lan's Dad looked wide-eyed. "But who would...?"

Dex was now 100% certain that leaving their navis behind had been a bad move. After all, if they had them then they cou–

"What's this?" Yai's voice cut into his thoughts. Turning, Dex had just enough time to see a purple orb roll to a stop a few feet away.

"Everyone! Hold your–"

"–brrrreeeeeaaatthhhh..." Lan finished with a woozy sound that Dex barely heard as the gas the orb expelled caused the room to tilt, blur, and then fade to darkness. (1)

"That's right you walking villain cliche!" Apollo yelled as Dr. Regal was informed that none of the people in Dr. Hikari's lab possessed PETs on them. "You are going to have to walk out of there without the mighty Lan's mighty friends' mighty navis! What's that? You're mighty disappointed? Well, the mighty Apollo is mighty sure that you'll soon be mighty sorry! But if you put the genius Dr. Hikari down and offer a mighty apology, you might be forgiven and..."

Hephaestus did his best to tune out Apollo and his determination to abuse the word 'mighty' and continued examining the Loop. It looked like success chances had gone up a bit from that decision.

"Lan! You're awake!" Mayl's voice sounded happy through the connection.

"Yeah, just a bit groggy," Lan smiled.

"That's what happens when you sleep for three days!" Dex grinned from his end.

"Still... what happened to the net?" Lan asked, trying not to let on that he already knew. He was just glad he could talk to his friends, even though they were all confined to their respective rooms. It was good that they still had their PETs. "I've never seen it this dark..."

"That attack on SciLab was just part of something larger," Yai explained. "That weird Nebula group swept in and took over practically the whole net. Again. People can still jack their navis in, but there's large parts of the net that can't be accessed and forget about sending anything farther than the local network areas..."

"Tacky..." Apollo scoffed as he examined an area under Nebula's control. "Tackier... Tackiest... Tackiester... Ew..."

"What did you expect an organization steeped in evil to decorate like?"

"I'm glad that our trick worked," Lan said as he and Hub answered the 'distress call' from SciLab. "Mayl and the others still have their NetNavis, so we should have an easier time of things."

"Right now I'm more interested if we're gonna be tested by Chaud and Protoman or Baryl and Colonel," Hub wondered.

"I'm betting it'll be Baryl and Colonel," Lan said as the two entered the building.

"I'll take that bet," Hub replied.

"Lan, just promise me one thing. That you absolutely will not go anywhere dangerous."

'Yeah, that's a hard promise for us to keep, mom,' Lan apologized mentally as he sent Hub another set of battlechips.

"Pathetic..." Colonel. exe scoffed as he dodged a cannon blast effortlessly. "I can scarcely believe that you shouldered the world's fate not so long ago..."

The military navi's arm transformed into a cannon of his own. One much larger than the standard Cannon chip. It looked more like it belonged on a giant tank and as the evaded blast shook the cyberscape, its greater power was not in doubt.

"Screen Divide!" Colonel. exe bellowed as he slashed his blade in a sharp diagonal corner across the cyberscape, only for the odd ninety-degree shockwave to clang off a Guard chip at the last moment.

"Ready, Hub?" Lan called out.

"Ready!" Hub called back and raised his arms. A runic circle formed around Colonel. exe and Hub declared the attack. "Program Advance! P–"

Hub stumbled as his attack was disrupted. By an Interrupt chip if he wasn't mistaken. But those had been discontinued... Right?

"That's quite enough," a new voice interrupted as SciLab's alarms shut off and Hub turned to look at the newcomer who had jacked in directly behind him. Out in the real world, Lan whipped around to see who had just entered the room. From one even more interior than Lan was in.

"Protoman/Chaud?!" Hub and Lan declared in confusion. (2)

"Lan and Megaman had you dead to rights right there," Chaud sounded smug as he spoke to someone else.

"Hmph," another voice answered as a second figure joined Chaud. This one was taller, older, with long hair that fell haphazardly over one eye and facial stubble commonly known as a 'five o'clock shadow'. The form of Baryl, Colonel. exe's operator, had entered the room as well. "That we shall never know. However, I do suppose they have passed our little test..."

"Ah, so this is where the mighty Lan and Hub recognized those two from," Apollo nodded sagely.

Lan and Hub were in shock. The fight may have been against Colonel. exe, but it had been Protoman. exe who had called a halt to the fight. A convergence neither had been expecting to happen.

And now... now they were being asked to join one of two secret teams in fighting the forces of Nebula. One headed by Chaud, the other by Baryl. And due to conflicting memories of their first lifetime neither of them could say which one would prove the better choice.

"I... I dunno," Lan tried to stall for some time to think. "I like the idea of saving my dad and all, but I'm not sure which of you to go with..."

"Choose quickly," Baryl glared at him sternly. "This is not an offer I make lightly."

"Actually," Chaud mused for a moment. "Why not put him on call for both our teams? I've noticed that Lan and Megaman are not only accomplished battlers, but they have an intuition about important events that borders on precognition. Case in point, Lan's decision to leave his NetNavi along with his friends' behind when he came to SciLab the day it was attacked and his father kidnapped."

"Yes..." Baryl admitted. "It's perhaps the only reason he still has his netnavi at all..."

"My point is," Chaud continued, "if they're this uncertain about committing to either of our teams there may be a tactical reason we have yet to see why they shouldn't."

"...Agreed," Baryl allowed after a long moment. "I don't rightly believe in such things myself, but I've seen the reports all the same. Only a fool ignores results like that. Very well, Lan and Megaman will be on call for missions from both of us and our teams as they arise."

'And we just went off the rails, didn't we?' Lan thought to himself nervously. (3)

"What are you doing?" Hephaestus asked.

On one of the walls of the forge god's office, the sun god was making a list of names on a whiteboard he'd gotten from... somewhere.

'Mighty Lan' graced the top with subdivisions for 'Team Colonel' and 'Team Proto'. But further down were listings for 'Team Famous', 'Interoff', 'Undernet Numbers', 'NAXA', 'Sharo Military', 'Scilab Elite Corps', 'Thunder Tribe', 'Wind Followers', 'Junkyard Disciples', 'Gospel Redux', 'Agents of BEEF', and even 'Team Jammer'. And he wasn't finished adding names.

"The amazing Apollo is just setting up the betting pool for who takes out the most members of the nefarious Nebula!"

"So, you really intend to start him with one of Nebula's smaller holdings... When they control many much more critical areas of the net..."

"Of course. Those areas still need to be liberated after all, and despite Lan's credentials he does need some time to get used to the way such places block all but the minimal amount of outside access. It is the perfect first mission for him."

"I suppose..."

"And besides, this particular area is of personal importance to Lan and Megaman. How can we expect them at their best when Nebula retains hold on a portion of their own home?"

Lan steadied himself as he got ready for the liberation mission. He'd handled worse before, but even so operating multiple navis at once...

"Seriously Lan? What happened to the hero who defeated Wily and the WWW, destroyed the netmafia Gospel, and defeated Regal once before? Not to mention defeated me and Protoman at our best in an international tournament. Or am I mistaken? Was that a different Lan Hikari and Megaman that did all that?"

"What...? No!"

"Good. I'd hate to have to go and find them after all the trouble I already went through to vet you to Baryl. You should be perfectly capable of commanding this liberation mission and freeing the area of your local net that is under Nebula control. I trust that I leave Protoman in good hands."

Lan shook off his doubts and firmed his features. "Let's get this party started!"

"Very well," Protoman. exe nodded shortly. "Lord Chaud has instructed me to show you how to proceed on this liberation mission. I expect you will learn quickly."

"Roger!"

"Let us proceed, Megaman."

"Sure, just..." Hub trailed off as he looked at the door sealing off the claimed area of the network. The DarkPower saturating it hadn't abated even though there was evidence of numerous dents about the right size for Gutsman. exe to have been pounding on it.

Protoman. exe humphed and turned, his blade arm flashing as he rushed at the door. A single long line carved across the battered door at a diagonal and darkness seeped from the mighty barrier like blood from a mortal wound as it groaned and collapsed, dissipating into raw data soon after.

"Now, are you coming?" Protoman. exe asked impatiently.

"Sure..." Hub responded and followed the sword navi into the claimed area. As he crossed the threshold, the difference in the datascapes hit him like a physical blow.

Where he'd come from was dark, foreboding, and dreary, sure, but here... Here darkness permeated every byte of datascape like a cross between a thick fog, a murky swamp, and a persistent parasite. It was everywhere. It oppressed the air and seeped up from the ground all at once where it bubbled and oozed ever further along. Even the digital sky pulsed with sinister patterns and images.

"What in...?" Hub and Lan gasped as one. Even in their memories, it hadn't been this bad...

"Wh-wh-whoosh..." a chilling laugh echoed from the depths of the dark miasma. "So someone dares to enter my personal ski resort?"

"That snow navi!" Apollo accused.

"Actually..." Hephaestus paused and re-examined Apollo's accusation before facepalming. (4)

The BigBrute roared in pain from within the DarkHole as its body reached critical damage and was deleted. Without its Guardian virus to sustain it, the hole began to close and the murky darkness surrounding it evaporated as its primary source was removed.

But there was still more clinging to the datascape around them. Particularly around an area that seemed to be made of a solid version of the stuff, formed into a bunker of sorts.

A bunker that shivered and lost cohesion, collapsing into the same manner of murky sludgy darkness that poisoned the area. And in the center...

"So you actually made it this far whoosh..." a skiing-themed navi with the spherical torso chuckled sinisterly. "I didn't actually think it possible... I shall enjoy deleting you!"

"Hmph!" Protoman. exe scoffed. "In your dreams... It's over, Blizzardman!"

"Such arrogance whoosh..." Blizzardman. exe glared right back. "I'll freeze you to the bone!"

"Better than you have tried!" Hub shot back.

"No such thing exists!"

"It seems he wishes to do this the hard way," Protoman. exe stated calmly. "Ready, Lan?"

"Of course! Battle routine: set!"

"Execute!"

"It's snow use whoosh!" (5)

"Protoman!"

"On it!" the crimson navi dashed forwards, only to be brought up short as viruses emerged from the dark murk surrounding the darkloid. "I'm clearing the way! WideSword!"

Protoman. exe slashed with all his might, cleaving the viruses formed from darkness in twain. So sudden was their deletion that the murk they'd emerged from, and every trace of it around Protoman. exe, was blown into data dust.

"Wh-whoosh..." Blizzardman. exe seemed surprised. "So you have some skill after all... It will do you no goo–"

Blizzardman. exe sidestepped at the same moment as a digital cursor locked onto him, leaving the MarkCannon blast to hit empty air.

"Whoosh... That was close," Blizzardman. exe backstepped from a follow-up of AreaGrab and a CyberSword, "but I'm not that easy!"

"Try this then! Thunder!" Hub unleashed a rolling ball of electricity, only to watch it dissipate as his foe countered with a giant rolling snowball, followed by another that he had to dodge around, and then evade again as Blizzardman. exe skied right up to him and blow out a frigid wind.

"I'll bury you under the frozen slopes!" Blizzardman. exe began to glow darkly as he drew in the darkness of the area and prepared to unleash a powerful blow. In a few seconds Hub and Protoman. exe would be sitting ducks.

"Lan, we need something fast!"

"I've got just the thing on its way!"

"I'll turn you into a snowman!" the darkloid yelled as he spun on his side and began rolling at Hub like an out of control boulder. Hub dove out of the way and rolled to his feet between blobs of falling snow as he accepted the chip data and took aim at his opponent.

"Program Advance! Hyper Burst!"

The blast hit Blizzardman. exe dead on and exploded into bright fireworks with the darkloid at its center. When it was over, Blizzardman. exe had great gashes in the data of his body.

"Wh... whoosh..." the darkloid gasped as his remaining data began degrading fast. "I can't... can't believe... I can't... lose... NOOOO...!"

As he screamed his death cry, the oppressive darkness around him, on the ground and in the air, seemed to... pop... As if it were nothing more than a series of bubbles trying to imitate fireworks. With each pop, the datascape seemed that much brighter, that much cheerier, and that much cleaner.

"Liberation complete," Protoman. exe intoned as the last of the oppressive darkness dissipated. "ACDC's network is now safe."

"Good," Hub sighed with relief.

"But we can't let our guard down," Protoman. exe continued. "This was only one part of Nebula's control, and a small one at that. There are still many battles ahead."

"Of course."

"Either Lord Chaud or Commander Baryl will be in contact as soon as the next mission is planned."

And with no further delay, Protoman. exe jacked out, leaving Hub and Lan to their thoughts.

Dr. Regal tapped his console as he read the report that Megaman. exe and Colonel. exe had deleted Blizzardman. exe in the ACDC area. He stood up and began pacing as he digested this news. "So, they've put the Official hounds on the hunt? Little do they know the Net occupation is just one piece... of the grand plan. Just try and stop us! Keh heh heh..."

Suddenly one of his underlings ran in urgently to stand before him. "Master Regal, preparations are complete."

"Very well," he told his underling formally. "I'll be right there."

"Yes, sir!" the underling saluted before exiting.

Dr. Regal smiled to himself. "...Keh heh heh. It's all going according to plan!"

"Really? What part of your plan involves the mighty Lan kicking you to the moon and back?"

"Don't you dare send that as a subliminal message..."

"Would the grea–"

"I will tie you down if your fingers so much as twitch towards a keyboard."

"Umm... what?" Lan blinked. Even knowing this was supposed to happen, he still had trouble processing it. He wasn't the only one. Next to him, Mayl, Dex, Yai, and several other kids his age were much the same way.

"School's been cancelled," his teacher Ms. Mari repeated with a despondent sigh. "With the occupation of the net and the tightened security... It's... I'm sorry... so many of our lessons these days rely on access to the net and..."

Lan could handle many things, but watching his teacher begin crying over this wasn't one of them.

It took a few minutes, repeated promises to keep working on their school projects, additional promises to stay safe, and Mayl running to get tissues, but they got Ms. Mari calmed down enough that they felt confident (6) leaving her alone.

"Geez..." Dex muttered as they left. "First we get gassed and wake up to the whole friggin' net taken over by those Nebula jerks, and now this? Gah!" Dex paused to punch a wall. "I'd love to pound one of those guys who occupied the net, but someone beat me and Gutsman to the punch..."

Lan kept quiet. He had been sworn to secrecy after all.

"At least ACDC's net is free now..." Mayl offered. "It's better than it is in several other places from what I hear. I mean, Nebula went after the whole world... Just like last time..." (7)

"Yeah..." Yai fought back a shudder. "Mary was off visiting her family for the week back in Netopia when it happened. I still haven't heard from her..."

"Ohohohoho!" the woman laughed at the proposition. "What an interesting young lady you are, eh? And such a strong man you're with. Mmm... yes..."

Raoul sweatdropped at the hungry look the woman gave him. "We are called the Thunder Tribe, after my navi Thunderman," he explained. "We are mounting a resistance against the forces of Nebula to free the net from their control."

"Y-yes..." Mary gulped and steadied herself, calling upon the strength her friends had taught her. "A-and..."

"And we want you to join us in kicking their sorry carcasses all the way back to Nation Z!" Ring. exe piped up from Mary's PET.

"Hmmm..." the woman known as Ms. Millions considered. "Fighting against an army of ne'er-do-wells that control the net? Why it sounds positively... diverting !" (8)

"Come to think of it, I haven't seen Kai or Turboman in a few days either..." Dex mused. "I hope nothing bad happened to them either..."

Lan blinked as he thought about that. Now that Dex called attention to it, he hadn't heard from Kai either. Which was odd. His self-proclaimed disciple should have done something when he heard Lan was awake.

"Misteriyu! Black Rose!" a man in a mask and cape yelled as the group of Nebula members started at his appearance. "Cut off their escape!"

"Right!" a pair of masked women appeared at the most convenient exits.

"Who the hell are you wackos?!" one of the Nebula members shouted.

"Who cares!" another yelled as he pulled on a gas mask. "Just have your navis activate the gas and be done with it!"

"I am Commander Beef!" (9) the man declared, striking a pose, "and we are the Agents of BEEF!"

"The hell does that stand for?" a now-masked Nebula member asked, causing 'Commander Beef' to jerk halfway towards a face-plant.

"Er... that doesn't matter!" the man recovered. "For Racer X and his navi have already disabled your vile servants of darkness!"

"Didn't even work up a sweat!" a voice called out as a display activated, showing a navi themed like a racecar. "Right K–er... Racer X?"

"They didn't give Turboman any trouble at all, commander!" a young voice answered back over the same connection the navi was using even as the masked face of what had to be a young boy appeared on the screen.

"Tch..." one of the Nebula members twitched. "Whatever! We've still got you outnumbered!"

"Be that as it may," one of the women answered, "your fate has been sealed. You will not win."

"Hey, Lan," Mayl asked suddenly, "didn't one of your opponents in the Blue Moon tournament have a system that managed their village's water supply?"

"Yeah..."

"Wow... I hope Nebula doesn't go after that or anything..."

"Whee!" the little girl squealed happily. "This is great! It's even better than facing a strong and handsome navi in a netbattle! We get to be superheroes! Right Ponta?"

"Right! I'm glad we came back one more time for this!"

"Hahahahaha!" an older boy with a scar on his face laughed. "This is a challenge worthy of a man!"

"It's not exactly what I was expecting on a trip to Netfrica..." a significantly more nervous young man known to many as Koetsu gulped as he got ready.

"Focus everyone!" the youngest (though most would think that of the girl) member, a native Netfrican boy, chastised. "We can't fall here! If they take the WaterGodComp, then they could taint the water for not only this village, but everywhere for miles around!"

"Unthinkable!" a pudgy youth growled under his chef's hat. "I need clean water if I'm to continue my training in world cuisines!"

"Now there's incentive!" the scarred boy laughed. "A man's meal after a man's battle! I'm getting fired up!"

"Then let's go!"

In the net, five navis stood against the approaching Nebula forces.

"Stop right there!" a GuardNavi whose orange color had been modified to a bright red. "You will not claim the WaterGod or taint the life-giving water it guards this day! So says Net Red!"

"Y-yeah!" a blue-colored male FaceNavi stuttered, but held his ground. "Retreat now or... or else face... N-net Blue!"

"Serving Justice with a side of rice," a green NormalNavi in a chef's apron declared, "Net Green!"

"Protecting the world from devastation! Uniting the peoples in every nation!" the yellow female FaceNavi did a magical girl pirouette. "Net Yellow!"

"Ha! This man's fist has been clenched!" the sole HeelNavi present not on Nebula's side shouted. "There's no backing down now! I'm Net Black!"

"Net Rangers! Go!"

Apollo blinked as he watched the events unfold and hurried to change the name for 'Team Jammer' on his betting board to 'Net Rangers'. (10)

"And Higsby's shop is still closed..." Lan finished. "Where is he anyway?"

"Who knows?" Dex sighed.

"Yeah..." Mayl moped as the group of four friends entered the park across from Higsby's closed shop. "While I'm thankful to still have Roll and all, things are looking pretty bad."

"True," Yai looked dejected. "Even though we still have our navis, SciLab got attacked, we were all knocked out, the net gets invaded while we were asleep, and now school's cancelled..."

"Yeah," Dex kicked the ground angrily. "I wish I knew where these Nebula jerks were holed up so Gutsman and I could punch 'em in the face!"

Lan kept quiet. He knew his friends were capable, but... he had been sworn to secrecy... again.

"How about we go somewhere to take our minds off all of this?" Yai asked suddenly.

"Yeah!" Dex jumped up. "Somewhere we don't have to think about net invaders and all that!"

"Good idea," Yai agreed. "Let's go swim in the ocean! I know a deserted island. We could go splash up a storm all by ourselves! Sound like fun, Mayl?"

"...Yeah!" Lan's sort-of girlfriend cheered.

"Then let's get going! Gotta make hay while the sun shines and all that!"

"Do you mean leave right now, Miss Yai?" Glide. exe's voice made itself known with a tone that matched Dex's gobsmacked expression.

"Not like we have anything pressing here in town with school cancelled and access beyond the local network on lockdown," Yai retorted.

"True..." Dex allowed as Yai pushed forwards with orders for them all to go home and get ready.

'I guess some things just don't change,' Lan mused as the group parted ways to get ready for an immediate trip to the beach, before being interrupted as the phone function on his PET rang.

"I'll get it!" Hub declared.

"It's me," the voice of Baryl made itself known. "I heard about your successful liberation mission. Good work."

'Huh,' Lan blinked in surprise. 'I was expecting Chaud...'

"Listen," Baryl continued when Lan didn't respond. "I've got a mission for you. Patrol the ACDC area and make certain all of Nebula's agents are gone. Also, we restored the section that was under Nebula control, so investigate and report back on its status as well."

"You can count on me!" Lan assured the man.

"BEEF!" Apollo declared, striking a pose (and wearing an outfit) similar to the mortal who called himself 'Commander Beef'.

"Is made from cow," Hephaestus replied blandly, causing an instant deflate in Apollo's mood. (11)

"You just suck the fun out of everything, don't you?"

The patrol had been as routine as they came, and Lan was ready for the swimming trip in short order. He met up with the group at the station and within the hour they were on a boat headed to the (supposedly) deserted Oran Isle.

As the boat sped towards Oran Isle, Yai noted that Mayl would fidget a bit, glance at Lan, blush, look away, and repeat. After watching several repetitions of this, she couldn't hold herself back anymore.

"You brought your bikini didn't you?"

"Yai!" Mayl hissed sharply, glancing to see if Lan had heard either of them. It appeared not.

"Oh, yeah," Roll. exe's grin was painfully evident. "The smaller one too."

"Oh- ho !"

Mayl blushed harder as she endured the teasing of her friend and navi. (12)

Lan was looking around for a place to change when Dex's laughter reminded him of something that would likely have been best forgotten.

'Uh-oh...' Lan thought to himself as he turned around to see Dex's grinning face.

"I know the perfect thing for changing into a swimsuit!"

"Oh please don't tell me..." Hub moaned from Lan's PET.

"Yep!" Dex's grin grew wider. "The forbidden art of suit-changing!"

"Let me know when it's over..." Gutsman. exe vacated the display on Dex's PET.

"Houdini of the Beach!"

Apollo gave a loud gasp. "The most ancient and difficult art of changing on the beach without once baring oneself to air? Even the mighty Apollo does not practice such an art lightly!"

Hephaestus studied Apollo for a moment. "When was the last time you changed out of your swim trunks anyway?"

"Quit it Dex!" Lan yelled, resisting the urge to cross his legs out of reflexive sympathy.

"What are you two babbling about?" Yai's voice called out.

'Darn it, I let Dex go on and on and now Yai and Mayl have already finished changing and–Whoa...'

Lan had been expecting Mayl in a two-piece swimsuit. After all, he recalled her wearing one for this before. However, that had been a pink swimsuit that could have probably doubled as a two-piece exercise outfit. This was... well, it was clearly meant for swimming rather than just lounging on the beach all day, but... there was no two ways about it. The pink with yellow polka dots thing Mayl was wearing was a proper bikini.

Lan knew for certain he'd forgotten something important in that moment, but he couldn't help himself. He needed to clear memory space so there was ample room to burn that image into his brain.

"Dang!" Dex exclaimed as he looked himself.

"Ok guys!" Yai smirked at Lan's expression as Mayl blushed from the attention. "We're going to have a swimming race so hurry up and get changed!"

"We'll be waiting for you in the water!" Mayl recovered herself and smiled sunnily.

"O...kay..." Lan cleared his throat and rushed off behind the steps to change out of sight.

"Wimp!" Dex called after him loudly. "It seems like there's only one Houdini of the Beach today!"

"Houdini of the...?" Lan heard Mayl wonder.

"Who knows?" Yai answered. "Some silly boy thing I thi–"

A loud ripping sound pierced the air followed by a scream from Dex that was a few octaves higher than normal.

"Ohmykami!" Mayl gasped. "Dex! Are you okay?"

"What in creation are you moaning about?" Hephaestus asked a groaning and writhing Apollo from the latter's position on the floor of his office. "It's not like it happened directly to you."

"Where is your masculine sympathy brother?"

"Can you all believe Mayl asked Lan to rub suntan lotion on her back?" Roll. exe asked from where the four PETs were linked and arranged so they could watch the four operators in the water, three of which were staring at Yai rocketing along in a jet-powered inner tube.

"I can believe it," Hub nodded. "Though with how red they both were, you would have thought it was a little late for it."

"I still can't believe Dex tried Houdini of the Beach..." Gutsman. exe moaned. "I told him that was a bad idea..."

"Hey!" Dex yelled as he tried to dance away from his assailant. "Hit the watermelon , not me !"

"Woo! Go Yai go!" Mayl cheered.

"Right! Left! Right! Left!" Lan called out directions.

"Excellent form Miss Yai!" Glide. exe complimented.

Lan reflected that it had been quite a morning already. Enough of one that it was now into the early afternoon and late for lunch by the way everyone's stomachs had growled like Gospel's bug beast. Which was why he and Dex were looking for materials to fish with. Right now he was psyching himself up to try and catch that whopper of a fish he recalled getting away as the warm sun dried his wet skin and swim trunks.

Come to think of it, why did his memories suggest that they'd all changed out of their swimsuits and back into their normal clothes by this point? (13) That was kind of silly for a day at the beach, wasn't i–

His thoughts were interrupted by the beeping of his PET's urgent e-mail alert.

"Lan, it's from Baryl," Hub explained.

'Oh, right... Oran still has an active, if mostly disused, cyberworld that Nebula's occupied...' Lan remembered with a groan.

"Nothing to be ashamed of mighty Lan! The lovely Mayl's beauty is ample excuse to forget such a trivial thing!"

Hub approached the spot where Colonel. exe was already waiting.

"The area occupied by Nebula is through there," he stated, staring in the direction of the part of Oran's net that was covered by a veil of darkness even deeper than the shadows over the rest of it.

"Understood," Hub nodded. "Though what are we going to do about those cannons?"

Indeed, an embankment of giant three-barrelled cannons stood between them and the one spot in the dark veil that was open enough to enter through.

"There's no other way in but along this path," Colonel. exe stated redundantly. "We have no choice but to risk it."

"Okay..." Hub gulped nervously. If he recalled correctly, those things had long range, rapid fire, and power to spare. Baryl and Colonel.

exe were supposed to be tactical geniuses and if they could see no other way... "Might it be better to see if we can recruit some defense to shield us from their shots before charging in?"

"Perhaps," Colonel. exe allowed, "but our intel suggests that whatever power Nebula has been cultivating here will be unleashed soon. On ACDC's network."

Hub sucked in a breath. He knew that was coming, but still...

"Nebula feels it important to show that liberating their occupied areas is useless by retaking ACDC," Colonel. exe continued. "By the same token, we cannot allow Nebula to retake liberated areas."

"Still... I don't like our chances of getting through that..."

"Nor do I, but I see little option. Our intel suggests that they may be moving as soon as today."

Hub understood. Time constraints like that could prompt even the coolest heads into foolhardiness. It was something he and Lan were no strangers to. (14)

"Okay, let's try this."

With a nod, they both charged, only to skid to a halt moments later as a very literal wall of explosions appeared in their path when the gun batteries opened fire.

"According to the great Apollo's calculations; taking into account rate of fire and the type of munitions to replicate the explosive effect; were those guns to exist in the physical mortal realm they would each cost a minimum of 40,000,000 zenny to fire for twelve seconds."

"Too bad they don't. Then they could bankrupt Nebula by giving them false targets."

"Okay!" Lan declared after he'd gotten off Oran's net, found the parts for a makeshift fishing pole, and relocated the spot he remembered. "I'm gonna catch that whopper this time!"

"Good luck Lan!"

"Heh... All this time on the beach reminds me of how Mamoru liked to stare out at the ocean when he was in the hospital..."

"Yeah... I wonder how he's doing..."

"Graaoooooaaarr!" the feral darkloid howled at those who dared to invade his personal sanctuary. The dark realm of Nebula that he'd found home with after his humiliating defeats at the hands of that... that... "Grrooowwwlll!"

"Gah!" another navi wearing an identical form to the darkloid cried out as one of the TinHawks that had emerged from the Dark Holes dove down and raked his form. "I'm taking too much of a beating here!"

"Stand down for a few moments Copyman," Mamoru spoke into his PET from his room in Ura Inn. "Mistman, cover him. Bowlman, take out that Dark Hole! We can't let Beastman retain a hold on Yoka's net!"

"Understood Lord Mamoru!"

Lan's declaration had been all well and good, but he'd forgotten about the over half hour of just sitting around listening to Dex catch fish after fish and how utterly boring and frustrating it had been.

"Ugh... I didn't just imaging that huge fish in my memories... did I?" he wondered.

A moment later and there was a tug on his line.

"What the...?" Another tug nearly tore his bamboo pole out of his grip.

"Lan!"

"I got it!"

Lan gripped the pole with all his might and jumped to his feet to better brace himself as he fought to pull his catch from the water. He tugged this way and that mightily, wondering if his pole might break before he hauled the fish in when–

Sploosh!

"Holy carp!" Lan yelped as the giant fish flew out of the water and towards him with its giant mouth wide open as if to swallow him whole. In that moment of surprise, Lan lost his footing and his ability to pull the massive fish in the rest of the way. His rear hit the ground as the fish fell back into the ocean to swim away.

"Ouch... tough luck Lan..."

Apollo played a disturbingly accurate wah-wah-waaaaahhh on his harp.

Lan sighed as he trudged after his friends through the small forest on the island. He'd really wanted to catch that fish this time... Oh well, at least the ones Dex had caught were still tasty enough and Mayl was...

Lan looked up ahead as the other three stepped into a clearing and gaped at the sight of the old Oran mine.

Yep, Mayl was still wearing her bikini. There was one upside to this whole thing.

"Alright everyone!" Dex declared from the head of the group after Yai gave some mildly spooky exposition about the old mine. "This will be the Dex Expedition Team's next conquest!"

"Yeah! Woo!" Mayl and Yai cheered, causing Lan to grin a bit as...

rrummble...

Lan's eyes widened as he remembered what was about to happen right as his friends marched forward.

"Watch out!" he yelled, rushing as fast as he could to stop them. Mayl and Yai stopped and turned to ask why as Lan tried to grab Dex and pull him back. Only for the awkward charge to push Dex further away instead and sending Lan stumbling backwards.

rrruummmbllee...

"Lan wh–" Dex began angrily, only to watch as the ground under his friends' feet cave in and swallow them up.

"Okay, what the heck ?!" Hephaestus asked as Lan falling into the tunnel instead of Dex caused the Loop's success chance to dip and rise rapidly like a motor vehicle hitting a bump in the road.

"A long time ago, Oran Isle prospered due to the coal mines, but then the coal stopped coming. The mines dried up and the island became deserted. With nobody to bother us, we can have all the fun we want!"

Dex had thought it sounded like a real adventure at the time. Now... now he would have preferred a bit less adventure. Like the kind where his friends weren't trapped under an abandoned mine counting on him and Gutsman. exe to somehow save them all...

"Once prosperous, now abandoned, the long tunnels form a maze."

'No kidding!' Dex growled to himself as he rounded another corner. He didn't know if he was coming or going anymore!

Suddenly his PET rang.

"De..." a voice came through as Dex answered his PET. "..me in De.. .an you re.. me?"

"Yeah! Don't worry you guys! I'm on my way!"

"...he net. Som..ne mi..t hav...key!"

Dex took a moment to puzzle what Lan was saying... Someone on the net might have a key for the mine? Worth looking into...

"Us...vator!"

Dex looked around and saw what looked like an old mine elevator.

"Gotcha!" he called back, noting the location of the elevator and looking for a possible access point for the net before he delved deeper. "Hang on you guys! Dex is coming!"

"Yai, where are you going?" Lan asked, once again trying fruitlessly to brush dirt from his bare torso and legs after the tumble down the shaft. Mayl had given a few token efforts to trying to climb back out before it became apparent that the sides of the sinkhole were nowhere near stable enough for that.

"Well, I'm not just going to stay around here waiting for Dex!" Yai huffed and began wandering down the mine tunnel they'd landed in. "I feel a breeze in this direction, so there must be a way out this way!"

"Dex!" Lan called with his PET. "We're going to try and make our way out from here!" 'and try to keep ourselves away from the giant drill' he added mentally.

"..ger that L...'m open...p the doo...nd movi...per int–" rrrruuummmblle...

Dex regained his footing after the mine had shaken violently.

"An earthquake?!" Gutsman. exe exclaimed.

"We gotta move faster Gutsman! If my friends get buried alive in here I'll never forgive myself!"

"Right on!"

"We need to take cover!" Yai screamed as another quake rocked the mine, causing some loose dirt to fall from the ceiling.

"Yai, wait!" Lan yelled as his friend took off deeper into the mine. Muttering something he'd likely never say aloud under his breath, he took off after her with Mayl hot on his heels.

"Dex!" Mayl called on her PET. "Please hurry up!"

"I'...y w–"

boop boop boop

Mayl stared as her PET's phone signal was cut off before chasing her friends deeper into the mine.

"Help us Obi-Dex Kenobi! You're our only hope!"

"I'm not looking..." Hephaestus muttered. "If I don't look, then you can't be in drag..."

"Yai! Don't go in there!" Lan yelled as his friend spotted an open door and dashed through it seeking shelter. Lan hurried in after her to try and pull her back out when the rumbling started again, causing the door to the room to swing shut and lock itself. "Aw great..."

Yai looked around as the rumbling subsided and realized that the room she'd dashed into had no exit. "We're trapped! Lan! You have to get me out of here! I'm too young and beautiful to die!"

Lan did his best to remain calm as Yai shook him, but realizing that the inside of the door had no jack-in port for access didn't help.

"We've got to get them out of there Roll! Jack in!"

"Exec–" Roll. exe was cut off as the door's access panel rejected the connection. "Mayl! The door control needs a key before it can be accessed!"

"Call Dex! Tell him he needs to hurry!"

"There's cracks in the ceiling now!" Yai screamed hysterically. "We're going to die!"

"Dex! You need to hurry up! Something's coming through the ceiling of the room we're stuck in!"

"I'm almost there!" Dex's reply came in clearer than before. "I can hear a machine up ahead and–Holy crap that thing's huge!"

Dex stared at the massive machine before him, its size second only (and then not by much) to the cavern it was contained in. The rumbling was almost constant here as the machine, the power behind a giant drill boring straight down, continued its work despite the vocal protests of a young blonde woman at the control panel.

'Wait, what?'

"Stop the drill this instant!" the woman yelled at the control panel. "Damnit! Listen to me! There are life signs directly below! You have to stop now!"

'Life signs bel–Lan! Yai!' Dex's blood ran cold. "STOP THE DRILL! My friends are down there!"

"I can't!" the woman yelled back, and only Dex's concern kept him from gawking at how beautiful she was, even with her face creased by worry. She had to be a princess for sure! Even though she was wearing an outfit and beret more suited to the rugged work of a miner than a princess. "My navi Knightman's gone out of control and won't listen to me!"

"What?! Then how do we stop it?!"

"Those control boxes!" the woman yelled, pointing to the four mainframe-sized devices pressed into the chamber's walls on the ends of thick support struts. "They have emergency manual shutdown switches in them!"

"Gotcha!" Dex yelled back as he ran for the nearest one. "Jack in! Gutsman!"

"Yeeehaaw!"

"What's that little program?" Apollo asked, holding a hand to his ear as if to aid his hearing. "Code to smash cyber rocks? Hah! The ever-mighty Gutsman has no need of such piddling aid to smash rocks as puny as those!"

"OH MY GOD! A DRILL JUST CAME THROUGH THE CEILING!" Yai screeched in a panic as she ran back and forth, barely dodging the stones that had become dislodged from the roof of the room they were in. "WE'RE GONNA DIIIIIEEEEE!"

"Dex!" Lan yelled into his PET's phone.

"One down, three to go!" Dex reported back, huffing with the exertion of racing across a shaking cavern to get to the next control box. "I'll get this thing shut off even if Gutsman and I have to beat up this Knightman guy!"

"You got me. I'm a Gospel leader... On my boss's order I infiltrated your organization. But, Official NetBattlers sure aren't any big deal. All too easy to fool. And now... for the good of Creamland... you will die."

"MegaMan... Doubting the princess is not in my programming... Even if she is wrong I must protect her. It is my way... Now... En garde!"

"Knightm–" Lan began, only for the panicked Yai to grab his PET and yank it away from him.

"DEX! YOU HAVE TO STOP THIS CRAZY THING! I'M TOO YOUNG TO DIE!"

Lan wrestled his PET back from Yai and shoved them both up as far back against the wall and away from falling debris as possible.

"Dex, Knightman is the navi of Princess Pride from Creamland! He's got extremely tough armor! Plus he's Break element!"

"Got it Lan!"

"Oh, and tell her I said 'hi' would you?"

"Lan...?" Princess Pride gasped as she overheard the name as the young netbattler... yes, he was the same age as the boy who defeated Gospel... and his navi powered through the second control box and raced towards the third.

"If you wish Creamland to remain prosperous, you will do as I command."

"Yes... For the good of Creamland..."

"I'm sure no good can come from what you're doing!"

"Yeah! You really think this is going to make folks happy?"

"Oh, yeah, Lan and Megaman say hi!" the large boy called back. "Don't you worry! Gutsman and I are their biggest rivals! There's no way we'd let them die before we got a chance to beat them!"

"You feel some doubt in your heart... Don't you?"

Princess Pride smiled. Not anymore she didn't.

"The amorous Apollo smells a Love Tri –mphrg?!"

Apollo struggled against the unwanted and nasty intrusion for several moments before extracting it and glaring angrily at Hephaestus.

"At least use socks that have been washed! The disgusted Apollo shall never get this taste out of his mouth now!"

Lan watched as the drill slowed again, but it was still moving. Still coming ever dangerously downwards. He'd pulled the still hysterical Yai back along the wall to wedge the both of them as far back into the most distant corner as was physically possible. But if that drill reached the floor, then all bets could very well be off. (15)

'I am so going to memorize the layout of the DrillComp later. There is no way I'm going to waste so much as a moment shutting that thing off if my friends get trapped down here again.'

Dex almost pulled up short at the way the last control box's display was flickering and dancing with static, but he ignored the ominous portent and forged ahead. "Jack in Gutsman!"

"Dex, hurry!" Mayl pleaded with all her might as Roll. exe was rejected from the door controls yet again.

"Stop tha drill!" Gutsman. exe roared as he pounded towards the massive armored figure. Not many navis were bigger than he was and if the situation hadn't been so urgent it might have given him pause.

"Grr..." the armored navi growled in a voice that crackled with static as he turned Gutsman. exe's way, revealing piercing yellow eyes behind the metal bars of his visor.

"Aw, man..." Gutsman. exe felt for the navi. He had spotty memories of a time when Dex had decided to play with magnets and left a bunch too near his PET and the newly customized Gutsman. exe overnight. It had been weeks before all the glitches had been properly ironed out. "I don't think he's in any mood ta listen Dex!"

"Please!" the voice of Princess Pride called out from her spot atop the drill machine. "Stop Knightman and shut down the drill! Do whatever you have to to!"

"Grrrraaawggh!" Knightman. exe roared in a berserk rage as he swung his massive spiked mace arm towards the digital ceiling and knocked loose several rocks that rained down around Gutsman. exe.

"Hey! Those things sting!" Gutsman. exe huffed as he took the hit. "Let's see how you like it! GutsHammer!"

The literal hammer-fisted blow to the cyberscape cracked the ground and knocked loose a few more rocks from the ceiling, but they just bounced off of Knightman. exe's now-gray armor.

"Grraww!" Knightman roared as the gray on his armor receded to his normal purple and he swung his mace upwards again.

"Now!" Dex ordered. "GutBuster!"

Gutsman. exe opened up with his rapid-fire machine gun as he ignored the rocks falling on him, concerned with taking down his opponent fast more than he was with the possible damage to himself. He stopped only when the shots began pinging off gray armor again.

"Geez! Lan wasn't kidding when he said this guy was tough!"

"Hrawr!" Knightman. exe growled as he hopped forwards, landing hard on the ground and sending more cracks along the ground and destroying panels that Gutsman. exe's earlier hammer attack had damaged. He then wound up and threw his giant spiked mace directly forwards before retracting it with the attached chain.

"Take this ya–ow!" Gutsman. exe winced as his follow-up attempt to punch his opponent clanged off the gray IronBody armor. "That's... That's not yer normal IronBody program..."

"Okay, here we go Gutsman!" Dex held a specific chip at the ready and waited patiently for his opponent to stop using what might be the best IronBody program he'd ever seen. After all, Gutsman. exe could easily crush the average example most netbattlers used. "Areasteal! Now do it!"

"GutsPunch!"

"Rawr!"

Gutsman. exe's massive fist connected directly with Knightman. exe's face, only for the circular swing of Knightman. exe's massive mace, the Royal Wrecking Ball maneuver, to hit Gutsman. exe as well in a superb cross-counter, leaving both navis to be sent flying backwards from the other's blow.

"Ow..." Gutsman. exe winced as he got back to his feet.

"Wha... whe*sksh*rgg..."

Dex paused in selecting the next round of chips when he heard that and reconsidered his options.

"Okay Gutsman! We gotta time this just right! I'm sending that prize we won in the strong navi competition!"

"You mean?" Gutsman. exe grinned. It had been a while since they'd used that after all.

"Yep! Now get ready to mark that ball 'return to sender'!" Dex ordered as Knightman. exe's armor turned purple once more.

"Grawr!" Knightman. exe roared as he wound up for his Kingdom Crusher maneuver.

"I'm gonna knock some sense inta ya!" Gutsman. exe declared as he wound up himself, his fist shining brightly as it changed color. He waited as the spiked mace shot forwards to time it just right.

"Now!"

"GoldFist!"

The legendary fist met the Kingdom Crusher, and the latter, having no force beyond its own momentum to sustain it, reversed direction to strike Knightman. exe square in the face.

"Slow-mo replay!" Apollo declared before Hephaestus could stop him.

Hephaestus groaned as multiple images of the event from every possible dramatic angle appeared to show it again in slow motion even as the knight-themed navi regained his senses and activated the final shutdown switch himself.

"I'mgonnadieI'mgonnadieI'mgonnadi–" vreeeeeeeennnnn...

The drill suddenly began to slow even more before finally coming to a halt. They were safe at last. Lan would have to stoop a bit to avoid possibly hitting his head on it when leaving, but the danger had passed.

Mayl fidgeted for the few minutes it took before Dex found his way down to the door and use the MineKey he'd somehow found to bypass the security lock and open it. There had been a minor moment of panic regarding yet another layer of security, but that had been resolved fairly well. And now Lan and Yai were free and safe.

"Lan!"

"Oof! Glad to see you too Mayl..."

"That was worse than having to handle those bugs for the Den Battle Prelims!" Yai shuddered as she finally calmed down enough to panic rationally instead of blindly.

"I thought you hired someone to handle them for you?" (16)

"Well, yeah, but I still had to look at them! And they were creepy and gross!"

"I am so sorry!" Princess Pride apologized before Yai could continue, prompting the group to turn to her (and Mayl to let Lan back up from her tackle hug). "We've been developing a new style of PET in Creamland and we need a rare substance called MagnoMetal to continue development. I'd gotten reports that this island was rich with MagnoMetal and came down personally to secure the mineral rights, but when I activated the equipment... a burst of interference from the MagnoMetal caused Knightman to go out of control!"

"My humblest apologies as well," Knightman. exe's voice sounded from Pride's PET. "My actions were most unbecoming of a noble knight."

"Please, if there is any way we can make up for the trouble we've caused, then you have only to ask!"

While the other three all assured her that all was well that ended well, Pride noticed the considering look Lan was giving her. One that said he definitely had something in mind she and Knightman. exe could do, but that he didn't want to say in front of the others.

"Lan, I'll turn off the trap switch!"

"Nice try! But even without KnightMan, I can manipulate the traps!"

"Princess Pride! Wait! You're standing on a tr–"

"Aaaaahhhhh!"

She'd lived through the fall with only minor injuries, but had been arrested and sent back to Creamland. Her diplomatic immunity had prevented a trial and the sure-to-follow incarceration, but the sanctions that had brought against her country as a result of her actions with Gospel had been more painful to her than any time in prison could have been. Sanctions that could have been far worse yet had the boy known as Lan, her adversary at the time, not spoken on her behalf to the Officials.

The research and development for the new PET was the chance for her country to make a comeback after her mistake. It was a chance her country very well might not have if the boy in front of her hadn't called for leniency.

So as the other three made their way out of the mine, the sovereign princess of Creamland remained behind to hear his proposal.

"And full marks for our amazing military man Baryl calling at exactly the right moment!" Apollo declared as Baryl indeed called right as Lan was about to recruit Pride to say the liberation mission needed to proceed immediately, ready or not. "What a sense of dramatic timing on the man!"

Dex was halfway back out of the mine when he realized that Lan and Princess Pride (holy crap, he'd met a real princess!) weren't following them. "Guys, I think Lan and that Pride lady took a wrong turn! I'm gonna head back and find them! Just keep following the open doors and the elevators and you'll be fine!"

"Okay, Dex!" Mayl nodded before Yai could protest and steered the smaller girl towards the mine entrance. "Good luck!"

Dex turned and made his way back, knowing exactly where to go now that he'd been there. As he approached the chamber with the massive drill machine, he heard Lan's voice.

"–cupied by a group called Nebula."

"I'd heard something had happened, but I was so busy getting things here set up that I haven't kept up with the news for a while. Oh dear... I hope Creamland is getting along fine..."

Dex thought she must have been really focused on getting this place up and running if she'd missed Nebula taking over the whole net.

"Hard to say since communication is a big issue right now," he heard Lan reply. That was an understatement. Dex hadn't been able to even send an e-mail to Chisao lately! "In any case, Hub and I are with a team whose mission is to free these areas from Nebula's control."

Dex fought the urge to yell out right then. Lan was... he'd been... And he hadn't told them?! (17)

"We're about to head into battle with Nebula forces, but the area is defended by a series of gun batteries that no one on the team can handle. If we're to succeed, then we need a defensive powerhouse like Knightman running interference."

"I see..." Dex heard Pride consider the proposition. "Yes. We would be happy to help. Right Knightman?"

"Of course m'lady."

"If we can be of any help at all, then it shall be our honor to fight alongside you this time."

Dex fell back, missing a good deal of whatever followed, until he felt he was at a spot where they wouldn't suspect him of having overheard before calling out. "Lan! Hey Lan! You didn't fall in another sinkhole did you?"

"We're coming Dex!" Lan's voice sounded from the chamber. A few moments later and the two appeared, looking hilariously mismatched between Princess Pride's working clothes and Lan's swim trunks. "Sorry, but we met back during the Gospel incident, when I went to Netopia. We were just catching up."

"Yeah, well, don't catch up too much or Mayl might get jealous!" Dex ribbed a blushing Lan playfully.

"Dex!"

"Well, well," Princess Pride smiled. "Does the hero Lan have a girlfriend now? Let me guess... The redhead with a fondness for pink, right?"

" Princess! " Lan blushed even more as the other two laughed. Princess Pride behind her hand to try and keep some measure of decorum and Dex with full belly guffaws.

Apollo yawned a bit as he watched the group head back to the beach landing. Mayl half-carried a shell-shocked Yai, Lan and Pride looked for opportunities to subtly break away from the group and go to their mission, and Dex watched for the moment that Lan and Pride would break away so he could follow them.

And Hephaestus wouldn't let him speed up relative time so they could get to the good stuff sooner. It wasn't like the mortals would notice! Everything would pass at the same rate from their perspective!

As he often did when he was bored, he began scanning nearby events in an expanding radius, looking for something interesting to alleviate his boredom.

He found it a little sooner than he thought he would.

"Hello... what are you doing at the island?"

"Did you say something Apollo?"

"Nope! Nothing at all brother!"

Mayl sighed as she left the small sleeping cabin on Yai's private yacht. Yai was more than just shocked by her near brush with death, she'd been exhausted. Despite protests, the smaller girl had nodded off practically the moment she'd so much as sat on the bed, falling into a lying posture so fast Mayl was worried she'd roll straight off the tiny bed. But she was sleeping now and...

...and had that other boat been there earlier?

Mayl looked out and saw another small yacht like Yai's moored just past the bamboo grove, almost completely hidden in small alcove. She'd wonder if it was Pride's but the princess had said she'd moored her own craft much closer to the mine itself.

So whose boat was this? Looking around, Mayl spotted Lan and Pride talking by an old speaker, and apparently an access point for Oran Isle's network from what they'd said. They weren't looking in her direction. Dex was nowhere in sight. He'd possibly hung behind to... no, there he was spying on Lan and Pride from behind a tree.

Why were her friends so weird at times? It wasn't like Lan was going to cheat on her with Princess Pride or anything. Sure, any girl would be jealous of Pride. She was a honest-to-kami princess after all, but Mayl trusted Lan. He wouldn't hurt her like that.

Rather than watch that tableau unfold, Mayl quietly slipped down to the beach.

"Mayl, what are you doing?" the voice of her navi piped up from her PET.

"I spotted another boat Roll," Mayl informed as she reached the sand and hugged the retaining wall between her and the strange craft. "One that's trying to stay hidden. I want to know why."

"Shouldn't we tell the others?"

"I want to check it out first," Mayl said, "and besides they've gone through enough today. Still... be ready to call them at a moment's notice."

"Understood," Roll. exe nodded as Mayl hooked her PET to her bikini strap, made certain it was secure and closed for maximum waterproofing, and slipped into the water.

'Okay... Wireless adaptor is secure... Stealth operation is go! Jack in!'

"There you are," Colonel. exe stated as Hub and Knightman. exe approached the guarded entrance to Nebula's stronghold in Oran. He looked at the latter, and craned his neck rather significantly to meet the armored navi's eyes. "Who have you brought with you?"

"This is Knightman, Colonel. I think he's our way past the gun batteries. His defense is without peer."

"Is that so? Princess Pride's navi..."

"Indeed," Knightman. exe replied. "So these are the gun batteries you need me to block..."

"Quite the surprise this is..." Colonel. exe mused. "Very well, let's see what you've got!"

"Verily. I will not disappoint!" Knightman. exe declared and advanced on Colonel. exe's signal. Like before, a wall of explosions sprang up the moment the gun batteries opened fire, but this time the wall parted around the imposing gray form of Knightman. exe in his IronBody form. "Hrggrahh!" Knightman. exe grunted as explosions rocked his body. His armor held firm, but the digital panels beneath his feet cracked from the force of the explosions trying to push him back.

"Incredible..." Colonel. exe marveled for a moment before getting ready to dash through Knightman. exe's legs and the gap in the wall.

"Chhhaaaaarrrrgge!" the bellow came from behind, causing Colonel. exe and Hub to whip around in shock.

Colonel. exe made ready to cut the advancing figure down, but Hub reacted faster, grabbing the military command navi and firmly holding him in place.

"Wait! He's a friend!" Hub pleaded as he recognized the form of Gutsman. exe barrelling down the stretch of cyberscape like a runaway truck.

"How did he find out abo–"

"I don't know!"

"Now Gutsman!" Dex's voice sounded across the connection.

"You followed us?!" Lan sounded incredulous.

"Up and over!"

"GUUUUUTTSSSS!" the hefty navi yelled as he literally ran up Knightman. exe's back and jumped into the air over the deadly no man's land between Knightman. exe and the gun batteries. "IMPACT!"

Gutsman. exe landed on top of the barrels of one gun and the hit with all his weight behind it twisted the gun on its support. With agility few would attribute a navi of his size, Gutsman. exe swung down the side and used his weight to twist the gun even further. Until it was firing on the gun batteries to one side of it instead of those trying to advance on the position. The damaged gun batteries exploded with a dark miasma and no less than a full half of the explosion wall vanished with them.

"Now!" Colonel. exe took the opening for all it was worth and dashed through before cornering into the area inside the remaining gun batteries' firing arc. "ScreenDivide!"

The mighty slash carved at right angles through all of the remaining gun batteries, including the one Gutsman. exe had twisted to take out its brethren, and they bled the same dark miasma as they disintegrated into data dust.

"Such strength..." Colonel. exe complimented Gutsman. exe and Knightman. exe both.

"Aw shucks... it was nothin'!" Gutsman. exe rubbed his head sheepishly.

"Such shots were like pebbles to my steel hide," Knightman. exe boasted.

"What were you thinking Dex?!" Lan yelled on his end.

"I was thinking that you didn't have to go save the world by yourself for once!" Dex yelled back as Princess Pride's barely-demure laughter was heard.

"Oh just give it up Lan. You know we can't stop them now."

"Indeed," Colonel. exe noted. "Dex and Gutsman, was it? You will accompany us on this liberation mission. Know that the dark interference means that only one operator may command all navis on the mission at any time. Also, this team operates in secret. You may tell none about it unless they are necessary to aid the mission. Not even your friends. If you cannot agree to these terms, then jack out now."

"Geez... harsh much?"

"I do not have time for games or those who play them. Now, let us begin the mission."

"I have been waiting for such a noble adventure!" Knightman. exe declared, clanging one hand over his armor in a fisted salute.

"Then let us proceed."

The navis all walked through the one opening in the dark curtain over Nebula's controlled area. Hub steeled himself for the sight, and was not disappointed. The darkness choked everything in the cyberscape. The bubbling pits of darkness oozed up from the Dark Holes and along the ground. The guardian viruses bellowed their feral cries from within as other darkness-infused viruses peaked out of the dark ooze in response to their presence.

The main difference this time was the fact that the digital sky was so infused with the power of darkness that it formed a haze which blocked out all from view. A haze that poured out of the Dark Holes in the tainted cyberscape.

And Hub felt a familiar presence hovering within that haze.

"Wh-wh-wheee! And here I thought I would have to go out for dinner..."

"Shademan!" Hub growled. But... hadn't he and Django purified him? (18)

"Long time no see Megaman... wh-whee... I have been resurrected by the DarkPower and given another chance to destroy you!"

"The one who spread the DarkChips across the net..." Colonel. exe growled.

"Ah, my reputation precedes me... wh-wheee..." Shademan. exe laughed unseen from within the haze and the brief flapping of wings was heard.

"Be careful," Colonel. exe warned. "His flight will allow him to strike from the haze without warning... We must seal the DarkHoles in order to draw him out into the open."

"All while Shademan takes potshots at us," Hub reminded him.

"Worry not," Knightman. exe declared. "I shall shield you from his attacks."

"Wh-wh-wheeee!" Shademan. exe's laugh echoed all around them. "But who will shield you?"

Mayl looked around quietly as she slipped aboard the mystery craft after climbing up a small ladder that hung over the side as if forgotten. It had been all too easy to accomplish. Like whoever's boat this was didn't care to try and stop anyone from boarding. But whose boat was–

"Oooh!" the cry of frustration came from the boat's interior and Mayl ducked down to try and avoid detection even as she crept closer to hear better.

"Mayl? Who is–" Roll. exe whispered, stopping when she spotted her NetOp's finger over her mouth in a very clear 'quiet' gesture.

"That damned princess!" a woman's voice cursed. "Does she sleep on this island?! Doesn't she know that I have frustrations to work off? That damnable board of directors! That extra damnable Sunayama! The whole damned DNN takeover! Oooh! If I don't get to break something I'm going to scream! But no! Stupid miss princess needs to mine MagnoMetal... Stupid miss princess needs to save her stupid little country! Stupid miss princess has to go and buy the rights to an abandoned island that I've enjoyed using for free and lay claim to my stress reducers for her stupid legal mining rights! And stupid miss princess is here every day from sunup to sundown! ARGH! Doesn't she know I can't afford to be arrested afterRRRGGGHHH!"

Mayl nearly lost her balance when the boat jerked into sudden motion. Whoever this woman was, she'd apparently decided to leave rather suddenly, and she was taking Mayl with her! Mayl considered jumping off and swimming for it when the yacht picked up speed so fast that she fell to the deck with a sound that was drowned out by the boat's own motion even to her own ears.

"Okay Roll, time to call Lan and the others..." she admitted quietly as she saw Oran Isle shrink much too fast for her liking in the distance.

She heard the, thankfully quieted, ringing sound and immediately after the tell-tale click of it going straight to the PET message system. Oh, great. Lan was probably neck deep in something again. When would he tell his friends about these things up-front? Another ring as Roll. exe tried Dex, only for the same thing to happen. Lan wasn't that big a surprise, but Dex? Another ring as she tried Glide. exe, and yet another click for the message system. Glide. exe probably thought Yai needed her sleep.

"I'd try Princess Pride's number, but I don't know it," Roll. exe apologized. "I think... I think we're on our own for now."

"Maybe not..." Mayl thought of someone else she could try. It was a long shot, but... "Try calling Chaud. Tell him it's an emergency. Possibly Nebula related."

"You really think so?" Roll. exe asked.

"I think Nebula was about the only thing that woman wasn't cursing..." Mayl mused.

"GUTSHAMMER!" Gutsman. exe bellowed as he brought the weapon down on a patch of darkness. The immense power from the shockwave forced the surprised viruses inside that patch, and all those surrounding it, out from hiding where they were quickly disposed of. "Heh..." Gutsman. exe chuckled as he surveyed the team's handiwork. "This ain't so tough..."

"Don't underestimate the Darkloids!" Shademan. exe chastised from above them right before a blurry form dove straight for Hub from the haze above. "Wheee!"

But as he was about to strike, a massive gray form interposed itself and Shademan. exe's talons clanged off of the armor and he retreated back into the haze quickly before anyone could retaliate.

"Thank you," Hub said gratefully.

"Such is the duty of a knight," Knightman. exe replied.

In the area of Den City known as Beach Street, a shoreline drive that included the DNN broadcasting station as well as a state of the art hospital, a boy with black and white hair waited to meet the one who had called him with a seemingly urgent matter. Of course, she had to sneak off the boat she'd stowed away on first. After the owner had left to enter the building the boy, one Chaud Enzan, stood before.

As if the thought summoned her, Chaud spotted the girl, one Mayl Sakurai, approaching his position.

Chaud's only concession to surprise when he spotted Lan's girlfriend was a raised eyebrow. "Nice bikini."

"Yeah, well," the girl blushed, "I didn't exactly have time to change first. Thanks for coming."

"Don't thank me yet," Chaud warned. "I haven't decided if this is a waste of my time or not. You're just lucky I have official business in the area."

"Lan was right," Mayl crossed her arms in challenge. "You are a big sourpuss."

"Whatever works," Chaud shrugged the challenge off. "You still haven't explained why you think this is related to Nebula."

"Right... The woman I spotted was putting a lot of effort into not being spotted–"

"Oran Isle is hardly off limits," Chaud interrupted, but Mayl simply kept going.

"–and she seemed angry at Princess Pride for preventing her from doing something at the mine–"

"Intent to trespass... Possibly worth an investigation considering the circumstances, but still not–"

"–and while I'm listening to her on the way back, she's cursing out everything under the sun for her problems. Her board of directors, that Sunayama guy from the N1 Grand Prix, her father, Princess Pride, DenCity News Network, the Officials, the way the sun is in her eyes, her grade school teachers–"

"Your point?"

"Everything except Nebula."

Chaud paused at that last claim. There was nothing inherently incriminating or even remotely illegal about the woman's choice of condemnations. The woman was entitled to her own opinion after all. However, the omission of Nebula from her long list of ire, especially in light of current circumstances, was a gigantic red flag. With Nebula's occupation of the Net, everything was impeded from government to businesses to private life. There were only a few reasons why someone wouldn't be angry at Nebula these days.

"Okay..." Chaud sighed heavily. "We'll investigate quickly, and carefully. If we're caught doing this, then we will be the ones in trouble. Not her."

"Wh-whee... Let's party!" Shademan. exe laughed as he dove out of the haze again, this time for a member that the titanically armored Knightman. exe couldn't defend in time.

"Argh!" Colonel. exe cried out as he took a slash across his back. Though he reflexively swung his blade arm at his attacker, Shademan. exe had already vanished back into the haze as rapidly as he'd emerged from it.

"We have to take out the last DarkHoles!" Lan yelled as Hub blasted a BigBrute back into its DarkHole, sealing it. "Gutsman! Knightman! You get the other one!"

"We're on it! GUTSQUAKE!" Gutsman. exe bellowed as he slammed his GutsHammer arms down at the same time Knightman. exe threw his KingdomCrusher into the air. The shockwave along the ground tore through the viruses surrounding the DarkHole while the boulders that fell from above pummeled the TinHawk until it fell back into the DarkHole it had emerged from and self destructed, sealing the final source of the black haze that obscured the cybersky.

With the DarkHoles sealed and no longer belching the black haze, the sky began to clear and gradually reveal the disturbingly warped background of the Nebula occupied zone, as well as the vampiric Darkloid it had hidden from view.

"There's nowhere to run now!" Colonel. exe declared, pointing his blade arm into the slowly dissipating haze.

"Coast is clear," Chaud declared and waved Mayl into the 'employees only' area of an office near the DNN building.

"So... you think this place has something to do with the DNN takeover she was ranting about?" Mayl asked quietly as the two moved in the general direction of a main terminal.

"Possibly," Chaud explained just as quietly. "Several companies are trying to leverage control of DNN, but even in prison and most of his assets seized, Sunayama still owns the majority of shares. And he's refusing to sell."

"Why? I mean, he can't actually use them, right?"

"Sort of," Chaud checked another door and nodded before motioning Mayl into what looked like a server room. "I'll explain more later. For now, we need to find whatever this woman is hiding and get out."

"Alright ya two-bit vampire wannabe! It's clobberin' time!"

"Whee... I didn't expect you to make it so far..." Shademan. exe chuckled as the dark haze obscuring him cleared enough that his position became clear to all. "Or so soon... It is still too early for such a banquet, but I suppose I have no choice... Welcome to the party of darkness!"

"Foul shade-thing!" Knightman. exe accused. "We have you now!"

"Come... give me a taste of your power... A taste I can savor..."

"Well, well..." the female voice declared from the entrance of the room as Mayl and Chaud turned to see a brunette woman in a bold red business suit and tastefully made up glare at them with arrogant condescension. "What have we here?"

"It appears to be trespassers," the voice of a new navi agreed behind Roll. exe and Protoman. exe as they whirled to meet him. Both readily recognized him as Magnetman. exe.

"Hello Tesla Magnus."

"Magnus?" Mayl started in recognition. "As in Gauss Magnus? The man who almost crashed that plane Lan was on?"

"You!" the woman hissed over the connection. "Chaud Enzan! It's all your fault! You and that horrid Lan boy with the blue navi!"

"What happened to your father was his own fault for trying to commit an act of net terrorism," Chaud replied evenly.

"I could care less about you arresting my father! He deserved what he got! But what happened after was all your fault! I was supposed to succeed my father as head of the company, but his arrest made the board doubt my fitness! I've had to claw my way to where I am now tooth and nail! You wouldn't believe the stress I'm under! My lovely hair nearly fell out and it's ruined my beautiful skin!"

"... Seriously?! " Mayl gaped. The woman looked groomed to a perfection most would envy. And how was any of that Chaud's fault? Or Lan's for that matter? (19)

"Sounds like an excuse to us," Chaud humphed.

"Magnetman!" Tesla fumed. "Trash those interlopers for me! Finally! A chance to burn some stress off!"

"Anything, Miss Tesla," the large red magnet-themed navi replied as he hovered in the cyberscape.

"Here he comes Roll!"

"Protoman, get ready! Battle Routine, set!"

"Execute!"

"Max Magnet Power!"

"Apollo?" Hephaestus blinked as the sun god's failure to make any cheesy vampire puns registered. "What are you–"

"Hmm?" Apollo looked up from his own view of a completely different set of events, and his tub of popcorn, to see Hephaestus halfway between a look of surprise and a fierce glower.

" Why didn't you let me know about this development the moment you spotted it?"

"Umm… The Great Apollo thought you knew about it?" (20)

Hephaestus folded his arms. "More like you were hoping for a cat fight for your personal enjoyment."

"You said it, the wise Apollo didn't," Apollo hastily pressed the delete key before Hephaestus could see the partial subconscious message he'd been composing.

"We'll give you a taste alright!" Colonel. exe had yelled, throwing his cape over Shademan. exe's form as the vampiric navi charged at them. "Blind Rain Rush!"

With that, Colonel. exe and Hub had charged at the blinded Shademan. exe to attack up close, only to be surprised when the darkloid's form had shattered under their assault and the resulting quartet of cyber bats had emerged from under the cape to flap away.

"What tha?" Gutsman. exe blinked in surprise and astonishment at the sight.

"Despicable creature!" Knightman. exe bellowed as he flung his mace at the beasts, dispersing one of them while Hub and Colonel. exe shot two more out of the sky, but the fourth got away and reformed into Shademan. exe a short distance away.

"Surprised? Wh-wh-wheee!" the reformed Shademan. exe chuckled. "Realizing you've never faced me at my full strength? Wh-whee... Face it Megaman! You still aren't good enough to beat me!"

"We'll see about that!" Hub challenged as he began firing his MegaBuster rapidly, causing Shademan. exe to sneer as the hits did damage to him. Minor damage, but damage nonetheless.

"Such scratches are beneath me," Shademan. exe growled as he snapped his fingers and caused a navi-sized clawed hand to emerge from the ground and swipe at Hub. "You'll need to do better tha–"

"GutsPunch!" the bellow from behind cut off Shademan. exe's taunting as the massive fist of Gutsman. exe, having circled around to flank the Darkloid, slammed into Shademan. exe's back... and through the shadow form he melted into in the next moment.

"Wha...?" Gutsman. exe's eyes widened in shock.

"Wh-wh-wheee..." the vampiric Darkloid's chuckle sounded as the shadow form melted into the tainted ground. "I thought I recognized you... Such mindless brawn... One of those needlessly filling side dishes that tried to keep me from that troublesome dessert..."

"Don't..." the brawny navi tried to sound defiant as the disembodied voice echoed around the Nebula-controlled area, but the fear crept in anyway.

"Don't what? Say what is true? Wh-whee..." the voice echoed sinisterly across the tainted cyberscape. "All the pathetic little navis who live in the light are my food. No amount of strength can change that. Not yours. And not Megaman's."

"Here we go!" Tesla shouted with a manic look on her face as her navi Magnetman. exe opened by laying a grid of magnet panels in the cyberscape before launching a series of magnet-shaped missiles at his two opponents.

"Watch out Roll!" Mayl called, prompting her navi to teleport out of the way even as Chaud directed Protoman. exe to sidestep the missiles, even as they changed direction mid-flight, with ease.

"MagnetBall!" Magnetman. exe bellowed as he charged up a crackling ball of dark purple magnetic energy and threw it at them. It moved slowly, but it tracked their positions as it did. And then Roll. exe found herself stuck in place. Looking down, she spotted a field of purple magnetic energy on the ground below holding her in place as the magnetic ball inched towards her.

"Ohohohoho! How easy you're making this!" Tesla laughed condescendingly.

"Not so fast!" Mayl retorted as Roll. exe broke free and easily sidestepped the magnet ball, which proved unable to completely reverse direction. "Boomer chip in! Download!"

"StepCross! Battlechip in! Download!" Chaud declared at the same time.

Tesla cursed as she directed Magnetman. exe to backstep from Protoman. exe's charging attack, and put him directly in the path of the wood-element Boomer chip.

"RollArrow!"

"Shockwave!"

"Magnet Barrier!"

A forcefield sprung up around Magnetman. exe to absorb the attacks.

"Finish it, Magnetman!" Tesla ordered. "North-South Tackle!"

Suddenly Magnetman. exe was in line with Roll. exe and charging straight at her in a shoulder rush that put the larger navi's bulk to good use. Along with a blue copy of him from the other direction.

"AntiDamage!" Mayl cried out and sent the chip with not a moment to spare. The impact from both directions hit only a dummy as the real Roll. exe threw a giant shuriken in response and Protoman. exe unleashed a Slasher chip in retaliation to the charging attack.

"Hmm..." Tesla's eyes narrowed. "It seems you both do have skill after all... Very well! Magnetman! Time to stop playing around!"

"Yes, Miss Tesla!"

Mayl and Chaud directed their navis to regroup and ready themselves for the next attack, but as they did Mayl noticed that Tesla's demeanor seemed to change. Before she had seemed to care little that it was the two of them (well, mostly Chaud) that had broken in, seeing them as little more than targets for the rest of the anger she carried around. Now... now she actually seemed focused on their fight.

"Show yourself base coward!" Knightman. exe challenged, looking around for any sign of the darkloid, ready to throw his mace as soon as the blackguard showed itself.

"Wh–"

Colonel. exe whirled to slash as the sound, and hit only a minor virus that had crawled up from some remaining dark ooze, liberating a minor chunk in the backwash.

"wh–"

Hub whirled this time, using a sword chip to bisect a darkly tainted mettaur in the middle of trying to attack him.

"wh–"

Hub's eyes widened as he and Lan reacted in unison. That had been right behi–"gurk"

"wheee..." Shademan. exe finished chuckling from where he'd thrust his taloned hand right through Hub's chest. He was still halfway through reforming from the shadows.

"Megaman!" Gutsman. exe cried in alarm.

"Oh god! Lan!" Princess Pride's alarmed scream was heard over the connection.

"Lan?" Dex froze as he saw what had happened. The moment that vampire navi had hit Megaman. exe like that, a gaping wound had appeared on Lan's own chest and started bleeding furiously. He'd heard of the dangers associated with Full Synchro, but the feedback of a navi's pain had never seemed that big a price to pay to him. The pain he'd felt while synched with Gutsman. exe had always faded with no real lasting effect. To see this happen...

"Hold on, Lan!" Princess Pride began tearing strips off of her shirt to start making a bandage.

Hephaestus recoiled in shock as the Anchor was hit with what could have been a mortal wound had it not been induced wholly from sensational feedback. It was fortunate that the young woman present knew first aid or the boy could have easily bled out despite the wound itself being just a flesh wound.

Looking over at the success chance, he further goggled as the numbers shot up and down like they were noting the position of a Richter needle in real time during a major earthquake. (21)

"Why do I have to learn this?"

"As princess, it is your duty to look after the people of Creamland. Whether that means defending their interests as a whole on the political stage or dedicating yourself to binding the wounds of a single citizen. They are your people and your purpose is to see to their defense in every way you are capable. The job of myself and the rest of your tutors is to see that you are as capable in as many ways as possible."

Princess Pride did her best to bandage Lan up, silently thanking her old tutor for insisting she learn every level of first aid possible.

"Ohgeezohgeez," the larger boy, Dex, nearly hyperventilated nearby as he did his best to keep pressure on the sudden wound Lan had received. "Lan don't you dare die on me!"

"Dex..." Lan groaned.

"Save your strength, Lan," Princess Pride ordered firmly. Hero or not, the boy needed it. There. That would hold long enough for her to get him to the boat and some proper bandages. Then she would see if he needed to be rushed to a hospital.

"Dex..." Lan insisted, gripping the other boy's arm pretty firmly considering his injuries. "You need... to stop Shademan..."

"But..." the larger boy blinked as Lan fumbled an attempt to force his own PET into Dex's hands. He only stopped when the larger boy accepted the item.

"You can do it..." Lan grinned weakly as Pride hefted the boy into the rather ironic princess carry. "After all... you have guts..." (22)

Dex looked like he was fighting back tears as he stood straight and saluted in a manner that would have done the knights of Pride's homeland proud (even if they'd never have been caught dead wearing swim trunks on duty).

"Magnet Missile!"

"Scuttle!"

"Katana!"

"Screen Divide!" Colonel. exe did his best to cover the wounded Megaman. exe as the vampiric darkloid harried the rest of them.

"Megaman! Speak to me!" Gutsman. exe sounded worried.

"Nnnngh!" the blue navi grunted as static sparked over his form, emanating from the gaping hole in his chest. "C-can't... mov-ve..."

"Knightman!" Colonel. exe ordered, taking charge of the situation. "Watch over Megam–"

"WHEEEEEEEEEEEE!" Shademan. exe screeched as a massive blast of sound shot from his mouth to drown out Colonel. exe's words as it slammed into the military navi, causing his body to jerk and convulse.

"No!" Knightman. exe bellowed, sending a Kingdom Crusher at Shademan. exe, only for the impact to cause the vampiric navi to melt into shadows without any visible sign of damage while Colonel. exe collapsed from the hits he'd sustained.

"C-c-curses..." the military navi shuddered as static gripped his injured form and immobilized him. The emergency jack-out measures every navi tied to a PET had were completely blocked in the darkness-infused zone, otherwise he'd have been automatically logged out rather than have to suffer such serious wounds and be rendered so helpless.

"Two down... wh-wh-wheee..." Shademan. exe's echoing laugh taunted them. "Let's see... who will be next? Perhaps..." Shademan. exe suddenly appeared in front of Knightman. exe, "you?"

"Royal Wrecking Ball!" the massive knight navi swung his chained mace protectively in response, only for the vampire navi to again melt into shadows with the hit. Shadows that moved and flowed to Knightman. exe's back and reformed.

"Yes..." Shademan. exe hissed right before he sunk his vampiric teeth into a seam in Knightman. exe's armor and began siphoning his life force.

"Gnnnnn..." the massive knight tried to struggle, but his heavy bulk left him less able to shake off the persistent foe as he clung. And raising his defense wasn't possible while the vampiric foe was latched onto him.

"G-get..." Megaman. exe's voice struggled just before a series of poorly aimed blasts peppered both Shademan. exe and Knightman. exe both. The former hissed and disengaged so he could turn to strike at the more helpless target, only for a massive fist to pummel him back into the melting shadows again.

"Thank you..." Knightman. exe said to the smaller navi as the brawny Gutsman. exe took up a secondary protective position, and dumped the immobile form of Colonel. exe next to the blue navi.

"Kn-nights... p-p-prot–ngh!" Megaman. exe grinned weakly before the static immobility claimed him again.

"Indeed they do..." the armored navi acknowledged.

"Yeah... but we're gettin' hammered here!" Gutsman. exe declared as he looked around frantically for his opponent. An opponent who calmly reformed a short ways away, looking entirely unconcerned with the two remaining navis.

"Wh-wh-wheee... Such fierce struggles..." the vampire navi smirked arrogantly. "Surely you realize it's pointless by now? I've taken out your best fighters with ease. What hope do you have?"

"We have enough!" the voice of Dex cut in as the boy took over the role of liberation operator. "And we're gonna pound you into the ground!"

"Really now?" Shademan. exe snorted in amusement. "How? I command the power of darkness. It strengthens me. Protects me. Makes me invincible to the feeble likes of you. All you are to me are side dishes to consume."

"We'll show you!" Dex yelled. "Get him Gutsman!"

"Yeeehaw!" Gutsman. exe charged and swung a punch directly at Shademan. exe's face, causing the navi to melt into shadows again rather than receive injury.

"Pathetic..." The vampiric navi reformed quickly a short ways away and formed a trio of red bats that he sent at his larger opponent. "You reall–"

"ROCKET PUNCH!" the flying fist pummeled the bats and forced Shademan. exe back into shadows.

Shademan. exe reappeared behind Gutsman. exe and slashed across the larger navi's back.

"ARGH!"

"Wh-wh-whee... Really now... what did you expect to happen differently?" Shademan. exe chuckled as he dissolved into shadows again due to frantic shots from the GutBuster. "I defeated you easily last time we met even with your friends helping... Without the power of darkness, you can't hurt me... All you can do... is wait for deletion."

"D-dex..." Gutsman. exe backed away nervously. "I... he's..."

"He's full of it Gutsman!" Dex growled back fiercly.

"Oh really?" Shademan. exe drawled. "And what would a boy like yourself know about darkness? You know nothing!"

"Actually," Dex sounded a lot calmer than he had any right to, "I think I've got you all figured out."

"Oh, the mighty Apollo has to hear this."

"Do tell..." Shademan. exe grinned arrogantly, not pressing his advantage. Acting as if he had all the time in the world to finish them off.

"Honestly, I wouldn't have figured it out if you didn't talk so much, but yeah, I know all about the secret of your dark power now..." Dex stated firmly. "The great secret that makes you so 'invincible'."

"And what secret would that be?" the vampiric navi had the tone of those who were curious solely because they desired to know how wrong the other person was.

"It's doubt," Dex declared and Shademan. exe's arrogant grin slipped just the tiniest amount. "You brag so much about being invincible not because you believe it, but because you need us to believe it."

Shademan. exe charged with a feral hiss suddenly, but Gutsman. exe, newly resolved met the charge with an uppercut that didn't so much cause Shademan. exe to melt into shadows as it caused him to nearly explode into them.

"Because that's what darkness does," Dex continued with an audible smirk, his theory all but confirmed by Shademan. exe's hasty actions. "It seeps through the cracks and gets into your head. Eats away at your confidence and morals, promising power and more if you let it in. But all it delivers is an easy way out."

"WHEE–" Shademan. exe reformed right in Gutsman. exe's face and unleashed a sonic blast point black at the same time Gutsman. exe slammed both massive palms together over the reforming darkloid.

"The easy way where you don't have to take responsibility for yourself or bother with anyone else. Makes you doubt you can succeed any other way. Makes you so dependent on the easy way that you never realize that you're cutting off all your other options."

Shademan. exe reformed above Knightman. exe this time, and was caught straight on by a Royal Wrecking Ball that caused him to break not into shadows but into a quartet of bats that flew off in different directions.

"'Only those who can overcome darkness after being exposed to it', huh?" Apollo glared at a grinning Hephaestus.

"I stand by what I said," Hephaestus smirked. "It is true, after all."

Apollo just grumbled curses at everyone who spoke of 'certain points of view'. (23)

'Heh...' Hub thought as he forced himself to his feet despite the static. 'So that's what changed...'

He and Lan had been so worried about figuring out a way to hurt Shademan. exe that they'd doubted their ability to do so until they'd purged Roll. exe of his DarkSoul.

"Well, we're through doubting!" Dex yelled as Gutsman. exe slammed Shademan. exe with another punch, this time forcing him apart into shadowy bats.

"We will stand!" Knightman. exe declared as he blasted the vampiric navi into bats with the Kingdom Crusher the moment he reformed.

"We... will... defend..." Hub added as he contributed some buster shots, feeling a resonance pulse between souls as he stood next to Knightman. exe.

"Fools..." Shademan. exe weathered the buster shots with a growl. "I have the darkness!"

"And we have GUTS!" Dex and Gutsman. exe yelled as one as the latter slammed his massive fist into Shademan. exe's back. The vampiric navi's eyes widened comically from the impact before he broke apart into bats once more.

"It'll take more than th–"

The taunt was cut off as Gutsman. exe's fist closed around one of the bats, and the others vanished in puffs of shadows.

"Thanks fer runnin' yer mouth again," the brawny navi said as he clenched his fist around the struggling bat. "Made figgerin' out which one ya were easy."

"I... I can't believe I've..." the bat form of Shademan. exe wheezed out as Gutsman. exe continued squeezing the life out of him, "been disgraced... again! And by... such a... gyaaaahh!"

With a mighty puff of dark miasma from inside Gutsman. exe's fist, Shademan. exe was no more. Within moments, the area claimed by Nebula began to brighten as the darkness permeating it started to dissipate.

"RollFlash!"

"StepSword!"

"Hrgh..." Magnetman. exe grunted from the hit. "Why you...! You don't have me yet!"

"Magnetman, stop right there!"

"But... Tesla!" the magnetic navi protested as Roll. exe and Protoman. exe paused in confusion.

"That was an incredible fight Magnetman," Tesla Gauss sounded so much calmer now. In fact, she almost sounded like a different person... (24) "Ahhh... I must have worked off a decade of stress! I think we can cooperate with these two fine youth now."

"As you wish, Miss Tesla..."

"Ah, mighty Lan..." Apollo lamented. "How excruciating this must be for you! To be in the company of a lovely princess who has torn away her modesty, but have it be due to your own injuries!"

Hephaestus just pinched the bridge of his nose as Chaud began proposing an alliance between himself, Mayl, and Tesla to liberate the Nebula controlled Hades Isle, an area from which they could potentially invade Beach Street as well as one of the back doors into the undernet.

"Do not worry, fallen warrior! The fabulous Apollo will see that it is made up to you!"

Hephaestus had a sinking feeling when he heard that.

"The wise Apollo knows just the thing! Tender bedside care from the lovely Mayl in a hot nurse's un–Ackpbth! Not the spit spray bottle! Merc–bth!"

Princess Pride wiped some sweat from her brow. Her shirt was a goner, but it had held long enough for her to find a nice proper first aid kit on the yacht the kids had come on, complete with a rather generous supply of bandages. Enough to stop the bleeding and get Lan stabilized. He still needed a hospital, but it was no longer critical that he get there as fast as possible.

"Nice bra..." Lan complimented weakly before turning a bit less pale in the face. "Geez... I'm glad I can... blame that on the blood loss... And I need to... stop saying stuff out loud..."

"Speaking of which," Princess Pride adjusted her hair so it fell over her front with a mild blush, "you need to rest young man."

"Lan!" Dex burst onto the boat a moment later. "Are you okay?"

"He'll be much better without all the shouting," Pride admonished.

"Er... sorry," the large boy rubbed his head sheepishly before holding up a trio of occupied PETs. "But we won! That vampire is a goner!"

"Indeed," the voice of Knightman. exe intoned. "The blackguard has been most thoroughly trounced!"

"Most excellent," a new voice sounded and Pride turned to look at the face of a brown navi displayed on a control panel. "I trust we can get underway now?"

"Sure thing Glide!" Dex grinned. "We're all here now!"

"Mostly," the named navi corrected. "It seems miss Mayl has had a bit of an adventure while you were busy and has already returned to the mainland." The formal-sounding navi held up his hand to forestall the complaint already half-formed on Dex's lips. "I have received a follow-up message stating that all is well. She should be there to meet us when we dock."

"Interesting defenses," Magnetman. exe mused as he spotted the row of heavy digital artillery.

"And hard to get past without any sort of opening," Protoman. exe nodded.

"Are you ready to take over navi operation when they get in?" the voice of Chaud asked.

"Yes," the voice of Mayl replied hesitantly. "I mean, if you're sure that I'm–"

"He won't be if you keep doubting yourself, girl," the voice of Tesla teasingly chided.

"Yes," Mayl corrected much more firmly. "I'm ready."

"Good. I'm curious to see how strong you've gotten. Now. Let's go!"

"Magnet Barrier!"

"This may actually be more fun to watch the second time..." Apollo mused. "It would be even more fun if you let the mighty Apollo down now."

"Can you promise beyond any shadow of a doubt that you won't put inappropriate ideas in the mortal's heads?"

"Er... Define 'inappropriate'..."

"Great kami..." Mayl gasped as she saw the tainted cyberscape within the Nebula-controlled Hades Isle area.

"I know..." Roll. exe agreed. Even the former Gospel navi Magnetman. exe looked ill at the sight. "It's like I can taste pure anguish and torment with every breath..."

"Stay focused..." Protoman. exe admonished them both. "It's time to begin the liberation."

"Right!" Roll. exe took a deep breath and focused on cleansing the taint she'd breathed in with her positivity before letting it out. Opening her eyes, she hardened her resolve to the task before her. "Okay! Let's get go–"

crunch

All three navis paused at the sound and looked towards the source. For Protoman. exe, that was straight down to his feet to see what he'd stepped in.

"Sand panels?" Magnetman. exe wondered in confusion.

"Not even sand traps," Protoman. exe confirmed. "Though there's probably some of those around too."

"Zuuuuwooooo... Zoooohaaa..." (Who dares enter the domain of Desertman?!)

Protoman. exe grimaced as he heard a voice he'd have happily gone the rest of his life never encountering again. (25)

"What's wrong?" Hephaestus asked as Apollo shuddered.

"The disgusted Apollo is remembering the last sand creature he battled," the sun god grimaced. "The embarrassed Apollo was cleaning pieces of said creature from unmentionable places for–"

"Okay, I really didn't need to know that."

"Zaashoooo! Zuooooooooo!" (There is no escape! Desert Mirage!)

"What in the–" Roll. exe and Mayl gasped as the tainted cyberscape changed to an unbearably bright (if a blood red sun and a sinister purple sky could be called such) desert area that wavered and distorted all around them.

"Don't trust your eyes!" Protoman. exe advised them. "Find your opponents by sound and movement!"

"There was a DarkHole several meters to your one o'clock," Mayl reminded them. "Watch out for the flaming dog thing guarding it!"

"Wonder what... Mayl's up to..." Lan wondered as the boat sped back to Beach Street and the dock nearest the hospital. Pride had gone off to see if she could find a shirt that fit. And considering that this was Yai's yacht, that could be a long fruitless search.

"Dunno," Dex mused. "Usually it's you getting messed up in weird stuff without us. I'm still having to pinch myself a bit."

"Hey guys..." Yai's voice sounded out tiredly as she stepped into view, "has anyone seen Mayl? We didn't leave her on the island did– What happened to you, Lan?"

"Mild mishap..." Lan smiled weakly.

"You shoulda seen it!" Dex grinned. "Pride ripped off her shirt to patch Lan up before hauling him back to the boat single-handedly! It was like something out of a TV show!"

"Wait... Princess Pride's on my boat?! Right now?!"

As the latest viral beast collapsed into the swirling sandpit that represented the DarkHoles in the mirage, the illusion wavered to reveal the actual cyberscape, and a large patch of sickly looking sand a short distance away.

"That's the last of them!" Magnetman. exe declared. "Now for whoever's in charge of this giant litterbox!"

"Zeeee..." (That would be me.) the voice like so much grinding sand grumbled as the patch of sickly sand bulged and rippled oddly, forming a head with a gaping black mouth and two eyes glowing a sinister purple as well as two giant blocky hands. "Zuzaaaaa... Zuuukkooooo..." (I'll devour you slowly. You will be buried in my desert forever.)

"We'll see about that!" Magnetman. exe sneered and fired a Magnet Missile at the sand navi's head, only to stare in confusion as the direct hit blew the head into so much sand. "That was eas–"

"Watch it!" Protoman. exe yelled as he rushed in and cut apart a hand that had formed into a lion head and shot at the magnetic navi with great speed. "Desertman is no pushover!"

"Zuuurraaaaaggaaaa!" (Antlion Vortex!)

Suddenly the sand underneath and around the three navis opened into multiple sand traps and tried to pull them under.

"Wait, that's Desertman?" Tesla gasped as she saw the navi. "Sunayama's navi?"

"Yes," Chaud nodded as he and Tesla observed Mayl directing the liberation attempt.

"Would it be possible to capture him? Seeing his navi again is the only thing Sunayama actually wants, but no trace of his navi was ever found after the N1 according to my sources."

"Hmm..." Chaud mused. "It'll be difficult given Desertman's nature. But having a captive darkloid to study would be advantageous... Mayl–"

"Already got a plan," Mayl cut the boy Official off. "Trust me. Lan loves to talk about his fights and I've heard plenty about this one. Here we go Roll! Ball! Geyser! Battlechips in!"

"Download!" was all the prompting Roll. exe needed to throw the chips one after the other into the middle of Desertman. exe's tainted sand patch. The geyser of water burst up from the fresh hole in the cyberscape to drench all of Desertman. exe's form, darkening it with wetness.

"Now!" Roll. exe shouted.

"Magnet Slash!" Magnetman. exe and Protoman. exe yelled as the former used his magnetic powers to hold the pieces of Desertman. exe in place while the latter slashed at them. This time instead of being blown away into loose sand, the body of Desertman. exe held together due to the water the Geyser chip had added.

"Program Advance!" Roll. exe shouted as she prepare the follow-up attack. "BubbleSpread!"

"Keep him occupied you two!" Mayl ordered. "Aquaman! Navi chip in! Download! AquaSword! Battlechip in! Download!"

Magnetman. exe summoned an avatar of the pint-sized aqua navi who proceeded to drench Desertman. exe with a giant hose while Protoman. exe slashed with the blade of water.

"Here we go Roll! HolyPanel! Barrier! Repair!"

The area tainted by darkness was suddenly lit by a bright flash of light centered on Desertman. exe's head.

"Interesting trick..." Hephaestus mused as he watched the makeshift purification take place. "Though there can't be much left to save..."

"Lan?! What in the world happened to you?!" Mayl shouted when she spotted her bandaged boyfriend.

"Hey Mayl... just a... scratch..." the bandaged boy replied woozily.

"Just a scratch?! You call this just a scratch?! I'll show you just a scratch..."

Chaud watched as Mayl Sakurai, still in her bikini, angrily followed Lan (being at least half carried by Dex and Princess Pride (26) with Yai trailing behind) down the street towards the hospital.

"Interesting group that," Tesla remarked.

"That they are," Chaud agreed. "Have you thought about my offer?"

"I have... This Nebula group and their occupation of the net has made business exponentially more stressful lately. It would be a great relief to see them taken down a peg or twenty. I accept your offer, mister Chaud."

"Excellent. I'll be in contact with you when the next mission is planned."

"One moment," Tesla interrupted, holding up her PET to display a blank screen save for a single sand-colored pixel. "Are you certain it is fine for me to keep hold of this?"

"Of course," Chaud nodded. "There's not enough there to get any proper data even if any DarkPower remained, and none does. Beyond that, the researchers would shred whatever's left of Desertman's program trying to attain answers that he likely no longer possesses. It is better if you transfer it to a very basic subPET and return it to Sunayama in exchange for... whatever you need from him. The prison will transfer it to where the inmate's navis are kept of course, but..." Chaud trailed off and shrugged.

Inside Tesla's PET, within a tiny stasis sphere, lay a single pristinely pure grain of digital sand. All that was left of the former navi-turned-darkloid.

Pride resisted the urge to stretch as the hospital staff took Lan and rushed him towards a room, his friends following closely. She wasn't sure the borrowed, and small, shirt would take it well.

"M'lady," Knightman. exe interrupted. "A message for you. From someone named Baryl."

"Open it up Knightman," Pride commanded while cataloguing the nearest place to buy a properly-sized shirt for herself.

"Miss," the nurse halted the irate bikini-clad girl as the patient was led further into the hospital, "I'm afraid I'm going to have to ask you to step outside. You're creating a disturbance."

"I don't mean to create a disturbance," the girl apologized very politely. "I just need to knock some sense into my stupid careless boyfriend !"

The nurse blinked at that, and a moment later her expression slowly grew into a smile. "Your boyfriend, huh? Tell you what. He's going to be overnight for observation and an IV drip, so why don't you come with me and I'll get you something special for when you come back to pick him up tomorrow..."

Hephaestus stared as the nurse handed Mayl a–

"The amazed Apollo was not responsible for that! Honest! How could the upside-down Apollo be when you have not yet released him?"

Mayl blushed crimson and hugged the bag and its contents to her chest as she waited on Yai and Dex to return. There was no way she was going to let anyone see what was in it.

"So..." Roll. exe piped up with a mischievous tone. "Are you going to wear that tomorrow?"

"Ye–no... I don't know..." Mayl blushed even more. She hadn't even known that they made nurse's uniforms in her size! Apparently one of the nurses on the staff was really petite and they'd ordered a few too many uniforms for her or something.

"You really should. I bet they'd even let you wheel him out in the morning!"

" Roll! "

"There are bands of petty resistors meddling in our affairs..." Dr. Regal noted as he read over the reports. Several occupied areas lost over the last week or so to small bands of determined netnavis and other efforts to claim more of the global network repelled. And not just in Electopia where the Hikari boy would have been expected to make trouble, but all over the world too...

"Rgh... Good for... them..." Dr. Regal's prize captive, the stubborn Dr. Hikari ground out past the pain he must have been in.

"The research must be completed before we're interrupted. Perhaps it's time for you to tell us what we need Dr Hikari. Hmm...?"

"I... don't know... what you're talking... about..."

Dr. Regal sighed at the man's continued defiance. "I'm afraid my patience is not infinite Dr. Hikari... It would be... unfortunate... if I had to show you my bad side. Where was the data that was entrusted to you?!"

"I... don't... know...!"

"Hmm... I suppose it's possible you've forgotten... After all, it has been a while... Perhaps... this will jog your memory?"

ZZZHHHKT

"AAAAAAAAIIIIEEEEEEEEEEGGGGGHHHHHHHHHHH!"

"One little bolt! That's all the just and fair Apollo asks! It won't even be lethal! A small shock to the base of the spine to make the sinister Dr. Regal's bowels–"

"NO! INTERFERENCE!" Hephaestus yelled as he wrestled the sun god away from the terminal, just loud enough that he didn't have to hear the end of that sentence.

"Knightman, won't you take up the good fight and join us? Your defensive powers would be a great asset."

"It is my duty to protect Princess Pride... However, I know what she would say had she not needed to rush off and heal sir Lan. With her blessing and for the pride of Creamland, I will glady join and defend the innocent from these Nebula blackguards."

"Excellent. And you, Gutsman and Dex... You could also be assets as well. Expect communication from me and my NetOp soon."

Dex huffed as he climbed the stairs of the gigantic skyscraper. He'd have almost preferred a hike up a mountain to see some ancient martial arts master. It would probably have been less tiring... But the message he'd gotten...

You have good potential, Dex Oyama, but you lack training. As your classes have been cancelled and you have no immediate obligations on your time, I am, as your commanding officer of the Nebula Liberation Force codenamed: Team Colonel, requiring you to report to the following address for training. You will bring your PET, your primary chip folder, and clothes for one week. Nothing else. At the request of your assigned trainer, you will also not use the elevator. Do not be late.

– Baryl.

And of course, the address was the very top of one of the tallest buildings in ElecTown... He was gonna die at this rate... He'd been climbing for hours... Or maybe days...! He was gonna faint... He was...

Dex blinked at the number on the door in front of him.

He was here...

"Oh, thank kami!" he gasped and threw the door open with as much force as he could muster. He almost didn't manage it.

"You're late," the voice of a significantly older man stated with disapproval. Dex looked up at the speaker and his jaw nearly hit the floor. If he wasn't so exhausted, he'd have had a fangasm right then and there.

"M-m-m-m-mr. Kaneda?!" he stammered out.

"Wha?!" Gutsman. exe shouted in astonishment from Dex's PET. "Ya mean tha legendary NetOp o' tha legendary Fist navi?!"

"Indeed I am," the man stated with stern evenness. "And you're Dex Oyama. The young boy who hacked our network and swiped the source code for our Punch chip series so he could customize his navi with it."

Dex gulped. He remembered that now... He'd had to agree to let them use Gutsman. exe's likeness on their chips to stop them from confiscating his navi...

"It is time to honor the other half of the bargain we struck with you back then. You were allowed to keep the stolen data as part of your navi in exchange for the use of his image on the Punch chip series. Now it is time you became a NetOp worthy of such a navi..."

"It is time you learned the ways of those who practice the noble art of the Fist," a powerful voice spoke from Mr. Kaneda's own PET. (27)

Mayl breathed out as she finished her hike to the shrine. The place was a little out of the way, but it was absolutely breathtaking!

"I can see a great deal of potential in the two of you. However, it's still largely untapped. You need training. Go to this address. I... know the people there. They can help you improve. Remember, a navi's abilities alone can only go so far. To reach the fullness of your potential, you must train yourself as well. And since your classes are currently canceled, this is the best time for it."

"Greetings and welcome to the Sutā Jinja," a shinto priestess not much older than Mayl herself greeted. "I am Andou Igarashi, and this is my navi Stargirl." (28)

"Hiya!" a voice from the priestess's PET chirped.

"Stargirl? Odd... Lan once mentioned fighting a Starman..." Mayl blinked. "Sorry. I'm Mayl Sakurai and this is my navi Roll. Chaud sent us."

"Of course he did," Andou smiled. "This is one of his favorite places to come and train. And it's funny you should mention Starman. I developed Stargirl after finding the data remains of such a navi."

"My predecessor was cruelly deleted in a cyber-attack on the shrine," Stargirl explained. "And I think I recall bits and pieces of fighting a blue navi from partial memory data my previous incarnation still possessed, along with his abilities. But I myself am a different navi."

"In any case, let's get you settled and plan out your training. Chaud tells me your navi uses arrows?" At Mayls nod, Andou gestured to a distant area of the shrine. "We'll get you started on archery then. It will not only help you better execute such attacks with your navi, but also improve focus. I also sense a powerful aura around you. If you'd like, I can teach you the ways of the priestess as well."

"I think I'd–" Mayl started, only to be cut off by a commotion from nearby.

"Lilly! What have I told you about putting sake in your water bottle?!"

"My apologies," Andou sweatdropped as a girl dressed in a different style of priestess garb came dancing drunkenly out while a voice from her PET yelled for her to get a hold of herself. (29) "My cousin from Scissor Island is staying here as well with a few friends. The network of her island was taken over by that Nebula group. Between you and me, she's been trying to break back in and kick them out."

"Maybe I can help a bit with that while I'm here..."

Lan yawned and stretched as he skated around town. It was strange how empty the place felt with his friends off doing... whatever they were doing. Shortly after he'd been released from the hospital with instructions to take it easy (while trying to ignore how good Mayl looked in the nurse uniform she'd gotten somewhere as she wheeled him out (30)), his friends had all packed up on trips.

Dex was off on something he claimed was top secret, likely meaning Baryl had something to do with it. Mayl had said she was going to a shrine to pray for the return of Lan's dad, but Lan suspected there was an ulterior motive there. He may have been a bit out of it from blood loss, but he recalled seeing her with Chaud and Tesla when they'd gotten back. Heck, even Yai had gone off with her father to learn more about her family's business. Mary and Kai were still missing and Nanako was managing Higsby's all by herself while Higsby was who-knew-where. He'd even tried looking in on some of his other friends from school, like Tory Froid, only to learn that most of them were out of town visiting relatives.

To put it simply, Lan was bored out of his skull. He was so bored that he was not only caught up with his homework, he'd worked ahead and gotten everything done that Ms. Mari had left them while school was canceled (31).

He'd given serious thought to looking in on Mamoru or Sean, but the former was likely busy with his secret job as undernet administrator in light of recent events, and he had no idea where to even start trying to find the latter. What was Sean up to lately anyway?

Sean narrowed his eyes at the familiar navi controlling the Nebula area of the net in Kotobuki. He'd expected to run into familiar faces when he'd decided to put together a team to take on Nebula, but he'd never expected it to be like this.

"Ho-hooo! Look who came to visit..." the blue navi with a large fan in his chest laughed. "If it isn't our old friends..."

"Airman?" Sean tensed upon recognizing the navi of one of his former Gospel subordinates. "Why are you working with Nebula?

Why would you leave Arashi like that?"

"Leave? Ho-ho-ho!" Airman. exe laughed uproariously. "Leave he says! Hilarious!"

"Ha-ha-ha-ha! Yes it is!" a new voice laughed that Sean also recognized, and his blood ran cold.

"Arashi?" he gasped as the image of the man's face was projected into the tainted cyberscape.

"Bloody..." Mr. Match's eyes widened as he observed over Sean's shoulder, flanked by another former member of Gospel known as Speedy Dave.

"Like my new look?" the unhinged voice of Arashi Kazefuki chuckled darkly, as he turned to show off the extensive scarring on one side of his face extending down his neck and under his shirt. "You should... After all, you're responsible for it, aren't you 'Lord Gospel'?"

Sean grit his teeth as the man he'd once tried to blow up for failing his mission laughed with even less sanity that Sean had possessed when he'd tried to kill him.

"You... you're the one who took Anetta!" a plant-green navi with a white and pink flower for a head and thorny vines growing out of his back accused from within the cyberscape, right before being blown back by a blast of wind from Airman. exe.

"Careful Plantman," a crimson navi with gold trim and boomerang-shaped blades extending from his wrist, as well as one cresting his forehead, appeared in a blur of speed to catch the other. "We can't rescue Anetta if you get yourself deleted foolishly."

"So what if I did?" Arashi laughed. "She wanted to save the planet, and that's what Nebula's doing! I think you of all people might sympathize, Dave."

"This isn't saving the planet!" the former environmental terrorist growled out. "It's–"

"Save your breath," Sean ordered and Dave immediately ceased talking.

"Aye..." Mr. Match glared as both his navis, Fireman. exe and Heatman. exe, stood with Sean's own navi Freezeman. exe in the cyberscape facing down the arrogant wind-user. "It's clear he doesn't care one whit. A man like that is in this for revenge and nothing else..."

"How astute!" Arashi and Airman. exe laughed together. "Nebula promised us a chance to get revenge, and we both took it gladly! You tried to blow us up and now we'll blow you off the face of the earth! Do it Airman!"

"Ho-ho-ho! Gladly! Triple Tornado!"

"Ice Shield!"

Lan sighed as he sat down in the ACDC park. Whatever Sean was doing, Lan hoped he was alright.

"Lan the netbattler..." a voice sounded behind him, causing Lan to whip around and face the speaker. (32) The man was dressed in a purple tunic over black pants and had his back partially to Lan, and stared at the younger boy out of an eye that had a long scar over it but nonetheless was sharp and alert.

"What do you want?"

"No need to get all riled up," the man dismissed lightly despite keeping his piercing gaze on Lan. "I am not here to harm you. I am merely here to see the power you both possess. You and Megaman."

"Why should I show you anything?"

"Hmm? I see... Perhaps you don't have anything to show?"

Lan grit his teeth. It was painfully obvious the man was trying to rile him up, but dang if it wasn't working... "Alright, fine... What do you propose?"

"Nothing much... Just that you jack into this squirrel's network and find my navi. We've set up a little obstacle course for you. I wonder... How fast can you manage it?"

"Aaaaaahhh! What should the talented Apollo play for this occasion?!"

"How about ninja music?"

"Excellent suggestion brother! One question though... What is ninja music?"

"The kind you don't hear."

Inside the squirrelcomp, Hub stared at the familiar face after a rather short bout of navigating the makeshift maze, the search made all the easier from a few rounds of hide and seek he and his friends had played in the same network.

"I never thought I'd be defeated...! Dark... This is mortifying!"

"So you're Shadowman's operator..." Lan considered the scarred man in front of him. "I thought so."

Other than an involuntary blink, the man betrayed no sign of surprise. "Oh? And why would you think that?"

"His navi symbol is on your back... Dark Miyabi."

"...You seem very well informed, Lan Hikari."

"I have interesting friends," Lan replied, thinking of Sean again.

"Indeed... Shadowman, return."

"At once!" the ninja navi replied as he jacked out.

"Lan, you seem more competent than I expected, but you still rely more on your navi's abilities than your own. It will be an uphill battle against Nebula from here if that continues."

"Good thing you aren't working for them then," Lan crossed his arms pointedly. "And besides, Hub and I work best together."

"Hub...? Ah... I see... that is what you call Megaman now... Interesting. Very well, I shall take my leave with this warning. Dr. Regal seeks something your father possesses. Something that, if he were to gain, would spell doom for everyone. Innocent and mercenary alike."

With that, Dark Miyabi threw a smoke bomb at his feet and in the instant he was concealed from view, he was gone.

"Mercenary warriors hailing from the land of Sudanlee–"

"There is no such place in this universe, Apollo..."

"They are the Sudanlee ninjas!" (33)

Lan blinked as he finished reading Chaud's e-mail about Nebula agents still active in Oran Isle's network. Hadn't he done that mission with Colonel. exe? And... that had been Dark Miyabi earlier with Shadowman. exe, right?

Oh, well, he'd figure it out later. Taking out a few Nebula mooks was just the thing to break up the recent monotony.

As he raced for the metroline to Beach Street and a closer access point to Oran's network, Lan failed to notice a man leaning against the trunk of a tree watching him leave.

"So... this is what you're like when you're on your own... It's hard to believe you were in a world class tournament not too long ago..."

Lan exited the metroline onto Beach Street and looked around for a good spot to jack in from. What he spotted was a familiar face attempting to charter a boat.

"Hey! Mr. Famous!" he called out to the man wearing sunglasses and a labcoat over a sports uniform.

"Hey, Lan!" the navi expert greeted and headed over. "I can already guess what you're going to say: What am I, the famous Mr. Famous doing trekking out to an abandoned island?"

"Something like that," Lan grinned at the man's attitude.

"As it so happens, I have been developing an anti-Nebula navi to help my star apprentices free areas of the net under Nebula control. Unfortunately..."

"Let me guess, he won't listen to you?"

"Or anyone else," Mr. Famous sighed. "He's certainly willing to take on Nebula, but he seems to think he knows everything and just goes off on his own. I fear he may try to become an independent navi and attempt to face Nebula by himself."

"Which can't possibly end well," Lan nodded.

"Hey!" an insulted voice piped up from Mr. Famous's PET. "I can tackle those Nebula chumps with one arm tied behind my back!"

"Yeah, right," Hub scoffed back from Lan's PET. "They'd eat you alive."

"I dare you to say that to my face! I'll sack you so hard it'll uninstall your RAM!"

"I think I see the problem..." Lan sweatdropped.

"Big talker, huh?" Hub shot back. "You and me, right here, right now!"

"I'm sorry," Lan blinked, feeling a strange sense of role reversal, " how many times have you told me to not lose my cool over something exactly like this?"

"Gladly!" Famous's navi laughed. "Assuming your NetOp will let you out of your playpen to rumble with the big boys!"

"Actually, I think this might be exactly what Gridman needs..." Mr. Famous mused. "A hard lesson in the limits of relying solely on one's own strength would do him good."

Lan looked between Mr. Famous and both PETs for a few seconds as Gridman. exe and Hub kept trading trash talk. "Ah, what the heck... We've got a few minutes to kill."

"Alright! Hut-hut HIKE!" (34)

Apollo was dressed as a mortal sports announcer and doing his level best to fray Hephaestus's last nerve.

"The trash-talking Gridman throws a long bomb at the nimble Megaman, and oh does it ever live up to the literal definition folks! Just look at that crater!"

"Stop that..." Hephaestus growled.

"Oh, but before the titanic Gridman can reclaim the ball, the amazing Megaman grabs it and nimbly leaps over a quarterback sack! He thumbs his nose at the smoldering Gridman and heads for the goal!"

"Stop that or else..."

"He's going for the thirty! The twenty! He's at the ten! The five! TOUCHD-" The mighty Apollo then fell over, gagging and trying to get the unmentionable in his mouth out.

"I warned you to stop that," Hephaestus scowled. (35)

"I think that's the last of them Chaud," Lan spoke into his PET's phone as Hub stood at the far end of the formerly occupied area of Oran Isle's network. Where the net linked to Scilab.

"Good work, Lan. Oran Isle's network is an important strategical location from where we'll be launching our bid to liberate the Nebula-held portions of Scilab's own network. There are multiple entrance points into the area under Nebula's control, likely to facilitate the coming and going of their own forces, but the ones nearest to Scilab's inner network are the most well defended."

"And if we came at them from that direction, it would mean we were dropping Scilab's own defenses to do so."

"Correct. This is why we need to take advantage of outside links and backdoors to stage our liberation of Scilab's network."

"Okay, we'll get right on it Ch–"

"Fat chance!" a new voice challenged.

"–right after we take care of the last guy who's been tailing us while we took out his Nebula buddies," Lan finished.

"Yeah! I..." the HeelNavi tripped over nothing as what Lan said registered. "Liar! There's no way you knew I was there! I'm gonna delete you for trying to make a fool out of me!"

"Yeah, right..." Hub sighed. "Lan?"

"Got you covered, bro," Lan grinned. "DrillArm, sacrifice for unison chip! Battlechips in, download!"

"DoubleSoul!" Hub yelled as the massive purple form of Knightman.exe coalesced around him and burst in a sound of metal striking metal to reveal Hub clad in thick purple armor, bearing a shield on one arm and a spiked mace on the other.

"Ha! A pretty trick, but no match for my viruses!" the HeelNavi laughed and summoned a series of Battys and a couple of Mettaurs. "Destroy him my pretties! You'll regret messing with Nebula!"

"AirHockey!" Hub yelled as he dashed forwards at the viruses as they opened fire, his shield becoming a hockey puck that he threw even as the viruses' shots pinged harmlessly off of his armor.

"W-wha?" the HeelNavi stuttered in surprise as his viruses were destroyed by the rampaging hockey puck. "No... I... I refuse to lose to the likes of you! DARKSWORD!"

"AirHockey!"

The HeelNavi jumped over the deadly puck, but his darkness-fueled blade still clanged uselessly off the armor of his opponent. Armor that pulsed with invulnerability like that granted from a Trumpy the member of Nebula noticed too late.

"Royal Wrecking Ball!"

The spiked mace slammed into the HeelNavi so hard that both he and the world spun around and around.

"N-Nebula... is... almighty..." the punch-drunk and dizzy HeelNavi tried to state defiantly, but the effect was ruined by the fact that he couldn't stand straight.

"AirHockey!" was the last thing he heard.

"Well, well... They're not half bad when they get going..." another navi who'd been following Megaman. exe much better than the HeelNavi mused as he watched the two leave. "Gets me raring to go..."

"Sorry, Chaud," Lan apologized as he and Hub took in the cloud of DarkPower covering the entrance like some sort of perverse fog. And was it his imagination, or was the dark cloud slowly expanding? "I know you said this was the least defended entrance, but what they do have is impassable. Unless Protoman's got a pair of wings stashed away somewhere under his ponytail, I don't think we're getting through."

"Odd..." Chaud murmured. "He was supposed to meet you there... Whatever. Jack out for now while I look into this..."

"Aaannndd they're back to being pitiful..." the watching navi shook his head sadly as Megaman. exe jacked out.

"Keep watching them," the voice of the man who'd watched Lan leave for Beach Street ordered. "We'll see if they were worth the trip sooner or later..." (36)

"Curiouser and curiouser..." Shadowman. exe mused as he watched the navi tailing Megaman. exe. "Your orders, Dark?"

"Continue observation Shadowman. We shall see how this plays out before we make a move..."

"But who shall watch the watcher who watches the watcher?"

"...us?" Hephaestus hazarded a guess.

"None other!"

– navi came and challenged me to a battle. He said he wanted to test our abilities, but instead he stole some of Magnetman's vital programs! I hardly know you, but Miss Sakurai recommended you ever so highly when I told her, so would you please help me?

– Tesla Gauss

Lan glared at the thin blonde Netopian who simply grinned back from behind his red-tinted sunglasses. Behind him, Tesla Gauss did the same. Searching out Magnetman. exe's stolen data in the DNN building's network had been different from what he'd expected, but...

"Ngh... I... I never imagined such a day would come... I... Thank you... for restoring me..."

"Dear me!" the man grinned. "Such faces! I freely admit you've got power and technique on your side, but you guys are sorely lacking in speed! Even that Dex kid managed to put up a better fight than the big red guy!"

Lan blinked in astonishment. "You know Dex?" he asked while filing the speed claim in the back of his head to tell Mayl and Roll. exe later. Maybe they could take the guy's ego down a notch on that front.

"Beat me and Gyroman by that much in one of the Blue Moon exhibition matches," the man held his thumb and forefinger barely a millimeter apart. "Said nothing but good things about you and your navi though. Made us itch to take a shot at you ourselves so bad we hopped a flight on out here right before Nebula took over. But... well..."

"What?" Lan demanded. This was a lot different from what he recalled in his conflicting memories.

"You two are kind of lame, really," the man shrugged and turned away. "See ya around, kid. Tah-tah!"

"The stupendous Apollo doesn't know what it is, but he likes this guy..." the sun god mused as he tried on some red-tinted shades himself. "The confidence? The casual poise?"

"The way he reminds you of yourself?" Hephaestus deadpanned.

"That's it!"

'Oh, boy...' Lan moaned to himself as he finished looking up the man's information, preceded by watching a recording of his match with Dex. 'I cannot believe I forgot that... Dex bragged about that match for days to anyone who would listen.'

Charlie Airstar, former member of the ace helicopter group, the Red Thunders, and pilot for hire. Well, at least now he had an excuse to know the man's name after coming across so ignorant earlier. Especially since Chaud claimed to be tied up looking into another matter. Same with Baryl. Which was also different from what Lan recalled. Ugh... how long before he had no idea what was going on anymore?

Well, at least he knew what to do now. Stop Nebula from retaking Oran Isle's network.

Baryl grumbled to himself as he dialed the contact number again. It rang, rang, and then there was finally the tell-tale click of the call being answered.

"What is it? I am busy."

"Why haven't you reported in yet? The mission to liberate Scilab was supposed to start yesterday! Before they could mount their current offensive!"

"I am dealing with a personal matter. I will contact you when it is resolved."

click

Baryl twitched.

"Finally done your homework and looked up me and Charlie, eh?"

"Yeah, we know all about you and Charlie Airstar!"

"Ha ha! Excellent! Now we all know each other! You can just call me Charlie, though."

"What's your game?"

"Tell you what, you catch Gyroman and I'll tell you whatever you want to know kid!"

"Here I go! GyroForm! Catch me if you can!"

"Wait! Damnit! We don't have time for this!"

Hub twitched as he finally finished vacuuming up the last of the cyber clouds infesting the net from Oran to the connected Scilab area.

"Hey, you're not half bad at this! Come on, let's see if you can keep it up!"

He twitched some more as he spotted the yellow helicopter navi that had gleefully led him on the long chase, making him vacuum up all of the cyber clouds that Nebula had sent out as the precursor to their impending attack.

"Starting to slow down there a bit! I wonder if you'll make it all the way!"

And seemingly not doing anything to stall the invasion himself.

"Running away? Pfft... I could take you anytime I want–"

"Not now Gyroman. There's still fun to be had in our little game of tag after all!"

"Roger that!"

"Are you quite through playing around?" Hub glared at the helicopter navi.

"What do you think, Charlie?" Gyroman. exe pretended to give the matter serious thought.

"Eh... I suppose the grunts hiding in the clouds were a decent enough warm-up," the man stated with a shrugging tone.

"Wait... you were fighting Nebula's agents all this time?"

"Fighting is such a strong word for such pathetic forces. 'Cleaning up' would be more appropriate."

"And even in that you are lacking," a new voice interrupted as Shadowman. exe appeared in a puff of smoke. "After all, you missed half of them. We did not."

"What... Shadowman?" Hub blinked, looking between the ninja navi and the helicopter navi rapidly.

"Hey, nice entrance!" Charlie's grin was evident.

"You've been spying on us all this time, haven't you?" Lan accused.

"Of course," the voice of Dark Miyabi answered. "We needed to see if you had what it took after all. Nebula is a powerful force. Not just anyone could take them on and survive. You need information to combat their forces, not just speed."

"Heh... Big talk for someone who lurks in the shadows like a coward," Gyroman. exe taunted.

Shadowman. exe stiffened at the insult, but said nothing.

"Better than one who blows hot air and empty boasts," Dark Miyabi returned evenly.

"You want a piece of us?" Charlie growled.

"Um..." Hub tried to head off the train wreck he saw happening in front of him.

"You are not worth our time," Shadowman. exe ignored Hub to glare straight at Gyroman. exe.

"You wanna say that again?" Gyroman. exe sneered as the helicopter blades on his back whirled dangerously.

"If you wish a fight, I suppose we could oblige you," Dark mused calmly. "Get ready Shadowman."

"Yes, Master!"

"Here we go Gyroman!" Charlie yelled.

"This'll be fun!"

"What the heck do you two think you're doing?" Lan and Hub watched the two navis square off against each other.

"Battle routine, set!" Dark Miyabi declared stoically.

"Execute!" Charlie Airstar returned with a grin.

"It was a fluke I tell you!" Gridman. exe complained.

"You didn't land a single hit," Mr. Famous raised his eyebrow. "How is that a fluke?"

"It would have been different if it was a Nebula agent..." the navi of the gridiron grumbled.

"Really now?" Mr. Famous prodded.

"Yeah! I'd have punted them halfway across the net before they could blink! Like that hero navi you told me about! He never needed anyone's help!"

"Oh, I'm pretty sure he'd disagree with you. Probably on principle after you called him... well all sorts of impolite things really."

"Wait, that was him? Seriously? You're not pulling a Lucy on me, are you?" (37)

"Oh, that was them all right," Mr. Famous made sure to emphasize the plural pronoun. "And they've needed plenty of help to do everything they've done. And even when they don't have their friends by their sides, they still have each other to rely on. Neither of them would have pulled off half of just what I've told you about if they didn't have that."

"Yeah, yeah... I get it already..."

"So you'll start listening to me now?"

"...I'll think about it."

"Ninjas versus helicopters!" Apollo gushed as he watched the two mercenary navis duel. "It's the most awesome match-up the amazed Apollo never knew he wanted to see!"

"Bakuen!" Shadowman. exe yelled as he and his two kage bunshin (38) each threw lines of explosions at their opponent.

"Tornado Arm!" Gyroman. exe formed a horizontal whirlwind that blew out the line of explosions headed for him and allowed the others to pass right by.

One of Shadowman. exe's clones vanished to reappear behind Gyroman. exe to slash at him with a sword, only for the blade to be deflected by the whirling helicopter blades and the clone dissipated from the blade being deflected through his chest.

"Gyro Cutter!" the helicopter navi threw a whirling helicopter blade that passed through the other clone and then angled itself at the real Shadowman. exe.

"Kawarimi!" the shinobi navi declared as he activated an AntiDamage ability to replace himself with a paper doll likeness and threw a massive shuriken at his opponent.

"Gyro Counter!" Gyroman. exe jumped up over the attack and turned into his helicopter form before firing a Vulcan-style machine gun at the newest kage bunshin Shadowman. exe had formed. "Bomb Raid!"

"Muramasa!"

As Gyroman. exe flew forward and dropped bombs, Shadowman. exe dashed forwards as well and sliced them in half.

"Not bad!" Gyroman. exe complimented with a grin.

"Hmph..." Shadowman. exe scoffed, but there was a slight gleam in his eye.

"Time to finish this!" Charlie declared as Gyroman. exe formed a Gyro Cutter on his arm and got into a charging stance.

"Funny, I was thinking the same thing..." Dark Miyabi intoned as Shadowman. exe readied the Muramasa for a charging thrust.

At the same moment, both navis charged each other, and then a purple form appeared between them with a sound of metal striking metal and a cry of "CUT IT OUT ALREADY!"

The Muramasa clanged off of a sturdy shield while the Gyro Cutter was deflected by a spiked mace and both navis were held at bay by the armored form of Megaman. exe in KnightSoul.

"What the heck is wrong with you two?!" Hub grit his teeth and shoved both navis back.

"You are fortunate that Megaman intervened or I would have deleted you for certain," Shadowman. exe glared over the armored form of KnightSoul Megaman. exe.

"Yeah, right, you and what army pajama ninja?" Gyroman. exe snickered right back.

"I shall see you spitted on my blade, you–"

"That is enough Shadowman," Dark interrupted. "I have seen enough. Lan and Megaman are worthy, even if these imbeciles are lacking. We shall render our services."

"Hey! Who are you call–"

"Not now Gyroman," Charlie snapped. "As annoying as he is, the ninja guy's right. We came here to see if Lan and Megaman made the grade and they have. We're on the clock now."

"Roger that," Gyroman. exe snapped to attention with only the barest hint of reluctance in his tone.

"Oh boy..." Lan sighed as the two navis stepped back and Hub exited KnightSoul. "Okay, I think I know what's going on here. The only question I have is who hired who?"

" There you are!" Colonel. exe declared as he ran up and jabbed a finger at Shadowman. exe. "Why did you not report yesterday?"

"Our test was not complete then," Dark Miyabi replied as Shadowman. exe studiously ignored the irate Colonel. exe. "After all, that was the terms or our agreement was it not?"

"I understood that test to be completed yesterday when you met with the boy," Baryl's voice was just barely on the side of calm.

"As if a mere game of hide-and-seek would give us their measure," Dark Miyabi scoffed. "If I am to travel all this way from my hidden village and operate in the open, we require a better test than a child's game."

"I take it you have a similar explanation?" Protoman. exe asked.

"Yeah, we–GAH!" Gyroman. exe jumped an impressive height when he realized that the voice had come from right behind him. Shadowman. exe simply raised an impressed eyebrow at the scene. "When did you get there?!"

"About when Colonel showed up," Hub shrugged.

"Your explanation, please Charlie," Chaud asked more insistently.

"Eh, we were already in Electopia looking to challenge the kid and a few other locals I'd heard about when you contacted us," the pilot-turned mercenary replied casually. "Figured we'd get a match in as a bonus. Didn't work out that way, but no complaints."

"Indeed," Dark agreed. "Lan and Megaman could still use training, but they shall suffice to combat Nebula."

"Well, I suppose we should get on with our first job," Gyroman. exe grinned.

"Let me guess," Hub offered with a suddenly sinking feeling, "opening the way to the next area to be liberated?"

"Yes," Gyroman. exe and Shadowman. exe replied as one, and immediately glared at each other.

"To be more precise, this shall be a joint liberation mission," Chaud began, getting a snort from Baryl who had likely been about to say the same thing.

"Well, then, I suppose we should get started," a female voice interjected, prompting the group to turn to see four additional navis. The large forms of Magnetman. exe and Gutsman. exe were dwarfed by the even larger form of Knightman. exe, but the relatively small form of Roll. exe was the one who had spoken.

"So, Dex, when were you going to tell me you and Gutsman were on 'Team Colonel'?" Mayl asked from her room at Andou's shrine.

"Uh..." Dex sweated several miles away from where he was worn out for the day from Mr. Kaneda's training regimen and trying to think of a way to explain that he'd been sworn to secrecy. "Hey, wait... When were you going to tell me you and Roll joined 'Team Proto'?"

"Er..." Mayl bit her lip at the comeback. "Okay, that's fair. Allies for asking Lan when he was planning on telling either of us about any of this if we hadn't been invited?"

"Help me figure out how to avoid Yai demanding to know why she was left out and you have a deal."

"So, do you think you can handle it?" Colonel. exe asked Shadowman. exe as both teams stood before the massive cloud of DarkPower.

"No problem!" Gyroman. exe answered instead. "I saw the key point to the whole thing earlier. It'll be a snap! GyroForm!"

"Hmph..." Shadowman. exe sneered as the helicopter navi gained altitude to fly over the before forming a sign with his hands. "Weight of a feather, speed of a hare... Make me light as air!"

With that, Shadowman. exe was off running on top of the cloud at a blistering pace even as Gyroman. exe took off across from the air.

"That is so friggin' awesome!" Dex yelled from where he was observing.

"Yeah!" Gutsman. exe agreed. "Uh... which one?"

"Both of them!"

"Target acquired. It's a DarkChip!" Gyroman. exe informed the group. "Readying GyroBomb!"

"No need," Shadowman. exe snorted as he raced to the target. "It is no match for Muramasa..."

Hub gave Protoman. exe a sideways glance.

"Data can be copied," was all the red navi said. (39)

"Bombs away!"

"Hyah!"

There was the sound of an explosion from the far side of the dark cloud, and in moments it was dissipating back into the net.

"Hah! Got it!" Gyroman. exe crowed.

"I believe you are mistaken," Shadowman. exe scoffed. "My blade struck moments before your bomb."

"Oh yeah? Well your blade obviously wasn't up to the task now, was it?"

"Are they going to be like this the whole mission?" Mayl and Roll. exe asked as more insults were traded. The latter was visibly sweatdropping and the former sounded like she was as well.

"Knowing our luck?" Lan replied. "Probably."

Deep in the corrupted area of Scilab's net, under the massive thunderhead formed completely from DarkPower, the darkloid known as Cloudman. exe frowned as he sensed entry by forces not allied with the darkness.

"Cloudman... Your area will be breached soon... I have special instructions for you should a blue navi named 'Megaman' be among the strike force."

Stretching out his senses, the darkloid of storms examined the interlopers. Several navis of no true worth, a couple of mild concern, one who was a traitor, another who stank of the foul light all proper darkloids despised, and... yes... One blue navi who held captive within him a very powerful DarkSoul...

'I see Dr. Regal... I understand... I will do the duty you expect of me...'

"What in the world are you doing?" Hephaestus asked an Apollo who was hunched over an action figure of the dark storm navi that he'd suddenly produced from somewhere.

"Wait for it brother..." Apollo replied absently as he adjusted something Hephaestus couldn't see. "And... done! What do you think?"

Hephaestus blinked as he took in the alterations to the figure. The armor and thundercloud base were the same as the darkness-tainted mortal navi, but the face...

The face was now a dead ringer for his father Zeus.

"So you can imagine that they're beating up 'dear old dad'," Apollo grinned.

Hephaestus gave an involuntary snort, followed shortly by a low chuckle, that quickly grew into a full belly laugh.

"It seems that they've prepared for us..." Colonel. exe scowled as he looked across the corrupted cyberscape. Above was a massive thunderhead pulsing at irregular intervals with sinister purple lightning. Everywhere, the oozing sludgy darkness bubbled along the ground, with many viruses watching from where they hid within. In the distance, sparking miasma whirled forth from the Dark Holes fueling the corruption of the cyberscape. And between the teams and those Dark Holes were shimmering dark purple barriers.

"Yeah..." Hub agreed, noting a few holes in the barriers. But ones that were spaced irregularly and far apart. It was clearly a design meant more to slow them down than stop them completely. "With those barriers up, this is going to take forever..."

"Good thing you've got me then!" Gyroman. exe grinned and spun the helicopter blades on his back for emphasis. "I'll fly ahead through the openings and destroy the source of the barriers!"

"Hmph..." Shadowman. exe snorted with disdain. "As if an imbecile like yourself could handle such a task. I shall sneak behind enemy lines and bring down the barriers."

"Oh yeah? And just how do you think you'll get across all those DarkPanels?"

"I shall run."

"Yeah, right! Those things will swallow you whole the moment you step on–I do not effing believe that..." Gyroman. exe stared as the ninja navi proved his claim by stepping onto the oozing darkness like it was ordinary ground. "How the hell , man?!"

"The secrets of the ninja are many and mysterious," Shadowman. exe replied with amusement.

"Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha!" a booming voice rumbled like thunder. "So they do not know the truth about you, traitor..."

As the echoes of the voice died down, all eyes turned to a rigidly still Shadowman. exe.

"Explain," Protoman. exe demanded.

"Those who fall prey to the darkness are those who revel in it or become addicted to the power it promises. Those who are born of the darkness may not be the same," Shadowman. exe riddled, neither confirming nor denying anything. (40)

"I knew it!" Gyroman. exe accused with a pointed finger. "He's a spy!"

"I am a shinobi ," Shadowman. exe glared right back.

"Several here have pasts they are less than proud of," Knightman. exe stepped between the two mercenaries and pointedly faced the yellow helicopter navi. "Unless and until he proves unworthy of our trust, he shall have mine."

"Come on man, help me out here..." Gyroman. exe turned to the red Magnetman. exe.

"Both Knightman and Shadowman were with Gospel, same as I was," the magnetic navi folded his arms pointedly. "And neither of them stripped me of vital programs like you did."

"By all means, argue amongst yourselves, ha ha!" the massive thunderhead over the area rumbled in time with the darkloid's laughter. "And when you're done, hurry back! I'll welcome you with thunderclouds!"

"We're wasting time," Hub cut into the brewing confrontation. "Whatever his past, Shadowman's with us now, same as you Gyroman. Both of you are going to go ahead and bring the barriers down for us. We'll catch up."

"Understood," Shadowman. exe nodded.

"I'll be keeping an eye on you..." Gyroman. exe promised.

"Yeesh..." Gutsman. exe sweatdropped as the two mercenary navis sped ahead, one flying above the murky dakness and the other running atop it.

"You said it," Roll. exe agreed with him. "I wonder if anyone else has problems like this..."

"Grr... Stand still already!" a green navi with black pants and clawed blades protruding from the ends of his arms slashed wildly at a hovering beige, black, and red navi with a long nose. "I know you kidnapped Pat you demented wind freak!"

"Ho-ho! I care not for the names of foul Nebula operators! Only where you and your cohorts have secreted away the great sensei Feng-Tian!"

"Shut your lying mouth!" the blade-user slashed again at his opponent.

"I'd like to see you make me!" the hovering navi swiped with a three-pronged blade and created a trio of whirlwinds.

"Cease this at once!" A strong voice demanded and a massive thunderbolt struck between both combatants, forcing them apart.

"Who the hell are you?" the bladed navi growled.

"I am Thunderman," a gray and black navi with orange highlights and a massive needle sticking up from his head introduced himself. Next to him was a cobra-themed navi emerging from a pot and an female navi wearing an outfit of yellow, orange, and blue with pink hands and feet as well as lime green rings formed like twin pigtails. "My companions are Snakeman and Ring. We are the Thunder Tribe, agents working against the likes of Nebula. We are currently investigating the disappearance of NetOps like your own."

"Yeah, then you should help me delete this liar!" the bladed navi sneered.

"Hmph... It is obvious that you are the villain here," the flying navi sneered back.

"Slashman," the female navi identified as Ring. exe began, getting a start from the blade using navi. "NetOp Pat Fahran, a chef in Netopia on business when Nebula occupied the net. Recently discovered missing from her hotel room."

"How did..."

"Tenguman," the girl navi turned to the other one. "NetOp Feng-Tian, elderly martial arts master in Netopia visiting an old training buddy. His friend recently returned home to see his house ransacked and no sign of his guest."

"Yes..."

"And the most interesting thing is that at each incident, witnesses placed an individual matching the description of the other's NetOp at the scene prior to their disappearance."

"What are you getting at?" Slashman. exe narrowed his eyes.

"Isssn't it obviousss?" Snakeman. exe hissed. "Nebula isss playing you both for foolsss..."

"Is that so...?" Tenguman. exe's eyes narrowed dangerously, but it was clear the target of his ire was elsewhere. "Then they shall soon learn the price of their folly..."

"There it is!" Gyroman. exe exclaimed as he flew towards a sinister purple glow fueling the first line of barriers. "Readying GyroBombs for liberation! Dropping in 3... 2..."

"Screee!" a large TinHawk guardian virus dove down from above, talons outstretched.

"Ack! Mayday! Mayday!" the helicopter-form navi yelped as he initiated evasive maneuvers and tried to angle for a return shot while Shadowman. exe dashed forwards below.

"Open the way, Muramasa," the navi shinobi gripped his sword as he approached the target and in a single motion, drew the blade and sliced through the barrier's power source. Along with a few small viruses that had popped up to defend it.

"The barrier is down!" Colonel. exe's voice sounded in the distance as the dark thunderhead rumbled as if in anticipation. "Press forward!"

"Oh I see how it is!" Gyroman. exe huffed as the TinHawk dissipated due to the souped-up SuperVulcan Lan had sent. "You keep up appearances while leading me into an ambush, eh? Plan to have your buddies take us out one by one?"

"Imbecile," the accused navi snorted. "You seemed intent on providing the distraction and I merely let you do so."

"Like I'd believe that! I'm going to bring the rest of these barriers down and no half-baked ambush is going to stop me! Keep up if you can!"

"DarkHole ahead!" Protoman. exe noted as the two teams rushed forwards.

"Leave it to us!" Roll. exe replied as she moved nearer to Gutsman. exe. "Ready Gutsman?"

"One fastball special, coming up!" the larger navi grinned and reared back one of his oversized hands in a pitcher's stance right as Roll. exe jumped to land in a crouch on the open palm. "GUTSSHOOT!"

Roll. exe was thrown forward wreathed in a corona of light to impact the DarkHole directly, deleting its guardian virus before it could even finish emerging to face her.

"Superb shot!" Knightman. exe complimented.

"Now it's our turn!" Magnetman. exe came up alongside the massive knight navi and extended his magnetic powers while Knightman. exe extended his chained mace right back. Both then hovered and crackled with electromagnetism, along with the chain stretched between them.

"MAGNET CHAIN!" they bellowed together and rushed through a patch of DarkPanels, destroying the viruses within and dissipating the murky miasma.

"Not bad..." the voice of the darkloid controlling the area rumbled with the dark thunderhead above. "But you're still too weak to defeat the likes of me!"

"Is it just me," Hub examined the thunderhead above, "or does anyone else feel like singing 'NetFrica' just to mess with this guy...?" (41)

"I hear the drums echoing tonight..." Protoman. exe sang so quietly it was practically a hum.

A few more hums that sounded like they could have been following lines were heard from Colonel. exe.

"The moonlit wings reflect the stars that guide me towards salvation..." Roll. exe picked up with a smile.

"I stopped an old man along tha way," Gutsman. exe joined in with his deep rumbling bass as he smashed a few viruses trying to ambush the group.

"Hoping to find some old forgotten words or ancient melodies," Knightman. exe and Magnetman. exe barely got out as they chuckled at the audacity of singing at a time like this. "He turned to me as if to say, 'Hurry boy, it's waiting there for you'."

"Stop that at once!" Cloudman. exe demanded angrily. "I despise that song!"

"It's gonna take a lot to drag me away from you," Lan's voice joined in over the connection, followed by Hub, just now getting over his amazement at the scene. "There's nothing that a hundred men or more could ever do."

"We bless the rains down in NetFrica..."

"That reminds the great Apollo... What are the Mighty Morphing Net Rangers up to?"

"Jammer!" Paulie cried in alarm as his navi was blown backwards from the blast. Four other navis groaned from prone positions deep inside the WaterGodComp as their single opponent laughed.

"Hehehehehe..." the darkly tainted GuardNavi; with limbs of dark gray, a body of navy blue, hands and feet of deepest purple, and a large antenna tipped with purple protruding from his dark gray head; chuckled as he stepped forward through the blast smoke and looked straight at his objective. A yellow figure sitting cross-legged behind a giant metal ovoid facemask with ornamental red lines on the cheeks and forehead, a blue circle in the center of the forehead with a blue wavy line like a river running down the middle of it, straight ridges above rectangular eyes that gave the appearance of a furrowed brow, a massive triangular nose, a rectangular-lipped mouth at the bottom, and what looked like blue and red hoses arranges like dreadlocks sprouting from behind. (42) The digital avatar of the WaterGod's control system. "And to think, when that idiotic tree navi deleted me, I thought it was all for nothing..."

"Ponta?" the worried voice of the ghost girl Yuko cried out pleadingly. "Ponta?! Say something!"

"Hold on Honami!" Koetsu frantically scrolled through options on his PET. There just had to be something here he could use...

"My time has finally come! Today the world will know my name as I corrupt the so-called 'Water God' and infuse the taint of DarkPower at the earliest access point of NetFrica's greatest river! Seeding the power of Darkness into the life-giving waters of half the continent!"

"But... that would..." Flave's eyes widened in horror at the implications.

"Damn you, you sick bastard...!" Testu growled from outside the comp as he and the other NetOps tried to revive their fallen navis in time to stop the agent of Nebula.

"And with my victory over the famous Net Rangers themselves," the modified GuardNavi turned to take in the five badly damaged navis trying to pick themselves up as he gloated, "I shall become famous! Known and feared the entire net over! The whole world shall know the name of BOMBERMAN! HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!"

"Hooohoohoohoohoo..." another voice joined in the laughter.

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!"

"Hoohoohoohoohoo...!"

"HAHAHAHA–Huh?" the self-proclaimed Bomberman. exe turned to look in the direction of the other laugh. All he saw was the large, almost navi-like, figure of the WaterGodComp's control system.

"Hoohoohoo...!" the system shook in time with the laughter. "Such a bold action to take, young one..."

"What in...?" the mad bomber stared at the laughing system as it moved.

"Hoohoohoo...! Tainting the waters of the whole river?" the figure slowly stood, stretching its thin limbs to lift the huge facemask off the ground, and the giant slab still pulled the figure's torso forwards in a bend until the bottom of the mask was level with the figure's knees. "I'm afraid I can't allow that... hoohoohoo...!"

The figure stepped forwards in a tottering sway, the space behind him rippling and leaving behind a utilitarian interface vaguely resembling a Mr. Prog.

"Who the hell are you?!" Bomberman. exe growled as he took a step back, taking a ready stance. "No system can just get up like that!"

"Hoohoohoo...!" the figure chortled in amusement. "You might say that I am the Water God this village has revered for ages. You might say that I am merely a water management program a bit too well made for its task. Hoohoohoo...! Such a conundrum! I suppose you may call me... Waterman... That is the naming system you kids use these days, right?" (43)

"Well, then, 'Waterman'," the invader sneered. "Prepare for deletion! ElectroBomb!"

The mad bomber navi threw a sparking explosive at the navi called Waterman. exe, who began doing a panicked dance as he watched the deadly explosive fly towards him.

"Oh me! Oh my! Oh–"

Zapboom!

"NO!" Paulie and a struggling Jammer cried out in horror as the explosive scored a direct hit.

"Oh right! Hoohoohoo...!" the voice of Waterman. exe laughed as the electric field dissipated to show he was unharmed, and dancing mockingly. "My mask makes for quite the shield! Hoohoohoohoohoo...!"

"Grr... Why you...!" Bomberman. exe fumed and readied more explosives. "CrossBomb!"

Baboom!

"Hoohoohoo...!"

"FlareBomb!"

Fwabwoosh!

"Not a chance, hoohoo...!"

"SpiceBomb!"

SnapCracklePop!

"A little to the left, sonnyboy! I've got an itch!"

"AquaBomb!"

"Hmm?" Waterman. exe perked up at the last and instead of letting it impact his mask, reached out and caught in in midair.

"Wha...?" Bomberman. exe stared in shock as his new opponent calmly held the device up to one of the mask's eyes.

"Hoo-hoo-hoo...!" Waterman. exe laughed. "Such an interesting device! Looks tasty, hoohoo...!"

And with that, the rectangular mouth on the mask dropped open for Waterman. exe to toss the aqua bomb into. The moment it closed, there was the sound of a muffled explosion and the river-management-system-turned-navi gained a bright blue glow.

"What are you...?"

"Hoohoohoo..." Waterman. exe laughed low and threatening. "Whether you think I am a god or a program makes little difference... Either way, I am a mighty river spirit, sonny... And you're trying to poison my waters... Such a transgression must be met with all the fury of the river itself..."

The mouth of the mask opened once more and the growing sound of rushing water could be heard from within it.

"RAGING RAPIDS!"

"Eeeheeheeheeheeheeheeeeeee... Wipeout!" Apollo laughed as he started up a riff on his lyre.

"Objective in sight," Shadowman. exe readied his blade as he dashed forwards. "Ope–"

"GROWL!" a BigBrute burst forth from the dark mire directly in front of the shinobi and let loose a burst of flames, causing Shadowman. exe to halt his charge and leap backwards to avoid the attack.

"Looks like you didn't feed your pet on time!" Gyroman. exe laughed as he flew over the confrontation to the source of the next barrier.

"Target acquired! Bomb Liberation!"

Shadowman. exe muttered several dark insults under his breath as he slashed the guardian virus with the Z-Saber Lan sent him while the imbecilic thrill-seeker continued to verbally pat himself on the back.

Lan sweatdropped at the intense rivalry developing between Gyroman. exe and Shadowman. exe.

"Man, if they keep that up..."

"Yeah," Hub replied from where he was with the main group, pressing forwards through the dark mire and sealing the DarkHoles, "it won't end well. I'll see if I can talk some sense into them..."

"Focus!" Colonel. exe's voice chastised. "We must seal these portals of darkness and remove the protections around the darkloid commander!"

With the final barrier down, the objective was plain to see. After all, it was surrounded by a near-constant barrage of sinister purple lightning bolts, in the middle of which sat Cloudman. exe.

"Okay, let's seal these last DarkHoles!" Protoman. exe urged the group.

"Excellent!" Gyroman. exe's voice interrupted as he flew by. "I'll go on ahead and take this Cloudman chump out the moment his protection comes down!"

"Gyroman, get back–!" Hub called after the helicopter navi.

"Fool!" Shadowman. exe dashed past at that moment. "You lack the finesse to slay one such as Cloudman. I shall complete the mission objective!"

"Oh for the love of–!"

"GROWL!"

"SCREEE!"

"Defeat the guardian viruses before they clear the DarkHoles!"

"Let's make things interesting, shall we?" Cloudman. exe's voice rumbled with the thunderhead above. "CrossSpark!"

Two bolts of sinister purple lightning lanced down from above, and two screams echoed across the tainted cyberscape.

"Roll! Gutsman!" Lan cried out in alarm.

"Nngh...!"

"W-we... can't m-move...!"

"Okay, that's it! Time to kick it up a notch! Triple Wideshot! Battlechips in! Download!"

Gyroman. exe grinned to himself as the barrier of lightning bolts slowed and vanished with the sealing of the final DarkHoles. Now he could fight the ruler of this area and see just how strong these 'darkloids' really were...

"Here I go! GyroBomb!" he yelled as he dropped bombs on the area below, deleting viruses and clearing away the dark mire leading to the target.

"Watch it, you fool!" Shadowman. exe snarled angrily as he dashed along below, narrowly avoiding the airstrike himself.

"What? Can't dodge a few little bombs?" Gyroman chuckled as he transformed and faced the thundercloud-bottomed navi Cloudman.

exe.

"Just stay out of my way..." Shadowman. exe growled as he did the same.

"How amusing..." the darkloid said with a stoic frown, calmly raising his arms and forming multiple thunderclouds before him that glowed and shot electric balls at both his adversaries.

"Hah!" Gyroman. exe smirked as he danced around the shots and closed in on his opponent. "This is all you've got?"

"Clear the storm, Muramasa," Shadowman. exe intoned as he too dashed through the electric bolts and slashed through the clouds firing them.

"Hey!" the helicopter navi yelped. "You almost cut me!"

"I said to stay out of my way," Shadowman. exe scoffed.

"Yeah, right! I knew you were waiting for a chance to backstab me all along!"

"If you wish a fight, I am willing to oblige you," the ninja sneered and readied his blade.

"By all means, don't mind me," Cloudman. exe's voice penetrated their confrontation. They turned to look, but all they could see was a sea of the darkloid's clouds, along with one twice the size of Knightman. exe that was already upon them.

"Gaaaahhh...!"

"Nnnngh...!"

"Hahaha!" Cloudman. exe's disembodied voice laughed as both navis were electrified by the thundercloud.

"T-tornado Arm!" Gyroman. exe gasped out as he formed a wind to blow away the clouds, but as he did a barrage of giant shuriken were thrown by Shadowman. exe and the attacks intercepted each other and were sent off-target. "D-damn you..."

"S-stop interfering..." the ninja grunted back.

"It ends now!" Cloudman. exe popped out of one of his clouds. "CrossSpark!"

A bolt of purple lightning lanced down directly in between both navis and exploded into a long-lasting cross-shaped burst of electrical energy on impact.

"GAH!"

"NGH!"

"LeaderRaid!"

A cavalry charge sounded in Hephaestus's office as the forge god wondered where the heck Apollo had been keeping the bugle horn.

"Knightman!" Hub called as Colonel. exe and Protoman. exe engaged Cloudman. exe. "Stand guard over these two!"

"I shall guard them with my life!" the armored navi took his position, similar to how Magnetman. exe was even now protecting the recovering Roll. exe and Gutsman. exe.

"Good, now WHAT IS WRONG WITH YOU TWO?!" Hub demanded of the injured mercenaries, looking like he was seriously considering slapping them both upside their heads like he'd seen on some cop drama Dex had talked everyone into watching.

"I'm j-just making sure t-this traitor..." Gyroman. exe grit his teeth as sparks raced over his form.

"Hmp-ph... Y-you are only concern-ned with s-showboating..." Shadowman. exe did the same.

"Oh for the love of... I cannot believe you two!" Hub yelled. "I get rivalry, really, but trying to have it out right in front of someone who wants to kill all of us ?! What did you think was going to happen?!"

"G-gotta–"

" What? " Hub interrupted sharply. "Prove yourself? Show everyone you can take out people like Nebula all on your own?"

"As I th-thought... He lacks–"

"Discipline?" Hub cut in mercilessly. "And just where was yours a few seconds ago, hmm?"

"H-he's a–"

"No, both of you shut it right now. Gyroman, I get that you're thrilled to be going up against strong opponents. I get that you see this as some big adventure. I do too. As bad as things are, I also feel the thrill of fighting at the highest level possible. Of being challenged by strong opponents. Shadowman, I know what it's like to have the darkness whisper at you. To be tempted to take the easy way out, but have the discipline to see things through no matter how hard it is. But–"

Bolts of purple lightning rained down from the battle a short distance away and a cry of pain was heard from one of their allies.

"Look," Hub decided to get straight to the point. "I don't care whether you two see this as the adventure of a lifetime or just another mission to complete, but what I need you both to understand is that no one can do this alone. You can't. I can't. They can't. So either you put whatever problems you have aside until later or you stay out of everyone else's way."

The two mercenary navis traded a quick look with each other.

"I'll fog you up! DarkCloud!"

"Gah!"

Hub swore and readied himself to enter the fray.

"Truce?" Shadowman. exe offered.

"Truce nothing," Gyroman. exe grinned and offered his hand to the other navi. "I have an idea ..."

Shadowman. exe snorted in amusement and took the hand.

"Cavalry's coming!" a shout came from the distance as a recovered Roll. exe and Gutsman. exe charged in along with Magnetman. exe.

"Get ready!" Magnetman. exe floated up alongside Roll. exe as they closed in. "MAGNET FLASH!"

Cloudman. exe reared back from the flash of light the two navis produced as Gutsman. exe jumped into the air for a descending hammer blow from his fists. As this happened, Hub watched the former rivals fly up into the air, Shadowman. exe clinging to the rails of Gyroman. exe's helicopter form.

Shaking his head, Hub got ready to enter the fray himself as he felt the resonance of souls.

And promptly tripped over his own feet as he felt it a second time.

"Rgh..." Cloudman. exe growled as he recovered from Gutsman. exe's hammer blow. "Feel the wrath of my divine punishment!"

"No, you feel the wrath of ours!" Gyroman. exe and Shadowman. exe announced together as they both entered freefall straight for the darkloid. The former readying his Tornado Arm blasters while the latter manifested several giant shuriken.

"CROSSSP–"

"KAMIKAZE!"

Apollo whistled lowly at the sight. "Shuriken-laced whirlwind? Nice . The great Apollo is duly impressed and... Are you taking notes, brother?"

"I think it's been awhile since I gave 'dear old dad' a present..." the forge god grinned maliciously.

"Do let the predictive Apollo know when you plan to gift it so he can set up the cameras beforehand."

"Agh! Defeated...? It... cannot be...! But... hehehe... I don't think you'll... be making it out... alive...! Hahahahaha...!"

With that, the form of Cloudman. exe began to glow brightly with the sinister purple color of DarkPower.

"Magnet Barrier!"

"IronBody!"

"Sanctuary! Battlechip in, download!"

The electrical detonation formed like a massive lightning bolt and punched a hole in the thunderhead above, but otherwise was mostly absorbed by the hastily raised defenses.

Lan wiped sweat from his forehead as the darkness in the area of Scilab's net began dissipating rapidly with the removal of the darkloid maintaining it.

"Whew... commanding that many navis is tiring... And it feels like I'm forgetting something..."

Hub was in a mild state of shock as the dark miasma saturating the area dissipated. The events of Nebula's occupation of the net may have been proceeding in a strange mish-mash of both sets of conflicting memories with the inevitable results of his and Lan's changes mixed in; that Dex had joined Baryl and Colonel's team back on Oran and Mayl had joined Chaud and Protoman's was proof enough of that; but that had been not entirely unexpected.

The meeting with Dark Miyabi and Shadowman. exe at the park had been half-expected. That it was followed by Charlie and Gyroman. exe attacking Tesla and leading them on the wild goose chase from Oran to Scilab had been odd. The resulting fight between Shadowman. exe and Gyroman. exe that ended in the start of a joint mission to liberate Scilab had been surreal.

Yet somehow, between the more heavily fortified darkloid position in Scilab than either he or Lan recalled and the heated rivalry between the two mercenary navis, Hub had achieved a soul resonance with both Shadowman. exe and Gyroman. exe. That... had never happened before. The soul resonance had only ever happened between himself and one other navi at a time, both in current events and in his memories of other timelines, and he was lost in thought over the implications behind this new development.

So lost that he almost didn't hear Lan's warning.

"Hub! It's a trap!" Lan shouted just as the cloud of DarkPower appeared and went for him.

Had he really been paying attention, he could have dodged it. However, the moment it took him and the others to adjust to the sudden development was a moment too long. The dark cloud engulfed him and he heard Lan shouting as he lost consciousness.

"Well, damn..." Apollo swore as the success chances dropped by a whopping 50%.

Mayl sighted down the arrow at the hay targets in the distance and tried to clear her mind of anything except the target and Roll. exe. In cyberspace, Roll. exe was doing the same thing on the cyberspace archery range, only focusing on her connection to Mayl. When they were ready and in perfect sync, they would both fire their arrows.

Or at least that was the idea. As Mayl went to release hers, the connection with her navi twinged, throwing her aim off and sending the arrow wide. It had been like this since...

Since Megaman. exe had been taken by Nebula.

Roll. exe was worried about what was happening to him, and Mayl was worried about the effect it was having on Lan. The worry of each fed on the worry of the other when they synched up in a recursive feedback loop that inevitably destroyed any concentration they gained.

"I see you're still having trouble," Andou observed as she walked up, prompting Mayl to lower her bow and turn towards the young miko.

"I'm sorry, it's just..."

"I understand," Andou waved her off. "The pain of losing a friend is very powerful indeed. There is no shame in what you feel. But if you wish to aid your friend, you will need to focus past your pain. To turn what you feel into an aid for your focus rather than a hindrance."

"I know, but..."

"It is difficult," the voice of Stargirl. exe agreed. "When Andou restored me from the remaining data of Starman, I felt anger at the one who defeated my previous incarnation even though I only barely knew who he was and she felt anger at the ones who had deleted her former navi. It took us both time to move past that anger and work as one."

"But the both of you already work as one very well," Andou continued. "You simply must discover how to handle what you both feel and focus past it. It will be difficult, but I have faith in you both."

"Thanks..." Mayl smiled.

"That said, I was wondering if you would be willing to watch the shrine for a while?" Andou asked. "My cousin and her friends have found a way to infiltrate her island's network and–"

"Woooo!" the boisterous cheer from a somewhat heavyset man with a drill-shaped pompadour charged towards them.

"Hello Moliarty," Mayl turned and bowed in greeting.

"Didja hear?" the man wasted no time. "Mr. Press found a way into Lilly's home network! Scissor Island's gonna be liberated in no time! We're all going to charge in and give the bastards what-for! You coming?"

"Roll and I couldn't reliably hit the broad side of a barn right now," Mayl reluctantly admitted. "But I'm sure you all will do just fine. After all, you have Andou and Stargirl on your side!"

"Damn straight we do!"

"Ah, pardon me, ladies. I need to run a quick errand. I'll be back shortly. Hephaestus knows how to get ahold of me if there's an emergency. Good day to you."

Brynhildr, Eir, and Herfjötur were a bit worried. When Apollo had exited the inner office, they'd been expecting another round of bad pickup lines, self-inflating boasts, and not-really-veiled-at-all suggestions of possible intimate activity.

They hadn't been expecting the Olympian layabout to give the three of them a respectful nod and march out into the hall with business-like calm and demeanor.

"Was that really Apollo?" Herfjötur finally gave voice to what they were all thinking. "Where did the infamous Olympian beach bum go?"

"I have no idea, but I doubt it bodes well for the current activation attempt," Brynhildr replied to an agreeing nod from Eir.

"Focus!" Kaneda barked at his hefty student. "Anger can be a potent tool, but only when tightly controlled! You must rule your anger, and not let it rule you!"

"Easy for you to say..." Dex growled as he glared at the sandbag before him like it was personally responsible for everything that had gone wrong. "You didn't watch one of your best friends get swallowed up like..."

"The weakness of others is no excuse for your own failings! Your friend was unequal to the task before him and so you must–"

What Dex 'must' was drowned out in a bellow of rage as he turned and charged the older man in fury. His first punch was contemptuously caught in the older man's hand, as was the other one Dex tried to power through in his berserk fury. But Dex didn't stop even with both hands captured and launched himself in a rising headbutt that caught the man by surprise in the nose.

Dex's moment of triumph was short lived, as Mr. Kaneda responded almost instantly with a knee to Dex's stomach followed by a vicious series of blows that left the large boy groaning on the mat.

"And that is why you are yet unworthy," Mr. Kaneda snorted. "Weak operators make for weak navis and weakness is not tolerated by those who follow the way of the Fist."

"Why you..." Gutsman. exe's voice growled from Dex's PET. "Why don't you put yer money where yer mouth is in a netbattle! We'll pulverize ya, legendary Fist navi or no!"

"The weakest dogs still bark the loudest, it seems," the voice of Mr. Kaneda's legendary fighting navi snorted from the older man's PET.

"Yes," the man crossed his arms pointedly. "Which is why we've arranged for an interim trainer who may be more your speed. When she is finished with you, perhaps you will be ready to begin in earnest."

"Oh, stuff it 'uncle'," a woman's voice sneered from the doorway, prompting a recovering Dex to turn and look. "I only came because no one deserves having to put up with the self-righteous BS you call 'training'. There's a reason my sister and your son stopped speaking to you."

"T-Tamako?" Dex groaned out in pain and confusion as he looked at the woman, recognizing her as the aunt of Lan's friend Mamoru.

"Had my son and his wife done the sensible thing and–"

"I said stuff it , old man," Tamako growled while fingering her bladed hair clip threateningly. "I may not be able to beat you in a fair fight, but if you finish that sentence, I promise I will leave you less of a man..."

"Hmph..." Mr. Kaneda snorted disdainfully and turned away. "As you wish. The boy is your problem now."

With that, Mr. Kaneda left the room and pointedly shut the door behind him.

"W-what was that all...?" Dex grunted out as he tried to stand past his aching everything.

"Don't you worry about that now," Tamako moved to help Dex stand. "Just focus on healing, and then I'll be teaching you the way of the Fist in place of the idiot old man. Who knows? Maybe you'll be the one to finally put the stubborn old fart in his place."

Hephaestus worried as he examined the activation attempt for the umpteenth time, looking for any possible way to alleviate the current circumstances. DarkSouls were problematic things to begin with, which meant there was every possibility that one that sprouted within a looper could become a serious problem down the line.

Fortunately, there was a method of dealing with the issue preemptively called the Grima Patch. The particular patch prevented any manner of potentially dangerous entities from hitching a ride on a looper's code and becoming a looper themselves, provided the entity was a natural, and thus recognized, part of the Loop's code. What made the Grima Patch unique among such counter measures was that it could even lock out potentially dangerous entities from looping that were technically soul-bound to the looper in question, such as DarkSouls. The end result was that DarkSouls were unable to Loop at all, instead being limited to becoming Loop Aware when they manifested within an Awake looper. As a bonus, visiting loopers would be highly unlikely to keep their DarkSoul after a fused Loop.

Unfortunately, like most every bit of coding, there was a loophole. One that wasn't even worth mentioning most of the time, but in the current situation was like the fifty-ton pink elephant in the room. That loophole being that if Hub (or Lan for that matter) ended the activation attempt with a DarkSoul in control of their being, Yggdrasil would interpret that as their normal state and the DarkSoul would become the looping Hub (or Lan).

Hephaestus would sooner terminate the attempt himself than let that happen. Either to the Loops or to the Hikari twins.

Fortunately, the activation was far from over, and there was a good chance that Hub would recover. It would be painful and hard, given that the DarkSoul naturally possessed all the knowledge that Hub himself did. Including foreknowledge.

But that wasn't even the worst of it.

"How very interesting..." Dr. Regal pondered what his newest Darkloid had told him. How very interesting indeed ...

"It's all true, Doctor," Dark Megaman grinned widely. "This body heard the whole thing from a visitor from another universe in fact. Time is repeating itself across the entire multiverse, and this boy is one of the ones cherry-picked to remember these 'Loops'. If you could only see the vast store of information he has on the years to come..."

"I suppose it is fortunate then that I have you to enlighten me," Dr. Regal smiled darkly. "Now, tell me again about the events you saw in Megaman's memories. And do please spare no detail this time..."

Lan shot up in bed, panting, wondering if what he'd just seen had been some sort of vision or just a nightmare. It had been Hub... strapped to a table...

"Just a dream..." he told himself. He wasn't entirely sure if he believed it. It felt like... It felt like a part of his soul had been ripped out when Hub was abducted... Like there was no point in continuing...

"Lan's up in his room," Mrs. Hikari told her visitor. "He's been depressed for a few days, doesn't say much, doesn't get on the net at all, barely eats... I'm really worried about him."

"Don't worry, Mrs. Hikari," the diminutive girl smiled. "We'll have him back on his feet in no time."

He sat and listened in on the two as they discussed the current situation. He'd been observing the developing situation for a while now since Dr. Hikari had been abducted, wondering what his role in the current drama was to be.

"The boy needs a stern reminder of what's at stake," the older man stated. "His skills are too valuable to waste feeling sorry for himself."

"What he needs is a target," the younger figure, a boy in name only, shook his head. "Something to unleash his anger on instead of turning it inwards at himself."

"He needs some sense knocked into him," the man rebutted. "This is no time to be soft."

"He needs his drive back," the other argued. "And there's no one better to do it than us."

"I disagree. He needs discipline and a replacement for his lost navi." (44)

"On that last part, we can agree. Though he has far more experience with my navi than yours."

"He is nothing if not a fast learner."

Hmm... Perhaps he'd found his role after all.

"Oh, hey Yai... What's up?" Lan's morose tone drifted down the stairs to where Mrs. Hikari was listening.

"What's up?! What's up?! I'll tell you what's up! Glide's informed me that you aren't answering your messages and that Megaman seems to be missing! Dex and Mayl both confirmed it even if they won't tell me what the hell happened! And now I learn that you're just moping around feeling sorry for yourself?!"

"Look, Yai, you wouldn't understand... I–"

"I 'wouldn't understand', huh? Here! Let me show you my 'not understanding'!"

"Hey, wait! What are–"

A sound followed that Mrs. Hikari had typically only heard when her son rolled out of bed on accident.

"Geez! Yai, what was–"

"I'll tell you what I understand, Lan! I understand that if Megaman saw you sitting around feeling sorry for yourself like this, then he'd tell you to get up off your sorry butt and do something about it! So that's what you're going to do if I have to kick you into gear myself!"

"What–Ow! Hey! Cut it–Ow! Those hurt you–Ow! Stop kicking me in the shins alrea–OW!"

"I must say, I am surprised you came here of your own volition," Baryl noted as he took in Lan's presence in the command center. "We were about to send you a message summoning you."

"Let's just say I got a few swift kicks," Lan winced, resisting the urge to rub his sore shins.

"I see..." Baryl noted.

"Lan," Chaud began, "you are an invaluable asset to our teams and with Megaman's capture, you need a navi to operate. After much debate," Chaud shot Baryl a stern glare that the other team commander didn't acknowledge, "we've decided that the navi you will be operating will be–"

"Me," a voice cut in from the giant screen behind both team leaders. Lan looked up to see a face he'd not encountered for a while.

"Zero?" he blurted incredulously. (45)

"What are you doing here?" Chaud turned to glare at the viral navi hotly.

"I have just as much a stake in the return of Dr. Hikari as anyone," Zero. exe returned calmly. "After all, he is my registered NetOp."

"You're my dad's NetNavi?" Lan blinked in total astonishment. This he hadn't seen coming. Not by a long shot.

"He was kind enough to make the offer after we parted ways," Zero. exe informed him, ignoring the joint dirty looks from both Chaud and Baryl. "Though I see he has successfully ignored my advice to tell you about the arrangement."

"Dad's generally busy," Lan defended while rubbing his head sheepishly.

"I know exactly how busy he is," Zero. exe retorted. "I'm the one who helps with his experiments after all, along with managing his schedule. But you haven't said whether you will accept me as your navi in place of Megaman for the time being."

"Absolutely not," Baryl insisted, folding his arms resolutely.

"Agreed," Chaud mirrored the stance.

"Thanks Zero," Lan wiped a tear out of his eye as he prepared his PET. "I accept."

"Lan!" Chaud whipped around. "You can't be serious!"

"He's a virus!" Baryl agreed. "A possible agent of Nebula!"

"He's a friend and I trust him," Lan said as his PET chimed the completion of Zero. exe's data transfer. "And besides, he's the one navi I know my brother won't be prepared for."

"Fools!" the darkloid holding Scissor island boasted. "You cannot best the one who flies free under the dark sky!"

"That's... nngh... what you think..." Windman. exe grunted as he strained to try and control the dark tempest corrupting the temple's network beyond recognition. But try as he might, the winds did not heed his divine command.

"As if your pathetic winds are a match for those of darkness!" the darkloid's laugh was carried by the howling winds rather than being drowned out by them. "Mewling little pretend god! You and your allies have no power here! Return from whence you came!"

"I'm... losing... my..." Stargirl. exe strained to hold on to Groundman. exe to avoid being blown away by the dark tempest.

"No you're not ," Dustman. exe and Groundman. exe insisted together, continuing to use their larger and heavier navi bodies to guard their three teammates against the worst of the storm.

Three, you wonder? Well, the last was a recent addition. Picked up just outside the entrance to the temple's network worrying about the disappearance of his NetOp and the man's son. The navi without whom, they might not have even gotten inside. A navi by the name of Hatman. exe.

"Yes! Stand together in false bonds of friendship!" the darkloid laughed. "Make yourselves all the bigger a target for me! Lark Drive!"

The avian-themed darkloid dived suddenly out of the tempest winds, scything straight for the team known to themselves as the Wind

Followers, intending to cut them down all in one swoop.

"Hat Trick!" Hatman. exe called out, and the group of navis was suddenly replaced by a line of top hats. The darkloid tore through two of them with ease even as the others were blown away to reveal... nothing.

"A pretty trick!" the now-angry darkloid screeched as he returned to the concealing winds. "But they will not save you from me forever! None can outrun Larkman for long!"

"How does End Area look Zero?" Lan asked. Chaud and Baryl, along with their navis, had argued about the arrangement for a good long while, but they'd accepted it in the end. Baryl more reluctantly than Chaud. Lan suspected his own stubbornness had played a role in that, along with the fact that there were still missions that needed to be carried out no matter what anyone's personal feelings on the matter were.

He'd had to resist the urge to ask Zero. exe to take a picture of Baryl though. While Chaud had just settled into his 'I hope you know what you're doing' look, Baryl's face looked like he'd been sucking on a lemon for the entire mission briefing.

"Like someone's been overclocking it way past intended parameters," Zero. exe reported as he looked upon the angrily red cyberscape. From the floor, to the walls, to the wallpaper background, to the air itself . And this wasn't even Nebula's stronghold area.

Lan watched on as Zero. exe walked through the eerily empty cyberscape, towards where they could both feel the source of DarkPower radiating. Until suddenly Zero. exe stopped cold and ignited his Z-Saber. Lan's breath hitched, knowing what was coming.

"Show yourself," the former virus demanded.

"Well, well," a heart-breakingly familiar voice sounded as the cyberscape rippled and a dark portal formed from nothing to produce exactly who Lan was expecting, and exactly who he'd been hoping it wouldn't be. Dark Megaman, in all his sinister glory. "I must say, this is a surprise. Zero."

"Megaman," Zero. exe glared at the figure, neither moving to attack nor stand down in the slightest.

"I am Dark Megaman," the twisted parody of Lan's brother grinned madly, "but Lan already knew that didn't he? Master Regal has placed me in charge of this area in preparation for your coming, over the... rather vocal protests of its former commander. But I must say... I was expecting Protoman... Or even Colonel! What an unexpected twist of events this is! I wonder though... Is dear old Zero prepared to do what's necessary?"

"Try me and find out," the viral navi glared stoically.

"Hehehe..." Dark Megaman grinned. "So ready to cut down the life of the one who saved you?"

"Ready to repay a debt in kind," Zero. exe replied without hesitation.

"Now, now... You both know you can't be soft when you're up against Nebula! Hahahaha–hrrgh!"

Dark Megaman's body shuddered violently and he clutched his chest.

"Z...Zero..." Hub's voice struggled from within, "hurry... and..."

"Hyaah!" Dark Megaman's body pulsed with DarkPower and he regained control. "Hehehe... right on schedule even..."

"What?" Zero. exe blinked in confusion.

"That's right, Lan... No easy way out for you two this time... I've got dear old Hub right where we want him!"

Three Nebula HeelNavis appeared between the two right then.

"Now, if you'll excuse me, I've got preparations to make and plans to adjust. Have fun you two!" Dark Megaman taunted before vanishing the same way he'd appeared.

"Kehehehe..." one of the HeelNavis chuckled. "Leave it to us. This pathetic navi don't stand a chance..."

"You will need far more than you've brought to stand a chance," Zero. exe declared.

"What makes you think there isn't a lot more of us?" the Nebula navis chuckled as more appeared in Zero. exe's way. Over a dozen in fact.

"A light warm-up," Zero. exe stated confidently. "You would need hundreds to even give me pause."

"Oh?" the Nebula navis didn't seem intimidated. "That so? Well..."

More Nebula navis appeared along the path to Nebula's holdings, all generic navis of varying types, all individually weak, but all steeped in DarkPower and all completely unafraid of how many might fall to their foe's blade.

"...hundreds we got." (46)

"Lan, I believe a tactical reassessment is in order," Zero. exe advised.

"Yeah, I think you're right..." Lan agreed with a gulp. That was a lot more navis than he recalled.

"Dust Bre–ARGH!" Dustman. exe screamed as he was struck, before falling over, body sparking.

"Hahahahaha!" Larkman. exe's laugh echoed along the tempest winds. "One down! Soon there will be nowhere left for you to run!"

"No," Groundman. exe growled, bracing his treads against the dark storm as he took aim at the guardian beast before him, "soon there will be nowhere for you to run! Rock! Crush!"

"Lark Cutter!"

The bird-shaped projectile carved through Groundman. exe, but the drill-themed navi didn't even pause as his treads revved ever faster and his drills whined at higher and higher pitches as they spun.

"BREAKER!"

The guardian virus perished with a great cry as the last of the area's Dark Holes was sealed with its demise and the dark tempest they fueled slowly became still dead air.

"Lan..." Zero. exe's voice spoke up moments after Lan had jacked him out. "Would you care to explain why Dark Megaman said 'right on schedule' when Megaman tried to break through his control?"

"It's... complicated..." Lan hedged.

"I see... Would this manner of complicated be why he was expecting Protoman or Colonel in my place? An expectation that would only have made sense if one was privvy to the debate between Chaud and Baryl earlier?"

Lan remained silent as Zero. exe waited patiently for an explanation, until–

Ring-ring-ring!

"Looks like a request from Chaud asking us to report in," Zero. exe sighed. "I suppose this will have to wait."

"No..." Lan replied. "Ask him to meet us somewhere. I... I think he needs to know this too..."

"I... I've decided... to give you my blood!"

Django just looked at the turned back and carefully exposed neck of his girlfriend and sighed.

"No, Lita..."

"Please?"

"Lita, I'm not going to bite you."

"Not even a teeny little nip?"

" No , Lita..." Django facepalmed.

"Well, poo..." Lita pouted, folding her arms. "How am I supposed to have an excuse for turning into a sexy werewolf girl and joining you on your immortal hunts this Loop, then?" (47)

"Why not use the 'mysterious Earth Maiden powers' excuse like you usually do?" Django folded his arms right back.

"Because that's not nearly as fun as you biting me," Lita insisted with a blush.

Django resisted the urge to pinch his nose. This wasn't the first time they'd had this argument after all. On the one hand, the fact that Lita didn't mind Django's half-vampire nature that he'd picked up many times over was heartwarming. On the other, she seemed to enjoy it a little too much at times.

"Lita..." Django trailed off, really not sure what he wanted to say to her.

"Well, I suppose I could always go the plant mistress route if you prefer..." Lita trailed off before doing a little twirl of magic, resulting in...

"GA–" Django slapped his hands over both his nose and eyes while trying to barricade any possible view of his girlfriend from the door with his body. "Put some clothes on!" he hissed in as loud a whisper as he dared.

"I'll have you know this is appropriate for a girl with plant powers and is perfectly modest!" Lita huffed.

"Only in the most liberal of societies on a technicality !" Django hissed back, resisting the urge to peek through his fingers.

"He's right," a new voice added. "The vines and leaves look is less 'battle maiden' and more 'illicit meeting in a secluded summer glen'. Though I do admit it's a good look for you. Seriously, Django, you shouldn't be ashamed to see your girlfriend like this, especially when she's doing it just for you."

"..."

"EEEEEEEKK!" Lita screamed and Django leaped between her and the new voice, readying both his Gun Del Sol and his Sol de Vice in case it was...

"Damnit Apollo..." Django glared at the smirking face of his Admin, "do you know how to knock ?!"

"Yes, but this was more amusing," Apollo replied in a matter-of-fact way that set alarms blaring in Django's head. The solar boy glanced from the Admin to his girlfriend who was hiding behind him and doing her best to cover up with her arms, hands, and the vines that pretended at being a garment. A wave of Apollo's arm and she was suddenly dressed in a fine priestess robe of blues and greens with wisps of white. "I hope that will do as an apology, Lita, but pro tip? In the future if you're going to tease your boyfriend by threatening to wear something out in public, make sure you're actually willing to wear it out in public."

"What's this about, Apollo?" Django asked. "If you're dropping the act, it has to be important."

"Right to the point, eh? Well, it's about the new guys you met recently actually."

"Hub and Lan?"

"Got it in one," the sun god nodded. "You see, you have a bit more in common with them than you might think. And Hub's gonna need your guidance when you meet again."

"Well, I'll be sure to help however I can next Loop we cross paths, but–"

"Not next Loop, this Loop," Apollo corrected. "And Hub'll be coming here this time."

"...I thought you said the other points weren't stable enough?" Django's face hardened as Lita rested a hand on his shoulder.

"I did," Apollo admitted, "but recent events over in their Loop just made the kind of guidance you can offer that much more critical to them getting through their activation in one piece."

Django remained quiet, before performing a gesture with his hand, his fingertips becoming claws, his skin turning a bluish gray, his clothes turning black and dark shades, his canines elongating, his goggles elongating into a beak-like mask, and his crimson scarf flaring like a pair of wings. His Dark Trance form activated by tapping his half-vampire nature. He felt Lita's comforting embrace from behind as he spoke. "This is about the power of darkness, isn't it...?"

"Indeed it is," Apollo admitted. "As we speak, your friend Hub is trapped in its embrace. I foresee him breaking out of it, thanks in no small part to Lan and their very determined mutual friends, but it's a part of him now. He will need guidance in how to deal with it, how to resist its seductive whispers, and even... how to use it if he's to come out the other side of all of this in one piece."

"What do I–?"

"Whatever you think best," Apollo interrupted. "I don't always foresee details, and in this case I foresee precious few. I don't know exactly how, I just know that your guidance is going to be critical to Hub and Lan getting through their activation intact. Which is why I've arranged for both of the upcoming crossing points to be possible despite any potential problems. Plus... I did a little tweaking for the next one..."

"What did you do?" Django groaned.

"That's a surprise," Apollo winked. "Any more questions?"

"Yes, actually," Lita spoke up. "It's... I've been wondering for a while... but..."

"Yes?"

"Well..." Lita took a deep breath. "I looked up mythology last time we were in the Hub and most of the immortals and other enemies Django faces have names similar to figures from Norse mythology... But..."

"You're Greek," Django nodded.

"Honestly surprised this didn't come up sooner," Apollo shrugged. "Yeah, the Aesir were pretty hot to have you on their ticket, but, well, I had a vision that helping run this place would be a hoot and a half and made sure to beat them to it." Apollo then grinned at the memory. "Man, was Frey mad when I got the job." (48)

"Hmm..." Chaud laced his fingers together as he sat in the currently empty Den Dome, digesting what Lan had told him. "As fantastic as it sounds, it fits with what I've observed about you."

"What?" Lan blinked in astonishment. "Really?"

"Yes," Chaud reiterated. "Leaving aside the fantastic tale about meeting someone from a fictional universe, having your consciousness sent back in time would explain your exceptionally high level of foresight regarding certain events. You have literally done this before."

"Not exactly like this," Lan admitted.

"Of course," Chaud acknowledged. "The more you change events, the greater they diverge from what you remember. Nebula and the WWW's plans have likely only remained largely the same because they have been in motion for much longer than your alterations could affect."

"So, you are not going to conclude that Lan is crazy?" Zero. exe asked for clarification from Lan's PET.

"Of course not," Chaud scoffed, waiting for the sigh of relief he knew the other boy would let out before continuing. "Lan's always been crazy."

"Ye–HEY!"

Chaud just smirked as Lan fumed at the dig, allowing himself a few moments enjoyment before he had to be serious again.

"But this also means that it's safe to assume that Dr. Regal and Nebula now know everything about the previous future that you and Megaman knew," Chaud's tone turned grim.

"Future s ," Lan corrected him. "Our memories about events have been conflicting lately. One set has you leading a team, the other set has Baryl, but neither set has both."

"Duly noted," Chaud accepted the correction. "It still means that we should be prepared to hit countermeasures designed for each member of the team, including those that haven't joined yet..."

"Release the NetOps you've taken hostage at once!" the spandex-wearing clod who called himself Commander Beef demanded of the Nebula agent.

"Where the hell did you guys crawl out of?!" he demanded, looking them over. The mildly overweight Commander Beef in his budget spandex and sentai helmet, the masked ladies Black Rose and Misteriyu, even that Racer X kid in his yellow and black tracksuit masked with racing helmet and goggles.

"It doesn't matter, foul villain!" the Racer X kid – seriously, who the hell did these guys think they were?! – accused. "Surrender and face justice!"

"Like hell, you litt–"

"Dmitri," a voice cut into the Nebula agent's headset.

"Yes, Dr. Regal?" he whispered back, causing the self-styled superheroes to tense up.

"I have a new assignment for you."

"I'm kind of under attack at the moment, boss, so–"

A door behind him crashed as it was knocked off its hinges and he turned to see a tall straight-backed man in a train conductor's uniform and a mask, and holding a rather large pocketwatch, stroll in.

"Another one?!"

"The Iron Countryman reports successful rescue of the hostages, Commander Beef! Operation: Chameleon Capture proceeding on schedule!" the newcomer saluted and placed his oversized pocketwatch back in his pocket in a single motion.

"It sounds as if your current mission is a loss," Dr. Regal stated dryly over the man's helmet. "Just as well, this new mission is of far greater importance. Escape and contact me when you are secure."

"...Damnit!" the Nebula Agent known as Dimitri pulled out several smoke bombs and threw them.

"...and I have to admit that Zero may very well be our most valuable asset in the coming fight," Chaud sighed, "given that he's the navi whose abilities you and Megaman knew the least about."

"Personally," Protoman. exe piped up from Chaud's PET, "I'm wondering why you're telling us all this now. I doubt you were planning to. And why just us and not Baryl and Colonel?"

Chaud raised an eyebrow to support the inquiry, locking his gaze on Lan and making the other boy sweat.

"Okay... yeah... If we could have avoided Dr. Regal learning about the whole time travel and loop thing, then... you're right, we'd have kept quiet. I probably should have told Zero immediately after he agreed to be my temporary netnavi, but I couldn't even try to hide it after Dark Megaman blew the secret right in front of him. As for you two, I trust you guys completely, and..."

"Are you saying there's a reason not to trust Baryl and Colonel?" Chaud seemed surprised.

"NO!" Lan denied quickly. "No! At least, not while we're fighting Nebula... And so much is already different that I can't even be sure that what happened after that the first time for me even will anymore, so..."

"Right," Chaud nodded, "no judging people for a crime they might not even commit."

"Yeah, no, what I meant was that... in one of the future missions we'll be running, there's going to be an ambush, like the one that got Hub. First time around, it got either Protoman or Colonel."

"And you want us to be on the watch so neither are captured."

Lan looked pained at the assumption. "I'm... not sure that'll be possible. You see... If I remember correctly... The attack wasn't on either of them, it was on someone else and they jumped to protect only to be captured in the other's place. No time to think, just react."

Chaud was silent for several moments.

"I am sorry, Lord Chaud," Protoman. exe broke the silence, "but I would not act differently even if you ordered me to."

"Nor would I even consider doing so," Chaud sighed in acceptance. "Same with Baryl and Colonel."

"We got them back in the end," Lan said, "just..."

"Let me guess," Chaud smirked. "Colonel had to help save Protoman in one set of events and vice versa in the other."

"Yeah..."

"Do not forget that this time I am a part of events," Zero. exe reminded them. "I shall be willing to aid in the recovery of either Protoman or Colonel should the time come, even both if necessary."

"The sentiment is appreciated," Chaud nodded. "However, we still need to figure out how to deal with an army of Nebula mooks guarding their holdings in End Area. That many is best dealt with by a navi who has wide area of effect abilities. We need a crowd-clearer, not navis more suited to single strong opponents or small groups. Though I have a suspicion you already know where we can find one."

"That depends on whether or not you had a mission for me regarding a certain cruise ship named the Queen Bohemia and a party hosted by Ubercorp," Lan smirked.

Chaud blinked rapidly. "Lan... how much have you been suppressing your need to talk about this to others?"

"You have no idea!"

"Again!" Tamako yelled to the two boys she was training.

Two, one might wonder? Dex had been a bit surprised to learn that he wasn't the only one Tamako was training. However, the other trainee wasn't learning the art of the fist.

He was learning the art of the blade.

"HAAAH!"

Thunk

Just... not a sword.

No, the boy Dingo, from the island of Jawaii and apparently good enough with his navi Tomahawkman. exe to compete in the Red Sun tournament even if he had lost in the first round, was learning the art of the axe. He was apparently referred to Tamako by a guy named Raoul, which made Dex wonder how a top Netopian netbattler knew Tamako. Regardless, Dex thought Dingo was a cool guy, even if he did have a weird habit of using his axe, or 'tomahawk' Dingo insisted it was called, to help him make decisions.

As for Tamako's training, Dex thought she was way better than the old man once you got past the fact that she wasn't as famous. She had even higher standards if that was possible, but she knew which buttons to push to work him harder and which subjects were taboo.

Like suggesting someone was weak just because they got ambushed once.

"And stop!" Tamako called out, surprising both of them. It wasn't near time to end training for the day. They both looked over to where she was watching over their PETs to see her holding up Dex's. "Dex, your boss has a mission for you!"

"A mission?" Dingo blinked. "What? Are you some kind of secret agent or something?"

"Or something," Tamako shot back. "Best not ask questions."

"Actually..." Dex thought for a bit, looking at Dingo as he accepted his PET from Tamako, "Hey Baryl, this mission you got... think there's room for one more?"

"You're nothing compared to Nebula!" Larkman. exe screeched as he swiped past Hatman. exe, knocking the magician navi over, "NOTHING! The free skies of darkness shall not be overcome!"

"Your foul skies shall give way to clear ones this day!" Windman. exe bellowed with divine confidence as he unleashed several Round Tornados at the darkloid. "I, the god of wind so decree it!"

"Your decrees are worth less than you, false god!" Larkman. exe laughed as he evaded the attack. "Lark Drive!"

"Star Arrow!"

The stellar energy bolt from Stargirl. exe pierced Larkman. exe's chest as he dove forwards, causing the darkloid's eyes to widen in surprise as his attack aborted. Below, a giant card flipped over to reveal an image of an explosion before it vanished and just such an explosion engulfed Larkman. exe. Without so much as a moment to recover, he was beset by a storm of digital birds that flew and cut like arrows, carving him to ribbons.

The three navis still standing watched as the Darkloid convulsed in pain before his body erupted in a detonation of DarkPower that left nothing behind, the taint of the area melting away with his demise to leave a much cleaner temple net through which blew a much kinder wind once more.

"Scissor Island's Temple of Wind has been reclaimed," Windman. exe spoke with audible relief and gratitude. "Thank you my friends. All of you."

"Heh... Anytime..." Dustman. exe limped forwards, he and the damaged Groundman. exe leaning on each other. "Someone's gotta... clean up the... messes these... Nebula guys made... might as... well be us..."

"I only wish we could have found out what happened to my NetOp and his son..." Hatman. exe lamented.

"We'll start asking around now that the island's free again," Stargirl. exe assured the magician navi. "Someone has to have seen something."

Hephaestus poked at his screen as he examined the coding around Scissor Island and its 'Temple of Wind'. Why was there an aspiring music conductor wearing a green tunic and a floppy hat living there?

"You guys got Scissor Island back?" Mayl grinned. "That's great! I'm so glad to hear it! I–Hold on, I've got another call coming in... Hello? Chaud? What is this about?"

"Raika," the young prodigy's superior barked to get the lieutenant's attention.

"Sir!" the best young net operative the Sharo military had snapped to attention.

"Get ready to move out. We just got word that Dmitri's been spotted in Electopia working for Nebula. I assume you understand what your mission is?"

Raika blinked and his militantly stoic expression twitched imperceptibly towards an expectant grin. "Loud and clear, sir."

"Thank you again for saving us," the stage magician informally known as Mr. Hat thanked the group who had come to everyone's rescue. He was especially grateful since the kidnapped individuals included his own son.

"All in a day's work, for the Agents of BEEF!" Commander Beef laughed, causing several of the former prisoners to sweatdrop.

"And thank you for helping us track him down," Black Rose turned to the man that had not only spotted the Nebula agent in his latest stolen identity kidnapping attempt; a trick that had kept the police in many jurisdictions busy chasing false leads; but had helped them crack the security keeping them prisoner.

"It was the least I could do, huh," the man rubbed the back of his head sheepishly. "Dmitri and I have something of a history, huh..."

"Chargeman, take a message," Iron Countryman dictated where he was standing with a group of Netopians that had been held captive longer than most, and been taken farther from their homes. Among the group was a grim-faced Electopian woman and a short white-haired man. "To the Thunder Tribe from the Agents of BEEF: We've located the missing NetOps of two of your members and will be arranging their return as soon as we can. Unfortunately, while his captives were rescued, the kidnapper managed to escape and remains at large..."

"This is your team?" Dingo whistled as he took in the figures of Princess Pride, Dark Miyabi, and Baryl in the middle of Scilab's command center. "Nice, very nice."

"Dingo Stormchaser," Baryl nodded. "I remember you and your navi from the Red Sun tournament."

"Heh..." Dingo rubbed his head sheepishly. "Well, you did a lot better than I did..."

"Regardless, you competed in a world-class tournament and this team is honored to have you. As you may know, Nebula has claimed several areas of the net across the globe, cutting off vital communications and stifling crucial services in many areas while they plan to expand their holdings. We are one of many strike teams dedicated to liberating these areas from Nebula's control and preventing their organization from claiming or reclaiming additional territory. Perhaps it is fortune that you were just recruited because our latest mission involves this:"

Baryl brought up the image of a luxury cruise liner on the display behind him.

"The S. S. Anne, a luxury passenger liner set to sail for Jawaii tomorrow. Our intel indicates that a powerful Nebula agent, a darkloid no less, has infiltrated the S. S. Anne's onboard network and intends to claim it as Nebula territory so they can use it as a mobile staging area to attack any port city network they come within range of while remaining able to disconnect themselves to prevent retaliation. Our mission is to board the ship with the other passengers and find the darkloid before their plan can be carried out or, if all else fails, liberate the ship's onboard network afterwards."

"So we know who the darkloid is?" Dex asked.

"As a matter of fact, we do," Baryl nodded, bringing up a new image. "The darkloid in question was recently forced to abandon his post in End Area to undertake this mission."

"Isn't..." Dex recognized the image from Lan's descriptions even as Dingo's wood-type navi spouted a few choice swear words. "Isn't that one of Mr. Match's navis?"

"He was," Baryl confirmed, "but Flameman, like several of the WWW's last crew, was customized with black market programs crafted by Nebula specifically to influence the navi with DarkPower, driving them mad and eventually into Nebula's clutches. Many ordinary operators have lost navis to Nebula after using a fraction of the kind of dark programs that were installed in Flameman. So each of you remember to bring a good folder of Aqua chips for the mission."

Hephaestus stared at the screen some more. He knew he'd heard the name S. S. Anne somewhere before...

"Oh, you need my invite to Ubercorp's party on the Queen Bohemia? Sure, Lan! Baryl kind of has us all headed out on a mission tomorrow, so I couldn't use it anyway. Plus, I'm not one for such parties in the first place. In any case, I hope you have fun!"

Lan shook his head. Princess Pride had been all too happy to give him her invite to Ubercorp's unveiling party aboard the Queen Bohemia.

"Man, that is one heck of a ship," Lan observed from the docks. Sure he had no less than two sets of memories aboard the thing in his head, but that failed to make it any less impressive.

"It is, isn't it?" a familiar and excited voice sounded from behind him. Turning around, he spotted about the last person he'd expected on this mission.

"Mayl?" he blinked in total confusion. "What are you doing here? And where did you get that dress?"

"Chaud thought you could use some backup if things went south," Mayl told him as she sauntered closer in the form-hugging Choinese number that left no doubt she was beginning to mature as a female, holding up her own invitation. "And Tesla thought you could use a date if they didn't. Besides, Dex is off with Colonel's team and some new hotshot recruit from Jawaii on their own mission, Yai's off somewhere with her family and my new friends from the shrine are all sleeping off a hangover after Lilly spiked the celebratory punch by accident."

Lan decided not to ask about that last bit.

"We should get on board quickly so we can get Lan into his suit," Roll. exe piped up before addressing Lan's PET. "Nice to meet you, Zero!"

"Wait, suit?" Lan blinked in confusion.

"A pleasure to meet you both miss Mayl, miss Roll," Zero. exe's voice chimed in from his PET. "I have just confirmed with the ship that a suit in Lan's size is awaiting him on board courtesy of Princess Pride. There should be plenty of time to get changed for the event before it begins."

'Well,' Lan thought as Mayl grabbed his arm and dragged him to the gangway so they could board, 'this could prove interesting.'

"But, sssir!" the Nebula agent hissed into his PET.

" No , and that's an order ," the voice of Dark Megaman growled back. "You are to take no action regarding the booster program or the ship itself until further notice. There is another thief onboard the Queen Bohemia right now, and–"

Dark Megaman's voice cut off as he spotted the sight of Lan and Mayl over the Nebula agent's shoulder, resplendent in a cut-to-fit suit that Lan was tugging nervously at the collar of and a form-fitting Choinese dress that hugged Mayl's developing curves, and felt the soul of Hub surge with a pure joy that nearly crippled him. But he forced it back down with a vengeance and glared at the innocent Nebula agent with unrestricted hate.

"B-b-b-bossssss..." the man gulped.

"You are to stay out of sight and do nothing to call attention to yourself," Dark Megaman sneered at the quivering man. "Observe everything and stay to the shadows. The other thief will do most of the work in stealing the booster program and will serve to keep official agents onboard distracted. They will work to recover the booster program and you will let them. Then, and only then, will you do exactly as I tell you."

"Y-yesss, bossssss..."

"Good, now if you'll excuse me, there's another plan I'm overseeing today."

Dex let himself fall onto the bed of the interior room with a sigh. "Oh, man! Now this is living!"

Sure, Yai would find it substandard, but then her family probably owned three boats just like this one or something.

"It is a decadent sin," Dingo insisted. "An affront to pure and honest living in harmony with nature."

The boy's indignity was somewhat undercut by the way he was mirroring Dex's contentment, sprawling out on his own bed in the double room.

"We're going to have to do so much training to make up for this when we get back," Dex observed. "Laps, reps, sitting under the waterfall, all of it."

"So worth it," Dingo agreed.

"What do we do first? Pool, buffet, or netbattle machine?"

The two boys looked at each other and grinned in unison.

"All of the above!"

"I still think that guy looked suspicious," Lan grumbled as he let Mayl drag him out onto the deck.

"And I think he was just probably getting chewed out by his boss," Mayl insisted.

"Yeah, his Nebula boss, perhaps."

"And if you're right and he pulls something, we'll both go running to stop him," Mayl told him, getting an odd look from Lan. "What? Did you think this dress was cut high just to show off my legs?"

"Er..." Lan blushed to laughter from both of their PETs.

"Welcome!" a man in uniform greeted them as they stepped out on deck. "Good to have you aboard the Queen Bohemia! We've got a number of fun events before the main party begins! In a short while we'll be starting free netbattles, the captain is currently entertaining visitors on the bridge if you care to stop by for a chat, and and we also have a mystery stamp rally going on!"

"That sounds fun!" Mayl perked up.

"Well, then!" the man smiled. "Allow me to give you a stamp book with the clues so you can start finding them all and earn a nifty prize!"

The S. S. Anne was underway. Guests had stowed their luggage, many had begun milling about on deck and exploring their options for entertainment, and the ship was already a few hours out from port. And two particular individuals were in their shared room, doing precisely none of the things one might expect a grown and unrelated man and woman sharing a room on a cruise ship to be doing behind closed doors.

"So," Princess Pride spoke to Baryl as the two sat on their separated, by request, beds, "what's the plan?"

"Dark Miyabi has joined the ship's staff to look for possible agents, as it is doubtful that a navi as aggressive as Flameman will be able to infiltrate a system like this ship's with any degree of restraint or subtlety. If he's on board, then he has the aid of a NetOp."

"Agreed," Princess Pride nodded, "and I'm guessing this NetOp could be anyone among the guests or crew, correct?"

"That is the assumption. We will need to be on the lookout for any suspoicious activity at all ti–"

Baryl cut off suddenly and held up a hand as he turned towards the cabin door. Shuffling footsteps could be heard stopping just outside, followed by a muffled voice.

"This the room?"

"Yeah, this is the where the boss said they were," another answered.

"Okay, let's do this then."

The proclamation was followed by a series of clicking sounds that had Baryl's eyes widening before the cabin was beset by gunfire.

Dex and Dingo had drawn a huge crowd of people around the poolside netbattle machine to watch the two try to netbattle each other while operating with only one hand and eating with the other, the battle pausing so the respective NetOp having to swim a lap in the pool every time Gutsman. exe or Tomahawkman. exe took a solid blow from the other before resuming again.

It was wild.

It was ridiculous.

It was surprisingly skillful at times.

There were also a fair number of cross-counters, which always resulted in an impromptu one-lap swimming race by the boys, to the cheers of the crowd. And their navis.

"Dex! Dex! Dex! Dex! Dex! Dex!"

"Dingo! Dingo! Dingo!"

"Guts! Guts! Guts! Guts! Guts! Guts!"

"To-ma-hawk! To-ma-hawk!"

"AAIIIEEEEEE!"

The entire crowd froze and turned as one towards the scream to see a group of men walk out onto the deck holding guns before one fired a pistol into the air.

Bang-bang-bang

A lot of passengers screamed, many dropped to the ground, a bunch started running, and a few even pulled out guns of their own and joined the attackers.

And at some point in the confusion, Dex and Dingo had managed to jack their navis out and slip away.

Dark Miyabi stood over the unconscious Nebula agent and debated his options. Once the ship had gotten a few hours out, a very literal mutiny had started among the crew, with armed Nebula agents revealing themselves and offering a very simple choice to the rest: surrender peacefully or die.

He hadn't stuck around to hear the rest of the crew's answers. He had a mission, and it had just gotten a lot harder...

Baryl lay on the carpet clutching his bleeding arm, his dive to the floor only mostly avoiding the surprise attack and unfortunately leaving him vulnerable to the Nebula agents that entered the cabin using what had to be a staff key. They were certainly being brazen about this, which did not bode well for the mission. They didn't fear knowledge of their actions among the ship, nor did they likely think anything could be done about it.

They also didn't see the uninjured Princess Pride hiding behind the wall until her foot collided with the first agent's face, sending him stumbling back into his partner who had stood far too close and tripping them both. The judicious use of the cabin's chair pinned them in place and prevented retaliation with their guns, and in under a minute, the princess of Creamland had the two Nebula agents disarmed, unconscious, and tied up in the cramped cabin shower stall.

Baryl had taken the opportunity field-dress his wound, and helped Pride with the last part.

"We can't stay here," he said as he shouldered one of the automatic rifles that the agents had been carrying, Princess pride doing the same with the other. "We need to find a safe place to assess the situation."

"We also need to find the others," Pride insisted, and Baryl decided to debate the point later when they actually had the luxury.

"What's going on?"

"I don't know! Try jacking into the ship's network, maybe they know what's up?"

"Good idea! Jack in–"

" FoR tHe GlOrY of NeBuLa! "

"What the–?! What's wrong with my navi?!"

"I knew those customizer programs that guy was handing out were shady! 'Compliments of the cruise line' my ass!"

"Oh god... the ship is under attack, isn't it...? Where are our kids?!"

"What the hell is the hold up?"

"Apparently the captain is sharper than he looks. He managed to take out our agents on the bridge crew, seal the room, and lock us out. I think he's going to try and turn the ship around and make for port."

"That's a problem then, especially with how long the ritual's taking this far removed from the Murkland portal. Okay, we're going to have to do this the hard way. You three go to the engine room and make sure it's secure. Deal with any troublemakers you have to. The rest of you start rounding up passengers."

Dark Miyabi remained still around a corner, unheard and unseen by the group of Nebula agents, attempting to decide which task was the more important. After a moment's deliberation, he decided to follow the group headed towards the engine room.

"Okay, I think we lost them," Dex huffed after having rushed down and up stairs and across corridors until he really wasn't all that sure where on the ship he and Dingo even were.

"I don't think they saw us leave in the first place, but yeah," Dingo steadied himself as well, keeping his voice down just in case he was wrong.

"Okay, you brats, line up against the wall and don't move."

Dex and Dingo froze and looked behind them to see... an open door. With muffled sniffles and sobs emanating from the room beyond. The plaque outside labeled it one of the places on the ship designed for young children.

Dex and Dingo exchanged looks, before Dingo pulled out the case he'd been carrying strapped to his side ever since boarding, even when swimming earlier, the one Baryl had to talk to security for an hour before Dingo was allowed to keep it, and opened it to reveal his axe.

"Oh, tomahawk of my ancestors," Dingo whispered as he grasped the handle and held the weapon before him like a divining rod, "guide me to the proper COURSE OF ACTION!"

"What the–?!" the Nebula agent in the room turned at the sudden yell to see Dingo dash past the doorway and throw his tomahawk blind. And straight at him. The sight of a whirling axe headed for his face induced a panic and he brought up his automatic rifle to block rather than trying to dodge or counterattack. The tomahawk clanged loudly against the firearm and drove it into the Nebula agent's face, disorienting him for a moment.

Just long enough for Dex to charge in with a "YAAAAAAAHHH!" and bury his right fist in the man's stomach, driving the air from his lungs and causing him to drop the rifle from reflex. The left cross he followed with sent the man to the floor where he moaned and went limp.

'I'madeadman,I'madeadman...' Dex chanted in his head, expecting any second that the man's partner would start shooting and he'd become a great deal more holey than he'd like. It took a couple of seconds of frantically looking for where certain death was coming from before he realized that the Nebula agent was alone. By that time, Dingo had entered the room, closed the door, locked it, and jammed it shut with a chair for good measure.

Dex looked down at the gun resting at his feet and promptly shoved it with his foot until it slid under a desk out of sight before looking around for material to tie the man up with.

"Well, that was rather quick," the crew member congratulated both Lan and Mayl on their completion of the stamp rally, which had been a fair bit more than just the three Lan recalled.

"We'd have been faster, but we took some time to talk with the captain when we got the wheel stamp," Mayl admitted.

"Did you now?" the crew member looked impressed. "Well, you've certainly earned this prize, then!" he beamed, handing them both a chip. Lan's eyes widened as he confirmed that the chips were DjangoSP navi chips.

"Whoa..."

"You're the fastest to finish the stamp rally, so I think a bit of a better prize is in order, yeah?" the man winked. "In any case, the free netbattles are about to start with a special opponent just for this cruise."

Lan turned to see a large heavyset man wearing a dark apron over a red and white shirt, heavy boots and pants, and with a white bandanna wrapped around his head that had a blue fireworks pattern on it. Fyrefox according to his... baseline memories? Was that the term? Dang it... of all the times for him to forget Hub's reminders about Django's speech...

"So Lan, you want to challenge him first or should I?" Mayl asked with a grin.

Lan was about to reply when an older man in an expensive three piece suit nearly ran into him in his drive to get to the netbattle machine first.

"He he he!" the man chuckled, rubbing his hands eagerly as he approached the netbattle machine on deck, not noticing that he'd perhaps cut ahead of anyone in his eagerness. "I've been looking forward to this! I spent 10 million zenny customizing my navi! I can't lose! He he!"

"He was probably waiting longer than we were," Mayl shrugged, getting a reluctant nod from Lan. "Too bad, I was looking forward to challenging the guest battler."

"Hmm..." Lan mused, thinking.

"I'll challenge you first!" the clearly rich man declared as he reached one side of the netbattle machine.

"Alright, then," Fyrefox snorted back. "Jack in and let's get started."

"Oy!" Lan called up at the two. "So sorry to interrupt, but my lovely lady friend here would like to challenge the winner of your netbattle!"

"Fine with me," the burly man in the bandana shrugged.

"It will be my pleasure to entertain a fine young lady like yourself!" the rich guy boasted.

"I really hope he didn't mean that as creepy as it sounded..." Mayl sweatdropped as the two guys jacked in to begin their netbattle.

"Just sit back and watch," Lan grinned. "I think the big guy's about to show that it takes more than a lot of money to make a strong navi."

"I wonder how Dex's mission is going..." Mayl wondered.

"Eh, I'm sure they're just fine."

Pride and Baryl snuck around another corner. They'd been slowly advancing along the ship, telling passengers and crew that weren't Nebula agents to get somewhere safe while trying to take out Nebula agents they came across as quickly and quietly as possible.

There had been some mixed results on that front, but at least neither of them had sustained further injuries.

The good news was that there didn't seem to be that many Nebula agents on board overall when compared to the total number of passengers and crew.

The bad news... was that someone had handed out a bunch of fast-acting corruptive customization programs that had turned many of the passengers' navis to Nebula's side. So even if they could secure the physical ship, taking back the ship's network would be the bigger problem.

They just needed to take this slowly. Assess the situation and come up with a pl–

Ding-dong

"Attention passengers," a distorted voice sounded over the intercom. "This is Nebula. We are taking control of the ship. However, there seems to be some resistance to our methods. The following people are to report to the atrium: Captain Waverly, Baryl skrch, Princess Pride, Dex Oyama, and Dingo Stormchaser. If they do not report to the atrium and surrender themselves and control of the ship within thirty minutes, we will start executing passengers. Again, if the following individuals do not surrender to Nebula within thirty minutes–"

"Damnit..." Baryl swore.

"N-no way!" the rich man gulped as his expensive navi was shredded with ease. "I lost?! I-It's not possible! It cost me 10 million zenny to customize my navi! How can I be so outclassed?!"

'Maybe because you don't know the first thing about netbattling?' Lan thought with disdain. The match had been even more embarrassing to watch than he'd thought.

"Tsk!" Firefox scoffed loudly. "Netbattles have to be fought from the gut! Just spending a bunch of money to make your navi look tough doesn't cut it!"

"W-What did you say?!" the rich guy looked offended. Lan and Mayl, as well as a few others that had gathered to watch, looked unsympathetic. "Who let this lowlife on the ship?! I'll have you thrown overboard!"

"Wow... what a sore loser," Mayl blinked as the rich guy stormed off in a huff.

"Typical!" Fyrefox spat. "All rich people are pathetic! I hope the next challenger has a bit more nerve!"

"Thought I don't think the winner's much better..." she added.

The crew member running the stamp rally sighed heavily. "I invited him to spice up the netbattle challenge a bit. He's an old friend of mine named Fyrefox and no one's ever been able to beat him that I've seen."

"Well, let's see if the lovely lady can change that," Lan performed a bow with a sweeping motion inviting Mayl to step up and challenge the man. "

"Don't mind if I do," Mayl strolled up to the machine to cheers from the gathered crowd. "I'm Mayl Sakurai and I'll take you on!"

"A with lady with guts!" Fyrefox grinned. "Take care you don't strain yourself, missy!"

"Bring it on!" Mayl declared. "Jack in! Roll! Execute!"

Jesse Rocquet and her brother James weren't the most well-off of children. For one, the only reason they lived on a cruise ship was because their single dad worked there and got special permission from his boss. For another, their dad couldn't really afford to get them their own PETs since he was trying to save everything he could to get a home back on land for them all as well as put them both through school (which was also something of an interesting issue given their circumstances). In fact, the two of them had to share a PET and navi that had originally been left behind by a careless passenger and never claimed.

"Thirty minutes?"

"Yeah, not a lot of time to find and stop Flameman in the ship's system..."

That said, the two kids were made of some pretty resilient stuff as kids went. So when the two older boys that had stormed into the children's zone and taken out the bad guy started talking about how they needed help to take out a bad navi in the ship's computers, they volunteered immediately.

"Umm..." Jesse spoke up first. "Our navi knows her way around the ship pretty well... She can help you..."

"Yeah!" James added eagerly. "Meowtan's awesome! She can help you send the bad guys blasting off at the speed of light!"

"Meow! That's right!"

"I..." wham "thought..." wham "I..." wham "plugged..." wham "those..." wham "code..." wham "leaks..."

Roll. exe pressed herself to move faster than she'd ever done before as the walking purple arsenal known as Napalmman. exe did his best to blast her with rapid fire vulcan cannons on each arm and a flame-based bomb launcher on the top of his head. It was hard to do, and she could see how he and his operator had gone undefeated for so long. So few navis could evade the onslaught of weaponry that Napalmman. exe brought to bear, even one-on-one which was his clear weakness.

Against a large group, with his ability to cover wide areas with raw power and high damage, he'd be a total monster.

She felt her intent sync up with Mayl's and knew that her operator had realized the same thing. Chaud had told them about the small army of Nebula navis preventing access to the captured and corrupted Megaman. exe. Preventing them from saving Lan's partner and brother. He'd asked them to keep an eye out for anyone who might be able to even the odds a bit, and the duo of Fyrefox and Napalmman. exe were perfect.

Once more, for the first time since Megaman. exe's capture, Mayl and Roll. exe's wills became one and they prepared to unleash their power on their opponents. After all, it was clear the two respected strength, which meant that they'd have to prove theirs if they wanted a shot at recruiting him.

"Y-You'll n-n-never defeat N-Nebula..." the agent groaned out before losing consciousness and slumping up against the engine control console, bleeding from the head wound he'd taken.

Dark Miyabi said nothing in reply, concluding it to be pointless, as he surveyed the area. He thought he'd gotten them all, but...

He shook his head. No time to second guess things. The mission was now on a time limit. And from the looks of things, someone on Nebula's side had overridden the controls.

"Shadowman," he spoke.

"Sir," came the reply from his PET.

"Jack in and disable the engines from within. I shall do the same manually. Even if Nebula claims the ship, they shall gain no victory from it."

"Understood."

"There's too many of them," Pride reported as she snuck back to her and Baryl's hiding spot from peeking into the atrium. "Even if we take a few out, we'll never get them all before they start shooting hostages."

"I suspected as much... Okay, here's what we'll do..."

"Dear me, but that was quite the battle young lady!" yet another guest tittered, much to Mayl's embarrassment and Lan's amusement.

"That's my girlfriend!" Lan beamed. "Beauty beyond compare and skill more valuable than 10 million zenny!"

Several guests who had overheard, or at least heard of, the protestations of the first netbattle challenger laughed.

"Ladies and gentlemen!" the amplified voice broke through the various conversations around the room, drawing everyone's attention to the Ubercorp representative on the stage next to the special ViewComp. "I would like to thank you all for attending this party today, where we at Ubercorp are proud to unveil our new booster system!"

The announcement was greeted with polite and eager applause.

"When added to any existing program," the company representative continued, "this booster system radically enhances the program's performance. Construction work, software R&D... it can be used with anything, including, of course, NetNavis! And we are offering this amazing system for the low price of just three hundred million zenny!"

"Th-three hundred...?" Mayl gaped.

"How much you want to bet Yai would call it a bargain?" Lan asked.

"Three hundred million...? What a bargain!" a man near the two exclaimed as if to prove Lan's claim. "Let's see the device then!"

"Case in point," Lan tilted his head.

"B-but... I... I guess I never really thought about it..." Mayl admitted. "I mean, Yai's our friend and she's rich, but she never makes that big a deal about it really."

"I'd still bet your skill against that thing," Lan smiled as the presentation went on, showing the booster system itself inside the ViewComp surrounded by a squad of GuardNavis (49) that were all enhanced by the booster system as well, supposedly making them ten times stronger than they would otherwise be.

"Really?" Mayl blinked as the Ubercorp representative prepared to give a live demonstration of what the booster system was capable of–

–when the lights went out.

Meowtan. exe could be said to be feline themed. If cat ears, tail, and paw-like gloves stuck onto a shapely female form navi modded to appear like some adolescent male's personal trainer fantasy come true, leotard and legwarmers included, was enough to constitute a feline theme.

Dex, Dingo, Gutsman. exe, and Tomahawkman. exe had all tried to excuse the redness in their faces as being due to fighting off Nebula.

"I know exactly what I look like, meow," Meowtan. exe had rolled her eyes at the excuse. "My original operator was a perv, meow. Jesse and James were nice enough to find me something more modest than that stupid... thing ... the lech had me in when he forgot me, meow. They're good kids, meow."

That had been as much an explanation as was forthcoming, and she'd begun leading Gutsman. exe and Tomahawkman. exe through the ship's systems, following navis corrupted by DarkPower to serve Nebula against their will, and taking shortcuts through employee access areas when necessary.

"Here we are..." Meowtan. exe paused as she approached the next link. The one all the Nebula-corrupted navis were gathering towards. "The ship's communication center. You know... I'd have expected the captain's navi to try something by now... He's pretty strong after all."

"Well, we're what ya've got and the clock's tickin'," Gutsman. exe reminded her.

Nodding, Meowtan. exe led the two through the link, and immediately gasped at what she saw on the other end.

"Why don't you put your little peashooter down ya whippersnapper and let me show you how a real man settles things?"

"Shut it, old man," the lead Nebula agent snapped for the umpteenth time, his patience with a couple of his hostages wearing thin to the point that if he had to listen to them anymore, he wasn't going to wait until the thirty minute deadline.

"Why don't you come here and say that to our faces, ya good for nothing!"

And there went the other one. He was glad for the face mask he was wearing, because it was the only thing preventing the hostages from seeing just how much those two old coots were getting to him.

"He said shut it, geezer!" another agent snapped, followed by a thwack as he struck the offending hostage with the butt of his rifle.

"Grampa!"

"Cool it," the lead agent ordered. "Let them spend their last moments however they wish. It's all futile in the end. None resist Nebula for long."

"Of course, sir."

"Sir," a new voice spoke and the lead agent turned to see two more masked agents joining them carrying automatic rifles. "The boss has ordered you topside for assistance. We're to take over watching the hostages."

He blinked, looking the two new agents over carefully. One male, one female. Dressed in Nebula uniforms and masks. Absolutely nothing seemed odd about them, except for that one minor detail.

"Interesting," he replied, drawing his pistol and pointing it at them, "except that I'm the boss of this mission."

Their reactions were quick, pointing their rifles straight at him. The reactions of the other true Nebula agents in the room pointing their guns at the pair were just as quick.

"...Damnit."

"A nice try though," he commended them. "Too bad fate favors Nebul–"

A chair to the back of the head cut him off as several of the hostages took the Nebula agents' mutual distraction for the opening it was and attacked. The sound of gunfire followed and the atrium descended into pandemonium.

"That's the captain's navi!" Meowtan. exe barely kept from screaming and alerting the couple hundred Nebula and Nebula-corrupted navis in the communication's center. All around were large cyber candles burning with a purple flame, and in the center was a large beast-like, almost demonic even, navi whose body burned with flames as purple as those of the candles, two of which flanked him.

That was Flameman. exe of course, with his back to the three intruders. The figure Meowtan. exe was referring to was the navi designed like a naval captain in full military dress, complete with ceremonial sabre, but battered almost beyond recognition and hung in the air just past Flameman. exe like he was being crucified. Or possibly sacrificed.

"N'Boooraaa F'Waaaar..." Flameman. exe chanted gutterally, dark flames dancing over his form and the cyber candles alike.
"G'laaayuu F'wooooosshh..."

"So..." the naval navi coughed weakly, "you always sacrifice navis like this?"

"Oh, no," a Nebula HeelNavi chuckled from next to the prisoner. "It's hardly necessary for our purposes, but sometimes you just like to go the extra mile."

"We have to save him!" Meowtan. exe hissed.

"We will, you just stay back and leave it to u–" Tomahawkman. exe began, only to be cut off by another gasp from Meowtan. exe as the Nebula HeelNavi took out a large cyberknife and darted forwards without her two companions.

"HEY CREEP!" the felinesque navi yelled, forming an odd cannon. "GUESS WHAT DAY IT IS?!"

The shout drew all couple hundred navis' attentions as the shot rang out, sped across the distance, and struck the HeelNavi in his surprised face before exploding into a small shower of digital zenny coins.

There was a bit of stunned silence.

"Did... did you just shoot me with money ?!"

"Um... yes?" Meowtan. exe winced. She'd expected a bit more out of that. Especially given how much of Jesse and James's allowance she'd put into it. She'd need to scrape up loose digital change for at least a week to replace that.

"Kill her," the HeelNavi ordered, prompting the couple hundred other navis present to charge her.

"You guys should use the hero speech we made!"

"Yeah!"

Dex and Dingo looked at each other and shrugged.

"Sure thing, kiddo."

"But we do it our way."

"Not so fast!" Tomahawkman. exe yelled, landing in front of Meowtan. exe and swinging his axe in a wide sweep, sending out a cutting shockwave that bisected over a dozen of the foremost attackers. "You guys should prepare for trouble!"

The entire area shook as Gutsman. exe landed next to the feathered warrior navi with a double-fisted hammer blow, knocking most of the attackers off their feet. "And while yer at it, make it double!"

"Pledged to protect the world from devastation!"

"By unitin' warriors from every nation!"

"Forged in fires of darkness and strife,"

"Our strength'll be unbroken fer life!"

"We're Team Colonel, fighting for Justice and Light!"

"Ya get one chance ta surrender 'fore ya lose this fight!"

"Meow! That's right!"

Terry moped around in his cheap, dingy one room (heck, a quarter-room) apartment – all he could afford since being publicly disowned – feeling sorry for himself. Which was pretty much what he did every day. He did odd jobs to meet the bare minimum of his bills, and pretty much left Sparkman. exe to do the same on the net. (50)

There was apparently trouble going on, but he really didn't care anymore. His life was over after all. What was left? He'd been kicked out, cut off, and stripped of all his resources. His dreams for a robot lab were done for. He went through the motions of life out of habit, nothing el–

knock-knock-knock

'Go away,' he groused silently, having long since learned that doing so out loud achieved the opposite more often than not.

knock-knock-knock

'No one's home, you're wasting your time.'

knock-knock-knock

'Maybe it's the mob come to put me out of my misery...'

rattle... jimmy... click

Terry's eyes widened slightly as the lock on his door was picked and it swung open to reveal three people standing there. He thought he recognized one from that stupid Den City netbattle tournament a while back... the guy with the flame red hair and pointed goatee. There was another guy there dressed like he was going for a hike, but otherwise forgettable, plus a boy in front sticking a lockpick into his pocket. The boy had pale skin, chalk gray hair, and eyes so red that Terry was half sure a demon had come to claim his soul.

"Terry Jomon, I presume," the boy stated.

"You got the wrong guy," Terry snorted, not even bothering to get up. He was that far past caring. "I'm no Jomon."

"Yeah, I remember that, laddie," the red haired man smirked. "Quite the public debacle that was."

"What do you want?"

"You," the boy replied bluntly. "We need you for a job."

"Then you wasted your time," Terry shrugged listlessly.

"Listen here, you..." the backpacker made to lunge at Terry in anger, only to be stopped by a gesture from the gray-haired boy... had to be an albino Terry thought.

"My apologies then," the boy stared at Terry so intently that he felt a bead of cold sweat trickle down the back of his neck. "I thought I was talking to a prodigy with electronics and robotics. Perhaps I was mistaken."

"Whatever..."

"You see, we are in need of such an expert to rescue a friend of ours who is held by systems so state of the art most people have never heard of them."

Terry felt a twinge of interest in the back of his head. The kind of interest he used to feel working on his robotics projects using discarded items from his grandfather's store. The kind of interest he'd had when he'd designed Sparkman. exe, ungrateful little hoodlum that he was, from scratch. But he didn't let it show.

"What's in it for us?" the voice of Sparkman. exe spoke up from Terry's PET unbidden, causing him to glance at the screen and see his navi, so self-sufficient that he was nearly independent. How long had it been since they'd actually worked together on anything?

The albino boy stepped forwards, somehow managing to stare both Terry and Sparkman. exe in the eye at the same time with his unnervingly red gaze, driving an identical spike of fear into both as he seemed to peer straight into their souls.

"A second chance."

Mayl blinked as she watched Lan climb out of a ventilation shaft in front of her on deck, his formerly pristine suit rumpled from the act. When the lights had come back on, the theft of the booster system was clear. As was the fact that whoever had stolen it had easily defeated all eight of the boosted GuardNavis protecting it.

There had been some pandemonium as various guests started pointing fingers, accusing anyone in the room who looked even slightly suspicious (plus a few accusations that were probably fueled by grudges and spite more than anything else). At least until Lan had pointed out that the decorative mirrors lining the room were arranged in such a way that the thief could have wirelessly jacked into the ViewComp from outside the room. A quick flash of their Official NetBattler licenses, a double-S (Mayl had relished the surprise on Lan's face just a bit) and a triple-S, convinced all but the most stubborn of naysayers that they were on the level and they'd been allowed out while the room guards kept everyone else inside for questioning just in case.

They'd split up then, Lan headed towards the engine room as Mayl went out on deck, with an agreement that they'd contact each other the moment they found anything.

She hadn't expected to meet back up with Lan like this.

"Okay, so..."

"Either he came out on deck straight from the hallway, or he snuck out here through the vent system like I did," Lan said while he did his best to dust his suit off and straighten it.

"Th... they bridge!" a crew member stumbled their way, looking bruised. "They've... hijacked the ship... ungh..."

"Are you okay?" Mayl ran to check on the man.

"I'll just lay here until the deck stops rolling..."

Lan and Mayl looked at each other. The Queen Bohemia was so advanced and smooth-sailing that they could barely tell they were at sea.

"I think he'll be fine for now," Mayl admitted after a moment. "There's nothing I can help with at least."

"Okay then, let's get to the bridge!"

Mayl followed Lan into the ship's bridge to confront whoever was behind this, and felt herself brought up short when she saw the man from before. The netbattler Fyrefox...

"What...? Fyrefox... Why are you...?"

"Well, well..." the burly man looked back at them levelly, "if it isn't the lady from before and her boyfriend..."

"Fyrefox, what are you doing?!" Lan demanded.

"What am I doing?" Fyrefox blinked as if he thought it should have been obvious. "With the booster system, my fireworks will be bigger and more spectacular than anyone else's!"

"Fireworks?" Mayl blinked. She didn't think any amount of program enhancement would affect real world fireworks.

"Yeah, fireworks," Fyrefox repeated. "I work with normal fireworks, but I also make cyber fireworks as well! And I'll do whatever it takes to make mine bigger, got it?"

"But–" Mayl started, only to be interrupted as Fyrefox continued.

"If you really want the booster system back, then jack in and take on my navi in the ShipComp. Only this time..." Fyrefox grinned. "This time I want to see your boyfriend in action."

Lan and Mayl both blinked as one.

"I already know the lady's got guts," Fyrefox smirked. "Time to see if her boy's got 'em too."

Lan looked at Mayl and shrugged. "If that's how it has to be..."

"Then that's how it has to be. Help him out, Zero."

"But of course," the viral navi replied from Lan's PET.

The atrium was chaos and pandemonium. Baryl was bleeding from his leg, Pride had taken a bullet to her side in the confusion, and several of the hostages were injured after the surprise charge against their captors. But the Nebula agents were down and most weren't getting back up.

Except for one who was pulling out a PET...

"For Nebula!" he yelled, jacking his navi into something that seemed innocuous enough. A centerpiece for the atrium, at least until it opened up to reveal something that screamed 'explosive device' to Baryl's instincts. "Hahaha! You'll never stop my navi before he activates–"

"That's what you think you reprobate!" one of the old men who had led the charge yelled as he pulled out a PET of his own. "Get that upstart Topman!"

"Not if Kiteman gets him first!" another old man who could have been the first's twin joined the action.

"Hey, wha–" the voice of a navi from the device yelled out as the old men's navis jacked in after him. "Stop righ–Gah! What are yo–ARGH! That doesn't ben–EEEEYYOOOWW! DR. REGAL, SAVE M–!"

"What was that?" Baryl stared at the agent intently, standing tall despite his injury and looming over the other man.

"...I surrender?" the Nebula agent squeaked.

A couple hundred navis serving Nebula, willingly or otherwise, had charged the interlopers.

"Tomahawk Swing!"

"Program Advance! MOMQUAKE!"

They were getting their asses handed to them.

"Screw this..." the HeelNavi that had been assigned as Lord Flameman's interpreter snorted. "We're cutting straight to the chase..."

He readied his ceremonial cyberknife to carve open the captain's navi as his lord continued his chant. It might be strictly unnecessary, but the sacrifice of the navi's powerful spirit to the DarkPower would still serve to open the DarkHoles that much faster, and accomplish their goals that much sooner.

"Hold still..." he chuckled at the maritime navi. "This won't hurt... for long."

"WAVEMAN!" the feminine scream echoed from the other side of the melee. (51)

"Don't you worry none! GUTSSHOOT!"

He paid no attention to the sounds behind him as he raised the cyberknife high and–

"Heh..." the crucified sacrifice smiled at something behind him, but he wasn't about to fall for that old trick. "Incoming..."

Ignoring the attempt to delay, the HeelNavi prepared to make the sacrifice even as the sound of a dopplered scream registered as heading straight for him.

"What the–?" his resolve to not be tricked lost to his curiosity and he turned just in time to take a ballistic navi straight to the chest. The impact bowled him over and both he and the ballistic navi went tumbling under the sacrificial navi for a good ways before grinding to a halt.

"Me-owch..." the navi that had hit him groaned as she stood. Some pathetic little thing designed for leisure from the looks of it.

"Well..." he mused as he got to his feet and readied his cyberknife. "One sacrifice is as good as another at this point."

The female navi twitched. "You know what I hate most besides creeps? Getting hand-outs. I don't care what everyone thinks, I'm no charity case and neither are the twins. But I get donating to a good cause."

"Then you'll be glad to donate your life to the cause of Nebula!" he laughed, stalking towards her with purpose.

"I'm thinking more of the donation I just got towards the cause of kicking your ass," she hissed back, forming one of her paw hands into an odd-looking buster. "IT'S PAYDAY, CREEP!"

The blast struck him like a truck, before erupting into a very literal explosion of zenny.

"We gotta take out those candles!" Gutsman. exe yelled having noticed that a few of the purple candle flames had gone out when stray attacks hit them.

"I've got an idea!" Tomahawkman. exe called back. "Totem Pole!"

A pair of totem poles rose out from behind Tomahawkman. exe and Gutsman. exe grinned.

"Now I got an idea!" he yelled as he smashed the ground in a hammer blow, causing the totem poles to jump into the air where he grabbed them and then flung them upwards. They lanced high into the digital sky, twinkling in the distance and there was a moment's pause before dozens of twinkles came back as totem pieces rained back down.

"TOTEM RAIN!" they yelled together as the falling objects put out every candle except two. The ones flanking Flameman. exe himself.

"R'eegaaall K'Boooom..."

"So..." Napalmman. exe stated calmly.

"I understand wanting to battle," Zero. exe stated back with equal calm, "but we would have been honored to oblige without the need for a theft of this nature. We are already busy dealing with the DarkChip syndicate Nebula, and we do not need your arrest added to our duties. Return the booster system immediately and we shall be lenient."

"Hehehe...no," the walking arsenal refused. "We need this for our fireworks, so if you want it back you'll have to beat us!"

"Very well then," Zero. exe sighed before igniting his Z-Saber. "Beat you we shall."

"I'll tear you apart first!" Napalmman. exe got into a stance that brought both of his gun arms and his head-mounted missile launcher to bear on Zero. exe. "FIRE!"

"AreaSteal!" Lan shouted.

Zero. exe vanished as the spot where he'd been standing was practically obliterated by the onslaught of bullets and flame bombs.

"Z-Saber!" his yell came from behind the walking tank as he slashed once, twice, thrice, and a fourth that unleashed a sonic shockwave that staggered the heavy navi.

"VulcanGun! BattleChips in! Download!" Fyrefox yelled, and a pair of guns popped up from the ground to take aim at Zero. exe.

"Invisible!" Lan countered with a chip to make his current navi vanish.

"Wide area attack!" Fyrefox ordered, and Napalmman. exe unleashed his vast firepower on everything around him, but nothing seemed to connect until–

"StepShield."

One bomb connected with a suddenly visible Zero. exe behind a barrier, who then vanished to reappear right in front of Napalmman. exe, far too close to attack with his armaments, his Z-Saber held for a rising strike.

"Holy Thunder Saber!"

The rising slash lifted Napalmman. exe off his feet.

"Triple Mag Saber!"

The spinning descending slash spiked him back into the ground.

"Napalmman! Get up! Counterattack!" Fyrefox urged as Zero. exe got into an odd stance and began gathering energy around his Z-Saber.

"Phantom–"

"Napalm–"

"ZERO!"

The large shockwave carved through the cannon on top of Napalmman. exe's head, and a large portion of the digital wall directly behind him, shocking the armed navi at how close he'd just come to being bisected. And he had no illusions that it could have happened. He'd just been spared very deliberately.

"It's over," Zero. exe declared. "The booster system is in my possession."

"Wha...?" Napalmman. exe blinked in shock.

"I recovered it while invisible," Zero. exe elaborated.

"Exactly as planned," Lan's grin was audible.

"As much as I would like to believe you would honor your word, we could take no chances," Zero. exe explained.

"You... You stole my fireworks dream!" Fyrefox gaped in dismay.

"Can it!" Mayl interrupted heatedly. "You honestly think you could make the fireworks you wanted with something you stole? Thinking you could rely on a magic solution rather than your own hard work and vision? What kind of craftsman are you? If you can't make your fireworks with your own heart, then you dishonor their meaning! Would you really disgrace your profession with fireworks devoid of feeling and lacking your own effort?!"

"Tomahawk Air Raid!" Tomahawkman. exe led by throwing his axe, the weapon spinning as it flew towards the burning purple and chanting Flameman. exe.

"Rocket Guts Punch!" Gutsman. exe sent a flying fist along.

The two projectiles flew straight and true at their target, impacting Flameman. exe head on... and being incinerated by the dark flames covering his form.

"Aw, nuts..." Gutsman. exe swore as an irritated Flameman. exe finally turned in their direction. "Well, only one thing ta do..."

"CHARGE!" Tomahawkman. exe agreed and the two navis did exactly that, charging full tilt at their seemingly invincible opponent who reared back as they approached, drawing in a deep dark breath and causing the Wood-element Tomahawkman. exe's eyes to widen. "Oh crap..."

"D'haarreek F'lllaaaayymmm...!"

Meowtan. exe fell back, clutching her chest where she'd just taken a hefty cut from the HeelNavi she was fighting. She'd gotten a good hit in with the most powerful Payday she'd probably ever fired at the beginning, but...

Well, that was the only shot she'd landed.

The quick donations from Dex and Dingo, using their 'virus busting funds', had given her zenny-powered Payday shot enough oomph to really hurt the creep with the cyberknife, but... he was more experienced. He sidestepped all the follow-up shots to close in and batted aside her claw attacks like they were a mere annoyance to slash at her with the knife before falling back to taunt her. And even with the generous donation, the zenny was quickly running out...

"Meowit..." she cursed as she pointed her payday cannon at the HeelNavi and didn't fire.

"Aw, all out of zenny?" the HeelNavi chuckled. "Good."

He dashed forwards in a burst of speed that Meowtan. exe barely followed and stabbed, burying the knife right below her cat-paw navi mark.

"Urk..."

"Too bad you wasted it all earlier," the HeelNavi laughed at her pain.

"Waste...?" Meowtan. exe chuckled back weakly, pressing the still-formed cannon more firmly into the HeelNavi's chest. "Jesse and James... taught me how to save ..."

"F–" the HeelNavi was blown back by another eruption of zenny, losing his grip on his knife as Meowtan. exe was blown back as well to land below the captain's navi. Waveman. exe.

She hurt. She really did. But the creep was getting back up with only a few more bumps and bruises than before. She wasn't going to beat him. But she knew someone who could.

Pulling the knife out, she stood and started using it to cut Waveman. exe free of his bonds, ignoring the angry shouts of the creep. She kept it up when he started shooting her with his normal buster, running towards her. Instead, she pulled a FullEnergy subchip out that Jessie, James, and she had been saving and gave it to Waveman. exe.

She managed to remain conscious long enough to see the captain's navi bisect the creep with a crescent wave of water from his navy sabre.

Tomahawkman. exe had been sure he was about to become tribal warrior charcoal when he was lifted up and thrown over Flameman. exe just before the spray of dark purple flames issued forth, engulfing Gutsman. exe in its unholy inferno. The sinister purple flames of the candles on either side of Flameman. exe flared brighter as the net area suddenly grew darker and he knew what had to be done.

"Give it everything we got, Dingo!" he yelled the moment his feet hit the ground behind Flameman. exe and he charged, ignoring the spectral purple wisps that rose to impede his progress and raising his tomahawk hand high.

"You got it!" Dingo replied, their wills becoming one and their synchronization going through the roof. They thought as one. They acted as one. They swung as one.

"TOMAHAWK SWING!"

The biggest shockwave they'd ever produced with that attack blasted forth, sweeping just over the ground and striking Flameman. exe hard enough that the purple flames covering him flared up angrily, but no damage was dealt. At least not to him. The wicks of the candles flanking him on the other hand were severed below the flames and snuffed in an instant, taking the spectral wisps and Flameman. exe's protective covering with them.

"Hwaaarrrh?!" Flameman. exe roared in anger and confusion.

"That's more like it!" Gutsman. exe's voice called out and Tomahawkman. exe felt relief that his new friend hadn't been deleted. "Dex! You got the chips?"

"Right here! In and downloaded!"

"COLDPUNCH!" Gutsman. exe landed one of the Aqua-element punches in Flameman. exe's stomach, followed by a second in a right hook, a third in a left cross, and finishing with a ColdPunch uppercut.

"Dingo!" Tomahawkman. exe called out.

"Got it! Totem Pole! AquaBlade!"

Tomahawkman. exe jumped atop the risen totem and raised his axe to gather the energy of the second chip. 'Spirits of our ancestors, guide my tomahawk!'

He jumped towards the recovering Flameman. exe, his tomahawk glowing blue from the aque element infusion. "Tomahawk Rolling!"

"GWAAARRR!" Flameman. exe roared in pain as the attack connected and he retaliated with flametowers that didn't even come close to connecting.

"Program Advance!" Gutsman. exe yelled. "BubbleSpread!"

Flameman. exe's even louder roar was distorted by the mass of bubbles that erupted around him.

"Tomahawk Swing!"

The blade of the tomahawk buried itself in Flameman. exe's forehead. A moment later and the practically demonic flame navi split in half before disintegrating.

"...You're right," Fyrefox hung his head in shame as Mayl finally finished berating him for his theft. "I've been so fixated on making the best fireworks... I forgot what should be most important to a craftsman."

"I think we can overlook it this once," Lan offered. "Right Zero?"

"No," the viral navi disagreed, surprising everyone. And then his tone changed to one that implied a playful smirk. "At least not without some community service to make up for the trouble. Such as helping us fight Nebula."

"Wha–?" Fyrefox sputtered. "You want me to help you fight Nebula? I-I was gonna offer, but I didn't think... I-I still have a lot to learn. But in the fireworks of battle, I could improve. Then one day my fireworks will be the best! Right, Napalmman?!"

"Battle Nebula...?" the heavy artillery navi mused. "Give a bunch of bad guys a good pounding...? Sounds good to me!"

"Then it's settled," Mayl nodded firmly. "Welcome to Team Proto!"

Baryl was in the middle of helping one of the passengers, a doctor, tend to the wounded when another Nebula agent strolled into the room armed and caught them all flatfooted.

"Consarn it!" one of the old men swore, getting up and looking ready to charge the Nebula agent despite the agent having a gun and the old man having little more than an irascible mean streak.

"Ah..." the newcomer seemed surprised. "I see you already have things well in hand."

"...Blast it all Miyabi," Baryl breathed out the tension in his body as the mercenary removed the pilfered mask he wore, "don't scare me like that."

"I'll just make sure there aren't any more left before turning the engines back on," Dark Miyabi said as he turned and walked out of the atrium, leaving those capable to tend the wounded.

Baryl blinked. He hadn't even realized someone had turned the engines off in the first place until just then...

The booster program was returned without further incident and Ubercorp, at the urging of the young licensed netbattlers, had agreed not to press charges. And still his boss, the scary converted blue navi, had told him to wait.

Wait as the party resumed with no issues and orders were placed, though perhaps a bit fewer than expected and with a fair bit more haggling after it was shown that eight boosted navis had been no match for one customized navi with a decent operator. Skill, it seemed, thoroughly trumped even the highly touted booster system.

And still he waited for his orders.

The party wound down, several people challenged the young netbattlers to friendly matches, the ship turned towards port, and he kept waiting.

Then he got his orders and he had serious trouble believing them. Nebula wanting the booster system he could understand, the thing was cutting edge at its finest. This though...?

But one glare from the scary blue navi and he stopped protesting. It was one of those glares that promised bad things if you argued. He'd seen it happen before, and so he waited as the ship sailed back into port. He waited as it docked. He waited as the party guests for this day cruise all lined up to disembark and followed the two young netbattlers and the bug guy they'd caught. He followed them down to the docks and off across until the boy remembered that he'd left his regular clothes on board and turned to retrieve them, telling the other two to wait for him.

Well, that was the best chance he was likely to get. He followed the boy back to the boarding area and watched him go back to get his things. He waited patiently until the boy returned, having changed and apparently carrying his suit in a hanging bag to boot. He pulled out his own bag as the boy approached and when he had the perfect opportunity, he struck, shoving the bag over the boy's head–

Hephaestus froze as the Nebula agent who was supposed to be a thief grabbed Lan, lifted him off the ground, and started running. The moment the bag had been shoved over Lan's head the success chances of the Loop had plummeted into single digits.

He needed to do something fast before the kidnapper got away. If Lan was placed into Regal's clutches at this stage, then– –out of nowhere a burly arm appeared and he ran into it neck first, his head coming to a halt as his lower body tried to keep moving forwards from momentum, sending him horizontal for a brief moment before gravity took over. He hit the pavement of the dock hard enough to knock the wind from his lungs and idly noted that he'd lost the boy in the impact.

Hephaestus breathed a sigh of relief as the success chances returned to where they'd been before. Perhaps even a percent or two higher.

"Thank you for such a timely intervention," Zero. exe declared from Lan's PET that he'd somehow managed to keep a hold of.

"Thank Fyrefox," Mayl replied as she took the bag off of Lan's head while the aforementioned man kept the would-be kidnapper pinned. "He noticed the guy following us. Lan was right. He was up to no good..."

"Okay, everyone, this is it," Charlie (52) spoke up from across his connection. "This is where Nebula's been jamming international communications from, preventing the world from launching an organized counterattack."

"It was a pain to arrange a signal that could get us into the satellite system even through the interference, but here we are," Kalinka reminded them.

"Speaking of interference, how's that door coming Gateman?" Quint. exe asked.

"Almost ready," Gateman. exe reported from just outside the static interference barrier preventing entrance into the Dark Area controlling the satellite.

"Everyone know their job once we're in?" Punk. exe asked.

"Defense," the androgynous Enker. exe replied readily.

"Blow the crap out of the DarkHoles," Ballade. exe grinned.

"Discipline off the foul miscreants they dare to send our way!" Kendoman. exe laughed.

"Open a path to the darkloid in charge," Gateman. exe confirmed as he continued working on making a doorway.

"Support as needed," Quint. exe nodded, summoning his support program Sakugarne.

"...run interference if we're counterattacked and push forwards with the team when we have the advantage," Gridman. exe sighed last from a sitting position. "Don't run off by myself."

"Yeah, we don't need a repeat of what happened with Vineman," Takeshi nodded.

"We really don't need a repeat of that," Bullet's wince was audible.

"Sensei, do you want to take command of this mission?" Charlie asked.

"Why?" Mr. Famous asked. "You've all proven capable. I'm certain that any of you is capable of handling this team and whatever's waiting in there just fine."

"Jan Ken Pow?" Takeshi shrugged.

"Charlie should take command," Gridman. exe interrupted to everyone's surprise. "If we get in there and he thinks someone else is better suited, he can hand over his PET."

"..."

"What?"

"Nothing," Kendoman. exe chuckled. "Just that you of all navis are the last we expected to speak in favor of teamwork, your design notwithstanding."

"Yeah, well..." Gridman. exe snorted. "I'm man enough to admit when I'm wrong."

"But only after being hit with a clue hard enough to leave a crater," Quint. exe quipped.

"Yeah, well, the helmet's not just for show," the sport-themed navi shot back with a snort. "Look, I've been a jerk since I came online, but... I can't lie to myself. You guys..."

Gridman. exe stood up, stepped forwards and held out his fist straight and proud towards the rest.

"You guys are the best team anyone could ask for."

Quint. exe's face split in a grin as Kendoman. exe threw his head back in a deep laugh and put his fist up to Gridman. exe's. It was swiftly joined by Enker. exe's, Ballade. exe's, Punk. exe's, and finally Gateman. exe's. When the last was sent a questioning glance, he simply pointed to the fully formed metal gateway that broke the static barrier to Nebula's controlled area.

"Who are we?" Gridman. exe asked.

"We are the bane of criminals everywhere!" Enker. exe, Quint. exe, Punk. exe, and Ballade. exe yelled.

"Who are we?!" Gridman. exe asked again, louder.

"We are the scourge of the underworld!" the four answered again, just as loudly, while Kendoman. exe and Gateman. exe exchanged a glance and shrugged.

"WHO ARE WE?!"

"We are the NetNavi Killers!" Kendoman. exe and Gateman. exe joined in this time.

"WHO ARE WE?!"

"WE ARE TEAM FAMOUS!"

"Well, well..." the HeelNavi chuckled as he saw a familiar face return. "Look who never learns... And what's this? Ha! You brought friends! Hey guys! He brought some friends!"

There was raucous laughter from the hundreds of DarkPower corrupted navis, all generic off-the-shelf varieties. All individually weak, but possessing a grand mob mentality that would terrify the most hardened netbattler.

To them, a tall red-armored navi with blond hair flaring out like a cape, a smaller red navi with a long white ponytail and wearing shades, a pink girl navi with yellow antenna, a large crimson magnet navi, a yellow helicopter navi, and a purple hunk of spindly metal was hardly cause for alarm. Sure, many of them would fall, but they were so deep in the darkness they no longer cared. They just wanted to take someone with them, and they could certainly manage that much against such a rag-tag group.

"Napalmman, if you would please?" the red navi with the blond cape-hair said, prompting the spindly purple hunk of metal to clunk forwards, swinging its unwieldy arms to keep balance.

"Well, since you asked nicely..." the thing got to the front and squared itself, setting its arms like they were heavy weapons.

"Pfft!" the mob leader laughed. "You think you can take us on yourself? Bwahahahahahahaha!"

"Prepare to be blown away!" the purple navi yelled.

And then the explosions started, but the mob leader didn't change his mind. It was hard to do that when said mind was incinerated in the opening volley.

Hephaestus realized that he'd perhaps gotten used to Apollo's presence in his office for this venture when he turned to start berating the sun god for playing the 1812 overture, only to realize Apollo wasn't there and hadn't actually done that. He'd just imagined it.

"...I've been working too hard," he sighed to himself. "I should probably take advantage of some of that stockpiled vacation time after this... Maybe take Pele up on her offer of a full Havaiki beach getaway..."

He idly wondered if Valkyries considered chainmail bikinis to be an insulting stereotype or standard beachwear. (53)

"Hah!" Napalmman. exe chuckled as the group strode through the devastation he'd left of the opposing army. "Those guys may have been weak, but that lit a fire in my heart! I hope there's stronger enemies ahead."

"That reminds me, who is our enemy anyway?" Gyroman. exe asked, turning to Zero. exe and Roll. exe. "Protoman said to ask you guys?"

"Yeah," the team's only female navi answered. "Chaud filled me and Mayl in on the situation when he called us in earlier. You see, this isn't just a liberation mission..."

"It's a rescue," Zero. exe finished.

"You mean...?" Magnetman. exe's eyes widened.

"Yeah," Lan spoke up across the connection. "Our opponent's the DarkSoul that's taken over my brother."

"Long story," Protoman. exe explained at Napalmman. exe's questioning look. "We'll fill you in on the details afterwards. But, yes, our opponent is none other than Megaman himself."

They crossed the threshold into the Dark Area, and all of them staggered from the sheer heat inside. It was like stepping into an active oven. If the net of End Area outside had been red from the heat that bled from Nebula's occupation, this place was an order of magnitude worse. Only instead of being red from the heat, the entire area seemed scorched like a fire had raged and burned out, leaving only its heat as a memory when all its fuel had been exhausted.

"The hell happened here?!" Gyroman. exe spun his rotors in a vain attempt to cool himself. Even the fire-element Napalmman. exe seemed unnerved by the heat of the place.

"Hell seems an apt description for a place such as this," the large magnetic member of the team noted.

"Well, well," a sinister and familiar voice echoed. "You're early . Are you that eager to enter a world of pain?"

"Megaman..." the only female member of the team's heart fell at the sound of her boyfriend's voice.

"We will save him," Zero. exe assured them all.

"Oh, and Lan, I hope you don't mind, but I changed a few things around," Dark Megaman grinned.

"What does he–?" Roll. exe started to ask.

"Doesn't matter right now," Protoman. exe interrupted.

"What matters is that we free this area and rescue our friend," Zero. exe gave the other sword-wielder an aside glance, and got a respectful nod in return. "Everyone knows what needs to be done."

"Heh..." Dark Megaman chuckled. "I wonder... which of you will be the first to taste my MegaBuster?"

"Napalmman," Zero. exe asked, "if you would?"

"You got it," the artillery navi nodded, locating the nearest DarkHole across the murk of tangible DarkPower infesting the area and taking aim. "Napalm!"

"Gateman!" Punk yelled out. "You got the key to that barrier yet?"

"Working on it!" Mr. Famous's oldest navi called back.

Team Famous had, to a member, gotten a great deal more nervous upon seeing just what navi was in charge of this area. Because, of course, out of all the myriad possibilties, he was the one jamming international communications and preventing coordinated retaliation by anti-Nebula forces.

"Hahahahaha!" the static laugh of Jammingman. exe boomed darkly. "Come on! You all should be happy! It's a Famous reunion all around! The overblown 'Elite Four', with some of Famous's own second-stringers tagging along, together again to fight the one foe they could only beat by a fluke!"

"Ignore the upstart!" Kendoman. exe snorted as he bashed a Guardian virus back into the DarkHole it had sprung from. "He was never a student! He has no claim to the legacy of Famous!"

"Oh, but my friend does," Jammingman. exe chuckled. "Don't you, Seijin?"

"Indeed, Jammingman," the unhinged chuckle of Famous's disgraced student was heard, causing all but one of Team Famous to freeze. "And it's time to show them what happens when they don't get lucky... Let's start with... How about this? TimeBomb1... TimeBomb2... TimeBomb3..."

"Program Advance..." the sinister static chuckle sounded out, declaring their doom. "GigaCountBomb... Nice knowing you all..."

"Aw, h–" Ballade. exe started in dismay, only for the one member of the team who didn't know the two at all to leap into action.

"Punt!" Gridman. exe kicked one of his exploding footballs high into the air where it whistled as it fell, before impacting at the site where the digital explosive had manifested and destroyed it before it could detonate properly.

"Good going, Gridman," Charlie commended the football navi. "Now, let–skkssssshhhhh...*

"Ah, ah, ah..." Seijin's voice taunted as their only connection to an operator vanished. "None of that now. Lets see how good you all are without the techniques you've spent years perfecting together. Let's see how well you get by when your best moves are sealed away. Oh, wait... that already happened to someone leagues better than you could ever be... He he he..."

"So, you actually made it this far without my help," Dark Megaman chuckled as he faced down the rest of Team Proto plus Zero. exe. "I'd be impressed if you hadn't taken so long to get here. Did I make things too hard, Lan?"

"Megaman, if you can hear me fight it!" Zero. exe stepped forwards, ignoring the taunt. "I know the real you remains alive within the darkness! You showed yourself once before, now do so again!"

Dark Megaman laughed in Zero. exe's face. "Oh, this is just too rich! What's my line again? I remember: 'You're wasting your breath! A DarkSoul inhabits this body now! If you want to defeat me, you'll have to delete the body too!' Does that sound about right?"

"..."

"Come on," Dark Megaman grinned. "Let me talk to Lan. I want to hear the emotional anguish he's going through having to fight me right now. I want to hear the doubt in his voice as he wonders how much of his precious brother is really left. I want to be able to tell him to his face that he's wasting his time. The future he's been fighting for has been rewritten. It now belongs to Nebula."

The answer he got was not the one he'd been expecting.

"Lan thought you might try something like this, so he handed off control to me," Chaud's voice stated. Dark Megaman was so surprised by the turn events had taken that he seemed to lose balance for a moment. "That's what happens when you know someone as well as you do, they tend to know you just as well right back."

"Cute, Lan," Dark Megaman regained his bearing and smirked. "But it won't change anything, I–"

"Have access to all of Lan's most frequently used battlechips as a result of being a recently formed DarkSoul and are able to access the impressions their data has left on you at a whim," Chaud interrupted. "In addition to the usual DarkPower navis steeped in darkness, particularly those working with Nebula, possess. We aren't ignorant."

"So it seems," Dark Megaman growled, before smirking again. "And what do you have? The 'power of friendship'? The 'light of souls'? What could any of you have that I haven't seen and beaten before?"

"M-Cannon, MarkCannon3, TankCannon3, Megaman," Chaud declared stoically, the last chip's name causing Dark Megaman's eyes to widen in shock. "BattleChips in, Download."

"Program Advance," Protoman. exe got into a stance as an avatar of the uncorrupted Megaman. exe appeared next to him. "Double Hero."

Dark Megaman sneered as the two charged up and when they unleashed a barrage of buster shuts and sword waved at him, he began dancing between the projectiles, avoiding as many as it was possible to before unleashing a pair of AirHockey chips in retaliation that sent Protoman. exe reeling as the advance ended.

"I'm surprised Lan actually had the guts to give you that, Chaud," Dark Megaman chuckled, ignoring the injuries he'd sustained despite dodging the worst of the barrage as he and Protoman. exe began taking potshots at each other. "But I know how you fight almost as well as I know how Lan does. This changes nothing."

"Sorry, Chaud's not here anymore," the voice of Charlie Airstar sounded out, making the corrupted Megaman. exe stumble again. "But I'm sure we'll have a good time! Typhoon! Hurricane! Cyclone! BattleChips in! Download!"

Dark Megaman whipped around to face Gyroman. exe, not noticing that it was actually Napalmman. exe manifesting the chips from what was now right behind him.

"Time to blow you away!" the heavy artillery navi laughed right before he blasted Dark Megaman with the wind-based chips straight to the back.

"ARGH!" Dark Megaman roared out in fury, whipping around to take aim at Napalmman. exe. "Eat this! Bub–"

"Roll Arrow!" the shot hit Dark Megaman in the shoulder, cancelling his counterattack.

"Now!" Tesla's voice ordered, prompting the team's opponent to look around for her navi Magnetman. exe and miss the real threat.

"MagShock!" Roll. exe yelled as she teleported directly in front of Dark Megaman, hitting him point blank with the magnetic attack and locking him in place.

"How...?" Dark Megaman grunted. Only one PET could be used to connect through the DarkArea's effects at a time! How were they all doing this?! (54)

"Time to light it up!" Fyrefox's voice yelled. "BattleChips in! Download!"

"Bombs away!" Gyroman. exe cheered as he dropped a series of bomb chips on the immobile Dark Megaman the moment Roll. exe was clear.

"GAH!"

"Magnet Fire!" Magnetman. exe and Napalmman. exe yelled, the former using a MagnetBall to pin Dark Megaman down while the latter opened fire with his vulcan arm cannons. Gyroman. exe landed and opened up with his Tornado Arm to keep their opponent pinned.

"Crimson Crusade!" the voices of Protoman. exe and Zero. exe sounded while the corrupted Megaman. exe was still pinned down, the two charging and swinging their blades in rapid succession.

Dark Megaman cried out in pain as he was brought to the verge of deletion before his eyes pulsed crimson, his arm formed a sinister purple blade, and he swung for all he was worth.

"DARKSWORD!"

He swung in a full circle, hitting all of the navis around him. Only two managed to escape the full strike. Zero. exe took a lessened blow due to a last second dash by Protoman. exe that allowed Chaud's navi to shield him from the blow at the cost of losing his shield and taking the full hit himself. He was still partially injured as well as knocked down when Protoman. exe's injured form was flung back into him.

Roll. exe escaped unscathed due to being out of range, but from the look in Dark Megaman's eyes as he turned and charged at her, he meant to change that.

"DARK–"

The shining arrow from Roll. exe shattered the blade of darkness and she warped forwards to grab Dark Megaman's wrists and hold him fast. The antenna on her helmet then shot out and latched onto the sides of her opponent's.

"Heh..." Dark Megaman grinned. "Nice. I'm barely hanging on thanks to that UnderShot program Lan likes so much. Go on. Finish it. End your boyfriend forever."

"I'm connected," Roll. exe reported calmly. "Do it, Lan."

Dark Megaman's eyes widened again as he realized what Lan's plan had been the entire time. He was going to try the same thing Chaud had done to–

"Invisible, sacrifice for Unison Chip," Lan declared fiercely. "Unison chip in! Download! Bring my brother back!"

Dark Megaman's eyes closed in pain as the phantom indigo form of Shadowman. exe gathered around him and his DarkPower flared in response, the two incompatible powers warring with each other for dominance.

"L-Lan..."

"It's working!" Lan cheered. "It's work..."

He trailed off as the DarkPower emanating from Megaman. exe's body began doing something to the phantom form of Shadowman. exe. The indigo parts turned a yellowing beige, the long crimson scarf turned black...

...and Dark Megaman opened his blood-red eyes to glare at a shocked Roll. exe.

"...these connections..." Dark Megaman grinned past the pain, "work both ways..."

The DarkPower flared suddenly, breaking the half-formed DoubleSoul and crashing into Roll. exe who screamed.

The PET in Lan's hands suddenly sparked purple and a static bolt leapt to strike him in the chest, eliciting a scream of pain as he was flung several feet back.

"Lan!" Mayl yelled, rushing to his side in an instant, only to yank her hand back as a tiny bolt of purple static zapped at her. The rest of the team present saw that and decided to keep their distance.

"Ow..." Lan groaned. "Mayl...?"

"I'm here, Lan."

"Plan B..." Lan managed to groan out before more purple static wracked his body.

"But...?"

"No time," Chaud argued, grabbing for Lan's PET only to yank his hand back as he got zapped as well.

"Ha..." Dark Megaman's sinister chuckle was heard. "Ha ha ha ha ha..."

"M-Mayl...?" Roll. exe's pained voice sounded from the PET. "Help..."

Hearing her navi in pain cut through any self-doubt more effectively than anything else, and the next thing Mayl knew she was grabbing the PET despite the residual DarkPower sparking over it trying to zap her into dropping the device.

Dark Megaman grinned sadistically as he formed another DarkSword and staggered forwards. Who should he cut down first? The corporate lackey? The mercenary? The destroyer? Maybe the rival?

His gaze stayed locked on the form of Roll. exe as she writhed in pain from the DarkPower he'd slammed back across the connection she'd forged between him and Lan. No, he'd start with her.

Chuckling, he advanced slowly, partly from lingering injury and partly from wanting to savor the moment. Only to find a crimson form standing in his way with a cape of yellow hair flaring dramatically behind it.

"I will not allow you to bring further harm to any of your comrades, Megaman," Zero. exe declared seriously as he ignited his Z-Saber. "You know this to be true."

"Well, then you'll have to delete me," Dark Megaman chuckled, raising his DarkSword. "There's no other way you'll ever stop me."

"How funny," Zero. exe remarked. "I seem to recall there was no other way of stopping me once. A virus that infected navis, only to become one itself. Far too dangerous to let live, regardless of what anyone felt on the matter."

Dark Megaman winced as he felt something stir within him and ruthlessly suppressed it.

"And yet here I am," the former virus stared down the newly minted darkloid, daring him to deny the parallel between their situations. "You can yet be saved, my friend. Until that happens, I can keep you busy. Without harming you if necessary."

"You'll fail," Dark Megaman swung his blade, and Zero. exe calmly caught it on his own, the two cyberblades locking together in a struggle of strength.

"We'll see."

"DarkThunder!" Seijin yelled out as the last DarkHole closed and the static barrier protecting Jammingman. exe went down. As he'd been doing ever since Seijin and Jammingman. exe had jammed Team Famous's connection to Charlie's PET, Gridman. exe formed his team clones and deliberately intercepted the attack.

"Charge!" Punk. exe yelled, turning into his spiked ball mode and rolling at Jammingman. exe, followed by the rest of the team. They wanted to end this as fast as possible, before Seijin threw anything more dangerous at them.

"Perfect!" Seijin laughed. "BattleChips in! Download!"

"Program Advance!" Jammingman. exe was obscured as an avatar of Shademan. exe appeared before him. "BigNoise!"

"ARGH!" Punk. exe, along with the speedy Kendoman. exe fell as the giant wave of noise hit them all.

"That's more like it!" Seijin laughed. "DarkCannon!"

Enker. exe did his/her best to defend, but without Kalinka's operational assistance he/she simply could not form the MirrorBuster fast enough and he/she went down hard when the shot hit.

"Eat this, jerk!" Ballade. exe yelled, throwing an explosive. "Ballade Cracker!"

"Static Barrier! Static!"

The barrier negated the bomb while the tainted digital wind tore into Ballade. exe who screamed in pain.

"GateCannon!" the shot finally did damage to Jammingman. exe, and he turned his attention to the remainder of his opponents.

Sunayama sat in the prison's media room, holding the SubPET that had been delivered recently. He wasn't exactly sure how long, and it didn't seem to matter. The SubPET had limited functionality, and if he wanted to actually use the Net, he had to use one of the prison's navis assigned for prisoner use.

But he didn't. None of that mattered to him. Just the precious contents of the SubPET in his hands, showing a small patch of sandy brown that would look like a worthless blob to anyone else, but was infinitely precious to him.

How long had it been since he'd lost his partner? Since he'd used those strange upgrades Lord Wily had 'procured' from questionable sources? Since...

When that Tesla woman had showed him the SubPET he currently held and told him what it contained, he'd nearly broken down right then and there. He'd sold to her soon after. He'd have sold a hundred times over for what she'd given him back. He just...

"Su... na... ya... ma...?" the slow, barely coherent voice sounded from the SubPET.

Tears streaked down Sunayama's face as he wished he knew who exactly was responsible for this. Whoever they were...

...they were a miracle worker.

Mayl did her best to tune out the sound of clashing blades between Zero. exe and Megaman. exe's DarkSoul, keep her grip on Lan's PET despite the apparent DarkPower sparks racing over it trying to shock her into letting it go, and focus on her navi. Her navi who was in pain after taking the full brunt of the DarkPower surge that had floored Lan and infected his PET.

She recalled the few lessons Andou and Stargirl. exe had given them regarding the Way of the Miko in between archery lessons and focus exercises. She hadn't gotten far, but what she had managed seemed familiar to her somehow.

She remembered watching Chaud go through something similar when his navi had been infected during the Blue Moon tournament. How he'd synched with Protoman. exe to snap him out of the early stages.

Taking a deep breath, she held on despite the pain and focused on her connection to Roll. exe. Focused, and pushed her feelings through the corrupting darkness and into her navi. There seemed to be a moment of resistance, and then the familiar sensation of full synchro being achieved amidst a complete absence of the sparks of DarkPower from before.

"Roll?"

"Feeling like myself again, Mayl!"

"That's good. Ready to go save Megaman?"

"Of course!"

"Okay, we need to time this just right..."

Not noticing the stares from her teammates as they helped Lan sit up, Mayl began selecting chips as Roll. exe waited to join the fray.

"Why are you so set on doing the impossible?" Dark Megaman growled as his DarkSword clashed against Zero. exe's Z-Saber. "Megaman's mind has been claimed by the DarkPower! There is no turning back! I am the one and only Megaman!"

"Fool," Zero. exe scoffed as the two combatants pushed off from each other. "You know not the power of his soul. He was able to save me once from a situation yet more hopeless than what he is in and now I shall return the favor!"

"That'll be hard to do when I kill you!" Dark Megaman sneered as he used data for a Recover300 chip and followed it with a series of AirShots that pushed Zero. exe back before forming a darkly glowing cannon.

"Battle Chip in!" Mayl yelled suddenly from her end. "Download! Static!" (55)

"Wha–?" Dark Megaman paused in surprise, preventing him from dodging as Zero. exe blasted him with the tainted digital wind, causing his form to waver.

"Now!" Zero. exe yelled as he slashed with his Z-Saber, knocking Dark Megaman off-balance.

"HolyPanel! Barrier! Repair! Program Advance!" came the voice of Mayl as Roll. exe appeared directly in front of Dark Megaman. "LifeSaver!"

"GAAAHHHH!" Dark Megaman cried out as Roll's protective program advance was used in a manner never intended and attempted to purge him of the dark power corrupting him.

"Did it work?" Roll. exe asked as their opponent slumped over, his darkened body flickering to the brighter colors of his real self intermittently.

"T-that..." the flickering form choked out, and then began laughing. "That... all?"

"It didn't work," Roll. exe backed up as Dark Megaman got to his feet. "He's still in Nebula's clutches..."

"Don't count him out yet," Zero. exe admonished, taking a ready stance. "He's stronger than any of us know."

"This... is the end!" Dark Megaman activated a cannon style chip. "DarkCann–AGH!?"

"L-Lan..." the voice of Hub, the untainted mind trapped in the darkness, struggled to make itself heard. "Ev...eryone... I-I won't... give in... As long... as I know... you haven't... given up... I won't give in... to the DarkPower...!"

"...Tsk!" Dark Megaman sneered as he took control once more, the DarkPower within him flaring like a bonfire. "Stay down where you belong! This body belongs–"

"–TO ME!" Hub yelled as the DarkPower around him burst like a bubble, leaving him to collapse into unconsciousness. But not before his soul resonated with the navi who had led the rescue effort. (56)

Seijin Yami growled as he kept up the assault with Jammingman. exe. Why wouldn't they just die already?! Any idiot could see that he had every advantage! He had the better navi, who was attuned to the environment, he had the superior operating skills (even when he hadn't disabled his opponents' operators), and he had the best chips! He was the only one who could use them thanks to the special trap he and Jammingman. exe had put together!

So why were these second-raters so bound and determined to keep coming?!

"Death Touchdown!" the football-themed navi yelled as he bum-rushed Jammingman. exe.

"Why are you so set on fighting a losing battle!" Seijin yelled as he directed Jammingman. exe to fire on the advancing navi, who just kept coming no matter the hits he took. Several of which should by all rights have forced him to abort the attack from sheer force of impact.

"Because!" the navi yelled as he hit Jammingman. exe's location, and caused the whole area to detonate and carve a large chunk out of Jammingman. exe's health.

"Gah! Get off of me!"

When the smoke cleared, Seijin saw the football navi grappling with Jammingman. exe and started searching for some good close range chips to force him off.

"Because when I listen to you, I hear myself and it makes me want to puke!" the football navi yelled.

" What?! " Seijin abandoned his search to sputter indignantly.

"All this 'I'm the best', 'I can do anything', and 'I don't need a team' crap I hear out of your mouth? That was me not even a month ago! I was so bad Famous had to go find someone to kick my ass and knock some sense into me!"

"YOU ARE NOTHING LIKE ME!" Seijin roared. "I'M THE DARK PRODIGY SEIJIN YAMI! YOU ARE NOTHING BUT ONE OF FAMOUS'S STUPID TINKER-TOY REJECTS THAT HE MAKES OUT OF BOREDOM!"

"Seijin! I need a chip!" Jammingman. exe called out in worry, but Seijin was too incensed by the football navi grappling with him to hear his navi's words.

"Yeah, and in another life I'd have probably been your navi," the sports-themed navi snorted. "We'd have been quite an all-star pair, I think... Too bad you never really learned how to play on a team. Do it guys!"

"GATECANNON!"

"BALLADECRACKER!"

"MADROLLER!"

"BARRIERSPEAR!"

"TRAINING!"

"SAKUGARNE! IMPACT!"

Seijin was halfway through realizing what was going on when his PET screen dissolved into static.

"No... Not again... I... I can't have lost again ..."

He had to get out of here. If the Officials found him, he'd be arrested and go back to prison. He was never going back to prison if he could help it. If Nebula, the guys who had broken him out and revived Jammingman. exe, found him...

Well, prison would probably seem like a much better option at that point.

He scrambled to grab all the equipment he could carry and ran to the door, flung it open– –and ran face-first into Bullet Baret's fist.

Dr. Regal sat in his office pondering the things he'd verified. Megaman. exe's escape from the DarkPower he'd been ensnared with was... unfortunate, but... not unexpected. Not after what he'd learned. The master of Nebula had, however, managed to grill Dark Megaman over some of the things he'd come to suspect since the incident with Duo.

He'd heard about their uncanny ability to prepare for scenarios despite having no possible way to know about them beforehand. WWW, Gospel, his early Darkloids, and even Duo had all fallen before their uncanny foreknowledge. And so he'd arranged to have them bugged and he'd heard some rather unbelievable things.

But with Dark Megaman's volunteered information pulled from the navi's own mind, he had to admit the likely truth. Lan and his navi had traveled back in time through some mysterious manner. They possessed foreknowledge because they had lived through the events before. And they had vocally anticipated events that could only come after his and Nebula's defeat.

Well, they'd learn. With even the slivers he'd gleaned, he could change the game considerably. But of course, for him to pull it off properly no one else could know. Not his underlings in Nebula, not his Darkloids, not even Cosmoman. exe.

But the world would find out soon enough...

---

1) Poll time! How many of you want to strangle me for teasing a big reveal and then yanking it away like that?

2) That Interrupt chip? Looks like Chaud kept a couple of things from the incident with Junkman. exe.

3) Reydrago: I think the train been on fire for awhile, young hero.

4) I tried to resist the pun, but it was snow use.

5) I tried to resist the pun but… wait a sec...

6) Or at least not completely guilty.

7) She means the communication disruption at the end of Battle Network 4, not a previous Loop.

8) Ms. Millions is kind of a creepy lady given the way she pretty much hits on Lan when they meet in BN2. That said, fighting Nebula sounds like something she'd go for.

9) Ah, Masa's (Sharkman. exe's operator) not-so-secret identity in the anime. Misteriyu is Miyu (Skullman. exe's operator) and Black Rose is Sal (Woodman. exe's operator).

10) Anyone else remember that little stage show in BN3 when you went to fight Mistman. exe or Bowlman. exe? In any case, the Net Rangers (here representing all five generic navi types in the series):

Net Red: Paulie and Jammer (as a GuardNavi recolored red)

Net Blue: 'Cyber Sage' Koetsu, named in-series for one of the main game programmers Koetsu Matsuda, and his blue male FaceNavi

(rather than the NormalNavi he was shown with in Battle Chip Challenge), named Honami in the last Battle Network Activation installment.

Net Green: Flave and his NormalNavi Orr

Net Yellow: Yuko and Ponta (as a female FaceNavi), back from the dead again for funsies

Net Black: Tetsu and his HeelNavi Bo

11) Cows are Apollo's sacred animal. At least he had a herd of them and cursed Odysseus's men when they slaughtered one for food.

12) Glide. exe politely pretended he didn't hear anything.

13) Because the game's animators were lazy and didn't make movement sprites for the four in their swimsuits.

14) Now there's an understatement...

15) The whole 'trapped with giant drill coming down from above' thing makes this a scary-ass scenario, let me tell you. Now, whether it's scarier with Pride, whose navi is completely out of her control, or Tesla, who doesn't seem to care in the first place , is up for debate.

16) Admit it, you were wondering this when she showed up in the tournament.

17) Well, you see Dex, there's this whole 'sworn to secrecy' thing and... right, you can't hear me...

18) Clearly, he got better.

19) For all that she becomes an ally in the game, Tesla is amazingly petty to begin with.

20) The second part of this line (after the 'umm...') by burningclaw2. Also, if you don't know what a cat fight is, it refers to two girls/women (stereotypically attractive) in a knock-down, drag-out, hair-pulling, nail-scratching, clothes-ripping brawl. Males stereotypically prefer to stand back and enjoy the show since the other option is trying to break it up and likely becoming the target of both violent females.

21) Lan Down!

22) Okay, Lan... in light of your injury, I'll forgive the incredibly lame pun.

23) Conveniently ignoring the fact that he and his favored prophets were some of the most frequent offenders.

24) I'm not kidding. The difference between her personality before joining the team and after is so stark and sudden that I can't help but wonder if she's got some psychological disorder...

25) Once More Unto The Beach.

26) Having commandeered Mayl's shirt which, while still a few sizes small on her, was a better fit than any of Yai's spare clothes.

27) The 'legendary fist navi' is the guy whose image is on the BronzeFist, SilverFist, and GoldFist chips. If any of you readers knows who the heck (if anyone) that's supposed to be a reference to, I'd love to know.

28) A character in the anime named Andou Romeda became the temporary operator of Starman. exe. Though she was a fortune teller, not a shinto priestess... Odd, that...

29) Poor Windman. exe...

30) Not to mention the happy dance his mother was doing upon seeing how he and Mayl kept blushing and trying to pretend they weren't looking at each other. No one really held that against Mrs. Hikari considering that she needed all the positive thinking she could get with her husband's whereabouts still unknown.

31) Hub would have thought it a sign of the apocalypse if Nebula hadn't already gained an iron grip on the world. As it was, he'd snuck off to the message boards a couple of nights to see if anyone had spotted Duo. exe's comet returning a few centuries earlier than scheduled.

32) He totally meant to fall off his seat as he did so. Brilliant tactic to catch his possible assailant off guard. At least that was his story and he was sticking to it.

33) Pardon me for a moment. I need to hit myself for making this pun.

34) Suddenly, football.

35) The last couple of lines of this part by GammaTron. The unmentionable is another of Hephaestus's dirty socks. Shame on you if you thought otherwise.

36) You've already guessed who this is, haven't you?

37) Wait, was Gridman. exe modeled after Charlie Brown now?

38) This is another ninja technique not unique to Naruto's universe. I apologize if you think that should be obvious, but I've sadly learned otherwise.

39) Chaud acquired the chip to train the Muramasa Style, but rumor has it that the one Shadowman. exe holds is the original program that the chip is styled after.

40) Why, yes, I am implying exactly what it sounds like.

41) Lyrics from Africa by Toto.

42) The description is basically the WaterGodComp's appearance in BN4's overworld.

43) Because of how I like to call the PC Wave Man 'Water Man' (from Mega Man 3 for the PC), this means Waterman. exe is a navi counterpart to one of the PC Robot Masters.

44) Hmm... Getting Lan back in the game after losing Hub... Door #1, Chaud and Protoman. exe... Door #2, Baryl and Colonel. exe... Hmm...

Let's see what's behind door #3.

45) Finally! The reveal you've all been waiting for! (And some of you had likely already guessed)

46) Eep.

47) blinks Umm... what exactly did we just walk in on?

48) Sunna wasn't exactly thrilled either.

49) Whaddya know, they have an official name after all according to this scene... Though you'd miss it if you blinked during the appearance of that one line of text. Looks like I'm going to have to go back to the previous chapter and change it from OfficialNavis at some point.

50) I bet you were all wondering what happened to him after he lost to Mayl, right? crickets chirp Yeah... didn't think so...

51) Yep, that's right. The captain's navi is Waveman. exe.

52) No, not Airstar. I only just realized that we have two Charlies to keep track of... This is why the One Steve Limit exists. Except there's no Steves that I have to deal with. Just Charlies.

53) I think the Mega Man: Inside Out Loop implies the answer to this question towards the end.

54) Hot potato.

55) Static is part of a set of chips sometimes referred to as 'Evil Chips' that require the user to be a 'denizen of the darkness' to utilize (which includes DarkSoul navis), or to possess a workaround such as the DarkLicense program or having a DarkHole open on their side of the field. Zero. exe would count as a natural denizen due to his status as a viral navi, even though, like Serenade. exe, he's not actually evil.

Dark Megaman's surprise is because that group of chips was about the last thing he expected any of his opponents to be to be using.

56) Yes, that's right. ZeroSoul. I went there.

Next time: ...this is War.

Happy New Year From The Yggdrasil Admins

Happy New Year from the Admins of Yggdrasil

AdminSpace.1

Dionysus whistled to himself as he approached the cafeteria. Yggdrasil might be in a right state and everyone was running around in a panic, but that was no reason not to take time to appreciate the finer things in life, like good wine and good foo–

The god of wine stopped as he beheld the sight in the Admin cafeteria and backed up out of the doorway before taking a quick swig of his current bottle. Nope, just wine. Which probably meant he was really seeing that.

"Oy! Get out of the doorway!" some Afrikans deity whose name he couldn't remember yelled at him. "What's so blasted interesting you Olympian drunkard?"

"There's some sort of flying spaghetti monster in the cafeteria," Dionysus replied, continuing to stare, but stepping back a bit further to clear the doorway.

"Uh-huh..." the other Admin rolled his eyes and strode past in a huff, glaring at the open wine bottle in the wine god's hand. "How much of that stuff have you had today, you–GAH!"

The Afrikans deity scrambled backwards in shocked panic.

"THAT THING JUST TOUCHED ME WITH ITS NOODLY APPENDAGE! WHAT IS IT DOING IN THERE ANYWAY?!"

Dionysus squinted. It looked like the creature was making something. In fact... "It looks like it's making a beer volcano..."

After a few moments to process that, Dionysus decided he could get to like this bizarre being and strode into the cafeteria.

AdminSpace.2

"I'm honestly surprised you even know how to use a terminal, much less do something that complex with it..."

"I picked up a few things from my unwashed oaf of a husband," Aphrodite sniffed in disdain. "Really, he would never shut up about his precious work..."

"Even when you were trying to seduce him?"

" Please ," the goddess of love scoffed, "I would never waste my talents on the likes of him ."

AdminSpace.3

Nut giggled like a blushing schoolgirl at what was being said on the other end of her office line. "Oh, darling, you have the naughtiest mind!"

"..."

"Geb!" Nut's starry night-sky form blushed like a supernova going off. "I know we have catching up to do, but I'm at least too out of practice to do the entire divine sutra in one sitting!"

"..."

"Oh, honey! I'd never suggest... I'm sorry... It's just... we haven't seen each other in so long that even I've been tempted a few times and..."

"..."

"No, I'd never go through with it either... sigh One of these days Ra is going to screw up micromanaging our schedules and we'll be able to get together for some fun... Maybe make another honeymoon out of it... mmmmm"

"..."

"Really? Pele offered... hold on a moment honeybun... I've got something going on here I don't think is supposed to exist in this particular Loop iteration. I'll have to call you back, Geb dear. Love, kisses, and a raincheck on everything else! mwah!"

click

"Okay, let's see what's going on and... Oh please don't tell me that damn sociopathic magical girl mascot looped in and I missed it..."

AdminSpace.4

Fenrir looked up at his blind date and fought back a groan.

She was beautiful (for a goddess who preferred a human-like form, but then Fenrir was the son of a shapeshifter so he was less hung up on that than most), sure. She was also dressed in a pure white toga overlayed with blue armor that highlighted her form and with a bright red cape draped over her shoulders. A red cape with a hood draped over her golden sunburst crown.

"Do you have any idea how many bad jokes that outfit will invite?" he rubbed his face with his paws.

"Well," the goddess smiled slightly, revealing that she seemed to find the situation rather more humorous than Fenrir did, "I did prepare for a night out with the biggest, baddest wolf in the heavens..."

Fenrir lost his fight against the groan, prompting the goddess Marianne Liberty to giggle like a chorus of bells.

(EvilhHumour)

A couple of tables away, sat three beings.

"Mom, this didn't work with us so why do you think it will work for Fenrir?"

"Shush boy, I'm making sure your brother's date goes good." The masculine voice muttered, peeking over his menu.

"Remind me again why a shapeshifter, and two horse gods, are using these plastic glasses as a disguise?" The only female at the table asked while still wearing them.

"Because mom likes Groucho Marx and-"

"Shush boy or I will show Epona your baby pictures!" The father snapped, leaning up in his chair.

"Mom, please don't get us kicked out of another restaurant!"

AdminSpace.5 (Arcticx-Frost)

"AHAHAHAHAH!"

The somewhat manic laughter continued for somewhere close to three minutes before tapering off into wheezes. Ares looked up from where he had slumped on the floor to catch his breath to the complete silence of the office.

"I DID IT! He finally fucking did it. It has taken..." The god paused to look at the feed on his terminal for a few moments. "three hundred sixty-seven trillion, six hundred ninety-two billion, five hundred fifty-six million, one hundred sixty-nine thousand, five hundred forty-five attempts. The Kid has finally completed a single baseline loop. I-"

A beeping from his terminal made him pause, as well as make his eyelid twitch with stress.

"WHAT!" Grabbing the screen from it's stand, Ares' face gaped at the bloody smear sitting under the 'Thanks for playing' sign.

ATTEMPT FAILED

Not one of the other Admins would admit it, but most of them thought that smashing the screen and crying in the corner was a valid response to the situation.

AdminSpace.6 (dragonraptyr)

Masakado stared at the cat who was currently sitting on his terminal. The Tokyo god blinked, trying to figure out what had just happened. For her part, the cat looked as eager to please as any feline could. She gave a short bow, and smiled up at him. "Hi, I'm new!"

Masakado gave a sigh. "I'm not sure I even want to know anymore." He stuck his head into the hallway. "Can someone tell Skuld that a cat from the Hub is now a Shinto deity? My brain is broken."

AdminSpace.7 (EvilhHumour and me)

Jormungandr looked at his brothers and their dates as they ran from the restaurant, angry shouts behind them.

"Say, why hasn't dad done this to Hel yet?" He asked as they turned the corner, with Marianne holding on tight with her legs around Fenrir's neck and one hand to her red hood.

"Are you kidding?" his other brother said, ducking the thrown pasta. "Mom's little girl? As far as a Loki as concerned, Hel's not going able to date for a few more iterations!"

"Less chatting girls, more fleeing!" Epona giggled as they ran through a park.

Off to the side, a goddess whose appearance had far more in common with a mortal named Harvey Dent (aka Two-Face) than most females would like overheard the comment as her brothers and their dates tore past and sighed heavily.

"I've had a boyfriend for eons," Hel muttered indignantly to herself. "It's not my fault that none of you believe Baldur actually likes me..."

"Loki is simply not ready for his little girl to grow up," a man held out a bouquet of roses, beaming a smile at her. "Shall we go scare the old man, my dear?" Baldur held a hand out for his beautiful girlfriend, grin growing as she accepted it.

AdminSpace.8 - A Former Lover Part 1

Aglaea; goddess of grace and splendor second class, daughter of Zeus by Eurynome, one of the attendants/interns assigned to Aphrodite, and thus one of the people who actually did the first class love goddess's paperwork; rushed down the hall clutching a folder to her ample chest and trying hard not to blush. She'd done her best not to sound too eager for the simple messenger assignment, but she was certain her mistress/boss had seen right through her.

But she'd been given the job anyway, which just about had her on cloud nine. It had been so long since she'd seen him after all. Since before the Event and the subsequent emergency activation of the Loop protocols. She...

...She wondered if he even remembered her, really. Sure, they'd been lovers for a long while, lived together, had four of the loveliest, most amazing daughters together, but... It had been a long time since her mistress/boss had forbidden her to see him. A very long time indeed. Technically, she was still forbidden, she supposed. But she was also on a direct message errand to his office, so it certainly wouldn't be her fault if they just... bumped into each other... or she tripped and fell into his strong arms... or they both fell to the floor and...

She shook her head of that train of thought. Deliver the message first. Then see if he still felt... anything... for her. After that, she supposed whatever happened, happened.

Stopping, she realized that she'd overshot her destination and backtracked a bit before knocking.

"It's open," a strong female voice responded.

Aglaea froze at the sound of a woman's voice. Had he moved on? Found another lover? It wasn't like she'd been his first after all. Or even his only while they were together. There was even that time they'd had a bit too much of Dionysus's wine and woken up in bed with that goddess from–

"I swear, if this is another knock-and-ditch I am going to find out who's responsible and break their knuckles," the voice from before interrupted Aglaea's thoughts.

Taking a deep breath to prepare herself, Aglaea clutched the message tighter to her chest and opened the door.

"Oh, good," the woman behind the desk in the outer office said as she stepped in, "I don't have to break any knuckles this time."

Aglaea stopped and stared at the other woman. She was gorgeous. Not as gorgeous as Aglaea's mistress/boss (by said goddess of beauty's repeated insistence), but she was shapely, reasonably endowed, and very much in shape. She wasn't what Aglaea's mistress/boss denounced as 'horridly butch', but had well-defined muscles that could clearly back up her threat of breaking knuckles while accentuating her femininity. The woman was also wearing what looked like a business suit made out of chainmail. One that hugged her figure so close it emphasized every feminine curve. Along with her nordic appearance, it was clear this woman was a Valkyrie.

"Well?" the Valkyrie asked.

"I... I have a message for H-Hephaestus?" Aglaea barely managed to not squeak. She completely failed to not blush.

"Oh, come in," the Valkyrie waved in exasperation. "I'm not going to bite."

"Plus the door's kind of in my way," a second voice came from behind the open door.

Aglaea jumped several inches on hearing a second woman's voice. Still, she hurried in and shut the door, seeing another Valkyrie behind it. This one in what appeared to be a skintight metal mesh bodysuit. Next to her lay a set of boots, gauntlets, and helmet within arm's reach. She also had her eyes closed and seemed to be resting.

"Thank you," the second Valkyrie said without even opening her eyes.

"Y-you're welcome..." Aglaea stuttered nervously. This one was just as beautiful as the other!

"You said you had a message?" the Valkyrie behind the desk, Herfjötur if she was reading the nameplate right, reminded her.

"Y-yes!" Aglaea fumbled with the missive a bit before holding it out to the Valkyrie. "Lady Aphrodite se–"

"File thirteen," Herfjötur pointed to the side of her desk. Aglaea blinked and looked, but saw nothing except a wastebasket.

"Um..." Aglaea fidgeted a bit. This wasn't going how she'd hoped it would. "Don't you want to read what it says?"

"Is it offers for divine beauty treatments," Herfjötur began ticking off her fingers, "a great deal on a vacation in that poor excuse for a romantic comedy setting she runs, an ad for a cheap dating service for unattached goddesses, a complaint about Hephaestus, or yet another reminder that Heph hasn't set up a fused Loop with aforementioned poor excuse for a romantic comedy setting in a while?"

"Er..." Aglaea pulled the message back and skimmed it. "The last one?"

"Right," Herfjötur nodded towards the wastebasket again. "Please tell Aphrodite that we 'appreciate' her concern, but that Hephaestus is perfectly happy using the Satellite of Love as his go-to Safe-Mode Loop. And even if it's not available, he's brokered arrangements with the Admins who run a number of others so there is little chance he will need to make use of Aphrodite's any time for the foreseeable future."

"Oh... Right." Aglaea drooped at the realization. That was it, then. She'd failed her assignment which meant that she'd never be sent back here with anything ever again. Never get to see him again. Never have a chance to–

"Hey now," the other Valkyrie was suddenly at Aglaea's side, "surely it can't be that bad, can it?"

Aglaea sniffed pitifully and realized that she'd begun crying right there in Hephaestus's office. In front of two gorgeous Valkyries that were probably his latest lovers and were so much better than she was and–

"I'm a failure..." Aglaea sobbed. "I can't even deliver a message properly and now Lady Aphrodite won't ever have any reason to send me over because she'll know I'll fail and I won't ever get to see him again and I'll never get to tell him how sorry I am about what happened the last time we saw each other..."

"Come on, sit down," the other Valkyrie firmly directed her over to a chair and just as firmly made her sit in it.

"Now..." Herfjötur commanded as she pulled over two more chairs for herself and the other Valkyrie to sit in, both facing Aglaea as she broke down in front of them, "tell us what this is all about..."

Aglaea sniffed and looked at the two warrior Aesir. They seemed concerned, genuinely concerned rather than what Lady Aphrodite often showed in its place, but also stern. Protective. Of Hephaestus. In case whatever this was might hurt him.

"Okay..." Aglaea wiped away her tears as best she could. "It all started way back when..."

AdminSpace.9 (Evilhumour and Firehawk242)

Bast held Tama close to her, glaring at the wolf Admin. "Fenrir, I am shocked at you! How could you?!"

"She was in my plate! How was I supposed to know she was the new Admin everyone is talking about!?" Fenrir looked at the cat again, licking his lips before a newspaper descended onto his nose.

Fand drifted over to observe the new Admin on a flutter of wings. "Oh how adorable!"

"Hi, my name's Tama," the cat said.

"Do you have a boyfriend Tama?" Fand asked.

"Uh, no..." Tama said, confused.

"Eeeee!" Fand squealed with delight. "I'll go put together a list of possible choices right away!" She flew off fast enough to blow loose papers around in her wake.

"She's always like this," Madoka said, passing by with an armful of paperwork.

AdminSpace.10 (Vadrigar)

Gordon was looking at the small cat that had suddenly appeared in the tram on the way to Sector C, and was very confused. Then it started to talk.

"Hi! My name is Tama! I'm your new Admin, nice to meet you!"

For the first time in decades, Gordon was absolutely speechless.

"Ah jeez, I'm running la-oh god, oh god what was that?"

All he remembered was seeing a talking cat in the tram last loop, then everything going black. Then, he turned around to see the same cat in the same spot, still seemingly happy as ever.

"Hi! I don't know if you remember, but when you saw me last loop, you didn't talk for a while, then just passed out. A little while later some bad guys came and shot you. But don't worry, I reset the loop and everything will be super!"

Gordon didn't remain speechless this time.

"WHAT IN THE FU–"

AdminSpace.11 (Evilhumour)

"Do you mind getting off my head?" Fenrir grunted as he walked towards the fridge.

"But I'm so high up here and your head is so comfy!" The cat giggled, watching the wolf opened the fridge to reveal a mewling paperbag. "Aww, Fenrir you got me some playmates!"

Fenrir's stomach fell as he watched Tama play with his lunch, but he chuckled as he stole Zeus's lunch, watching the new Admin play with her friends on the kitchen table in front of him.

AdminSpace.12 (Varigar, with additions by me)

"ZEUS!"

The god of thunder was startled into consciousness after a "brief" nap, with a very angry Skuld glaring at him and tapping her foot.

"Wha, what, what? What is it?"

"Why, WHY, in the name of Yggdrasil did you tell the new Admin she was assigned to the Half Life loops?!"

"I did? OH, that. Well that loop's needed an official Admin for a while, and it was stable enough as it was, so I figured she wouldn't have too much trouble!"

"Tama has the mind of a CHILD, you blithering moron! How could you make her have to look after THAT man?! He'll drive her insane faster than you can say-"

"Oh, hello!"

Both Skuld and Zeus jumped at the small sound, looking around to see a small cat on the floor near them.

"Sorry! I didn't mean to startle you. Anyway, I thought I should let you both know that I managed to stabilize the Half Life loops enough that they're going through an expansion! I'm so happy! Gordon will be so excited when I tell him!"

The cat wandered off, and Skuld didn't dare turn around, for she knew all she would see was Zeus' grinning mug.

" Regardless of apparent success due to sheer dumb luck," Skuld ground out, "she needs training before starting as an Admin. Find her some."

"Sure," the head of the Olympians shrugged nonchalantly as the youngest norn went off to find something to relieve her apparent headache.

Had she been thinking clearly, she might have wondered what Zeus was up to that he'd agree so easily.

AdminSpace.13

"Oh for the love of..." Hephaestus sighed as he read the memo and looked over his latest assignment. He'd been given another student. Recent Ascension straight from the Hub, textbook postmortem faith and emotion deification which was much smoother than a straight power Ascension. Plus she hadn't been a looper, meaning nothing important had been relying on her for support. All it meant was paperwork.

"You're mad, aren't you?" the new feline deity laid her ears back and lowered herself warily. "I'm sorry... The bearded storm man said it was okay and he told me to come here even though that place with the Gordon guy is going just fine and..." She was also rambling... and making sad kitten eyes that–

"OH MY GOSH YOU'RE ADORABLE !"

And Hephaestus's Valkyrie parole officers/assistants had just spotted her.

"I love your fur!" Herfjötur squealed.

"It's so soft!" Eir agreed.

"Scratchies!" Brynhildr scratched the confused feline goddess behind the ears. She seemed to like it.

Hephaestus sighed heavily and pinched the bridge of his nose. Valkyries didn't normally do such things, but... Well, the feline goddess was adorable. His wife would have probably declared the cat goddess a mangy beast and insisted that the distraction from her so-called 'divine form' be removed posthaste. "Ladies... please stop crowding my newest student..."

"Wait," the feline's ear perked up, "you'll really teach me Hephaestus-sensei?"

"As opposed to fighting this and risking you being reassigned to someone who has to call tech support just to find the 'on' button? Yes."

"She wouldn't really be reassigned to someo–"

"My father signed off on this."

"...Yeah, good call."

The calico feline looked back and forth in confusion, not really comprehending that Zeus would happily reassign her to apprentice under an Admin who barely knew what they were doing just to spite

Hephaestus should he refuse the latest addition to his already overworked schedule.

Hephaestus just looked over the paperwork.

Name: Tama.

Gender: Female.

Pantheon: Shinto Kami.

Former Race: Mortal housecat (Calico).

Native reality: The Hub.

Previous Occupation: Ultra-Stationmaster (Kishi Rail Station), Vice President (Wakayama Electric Railway), Honourable Eternal Stationmaster (Posthumous Promotion).

Hephaestus blinked at the occupation list. Hmm...

"Um... Hephaestus-sensei?" Tama asked hesitantly.

"I see you have an affinity for trains," Hephaestus noted.

"Um... yeah... I love trains!"

"Well, one of my assigned branches is rather stable all things considered," he mused. "Never gives me any trouble, which unfortunately means that it gets frequently neglected in favor of those that do. You shall run it as part of your internship and, if I am satisfied with your progress at the end of your lessons, then I shall oversee its permanent transfer to you."

"R-really? Um... what kind of place is it?"

"Talking trains," Hephaestus replied and barely suppressed a chuckle at the way Tama's eyes lit up.

AdminSpace.14 (Leviticus Wilkes)

Skuld walked into Madoka's cubicle, a fire in her eyes. She hadn't received Madoka's progress update on her work that day, and if Madoka didn't have a good reason, she'd... Get a stern talking to.

Skuld wouldn't yell at her: even she had standards.

Madoka was sitting there when Skuld arrived, and all questions were answered with a simple point to her head. Nestled neatly in her hair was Tama, snoozing gently.

Skuld took one look, deigned to wake Tama up, said nothing, and left the room. A god cat sleeping on your head was a good reason for procrastination, after all.

AdminSpace.8 - A Former Lover Part 2

Madoka was a number of things. A magical girl, a former Anchor, a recently Ascended goddess (undetermined influence, probationary class), one of Hephaestus's protégés, and an adopted member of the forge god's eclectic group of children. At the moment she had been dragged from her duties by four of his daughters, who had introduced themselves as the (younger) Charites, so they could give her a makeover.

They had been very insistent about that.

They were also filling Madoka in on a lot of their family history that she hadn't yet been introduced to.

"Okay," Madoka stated after Eucleia had finished applying the lipstick, "so I know Eros is the son of Aphrodite and Ares, but he was foisted off on Hephaestus to raise..."

"Because 'auntie' freaked out over the possibility of raising a kid and Ares refused to have anything to do with a 'namby-pamby love god'," Eupheme nodded from where she was doing Madoka's nails.

"Pandora was created by Hephaestus and Athena from clay as a mortal," Madoka continued, determined to keep this all straight, "but they strong-armed a petition for her Ascension when they learned she was meant as a scapegoat for the other Olympians."

"You don't mess with Pandora when either of them are in earshot," Euthenia giggled as she double-checked Madoka's measurements while sewing a garment. "Or if they might learn about it later."

"Thalia is... only half Olympian?" Madoka had been a bit distracted by the way Euthenia was measuring her chest when the nymph's mother, a goddess from another pantheon, was named and didn't want to admit it.

"She inherited her mother's exotic skin tone, too," Philophrosyne grinned as she continued styling Madoka's hair. "Caught Zeus's eye in fact."

"Okay, I know that Admins don't really have that issue like mortals do, but isn't she still his granddaughter?"

"Well, yeah," Eupheme agreed. "That's how she figured out how to stop his advances. One cheerful 'hi grandpa!' and Zeus's boner died a confused death. Feel free to try that if he ever starts coming on to you."

"I'll... try and remember that..." Madoka suppressed a shudder at the idea of the head of the Olympians trying to seduce her. From what she heard, he was really good at it when he wanted to be too. "Anyway, the Palici twins are Aetna's?"

"Yep, the steampunk duo," Philophrosyne used her favorite nickname for the geyser gods.

"And the Cabeiri are..." Madoka fished. That part had been complicated. She wasn't entirely sure if they all shared a mother or not.

"A lovable bunch of geeks," Euthenia answered as if that explained everything. Perhaps it did.

"And you four are all daughters of 'Aphrodite light'?"

"We like to think of mom as 'dear auntie' minus the 'alpha bitch'," Eucleia insisted as she finished selecting an eyeshadow and began applying it.

"Plus more chest," Eupheme gestured to her own suggestively.

"And..." Madoka blushed at the casualness of the gesture, "there were rumors about someone named Erichthonius? Or Erechtheus?"

"Athena's favorite colonel?" Philophrosyne clarified. "He'll answer to either. And he's officially Athena's son since she raised him."

"Okay, but I keep hearing that his father was Hephaestus?"

"Yeah, but all the rumors that say that also say that he tried to force himself on Athena and even she dismisses that idea as patently ridiculous. Mom and a bunch of other gods and goddesses back her up on that too. Honestly, I think if dad had tried to force himself on her, she wouldn't be nearly as polite to him as she is. Whoever Erechtheus's birth parents are, only Athena knows for sure and she's not telling."

"Fair enough... Now... who else was there again?"

Aglaea told her story to Herfjötur and Eir, the second Valkyrie, as they sat in Hephaestus's outer office.

"I first became aware of Hephaestus when I was young. My mother was one of the ones who found him after he was cast out by his parents and took him in. She always talked about what a brilliant child he was and what a shame it was that Zeus and Hera didn't seem to want him. Then she'd complain about how he'd leave an unholy mess from tinkering with something or other and mess up her river."

That's pretty much what anyone knew about him back then, really. A smart guy who made things, worked hard, and really didn't socialize. And then Aphrodite flounced up from wherever she was from and walked on in. It's hard to explain what that was like, to be honest. She was so beautiful, confident, and sensual in everything she did that it seemed like all the gods wanted her and all the goddesses wanted to be her. Like the mortals might say, she was the 'cool girl', the alpha debutante, and anyone who tried to say otherwise suddenly found their social circle gutted. Only Hera and Athena didn't try to get on her good side and, well, Hera was the head goddess of the Olympians who didn't take kindly to the 'young upstart' and Athena would have sooner drunk poison than try to kiss up to 'the useless layabout'."

But, as I said, practically every god wanted Aphrodite and she was swamped with marriage proposals. Including a bunch from gods who were already married. And she loved every minute of it. This was, of course, before everyone found out that she was kind of a bitch. By the time my sisters and I caught on, we were her primary attendants and she wasn't about to let us go anywhere. She had everyone so wrapped around her fingers that Zeus feared she might lead a hostile takeover if she so much as glanced longingly at the head seat."

So Zeus figured that he'd nip this in the bud. If Aphrodite wasn't going to select a suitor, he'd pick one for her. And, hey, here's the kid he chucked out so long ago who's been making a name for himself with his hard work despite a limp, average appearance, and a near-constant dusting of soot. A young god who seems eager to prove himself, dislikes Zeus, and seems just as smitten with Aphrodite as anyone else. So he decrees that they're to be married and from what I hear, Hephaestus looked like all the hardships in creation were peanuts compared to his great fortune when he heard."

So they're married, big dramatic wedding and everything, Heph arrived to his own wedding covered in dust because he'd been so busy building the honeymoon cottage from scratch that he missed his own bachelor party, and they're hitched. And then Aphrodite refuses to share their wedding bed with him. Rumor has it that she drugged her new husband into unconsciousness and snuck Ares in instead, which is how Eros was conceived."

Aphrodite makes no secret of the fact that she isn't happy with her marriage to the 'unwashed avatar of ugliness' and starts cheating on her husband without any shame whatsoever. Everyone knew she was doing it too, but for whatever reason, Zeus demanded proof. So Heph makes a net and catches Aphrodite in the act with Ares. So what does Zeus do when his son hauls his cheating wife and her paramour before the Olympian throne? He laughs at his son, faulting him for not keeping his wife honest. And everyone there starts laughing too after a few long awkward moments, because it seems like Zeus has a point. After all, for all the times he's cheated on Hera, she's never once cheated on him."

"I find that very hard to believe," a new voice intervened and Aglaea turned to see a third Valkyrie in full plate armor molded so closely to her curvaceous form that it could have been mistaken for a second skin.

"It's true," Aglaea insisted. "I overheard her admit it one of the few times she attended a 'Zeus's Lovers Anonymous' meeting from outside the door. Then she mentioned her husband's 'magic hands' and the whole room dissolved into girlish giggling."

"I'd call you a liar, but Lady Freya's a member," Eir sighed heavily. "I saw the meeting schedule on her desk once."

"Anyway," Aglaea continued, "Aphrodite says that she will never share her marriage bed with Hephaestus unless he proves himself worthy. Leaving out the fact that she seems to have rather loose standards of what that means given who all else she's slept with, Hep starts doing a bunch of things to impress her. Elaborate dates that she continually misses due to 'appointments' or acts bored during, raising Eros because neither she nor Ares can be bothered, has a couple affairs himself out of spite, followed by increasingly dangerous stunts to impress her. After Heph tried to wrestle Typhon solo, Zeus called a halt to that and demanded that Aphrodite find something less destructive that her husband could do to impress her."

Which is where I come in. Aphrodite comes in one day, looks and me and my sisters for a bit, and orders me to attend her. I'm completely confused as to what she wants, but I follow quietly. She takes me to her husband, and almost shoves me into his arms, declaring that if he truly wants to impress her, then he will become a lover worthy of a Love goddess. I get what she wants and probably turn so red that I could have been mistaken for a beet goddess, but I don't dare object. Meanwhile, she's telling him that I am to be both his tutor and appraiser in the arts of love."

"And he just went along with that?" Brynhildr folded her arms in disbelief.

"Er... not immediately?" Aglaea blushed. "He waited until his wife left before asking if I was really okay with this. I think that if I'd said no, he would have marched after his wife and told her in no uncertain terms that if she wanted a trained lover, she'd better step up and do the training herself. But I'll never know because I was half terrified of what my mistress would do if I refused and half wondering just what she was turning down in the first place. So I said 'yes'."

Aglaea blushed as she paused in her narrative and hunched in on herself shyly.

"It was the most exquisite mistake I ever made."

AdminSpace.15 (Evilhumour)

"Leave me alone Fand." Fenrir grumbled as the fairy floated around him as he tried to eat his mewling plate of kittens for his lunch. "I've already got a girlfriend!"

"But you two would be so cute together!'

"Amaterasu is an ex of mine," Fenrir growled out. "I was a bit of an ass when we were dating and luckily we ended things as pleasant as possible when we broke up. Again, I've got a girlfriend already!"

"But what about you and Bast?"

"...Are you drunk?! " Fenrir coughed out a kitten. "She hates my guts! And I hate hers!" Blinking, Fenrir turned to face her. "And I'm already seeing someone!"

"But don't you see it? Two conflicting personalities, hitting against each other until they realize the love that's hidden there-hey put me down!" With a toss, Fenrir threw the fairy Admin into the fridge and then pulled it down onto the floor, locking her inside. Struggling for a period to free herself, Fand called out a simple question to the fuming wolf. "Is that a no?"

AdminSpace.16 (Vadrigar)

Skuld was following Tama back to her terminal, still in disbelief over what the small cat had just told her and Zeus. According to Tama, she had managed to stabilize the Half-Life loops enough for an expansion, but Skuld needed to see this for herself.

"Okay Skuld-senpai, what do you want to know?"

"Okay, I need to know how you–is that a dead mouse on your terminal?"

"Yeah! Do you like it?"

"Where in Yggdrasil did you find a... you know what? Not important. How did you stabilize the Half-Life loops enough for an expansion? Those issues with the Combine and in-loop dimensional travel shouldn't have been able to be fixed by an Admin as new as you."

"Well, I remember Hephaestus-sensei telling me that no one was looking at the issues, since they weren't severe enough to focus a lot of attention on, so I decided to take a look at it myself."

"And?"

"And it was really confusing! All that information about computer code and dimensional travel and quantum mechanics and molecules and subatomic particles and string theory and–"

"Okay, yes, that's all very intriguing, but how did you solve the problem?"

"Well, since I didn't know anything about all that, and I didn't want to bother anyone here since they were all busy, I wondered: "Who do I know that knows a lot about quantum mechanics and has experience with dimensional theory?"

It took Skuld a second to realize what Tama was getting at, and when she arrived at the answer, she really wished she hadn't.

"Oh you didn't–"

"I asked Gordon!"

Skuld proceeded to slam her palm into her forehead so hard that she was later told by Tama that she lost consciousness for about half a second. Thankfully she was able to keep her footing when she woke back up, and was able to continue the conversation with only a throbbing headache.

Not that much different from her normal conversations with other Admins, really.

"Tama, asking your anchors or loopers is NOT ALLOWED! Someone must have told you this, it could be very damaging to Yggdrasil if they were to mess with their own universe code!"

"I'm sorry! I just thought he might be happy to have someone to talk to about this kind of thing!"

"Okay, look, we can talk about this later. How much did you tell him?"

"Nothing, really. I just asked him the basics, and he started teaching me. He's a really fun teacher! Especially the parts where he yells about how other people are wrong. It reminded me of you, senpai!"

"I'm going to pretend I did not hear that. And I will drink later to ensure I don't remember it. What else happened?"

"Well, at one point he started ranting about how some scientists from his past used drugs wrong, and that only he knew the proper way to take drugs and be a genius at the same time. Or something like that, it was near the end of the lecture and I was getting bored. So after that loop I just asked Zurvan for help, and he helped me solve it pretty fast. He even taught me some in-loop time travel and dimensional coding tricks! Turns out it's not too different from operating a train, you just have to make sure everything works together."

Skuld still wasn't sure she fully trusted the rookie Admin with this type of problem, and would later have Hephaestus take a look at her terminal to make sure she didn't screw anything major up, but Zurvan was good at what he did, and from where she was standing she could see that the loop was going to attempt a baseline run of its expansion soon, and no issues were showing.

"Well, I wasn't expecting this today. Um, good job Tama, I'll be sure to tell Odin that the Half-Life bugs have seemingly been sorted out. Why don't you take a quick lunch break?"

"Okay senpai! But I'm done with my mouse, do you want it?"

"...No. But I think I have an idea of who might."

"Ah jeez, I'm running la~ate. Damn, still haven't gotten that timing right. Whatever, time to finally put my new grappling hook to good use."

Gordon reached into his pocket for the tool he had been wanting for so long. However, he felt a note that he didn't remember putting in there, so he took it out and read it.

Gordon

Good news! Your loop is going through an expansion! What that means is you'll be able to go forward in your timeline for the first time! This is so exciting! So I just thought I should let you know so you won't be too surprised. Have fun!

-Tama

P.S. Tama left a present for you, Freeman. Maybe you should yell at her about quantum mechanics and drugs more often. And next time you visit the ponies, PLEASE don't antagonize them as much as you did the first time. Sleipnir wanted to send you to H.R. Pufnstuf for it, but Tama was able to make him back down. You're on thin ice as long as you keep up your antics, don't forget it.

-Skuld

This note gave Gordon a lot of question to ponder. What awaited in his future? Who was Skuld? Who was Sleipnir? What was H.R. Pufnstuf, and why did the name alone make him shiver? But one thing he liked was that Skuld had said Tama gave him a present, and he reached into his pocket, eager to see what it was.

"Oh man, a gift from god. Those are always good. Is it a new weapon? Some badass armor? A self-stocking mini-fridge? Wait, what…what the…"

It was at that moment Gordon remembered that god was, in fact, a cat.

AdminSpace.17

Apollo grinned to himself as he tiptoed into the goddess's bedroom and looked around for the proper drawer. It had been such a long time since he'd had the chance to conduct a proper panty ra–

"Ahem."

Turning, Apollo saw Nut, the Netjer goddess of the sky, in all her nighttime star-bodied glory.

"Um… hi?" the Olympian god of the sun sweatdropped.

"What exactly are you doing in my bedroom?" the goddess glared evenly at him, tapping a solitary finger on her crossed arms.

"Funny story that, the thoughtful and generous Apollo was–"

"Trying to steal my underwear?" Nut cut him off with an unamused tone. "Or is there some other reason why you have the stereotypical thief kerchief wrapped over your head and face and are carrying an empty sack headed straight for my drawers?"

"Um… Give the great Apollo a second..."

"You have five. Four. Three. Two. O–"

"Geb commissioned it!"

In an instant, Nut's face went from cool anger to rapturous.

"Really?!" the ancient goddess squealed like a crushing schoolgirl at the thought of her estranged husband of countless eons, before turning suspicious. "You're not just making that up are you?"

"The mighty Apollo swears by his mighty manhood that the honorable and lovesick Geb did make that request!" the sun god gulped nervously.

"That's so sweet of him! Stay right there, I'll get the good stuff!"

Apollo blinked as Nut went into her closet, followed by what sounded like a heavily secured safe being opened, before she reappeared with a rather large box.

"Here we go!" she thunked the box down at Apollo's feet with a massive THUD. "My best and most salacious undergarments worn while thinking of my dear Geb sealed and preserved in airtight bags to preserve freshness, photo albums of myself wearing them in various poses, a few x-rated magazines I made featuring myself with signed poster-sized centerfolds, a few home-made videos in the same vein, calendars featuring me in various outfits and states of dress to cover the next several eons (and a few that have already passed), a few dozen steamy romance novels I wrote detailing what I'd like to happen the next time we see each other, and a few models of myself to keep on his desk."

Apollo kept blinking as all of that sunk in, and wondered just how much subspace the box contained to fit everything. He also wondered just how badly those two missed each other that Nut would even consider putting a package like that together.

"Would you like the amazed Apollo to smuggle you to him as well?"

Nut's expression went excitedly giddy for a second before falling. "More than you can imagine, but I can't. Not until Ra lifts his little ban on us. I don't want to have to go through the hassle of inventing new days if I get pregnant again."

"The helpful Apollo will throw in some Olympian brand contraceptives, free of charge."

"How guaranteed are they?" Nut crossed her arms in challenge.

"My father only has a fraction of the children he otherwise would have."

"If half the things I've heard about him are true, that's pretty impressive," Nut admitted. "But the last time I snuck off to see Geb, we burned through a millenia's worth of contraceptives in a month before Ra caught us and I still ended up with quintuplets. Osiris, Isis, Set, Nepthys, and Horus. The elder, not my grandson."

"...maybe not that guaranteed," Apollo admitted.

"Thanks for the offer though."

"Tell you what, the sympathetic Apollo will talk to Ra, sun god to sun god, and see if he can change the old coot's mind."

"It probably won't work."

"The honest Apollo doesn't foresee it being successful, true, but he will make the attempt anyway. After delivering this chest of most treasured treasures to Geb as promised."

AdminSpace.18

"Madoka?" the voice prompted the relatively junior goddess to turn around from her terminal and look at the falcon-headed Admin at the entrance to her cubicle.

"Yes, Horus?" the former Anchor asked politely. "What can I do for you?"

"I have a package here that needs to get to my uncle," Horus told her, bringing out a sealed box and holding it out, "but I'm going to be busy later. Can you hold onto it until he comes to pick it up?"

"Sure," Madoka nodded and accepted the package from the Netjer. "You can count on me!"

"Glad to hear it!" Horus smiled and walked away.

"Pardon me, did my nephew leave a package here earlier?" the voice interrupted Madoka a while later. Turning around in confusion, Madoka clarified that, yes, this was the same Admin who had been by earlier.

"Sorry, Horus, but no," Madoka replied in confusion. "Your uncle hasn't been by either."

"Uncle?" Horus asked in confusion. "I'm afraid you must be mistaken. My father has no brothers."

"Huh? But when you were here earlier..."

"Are you sure you're feeling alright?" Horus asked in concern. "I haven't been here all day."

"But... I know... You..." Madoka gestured about in puzzled bewilderment.

"Well, if you spot my nephew, would you ask where he left the package I asked for?" Horus asked before turning to leave a completely confused Madoka behind.

"That was mean, brother," Nephthys glared at a chuckling Horus as he walked away from the young goddess's cubicle. "Why you and our nephew insist on pulling that stupid trick on everyone is beyond me, but you could at least cut the poor girl a break. She's had it rough enough."

"You're welcome to let her in on the joke, dear sister," Horus invited with a sweep of his arms. "I certainly don't mind and I know my dear identical nephew doesn't either."

Nephthys hesitated. "I'll wait a bit... If she figures it out before her shift is over, I win the betting pool. And if she comes after the two of you with a blunt object, I get the bonus jackpot. And pictures."

Horus blinked before looking down to see that his sister was indeed carrying a camera. "Er... how did you know we were...?"

"Honestly, brother," Nephthys smirked. "You and our nephew pull that 'Horus' and 'Horus' trick on everyone sooner or later. You're very predictable in that way."

AdminSpace.19 (Evilhumour)

As Fenrir yawned, he was aware that some was in his office. Rolling his eyes as he kept his massive mouth open for a bit longer, he suddenly felt paws on the side of his lower jaw.

"Wow Fenrir, you've got a really big mouth!" Tama, the new cat goddess hopped over his razor sharp teeth and stared up at his jaw, if the reflection of his monitor was anything to go by. "How can the inside of your mouth be bigger then it is on the outside?"

"Because of my status of a Devourer and Destruction god, and can you please get out of my mouth!" Of course, all Fenrir got out was a garbled mess.

"Heh, you're funny," Tama smiled, circling around his already drying out tongue before she started to kneed it. "And your tongue is so comfy!" With a yawn, she curled up and took a nap, leaving Fenrir utterly confused, hungry and terrified.

Hephaestus raised an eyebrow when Fenrir stormed into his office with his mouth open, the Valkyries at odds with Fenrir being so near them.

Without any warning, Fenrir spat something directly at Hephaestus's lap before growling loudly. Looking down as his trio of parole officers leap up to deal with the wolf god, the volcano god saw his latest student covered in spit and saliva.

"Keep your damn hairball out of my office!" Fenrir shouted, turning smarting on his hind paws before storming out of his office.

Looking down at Tama who had the decency to try and escape punishment by widening her eyes, the Admin sighed and tried to wonder when he became a father figure.

AdminSpace.20

Brynhildr was currently on desk duty in Hephaestus's outer office while her shield sisters were helping to keep watch over the forge god's more stable assignments in the inner office (so they could technically be fulfilling their assigned duty of keeping an eye on the Olympian who had overseen the events leading to The Crash) while Hephaestus managed his latest trainee.

"Hello?" an annoyingly familiar voice cut into the Valkyrie's thoughts, prompting her to look up and see Aphrodite enter the office. Oh, joy... "Is my worthless husband in?"

"He's busy at the moment," Brynhildr replied in a bored tone, silently daring the Olympian goddess of love and beauty to try something, "can I take a message?"

"I was just wondering if he'd come to his senses yet and was prepared to properly beg my forgiveness," the vain Admin sniffed.

'Yeah, and you've spontaneously developed empathy after eons of outright avoiding the concept,' Brynhildr lowered the lids of her eyes to half mast to properly convey her contempt. "Do you have an actual reason to be here for once, or are you just going to waste my time again?"

"Of all the impudence!" Aphrodite recoiled with overly dramatic offense. "Fine, then! I suppose you don't want the generous gift of perfect divine beauty second only to my own! I was going to grace you with it for your generous assistance, bu–"

'Oh, please, as if I'd ever want to be so soft and out of shape after enjoying Freya's blessings,' Brynhildr tuned the ranting goddess out as she rummaged in the desk drawer for her and her shield sisters' latest anti-annoyance weapon. 'I prefer to kick ass rather than wail over chipped nails–Here we go...'

"–and furthermore... Why are you shining a laser pointer at my forehead?"

"LASER POINTER!" a calico missile squealed as it shot out of the inner office straight for Aphrodite's face.

"AAIIIEEEEEEE!" Aphrodite screamed as the latest goddess of the Shinto pantheon latched onto her face with all the enthusiasm of a distracted housecat.

"Do you have to do that to my latest student every–" Hephaestus began his usual half-hearted admonishment before he saw who the current target was. "Never mind, as you were."

AdminSpace.21 (Evilhumour, kingofsouls, and myself)

With a sigh, Skuld wiped the pie off her face and glared at everyone in the lunchroom, which resembled a war zone of elementary children once again. Stepping over the tossed food and smaller Admins, she walked over to the side.

Raven was lowering Tama down after the two had teamed up for aerial food bombardment as Fand stepped out of the freezer covered in icecream, the Ekien Admin was still struggling to get herself out of food tray dispenser, Loki was trying to hide his cabbage cannons behind himself poorly and everyone else was trying to hide their actions poorly.

With a grunt, Skuld removed the two numbers from the board of Days From Last Food Fight and set it back to zero.

She mused to herself that she really wished one day they could get to triple digits as she used her hammer to launch an entire table of pastries at the Admins before walking out of the room.

On the other side of the lunchroom, Yi and Madoka raced behind their oveturned table they used as cover as the pastries fell from above. The war continued and the two archers rose form their cover, their bows armed with a dozen carrots each. "Aim for Fei-Lian!" Yi shouted. "I need to add some veggies to that blowhards diet!"

Madoka on the other hand simply sighed as the two let loose their abnormal ammo. 'I really hope Hephaestus doesn't get too angry at me...'

Hephaestus stared at his two current apprentices. The young magical girl and the even younger housecat had the good grace to look abashed underneath the layers of frosting and pastry they were still covered with.

"What am I supposed to do with you two?" the forge god sighed.

"Let us run them through their paces?" Eir suggested, getting nods from her shield sisters.

"Bad enough they got into a schoolyard food fight in the Admin cafeteria," Brynhildr folded her arms. "But worse, they lost ."

"By the time we're done with the two of you, you'll have superior endurance, speed, agility, throwing power, and situational awareness," Herfjötur grinned wickedly. "You'll probably also hate us, but that's beside the point."

"All good things to have," Hephaestus nodded. "But I am particularly disappointed in myself for not instilling an appreciation in one final core tenant regarding such matters."

The forge god heaved a massive contraption from behind his desk onto it, and the two trainee goddesses could only stare at the huge gatling gun that looked built for shooting pies.

"If at all possible, bring superior firepower."

AdminSpace.22 (Evilhumour)

"And here Tama, is the best place for naps." Fenrir gestured with a paw to the empty office, nosing the cat towards a blank wall before taping some codes into the computer. The wall fell and a roaring fireplace took its place. The ceiling retracted to show a sun shining down on a carpeted rug. Turning around in spot, Fenrir curled up in front of the fire, smiling at the wide eye cat. "It will be our little secret, right?"

Tama nodded her head before leaping onto Fenrir's head, curling up with a big yawn before going to sleep.

AdminSpace.23 (Evilhumour)

Silence is a concept that a bit foreign to most people for a number of reasons; maturity usually playing a factor.

"Okay, who started another damn water fight?!" A voice rang out before being pelted with water balloons and other devices of soakage. Madoka and her pseudo sister Tama had borrowed their pseudo father's latest invention, and teaming up with Fenrir and the Dino trio, the six of them had caused liquid havoc on unsuspecting Admins, with laughter following them. Zeus and Hades were seen fleeing their brother, as things were in his favour for a change and the tricksters gods were unleashing water related booby trap hell on everyone. Of course, Skuld was completely dominating the field, trading her usual hammer in for the water based one.

It might not directly be helping Yggdrasil but it was good to vent steam every once in awhile and water was far easier to clean up then food.

That was until someone got the Flying Spaghetti Monster wet and then things got messy.

AdminSpace.24 (Evilhumour)

"OKAY, THE NEXT BLITHERING IDIOT THAT FUCKS SOMETHING UP IS GOING TO GET MY HAMMER SHOVED THROUGH A HOLE AND OUT ANOTHER HOLE! DON'T COME TO ME IF IT IS NOT DAMN IMPORTANT OR YGGDRASIL IS ON FIRE! " Skuld roared through the intercom before taking a moment to breath in and out, trying to calm her anger when there was a knock on her door. "WHAT?!"

Without any hesitation, Tama opened the door, walked up to her and hopped onto her lap. "What-what are you doing Tama?" Skuld tried to keep her anger up but was breaking under the nuzzling and kneading of the young goddess.

"You are too angry," she said, arching her head up. "Kitty therapy is now in session."

Skuld just stared down at the cat before sputtering out in laughter. "And what, pray tell, is kitty therapy?"

"It's simple," Tama said with a smile. "You rub kitty until kitty says to stop."

Shaking her head at the silliness of it all, Skuld ran a hand across Tama's belly, her anger already a distant memory.

AdminSpace.8 - A Former Lover Part 3

Athena stared at the smiling Pandora, idly noting that the 'first woman turned goddess' had rearranged her facial piercings and tattoos again.

"...you have a cat on your head," the goddess of wisdom noted in a tone that demanded explanation.

"Well, since Tama here is dad's newest apprentice, that makes her part of the family, like Madoka!" Pandora chirped.

"And Pandora-chan volunteered to introduce me to all the different moms I get to have now!" the cat added. "Hi, I'm Tama!"

Athena sighed heavily and pinched the bridge of her nose. "Pandora... for the thousandth time, while I am honored to claim you as my daughter, I do not have any intention of extending similar consideration to the rest of Hephaestus's brood, adopted or otherwise."

"What about that Erechtheus guy?"

"Hephaestus has no official parental claim on him, nor are the particulars of his parentage any of your business."

"Yeah, mom won't even tell me."

"That is because I know you cannot keep a secret."

"True enough," Pandora shrugged.

"So..." Eir broke the prolonged silence. "You taught Hephaestus how to be a good lover."

Aglaea blushed crimson and hunched in on herself shyly. "Technically speaking, I just helped him refine what he'd already started figuring out. He's always been good with his hands. I just told him which places were better to put them."

"Uh-huh..." Herfjötur replied levelly. "Given how fast he learns, that had to have taken all of an afternoon."

"W-well... there was repeated practice of course... further refinement of technique... fine-tuning as we both discovered more, um, 'hot spots' I hadn't thought of originally... positions... lots and lots of positions to practice in... repeatedly for technique and to build endurance... t-toys to learn about..."

"And in some cases invent, I bet," Brynhildr smirked. "Did you two even leave the bedroom?"

"Y-yes!" Aglaea blushed crimson. "B-being a good lover is more than just sex! It's r-romance! Flirting... seduction... feeling each other out to get to know likes and dislikes..."

"All the things Aphrodite says she likes more than anything but could never be bothered to try with her own husband."

"Yes... Th-that's why I asked him to start with attempting to woo me like he would his own wife at the time... So I could see what he was doing wrong..."

"And?"

"And... It was magical... He took me on a walk through the most beautiful forest to a grove of amazing flowers where he had set up a candlelight dinner for two under the stars that he cooked himself with a bottle of Dionysus's best chilling in a bucket nearby..."

"Sounds like an A+ date to me," Eir grinned. "Though I think I'd have preferred a sporting event myself."

"We um... we watched the sun rise together... without clothes..."

"I'll bet."

"It... it turned out that while Heph knew a lot about what to do on a date, he didn't really know how to read women that well. So... so I helped teach him the secrets of how to tell if a goddess was interested or not. How to know when he was being flirted with and how best to flirt back. I... I took acting classes from the Muses so I could give him experience with different types of women. I wanted... I told myself I wanted to accurately portray his wife so I could teach him how to seduce her like he seemed to want."

"But...?"

"Well... I got pregnant," Aglaea admitted. "By the time I gave birth to my first daughter, the children Heph already had were treating me like part of the family and that was when I realized..."

"You didn't want it to end," Brynhildr nodded.

"No, I didn't. But I knew that if he ever got to a level that my mistress would deem acceptable, that I was duty-bound to report the success to her and watch them go on to live happily together... without me."

Herfjötur snorted in derision.

"I didn't know then what I know now," Aglaea defended herself. "I didn't know there was no standard my mistress would accept from her 'plain' husband. I truly believed that if he met such a standard, our time together would end. And so I kept... increasing the standards. Kept inventing new trials for him to pass. We memorized every variant of the divine sutra together. After the birth of my second daughter, I increased that to every mortal technique. After the birth of my third, and knowing that he knew me so well that there would be only token improvements between just the two of us, I started assigning him to seduce other goddesses of my choosing and practicing his techniques with them. I got away with that through the birth of my fourth daughter, all the while living with him like I was his wife instead of my mistress."

"I remember that," Eir spoke up suddenly. "Everyone actually thought you two were married, right? Except no one could remember when he divorced Aphrodite."

Aglaea nodded. "I don't know exactly when it happened. I was so focused on finding new ways to keep the arrangement going that I never stopped to think how it looked to others. Never stopped to think that we were living in a house he built for us after the 'training' began, or that we were raising our children together and I was acting like a mother to the children he already had. But at some point, everyone started treating us like we'd always been married. And so... I decided that I would petition my mistress to make it official..."

"Oh, that couldn't have gone well..."

Aglaea thought back to the gossip she'd overheard when she'd gone to see her mistress while she was talking with a goddess from another pantheon.

"Oh, how precious! You actually thought I'd let my worthless husband out of our union to remarry? Much less to one of my own attendants? Ohohohohoho! Goodness, but that's funny! I merely gave him one of my attendants to amuse himself with so that he'd stop hounding me all the time when I'm off with worthier paramours! Frankly, I'm amazed that the poor thing hasn't stormed off in disgust yet!"

"No... no it didn't..." Aglaea admitted. "That was when I learned that my mistress had no intention to either accept Heph as a lover, or let him go to seek happiness with another. And so... I did something a bit foolish... I told her that I had judged Heph to be a lover of exceptional ability. Well worth the attentions of a love goddess."

All three Valkyries winced.

"She... laughed at me. It... made me angry, and in my anger I demanded to know what standard she would accept as proof that he had become such a lover. She... she gave me a look that sent chills down my spine before telling me that she would only accept Heph as a proper lover if he could seduce one of the eternal maidens of Olympus out of her vows of chastity."

"Hestia, Artemis, or Athena," Brynhildr grimaced painfully. "And he went for Athena."

"I remember hearing about that incident," Eir nodded gravely.

" Everyone remembers hearing about that incident," Herfjötur clarified. "Half of the heavens were at that party of Dionysus's and everyone swore up and down that they saw Hephaestus try and force himself on Athena."

"Yeah, everyone except Athena herself who swore the opposite," Brynhildr reminded them. "And she was the least drunk."

"I'd told Hephaestus everything about his wife's final demand," Aglaea continued, "and he made the decision to approach Athena. Partly because he didn't see Hestia as anything but his aunt, partly because going after Artemis would mean he had to deal with Apollo, and partly..."

"Partly..."

"Partly because... I think deep down, Heph regretted not trying to woo Athena instead of Aphrodite."

"Hephaestus and Athena? That's... I could see that working really well actually."

"Me too," Aglaea admitted. "Which is why; even though Heph swore to me that all that happened was he led Athena to a private room to talk, that he simply told her up front about his wife's demand to prove his 'worthiness' and they discussed possibilities for dealing with it; I can't help but note that Athena took a sabbatical soon after glaring the rumors into submission and returned about nine months later with a baby Erichthonius, claiming to have found him in a corn field."

"You don't..."

"If I'm right, I doubt either of them will ever admit to it. And... and I respect both of them too much to tell my suspicions to too many people. If either of them had and wanted others to know, they'd have rubbed it in my mistress's face back then rather than keep quiet. Maybe even used it to demand she divorce him. Instead, Heph told me to go report that he'd passed my mistress's secret test and respected the choice of the maiden rather than tried to force himself on her. That he was worthy in all respects and it was time she admitted to it."

"That didn't happen, I take it."

"Oh, you poor dear! I am so sorry to hear that your standards have fallen so low that you would believe the lies that spill out of your own mouth! Don't you worry, though. Mistress Aphrodite will make it all better."

Aglaea shook her head in the negative, emotion choking her words out as she remembered what came next.

"The... the last time we saw each other was..." Aglaea was suddenly aware of another watching her and looked up to see the unreadable gaze of the most rugged and handsome man she'd ever encountered. No matter what anyone else said. It was him. The one who'd claimed her heart beyond all hope of recovery, looking as good and strong as the day she'd last seen him.

"...was the day my faithless wife declared that my efforts to become a worthy lover had ended in failure. That you had proclaimed me to be, and I quote, 'the most hopeless man in the bedroom since the dawn of creation itself', 'unfit to touch any true woman', and that you 'never wanted to see me again'. All while you and your sisters stood silently behind her and said not a word before she left and called for you to attend her without so much as a glance back."

"I... Mistress Aphrodite... she–"

"Lied through her teeth? Believe me when I say that I am not surprised now, nor would I have been then."

Aglaea's vision blurred as her eyes teared up before throwing herself at her former lover's feet. "I'm sorry! I should have spoken up! I should have defended you to her! I should have done anything but stand there obediently as she asked while she slandered you so! You shared something glorious with me and I betrayed it with my silence!"

She sensed movement and remained still, resigned to whatever punishment he deemed appropriate.

She wasn't prepared for him to wrap her in a hug with his strong muscular arms. Nor was she prepared for three slender, but no less strong, pairs of feminine arms to join his in the hug. It was so much more kindness than her betrayal deserved, and she wept.

"It's okay," Hephaestus assured her. "I know my wife's ways. She may be a love goddess, but she has always seen more value in the pursuit of love than its realization. More value in appearances than in the substance behind them. She uses her sweet-seeming words to strip away your values and replace them with her own shallow ones. Once, I could have loved her had she given me the chance to do so, but even past the faults she saw in me, she never had any use for a husband, only for suitors and hopefuls. I let her destroy my sense of self-worth to a point that even my own parents never managed, and it was only your tender affections that began to undo her damage. Your silence hurt, yes, but it didn't hurt just me. When I saw the unspoken hurt in your eyes at what my wife said that day, that was when the desire I once felt for her began to die."

"Yeah, I think all of the heavens heard it when you finally lost your temper with her," Brynhildr chuckled into the hug.

"Probably," Hephaestus allowed, keeping the hug up. "I told her, amidst lots of profanity, I'd had enough and that she was a terrible wife. She screamed that I was the worst husband ever, that I should be begging her forgiveness for my many failings. I yelled that if she had any shred of decency, she'd have divorced me long ago. She screamed that the only way I was getting out of our marriage was if one of us up and died a true death. I... did my level best to take her up on the offer. I'm told the crater she left on impact was rather sizable and she was laid up in the hospital for a good long while recovering."

"It was..." Aglaea sniffed. "My sisters and I had to do everything for her while she recovered. Where did you go afterwards?"

"I went to the Havaiki's territory. Looked up Pele and spent the next couple of decades taking my frustrations towards my wife out in fits of mutual volcanic passion."

"And came back with Thalia..." Aglaea noted.

"Yes."

"I'm sorry I wasn't there to help raise her. My mistress forbade me to ever see you again. She threatened to curse my appearance to ugliness and ruin whatever reputation I had left. Make it so you'd never want me again..."

"My wife is an idiot if she ever thought that was possible."

"Thank you... I'm so sorry... All this time wasted... I... I never stopped loving you... But... I understand if you've moved on..."

The group hug unfolded, releasing Aglaea from its center, and allowing Hephaestus to look the goddess in the eyes.

"You, who showed me what married life should have been like; with all the passion, all the love, all the trust, as well as all the pitfalls, arguments, and compromises; will always have a place in my heart."

"You remembered the muses' coaching," Aglaea's laughter was choked with tears.

"It's hard to forget," Hephaestus admitted. "But we can't go back to what we once had. And my wife will never let me free."

"I..." Aglaea sniffed and wiped away her tears as best she could. "I'll take whatever I can get..."

"Good," Eir interrupted, "because you should know that miss Aglaea here was sent on an errand by Aphrodite."

"Offer to my lovely assistants for divine beauty treatments, Eiken vacation package, cheap dating service as, complaint, or a reminder about arranging Eiken fused Loops?" Hephaestus raised an expectant eyebrow.

"Last one," Herfjötur spoke before a blushing Aglaea could. "And it's super-important. Why, if the poor girl doesn't get results, she might never be sent back with another message or request ever again."

"You know full well I'm not inclined to grant anything my wife wants without good reason," Hephaestus folded his arms thoughtfully.

"Which is why she should be allowed a chance to negotiate," Brynhildr smirked, catching on to where the other two were headed. "Intense, vigorous negotiations behind closed doors with 'do not disturb' signs in place."

Aglaea eeped and turned red again as she caught on to the insinuations.

"Oh, yes," Herfjötur agreed hungrily. "Hard-pounding arguments, back and forth, loudly and repeatedly."

"Demands taken to the edge of reason and back again, over and over..." Eir purred.

"Or," Hephaestus cut in as Aglaea's blush threatened to go nuclear, "if you prefer to take this slowly we can just talk out here, calmly and quietly, to see if there's an agreement we can come to."

"Boring..." all three Valkyries chorused.

Aglaea thought for a moment, her embarrassment pounding in her ears. Taking the Valkyries' suggestion would probably be a mistake. A really big mistake.

A really big, exquisite mistake.

"F-first option...?" she stuttered hesitantly. "Please?"

Thalia blinked at the sight of the 'do not disturb' sign on the door to her father's office politely asking that whoever it was return later. Checking the hall, the nymph slipped out a spare key and unlocked the door to enter the exterior office and quietly creeped up to the door to the inner office to listen.

After a few seconds of her grin getting bigger, she snuck back out of the office quietly and locked the door behind her.

"Go dad..."

Aphrodite blinked as her top-heavy intern practically skipped back into the office after many hours on her assignment and slapped three completed fused Loop approval forms signed by Hephaestus. Two for standard post-Loop crash queues and one for a scheduled maintenance call.

"Not bad," the goddess of love admitted reluctantly. "I was worried your history with my husband would... influence your performance."

"Nope!" the girl chirped, entirely too chipper. "He has absolutely no effect on me."

"Then why do you look like you just got laid, hmm?" Aphrodite crooned with interest. Honestly, the girl thinking she could hide something like that from the Goddess of Lo–

"I met someone nice on the way back!" her intern admitted freely.

"Oh, really? Who is he? Anyone I might... know?" Aphrodite recovered from her surprise quickly.

"Probably not, I doubt she's your type."

Aphrodite's brain ground to a halt. "She?"

"Yes! She's with–"

"No, you're right! Definitely not my type!" Aphrodite interrupted quickly. Honestly... women loving women? What madness was that? Still, if it kept her intern off her husband, she'd... overlook the deviancy. "Good job, I suppose. Now back to work. Eiken won't run itself!"

She noted her other two interns, Euphrosyne and Thalia (no relation to the muse or that hideous nymph her husband had sired with a foreign goddess), roll their eyes at her words as their sister took up her station and immediately dove right in with an enthusiasm that Aphrodite didn't recognize.

"What are you doing, exactly?" she asked after several moments confusion.

"Full code examination of the Loop," Aglaea smiled back eagerly. "Just to double-check that it's maintaining stability and hasn't suffered any minor shifts that could become large shifts down the line. Long, boring busy work but it has to be done every now and then and I know you hate it."

"Well, yes... excellent drive. Good show," Aphrodite composed herself. Unnatural or not, if... 'associating' with this new, ugh, girl friend of her intern's produced this kind of work ethic, then she might just subtly encourage the relationship. And if she continued to be this successful in both getting concessions from Aphrodite's worthless husband and ignoring his other attentions, then the Goddess of Love just might have to send her out on more errands.

Aglaea simply smiled to herself as she continued examining the code for Eiken, mentally composing its many quirks and Aphrodite's personal 'tweaks' into a file for Hephaestus and his three Valkyries. Their advice as to what Aphrodite's personal aversions were (due to long practice exploiting them ruthlessly) looked like it was going to make life for her much easier.

AdminSpace.25 (Evilhumour)

"So you see Fenrir, this model is far superior to the previous system we have in place," Skuld gestured to the glowing screen of information of the wolf's Branches, videos and files all arranged to his preferred style. "All you need to do is tap for whatever you want far quicker than using the keyboard method."

Fenrir sighed, shaking his head. "I've told you in the past, I like the keyboard and mouse method and I really don't care much for this wide, interactive multidimensional interface."

"Okay Fenny," Skuld said, ignoring the low growl at her. "Give me one good, non personal reason why you cannot use this method and I will drop it."

Fenrir raised an eyebrow at her, and placed a paw on the screen, setting off several codes at once. With a gulp, Skuld moved Fenrir out of the way and quickly went to see what happened.

"Okay, I get it; your paws are too big and I guess if we make all the stuff bigger for your paws hit only one thing, it'd be murder on your eyes," Skuld muttered to herself. "Okay, not much damage; it seems that you let loose a shoggoth into your brother's Branch but he was able to plug it with his Anchor's tree, you caused it to rain some sharks in the Dino Trio's branches somehow and..." Skuld frowned, leaning close to the screen. "And it seems you found Yggdrasil's glitterball command. Annnnnd now a number of Loops have a disco theme stuck in them," she sighed, quickly doing her best to undo the light damage before becoming aware of the large grin on the Admin's face next to her. "Okay, I get it , touch screen is not for everyone!"

" Thank you ," Fenrir bobbed his head and left the office to enjoy a much deserved break.

AdminSpace.26

Madoka sighed as she walked back to her terminal, her mind once again wandering to the issue of her not-so-lost branch and its secretly continued existence saved on her bow. If her mentor was to be believed, the confusion in the wake of her Ascension and the subsequent severing of her branch from Yggdrasil proper had led to most Admins not realizing that she'd 'saved' her universe to her bow... like a data file. Nor had they caught her popping down to transfer Homura to her bow until after the deed was done and forbidden her from going back to the mortal realm without permission until they figured out what to do with her.

Which had led to her being shuffled around and largely ignored until someone had the bright idea to shuffle her off to Hephaestus for Admin training so she could be put to work. Something that had proven... enlightening on many levels.

The Olympian forge god might be lame in one leg, and stressed from overwork, but his mind was as sharp as anything. Sharp enough to know the secrets she'd thought hidden from the rest of the Admins. Sharp enough to realize that she wasn't ready to reveal those secrets.

Sharp enough to tell her that she'd have to reveal them eventually anyway.

It had weighed upon her since then. Through being assigned to the rag-tag bunch known as travelling loopers, freeing up Dionysus to do... who knew what. Through the granting of additional Loops to her docket, like the formerly (and still semi, she supposed) safe-mode Smash Bros branch. The knowledge and implications of what she'd done came back to her mind without fail and tormented her with the possibility.

The possibility that the data on her bow could be used to undo her universe's destruction.

A realization that was always followed by doubts. Like what had happened to the rest of her looping friends? She'd found Homura before being confined to the heavens previously, but not the others. And would the Admins even allow her to put her universe back? Or would they perhaps say it was a lost cause and tell her to finish the job?

Madoka sighed to herself and sat at her small terminal in her cubicle. It was a back-and-forth tangle of divine possibility and worry... like some nth-dimensional Gordian Knot that promised to unleash untold chaos upon being cut. What did you do with something like that?

YOU CUT IT ANYWAY.

Madoka blinked at the words on her screen.

K. ANANSI: Damn straight I cut it anyway. The look on her face was priceless when I did it too. She was so busy trying to immolate me with her glare that it never occurred to her to chase after me as I took off.

Madoka pinched the bridge of her nose and began typing.

OLD MAN COYOTE: THAT'S AWESOME! I HOPE YOU GOT PICTURES!

MADOKA K.: What have I told you two about using my terminal to host your chat rooms?

OLD MAN COYOTE: NO IDEA. I WAS TOO DISTRACTED BY HOW CUTE YOU ARE WHEN YOU'RE ANGRY. WE SHOULD TOTALLY GET A MAY-DECEMBER ROMANCE GOING ON. ZEUS AND HIS KIDS MAY BE KNOWN FOR HAVING MAGIC HANDS, BUT I'M TOTALLY KNOWN FOR MY MAGIC TONGUE.

Madoka twitched as she read that.

K. Anansi: "Look at that, she's got the twitch going on again," the aggravatingly familiar voice spoke from behind her in time with the words on her screen. Madoka whirled to see a tall, thin dark-skinned man dressed in ill-fitting clothes that probably belonged to someone else not too long ago and a weathered and very tan man dressed like a tribal cowboy. Both were sporting ridiculously wide grins and steampunk headsets that emitted puffs of smoke.

The tricksters Kwaku Anansi and Old Man Coyote.

"You know, I'm normally into the more full-bodied women, especially in the chest," Anansi mused teasingly as he cupped his hands in front of his chest suggestively, "but I'd totally be down with some 'web play' if you asked nicely."

"Don't you two have anything better to do than make lewd propositions?" Madoka asked as Anansi waggled his eyebrows at her, trying to restrain herself from smacking the two over their smugly grinning heads. That only encouraged them.

"Aside from testing rather pointless knick-knacks for the Palici twins... not really," Coyote grinned and laughed like the mortal animal that shared his name.

"Hey, those knick-knacks are important inventions for turning divine speech to text wirelessly!" a male voice spoke from Madoka's right and she whipped around to see one of the Palici twins standing there looking at her monitor.

"And there's still a few bugs," an identical voice spoke from Madoka's other side as the second twin examined the all-caps entries. "As for those two, they'd probably stop hitting on you if you were with someone."

"Then again, maybe not," the first twin shrugged, "but it would be worth a shot, eh?"

"Please tell me this wasn't an elaborate ruse to ask me out," Madoka sighed.

"Okay," the second twin nodded.

"We won't tell you," the first finished.

"Look, I'm really not interested right now you two," Madoka sighed some more. She was doing a lot of that lately. She'd been getting depressingly good at it too.

"That's fine."

"Just let us know if you–"

–change your mind, after all–"

"–we're geyser gods, so we know all about–"

"–everything steamy–"

The twins leaned in to whisper hot breath directly into Madoka's ears.

"–and–"

"–we–"

"–really–"

"–like–"

"–to–"

"– share ."

Madoka felt her face heat up several degrees.

"Not bad," Coyote mused. "Interesting shade of red on the girl there too. I give it an 8.5."

"I'm going to have to go with a 7," Anansi countered. "Because they left the poor girl too shocked and embarrassed to respond in the affirmative were she so inclined. A good seduction doesn't shoot itself in the foot like that."

"Get. Out." Madoka growled at the four. They all left laughing, and the twins blew kisses that had her face heating up again. Why oh why did she have to be an immortal goddess with teenage hormones?

Madoka sighed again, much heavier this time as the redness in her face receded.

Because she had to listen when Kyubey told her that more powerful wishes would let her protect her Loop better. The sociopathic incubator was far too charming for anyone's good at times.

But that was in the past, and she had work to do now to safeguard the future of existence.

Grunt work, mostly, but still necessary work.

She checked her terminal for anything regarding the myriad of traveling loopers under her charge.

Her autonomous avatar with Sam Beckett was working just fine. It didn't even distract her anymore she was so used to it and the memories it gathered were as natural as ever.

Typing a bit more, she giggled at the antics of Jenny Everywhere and Axel Asher as they were off on another adventure somewhere she didn't quite recognize. She'd look it up later. Those two tended to do just fine.

She frowned a bit as she spotted Blues Light, the Proto Man, but there was nothing to do there. She'd offered to listen to his issues if he wanted to talk to a confidential source or even just give him a hug but he'd rather firmly told her 'no'.

A quick check on the other odds and ends that made up the traveling loopers, including a thorough one to make sure that Kyubey wasn't about to try any of his usual stunts, and Madoka concluded that she had time to work on her personal project.

Pulling up a soul file, she looked over the code that had at some point in its baseline fractured straight down the middle, creating two distinct 'half-souls'. It was mostly patched together after a great deal of time working on it, but she was almost done. She hoped that Hephaestus approved her work.

"I... I want to try and help her... them..."

"Her, if you succeed. The original was perhaps meant to be female and the female half of this fractured soul has forged the strongest connections with others."

"Her. I... she deserves to be whole. To have a chance at happiness. She can, right?"

"I won't lie to you Madoka. Even if you succeed, it is likely to be hard on her. Souls, even those that come about through artificial methods, do not fracture for no reason. And beyond that, she lives in an age of war. Her existence will be one of great pain."

"Then... I shouldn't...?"

"Quite the contrary. Simply because existence is painful does not make it pointless. If anything, the pain validates the struggles faced by all, from the smallest mortal organism to the greatest divine existence. That it is hard makes the struggle all the more worth it. At least, that is what I have concluded."

Madoka narrowed her focus and got to work, carefully stitching the fractured soul back together. Bit by bit.

AdminSpace.27

The action scientist known as Atomic Robo blinked as he examined his surroundings in the new Loop. The Satellite of Love. Another Loop filled with terrible movies, no way to escape having to watch them, and no defense save his well-honed snarking abilities. Joy.

'Filing Memo:' he thought to himself. 'Harmonic resonance heart-songs using Beatles music against the Shadow From Beyond Time are a BAD IDEA.'

As it turned out, magically convincing the universe-devouring eldritch abomination that 'all it needed was love' ended up with it devouring the very concept of Love from the universe. A process that was apparently much simpler than devouring the whole universe in all time periods. Things had gone very pear-shaped very quickly after that.

So here he was, bereft of any looping abilities, including his Zorth-Access Storage Device (his preferred version of the common looper technique known as the subspace pocket, partly because he invented it himself), and indeed anything his local body wasn't built with. And since his local body was built with salvaged parts of the Satellite of Love's 'non-essential systems'... yeah, it wasn't going to have anything impressive.

At least it was better than the one time he'd been to that Eiken place. Honestly, plate steel alloy was a good material for many robotic body types, but feminine models with ridiculous chest endowments were not among the list. By the end of that Loop, the literal wrecking balls attached to 'her' chest had resulted in restraining orders from fifteen states and a hundred additional cities (that 'she' knew of) as well as job offers from every demolitions contractor in the book and a few that weren't. He'd have to thank his Admin for keeping him out of there at some point.

Whoever that happened to be.

"So..." Hephaestus addressed his three parole officers/interns with folded arms, "how long have you three been running the Atomic Robo branch without my knowledge?"

The three Valkyries exchanged glances, and Brynhildr stepped forward to answer.

"Since it got added to your docket," she told him, her expression the picture of military professionalism. "We were about to inform you when we heard a rather lengthy string of expletives regarding your current attempts to get the X and Zero sections of the Mega branch stabilized. So we collectively decided to handle it ourselves unless something went wrong."

"So, since before I started training Madoka..." Hephaestus sighed, pinching the bridge of his nose. "Probably from the branch's activation, even. Honestly, I'm not sure whether to congratulate you for your good work or bang my head against the wall in frustration that you went behind my back like that."

"It seemed like the most prudent course of action at the time, sir."

"It probably was, but I'd still have liked to know that I'd been assigned another Loop to monitor," the forge god noted a tensing in the three Valkyries' shoulders at his words. "...You haven't taken on any more new Loops for me since... have you?"

"Well..."

Chance Fortune Bonus Loop

"Chance!" Psi-Chick yelled as she stormed into her boyfriend's room, waving an e-reader in fury and trying not to lose control of her powers in her anger. " When were you going to tell me that our baseline got an extension and that you died in it?!"

"Well..." Chance Fortune, real name Joshua Blevins, the 'super hero' in training with no true superpowers, floundered for a bit, "I don't technically die..."

"Don't argue semantics with me!" Psy-Chick fumed. "You end up at the center of a nuclear explosion!"

"Saving the world, my family, everyone I care about, the world, the future, and Helix–"

"I read the damn epilogue!" Psy-Chick screamed. "That little imp pulls you into something that's a point of view away from an afterlife allegory! He flat out tells you that your own universe, not just everyone in it but the universe itself , thinks you're dead!"

"Look, so long as the Shadowbite never gets me, that won't happen. Heck, even when that does happen, those specific events don't. Everything that happens after we leave the Shadow Zone is still anyone's guess each Loop."

"And how long do you expect that to last?!" Psy-Chick yelled, tears forming in her eyes. "How... How are you going to handle it when the Loops end... You don't have any powers... You can't Ascend when it's over... It... Would you really go along with it if it did happen?"

Chance looked his girlfriend in the eyes before getting up, walking over, and wrapping her in a hug. "Of course I would. You know that."

"Damn you Chance..." Psy-Chick cried into his shirt. "Why... Why do you have to die...? Why would you leave me alone...?"

"Hey," Chance chuckled. "You seemed to get together with my younger brother just fine afterwards. Looks like you have a thing for the Blevins boys..."

"I don't want your younger brother," Psy-Chick sniffed. "I don't care how charming he grows up to be. I want you. Why can't that happen?"

"Do you know why I came to Burlington Academy in the first place?" Chance asked instead of answering the question. "Why I trained so hard and faked having 'luck' as a superpower to get in? Because I wanted to help people. I wanted to be a Hero. I wanted that more than anything, and I still do."

"More than you want me?"

"Would you love me any other way?" Chance cupped her chin and looked her in the eyes. "If following my path means I have to die saving others, then that's what happens. And if I get an offer to keep going, keep helping people, after the end, even if it means always going where angels fear to tread, then you know I'll accept it."

"I know... It still hurts thinking about it though..."

"Hey, we don't know for certain what will happen from now on, much less when the Loops end. All we can do is enjoy the time we have together now. And who knows? That 'entry-level position' Helix is supposed to offer me comes with the opportunity for advancement. I could still end up Ascending at some point."

Psy-Chick choked out something between a sob and a laugh and hugged her boyfriend all the harder.

AdminSpace.1) This is shortly after the Loops began. Amusingly enough, Pastafanarianism was apparently founded shortly after Innortal started writing his original Loop fics.

AdminSpace.2) No, Aphrodite is not completely clueless around technology. She's just... vain and lazy most of the time.

AdminSpace.3) Nut runs the Star Wars branch. When she's not on the phone with her husband Geb acting like a lovesick schoolgirl.

AdminSpace.4) Marianne is also known as Lady Liberty. You might be familiar with the statue of her in New York. She is not in any way Little Red Riding Hood. She just wears one sometimes.

AdminSpace.5) Ares eventually succeeded in getting I Want To Be The Guy looping. Then he got assigned to attempt the even more problematic Dwarf Fortress. He might be having less success getting it started, but reports indicate that he's certainly having more fun trying.

AdminSpace.6) The initial appearance of Tama, the stationmaster cat canonized as a Shinto goddess, in Yggdrasil. Poor Masakado.

AdminSpace.7) Hel is often described as half beautiful woman and half zombie. In the manner Two-Face is half-scarred. And, yes, this version has been dating Baldur for a long time as a shout-out to the myth where she refuses to release him back to the living. Seems that no one buys that they're dating though.

AdminSpace.8) My personal attempt to reconcile the mythology of Aglaea being Hephaestus's second wife after he divorced Aphrodite with the circumstances I've given him in the Loops. A few other myths about Heph and his various children were twisted about in the process.

AdminSpace.9) A few initial reactions to Tama. Madoka can be nonchalant here because she obviously already got the cuteness proximity out of her system.

AdminSpace.10) Tama takes over Half-Life. Gordon is never the same again.

AdminSpace.11) Fenrir packs some rather odd lunches.

AdminSpace.12) Why, yes, Zeus was responsible for throwing Tama into the deep end before she even got training. Or maybe it was the overeager Loop writers after her introduction. One of those.

AdminSpace.13) Tama likes trains. Oh so very much.

AdminSpace.14) Cat on your head is a legitimate excuse for not doing work. It just doesn't legitimately happen in most jobs.

AdminSpace.15) Fand is the Celtic Faerie Queen. She has a shipping problem.

AdminSpace.16) It's the thought that counts. Tama was thinking it was a nice present, and Skuld was thinking it was an apt punishment.

AdminSpace.17) Nut and Geb have eyes only for each other. And they haven't been allowed to see each other in longer than most mortals can comprehend. Plus, there are other complications with them sneaking off to be together than just Ra micromanaging their schedules to not be compatible. They don't give up though.

AdminSpace.18) Horusing Around.

AdminSpace.19) I believe it started about the time Eros got shoved off on him because neither Aphrodite or Ares could be bothered, and has only compounded since.

AdminSpace.20) Ah, weaponizing a house cat (goddess). I should really find an excuse to do that more often.

AdminSpace.21) Food fight!

AdminSpace.22) Daaaaaawwwww…

AdminSpace.23) You know, I'm starting to wonder just how much actual work gets done up there...

AdminSpace.24) Kitty therapy is best therapy.

AdminSpace.25) We will be seeing the effects of this in the Megaverse at some point, I'm sure.

AdminSpace.26) Madoka has to deal with a bit of hazing from her new co-workers from time to time. Some of it better-intentioned than others.

AdminSpace.27) That's an interesting question, actually...

Chance Fortune Bonus Loop) You know, Chance Fortune Out of Time had the feel like it was written specifically to close out a series that didn't take off like the author had hoped. But I'm glad he put in the effort to do that much, even if it felt a little rushed in how he handled a few of his dangling plot threads from the first two books (even leaving a few poorly addressed or not at all). Not the best ending I've seen to a series, but it at least got a fairly solid one. Some series don't even get that much.

Last Loop of 2015 (Zerorock41)

Narrator X: The Old West, several miles south of the town of Ol' Arcadia, the villainous Dastardly Sigma was up to his vile schemes. Accompanied by his tiny, somewhat racially insensitive flunky, Sombrero Chihuahua, Dastardly Sigma had begun tying the Mayor's Daughter to the railroad tracks.

"Why are you doing this to me?" asked Palette, daughter of Mayor Signas.

Dastardly Sigma, twirling his evil moustache all the while, began monologuing.

"Nyahahaha! You see, my dear, I plan to buy your father's precious town. But as long as he had you, he wasn't gonna sell, since he wants you to inherit the town. Once you're good and dead, the man will be overcome with grief, and I'll be free to buy Ol' Arcadia! Isn't that right, Sombrero Chihuahua?"

Sombrero Chihuahua, finished tying the girl down, replied, "Si Señor Sigma."

"No one can stop me now! Nyahahahahaha!"

Meanwhile, on a nearby cliff, Sheriff Axl and his trusted steed, Zero, heard Dastardly Sigma's plan.

"Oh no!" yelled Axl, "Did you hear that, Zero? Dastardly Sigma and his insulting Mexican stereotype flunky have tied up the Mayor's daughter! We have to help her!"

Jumping on Zero's back, Sheriff Axl raised his guns to the sky.

"Hi ho, Zero! Away!"

Zero looked back at Axl, "You are enjoying this way too much."

"Come on, dude, don't break character now. We're getting to the fun part."

"What character do I have to break!? At least X has a speaking role, since he's the Narrator. I'm the damn horse!"

"Well, it's not my fault Yggdrasil likes to make fun of your pony tail."

Zero scowled (or the best equivalent a horse could do), "Listen you-"

Guys? That train is still heading for Palette. You might wanna go deal with that first.

Axl and Zero looked at each other, shrugged, and decided to ride off and stop Dastardly Sigma's evil plans.

-) Wild West X? Dastardly Sigma? peers Seems legit.

Mega Loops 24

Mega Loops 24 (AN: There seems to be some technical difficulties with the numbering…)

24.1 (OathToOblivion and cj304)

If there was one thing that Lan and Hub really hated when it came to baseline, it was Anetta and PlantMan's attack on the Beach Street Hospital. And it wasn't just because of Mamoru being in the middle of an operation, although that certainly contributed a lot. No, it was the fact that they attacked a frickin' hospital! If they didn't care about all the sick, injured, or really badly damaged people that they put in danger due to their stunt, then the Hikari Bros. were going to give them the same regard, or lack of as it were.

They had already visited Mamoru, and were now headed up to wait outside the Operation Room. They hadn't been able to convince anyone to let them guard the computer housing the TetraCode, so this was their only option. "How do you think it'll go?" Lan worried as they rode the elevator up.

"Assuming this is baseline, he'll be fine. We've been stocking up on fire Chips, so we should be able to blaze through in record time," Hub pointed out.

"Yeah, I know. I just can't help but worry," Lan admitted.

"Yeah," Hub sighed. The elevator dinged, and they arrived on the top floor of the hospital. Lan walked over to outside the Operation Room just as the light turned red. "You going to stay here the full three hours until the attack happens?" Hub questioned.

"What do you think?" Lan said rhetorically, waiting there.

About two hours into the wait, Lan was rummaging through his Folder to make sure that they were optimized for what was coming. "Hm...do you think I can get away with some of the later fire Chips like FireHit?" Lan questioned.

"Probably not. After all, Champy Viruses aren't a thing yet," Hub pointed out.

"Yeah, good point. Guess I should just stick with the things that have appeared," Lan decided, closing his Folder.

"Well, hey there, Lan!" a voice greeted. Lan blinked in surprise, turning to see who it was. And to his surprise, it was Tamako Shiraizumi, the Operator of and Mamoru's aunt. But what was she doing here? It did make sense for her to be here, being Mamoru's aunt and all, but she hadn't shown up in baseline.

"Oh, hey, Tamako!" Lan greeted back. "What are you doing here?" he questioned. He had a feeling he knew, but wanted to be sure.

"Oh, my nephew Mamoru's here for treatment. Which you should know about, Lan, since he's mentioned you a lot. Why else would you be here?" Tamako teased.

"Eheh. Yeah, I guess," Lan chuckled sheepishly.

"Still can't believe I managed to get time off to even come here. Usually this time of the month there's this one guy who's always pestering Sis and I about some random stupid thing. Was a no-show this time, thank goodness," Tamako commented. Lan blinked at that. Well that certainly explained that.

"So, while we're waiting for news, how about a Netbattle?" she offered. Lan thought about it. It was going to be about another hour until things started going ahead. There wasn't really anything else to do...

"Sure!"

Lan didn't usually feel sorry for a lot of the guys in WWW, 'cept Mr. Mach and Baryl. But as soon as the trouble started, Tamako had went ballistic in fury over the whole thing. Lan had already surreptitiously sent Hub to clear the emergency exit's system, so the first time Tamako and MetalMan saw what was going on in the Hospital's Network was in the basement.

"Grr...who's responsible for this?!" Tamako demanded.

"Well we're not going to find out like this! Let's clear this place out!" Lan pointed out.

"Right!"

In the HospitalComp, Hub turned to MetalMan. "Don't worry, MetalMan, I know exactly how to deal with these plants! I have a program that will convert fire-type Battle Chips into special flames that can burn them. And Lan has a lot of fire chips right now, enough for the two of us!" he declared.

"Well, it never hurts to be prepared, for when you might need an extra fire chip... or fifty," Lan grinned sheepishly.

Hub nodded. "Exactly! Now, if you can keep the viruses off my back, we can sweep the hospital from the ground up in no time-!" he attempted to say.

Tamako cut in at that. "What! That'll take too long! And fire's too risky! MetalMan! Charge through and cut down every plant in your way until you get to the programs running Mamoru's room!"

Lan blinked in surprise. They had already tried that before and and it had never worked. "Wait! Cut? How can he...?"

Tamako rolled her eyes. "With his buzzsaws! Duh! Go, MetalMan! I want to have this asshole's head removed from his body in ten minutes! We'll leave cleanup to these guys!" she declared.

MetalMan grinned a rather evil grin. "Right! HA! Silly plants! Trying to bar the way of someone who can produce an infinite number of saws! It's deforesting time!" he yelled, charging straight forward and tossing Metal Blades to and fro.

Hub blinked. "Well... that didn't go as planned. Kinda makes you wish they were here in baseline," he muttered to himself so Tamako couldn't hear.

"Now what am I gonna do with all these fire chips?" Lan complained. He wasn't usually one to go for the "Kill It With Fire" plan.

Hub thought about it to himself. "MetalMan's taking the direct route forward, but if we leave the plants in the side areas alone, they'll probably reinfect the whole system," he said seriously.

Lan nodded at that. "Right then, we'll follow their lead in this! Since every Virus in here seems to be plant-themed..." he mock-rationalized so as to not give away that they already knew this was going to happen.

"Right behind you, Lan! Style Change: HeatGuts Style!" Hub declared, summoning the code rings around him. Now in the red fire-based Style, he dashed after MetalMan, burning down the trees that the Breaking-element Navi had left in his tracks.

Lan grimaced. Not too long after they had jacked in, Anetta, PlantMan's Operator had walked in. The moment Tamako had learned that Anetta was the one responsible for the current condition of the hospital, she tossed her PET into Lan's hands and chased after Anetta, an almost demonic aura covering her. Lan was still shuddering at that. But Hub and MetalMan had made it to the back of the area, where PlantMan was.

"Give it up, PlantMan!" Hub declared.

"Yeah! Your puny little plants aren't going to save you from the pummeling we're going to give you!" MetalMan yelled.

PlantMan gulped, but knew he had no choice but to engage them earlier than he had anticipated. "Don't underestimate the power of nature!" he exclaimed, launching into battle.

With the amount of fire and Metal Blades being tossed around, the battle was completely one-sided. Let's skip ahead.

As Hub and MetalMan stood over PlantMan's broken body, Hub couldn't help but comment about something. "You know, I was pretty impressed with your ferocity there. You must really care a lot about Mamoru yourself," he said.

MetalMan grinned. "Hell yeah! The little squirt's family! Course I care about him!" he boasted.

Hub grinned. "Well, anyone who loves their family that much is alright in my book!" he declared.

"You know what, MegaMan? You're alright!" MetalMan said, holding out his fist. Hub grinned some more and gave his companion a bro-fist, not even flinching at how much it hurt. Suddenly, a familiar feeling rose up in Hub. He only had time to blink before he flashed white and transformed into a familiar set of armor based off of MetalMan. Hub had entered MetalSoul!

MetalMan whistled. "Woo! Snazzy! You look like me now! Is that a Style Change?" he wondered.

"It's a DoubleSoul!" Lan said in surprise.

"Err...DoubleSoul?" MetalMan wondered in confusion.

"You know how most custom Navis have a special ability? Double Soul is MegaMan's, and lets him temporarily use the power of Navis he's synchronized with!" Lan declared with pride.

"Really? That's pretty cool," MetalMan complimented, before noticing a suspicious lack of plant. "Hey, where'd-?" he wondered, before noticing PlantMan making a break for Beach Street's Net Area, and most likely the Undernet. "Hey, he's getting away!" MetalMan said in alarm.

"Both of you, after him!" Lan ordered.

"Roger!" Hub declared, disengaging MetalSoul for the time being.

"Got it!" MetalMan complied, and the two of them immediately took off after PlantMan.

PlantMan ran for all he was worth, and he didn't dare stop.

He ran and he ran, passing Navis and Programs as he went, ignoring their cries as he bumped into them. He ran without rest, past viruses and data streams, power lines and flying messages. He didn't dare stop, not when he knew that if he did, his pursuers might catch up to him.

He kept running, even as his surroundings turned darker and gloomier as he crossed over into the Undernet.

Really, things had been going so well. That probably should have been his first clue that things would have turned out like this.

He and Anetta had just successfully hijacked the Hospital Server when the problems had started in the form of and his Operator being on-hand. Dr. Wily had warned all of them about the Blue Bomber, whom had personally helped take apart the previous incarnation of the World Three, and had even deleted the Life Virus singlehandedly. His presence alone would have been cause for alarm, especially as he had already started interfering in their operations, but Mr. Match had given them a heads up about his fighting style, and had stressed MegaMan and his operator's naivety, so PlantMan had been reasonably sure that he and Anetta would have been able to beat him once the Server had been rendered under his control, and he could control the battlefield.

Too bad MegaMan hadn't been alone. As it had turned out, one of the Hospital Patients had had family visiting at the time, an aunt he believed, and she had taken exception to PlantMan putting her nephew's life in danger, and had promptly sent her Navi into the Hospital Comp to " punch the face in " of the one responsible. And was more than capable of doing so, being incredibly strong physically, a skilled battler, and capable of generating a seemingly endless amount of buzz saws .

PlantMan shivered just thinking about them, and the storm of blades that had almost torn him to shreds.

MetalMan alone would have been a problem. But MegaMan as well? They had made short work of his Data-Vines, between MetalMan's saws (shudder) and MegaMan's program generated flames, supplied by his operator from a seemingly endless amount of fire-chips that one would almost think he had stocked up on before-hand. The viruses hadn't even slowed them down; they had torn into them so quickly. MegaMan's skill had been sublime , he could admit to that. It was almost like he had been doing this for years he was so good.

And then they had been upon him. And not only had he had to worry about MetalMan punching his face in, or trying to cut him in half with his saws (shudder), but he'd had to deal with MegaMan trying to light him on fire . Because apparently MegaMan not only had an obscene amount of fire chips on hand, (so many fire chips ; FireBlade, FireSword, HeatShot, HeatV, Salamander, FireRatton, FireDragon, RedWave, and many more) but he had a HeatGuts Style as well!

They had known that MegaMan possessed the capacity for Style Change! But FlashMan's Operator had reported that Megaman had possessed a WoodShield Style, not HeatGuts! (And he had apparently combined it with a WoodAura chip in his rather one-sided fight with FlashMan. Hah! Take that, FlashMan! Wood Power always beats Electric!) WoodShield he could have dealt with, if MegaMan had been foolish enough to try using a Style Change granted elemental affinity against a purely Elemental Customized Navi of the same element. But HeatGuts? That just wasn't fair !

What kind of Navi had complex enough programming to support two different Style Changes, let alone ones that opposed to each other? That kind of duality was almost human in its complexity!

Needless to say, the fight hadn't gone well for PlantMan. He had been lucky to escape with his life; they had beaten him so hard, and hit him with so many attacks, some of which would have been lethal had he not drawn energy from the GrassPanels MegaMan hadn't burnt to ashes. He'd barely held on to consciousness, faintly able to make out Anetta screaming as she was chased out of the Hospital by MetalMan's enraged Operator, and MegaMan and MetalMan taking a moment to exchange a fist-bump over his prone body, before MegaMan had been engulfed by a bright light and had seemingly evolved some kind of super Style Change that bared a resemblance to MetalMan.

He'd taken the moment that the two were distracted by MegaMan's Operator monologuing something about Double Souls to quietly get up and attempt an escape. Unfortunately, Anetta had dropped her PET, severing the connection, so he'd had to leave the server and find some place to hide until Anetta re-established contact when-well, if she got away.

Too bad they had spotted him, he'd almost managed it.

He hadn't wanted to find out what kind of damage MegaMan could dish out in his new form, as he suspected that he truly wouldn't survive another fight with him, and so he had abandoned all pretense of stealth and simply run before MetalMan and MegaMan could catch him.

And so now here he was, running through the Undernet, hoping that if he could get deep enough the denizens would become enough of a detriment to them that his pursuers would abandon the chase.

"Psst! Hey, over here!"

Startled, PlantMan stopped as he looked around for the source of the noise. Turning his head around wildly in his fear induced frenzy, he spotted a HeelNavi waving at him from around a far off corner.

"Hey, buddy, over here! Hurry!"

HeelNavi's had originally been designed as an off-the-shelf type of workforce Navi, meant for some of the more dangerous jobs that required durability and carried the risk of high-level virus attacks. They were resistant to Bugs and viral corruption, and their signals were rather faint, and could be modified to not disturb the more sensitive scanners they had been intended to maintenance, and they could put up a better fight than all but the more advanced NormalNavi brands. They were perfect for jobs that required the handling of Bug Frags, could herd and battle viruses with decent results, and were easy to upgrade. It was almost ridiculously obvious in hindsight that they would become the preferred brand of Navi to be used by criminals without any customizing skills.

Nowadays, you had to have serious self-confidence to use one in public without people thinking you were a thug of some kind, so there was a better than even chance that this Navi was a criminal of some kind. Meaning he might be a possible ally, something PlantMan sorely needed right now.

"Hurry up! You want them to catch you? I ain't sticking around to get caught in the crossfire like those other schmucks that hang around the area!"

Rushing around the corner, he saw the HeelNavi jogging in front of him, briefly turning around and motioning him to follow. Deciding that he didn't really have many options at the moment, PlantMan obliged, and followed the purple Navi for a good five minutes, running around corners and along corridors as they ventured deeper into the Undernet until his mysterious rescuer had deemed them safe enough to rest.

"Whew! I thought they were gonna follow us for sure! Guess it's a good thing they aren't familiar with this part of the Undernet!"

"Um, yes, thank you for that," PlantMan replied, now that he had a moment to talk. "I wasn't looking forward to those two finishing the job they started earlier. They almost did me in last time."

"Heh, I'll bet! But you had to expect a few PO'd goodie-goodie's showing up when you decided to take a Hospital hostage like that. "

PlantMan stilled, suddenly aware that he was deep in the Undernet, cut off from his NetOp, and in no condition to fight as he stared at the Navi that was apparently very well informed.

"You heard about that? So quickly?!"

The HeelNavi chuckled. "Relax man, I ain't here to fight. And yeah, it's the talk of the town in almost all the Under Squares around here. They say that gossip spreads faster than a PM, or something like that, and you're the latest, juiciest gossip for people like us."

PlantMan relaxed a bit. Yes, that made sense. It was only natural that actions of the World Three would be of interest to those that dwelled in the Undernet. Still, something the Navi said stuck with him.

"Then... what are you here for? Why did you help me?"

The HeelNavi chuckled again, not bothered the least by the subtle accusation.

"Sharp one. Good, the Boss'll be happy about that."

"Boss? You mean, your NetOp?"

"Nah, man. I mean the Boss ." The Navi put emphasis on the word, making the difference clear.

"The Boss is the one in charge of this part of the Undernet. Goes by the alias ' No. 1 ', 'cause of the Ranking System that we use 'round here to measure who's top dogm" the purple Navi continued to explain. "Though sometimes the Boss goes by ' S ', if that makes things easier for you. The Boss heard about your little stunt, said it made an impression. Asked a few of us to keep an eye out for you when we heard you were heading in this direction, said that e'might appreciate a meeting with you. Y'know, to talk shop."

Plantman's thoughts raced. This... this was good. This was really good. The Undernet was a strange, and multi-faced beast, that grew larger the more private servers were linked onto it. It was divided into fifes, servers, and chaotic areas that occasionally connected to elsewhere , and even the World Three's staked area was only a fraction of the nebulous web. If he had made a favorable impression on one of the powers in the area, and they wanted to meet with him, then maybe the day wasn't a total loss. If he could convince this Boss , this " S ", that they would be better off throwing their support in with the World Three then Dr. Wily would probably even forgive the failure at the Hospital!

"I see. Well then, lead the way to this... S . It wouldn't do for me to ignore the help I've received because of them."

The HeelNavi cackled, slapping PlantMan on the back as he led him off deeper into the Undernet. "Thought you'd say that!"

Cautiously, PlantMan surveyed the area he'd been brought to. The HeelNavi had brought him deeper into the Undernet than he'd ever been, before showing him to a teleport platform that would take him the rest of the way. He'd then taken to guarding the entrance to the area, claiming that he wasn't important enough to listen in on their conversation.

This place... if felt old ; like it had been created decades ago. The coding was rustic, if functional, and the entire area seemed to be weathered, as though it had experienced the warping of the Undernet longer than most of the areas he was used to. The lighting was dim, and there was no background coding in the sky, as was the norm in the more recently created areas. Everything here was simple and straightforward. A single square area, connected to the teleport platform he'd come in from, leading to a set of stairs. Climbing the stairs, he saw what awaited him.

A single access point for a remote server.

PlantMan frowned. That access point was ancient , old enough that he would believe it if someone claimed it was a leftover from the Alpha or Beta Networks. And it was secure too. Just looking at the thing he could tell that he'd never be able to hack that, even if he had days to make the try.

Who was this S ?

And, more importantly, where were they? Were they in the server this connected to? Should he go in? Could he?

Taking a few cautious steps forward, PlantMan touched the Server Access Point and hesitantly tried to activate it.

BOOM

The force of the reaction as the Access Point rejected him was so violent that he flew back, all the way to the edge of the stairs, then he tumbled down them, turning over and upside down until he came to rest a few feet away from the bottom steps.

"Sonofa-! What's the point of me coming here if I can't use it?!" PlantMan cursed. He normally wasn't a vulgar Navi, but he'd had a long day at this point, and now his head was spinning so much that the ground felt like it was shaking.

No... the ground was shaking, PlantMan realized. And so were the stairs, the walls of code that surrounded the area, even the sky was shaking. At this point PlantMan wouldn't be surprised if this entire section of the Undernet was shaking!

"It's... coming from the... Access Point?"

No, not from the Access Point, from whatever was coming through it !

Light, so bright, so sudden, hit him. Brighter than anything FlashMan had ever used, whiter, hotter, and infinitely more terrible. It felt like just this light, just this bright luminescence might burn him to ashes, it was so fierce.

He wasn't aware of how long it took his eyesight to return, but when it did he stared at the top of the stairs and saw her .

White legs that bore a resemblance to pants, and a black torso and arms, with golden and emerald accessories, long platinum strips of hair escaped from a helmet that rested atop a surprisingly human looking head, and two circular raiment's floated behind her.

This was S .

She, and it was a she, he realized, despite her slight frame being a few degrees away from being androgynous, radiated power. It poured off her not in waves, but in a constant rush of pressure that pushed down on him simply for being in her presence. A constant, all-bearing power that was like the sky, so vast and enormous that it would swallow you whole without even noticing. It was like being at the depths of the ocean and being crushed by the sheer weight of its depth.

Not that PlantMan paid any conscious notice to that, as he was too busy staring at her chest.

That is not to say that he was ogling her. That was the furthest thing from his mind at the moment, to be honest. Even if he hadn't had a female Operator who had been sure to program a sense of respect for the female gender into him, and who had threatened to punish him severely should he ever go against that programming, the truth of the matter was that this Navi was so slight of frame that she might very easily be confused for a male.

No, he was staring at her chest, more specifically her stomach, because the belt attached to it bore a Navi Mark.

One he was sure he had seen on a wheelchair at the Hospital.

If PlantMan were human, his mouth would have been drier than the Sahara Desert.

As she walked down the stairs, the feeling of a BlackHole growing in his gut increased with every step down she took.

It felt like the stairs trembled with every step she took...

Oh wait, supremely powerful Navi, they probably were.

Briefly, PlantMan considered making a run for it, but even if the Teleport Platform was still working, and even if his ' new friend ' wasn't standing guard to make sure he didn't do just that, he knew , on an instinctive level that this Navi was only taking her time because she could end his existence any time she wanted. She was taking her time going down those steps because any speed he could muster to try and retreat would be a snail's pace to her, and she would delete him if he tried.

And so he waited for his doom to arrive.

The Navi, S , finally reached the bottom of the stairs and came to a halt, standing but a few feet away from him and staring.

An eternity seemed to pass, during which PlantMan experienced the unique, and highly illogical, sensation of his life passing before his eyes, before the Navi spoke.

"So...you are He. The one who attacked the Hospital."

Her voice... it was soft, yet firm. It was mellow, like the wind across the waters of a pond. Yet PlantMan could tell... there was something lurking just below the surface. A Typhoon waiting to happen. A calamity kept in check by a soft shell.

All directed at him.

PlantMan swallowed, the action painful.

What a perfect end to an absolutely terrible day.

"Ordinarily," she began, seemingly content to draw it out. "I am bound by my duties. I may not venture out but to the deepest areas of the Undernet, and only to those areas close to the Uranet that I guard, for I must never stray too far from that which I am obligated to protect. Only in the direst of circumstances may I venture into the Network at large. Unfortunately..." And here her tone began to grow sharper.

"The protocols that I must adhere to would not consider a terrorist attack on a hospital to be dire enough to warrant my intervention. Especially when measures were already taken to counter such an act." Her tone softened at the end, as she considered the reports she had received about the ones who had resolved the issue.

"I must thank them, for they not only protected Mamoru for me, but also did me a boon by chasing you here ."

Plantman nearly jumped out of his frame at the twist in her voice, feeling the malice directed at him, even as her voice remained at the same volume.

Mustering what remained of his courage, PlantMan dared to reply.

"So... so that you could have your-your underling bring me here."

"Yes. He is the current Ranked 5, and one of my subordinates. When I asked him to bring you here so that I might deal with you myself , he was kind enough to comply." Shadows seemed to frame her face as her voice once more twisted without rising in the slightest.

"Who... who are you?" PlantMan had to know, even if it was the last thing that he would know.

"Know that I am Serenade, the holder of the Rank # 1 , the one titled Ruler of the Undernet since its birth , protector of the Uranet , and keeper of the Forbidden Program ." As the Navi, Serenade , introduced herself, her form seemed to glow brighter and brighter with an internal luminescence, and the pressure around her grew and grew until he was fairly sure he saw the ground beneath her feet beginning to melt .

PlantMan considered the Navi in front of him, felt the Power coming off of her form, recalled the menace in her words, and tried not to think about what a ruler of the Undernet could do to him if they were angry enough. He took all of this in, and realized that his life was now probably to be measured in seconds . Still, there was only one thing left to try.

"If I said I was sorry, begged forgiveness, and turned myself in... would you let me live?"

Serenade smiled , a tiny little thing that gently upturned her lips without stretching her cheeks.

PlantMan shivered, trembling in fear, even as he forced himself to look at that smile and remember it. To remember the last thing that he would ever see.

There was no compassion in that smile at all.

" No ."

The world flashed white, the ground trembled, the very Undernet shook , and rumbled. Heat blasted across the connected networks, and a wave of sound that deafened all in its wake and knocked them aside, so terrible was its pressure, followed after it.

The weaker denizens of the Undernet felt their knees grow weak and collapsed, the stronger ones felt terror drown their souls as they trembled, and the oldest and vilest beings that made their home in the cracks of the ever growing hell felt fear for the first time in so long. All save one Navi, cloaked in a ragged brown cape, who laughed at the power that rolled across the Net, a sharp-toothed and blood-thirsty smile on his face, and one who was clothed in blue, who stared off in the direction he could feel the power from, before grimly nodding and turning to help his companion to his feet.

Of where PlantMan had been, there was simply an absence of space, as he, and everything around him, had been reduced to less than ashes...

Anetta was eventually arrested, but only after the police pulled an enraged Tamako off of her. Eventually she was rescued from prison by her World Three comrades, but when she connected to the Network to look for PlantMan, or failing that his Ghost-Data, she couldn't find a single trace of him, no matter how hard she looked. She was forced to use a backup copy to restore him, though his copy couldn't for the life of him explain why he developed an irrational fear of wheelchairs.

24.2 (Sirkaid)

"I'm picking up a large energy buildup in the centre of the room, Megaman! Be careful!" Roll said through the radio.

Megaman readied his buster cannon and waited. The cylinder in the middle of the room had lit up when he entered but hadn't had any further reaction.

"I don't think it's a Reaverbot, Roll, Megaman replied. "I'm going to give it a closer look."

Megaman slowly approached the cylinder. Apart from being able to hear a quiet hum, nothing changed.

"It looks like some kind of metal and glass pod. It's about the size of a tall man, and... Woah!"

Megaman's report ended when he touched the pod and a translucent blue man appeared inside. He was wearing a lab coat and had a large bushy beard. "Hello, X, I... Wait. You're not X," the man said.

Something about that name seemed oddly familiar, but Megaman shook his head. "No sir, my name's Megaman Volnutt."

The man closed his eyes and muttered something that Megaman couldn't quite catch. What was a 'Variant Loop' anyway?

"Right," the man declared, "my name is Dr. Thomas Light. I'm a brain upload of the original Dr. Light, doubtlessly long since dead, and he put me in here so that I could present our youngest son with upgrades long after his death. Unfortunately it looks like he never found this capsule. If you would be so kind as to escort your mechanic to me, I could walk her through the process of detaching my capsule from the floor and moving it to your ship. I'd love to see how the world has changed since original-me's death. If you'll have me, of course."

"Roll, did you catch that?" Megaman asked.

"OhmygodareallifeAncientscientistthisisamazing- Megaman, I'm coming down! Meet me at the elevator!"

Dr. Light chuckled. "I suppose that answers that. Go ahead, it isn't polite to keep a lady waiting."

24.3

"Well, this is a strange variant, nya," Roll observed as she Awoke. And it was. Apparently at some point in history, it became common for humans to possess varying degrees of animal traits. Which explained why she was, once again, a catgirl.

"Still have the verbal tic?" Rock grinned in amusement.

"Nyah... Go chase a car, Rock Rush Light," Roll Tango Light hissed.

"Woof, woof, sis," her brother laughed teasingly.

"I have claws you know."

"Woof. Woof. Kitty. Cat."

Dr. Light was awoken by the sounds of his robot children chasing each other around the lab a few seconds before his radio alarm went off, playing an old favorite by Queen.

Are you gonna take me home tonight?

Ah down beside that red firelight.

Are you gonna let it all hang out?

Rat bottomed girls,

You make the rockin' world go round.

24.4 (Scorntex)

"Anything?" Roll asked. Rock looked at the crumpled pile, nudging aside a few pieces of armour, and winced at the sight.

"Yes," he said quietly, picking up a small item. It was half an IC chip.

Roll's expression remained neutral, and Rock sighed. He'd been hoping, even after seeing the poor robot's head was shattered, that there would've been something he could've done.

"Sorry dad," he said, through the communicator, "but Bass has made sure we can't rebuild Dubstep Man."

REATTEMPTING ACTIVATION OF LOOPER CANDIDATE 'BASS'...

ERROR: ACTIVATION FAILED.

BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' CURRENTLY UNABLE TO SUPPORT CANDIDATE 'BASS' AS LOOPER.

COMPILING LOOP MEMORY DATA FOR LATER ATTEMPT…

24.5 (Scorntex)

"Hey, X?"

"Yeah, Z?" X tapped the side of his helmet, hoping it would deal with the odd wobble on the line.

No such luck, alas. Though given the size of the ruins they were exploring, any coherent signal in there was frankly a miracle.

"You know how we thought some of the defence mechanisms down here still worked?"

There was the sound of gunfire.

"Let me guess," X said, now wearily looking about in the gloom, "you found something."

There was what sounded like a mechanical yelp. "Oh, I found something. "

After a few seconds whatever had been occupying Zero's attention had been dealt with. "Incidentally, I'm under attack. Well, I say "attack". Guess your siblings forgot to break some of Wily's old toys last time around."

Great, so it was the remains of a Wily Castle. And some (though less than there were five minutes ago, at least) of the things down here were sti–

Something exploded past X's head. As if on cue, several lights flickered into action, revealing what could have been almost like a house of horrors.

If they were littered with rubble, the remains of... well, at the moment, the best X could go on was "things", and traps.

Also, a battered, one-eyed thing was aiming a weapon at his head. A Joe, from the looks of it.

Frankly, it was amazing the thing was still functioning. Most of its head was missing.

Meanwhile, over the sound of the comm., Zero could be heard chuckling as several more things found themselves falling victim to Zero's blade (and need to vent his boredom).

Aiming at the Joe, and ignoring the sound of several more things in the distance turning on, X winced.

This had been supposed to be a boring walk through some ruins, just for Doctor Cain.

24.6

Quint looked down at the garment he was expected to wear as part of an 'infiltration' mission to the convent of the Sisters of Perpetual Weepiness. A Loop where everything was grayscale was one thing. Being a police lieutenant was another. Dealing with the local Anchor's (supposedly) Unawake best friend and his antics on the other hand...

"Nigel," he looked up from the outfit and stared the man in the eyes as he held an identical such garment, "is the desire to shoot Harry an uncommon one?"

"Not really," Nigel Grouse answered with a sigh. "Lieutenant Foster, the man you're replacing, has expressed such a desire on numerous occasions each Loop, Awake or otherwise. Still, he manages to suppress it well enough. In fact, if you can manage to go the whole Loop without actually attacking Harry, then you're eligible for an achievement pin."

"Hmm..." Quint grunted noncommittally as he looked over to the man who was supposedly the 'brains' of this operation, despite none being evident. Harry Hunsacker, 'world famous detective' and aspiring actor... ' I swear, the man could starve a zombie simply by being within fifty feet of it...'

"This is gonna be great, you guys! A real secret mission!" Harry beamed where he was dressed as a priest of the catholic church as part of his cover. "Come on, get into costume! You don't want to blow the mission, do you?"

Sighing heavily, Quint gave in and put on the nun's habit.

24.7

Cthulhu chuckled to himself as he snuck up on the blue and red forms silently, looming over them and casting his shadow. They noticed the shadow and turned to meet him, gazing upon his carefully crafted and geometrically impossible avatar.

"f h T a g N!" he bellowed at them.

"Devil series?" the blue one asked the red calmly.

"Don't think so, X" the red answered, shaking his head and sending the long blond ponytail hanging out of his helmet swishing. "I'm not getting any of Wily's transponder signals from it."

"y O u " r E S u P P o s E d t O B 3 s C r eA M 1 n g n 0w..."

"Not feeling it," the one called X shrugged. "How about you, Zero?"

"The angles may be giving my processors conniptions," the one called Zero folded his arms, "but Weil's still got this guy beat hands down."

" i w I l l d E S t r 0 Y y O U r m I n dS!1!"

"That sounded hostile," the one called X blinked, one arm forming into a cannon.

"That it did," the one called Zero nodded, pulling out an object that ignited into some form of energy blade.

"wH a t d 0 y O U t H i n K t O... o W !1! w A i– a R g H ! n 0 T t H 3 f Ac E !"

24.1) Plantman. exe's terrible, horrible, no good, very bad day. As promised.

24.2) On some island somewhere, there's a guy who goes by Captain Archer that is enjoying a quiet Loop to fish and relax. Upstairs in his office, Hephaestus is banging his head on his desk over the fact that this isn't supposed to be happening yet .

24.3) This Loop they're fighting like cats and do–is shot

24.4) In Archie comic Short Circuits, Bass drops you !

24.5) You know, I have to wonder. For every Skull Fortress found in the classic series, how many escaped detection?

24.6) I live in Dallas and we have these amazing and hilarious local plays every year around my birthday called 'living black and white' that are spoofs on 30s and 40s detective shows. This year's was new, seventeenth written in the series (they don't go in chronological order), called Death Is A Bad Habit .

24.7) You know, you'd think the guys over at Shoggoth-chan would learn...